While we can be partisan in the House, and I can possibly be as partisan as anyone in this place, the point is that the Government's legacy is that it has spent money on things for which Canadians today and in the future are being asked to pay when the very fundamental and essential issues which have not been dealt with are now in jeopardy. That is the Government's legacy.

Therefore, this motion calls upon the Government to do the honourable thing and that is to call an election. It is the respectable thing to do. The polls have indicated that many Canadians are absolutely convinced that there is a need for a change in Government. Some have said that my leader and this Party will form the next Government of Canada. I believe that to be the case. But we are not only a Government in waiting, Canada is waiting. The country is waiting for a change. The country is waiting to have confidence returned and to bring optimism back to it. It is not only the Progressive Conservative Party but Canada that is waiting. The NDP do not want a Conservative Government in Canada to the extent that they will do whatever is in their power to return the Liberals and form a coalition and make deals with them.

I will leave this point with you, Mr. Speaker, and with Canadians. I say that Canada and Canadians are waiting. When Canadians want a change of Government, when democracy demands a change in Government and the democratic system must be cleansed, Canadians cannot afford the luxury of voting for a third party, because the experience in Canada for having a third party has always been the return of the Liberals. Therefore, I say that Canadians are waiting for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) to take his rightful place as the Prime Minister of Canada and to bring back to Canada the hope and the potential that should be ours as Canadians.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): It was an interesting speech, Mr. Speaker, even if some Opposition Members insist on referring to speeches I made in the House. I am not ashamed of the fact that I tried to define what a Liberal is, and I shall do so again, because a Liberal, unlike what was said earlier by the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), a Liberal has a purpose in life, he knows where he is going, not like Progressive Conservatives who cannot decide on common goals and don't know which way to go.

I am getting to the point sure, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) likes to bring this up time and time again. He is delighted to have someone tell him what Liberals are like, and although he has been watching them for over twenty years, he still cannot understand why the Liberals have remained in power as long as they have, because to him, a Liberal is not someone who works, but someone who comes here to make pretty speeches for the people of Canada. However, that is not so. The Progressive Conservative Party may be doing just that, but we work here and represent our constituents. To get back to what the Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said earlier, he was referring to the Government's election promises. The party in power today said during the election campaign that it would double railway tracks in Western Canada. Work on this project would have started long ago if the Hon. Member's own party had not followed its obstructionist policy for two years. They have prevented us from carrying out major projects, and as a Western Canadian, the Hon. Member ought to know that the West was developed thanks to the railways. When this Government wanted to introduce double tracking, the Hon. Members representing the people of Western Canada prevented us from doing so. Yesterday, the changes in the Crow rate were adopted, and they will now be implemented because we have a Government that wants to introduce these changes. No thanks to them, but to the Government.

Since the Hon. Member spoke at length about Medicare, my question is: What does the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) think about what is being done by some premiers, some governments in provinces like Alberta which is all true blue Tories and nothing else? What are they doing to help the poor with Medicare? What about Ontario? It has the highest insurance costs, not including extra billing. Is that supposed to help the poor? When the Hon. Member mentioned Government borrowing, in all fairness he should have told Canadians that 90 per cent of this money is borrowed from Canadian, not from foreign sources, so that the interest is paid to Canadians and not to foreigners. We can therefore say that this country is not getting poorer and poorer, on the contrary. Enough of these misrepresentations!

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to the Hon. Member. I thought he was on very interesting ground when he spoke of what a Liberal was. He has spoken on that topic before in this House. If I recall his comments earlier, he said that a Liberal is all things to all people and he would even be a communist if he had to be a communist.

Mr. Gimaïel: Communists are Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I see Hon. Members rising. Are they rising on points of order?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's speech, as always.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Perhaps if we had some order the Chair would know what is going on. I thought the Parliamentary Secretary was rising on a point of order.

Mr. Evans: No, with a question, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege. I never said a Liberal was a Communist.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Why did you not say so? The Hon. Member is on the record.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member would go back into the record of Hansard—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair is willing to recognize the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel). However, since he has made comments and asked questions, does the Hon. Member want an answer or is he rising on a matter of privilege?

Mr. Gimaïel: I am rising on a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Let the Hon. Member answer my question. I never, I repeat never said a Liberal is a Communist. Let him learn to read or, even better, learn French.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Provencher will be allowed to reply.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, as I was trying to say earlier to the Hon. Member, if he would read the record of Hansard which has his words, not mine, in both official languages, he would find that his definition of a Liberal—

[Translation]

Mr. Gimaïel: I rise on a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): A matter of privilege? Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to explain where his privilege lies?

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, my privilege lies in the fact that the Hon. Member is attempting to report words I spoke here in the House. He is not reporting them correctly, probably because he failed to read the French version or because the English version was not reported to him correctly. I would ask him to answer the question and to stop his erroneous reporting—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! I do not think there is matter of privilege. There is obviously a difference of opinion, but I have seen or heard nothing in what the Hon. Member for Provencher has said or done to justify the Hon. Member rising on a matter of privilege as he did just now. He is merely engaging in debate. It is a matter of a difference of opinion. The Hon. member for Provencher.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Take it up with the Editor of Hansard.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to respond to the Hon. Member. Again, for the third time, if he would check the record of Hansard, which all Members accept as the official record of words spoken in this House in both official languages, he will find his own words recorded.

Mr. Nielsen: They leap out.

Mr. Epp: I am sure there are Members—

Mr. Gimaïel: What did I say?

Mr. Epp: —on this side who are going to be digging out those words and the Hon. Member will probably hear quite a bit about them today. I would simply say to the Hon. Member that what he said was that a Liberal must be all things to all people, to embrace all kinds of viewpoints and all kinds of philosophies. Then he said: "And even if necessary, if it is a communist position, a communist philosophy, so be it a communist philosophy or position".

I know the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) is sensitive on this issue.

Mr. Beatty: He regrets having said what he said.

Mr. Epp: Yes, he regrets having said what he said. I also hear there was quite a debate in the Liberal caucus about this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: I am saying he is sensitive. We will allow the record of Hansard to quote the Member exactly. I accept the record of Hansard. I just suggest that he accept his own words and the recording of same.

The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean mentions the matter of medicare. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the whole question of health care in Canada has to be addressed from the perspective of the economic reality Canadians face because, as I said earlier, of the economic mismanagement of this Liberal Government, and the ability to maintain those services which we on this side of the House and all polling shows that Canadians universally want to see retained. People want to see universal medicare.

The Hon. Member mentions the Province of Alberta. He checked the record? I am glad he raised this question, because if he will check with the Province of Alberta he will find the greatest amount of spending occurs today for health care per capita in that Province than anywhere else in Canada. In fact, over $1,100 per capita is spent on health care in Alberta. I will not go through all the other Provinces but let me tell the Hon. Member some Provinces spend as little as $600 per capita on health care. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean did not raise that. I want to point out to him that in some of our Provinces today over 50 per cent of total provincial budgets are federal transfer payments. Are those Governments mean spirited when they ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to sit down and examine these questions and also to examine how they can maintain a universal health care system with accepted national standards? Those are the questions the Hon. Member should address. Let us address them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The question period is now over.

The Chair is now prepared to rule on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). The Chair earlier expressed some reservations. I am prepared to rule unless Hon. Members wish to comment at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bring back Stanley Knowles!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It is with regret that I must inform the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that I cannot put his amendment to the House. It is out of order as it attempts to introduce a new proposition rather than to clarify or further explain the motion. I refer the Hon. Member to Citation 437(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. It reads:

> An amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice.

I also refer Hon. Members to Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition at page 387, which reads as follows:

> The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability, or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question.

I would refer the House also to page 389 of Erskine May's Nineteenth Edition which reads:

> The effect of moving an amendment is, rather, to restrict the field of debate which would otherwise be open on a question.

It is with regret, therefore, that I must reject the Hon. Member's motion. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, given that I moved the motion prior to the end of my speech and would have been able, had the ruling come immediately, to have moved a subsequent amendment, I wonder whether I might be able to do that now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. First, the Chair sees the clock. It is one o'clock. Perhaps we could take up that matter after the Question Period concludes at three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PENITENTIARIES

PROVISION OF EDUCATIONAL SERVICES FOR INMATES

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, over the past ten years a few Canadian universities have developed a successful, cost-effective, rehabilitation program in several penitentiaries. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has already killed this program in Quebec, Ontario, and the Prairies. He is about to transform the one in British Columbia into something quite different from the successful program it has been. Meanwhile, Canadians are being misled into believing that the university programs will be continued. In fact the educational tinkering of the Solicitor General will result in their disappearance. The Canadian Association for Adult Education recently sent an analysis of the matter to Canadian university presidents.

Also, the Solicitor General proposes to make students pay part of the cost despite the fact a study has found that this will put an end to the programs and to the human and social benefits involved. The Solicitor General has been advised by virtually the entire educational community that he is making a serious mistake. He completely ignores the advice. Why, especially in the field of education in which the federal Government is not particularly competent?

Enlightened Canadians believe that one of the primary purposes of penitentiaries is education or re-education. In view of the arrogance and stubbornness of the Solicitor General regarding this mandated responsibility, I suggest he consult with the Department of the Secretary of State, or with experienced provincial educational officials, with the aim of modernizing his dated approach toward penitentiaries and rehabilitation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ATTITUDE OF UNITED STATES ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY TO ASBESTOS PRODUCTS

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, I wish to censure the United States Environmental Protection Agency for its position on asbestos products, because the mere fact of announcing its intention to regulate or even ban such products will be harmful to, and seriously affect, our markets. Consequently, the Government of Canada ought to censure officially the position taken by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Furthermore, the Government of Canada should do the following: express to the U.S. Government its concern about the EPA and its methods; repeat that asbestos cement products, asbestos paper and asbestos vinyl are harmful neither to consumers or asbestos workers; and advise Canadians that the Government of Canada will ask the U.S. authorities not to implement the plans announced and published by the EPA.

Mr. Speaker, I have been living in an asbestos producing area for fifty-eight years, and I must be one of the healthiest Members of this House, for which I am thankful.

THE PRIME MINISTER

CHOICE OF LIBERAL PARTY FUNCTION FOR SPEECH ON PEACE INITIATIVES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed. I must admit that I was looking forward to hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tell the House about his pilgrimage to Europe to discuss his peace initiatives. Unfortunately, these days, any important speeches made by the Prime Minister seem to occur at Liberal functions. Much as I like to hear good rhetoric, I would really feel most uncomfortable attending a function designed for the good Grits of our country. Therefore my absence is understandable, as would be that of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who has already stated his abhorrence at receiving invitations to Liberal functions.

My point today is that the Prime Minister should not have chosen a Liberal fund-raising event to disclose details of his efforts to help the cause of peace in the world. Until yesterday, when I heard the news that once again Members of Parliament were the last people to hear important information, I respected him for his efforts. Now it appears quite evident that the Prime Minister is taking the opportunity to add another feather to his cap among his Liberal cohorts. This is definitely not the proper way to go about such matters.

I agree with a daily publication when it indicated that the Liberal movers and shakers got feeling a little cocky and light-headed about all the good press received from the Prime Minister's peace initiatives, that they had to gloat, and that they had to use it to make their troops feel good. The fact that the Prime Minister failed to make a statement to the House and chose instead to speak to a Grit fund-raising bunfest leaves only one conclusion, that the whole exercise was designed to enhance his shrunken political stature.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

REASONS FOR OPPOSITION BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal use of closure to impose Bill C-155 on an unwilling and deeply resentful western Canada underlines how far the Government has strayed from the democratic principles of consent and accountability. We in the New Democratic Party make no apologies for all-out opposition to a Bill that is unwanted, unfair, and undemocratic. We point with pride to a saving of more than $15 million for western Canadian farmers by delaying the freight rate increases which would have been imposed on August 1. We condemn the Government for advising the railways to break the law by ignoring the 60-day filing period for rate increases and imposing higher rates on January 1, 1984.

The Government's action on Bill C-155 was wholly typical. No mandate was sought by the Government to change the Crow rate in the 1980 election. Representations made by electors and elected representatives in the House of Commons were ignored. These representations included 30,000 signatures on petitions filed by the New Democratic Party, and another 7,000 signatures from organizations and individuals who favoured the New Democratic plan to keep the Crow rate and upgrade the railway system.

The then Minister of Transport admitted on May 16 that he had received more than 38,000 signatures favouring Crow retention, and only 69 favouring Crow change. This Act is a testimonial to a Government that puts people last.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING CERTAIN DECLARATIONS

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's Globe and Mail, Monday, November 14, it was reported that the Leader of the Official Opposition, in a speech he made in Edmonton last week, mentioned the fact that my constituents did not know me.

First of all, I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) that it is not fair on the part of someone who claims to be the future Prime Minister of Canada to give the impression that Quebecers are idiots by saying that they vote for people they do not know.

My second comment is that at least I run in the riding where I was born and where I have lived all my life.

Third, Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition talked to people in my riding, they were probably from Schefferville, the town he himself closed down, so that these people are now trying their luck in the Lac-Saint-Jean area. They probably do not know me yet because it was not so long ago when the Leader of the Official Opposition fired them and made them leave town, but they will know me pretty soon, because I am working with my colleagues and the Government to improve their living conditions. I can guarantee one thing, and that is, that there will never be a Brian Mulroney in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean to take away their jobs or their town. Never, Mr. Speaker.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

USE OF POPPY SYMBOL BY PEACE ACTIVISTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise while Hon. Members' memories are still warm after the many ceremonies held this past weekend at cenotaphs across Canada to honour veterans of two world wars and the Korean war. Radical elements of the anti-Cruise missile protest movement had the shabby disrespect to drag the Royal Canadian Legion's symbol of remembrance, the poppy, through the political mud on November 11.

I am sure most thoughtful Canadians who quietly protest Cruise testing in the country would agree with me that Remembrance Day is not now, and never will be, political; the poppy is not political. But these diabolically political and professional protesters simply do not recognize the difference between their peace symbols and the poppy:

In Flanders fields the poppies blow between the crosses, row on row . . . .
We are the dead.

John McCrae's poem signifies to me, that the poppy is a symbol of remembrance for the fallen. It is definitely not meant as a "peacenik's" peace symbol.

• (1410)

The poem continues:

Take up our quarrel with the foe . . .

To me, Mr. Speaker, that does not mean quarrelling among ourselves in a free Canada. What these unruly protesters fail to remember is that had so many valiant men and women not fought and died for freedom, these peaceniks would not have the democratic freedom to protest against anything at any time.

To hundreds of thousands of veterans across the country the red poppy is the symbol of the blood that was shed in the name of freedom. The poppy must remain the sacred symbol of remembrance of the dead in Flanders fields.

IMMIGRATION

POLAND—PLEA FOR GRANTING OF EXIT VISAS TO FAMILIES OF LANDED IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at this time there are hundreds of families separated due to the recent crisis in Poland. Individuals who have been granted permanent residence in Canada anxiously await reunification with their family members who are still in Poland. Many of these families have been separated for two to three years and, as a result, are undergoing mental anguish, particularly in the case of the children who are deprived of proper family security.

Many of these individuals have exhausted all legal avenues open to them to bring their families to Canada. Today, ten such individuals are in their ninth day of a hunger strike in front of the Polish consulate in Toronto, and close to 1,000 petitioners have already indicated their support for this protest.

Family members in Poland have met all Canadian immigration requirements. However, they are being continuously refused the appropriate exit documents by Polish officials, which would allow them to be reunited with their families in Canada. Each family has encountered an average of four to six refusals of these exit documents from Polish authorities.

I appeal to the Canadian Government on grounds of human compassion to continue to make successful representations to the Polish Government on behalf of all of these families and other families when the husbands, wives and children want to live together and not be separated.

EMPLOYMENT

CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT'S JOB-CREATION POLICY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, economic development planning in Canada is non-existent under the present Liberal Government. The priorities of Canada's most important economic sectors, which are the fisheries, forestry, mining and other resource-based industries, are being totally ignored by the Government. Instead, the Liberal Government is focusing all of its energy on devising band-aid, short-term, make-work, job-creation schemes.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) is now the key player—and I repeat, the key player—in economic development strategy. The Liberal Government has charged the Minister with the duty of obtaining the biggest political boom for the taxpayer's buck.

Federal visibility is now the only criterion for government assistance. Consideration of long-term goals in resource management is a thing of the past. If there is a place for a huge plywood sign to announce the Liberal Government's contribution, then there is a place for federal dollars. That is the way it is seen by the Government opposite.

Billion dollar band-aids only mask the problems. The real cure, Mr. Speaker, is a new government that is committed to job creation through the encouragement of private sector economic development.

PUBLIC SERVICE

RESOLUTE BAY—DENIAL OF FACILITIES TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, northerners have long sought justice on issues of taxation, food and fuel costs, jobs, and access to federal programs. The voice of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) has been silenced, and the voices of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) speak in favour of user-pay and market economics, and are now promising to fire at least 60,000 public servants.

A case needing consideration by the House is that of Mr. Smith, a federal employee who is working and living in Resolute Bay. He, along with other workers, is forced to live in a barracks-style doghouse while there are plush, empty rooms available for supersivors, visitors, and government VIPs. According to the federal Government and, to date, unchallenged by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), the reason for this atrocious situation is, and I quote, "it is not practical or desirable to have supervisory and operating staff sharing the same living areas".

Perhaps the Minister will find time to investigate the matter and explain to the radio operators, meteorologists and electronics technicians why the federal Government is running a class system in the North. Perhaps he can explain why the gym, movie house and library at this base in the Arctic Islands remain closed. Canadian northerners would all like to know why certain employees get special privileges, certain northerners get some privileges, and most get nothing.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRIME MINISTER'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT ON PEACE INITIATIVE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that the Prime Minister might be prepared to make known to the House the substance and content of the various communications he has had with the President of the United States in regard to peace proposals. Would the Prime Minister now be prepared to do so in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to answer questions asked by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition about my exchanges with various leaders, but I have no general statement to make.

SUBSTANCE OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister yesterday, we were discussing the written communications the Prime Minister had, to which he has made frequent allusions in various speeches, including the social speech in Montreal. Inasmuch as reference to those written communications was made in Montreal, I was wondering if the Prime Minister might feel it appropriate that the substance and content of written messages back and forth might be tabled in the House of Commons today.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter of whether I have referred to communications or not is completely irrelevant. Communications between heads of Government on various matters are often referred to but never made public. The substance of my message, as is known, was the subject of peace and disarmament. Once again, I am prepared to answer questions on the initiatives that I am attempting to take, but if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that he be shown the text of a letter sent to a President, or to any one of the other leaders, the answer is that that is not customary and I do not propose to do so.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we recognize full well that it is not customary, but given the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday, we thought that the Prime Minister might like to take the House into his confidence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps he might like to do so, inasmuch as he summoned as much national support as possible for his initiative.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES OFFICIAL ON TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Under-Secretary of State for the United States of America, Mr. Dam, apparently said earlier today that the Government of the United States would have no objection to the correspondence being made public provided it was all right with the Government of Canada. I would again ask the Prime Minister, in light of these circumstances, if he would feel free, inasmuch as he is leaving the country shortly on another major trip, to take the country into his confidence to the extent humanly possible, and tell us what has been going on.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Official Opposition really wants the House to be taken into my confidence, he simply has to ask questions about what I have been doing. He can read my speeches and my statement. However, in so far as tabling letters, or making letters public between myself and other leaders of Government is concerned, that not only is not customary, Mr. Speaker, but it would be breaking every diplomatic rule.

When one writes a letter to another head of Government, one does so in the confidence that the letters will not be made public. Under some circumstances it might be useful after the event to make such letters public. That might arise in this case, but until I finish my consultations, Mr. Speaker, the least I can do is respect the confidence that people expect of me, just as would the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. He once made a great fuss because part of some private exchange between us had unfortunately been made public. He did not like that. Why did he not like that? Did he not want the House to be taken into his confidence? Did he not want his own Party to know what he was saying? There are certain rules of civility between leaders of Government about which the Hon. Leader of the Opposition will have to learn.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT IN HOUSE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in reference to the point raised by the Prime Minister, I objected in writing because a member of his staff violated a clearcut undertaking given by him to me. That is why I objected.

• (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: Inasmuch as the Prime Minister raised the word civility, there is another word that goes with it, confidence. If he has been relieved of the burden of confidentiality by the Government of the United States with regard to communications between the two of them which affect Canada, and initiatives that he is making on our behalf, and we have already stated that he goes with our good wishes, I would have thought there would have been a little more cordiality and civility coming from the Prime Minister, beginning with some information to the House of Commons. The people of Canada are being kept in the dark. You have to pay to go to a Liberal dinner to get any information. That is unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Without wanting to intrude on the calm that bedecks the back benches of his Party, given the sensitivity of this kind of issue, will the Prime Minister be making a full statement to the House of Commons on this complex and important issue prior to his departure on another extended trip overseas? Will he do that before he leaves?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers to a clear cut undertaking between himself and myself when we had that conversation. I repeat, there is a clear cut undertaking that one does not make public exchanges of letters between heads of Government. If the President of the United States wants to make his exchange public, and we can find out from the ambassador if he wants to make it public, that is fine. However, I do not intend making my letters public, the ones that I sent to the various heads of Government, because there is a clear cut understanding that that is not the way we are operating. Even when I met the leaders last week, we undertook not to go out and make a detailed report of what we had done. We are waiting for other members of the alliance, the other powers involved, to see what we are talking about. Perhaps later, if there are some possible results, we will make them public, but certainly not now.

Once again, if the Leader of the Opposition thinks he has an undertaking from the American President to make his letter public, that is his affair of course. I do not see how he could possibly have that undertaking, but he says he seems to have it from someone.

As far as discussing the subject and making a report in the House of Commons are concerned, today is an opposition day. If it is so important I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition has not made a speech himself, why he has not made the subject of international relations and peace-seeking the subject of the opposition day. The Leader of the Opposition smiles. His Members are smiling as well. It would be interesting to know what they think about international relations. They have not chosen the subject. It is their day.

I repeat, I am happy to answer questions. As a matter of fact I was surprised that the Opposition Party did not ask any questions in the week that I was here after I made my Guelph speech. A lot of people commented on it. The Leader of the Opposition commented on it outside the House, but it did not seem worthy of the attention of the Opposition. I did not know they would suddenly be interested, but suddenly they are. Good. Let us have a debate on it.

RESPONSES BY NUCLEAR POWERS

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am astounded and dismayed that the Prime Minister would adopt such an argumentative and defensive tone with regard to an entirely legitimate question put forward, one which reflects the concerns of millions of Canadians. Inasmuch as he will not divulge the correspondence, and I acknowledge that there may be good reasons for that, will he at least tell the House if anyone has responded to his letters? We were informed in the Montreal speech that he communicated with the leaders of the five nuclear powers, inviting them in that regard. Have they responded to his letters? If so, were the responses encouraging and positive, or were they otherwise? Has there been a response to his initiatives?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition first comments that there have been no answers to legitimate questions. I put it to him that, except for this last one, there have been no legitimate questions. The Leader of the Opposition has been asking for documents which he knows he should not have. I am happy to answer questions about the MBFR that I discussed, the Stockholm conference that I discussed, the five power conference that I discussed, the asphyxiation premise that I discussed. There are no questions on this. It has all been in the papers.

If the Leader of the Opposition has questions, I will be happy to answer them. Do not let him say that I am not prepared to talk about the subject. The only question he has asked me is the recent one as to whether I have had answers from the various leaders. Yes, I have had some answers from some leaders, some verbal and some written.

CYPRUS—DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE BY TURKISH CYPRIOTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, at his August 30 press conference in Athens, Greece, commented on the situation in Cyprus. As the Prime Minister is udoubtedly aware, there has been a declaration of independence on the part of certain Turkish Cypriots on that island proclaiming a new country with respect to the northern part of Cyprus. What is the official response of the Government of Canada to this declaration of independence, and when in fact was the first time that he learned that such a declaration was going to be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the official position of the Government of Canada is that it recognizes the Government in Cyprus which already exists, and with which we have good relations. It is a member of the Commonwealth, and we continue to want to have good relations with that Government. Insofar as the declaration of independence of a part of that country is concerned, we regret it. The Hon. Member asks when we first heard of it. I first heard of it this morning. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs can elaborate as to the exact moment we were informed of it.

The Hon. Member, being the official critic for External Relations, would know that the possibility or the threat of a declaration of independence by the Turkish part of Cyprus has been mooted for quite a while, certainly for some months. That is why we very strongly encouraged the initiative of the Secretary General of the United Nations toward a compromise between the communities in Cyprus which are in conflict. It is not something that had been unheard of. We regret that the compromise proposals put forward by the Secretary General were not given a chance to succeed before this event happened.

STATUS OF CANADIAN PEACE-KEEPING FORCE—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether there has been any violence on the island? Specifically, have any of the 500 Members of our Canadian peace-keeping force been involved? Does the Government plan any reappraisal with respect to keeping the peace-keeping force on the island, bearing in mind it is up for renewal in December? Finally, can he tell us what number of Canadian nationals are on the island and whether they are in any danger?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, insofar as the peace-keeping troops are concerned, they are there under an agreement with the United Nations. To our knowledge, there is no violence taking place. As the Hon. Member would know, the declaration of independence has taken place on the northern part of the island where the Turkish troops already were. There is no new conflict or no different situation of fact between the various parts of Cyprus. This is merely a new legal situation, with one part declaring its independence.

The Hon. Member asked about the number of Canadians. There is no danger that we know of at this time to the Canadians. There are some 2,000 dual nationals, some 200 resident Canadian citizens, and perhaps about 500 Canadian tourists. There are, of course, 515 troops who are members of the approximately 2,300 U.N. troops. We provide a little less than a quarter of those troops.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister of State for Economic Development said, and I quote, "Unemployment has always been at the top of the Government's priorities." Just about a month ago the Minister of Finance in his economic review acknowledged that the Government's own restraint policies had contributed to the depressed levels of economic development. Would the Minister please explain to the House what appears to the rest of us to be a pretty clear contradiction?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I am a bit puzzled, Mr. Speaker, because I believe the Hon. Member has suggested that one of my colleagues has made one statement and another colleague has made a second statement. I believe it would be more appropriate to ask those Ministers, rather than myself, to clarify their positions.

Mr. Broadbent: You are the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Roberts: In any case, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the Minister of Finance made the statement which the Hon. Member has attributed to him. There is not that difficulty of reconciliation.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I made the naive assumption that the Minister of Employment and Immigration had some kind of responsibility for job creation and, therefore, he might be interested in the contradictory views expressed by two of his colleagues. I point out to him that the Minister of Finance did in fact say what I just attributed to him.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CREATE MORE JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): To get on with the substance of the matter, Mr. Speaker, considering that the restrictive policies of the Government, as the Minister of Finance himself acknowledged, have contributed to a turn-down in the rate of consumer spending, which means fewer jobs, will the Minister now tell the House if the Government plans to continue to take $400 million a year away from taxpayers in increased taxes? And will it re-establish the $300 million cutback in job creation which the Minister announced just a few weeks ago? In short, will the Government abandon its restrictive policies which are killing jobs, and do something to produce more badly needed jobs for Canadians?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as is often the case, the assumptions behind the Hon. Member's questions are inaccurate. I do believe that the policy of restraint which this Government has advocated and promoted has, in a variety of ways, kept down costs in Canada. It has contributed to the competitiveness of the Canadian economy and, therefore, supported and created jobs within Canadian society and the Canadian economy. Moreover, there has been a considerable growth in the Canadian economy, largely stimulated recently by strong consumer spending, which denies one of the other assumptions in the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister simply does not know what he is talking about. The rate of consumer spending is now going down, not up. The fact is we lost 45,000 jobs a month ago, in the Canadian economy. We are not producing more jobs. The reality is that some 21 per cent of our young people are still unemployed in Canada. The over-all effect of all this, as everyone apart from the Cabinet knows, is that the Government has failed to come to grips with the serious issue of unemployment.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister, who said he was going to produce action ever since he assumed his current responsibility, will we get a Bill next week. Will we have some action in terms of new measures before Christmas? If we do not, if we have to wait for a new Throne Speech at Christmas time, there will be no impact from government action until the Spring. Canadians want some action with respect to the economy from the Government, and they want it now.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it might be helpful, if the Hon. Member goes back into traction, and if he did acquaint himself with the facts. He declares that I do not know them. He either does not know them or will not express them. The fact of the matter is that the economy has created over 350,000 jobs since last November. The fact is that we are going into recovery. The fact is that the impact of my colleague's budget is beginning to be felt now.

Mr. Nowlan: It certainly has been felt, since the day he brought it down.

Mr. Roberts: There are positive signs for the economy. The Hon. Member does not want to recognize that they are there.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRACKS IN CF-18 AIRCRAFT ENGINE MOUNTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Can the Minister confirm that serious structural defects, namely, cracks in the engine mounts, have been discovered in the CF-18, Canada's new fighter aircraft, and that just after a few hundred hours of air time four out of 20 of the aircraft so far delivered have had to be grounded? If this is so, can the Minister tell the House who is responsible, and what his Department is doing about it? And when we can expect these very expensive aircraft to be made available to our Forces in fully airworthy condition?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there have been some cracks found in some engine mounts on aircraft which have flown in excess of 300 hours. I am advised that such a finding is not abnormal—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: —given the newness of the aircraft. They are minimal in nature, Mr. Speaker, and are being addressed.

ARMING OF CF-18 AIRCRAFT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister also confirm that, according to the contract, the airframe is supposed to last 10,000 hours, not 300 hours? Can the Minister also inform the House as to the state of airworthiness of the aircraft, and of their equipment, in view of the fact that by next summer two of the CF-18 squadrons are supposed to be deployed? According to our sources, these aircraft will have insufficient weapons to allow them to fulfil our role in NORAD. If they are flying, they will be flying without weapons unless something is done to address this problem. Can the Minister indicate whether in fact this problem will be addressed?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that problem is being addressed now and will be rectified. In terms of the engine mounts themselves, Mr. Speaker, the needed engineering changes will be incorporated within the aircraft which are now entering the production line. There is, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, a fix being put in which will remedy the problem which he has identified.

I want to identify as well, Mr. Speaker, that, as the Hon. Member well recognizes from the briefings he has received, the CF-18 is performing beyond any of the specifications. We are very satisfied with its performance. I want to reiterate that this particular defect is being addressed and is of a normal nature within the developmental phase which is encountered within the CF-18 program.

UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS

FUNDING FOR BICENTENNIAL IN ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. However, in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. On October 11 of this year I inquired whether the Minister intended to contribute funding for the United Empire Loyalists bicentennial in Ontario during 1984. The Minister of State indicated that details would be made available during the week of October 17. This, of course, was over one month ago. I would like to know if the Government intends to make a statement in the House of Commons, or in the near future, on whether there will be funding available to the United Empire Loyalists' bicentennial in Ontario during 1984.

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I do indeed remember the reply given by my colleague, the Secretary of State. He is away from Ottawa for a few days. However, I shall try to get the information so that it is available to the Hon. Member later this week.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

LAY-OFFS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. When we were debating the third reading stage of Bill C-155, the Minister, in support of the Bill, said, "We are talking about 300,000 jobs. We are talking about benefits spread from one end of the country to the other." A few days before the Minister made his speech extolling Bill C-155 and the great benefits which would come from it, the CPR in our home town—his as well as my own—was laying people off at the Weston shops. Would the Minister take up with the CPR the question of why it is laying people off at a time when it is supposed to be hiring more people and expanding its facilities?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North has now become aware of the major advantages of the Crow legislation for industrial expansion across Canada. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in our home town, Mr. Speaker, the CPR is presently investing $15.3 million in a new diesel shop in the Weston area—I am sure we will be glad to invite the Hon. Member to the opening—and establishing a new communications and control system, and, working out of Winnipeg, establishing a new telecommunications line between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg. I will be sure to inform the Hon. Member when that work is completed. Those are just a few examples of the kind of major job-creation activities we are getting as a result of the passage of the Crow legislation.

REQUEST THAT LAY-OFFS BE CANCELLED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are of course pleased that CPR is expanding, but surely the Minister can understand the concern of workers who are being laid off. This is the largest corporation in Canada, a multibillion dollar corporation. We know it will take some time before the so-called benefits flow to the company, but surely it can afford to carry the few workers it laid off until the expansion gets started. I urge the Minister to take up with the CPR the idea that it act in a humane way and not lay people off at this time.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has a good point in the sense that any company, Crown corporation or private, should be very sensitive to the question of how individuals and communities are affected by changes, either in the marketplace or in the technology with which they deal. That is a subject I intend to take up in meetings with both the railway unions and companies.

In the particular instance the Hon. Member is talking about, what he is really highlighting is how important it is that we get the Crow legislation working now. We have been delayed overly long by opposition in this House, primarily from the Hon. Member's own Party, which has delayed a lot of investment plans. This meant we could not go ahead and get the kind of job creation we hoped to get at an earlier period.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S LONG-RANGE PLANS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and it relates to the report of the Special Committee on Indian self government. In asking this question I want to thank the Minister for his positive comments and response so far to that report.

Is the Minister aware that while discussions are going on concerning the future of his Department, that Department is in the process of negotiating long-term agreements for the acquisition of computers? This procurement is estimated to cost somewhere around $20 million. Will the Minister tell the House what steps he is going to take concerning long-range plans in his Department, and will he, for example, consider imposing a moratorium on all such long-range plans?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not think putting a moratorium on all long-range plans would be the answer. Some of those plans will be required no matter what happens to the Department, regarding the rendering of services, no matter who renders the services, be it the Indians themselves or someone else.

Let me just say that we have undertaken, and I personally have undertaken, to consult with the AFN and the Inuit leadership—but directly of late with the AFN—with respect to any plans of this nature now or in the future. That is in keeping with the spirit of the House of Commons report. It also makes good sense from the Department's point of view to have them involved in some of the decisions we are making.

May I also say that no decision with respect to the computers the Hon. Member has referred to has been made by the Department.

INCOME TAX

DEPARTMENT'S ASSESSMENT OF WRITERS' AND ARTISTS' INCOMES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who will know that less than two weeks ago this House unanimously decided that all matters affecting the taxing of artists and writers should be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for discussion. Since that time I have received a number of communications from people affected, telling me the Minister's staff are assessing writers and artists under the old rules. I ask the Minister if that is true and, if so, will he now confirm to this House that he will put a stop to those assessments until the committee has had a chance to review the matter and report back to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member, I have also received representations from taxpayers, and especially from artists. The Hon. Member is referring to a study that was carried out by a Standing Committee of this House. I may remind him, however, that any changes that should or could be made in the Income Tax Act are the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, so that when the Committee submits its report, it will be up to the Minister of Finance, if any changes are to be made in the Income Tax Act, to put such changes before the House, if the Minister so decides. The Hon. Member will agree that until such changes are tabled in the House and approved, we must administer the Income Tax Act in its present form.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL DISCRETION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister understands that the reason the House spoke to the matter unanimously is because those rules are unjust and unworkable. By applying those rules the Government will continue to garnishee wages of people in universities, and it is imposing rules which are no longer acceptable either to this House or to those people.

It is within the Minister's discretion to give relief to those poeple, as he did with the musicians in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Will he not give relief to these people who are being subjected by his staff to unjust and unworkable rules? Everyone in this House agrees with that.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the Hon. Member reads what he said in the preamble to his question, he will wonder how he could have been so careless. The Hon. Member will recall that the Department of National Revenue is responsible for administering the Income Tax Act in its present form, and I am sure that if he took the time to examine the provisions of the Income Tax Act, he would see that there are no special provisions applying to the group of taxpayers to which he is referring. Provisions that apply to this group are the same provisions that apply to other taxpayers in Canada, and at the Department of National Revenue, when applying these general provisions, we take into consideration the particular circumstances of each taxpayer, including artists.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTH SLOPE DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS—IMPACT OF NATIVE LAND CLAIMS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On November 7 the Minister announced that he rejects development on the North Slope of Yukon, citing the lack of land claims settlement as the reason. Does that mean that until the land claims are settled north of 60, there will be no new development?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, it does not, Mr. Speaker. There are two land claims which are affected. The leadership of both claimants were on the North Slope project review group which reviewed the North Slope and voted against it because the approval, or otherwise, of these land claims is imminent, and this is not an appropriate time to go against the feelings of the native interests with respect to those land claims. It is not a veto which can be exercised by the land claimants forever, but this particular time is not appropriate, and I emphasized that at the time of the decision.

KING POINT PROJECT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, if the Council of Yukon Indians threw their support behind the King Point quarry proposal, joining with the Minister's own Department of Northern Development, Industry and Trade, the Yukon Chamber of Commerce, the Yukon Government and many others, would he then change his mind and take a look at this very important project which will offer employment to 638 people, mostly Yukoners, and provide that much needed economic benefit to an economy which, as the Minister well knows, has been dealt a very serious blow because of the closing down of mining and transportation in that area?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member exaggerates quite considerably. I do not know to whom he is referring in my own Department. We had an official of mine on the review group who also voted against the project in the end, so I do not know to whom he could possibly be referring in my own Department. There are other departmental officials and colleagues of mine in the Cabinet who have considerable hesistancy with regard to this project. I can refer to my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. I would also point out that there are conservation groups, including CARC, an organization in the North, that are entirely opposed to this development. If you add all of those people to all the native organizations that have expressed opposition, I believe the list I am compiling is equally, if not more, impressive than the one the Hon. Member is compiling.

TREATMENT OF INDIAN PEOPLE ON VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In August of 1982 Clarence Jack of the Chemainus Indian band died in the Ladysmith RCMP lockup because he was not given medical attention. This month his cousin, Harvey Jack, was in a car accident and suffered a broken neck. Instead of getting him medical attention, the RCMP put him in the Nanaimo lockup. Today he is in Shaughnessy hospital paralyzed from the neck down. As these two incidents are not isolated but fit into a total pattern of relations between Indians and the Mounted Police, will the Minister order a full and public investigation of all relationships between the RCMP and the Indian people on Vancouver Island?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the incident to which the Hon. Member refers, in which the individual was locked up in an RCMP lockup with a broken neck. I have had a full report on it. The individual appeared to be in perfectly good condition when he was incarcerated. He was speaking. He was asked about his condition. He indicated that he was not suffering from any physical problems at the time that he was incarcerated. It was discovered, after he had been incarcerated and had passed out, that he had a broken neck. He was rushed to the hospital as soon as that fact was discovered.

I would like to hear more from the Hon. Member about any suggestion that that tragic event had any connection with any other event, and any evidence that he has to suggest that the RCMP are mistreating the Indians. I totally reject that, and I suggest to him that if he wants to make a serious charge like that he should have more information to back it up.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the First Nation South Island Tribal Council have asked for such an investigation because of their concern.

THE CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—LEGAL COSTS OF FIGHTING WRONGFUL CONVICTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs. According to reports the Minister said that he would "do his damndest" to get compensation for the legal costs of Donald Marshall who was fighting to redress a wrongful conviction for manslaughter. So far no money has been forthcoming. What did the Minister do in terms of "doing his damndest" to get this money? Did he give up after a preliminary inquiry by the Department, or did he go to Cabinet? Is there no source of federal money to help pay for the tragedy that this young man has suffered, at least to cover his legal costs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is referring to a quote of somebody else rather than myself. That should be noted for the sake of accuracy. I saw Mr. Marshall's father when I was in Nova Scotia. I saw his lawyer on several occasions, both in Nova Scotia and in my office, and heard representations of a very moving nature with respect to the legal costs that this falsely accused man had been put to, as well as other losses he had suffered as a result of this rather atrocious occurrence.

There is absolutely no authority in my Department for payment, as I think the Hon. Member is aware from his knowledge of my authority through his experience on the parliamentary committee. I did write to the Province on at least two occasions urging it to look with some compassion on the situation. As well, I examined other areas in Government that might provide funding. There is none. I regard this very much as an obligation on the part of the provincial Government. To alleviate some of the hardship on this particular individual my Department arranged employment for him with our Department when he was out of jail.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

KING POINT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to that of my colleague from Brampton-Georgetown, to direct to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his first answer the Minister mentioned that it was a matter of timing on the King Point Development Project. In his second answer he raised the environmental question. It is my understanding from a report from within his Department, and also additional reports that he has, that there is no negative environmental impact on King Point. He knows the situation in the Yukon. He knows the jobs that are needed. In his planning, when is the right time in terms of months, weeks or days, as to when he can give approval for King Point?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated many times that there is not environmental clearance. Some of those questions could be more directly referred to my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. It has clearly been stated that certain mitigative measures would have to be put in place in order for you to seriously consider it from an environmental point of view. Keep that in mind.

As far as the Yukon government pressing me to approve these projects at a time when land claims are almost close to settlement is concerned, it is an absolutely integral part of any northern strategy with respect to opening it up for development in the future that those land claims not be prejudiced. The Yukon Government, walking capriciously away from the table during negotiations, and slowing up the negotiations for many months until finally deciding to return, did not in any way help this situation. If it had not been for that irresponsible conduct on the part of the Yukon Government this claim might have been settled and we might have been able to approve the project.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): The Yukon has been hit very hard with unemployment in mining and industries relating to mining. The Minister knows that if we do not have infrastructure in northern Canada we cannot create private sector jobs. Is the Minister's argument now one of the environment, or only one of timing? Is he in fact committed to northern development in projects such as King Point?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it was this Government that showed the political will to get on with the settlement of land claims necessary to open up the North and permit development. When my predecessor held this office he cut off all funding to the native groups in terms of negotiating land claims. If that policy had still been in place we would not be near settlement in either one of these particular cases.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

APPOINTMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE FROM MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs. In view of the current debate with regard to the recent report on the subject, I recently had an exchange with the First Nations Indians regarding the economic development allocation for bands in Canada. Could the Minister inform the House whether or not a Member for the Maritime Provinces has been appointed to this important board with respect to the disposition of these funds for economic development for Indian bands?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not hear the first couple of words. If the Hon. Member is referring to the Native Economic Development Fund, that is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister responsible for small business. I would suggest he direct his question to him.

THE CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—PAYMENT OF LEGAL FEES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has just heard his colleague sitting in front of him rightly term the Marshall case "an atrocious occurrence". Now that the courts have found someone else guilty of the crime for which Donald Marshall spent 11 years in prison, is the Minister of Justice prepared to take the necessary steps, which only the federal Minister of Justice can take, to see that Marshall's legal fees are paid at public expense?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, without passing any final judgment on the facts of the case I may say that I am indeed very troubled as a result of what I know about the proceedings of the investigation and the trial of Mr. Marshall on the first occasion. If there were any readily apparent actions that the federal Government could take, I would be indeed prepared to consider that. In fact, as I am sure my hon. friend knows, all aspects of the initial investigation and trial were under the jurisdiction of the Province of Nova Scotia, either directly or indirectly through the police of the city of Sydney.

I am sure my hon. friend does not believe that we have a system of federalism in which it is the responsibility of a federal Government to correct the mistakes of the Provinces, or to take over from the Provinces when they are not doing things properly within their own jurisdiction. I have to say to my hon. friend that, not only is there no precedent for a payment, if that is what my hon. friend is suggesting in a case of this kind, in fact, I do not think it would be very good federalism to proceed in that way. However, because I am so troubled about it, I am at the point of discussing the matter with the new Attorney General of the Province of Nova Scotia to canvass the situation in order to see whether or not there is not some action which he may take.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, Marshall is a native Micmac and there is a federal responsibility for his welfare, and since there was at least an understanding that a federal Cabinet Minister gave a commitment to pay all bills, because it was a federal police report, commissioned by the federal Minister of Justice, who then caused the retrial of Marshall to be held; in light of all this federal involvement, can the Minister really expect us to believe that the federal Government has no further responsibility in righting what is so obviously a wrong? The people of this country believe that the Minister of Justice is merely buck-passing this to the provincial Government.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand from my hon. friend, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that not only did he not make such a statement, but it has already been denied in the press.

I may say that I find my hon. friend's argument, that because our report led to the freeing of Marshall, we should therefore assume some responsibility for his initial wrongful incarceration, to be an astonishing doctrine and one that is not supported in any way. He has made no comment at all on the fact that his version of federalism which he is presenting—and I wonder if his Leader endorses it—is that it is up to us to correct the Provinces and stand behind them, to step in and do work within their jurisdiction, when they are not prepared to do it. I find that astonishing.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—BILL C-155—REPORTING ERROR CONCERNING REPORT STAGE MOTIONS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Last evening the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raised a point of order concerning the reporting of certain report stage motions in Hansard of Thursday, November 3, 1983.

After reviewing the Debates I have to agree with the Hon. Member's point of order. A corrigendum will be printed in today's Debates indicating the corrections to the errors.

I want to assure the Hon. Member and the House that the official record of the House, the Votes and Proceedings, was correct, as is the version of Bill C-155, printed after passage by the House.

MR. McGRATH—QUESTION ON UNEMPLOYMENT ANSWERED BY MRS. EROLA—RULING OF MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, is the Chair prepared to rule today on a point of order raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yesterday, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) raised a point of order following the daily Question Period regarding a question asked by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). The question was addressed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) but was answered by the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola).

Our practice is very clear in this matter and I would like to quote Citation 361 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> A question may not be asked of a Minister in another capacity, such as being responsible for a Province, or part of a Province, or as spokesman for a racial or religious group.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux puts the matter very succinctly in a ruling given on October 16, 1968, and I quote:

> —a Minister may be asked questions relating to a department for which he has ministerial responsibility or acting ministerial responsibility, but a Minister cannot be asked, nor can he answer questions in another capacity, such as being responsible for a province, or a part of a province—

I am concerned, however, that the question posed by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming referred to actions of another Minister, while it was directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. That complicates the matter from the point of view of the Chair. It is difficult for the Chair to make a ruling to the effect that any Minister named in a question should not have some right to respond to the allegations in a question.

However, the general rule that Ministers should be asked questions and should answer questions relating to their primary ministerial responsibility is a basic rule of the procedure of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, normally we would know what the business for the House would be on Thursday, but since we are not sitting tomorrow and since we did not get this far last week in describing Government business for this week, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary, in the absence of the Government House Leader, might confirm whether we will be dealing with the fisheries legislation on Thursday and would he state what it will be on Friday? If it is not fisheries legislation, what business will we be dealing with on Thursday?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge it will be the fisheries Bill. I will check with the President of the Privy Council and get back to the Hon. Member definitely about Thursday, and also with information about Friday.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I expect to be in the House all afternoon but since the purpose of this kind of question is to advise all Members what the business will be, perhaps if it is something different from fisheries the opportunity might be taken to rise in the House in order to tell us what the business will be for Thursday.

PETITIONS

MR. PATTERSON—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present the following petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of the constituency of Fraser Valley East in the Province of British Columbia, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that there is a crisis of confidence in the Government of Canada because of high unemployment throughout the country, business bankruptcies and personal hardship.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take necessary action to restore confidence in the Government of Canada, that Parliament be dissolved and a general election be called immediately.

MR. HUDECKI—CONDEMNATION OF POSSIBLE INVASION OF NICARAGUA BY U.S. TROOPS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting this petition signed by 200 constituents of Hamilton West, the majority of whom are members of the staff and students of McMaster University.

In essence, the petition expresses concern over a statement made by the U.S. Secretary of Defence who indicated that an invasion of Nicaragua by the United States and neighbouring countries was not discounted and that he considered such action as a definite option. This concern is strengthened by the mobilization of 4,000 Guatemalan troops, a massive military buildup in Honduras, militarization of Costa Rica and open support of the invasion of Nicaragua by Contras and the lack of response from the United States to peace initiatives by the Government of Nicaragua and the Contadora group. The petition requests that Parliament notify the U.S. Ambassador to Canada that Canada would condemn any invasion of Nicaragua or El Salvador by any military forces and would urge the negotiated solution of any prevailing problems.

RETENTION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions that I wish to present this afternoon to the House of Commons. Since they all reflect a similar concern, rather than read each one I will read the covering page of the petition and just name the communities in which the petitions have been received in order to speed up presentation in the House this afternoon.

Mr. Fisher: Why be any different today?

Mr. Anguish: These petitions are to the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled. If the Liberals would like me to read each one in the House, I would certainly be more than happy to do that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would encourage the Hon. Member to proceed as he indicated and the Chair would express its appreciation.

• (1510)

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, these petitions are addressed to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Saskatchewan, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the undersigned have carefully considered the alternate plan presented by the New Democratic Party, that the Crow rate must be maintained and that the railways of all Canada must be upgraded and developed into a modern and efficient transportation system.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to adopt the provisions of the New Democratic Party's alternate plan which will not change the Crowsnest Pass Freight Rate Agreement. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

At this point in time I suppose they would have to find a different Government to honour the wishes of the petitioners.

The first petition I have comes from residents of Flaxcombe and Waseca.

The next petition I have is signed by residents of Lashburn and Unity, Saskatchewan.

The next petition is signed by residents of Rosetown, Herschel and Saskatoon.

The next petition is signed by residents of Dodsland and Rosetown.

The next petition I have is signed by residents of the Macrorie and Outlook areas.

The next petition comes from residents of the community of Kyle and area.

The next petition is signed by residents of Biggar, Province of Saskatchewan.

The next petition I have is signed by residents of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan.

The next petition is also from residents of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan.

The next petition I have is again signed by residents of the Lucky Lake area.

The next petition I have is signed by residents of Marshall, Saskatchewan.

The next petition comes from the Kerrobert and Luseland areas.

The next petition comes from Landis, Saskatchewan.

The next petition comes from Beechy, Saskatchewan.

The last petition comes from residents of North Battleford, Lloydminster and Handel, Saskatchewan.

MR. ANGUISH—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have one other petition to present this afternoon which has a bit of a different thrust. I will conclude after presenting this petition.

I would like to present this petition to the House of Commons today, signed by some 465 residents of the Province of British Columbia who support the passage of Private Member's Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, standing in my name. The petitioners stress that multilateral disarmament must occur in order to secure peace in the world. If Canada is traditionally a peaceful nation, Canada must play a crucial role in achieving multilateral disarmament. The petition calls on the Parliament of Canada to debate and pass Bill C-678, which would prevent testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and thereby allow Canada to act as a serious mediator in worldwide disarmament processes and engage in talks along with other countries that would wish to participate in such a forum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of saving the time of the House I once again make the same suggestion, without creating any precedent, that you simply ask any Members who may have notices standing in their name to rise if they wish to do so. I do not think you will find any rising. We are all so anxious to hear the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in his first public bid in this House for the leadership that we really want to get to it as quickly as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that the proper procedure be followed.

Motions stand.

LIAISON AND INTEGRATION SECRETARIAT

Question No. 5,328—Mr. St. Germain:

What is the mandate of the Provincial Analysis and Liaison Secretariat of the Federal-Provincial Relations Office?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The mandate of the Liaison and Integration Secretariat (formerly the Provincial Analysis and Liaison Secretariat) is to ensure effective flows of information and data on provincial and regional concerns, views and initiatives in order to provide timely and accurate assessments of the current status of federal-provincial relations at the national, regional and provincial levels and to identify any emerging issues affecting federal-provincial relations in each of the Provinces.

The Secretariat also co-ordinates the preparation of briefing material for major undertakings (for example, First Ministers' Conferences and bilateral meetings between the Prime Minister and Premiers), and for the provision of advice on specific federal-provincial issues of major importance.

Further, as part of the liaison and integration function, the Secretariat also has responsibility for managing the Prime Minister's correspondence with each of the Premiers.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary could tell me when he expects we will have an answer to question No. 5,015 which relates to the standards, if any, followed by the Prime Minister when he appoints Members to his Cabinet. I wonder, more particularly, whether the Parliamentary Secretary could assure me if this straightforward and simple question could be answered before the Prime Minister leaves again.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will look into that particular question. Unfortunately I can give the Right Hon. Member no such assurance. However, I am sure the Prime Minister will want to answer that question at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet perhaps I could answer the question raised with me by the Hon. Member for Yukon earlier concerning the order of business for Thursday and Friday.

I have now checked and I have discovered that we will resume second reading of Bill C-170, which is the fisheries Bill; and, should we be able to dispose of that Bill, we would move on to second reading of Bill C-91, an Act to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. Then, should we be so fortunate as to dispose of that piece of legislation, we would move on to the resumption of second reading debate on Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62(9)—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT LEGISLATIVE ACTION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nielsen:

That this House condemns the Government for having taken high-handed and antidemocratic actions in this session and for having proceeded, without a mandate and through the imposition of closure, to abolish the historic Crow Rate, to impose measures relating to taxes on petroleum and natural gas, to cap old age pensions, to create Canagrex, to limit increases in family allowance payments, to change income tax laws, and to increase public debt through additional borrowing and calls upon the Government to seek a mandate by calling a general election without delay.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in today's debate on an Opposition motion of censure, because in the motion as drafted by the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who this morning made a speech that had no connection whatsoever with the motion before the House, he referred to the energy issue, thus giving me a chance to rise in the House today and comment on this particular subject. In fact, I wish to thank my hon. colleague from Yukon, the Opposition House Leader, most sincerely for giving me an opportunity that is becoming scarce in the House, especially in view of the kind of abuse that is going on in the House of Commons as we saw with a list of petitions that took twenty or 50 minutes to read, and all that only to say that they were not proceeding with the motion as proposed. I think that is really abusing the rules of the House. In so doing, Members make it extremely difficult for Government Members and Ministers to speak before the House.

In any case, to get back to the motion, I think that if the Parliamentary House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party had given the matter more thought and read up on current events, he would have realized that by referring in his motion to energy policies, he was giving me a chance to bring up what the Leader of the Opposition said in his speech last week in Calgary—two days later, he did a complete about-face and said that in this field as in any other, he had no policy whatsoever.

[English]

It was very interesting to see what happened last week. On Tuesday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) made a speech in which I felt he enunciated the new energy policy of his Party. He was talking in Calgary and he became somewhat excited. It was amusing to be in Ottawa the day after and see the people in his office running around and telling people that what he said was not what he said, that it was not what he meant if he said it, and what not. It was also amusing to hear the poor Member who represented him before the committee which was discussing Canadianization say: "What my Leader said yesterday is not the policy of my Party". It was fun to see what happened last week.

Last week, after two and a half months in the House of Commons, the Leader of the Opposition was to enunciate a policy. I have been told that he has not met with the press or had a press conference since becoming Leader. His strategy is well known—he will not say anything on anything. When I heard that he made a fantastic speech on energy policy in Calgary, I became excited too. It took a few days before they produced a text. They had some problems with taping and not taping, erasing and not erasing. I do not know what happened, but it was kind of funny to see their organization there. I looked at it and thought that he might be "on". I thought that at last the Leader of the Opposition might tell us something on a subject of vital interest to Canadians. He spoke about energy. It was a great subject on which to speak because he was in Alberta. He made a speech to please the Alberta audience.

I thought at least the Leader of the Opposition, who aspires to becoming Prime Minister of Canada, would check his facts a little. We understand that some Members of the House, when they have to fill a gap just to kill a bill or not let a piece of legislation pass, can speak and not give a damn about the substance of their speeches. However, when the Leader of the Opposition makes his first speech on energy policy, we feel he should offer something at which the people of Canada can look.

I want to highlight some of the points he made. Just to indicate the kind of fun we can have with it, he spoke about the back-in policy, that famous policy where the Canadian Government is saying that after a discovery it will buy back its position for 25 per cent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Buy?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, we pay.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a new policy.

Mr. Chrétien: No, you do not know.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know.

Mr. Chrétien: The Hon. Member will learn a lot if he listens.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am listening.

Mr. Chrétien: As a former Minister of Energy, he should shut up if he does not know that. One of the funny parts is that he said he would abolish the back-in. I reflected on that and remembered that not long ago I dealt with the Premier of Newfoundland on the question of trying to reach an agreement with that Province on offshore resources. I proposed that we should have a back-in of 25 per cent, something according to the policy of the Tories in Ottawa to which they were opposed. One difficulty I had with Premier Peckford was that he wanted a back-in of 40 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, he wanted a back-in of 40 per cent; 25 per cent was not enough. He said that I was not allocating enough; he wanted 40 per cent.

What will happen when the Leader of the Opposition moves east? He made a speech in Alberta. When he goes to Newfoundland, it will be very interesting to hear what he will say to Brian Peckford about it. What will he do when he arrives in Halifax? There is another Tory Premier there, Mr. John Buchanan. He telephoned me not long ago—and his officials were in Ottawa as well—to ask: "When, Mr. Chrétien, will you proceed with the Bill which will confirm the agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia on offshore oil and gas?" I said: "Why is it so urgent?" It is because he wants to have right now his share of the back-in. It is very urgent for him to develop his policy so that he can get his back-in. What will the Leader of the Opposition do if he becomes Prime Minister and deals with Mr. Peckford and Mr. Buchanan on the back-in, which he says he will withdraw because his friends tell him that he should? Of course, multinationals are very important to him. When he received orders from Cleveland to close down Schefferville, he said: "Yes, ready I am". Not only did he close the mine, Mr. Speaker, he closed the whole town. However, that is only one point.

Another point I would like to mention is that he spoke about the taxes. He said that the taxation was a grab and a steal in the middle of the night. I was amazed. I asked myself what the share of the industry was some years ago and I looked it up because it is good to have the facts. In 1977, oil and gas revenue was a 45 per cent share of the industry. That was in the good old days before the NEP. In 1978, again before the NEP, it was 46 per cent. In 1979, when the Hon. Member was the Minister of Energy, it was 41 per cent. Now, after the NEP, do you know how much the industry is getting from oil and gas revenue, Mr. Speaker? Not 45 per cent, not the 41 per cent it got under the Tories, but today it is getting 52 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Even so, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) says that we are taking too much and that it is almost a steal. He spoke about robbing somebody at three o'clock in the morning. Again his facts were wrong.

He spoke about other things that were very important. He said that it was terrible—and I agree with him—that there are 81 different categories of oil. He said that that makes no sense and that he will change it. However, I have discovered the facts. It is very complex, but this rule was established by the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission. The Government has nothing to do with it. It is his friends in Alberta who have established a system with 81 different categories of oil. Again, the very learned Leader of the Opposition had the facts wrong and blamed the federal Government for the mistakes of Peter Lougheed. I think he should check his facts a little more.

Let me cite another example. The Leader of the Opposition said that the federal Government has failed to stimulate new markets for natural gas. I would like to tell him again that he should check his facts. Who does not know that in the gas policy agreement we have signed with the Alberta Government, we have jointly agreed that the price of natural gas will not be more than 65 per cent of the price of oil in Toronto? That is an agreement that was reached between the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada. It was reached in order to expand the gas market in eastern Canada.

We had all sorts of what we call off-oil programs designed to stimulate the demand or utilization of natural gas in the East. You know about the programs that allow for private home owners to get grants from the Government to convert from oil to gas, Mr. Speaker. We have built pipelines to expand the market in Quebec.

All the Members from Quebec know about it. To date, we have spent over half a billion dollars on expanding the gas pipeline network in Quebec. The pipeline has now been built as far as Quebec City and Sherbrooke, and it will soon reach the Lac-Saint-Jean area, I hope, if we can get enough contracts. The Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) and his colleagues are putting pressure on me daily about this, but my answer is: pressure the companies to sign and then we can build another pipeline extension. We even built an extension as far as Lachute, where it was not even supposed to go, but we managed, following representations by the Member for Lachute. And, Mr. Speaker, just to show that we are not partisan, the pipeline even goes as far as the riding of Joliette. He cannot criticize us, since it helps increase sales.

Mr. Speaker, of course I could go on with my comments on the natural gas issue, but my time is limited. Ironically, we worked together with the Government of Alberta to expand markets in Canada. Of course, he is also condemning the Government because, according to him, we were not successful in sales to the United States. Perhaps I may remind him that everything we have done in the past year in the field of natural gas and gas sales to the United States was done in close co-operation with the provincial governments.

[English]

Everything we have done in relation to the situation with the United States in terms of marketing gas has been done after lengthy consultations with the Alberta Government. We reduced the price to $4.40 and we have given an incentive price of $3.40 for volumes above a base level quantity. Last month, we again changed another mechanism to measure natural gas on a monthly basis rather than on a yearly basis in order to meet the demands of the industry and the Governments of Alberta and British Columbia. All that has been done in close consultation with the Provinces. However, the situation in the gas industry has not been caused by the federal Government. It has been caused by the international situation. There are huge bubbles of gas in the United States and so there is no demand for gas. The election of another Government will not change the situation in the United States.

I would like to know something from the Official Opposition. I am glad to see that the energy critic is present in the House. We know that she is a good writer. When she was with the press, she used to work for the federal Government in the North.

Miss Carney: That's a lie, not true, never.

Mr. Chrétien: She is touchy. She never received any money from the federal Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: She said it was the opposite of the truth.

Mr. Chrétien: We know that she can write. We hope that she will tell us, after consultations with her Leader, if the Conservative Party wants us to sell Canadian natural gas to Americans cheaper than to Canadians. That will be very interesting for us to know.

We would like to know what the Official Opposition will do about these problems. For example, today the Alberta government wants to deregulate the price of oil but it does not want to deregulate the price of gas. That is the position taken by the Alberta Government. Mr. Lougheed wants to deregulate the price of oil but not the price of gas. On the other hand—I was at a meeting last week with Premier Davis and Mr. Lougheed—Mr. Davis wants to deregulate the price of gas but does not want to deregulate the price of oil. That is a nice little problem for Mr. Mulroney to solve. At least he can pass an objective judgment, but he is trapped between the two.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! Perhaps I may remind the Hon. Minister that he must refer to his colleagues in the House by the name of their riding or their position, not by their own names.

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I thought my time was up. It is not quite over and that is good.

That is the type of problem that the Leader of the Opposition will be facing sooner or later. He will have to decide between the opinions of these two leaders.

The Leader of the Opposition made another point that I believe needs some clarification. He said that the biggest problem was that there was very little activity in the oil and gas industry in Canada and that all of the rigs were idle. I would like to tell the people that in the oil exploration industry at its peak in 1980, there were 2,081 wells completed in Canada according to an Oil Week source. In 1983, there were 3,136 oil wells completed in Canada. Of course, there was a big decline in gas wells for the very valid reason that the market in the United States is such that the Americans cannot take any more gas. There is so large a surplus of natural gas that it is useless for people to drill for more gas. In western Canada, there are 17 trillion cubic feet of gas in excess of our needs for the next 25 years so far. I do not blame the oil and gas industry when it does not drill for gas, but there was a big increase in oil drilling.

What is the story in the United States? According to the Official Opposition, the oil and gas industry has slowed down somewhat because of the NEP. The Government in the United States is not socialist and there is no NEP there. The number of wells drilled in the United States decreased from 4,530 in 1981 to 1,807 in 1983, a drop of 60 per cent. That was in the United States and it was not because of the NEP. It was only because the oil and gas situation in the world has not been what it once was.

The point is that for the first time we heard the Leader of the Opposition making all sorts of innuendoes without checking his facts. It was amusing because the night after that he went to Edmonton. During the day there was quite a scramble. They said it was not what he had said. When he went to Edmonton, he had nothing to say other than that he would have a new energy policy. Canadians have a right to know what he would do about it.

The Opposition critic of my Department is always talking about PIP grants. Last week I was in St. John's, Newfoundland. The drillers, Husky and Bow Valley, said at a press conference that if there were no PIP grants, they could not afford to drill there. Are the Conservatives saying that if they come to power, they will stop the drilling off the coast of Newfoundland and off the coast of Nova Scotia and there will be no more Canadianization of the oil and gas industry?

An Hon. Member: They will give it all to the Americans.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, they might. He said there would be no more discrimination between Canadians and Americans. If they do that, we will be back to the good old days when everything in the oil and gas industry in Canada was controlled by the Americans.

We have made progress. Let me give an example. Canadian ownership is now 38 per cent compared to 28 per cent three years ago. Sixty per cent of the Canada lands today is owned by Canadians compared to what it was a few years ago. Are they against Canadianization? We want to know that. Are they against self-sufficiency and security of supply? How do they reconcile the differences between Mr. Lougheed and Mr. Davis? What will they say to Mr. Peckford who wants a 40 per cent back-in? What will they say to Mr. Buchanan who wants his 25 per cent shares right away on the back-in? Canadians have a right to know. They want more than negative statements. They have the right to know. The NEP is a fundamental policy of this Government.

When dealing with the industry and what I have done over the past 12 to 15 months, I told them that I would not change the policy but would adjust it. I said I would give them stability. The industry is asking for stability, not a change of policy on a daily basis. That is exactly what we have done. We managed to get an agreement with Alberta in July without any flak. Mr. Mulroney pretends—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Chrétien: I am sorry. I have known him a long time. Canadians have the right to know what they will do.

In the last 15 months there has been a lot of stability in the industry. Last week the Leader of the Opposition did a great disservice to the industry by creating complete confusion. Within 24 hours he had to backtrack. I hope that his critic will tell us today what that Party intends to do. The people know what we want to do. We want self-sufficiency and security of supply for Canadians. We want to Canadianize the industry.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. I have a letter dated February 18, 1983, addressed to Mr. Brian Mulroney, President, Iron Ore Company of Canada, Montreal, in the Minister's Province. It reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Mulroney:

Thank you for your letter, dated January 24, 1983, setting out some possibilities for the future of Schefferville.

Firstly, I have noted with great interest your company's compensation and relocation program for the workers affected by the closure of your Schefferville operation. I think that your actions in this regard are commendable.

Your proposals for a new industrial base for Schefferville appear to have good potential and are worth serious attention. Because of their diverse scope, I shall be transmitting them to the appropriate federal departments in order to get their views and opinions on the subject.

A representative from E.M.R. was present at the Parliamentary Commission in Schefferville, and I am expecting a summary of the proposals submitted to the Commission. Hopefully, it will permit me to assess in more detail what possible role participants of the federal government could have in the suggested development committee. For the moment, we cannot name a specific representative for you, but once the committee and its mandate are defined, it should be possible to indicate an appropriate contact.

I would like to assure you that your efforts in diversifying the economic base of Schefferville are of high interest to me and that Energy, Mines and Resources Canada will do what it can to support your efforts.

We emphasize the sentence "I think that your actions in this regard are commendable". Does the Minister agree with the sentiments set forth in that letter?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, he closed the town of Schefferville. We all know that he tried to do something about it. Most of the programs were developed in collaboration with the federal Government. I did not say that he did not try to relocate the people. Most of the programs were financed by the federal Government. The fact is that he closed the mine. Of course he tried to reduce the problem somewhat. That is natural. We offered our help, our programs and so on.

This morning the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) accused us of being somewhat reddish. The proposal of the Leader of the Opposition was to do something along the lines of what is done in Russia, that we apply to Schefferville a technique used in Russia to repair the damage there. If the Hon. Member wants to be fair to the Leader of the Opposition, there is a very easy way of doing that. Why does the Leader of the Opposition not run for election there? The people of that area will give him an answer. He could go to that town with his smooth voice where he could be judged. The people of that riding will show him what they think about what he has done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before again recognizing the Hon. Member for Yukon, the Chair would like to observe that both the question and the comments were rather lengthy.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, my question was not brief because the rules prohibited me from tabling the letter, which I would like to do. I had to read the text, which was fairly brief. My question is simply whether the Minister agrees with the sentiments in the letter, particularly, "I think that your actions in this regard are commendable".

I was going to get the answer and then point out to the Minister that the letter was signed by his colleague, the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs.

Erola). As far as her sentiments expressed on behalf of the Government of Canada are concerned, it seems that the actions of the then president, Mr. Mulroney, at that time with respect to the Schefferville closure were commendable.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it was a novel expression of desire, after he put everyone there on welfare, that he wanted to do something about it. It is commendable. However, it would have been more commendable if he had persuaded his American friends to keep the mine open.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question. I understand from his remarks, which I first caught over television, that he again said that the Leader of the Opposition had said that he would abolish or scrap the NEP. Is the Minister aware that that misquote which occurred last week has been retracted by Canadian Press? Is he aware that an editorial has appeared in the Ottawa Citizen pointing out that the press misused the Leader of the Opposition? With all the resources at his command, was the Minister not aware that the Leader of the Opposition was misquoted in the press when he said that he was going to abolish the NEP?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I find that extremely funny because he did not use that word. I am happy that he will keep it as his policy. The Hon. Member is saying that there will be no abandonment of the policy, but he said, "The programs concocted to implement them constitute the most self-defeating pile of tax"—I am glad that they will keep it—"and red tape which has ever been unleashed upon a single industry or sector in the history of this country". Now he says he will do nothing—

Miss Carney: Point of Order.

Mr. Chrétien: —after using that crazy type of language. If he thinks it is so bad, why not come clean and tell us? He is using some big words like that and then telling us he will not do anything. What I want to tell the Hon. Member is that I challenge her to give us the policy of her Party as to what it will do with the back-in. What will it do with the back-in in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia? I would like to know.

Mr. Rossi: Stand up and say it.

Mr. Evans: She said, abolish it.

Mr. Chrétien: If that Party has a policy, I would like to see it in writing. If it will be as the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) said the other day, "We will only change the name", then let them invite me to the baptism and we will have a glass of champagne together. If it is just changing the name, then there is no problem. As long as they keep the same policy, God bless them.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) on the kick-off to his election campaign for the leadership of his Party, although I believe he is going to have to do better than that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre rises on a point of order.

Miss Carney: I am sorry to interrupt my colleague, Mr. Speaker, but I do want to point out that the Minister has deliberately misled this House on various points this afternoon. He misquoted—

Mr. Fisher: Let us have the point of order.

Miss Carney: The Minister has misled this House. I withdraw the word "deliberately". He obviously is ignorant of events in his field. He misled the House when he said that I had been paid as a journalist by the federal Government. He misled the House when he said that Mr. Mulroney said that all the drilling has halted, and he misled the House when he said that Mr. Mulroney had said that we would abolish the NEP.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. Those are points of debate.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, instead of throwing a bit of mud back on the floor, I would like to ask the Minister how the National Energy Program is really working. The megaprojects are not working in the tarsands, the big megaprojects. The Alaska pipeline is not going on as promised. The National energy policy was built on rising world prices, whereas we had falling world prices. The NEP, in fact, in its pricing policy, is in a shambles. I would also like to put to the Minister the fact that for all the much vaunted Canadian ownership, I am told—and these are figures from the Minister—that since the program came into being in 1980, Canadian ownership of oil and gas production has increased to 38 per cent from 28 per cent. That is, 62 per cent of our industry is still foreign-controlled. Would the Minister not agree with me that in fact the national energy policy has been quite a colossal failure and we have not achieved Canadian self-sufficiency or 50 per cent Canadian ownership of our industry? Why, then, in the name of Heaven, is the Minister giving the oil industry $2 billion in PIP grants and another $5 billion in the next five years in PIP grants, which surely must make it the biggest welfare bum in the country? Why does the Minister go to Calgary—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Chrétien: There is a very simple answer, Mr. Speaker. There is nothing the Canadian Government can do about the international situation regarding the price of oil. It was not done by us. It was done across the board in all the nations of the world. I believe it is not necessarily bad. I believe it is good that the price of oil is not going up to $60 or $70 a barrel. I believe the general public of Canada will appreciate that we are not faced with that problem.

In spite of the difficulty, this year we have signed an agreement with the Government of Saskatchewan for an upgrader of $600 million. We have the Cold Lake project, which will go between $300 million and $1.5 billion. The Wolf Lake project is $200 million, and on the Syncrude expansion over five years there will be a spending of $1.5 billion. These are not small projects in the oil and gas industry. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that for the first time in years, in 1982 Canadians have produced as much oil as we have consumed. We have 17 trillion cubic feet of gas in surplus, so we are in a much better position today than we were five years ago, and he has to recognize that fact.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You would not know the truth if it came up and kicked you in the shins.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, since the Question Period, much of the debate has centred on one small part of the motion dealing with energy and gas prices. I thought I might begin my remarks by simply refocusing on the essence of the motion. The motion called for the Government to seek a mandate by calling a general election. That is the essence of the motion.

An Hon. Member: Any time.

Mr. Forrestall: How about tomorrow morning?

Mr. Crombie: The motion says that this House wants to have an election. This morning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) indicated that in his view the motion calling for an election was "frivolous, irrelevant and makes no sense". I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members of this House, that so far as I understand the people of this country, and certainly the people in my own riding, the Minister of Transport is dead wrong when he thinks the people of this country do not want an election. People in this country desperately want an election, Mr. Speaker. I believe, indeed, that if every Hon. Member of this House thought about this for a second and remembered the last time he was in his own constituency, particularly during the week of recess, and he took the same opportunity that many of us did, he would know exactly how his constituents feel. People in the constituency of Rosedale, people in the constituencies of Toronto where I spent that week, want a change. They want a change badly. If you listen to those people in the constituencies they will tell you things you need to hear about whether or not we need an election. I listened to the people in my own constituency all week long. I believe that every Hon. Member would have had the same experience as myself in listening to what they had to say. They have concern, Mr. Speaker. Their number one concern is jobs and financial security. That is the first concern of the people I talked to.

There is, Mr. Speaker, 11.1 per cent unemployed in this country. There are 1,346,000 people counted who are unemployed. If you add those who live in areas of the country where there is no opportunity for work at all, the figure is well over 1.5 million people without work. People need to have a job in order to look after their responsibilities. It is something which goes to the very core of the lives of people. What they have had for four years as of February, in the face of that awesome unemployment, is words, words, words; numbers, numbers, numbers, and programs no end. With all the words, all the numbers and all the programs, the reason that the people do not believe the Government, Mr. Speaker, is that they know a hard fact, which is that beneath all those programs and pronouncements by Ministers, there is the underlying reality of chronic unemployment in this country which will not go away, and which is scaring hell out of people.

When you ask the people, Mr. Speaker, they will tell you that their first concern is jobs and financial security. Twenty-four point four per cent of the people under the age of 25 and who have finished their education are without a job. Is that not a great way to start out in this country, knowing that no matter how hard you try or how much education you have, 25 per cent of you are going to be unemployed?

• (1600)

Mr. Evans: Not true.

Mr. Crombie: It is true. The Hon. Member will understand if he remembers that I said it was those who had finished their education.

Mr. Evans: It is not true.

Mr. Crombie: Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it is the people between the ages of 55 and 64 who are without jobs. How many Members of this House have talked to those people who know the prospects for re-employment get dimmer and dimmer as they get older? That is why this is not a debate about some frivolous thing about whether or not someone said something or someone said something else. The first concern that people have is jobs and financial security. That is the first reason they want an election.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, people talk about taxes. My constituents talk to me about taxes and I know they talk to Hon. Members about taxes.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, all those Rosedale—

Mr. Crombie: The Hon. Member says "Rosedale". If he knew more about the city he came from, which is supposed to be Toronto, he would understand that in my riding we have people who have been waiting for years for this Government to produce what is promised. What bothers them most about taxes is not only that they are too high. No matter what level of Government you are in, taxes are always too high. Whether they are working people, small business people, artists and writers, they know the system is no longer fair and equitable. It is unjust, unfair and unworkable. That is why when they look at taxes they say to themselves, how is it that a system could go so wrong in such a short space of time? This is an important matter, Mr. Speaker, because in our system of Government taxes are voluntary. The only way people will voluntarily pay their taxes is if they feel the system is fair and just. But they do not see that. What they see is a Department of National Revenue which is just about out of control.

Two weeks ago we had a motion from the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), to which this House agreed unanimously, to examine the unjust and unworkable rules applying to artists and writers in this country in the face of the reinterpretation of the law by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). Despite that, the Minister and his Department continue to apply those rules. He made the interpretation, he can change it, but he does not. That is one example of why people in this country are increasingly trying to avoid taxes in ways which they would not have contemplated in the past. As they do that, the Department becomes more oppressive and makes the assumption that people are guilty until proven innocent. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that when you talk to people in my constituency, indeed in every constituency, there is going to be a day of reckoning for this Government when it tries to explain how it let loose the Department of National Revenue and the way it has been going for the last couple of years.

The third thing my constituents talk about is peace, Mr. Speaker. Peace is not a Party matter. There is no one, whether it is from the NDP, the Liberal or the Conservative Parties, who has a monopoly on or concern for peace. It is an issue which transcends this House and our politics. Everyone I have talked to feels the same way no matter what his role in life. They are more frightened these days because they read in the paper, hear on the radio and watch on television a kind of slow escalation. That is why, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced he was going on a mission to see what he could do with respect to world peace, I know how my constituents felt. They wished him well. Better than that, some of them prayed for him because they need peace and want it so badly. That is why it was even more incumbent than normal on the Prime Minister to bring what he found out to the House and allow the House, and therefore all the people of this country, to deal with the matter as best we can at this time. Peace is not a question of Party, it is not a monopoly of any Party. In a way, not bringing it to this House diminished the Prime Minister's mission. He still has an opportunity and I hope he takes it.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, my constituents talk about the Government and Parliament. I do not think it will come as a surprise to any Member here that they are very skeptical. They do not trust the Government to understand their problems, and they are skeptical of this House's ability to solve those problems. The more the Government and this House become removed from the people, the more people do not pay any attention to it and the more the national community begins to divide. That is why far more people than I would have thought—and I ask Hon. Members to think about their own constituencies—paid attention to the issue of parliamentary reform. They know that this is the one national free institution which will allow us to deal with our problems. They know it still ought to be what John Stuart Mill once called it, the nation's committee of grievances and its committee of concerns. That is why they supported parliamentary reform, and that is why it was supported by all Party representatives on the committee concerned. That is why they are also concerned about why the work of that committee has not proceeded. They know it is only this institution which can help.

Not only do they have concerns about jobs, taxes, peace and the future of our institutions, but they also know what they want. That is not always the same thing and it is not always explained in the same way, but what they want is something very vague and not something small. If I can put it in a few words, Mr. Speaker, they want to start again. They want a rebirth, a renaissance, a revitalization of this country. Nothing less. That is what they are looking for today. They want world class investments, world class skills and world class markets. They want a Government responsive to their needs and to their concerns. They want a Parliament which reflects their thinking, not the internal bickering. They want the tax system reformed so that it is just and fair. They want peace unencumbered by Party politics. They want jobs and financial security for themselves and their children, and they want that fast. Above all, Mr. Speaker, they want hope for the future of this country and they want to have pride in this country. They are sick and tired of region pitted against region, of intolerant groups trying to impose views on other groups. They want what the Constitution promised them 116 years ago: peace, order and good Government.

In 1946 a great Canadian historian offered a very small and modest thought. It is so apt. He said:

> In every generation Canadians have had to rework the miracle of their political existence. Canada has been created because there has existed within the hearts of its people, a determination to build for themselves an enduring home.

Mr. Speaker, the reason that the constituents of Rosedale, the people in Toronto with whom I talked, and I am sure all the constituents of all the Members of this House, want to have an election is that they want to get on with building that future, and this Government is in the road.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions? Comments? The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am always elevated by the speeches of the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). I was disturbed by some of the comments he made with regard to the unemployment statistics. Is he confident that youth unemployment for educated youth who have gone through university and high school is 25 per cent? The latest figures I have seen indicate that the only group for which that figure is true is that of students who have not completed high school. For university graduates the unemployment rate is around 11 per cent. While it is unacceptable, for high school graduates the rate is around 18 per cent. The over-all average youth unemployment rate today is not 25 per cent but 18 per cent. This is still totally unacceptable but it is far less than the figure that the Hon. Member was putting forward as being the youth unemployment rate in this country.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I used the Government's own statistics, not mine. I think the record will show that I carefully said it is the category dealing with youth who have finished their education, whether it is high school, public school or university. Twenty-four point four is the figure I have. If that is not true then I will correct Hansard.

Mr. Evans: It is wrong.

Mr. Crombie: If I could add, that is the figure which I took out of the Government statistics. If that figure is right then of course I would be happy to accept an apology from my hon. friend.

Mr. Evans: I would be happy to offer it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Debate.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I too listened with interest to the comments made by the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). I thought they were thin. We will read his comments here with interest. He stood in the House and told us what people want. That is substantial and that is important. He did not tell us anything about what he believes. He did not tell us anything about what he would do. While trying to pretend that he was offering something to people, he acutally failed the real test. He did not offer the people of this country his positive views and thereby give them an opportunity to judge which course of action they would like.

Mr. Speaker, that is the whole character of this motion and this debate. This is political fluff today. It is a waste of time. It is a rag-tag collection of tired clichés. We have seen this motion in the House over the over again. The Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the man who signed the motion, is a typical Tory. The motion and his speech today really represent his best contributions. He has a highly specialized skill, the skill of opposing. They offer no facts. They certainly offer no economic facts. If they were to take some of their statements out of the House and into the private sector they would not have a prayer of getting a job, because some of these statements do not hold water and do not earn anybody's respect. In the House those same statements are used to threaten courses of action and to threaten the basis for the livelihood and prosperity of some of our people.

The Mississauga News saw this very clearly and they treated the whole thing in a symbolic way recently. The Member for Yukon visited my riding. When he came, they ran his picture on November 2 and said the following things about him:

> Conservative House Leader Erik Nielsen was the guest speaker last week at a fund-raising dinner for Mississauga North federal candidate Bob Horner. Nielsen was late for the dinner because of a filibuster in the House of Commons Friday.

They did not say anything about his speech because he did not say anything in his speech. They did not say anything about the crowd who were there. I am told the crowd was not big enough to start a fight. That is so typical of the Conservative Party.

On the same weekend the Liberal Party in my riding held a dinner as well. We charged the 500 people $5 a couple, and we made money. The Tory Party charged $75 and served up a guy whose description in the newspaper is solely limited to that of a man who contributes to a filibuster in the House of Commons. That is all they have to say about him. That is all we can say about the Opposition in its offerings today. It is a filibuster. It is empty fluff. They are only for their capacity to oppose.

This same hollow motion and this same hollow speech have been repeated now for 20 years. For 20 years the Tory Party has been losing the very elections that it calls for in this motion. The same defeats follow the same hollow ideas.

I was quite amused the other day at a comment from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in answer to a recent question on the economy in the House of Commons. Statistics Canada had just reported some more good economic news and the Prime Minister stood up and said:

> I was wondering this morning how the Opposition would manage to seek grief because unemployment had fallen for the seventh consecutive month and the figures are good and encouraging. I am interested in seeing that the Opposition can still put a sad face on good news.

That is exactly what we are seeing in this motion today. This imaginary tale of woe flies in the face of the reality in our country. It flies in the face of the fact that our economy is recovering. It flies in the face of enormous consumer confidence that is building and helping to regenerate that recovery. It flies in the face of serious attack against the unemployment tragedy in our country. It flies in the face of positive policies that are bringing back our positive economic strength.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let's have an election.

Mr. Fisher: What are those policies? Policies like the 6 and 5 program in the general anti-inflation fight that got rid of one of the worst economic diseases ever to strike our country.

An Hon. Member: Brought on by a Liberal Government.

Mr. Fisher: Policies like our short-term job creation program that are helping people facing severe disaster in their own lives. Policies brought out in the April budget that generated and rekindled business confidence. Policies like the special recovery projects that are speeding up Government investment and bringing it on line now when it is needed. Policies like our ongoing emphasis on trade and international relations. Those are the policies that this imaginary tale of woe flies in the face of.

My friend from Halifax called out that he would like an election. I would remind him of something that the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said in Lethbridge way back in 1962. He said, "I would never have been Prime Minister if the Gallup polls had their way." Perhaps in the light of all their enthusiasm across the way sparked by the Gallup poll our good friends over there would like to keep Mr. Diefenbaker's reminders in mind. The Liberal Party is proud to stand up and base an election campaign on the policies that we followed over the past five years.

Let us compare the programs that we have offered and the kind of hollow opposition that has been offered by the other side. Mr. Speaker, we believe that Canada is part of the whole world. We believe that, despite the desire by the Opposition to overlook that very simple obvious fact. That is why the six and five program was introduced. It kept us in line with our world competitors. It helped us to keep up our standards in world trade. It helped us to rebuild our export industries and to recover the lost jobs in the export industries. It helped us to keep in step with the recovery all over the world.

What was the Tory Party doing when that program was introduced? They voted against it and fought against it. They spoke against it. That was the end of their contribution to anything in that vein.

We in the Party believe that Canada is part of the world. That is why we have encouraged aggressive trade policies and that is why in this Parliament we expanded the Export Development Corporation. That is why in this Parliament we initiated Canagrex. What was the Tory answer to that? Their answer was a filibuster in the House of Commons and in the committees from people like the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). They could not stomach any longer the idea of supporting the Export Development Corporation, so they wanted to fight it despite the best interests of the country. They wanted to fight it to the point where the Business Council on National Issues sent a telegram, the day after another successful filibuster, pleading with the committee to get on with it because the Corporation was needed by businesses and exporters all across this country. That was the Tories' answer and that was the public's answer to their activities.

We believe that Canada is indeed part of the world. That is why we proposed a revitalized rail system. That is why we have just finished an intense debate, following two years of consultation coast to coast with Canadians on the Crow rate. Through these kinds of revitalization in our rail industry, we create the confidence that we can deliver our products to the outside world. Our customers come to believe that they can rely on us. Our customers believe that our suppliers are reliable sources of these vital products for them.

We have supported the change in the Crow rate because in this case there is a clear link between better trade, better railroads and better jobs for all Canadians. But what happened? The Tory Party voted against the Crow rate. They voted against new industry for western Canada.

Mr. Huntington: That is unbelievable.

Mr. Fisher: They voted against jobs in mining, in steel, in railroads and against suppliers for railroads. They voted against stronger industries coast to coast.

Mr. Huntington: You do not even understand what you voted for.

Mr. Fisher: They can squawk and complain but they cannot go to Trenton and tell the workers in the railroad plants down there why they held up those jobs that those people need so badly. There are no squawks. Not a comment.

Mr. Forrestall: That is a figment of your imagination.

Mr. Fisher: There is not a whimper from them now when that kind of fact is brought out. When they want an election, we will be happy to bring those gentle facts from the record to the attention of a few Canadians.

Not only do we live in an open world, we believe that we must foster and nourish Canadian industry within that context. That is why we have FIRA—to set standards and to screen applicants who want to come to Canada. It is not to keep them away or to discourage them but simply to let them know that when they invest in this country they must follow Canadian standards for the benefit of the Canadian economy and Canadian society.

That is why we have the national energy plan, so that our wealth and resources can be developed for our own use and prosperity. What do we see from the Tory Party? They want to tear down FIRA and destroy the National Energy Program. We see a leader in the Party who cannot wait to pander to every foreign carpetbagger with any kind of business idea. We see a finance critic who ran his leadership campaign recently on the entire thesis of open trade and complete vulnerability to the United States. We see the foreign critic of that Party for whom Washington's every wish is his deepest command.

We on this side of the House believe in a co-operative effort between the Government and the people to build our country. That is why we are proud to support Petro-Canada. That is why we do not want to abandon the Canadair efforts. That is why we are proud of our Crown corporations. That is why we are ready to join with business and give them incentives to become involved in vital activities.

When we examine the Tory record, we see memories of the Avro-Arrow and we hear hollow squawks about European socialism as the thin disguises for their destructive programs.

Finally, we on this side of the House believe that Canadians should have a decent safety net for the days when they personally get into trouble or when our economy gets into trouble. When one examines our record over the past year, one can see a proud record of help for Canadians in the depth of really tough economic times. We put $4.5 billion into the special recovery program. We have the National Training Act to help people whose skills are outdated or businesses which need to upgrade the skills of valuable employees. We have seen the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) put an emphasis on a decent medicare system, despite the activities of Tories in the provincial Governments from coast to coast. We have job sharing under the Unemployment Insurance Program. As well, we have the NEED Program, Canada Works and Summer Works, all of which are short term job-creation programs intended to bridge tough times and help people have a job for a few days or weeks until their old jobs return.

But what we see in this very motion is the revealing of the real Tory attitude. Their attitude is that we should give the rich a nice tax break despite the homilies from the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). I would say to him again that I doubt the people in Regent Park are really worried about having some kind of special rollover provisions on our RRSPs, or other cute little tax breaks. What they want are jobs. They want a fair tax system that taxes people from coast to coast equally. We see Members on the other side propose ideas to help the rich keep their money and hide it from the taxman at the expense of the poor who must carry those burdens. No one engaged in such vitriolic debate as some of those Members when the MacEachen budget was introduced. The very heart of their complaints was that the rich would have to pay more and pay their share. That was very clear in all of their debates.

We offered a chance for a fair and more even tax system. In this motion we find that that is supposed to create a lack of confidence in the Government. What else do we see in this motion? We see a direct attack on the funding for the safety net. We see a direct attack on the use of Government resources to help people in trouble. This comes out very clearly when the two Members from St. John's rise. The Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) wrings his hands, full of pity, and the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) says that we must cut the deficit. Who is it that has the greater power and greater influence? It is the deficit cutter, the one who wants to take a direct run at the safety and prosperity of ordinary working Canadians.

This motion is thin. The speeches we have heard, particularly the one from the Member for Yukon, are outstandingly thin. After this debate, when all of these clichés are dragged out and these tired criticisms are dragged out, we should always remember the little warning we had from Gérard Pelletier back in 1971 who told us that "Alarmism is the real temptation of opposition". That is what we are hearing in all of this. It is a faint hope that they will stir up fires and drag out discontented people without being caught in any of the real choices or real options of Government.

Let us just go down the list that I have given in my comments. Let us note that we on the Liberal side believe that Canada must take part in the entire world and not hide. The Tories voted against the six and five. They voted against the Export Development Corporation. They voted against Canagrex and against the Crow. Here on this side we believe that we must help our own economy to grow. What do the Tories do? They fight against FIRA. They vote against the National Energy Program and they try to open our doors to any kind of carpetbagger that comes along. We believe on the Liberal side that Canada must use co-operative efforts between the people and their Government. What we see is two clear-cut cases of deliberate and malicious attacks on Petro-Canada and on Canadair. On this side of the House we believe that Canada must create safety nets for ordinary Canadians. What do we see on the other side? Plaintive pleas on behalf of the rich, and deliberate attacks against the spending that funds and supports safety nets for the poor.

Mr. Beatty: There are poor people like Alistair Gillespie.

Mr. Fisher: The Tories want an election. Good luck. Those ideas and concepts have been dragged out and paraded before the people for 20 years, and for 20 years the Tories have been thrown back into Opposition, kicking, screaming and wondering whatever happened. I wondered. I just got curious as to what happened to the people between 1979 and 1980. I think the best answer to that can be found in the electoral record of the Hon. Member for Yukon. He was thrown into office in 1979 with a margin of 1,400 votes and thrown back in by an even more overwhelming majority in 1980 of 100 votes. The people of the Yukon are getting increasingly sick of him. They get sick of him because he has nothing to offer but criticism. Given a chance to be positive, given a chance to build and given a chance to do something creative, he and his colleagues blew it because they refused, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) is now refusing, to offer creative ideas and real choices to the Canadian people. Who knows, you may in fact find that their ideas are accepted, Mr. Speaker. But to this point they are only a question mark, and Canadians will never reward cowards. We offer vital ideas and we will stand by our record because it has been human in tough times and energetic in a time of recovery.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, so much for decorum and civility coming as close on the heels as it does in the words expressed in this Chamber as late as yesterday with respect to the necessity for civility.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). He used the expression that it was the intention to use the vast wealth from the energy of Canada for use by Canadians and for Canadians. I know the Hon. Member was in the Chamber and listening closely to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). Could he tell me if that might include the persuasion of Government, with the immense talents the Member has, to make an adjustment in the PIP grants so we do not drive out of Canadian shipyards about 16,700 jobs that could be taken up with the construction of offshore service rigs, oil drilling rigs and, vessels for the Canadian commercial account involved in energy exploration? Is the Hon. Member for Mississauga North sufficiently familiar with this difficulty? If he is, would he respond as to whether or not that would be a useful adjustment to make so that what he did say with respect to the Canadian use of the wealth and energy might become a reality?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to hear a Member from Nova Scotia talk about civility in the House. I certainly hope he will take the opportunity to pass his lesson along to his colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) who is always ready to drop insults and accusations here but does not seem to be able to carry them outside the House where he is a little more vulnerable. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) might also want to pass his homily along to the Hon. Member for the Yukon whose best benchmark in Canadian politics is perhaps to attack his colleagues in this Chamber personally. I have only challenged him. I suppose it is uncivil in a Tory sense to do this, but I have only challenged them to come forward with some ideas. If that is uncivil, then I do indeed apologize for asking where they stand and what their ideas and beliefs are. So far the Tories have not shown us that except in the behaviour of people like the Hon. Member for the Yukon and the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

May I say that the Hon. Member and I engaged in a "Late Show" on this very question of PIP grants, and I would be happy to run down two or three observations for him. The Hon. Member knows, because I said it to him then and I presume he remembers, that the Canadian Government uses two checking points to try to determine that Canadian spending will happen first with that money. There must, first of all, be a serious check through both the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to make sure the PIP grant money is spent on Canadian projects.

Second, we do not intend to distort the market totally to make the people, whether in the Maritimes, British Columbia, Ontario or anywhere else, pay more because of an exclusive Canada policy. We need the check of international competition. The Hon. Member smiles. He knows it is true. He knows his own constituents would not thank us if we were to waste our money by letting these shipyards go unchecked or by letting any other industry or supplier to the Government go unchecked. He also knows there is a tremendous world glut in much of this equipment that simply ruined a lot of the shipbuilding activity. The Hon. Member also knows the Canadian Government under the Special Recovery Program has started the frigate program and the icebreaker program, and speeded them up to offset the effects of that glut and to provide some employment in some of those very shipyards.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the rambling response from the Hon. Member for Mississauga North. I asked him a simple question. He is obviously not aware of the difficulty that PIP grants cause for Canadian shipyards. I asked him whether or not he would use his office as a learned backbencher in Government to persuade the Treasury benches to make that adjustment in the PIP grants so that explorers—those out there doing the offshore work—can in fact claim their capital costs here in Canada in terms of building up their level of grant or award for this exploratory work.

Petro-Canada built its rigs here in Canada because it could not get the grant. It sold its service rigs offshore and then it was able to claim full capital costs all the way up to 80 per cent. That is what is happening in case after case. It is that question that I would like addressed. Would the Hon. Member direct himself to an adjustment in the program that would allow rigs, service ships and other equipment built in Canada, to qualify at the same level rather than having to go offshore to get it?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member directly or indirectly is asking for a Canada value added or for some allowance so that these rigs and this equipment made in Canada, more expensively at times, could be devalued so as to be competitive with international equipment. If he wants us to do that and it is a reasonable idea, we will take a look. I am sure the Minister is open to these kinds of suggestions. On the other hand, I reject the allegation that PIP grants are a pipeline into cheap equipment.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions for the Hon. Member. I want to congratulate him on his spirited speech. I do not agree with much of what he said, but it was spirited. The Government has budgeted about $8 billion in PIP grants, which I have called welfare to the oil industry. I have read that the Canadianization rate has risen since the National Energy Program came into being in 1980 from 28 per cent to 38 per cent. We now own 38 per cent of our oil and gas industry.

Why does the Government not cut out these PIP grants and all such giveaways and simply use the money to take over one of the foreign multinational companies like Imperial Oil? The Government would still have a mixed system, private and public, but we would clearly have over 50 per cent Canadian ownership. It could be done quickly. We could buy the company and we could use that money which is going into PIP grants, instead of going with the long scheme of grants to help Canadian companies which might ultimately get us there by 1990.

My second question concerns what we hear in the country, that Canadians want a change in leadership in the Government. Does the Hon. Member agree with that? Will he go on record as urging the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to hurry up and get out of there so that we can get on with some new direction in leadership?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I will go on record as telling the Hon. Member that I like my Leader. He is the Leader of my Party, and I am happy to support him. He can stay around for as long as he wants, and two things will happen. First, I will be happy and, second, I will win my seat in the next election because the people of my riding like him.

In answer to the other question, which was a lot less frivolous than his second one, I think the Hon. Member is overlooking two or three matters. I understand the sentiment behind it; I, too, would like to have the oil industry dominated by Canadian companies. That is a worth-while objective. Perhaps on this question we have more disagreement on the pace of it than on the substance of the issue.

When the Hon. Member talks about the federal Government becoming involved in the buying of a foreign oil company, I would like to remind him that he has forgotten BP and many other acquisitions which went into the making of Petro-

Canada. Obviously that has not brought us up to the 50 per cent mark, but it has been an enormously expensive endeavour. It has come at a time when the Government has to make some choices about further expansion and the pace of it. We have a company which is established there. We have a system which is encouraging needed exploration. It is possible for us to go at a slightly slower pace without ruining the economy, without pouring billions and billions of additional dollars out of the country and without slowing down the pace of exploration. It seems to be a reasonable balance at this point. I recognize the sentiment. I happen to agree with much of it. However, it is a question of the pace of the sentiment rather than the final destination.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, since the earliest days no principle has been more central to our system of justice than that the law must be understood and that it must be applied fairly and even-handedly. When ordinary citizens are incapable of understanding how the law applies to them or when laws are enforced unevenly, democracy perishes and despotism is born.

In Canada we take pride in the fairness of a system of laws designed to protect the citizen when his rights conflict with the convenience of the state. One of the reasons Parliament acted two years ago to entrench the Charter of Rights in our Constitution was precisely to defend that principle. Yet, principles can become undermined to the point that they cease to have any relevance at all. By its sheer weight, big government can smother the rights of its citizens and overwhelm their ability even to insist upon fairness in their dealings with the state.

For Canadians in 1983, that is precisely what is happening in their relationship with the federal tax bureaucracy. We have a crazy-quilt Act that probably no one in Canada, either inside the Government or outside it, can claim to understand. Certainly I would be surprised if there were anyone in the House who is responsible for passing laws, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), who would claim to understand fully the Income Tax Act.

If those of us who write the law and those who enforce it are not fully knowledgeable about what it means, think of the position of ordinary Canadians—working persons, farmers or fishermen, artists, owners of small businesses and pensioners. How are they to negotiate the income tax morass without becoming lost in it? Indeed it is hard to see what they are to do when faced with laws they do not understand and with officials who have little interest in their plight.

A tax system like ours, based on voluntary reporting and payment, can only work as long as those affected by it feel they are being treated fairly. When respect for the law breaks down, or when people begin to feel they have become victims and no longer beneficiaries of the Government and its policies, growing numbers of citizens are prepared to break the law or to make enforcement as difficult as possible.

Increasingly that is what is happening in Canada today. The vast majority of Canadians are conscientious and law-abiding. They love their country and they are prepared to carry their fair share of its economic burden. However, when they begin to feel that their Government views them as criminals waiting to be caught, their respect for the law and their willingness to comply with it rapidly decline.

Here is how one chartered accountant from Toronto described the problem in a recent letter to me. He wrote:

> I can see how upset my clients are with the unreasonable treatment that they are receiving. My advice is to file the documents and appeal when the notice of reassessment comes through. The obvious result is that the auditors are wasting their time because they don't accept the document and we don't accept the reassessment. My clients have to pay me for what they can see is unreasonable treatment and the tax department has to pay their employees for the wasted effort.
> But I think that there is a larger impact in this. As someone recently said; the tax department is unfair and arbitrary so why should I be honest in reporting information on my tax return? I think that this attitude is much more common now than it was when I first started in the business. I advise my clients to file their returns correctly, but if taxpayers believe that they are being treated unfairly, they are much less inclined to be honest.

Members of Parliament on all sides of the House could quote from similar letters or refer to similar representations which have been made to them by chartered accountants, lawyers or other experts in the tax field. We have found two things happening frequently. First, the income tax laws become so complex that ordinary people feel trapped in the maze. Second, actions by the Department of National Revenue have often been so capricious and unfair as to estrange ordinary Canadians and make them feel that they are victims of their Government or that their Government is out to get them rather than simply requiring that they pay their fair share.

I cite this example, not because it is extraordinary but because it is typical of a growing number of complaints being received by every Member of Parliament. If the Government needs other authorities to convince it that the situation is serious and that it is rapidly growing worse, I could refer it to a book which was first published by a tax lawyer from Montreal. It is entitled, "How to Survive Canada's Tax Chaos". On the front cover of the book there is a quotation from a review in The Gazette of Montreal which read, "should be required for every Member of Parliament". Certainly I agree. It would be helpful if Members of Parliament on all sides of the House would read this book. They would gain some impression of the author's views of how the tax system has worked in Canada and how improvements could be made to make it more fair and equitable, to ensure that it functions in a better way and more successfully and to ensure that relations between the Government and the citizens of Canada are conducted in a more civilized fashion. Here is part of what the author wrote in his introduction:

> Since the introduction of "tax reform" with all its complexities and inequities, I have noted a distinct deterioration in the "tax morality" of many taxpayers who hithertofore have been scrupulous in their accountability to the public treasury. Why? There are at least five discernible reasons for this development—

He then proceeded to list the five reasons he feels Canadians are losing faith in the tax system. The first reason listed was that many people have lost confidence in the Government's ability to provide them and their families with any long-term security. That was in 1976. Surely since that time, as the Government has dragged Canada into a recession, that confidence has fallen even further.

The second reason which is advanced by the author is uncontrolled Government spending and bureaucracy. He elaborates on the point in this way:

Many taxpayers find no way to counter what they consider profligate government spending otherwise than through tax avoidance and often tax evasion. The growing list of government "white elephants" that have consumed billions of taxpayers' dollars, the failure of government to establish and abide by accepted financial controls as illustrated by the recent revelations of the Auditor General, the unacceptable level of remunerations, perquisites and retirement benefits enjoyed by certain of our "civil servants" which are virtually unmatched in the private sector, and the seeming disregard for the peoples' priorities, have all contributed to an attitude of hostility towards governments at all levels. Many maintain that hard-earned income is being expropriated by government in the guise of public necessity only to be in turn dispensed on ill-conceived public projects, to idle bureaucrats, and to indolent welfare beneficiaries both individual or corporate and that this waste of tax dollars is justification for resistance to growing government fiscal demands. This resistance may take many forms but tax evasion is certainly one of them.

The third cause listed by this author is tax inequities. The author states that:

—there is no doubt in my mind that the failure of our tax system to achieve "tax neutrality" (i.e. that taxpayers in the same circumstances should bear the same tax burden) is also contributing to the practice of tax evasion.

Two other reasons listed by the author are that a small proportion of the population will always want to evade taxes and that the tax system is too complex. On the latter point, he concludes:

I believe that the establishment of requirements clearly destined to be ignored or disobeyed has the effect of undermining the entire system.

Who was that tax lawyer from Montreal who wrote the book "How to Survive Canada's Tax Chaos", Mr. Speaker? He was the Prime Minister's tax laywer, a man named Donald J. Johnston. He is currently the Minister of State for Economic Development in the Cabinet of this Government.

A review from the Montreal Gazette appeared on the front of that book as saying that the book should be required reading for every Member of Parliament. I would suggest that that is entirely correct. The first place to start would be on the Treasury benches themselves because when the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) was simply a tax lawyer and was representing Canadians at that level, he had a very good grasp of some of the problems which are confronted by Canadians when dealing with the Government. He had a prescription for ways to correct those problems. Yet today, Mr. Speaker, we find that he has been swallowed up in this massive bureaucracy against which he previously railed and we find that he is part of a Cabinet which is indifferent to the plight of ordinary Canadians and which is not concerned about reforming the system, making it more equitable and ensuring that the confidence of the people in Government is increased. That is why I agree very much with what was quoted on the front of that book. This book should indeed be required reading for every Member of Parliament.

The statements which I quoted were written in 1976. Today we have a tax system that is far more complex, far less equitable and far more subject to bureaucratic caprice than it was seven years ago.

In September of this year, Hon. Members will recall that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce met with the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance to recommend ways to improve our tax legislation and its administration. In its brief, the Chamber complained of inordinate delays arising from bureaucratic inefficiencies. It also reported this finding:

There is a growing perception across the country that Revenue Canada is becoming more and more aggressive in its attitude towards the assessing and collection of income taxes. No one disputes the right of Revenue Canada to collect the full amount of tax to which it is entitled, but there appears to be a significant growth in the number of frivolous or poorly based assessments, often issued without the benefit of discussion with the taxpayer. In addition, the collection officers then insist on payment of the tax owing, even though it might be obvious on a cursory review that the assessment will be reversed on appeal.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a blunt and candid assessment of the Department's procedures. However, the Chamber of Commerce is not alone in its concerns. On May 28, The Globe and Mail reported that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association had struck an ad hoc committee to consider the assessing procedures of the National Revenue Department. The article quoted a number of authorities who were concerned about the Department's aggressive tactics. If the Government were serious about its relationship with Canadians, it could implement reforms today to begin to correct this situation.

There is no element of this problem that is more serious than the inequity that occurs when moving from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. One finds that the law is applied unevenly as one moves from place to place. A recent example of this was brought to the attention of the House, and that was the tax treatment of members of symphony orchestras. The tax department's interpretation in the case of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra was entirely different from the way in which it interpreted the position of members of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. That is not atypical. It is something which happens all too often in the system and something that must be addressed.

I would like to refer the House to an article that appeared in The Toronto Sunday Star of November 6, 1983. The author of that article, Mr. George Brett, was referring to comments made by a lawyer named Paul Schnier. In that article, the author says this:

Schnier adds that some district tax offices are tougher than others to deal with (though the taxpayer must deal with his own office and so has no choice).

"Hamilton is notorious and Kitchener is another tough one," he says. "Toronto, because it deals with more (tax) professionals, is in a position where it has to be a little more accommodating.

"The auditor in Toronto knows he's dealing not only with the taxpayer but his accountant or lawyer as well—and tax practitioners aren't easy to push around."

This tax lawyer says that one's treatment at the hands of the Government under the Income Tax Act depends to a great extent upon where in the country one lives and which office one must deal with. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is something that is unfair and that attacks the confidence of the people in the administration of the income tax system.

There are a number of things which can be done to correct the problems that we have referred to today. First, it is time for a review of ways to make our tax laws more intelligible. When growing numbers of people find that they cannot fill out their own tax returns without someone else's help and when the cost of assistance in filling out one's return is not even deductible for individual taxpayers, the system has broken down badly. The Leader of my Party has struck a task force that will report in a matter of months on ways in which a Progressive Conservative Government would simplify the tax system.

Second, it is time to remove some of the clear inequities from the system. When the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was Minister of Finance, he attempted to give Canada's hard-pressed family farmers a break when he proposed capital gains tax relief for family farms.

Third, it is time to take a fresh look at some of the special advantages which the law gives to the tax department. As an article in the October 23 edition of the Toronto Star recently pointed out, the onus of proof is on Revenue Canada only in a small number of instances; for example, when it is prosecuting, when it reassesses a tax return more than four years old and when it is levying penalties. In most other cases, the onus of proof is on the taxpayer to explain any discrepancies. Additionally, it is hard to justify allowing the tax department to force payments while the assessment is being disputed.

Fourth, and perhaps most important of all, the Minister of National Revenue has a responsibility to ensure that his officials treat taxpayers with courtesy and respect. Every Canadian would expect tax cheaters to face prosecution, but for the vast majority of people whose greatest offence was to make an honest error, there is no justification whatsoever for anything but polite and helpful treatment by the Government. That tone should be set by the Minister himself and clear instructions should go from him to each of his employees indicating that strong-arm tactics will not be tolerated.

There has probably never been a time either in this or in any other country where a call from the tax department has been particularly welcome. I doubt that any of us will ever see that day in the future. However, relations between taxpayers and the Government have now reached the lowest point in our history and the breakdown in our tax system can only worsen unless the Government acts now.

There is no need for the atmosphere of mutual distrust which exists today between the federal Government and the Canadian people. It is perhaps too late for the present administration to reverse that sad condition, but it is not too late for a new Government with fresh ideas, with a desire to serve and not to rule and with faith in our citizens to begin the task. Rebuilding the confidence of Canadians in their Government is a challenge worthy of a new team and it is urgent that the work begin now.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in this debate. There are two issues contained in the motion which concern me, and one is the idea that we have used closure or time allocation on many occasions. The second is the idea that what the people of Canada want now is an election. I was interested to hear many speakers, including the last speaker, say that Members of the Party on the other side have some fresh ideas. They must still be germinating because I have not heard many of them.

I would like to warn the people of Canada that in light of the fact that there are no ideas and we do not know what the policies of the Opposition would be if they were in Government, they should think of what Napoleon said when inspecting his troops toward the end of the battle of Waterloo. Following his inspection of that rather rag-tag group of desolate beings, he was asked by someone what he thought their effect would be on the enemy. Napoleon was reputed to have said, "I don't know about the enemy, but they sure scare the hell out of me". When we think about the Opposition, that is the sort of feeling I get. I am a little frightened.

With respect to time allocation or closure motions that we have had, I find the attitude taken by the Opposition in bringing forth this motion today to be quite strange, to say the least. They wish this House to condemn the use of, not closure but time allocation on various Bills passed during the session. On the face of it, they do not wish to take account of the merit of these Bills, the time that was consumed in debating the Bills, or the surrounding circumstances, including the impact that failure to pass the legislation might have had.

Good management in all things, particularly good management of time, has always been a virtue, yet these are exactly the issues which must be addressed by the Government in taking action to limit debate. In fact, before time allocation takes place, there is a time period set aside during which Members on both sides of the House may debate the motion for time allocation.

Let us take two of the Bills that have been singled out by Members opposite, Bill C-131 and Bill C-132 to amend the Old Age Security Act and the Family Allowance Act. Both of these pieces of legislation were intended to give effect to portions of the six and five program announced in the budget of June 18, 1983. The program was designed to tackle the very serious problem of inflation by setting identified goals for cost increases in both the public and private sectors and then by taking the lead in a broad range of ideas within the federal authority. It was an effort to end the inflationary psychology that had taken hold of this country and was keeping inflation at high rates of around 12 per cent. As part of this effort, the Government felt it necessary for a period of two years to set limits on the indexation of family allowance and basic old age security pension. In so doing, it was the Government's stated intention to enlist the participation of Canadian families and Canadian senior citizens in this effort to show how important and serious the six and five program really was. Clearly this was a difficult step to take and special protective measures had to be instituted at the same time to safeguard those with low incomes, as I will discuss later. In both cases, the Bills were introduced in the House in October, 1982, to take effect from January 1, 1983.

In the case of Bill C-131 to amend the Old Age Security Act, the amending legislation was introduced for second reading on November 18, 1982, and was debated by 28 Members, including 23 Opposition Members, seven Progressive Conservatives and six New Democrats, up to the point of time allocation.

The terms and effects of the legislation had by that time been very thoroughly debated indeed, well beyond the point where any additional insights or views were being added. It came to the point where the Government had to consider the effects on the parliamentary process, on the six and five program and on the public if passage were to be further delayed.

These effects were serious. First, time was being lost for the debate of other important legislation. Second, the whole psychological effort, the seriousness of the Government's determination to ensure that inflation would be brought down, was being laid open to question, and this could have led to a return to the inflationary viewpoint if matters had gone on indefinitely. Last and most important, uncertainty that was being created in the minds of the pensioners had to be of concern. They did not know what to expect. Would their January pension cheque be limited or would it not? What was the amount going to be? They needed to know this so that they could plan accordingly.

The provisions of Bill C-131 had been designed with great care. The old age security pension is indexed four times a year rather than once a year so that its real value stays as constant as possible. However, the 6 per cent and 5 per cent limits were annual targets. To meet these goals within the OAS program, the indexation of the basic pension was to be limited to no more than 1.5 per cent over the December 1982 rate in the first quarter of 1983, no more than 3 per cent in the second quarter, 4.5 per cent in the third quarter and 6 per cent in the fourth quarter.

As it turned out, the fully indexed basic pension in the first quarter of 1983 was $251.12, while the limiting amount under the Bill was $250.62, a difference of 50 cents. It was for that amount, 50 cents a month, that Opposition Members were acting to create uncertainty and anxiety in the minds of pensioners by delaying passage of the Bill.

Furthermore, it was not all pensioners who were subject to a limit on their indexation. All low income pensioners, in fact all pensioners who received any portion of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, were guaranteed by the legislation not to lose a single cent. The legislation provided that recipients of the supplement, who make up more than half the pension population, would have their supplement fully indexed and then increased further to offset the effect of the six and five limits on their basic OAS pension. These pensioners then were assured that they would be no worse off after the legislation was passed, but the delay in passage was no doubt causing them some worry.

Despite these factors, it was clear that Members of the Opposition were not prepared to agree to a reasonable length of time for debate prior to passage of the legislation. Instead, there were clear statements made that the New Democrats at least would continue to present speakers as long as the bill was in debate in order to delay its passage to the longest extent possible. This is the climate in which the Government decided that it must move for time allocation.

Even so, time allocation only limited further debate on second reading of the Bill, which was then sent to committee on December 10, 1982. In committee, the Bill received a further and extremely thorough examination in four days of hearings before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs before it was reported back to the House without amendment on December 21, 1982.

It was then debated at the report stage until January 31, 1983, when time allocation had to be moved a second time to finish off report and third stages. At that point, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) noted that some 71 Members had spoken at various stages of the passage of the Bill. After a further time allocation debate, another full day at report stage and a final day of debate on third reading, the Bill went to the Senate on February, 1983.

Very similar circumstances were faced by Bill C-132, a legislation to limit the indexation of family allowances for two years. That Bill did not require time allocation to obtain second reading. In fact, it was moved to committee after two days of vigorous debate in the House and was reported back after three days of hearings by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. However, at report stage, it again became clear that debate was being extended for the sole purpose of delaying passage, and time allocation had to be sought. At that point, 32 Members had already participated in debate on the Bill at its various stages.

As with Bill C-131, the concerns of the Government extended to more than simply the time of the House which was being used up in debate for the sake of delay, while other important legislation was awaiting passage. There was also concern about the uncertainty and worry which were being created for recipients, although by this time the limitation had been applied in January, 1983 to restrict family allowance increases to 6 per cent. More important for these recipients, however, was the delay created by opposition to another piece of six and five legislation, namely, Bill C-139.

As in the case of Bill C-131, the Government had been careful to ensure that low-income families could be protected against the effects of limiting their family allowance increases. In the case of old age security, the protection came through the income-tested Guaranteed Income Supplement. In the case of family allowances, however, the appropriate vehicle for protection was the refundable child tax credit which is provided for low-income and middle-income families under the Income Tax Act. To offset the effect of the limit on family allowances, the Minister of Finance announced a special one-time $50 increase in the child tax credit for 1982, raising it from $293 to $343 per child. This increase was intended to balance in advance the expected reduction in family allowance over the two-year restraint period for these low-income and middle-income families. However, the increased child tax credit could not be refunded until Bill C-139, the legislation amending the Income Tax Act, was passed. This again took a great deal of time while the Bill was being debated in the House. That delay in passing C-139 held up the child tax credit payments for many mothers.

If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, the experience of Canadian mothers having their child tax credits delayed, provides a very good example of the type of circumstances which support the responsible application of time allocation. We heard this morning some talk about the fact that Parliament has lost relevance in the eyes of many of the people and they were saying, "Why do you not get on with the job?" Time allocation in this case did help in allowing us to get on with the job.

Let me now turn to perhaps the most important point in discussing the wisdom of this motion as it refers to Bills C-131 and C-132, and that is the merits of the legislation itself. During the course of the debate, which some Members of the Opposition clearly feel was not long enough, there was certainly plenty of time for Opposition Members to say many incorrect things about the six and five program and about the purpose and the effects of Bills C-131 and C-132. There was time for them to suggest that the Bills were deindexing family allowances and pensions, when they were continuing indexation, albeit subject to limits. There was time for them to suggest that the legislation was simply an effort to save money, when in fact the savings were less in the first year than the cost of the child tax credit increase, and every effort was being made to minimize the effect of the limits by bringing inflation down. There was time for Opposition Members to quote and repeat figures showing that pensioners would lose hundreds of dollars, even after actual figures for the first quarter were released showing a difference of only 50 cents a month once the Bill took effect, and only for pensioners with incomes too high to qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

To put it mildly, it is obvious that many Hon. Members of the Opposition portrayed the legislation as something which was dangerous, misguided and would create hardship among vulnerable segments of our society. So it is certainly a welcome opportunity to look back now at the end of 1983 and be able to confirm that these Bills did serve the purpose they were intended to serve, without harming Canadian families or senior citizens.

These very favourable conclusions stem largely from the results of the six and five program. All Hon. Members know what has happened to the inflation rate in Canada. It has gone from an unacceptable high rate in 1982 to its lowest level in years in 1983. The 12-month rate to September, 1983 stood at 5 per cent. For old age security pensioners, this has meant that the limits set by Bill C-131 have not had to be applied in the last three quarters. The amount of the old age security benefits right now is exactly the same as it would have been in the absence of the legislation. This is due to the measures taken by the Government. The OAS basic pension is the same as it would have been in the absence of the legislation, as I said. I feel that bears repeating.

The full indexation of old age security to the end of 1983 has been held within the limits allowed, so that the amount of benefit for the last three quarters has not been at all affected by the legislation. Some pensioners did lose a total of one dollar as a result of the limit applied to their February and March OAS cheques, but that is all, up to this point.

For family allowances recipients, the drop in the inflation rate has meant that the over-all impact on the value of their allowances is less than originally expected. Given that inflation is now running at 5 per cent, the limited indexation increase of 5 per cent in family allowances this coming January will be doing a good job of maintaining the real value of the benefit. Furthermore, since Bill C-132 was passed, the Minister of Finance announced in his April, 1983 budget that the special $50 per child increase in the 1982 child tax credit will not be removed. Instead, the credit will remain at the $343 per child level for 1983, and this amount will be fully indexed for 1984 and subsequent years. This means that neither old age security pensioners nor family allowance recipients have been hurt by Bills C-131 and C-132 in the way in which some Opposition Members suggested they would. In fact, we might ask ourselves who has benefited most from the drop in inflation which has taken place since the six and five program was introduced.

One group which has deservedly benefited from lower inflations is pensioners with fixed annuities and unindexed private pensions. These pensioners were unable to protect the value of their pensions which were being eaten away by double-digit inflation. Even 5 per cent is too much inflation if you have a fixed income, but it is definitely preferable to 12 per cent. Another group which may have benefited is young families in the low and middle income ranges. These were the people who were hardest hit by inflationary mortgage rates and by general costs which for many rose faster than their wages.

This then was the record of this legislation. It did no harm to those who most need the social benefits. At the same time, it was an important contribution to the objective of the Government; to help bring inflation under control by reducing the inflationary expectations in the country. Clearly, the six and five program worked to the point at which it has surpassed our expectations.

Time allocation is a tool of the parliamentary process which must not be utilized lightly. Its use must be justified by the circumstances and defended by Governments in debate. Nevertheless, it is a legitimate instrument to which responsible Government must resort for good and sufficient reasons, as in the case of Bills C-131 and C-132. Accordingly, I must advise you that I cannot agree with the motion which has been laid before the House today.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment rather than a question, although the Hon. Member may want to comment on it himself. It is really not a disagreement, although of course I would not deign to say that I agree with all that he said. But for the sake of the record, the Hon. Member stated that it was the Emperor Napoleon who said something to the effect: "I do not know if they frighten the enemy, sir, but, by God, they frighten me." In fact it was Arthur Wellesley, the First Duke of Wellington, who made that remark about the British troops. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to offend some of the Bonapartists in his own camp across the way, so I simply draw that to his attention as I feel his speech will be circulated among some of his constituents and I would not want any of the young people in Guelph to get the wrong idea about history.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for pointing that out. I understand the last person who mistook the Duke of Wellington for Napoleon was shot on the battlefield.

The Official Opposition has proposed a non-confidence motion, Mr. Speaker, and they say they do not like closure. They do not like closure on the Crow rate, on petroleum taxes, pensions, Canagrex, tax changes, the public debt and so on. Well, Mr. Speaker, neither do my colleagues or I. The Conservatives say they do not have confidence in this Government. Neither do we, nor, I think, do the people of Canada. But as the debate developed today and I got a chance to listen to different viewpoints being put forward, it was very interesting to see that the topic of energy was brought up and the positions taken or not taken by the Official Opposition. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I urge Canadians to scrutinize very closely, especially in light of public opinion polls, the so-called alternate Government, the Conservative Party under its new leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney).

As my colleague and House Leader pointed out earlier, what we can find of Conservative policies are inconsistent and vague. Some of the Conservative critics are starting to show already a disturbing arrogance, very much like that shown over the years by the Trudeau Government.

Mr. Fisher: That is a misreading of our situation.

Mr. Waddell: It may not be quite as bad as that arrogance, but it is getting there. When I sit here and see the Conservatives raise their voices against closure over Canagrex and petroleum taxes and so forth, well, I am from British Columbia and we just had an incredible fight against the Social Credit Government of Bill Bennett, which is in part a Conservative Government and which tried to close down the legislature. It had the Leader of the Opposition dragged out of the legislature, it pushed legislation down the throats of the people, and the people rose up, went on strike and stopped Bill Bennett in his tracks. But when I tried to get some support against this use of closure in British Columbia from the Conservatives MPs from British Columbia, I got absolutely nowhere. There was not one voice—well, perhaps on human rights that of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). But none of the rest said anything against the kind of closure that Bill Bennett brought in. As a matter of fact, behind the curtains they thought it was pretty great.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some concern about references to matters taking place in a provincial legislature. The Chair listens with interest, but there are certain courtesies normally observed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am not in British Columbia and thank goodness that matter is hopefully over. But I wanted to point that out to show the hypocritical and selective nature of the motion and the position taken by the Official Opposition.

In the debate today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and a number of speakers from the Conservative Party, talked about energy and petroleum taxes. I took the opportunity of getting a copy of the infamous speech by the Leader of the Official Opposition at a fund raising dinner in the Calgary Convention Centre on November 8, 1983. He talked about some problems in the National Energy Program with which I have some passing familiarity. The motion mentions energy taxes, and the Leader of the Opposition said this:

> One, the cash flow of the companies involved was gravely impaired by the federal "tax grab"—

When the Official Opposition presents a motion like this, and when its Leader makes a speech like this, it really has to get over some very serious naiveté in dealing with energy in this country. The oil companies of this country always want more "cash flow". They did ten years ago, they do today and they will tomorrow. They always want more money. The poor Leader of the Opposition is getting sucked in to giving more money to these companies. How do you finance a Government, Mr. Speaker? You have to get taxes and you have to choose whom you are going to tax. Are you going to tax consumers, the poor, the middle-income earners, the pensioners? Or are you going to tax the oil companies and banks, some of the people who can afford to pay? Here we have the first indication of the kind of policy presented by the Opposition. Finally we are hitting a moving target here. They are about to change the tax structure to help the oil companies, and it will result in penalizing indirectly the average ordinary Canadian. The second thing the Leader of the Official Opposition said in that speech was this:

> Two, there was so much obvious retroactivity and confiscation in the NEP that investors lost whatever trust and confidence they had in the federal Government.

That is the United States line, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly what Ambassador Paul Robinson said. This is a branch plant economic position. When you take this kind of position on economic policy—that is, we will follow what the Americans want and open wide to American investment—and then take the same position on foreign policy, a "me too" Reaganism, then you have a complete change, and this is why the motion surprises me. You have a complete historic change in the modern Conservative Party. This is now a continentalist Party. It is for big oil, and make no mistake about it.

Have you seen the ads that the Canadian Petroleum Association has every night on TV, Mr. Speaker? I urge Canadians to watch these ads. If they flip channels they will probably see them. They talk about how they are going to help Canada and co-operate with the federal Government and take a fair return and so on. The Canadian Petroleum Association is big American oil. That is who controls the CPA. That is who is giving this line about more cash flow, about retroactivity and confiscation under the NEP. My goodness, Mr. Speaker, there are lots of things to attack in the NEP: the pricing scheme, the give-away PIP grants, where we are doing exploration and so on. But they are taking the American line. We are still an independent country. The Americans are our allies, but we are an independent country and we have to remember that. Is this what the modern Conservative Party has come to? John A. Macdonald would not be turning in his grave, he would be spinning in his grave if he could read this Calgary speech of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say something else about this motion today. It seems to me that the Conservatives have missed the mark on the non-confidence aspect of the Government. It should not be in energy. It should not be in Canagrex or the Crow and so on. It should be in the handling of the economy. If we had had a chance to put forward a motion, we would have tackled head on today the most important thing that has happened around here in a little while. That was the conference on high tech last week. My Party and I have no confidence in the way that the Government is handling the revolution in high technology and the way that the conference happened last week. The Government spent $500,000 on a conference on high tech that was virtually Government propaganda and that missed the whole social implication of high technology. The highlight of the conference apparently was Senator Lawson's offcolour speech telling dirty jokes. That shows you the shallowness of the conference. Basically, labour was not at the conference. The largest labour group, the CLC, the legitimate group, was not represented at that conference. The reason that they were not there is that they never thought that the Government would look at the underlying problems of high tech. There was an underlying assumption from the conference that we do not have to deal with labour in the future because high tech will replace the labour unions and they will be gone. There was that very important and very serious assumption. There was also an assumption that high tech was a good thing. There was no talk about the deskilling effect of high technology or how it affects working people.

I think that what the Government was most incompetent in was in the handling of that conference and in its handling of the high technology revolution. The fact is that people are being affected by high tech and the Canadian worker should have a say in how high tech is developed. They are not modern Luddites, the people who knocked machines when they came in at the beginning of the industrial revolution. The Canadian worker has a legitimate concern. I say this to the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) who was at the conference.

Look at British Columbia. When the worker is up against the wall, when you take away job security and seniority and you make things so insecure for the worker, the worker will fight back. One thing we learned in British Columbia last month is that the teachers will fight back. No one expected the teachers to go out the way they did. No one expected some of those other unions to join. There is a lesson to be learned, and the Government should learn it. The lesson is that the Canadian worker is not going to sit back and lose his or her job needlessly. There is a great feeling of insecurity out there, and the Government should address this in the upcoming high technological revolution. In offices secretaries are worried about losing their jobs. Women especially will be affected by this change. It is coming faster and faster all the time. We have to deal with it.

I would like to say one other thing about the high technological revolution. The Government should get on with the job of appointing an all-parliamentary committee or some committee that really has labour on it. I mean the CLC people who have really gone into some of the problems associated with high technology. The Government should listen to people like Heather Menzies when she speaks articulately about how technological change will affect women and how the deskilling affects the job. In fact, what we are going to have is a few high technocrats making lots of money and the rest of us being technopeasants of this new era. We will lose the middle class in Canada. That is a fundamental change in the Canadian economy and society.

I hope it is through negligence rather than bad will, but the Government is missing the boat here. It should get this out in public and have a public commission or a committee of this House of Commons and it should bring in all the labour groups. It should not have Senator Lawson come in and tell a few dirty jokes, but it should go to some other teamster people in the country. In Vancouver they can speak articulately about labour matters. The Government should speak to the CLC people.

I would like to conclude by moving a motion. I move:

That the present motion be amended by inserting the following after the word "borrowing":

"and for accepting the advice of the Official Opposition when they urged the Government to abandon the Crow rate and increase the public debt through additional borrowing to grant billions of dollars to private sector oil companies."

I am told that the motion has been approved by the Chair. I propose to move that motion, and I do so. I believe you have a copy of the motion, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to conclude by saying that in the NDP we think that we have made our position very clear as an Opposition Party. We opposed the Crow rate from the beginning. We consistently opposed it. Today in the House of Commons my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). He said that one day after the Crow passed the railways were laying off people in Winnipeg at the rail yards. The Government promised that great things would happen after the change in the Crow rate. Right away we see lay-offs. We were skeptical and we were right. I think we are going to see that the change in the Crow rate is not all that was promised and it is really going to hurt the farmer in the prairie Provinces.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment covers the notion that was brought up time and time again in debate today, that is, the energy policy, of borrowing and of giving billions of dollars in petroleum grants to the poor private oil companies which moan and groan and whose moans and groans have been accepted by the Leader of the Conservative Party. I do not know what he is going to do if he ever gets to be Prime Minister, because he is going to have to choose between Premier Davis, who is going to want low energy prices, and Premier Lougheed, who is going to want high energy prices. As the Leader of the Opposition said in his speech, they are going to solve all the problems because, "It is time for energy policy in this country to be established around the table of consensus. It is time for co-operative efforts. It is time for this country to begin realizing the tremendous potential we all know it has." That is fluff. That is shallowness. A real Prime Minister, a real leader, has to deal with and solve conflicting regional viewpoints. These regional viewpoints killed the former Conservative Leader, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), who could not survive the problems between Premier Davis and Premier Lougheed. Let us not have this fluff from the Official Opposition. Let us not have these inconsistencies, as the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said. Let us have some real policy. Let Canadians know what you are going to do.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Waddell: We are clear. We know what we want to do in the area of peace. We know what we want to do in the area of economics. We know what we want to do in the area of the Crow rate and the farm policy. It is all there to read and see. That is why I propose this motion. Let us see that the Tory emperor really has no clothes and that the Conservatives in fact are just as bankrupt as the Liberal Government.

• (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions may be posed to the Hon. Member who just spoke.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief question. It is the same question that the Hon. Member asked me. I want to return the compliment to him. Could he tell us when his Party will come to grips with its leadership problems? Does he agree with the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) and the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for example, that there is a problem? Can he tell us when his Party intends to start the tough job of revitalizing its policy under a new leader?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intent of the Hon. Member's question. With respect to leadership, I can tell him that there is certainly no problem on this side of the House and we are quite content and proud of our Leader, who is perfectly consistent and who does something which certainly the Official Opposition and increasingly the Government does not, which is to advance policies and stay behind those policies.

For us it is not a question of leadership; it is a question of policy. Any difference we have ever had in our Party has basically been over the question of policy. Let us look at the policy of the present Government. When its Leader was speaking in the 1980 election, in some previous reincarnation, after 12 years he suddenly found that our oil industry was controlled by multinational oil companies that were basically American. He also discovered that the oil industry was actually doing things which were not in Canada's interest, such as when Exxon said to move a shipment of oil away from Canada, Imperial would do so. The Leader of the Liberal Party advocated Canadian control—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair is trying hard to establish some relevance. While it is a very sweeping motion before us, the Hon. Member does appear even to be going beyond that motion.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to answer the question. The question was on leadership. I was making the point that we were more interested in policies than leadership. I was giving the Hon. Member an example of this. That is why I moved this motion, and if the Hon. Member would look at it he will see that it states:

—and for accepting the advice of the Official Opposition when they urged the Government to abandon the Crow rate and increase the public debt through additional borrowing to grant billions of dollars to the private sector oil companies.

To answer his question with respect to leadership and policy, I am saying that one must look beyond leadership and examine the actual policy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised Canadian control of the oil industry. That is the second time he promised it since he did so in 1975 as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the Chair feels that both the question and the answer being pursued have gone beyond the motion before us. Perhaps the Chair should have intervened and not allowed the question in the first place. If the Hon. Member is relevant to the motion being discussed, he may continue.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to make the point that the question on leadership had to be referred to the debate today. The debate today showed an interesting new matter, which was raising the energy issue with the new Conservative position on energy which basically is to eliminate the National Energy Program. In my view that is a fundamental change for the Conservative Party. That is what we should be looking at.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forth every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply in accordance with Section 9 of Standing Order 62. The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, November 14, 1983 consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill C-170. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) deserves the lion's share of credit for the initiative which is contained in this Bill. He, together with many others, has worked over many months to come up with the set of arrangements which are now before the House. I commend him and the many others who were involved, including the Premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Peckford, for the excellent results which have been achieved.

The deep sea sector of the fishery is the very cornerstone of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. I have some related figures, Mr. Speaker, which will show you what I mean. In 1982 there were sales of just over three quarters of a billion dollars, $770 million. And that was in a year when the industry was not in full swing. Indeed, some of the fish plants had been obliged to close late in that year, August and September, for various reasons, including financial ones. Notwithstanding, there were sales of more than three quarters of a billion dollars, which meant that 44,000 people in Atlantic Canada were employed in the deep sea sector. There were 20,000 fishermen, either in small boats, which in effect commute to fishing areas every day, or in trawlers and draggers, which go further afield and return home every few days with the catch.

There are 20,000 people in that category, another 24,000 men and women who depend directly on the fish processing plants in Atlantic Canada, a total of 44,000 people depending on this part of the fishery alone. When you relate those figures to the population of Atlantic Canada, Mr. Speaker, you see how significant the deep sea fishing activity is to the economy of the region. It is fair to say that, in relative terms, the deep sea fishery is as significant to Atlantic Canada as is the automobile industry to central Canada. For that reason alone, letting the deep sea fishery go under is unthinkable.

That was one of the options, Mr. Speaker, one I thought was academic and to be dismissed out of hand until I heard continuing and disturbing suggestions that somehow the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada ought not to be involved in this exercise. If you accept the argument that those three Governments ought not to be involved, you must ask the question: What then happens without the involvement of those three Governments? I would suggest one of two things: either the industry goes under completely, a complete collapse of the deep sea sector and the resulting chaos for three, four or five years until someone comes in and picks up the pieces; or we could have Government involvement in another way, as we have had over the years, that which I choose to characterize as the band-aid approach where we throw good money after bad by giving taxpayers' money to fish company managers to manage as badly as they have managed their own money.

There were, Mr. Speaker, just three options: to continue applying for band-aids; to walk away from the problem and allow economic and social chaos of a substantial size; or to do what is being proposed in this legislation. I support wholeheartedly the approach taken in this legislation, having in mind that I represent the largest fishing riding in all of Canada. I represent 1,500 miles of coastline with 135 communities, almost all of which have a very direct relationship to the fishery, many of them to the deep sea sector.

By way of example, there are 12 so-called deep sea plants in Newfoundland, eight of them in the riding of Burin-St. George's. Those plants are at Burgeo, Ramea, Gaultois, Harbour Breton, Grand Bank, Fortune, Marystown and Burin. In addition to those eight plants there are another 14, for a total of 22, in the riding of Burin-St. George's which depend on the fishery.

It would be helpful if we tried to put a human face on what we are talking about. Let us look at a community such as Ramea. This is a community of 1,400 people located on an island a few miles off the south coast of the island of Newfoundland. One hundred and twenty-five people of the community work the boats, either the trawlers or the inshore, and another 300 or so work in the plant. With fishermen and fish plant workers together there are 450 people out of 1,400 who depend directly on the fishing industry for employment. One out of every three people in that community are directly employed in the fishery. For them the choice is not between fishing and some other employment activity. The choice is between fishing and nothing. The choice is between having a job in the fishery and seeing their employment opportunity, community and whole lifestyle collapse. That is Ramea.

I could mention Gaultois, which is also on an island and depends on a fish plant for its employment. I could mention Harbour Breton. I could mention some of the inshore communities like McCallum, François, Grey River, Grand Bruit and La Poile. These communities know only one way of life. It is a way of life that has served them very well. If you are looking for record crime rates you do not look to these communities. If you are looking for vagrancy and vandalism you do not look to these communities. These phenomena are almost foreign to the very proud and dignified way of life which the people in those communities pursue. I for one want to see to it that we in this House do everything within our power to ensure that that way of life is allowed to continue, is encouraged and is allowed to enhance itself. Canada is well served by people of that ilk. Canada is well served by people with a value system such as we find alive, well and thriving in communities such as I have mentioned.

This Bill does not seek to make welfare ghettos of those communities, Mr. Speaker, but to allow them to continue a profitable economic activity which they have pursued with vigour over the years and still want to pursue. The only reason they have not been able to do it unimpeded is that we have had some fish company managers who have let their enthusiasm get in the way of their judgment. They have allowed those deep sea companies to become overextended financially and generally have made some other incompetent, ill-advised decisions, financial and otherwise.

The consequence is that we have an industry with much potential. After all, if you cannot make money selling fish in today's world, what can you make money at? The potential is there and has always been there. The independents are proving that so well. Even in very hard times the so-called independents in my riding are doing very well at a time when they had many adverse factors with which to contend. They continue to sell their fish. They continue to make a dollar.

The same could have been the case with the deep sea sector, if we did not have some overenthusiastic fish company managers who made some terribly incompetent decisions. Our time is being taken up here today because of the chaotic, disastrous results of those incompetent decisions.

In this Bill, the Government of Canada, in collaboration with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Government of Nova Scotia, proposes the only sensible course of action open to it. A couple of days ago I listened with some interest to my good friend from South Shore (Mr. Crouse), in Nova Scotia, who spoke in this debate. Among other things, he suggested that a thorough search of the private sector has not been done in an effort to find investment capital. I respect his view, and that may well be his view, but I submit to him that it is a very wrong view.

I do not ask him to accept my version on my say so, but before he makes that kind of statement publicly I ask him to compare notes with a colleague from his own Party, the Premier of Newfoundland. It is no secret to the House that the Premier of Newfoundland wanted very much to get the deep sea sector back on a stable footing without the involvement of the Government of Canada. The Premier of Newfoundland did everything he possibly could to attract private capital. His exploits to find private capital on both sides of the Atlantic are well known. He did everything within his power to try to find private capital. The principals of Fisheries Products also did everything within their power to find private capital, as did the Canadian Development Corporation and the Bank of Nova Scotia. Therefore I believe it is somewhat misleading for the hon. gentleman from South Shore to say that there is private capital out there.

Let me put it differently. If he knows of private capital which is out there, let him tell the House and the Government. I make an undertaking to him now that if he can come forward with the private capital we will scrap this Bill. We will do away with it because there will be no need for it.

The reason this legislation is before us today is that all Parties involved, the Government of Newfoundland, the companies concerned and the other investors, have all failed in the most diligent effort to find private capital to stabilize this deep sea sector. The gentleman from South Shore wants a schedule by which the Government would divest itself of the shares. I believe he has a schedule. I believe he has a firm undertaking from the Government and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans as well as the Premier of Newfoundland that the divestiture will take place at the earliest possible opportunity. If a buyer shows up reasonably soon, the shareholders provided for in this legislation will be very happy to talk to that buyer on an urgent basis.

I always become a little amused when I hear the Tories talking about the socialist umbrella, as the gentleman from the South Shore characterized it. I do not know where that leaves the Premier of Newfoundland, because he is part of this same so-called umbrella, or where it leaves Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia. I never thought of him as being a socialist. I suppose it is the same old story in which the Tories stand for many things. They stand for one thing in this Chamber, something else in the hustings, something else in the Government of Nova Scotia and something else in the Government of Newfoundland. It must be very convenient to talk out of all sides of one's mouth at the same time.

This legislation has nothing to do with socialism. It has to do with a pragmatic approach. It has to do with responsibility. It has to do with doing what has to be done. The alternative is to allow those thousands of jobs to go down the drain.

Let us make up our minds. Which is it? Is it some sinister approach which the gentleman from South Shore would have us believe? Or is it, as the Premier of Newfoundland, another great Tory, says—the best thing that happened to Newfoundland since Confederation? Which is it? Is it good or is it sinister? The economic viability of the industry must be the ultimate objective.

We have tempered that objective, of course, with a social cabinet. We recognize that communities such as Ramea, Gaultois, St. Anthony and Harbour Breton would have no future outside the fishery. So the Government has said that in those cases the industry ought not to bear the financial brunt. The Government of Canada on behalf of the taxpayers ought to address that issue. If it is determined that it is in the best interests to put taxpayers' money into communities like Ramea, the Government will do it quite apart from any objectives of the company which will manage the industry.

Finally, the question arises: Do I, as the Member who represents the largest fishing riding in Canada, have some reservations about this particular Bill? As a matter of fact, I do. It is not a perfect document. It is the result of a set of compromises which have been worked out with all the Parties involved.

Allow me, then, to state one of my reservations. This Bill has the effect of taking the Bank of Nova Scotia off the hook. I do not like that and I do not care who knows that I do not like it. The bank does not deserve to be taken off the hook. When the bank advanced the credit, it took its chances, or so you would believe. When the day of reckoning came, the bank should have lost its shirt for aiding and abetting incompetent fish company managers for making incompetent financial decisions. But that is not what happened; the bank did not lose its shirt because it had an ace up its sleeve. It had the Government across a barrel, in effect. It knew Governments would not stand by and allow bankruptcies to proceed and the assets of the deep sea sector dismantled and auctioned off. That would have put the industry in chaos for three to five years. The bankers sat in Toronto and smiled, and well they might. Their no lose scenario was working to perfection. Taxpayers would once again bail them out. At the right time we have to address that issue. We have to rein in those bankers so that they serve the people of this country instead of abusing them. This is the place, but this is not the time.

Let me say in conclusion that while I have some very serious reservations about the role of the bankers in this field, I recognize the Governments involved are doing the only thing they can to salvage the situation. It will do more than salvage; it will stabilize the situation and make for a very profitable fishery in the years ahead in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on this Bill, I must point out that it is a very sketchy and incompetent piece of legislation that we are asked to approve by the Government opposite. This Bill does not in any way explain to us how the Government plans to carry out the so-called restructuring of the fishing industry in Canada.

The Minister when he introduced the Bill, as reported at page 28848 of Hansard, asked the question:

How can an industry that has so much going for it manage to get itself into such serious trouble?

The Minister went on and introduced the Bill but never once answered that question. There has been no rational explanation by the Government as to how the East Coast Atlantic fishery got into the state it is now in. The Minister has not explained whether or not this has anything to do with the policies of the federal Government. The fishery is solely within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. The Minister has not explained what policies of the federal Government might have contributed to the debacle in the fishing industry off the East Coast of Canada. He has not explained to this House how these policies will be changed or what new policies there will be that might change the situation.

His introduction of the Bill was full of half-truths and specious reasoning. The Minister said that the agreements reached with Newfoundland and Nova Scotia reflected to some extent the recommendations made by the Kirby task force. I do not know to what extent this Bill and these restructuring agreements agree with the report of the task force. They appear to be diametrically opposed. There was great conflict between the Kirby task force and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané). The recommendations of the task force are not carried out in the Bill. In fact, it does not even refer to the restructuring agreement entered into with Newfoundland or with Nova Scotia.

Then the Minister went on to say that the industry needed to become leaner and more efficient ashore and afloat. How will the industry become leaner and more efficient ashore and afloat if the Bill is passed? If Government-controlled corporations are to take over the industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, is it likely that there will be a leaner and more efficient structure, especially when a government or two governments are involved? Of course not. In my view, unfortunately we will see a Canadair applied to the fishing industry. There will be a great deal of losses in these new companies. They will not be leaner and more efficient. Once the politicians are involved, they will be anything but lean and efficient.

The Minister claimed that he reached an agreement with the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. He has not reached an agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia. There is a so-called agreement in principle, but there is no other agreement with Nova Scotia. He said that it was an agreement in principle. That is all it is.

There was no explanation by the Minister of why we should approve the Bill and no suggestion as to how it should be improved. There is no accountability under this piece of legislation. It is inadequate, disappointing, frightening and irresponsible. The legislation authorizes the Government to make loans, to give guarantees or to give grants to any fishing company or fishing arrangement that it wishes. It does not have to report back to the House as to whom it has made the loans, to whom it has given the grants or why. It does not have to report annually to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry as to what it has done, why, to whom it has done it or how much money it has spent. The Government asks us to approve $138 million to be spent between now and March 31, 1985, without its having any obligation to return and report to the House.

We just listened to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) trying to blame the position of the industry on incompetent decisions by fish plant managers. What absolute tripe, to blame fish plant managers! What caused the crisis in the fishing industry? It was not the Bank of Nova Scotia which caused it. The Bank of Nova Scotia, poor devils, tried to support the fishing industry down through the years. They made loans and did their best to carry the fishing industry until it got beyond them. Why did it get beyond them? It was because of the interest rate structure in Canada. This incompetent Government which sits opposite allowed interest rates to rise to 22 per cent and 23 per cent. Today the rates are still 14 per cent or 15 per cent for companies engaged in the fishing industry.

This industry has very little equity in it. It has always been undercapitalized, has always had to borrow money and go to the banks to be supported. That is the history of the East Coast fishery. There has been heavy participation by the banks in the fishery. The banks and entrepreneurs took risks. Then this incompetent Government allowed the interest rate to go to 23 per cent, wrecked those fishing enterprises and made it no longer possible for the banks to carry the industry; the only alternative was for the Government to step in and carry it. There was no mention of that by the specious Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's. It has nothing to do with fish plant managers. The Hon. Member said that they overexpended. If the fishing companies overexpended, it was because they were encouraged to overexpend by the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's, by politicians and by Governments generally. It was because DREE made grants and loans available, as did the provincial Governments.

Another reason the fishing industry is in its present position is overcapacity, but the main reasons are high interest rates and lack of equity, as well as marketing problems. The Minister did not explain that National Sea has had to close its plants in Newfoundland, not because of overexpansion or incompetent decisions of fish plant managers, but because it could not sell the product. The situation in the market for frozen fish products in the last year or two has been difficult because of the recession and competition from other products such as turkey, chicken and the like. National Sea has had to close at Burgeo and St. John's because of these marketing problems.

The Hon. Member did not explain that a lot of the trouble was caused by lack of sufficient throughput; many plants do not have sufficient fish to put through to keep the plants operating for a long enough period to meet overhead costs. Sufficient fish are not being caught to go through those plants. That is the responsibility of the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada decides on quotas and allocates quotas. The federal Government of Canada is largely responsible, I would say to a degree of at least 90 per cent, for the crisis in the East Coast fishing industry. That is why it is the Government's obligation to bring in a measure to help it. Unfortunately the only alternative it is offering is the Bill now before the House.

We have no option but to support the Bill now before us. How could we stand by and see the East Coast fishing industry, the offshore fishing industry, collapse? In my own district of St. John's West there are 23 fish plants. One major plant is the National Sea plant with six stern trawlers. It is closed today; it has been closed for several months. It employs 400 or 500 people. There is the major fish plant at Trepassey of Fishery Products Limited with five stern trawlers. It has been closed for the last two or three months. It employs 500 or 600 people. There are three inshore plants at Petty Harbour. At Bay Bulls there is a major inshore plant. Unfortunately it was just destroyed by fire. The O'Briens, a tremendous force in the Newfoundland inshore fishery, are hoping to rebuild. Witless Bay has an inshore plant. There are plants at Tor's Cove, Calvert—the Ferryland saltfish operation—Aquaforte and Fermeuse. The plant at Fermeuse is a major one which used to be supplied by offshore as well as inshore vessels. Now it is to be restricted to an inshore operation. Also there are the ones at St. Marys, Riverhead, Jersey Side, Argentia, Branch, St. Bride's, Little Harbour East, Fairhaven and Arnold's Cove. It is a major National Sea plant with only a few workers today; normally there are 300. Also there is the Admiral's Cove inshore plant and one at Southern Harbour. Of 23 fish plants, all of them are closed today with the exception of Arnold's Cove which has a few workers. Twenty are principally involved in the cod fishery, one operation for crab only and two for saltfish only. Naturally I will support the Bill. What alternative do I have? We cannot continue to have all those plants shut.

There are other problems upon which the Minister did not touch. He did not explain when he would start the resource-short fishing program to assist inshore plants. "The resource-short plant program", they so grandly call it. I have a telegram to the Minister from the community of Fermeuse asking when he would carry out his promise in the agreement signed in Newfoundland on September 26 to allocate fish to Fermeuse under the resource-short plant program. When will he get that off the ground? Canadian trawler operators have offered to catch offshore fish and sell it to inshore operators at cost. Inshore plant operators say that they cannot afford to pay that cost. There is a stalemate. The plants are still closed and people are still unemployed. The Minister does not seem to be bothered about it. He does not seem to be agitated about it. He did not mention it when he introduced this legislation to the House a few days ago.

If there can be no agreement between plant operators and Canadian trawler operators, and if it is possible for inshore plant operators to make a deal with foreign-owned fishing operators for this year, why not let it go ahead? If that is the only way plants like the one at Fermeuse can start to operate again—and I have forgotten for exactly how long it has been closed; probably a year—then I suggest and recommend to the Minister that he arrange a deal and allow foreign-owned vessels to be used this year to catch the fish and get those plants operating again.

What we are being asked for in this Bill is to give the Government carte blanche, a blank cheque to intervene in the fisheries as it likes by way of loan guarantees or grants. That is what we are being asked to do. Having helped to bring about the collapse of the Canadian East Coast fishery, it is certainly questionable whether the Government of Canada has the competence to restore the East Coast fishery to economic viability. What has the Minister said that indicates to us that the Government is going to restore economic viability in the fishery? What is it going to bring to the fishery other than an unlimited supply of public funds?

What does the Government have to offer except public money? It has not shown us how it will make this industry lean and efficient or how the independent fish processor will be protected. It has shown us nothing, yet it asks us for a blank cheque. This legislation should be amended so that they have to report back to this House through the fisheries committee each year exactly what moneys have been spent under the legislation, who have been given guarantees and loans and just what is happening.

There is a vital inconsistency in the various clauses of the Bill. I quote two of the objectives:

—first, that the Atlantic fishing industry be economically viable on an on-going basis, second, that employment in that industry be maximized subject to the constraint that those employed receive a reasonable income—

There is an inconsistency in that objective. To be economically viable and to maximize employment is the matter of contention that has been at issue between the Kirby task force and the Government ever since the Kirby task force reported. The Government has not accepted the Kirby task force because it cannot decide that question. The question is still undecided. It is before us in the agreements that have been signed with Newfoundland. That inconsistency still has not been settled.

It is not with any great sense of elation that I have reluctantly concluded that we have to accept this Bill. It is only because nothing better has been put before us. The Minister did not answer any questions on the important issue. The Government is trying to press us to pass this Bill without any discussion in the House or in committee, although it was on July 2 that the Minister announced he was going ahead with this scheme. It was on September 26, two months ago, that the agreement was signed with Newfoundland. This Bill was only put before the House on October 31. We are being asked to rush it through in 24 hours even though the Government has bungled this problem for over a year.

Some of the questions the Minister should answer either in committee or in the House when the Bill returns are as follows: How is the Government going to assist the independents and keep them involved in the fishery? They are discouraged and now want to get out. We have the statement of Alphonsus Best of Southern Harbour, the President of the independents' association in Newfoundland. He says the Government may as well buy them out and take them over now; they cannot stand unfair competition which they feel they will have from the two giant Government-controlled corporations. The Minister did not touch on that.

What is the Minister going to do to protect us in the U.S. market from actions taken there in the nature of anti-dumping and restraint of trade? There will be countervailing tariff applications made in the United States. They will complain of unfair competition to U.S. fishermen from these Government-controlled and financed companies. What steps has the Minister taken to try and avoid that threat? What has he done in the United States to try and get around that major problem? What steps will he take in the future? There is a great danger of countervailing tariff action in the U.S. because of the so-called restructuring.

The Minister has not told us what decisions are going to be made about very delicate matters, such as who will be entitled to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence to catch the increased red fish stocks that are now supposedly present in the Gulf. In 1974-75, the Newfoundland and Nova Scotia trawlers as well as other trawlers were ordered not to fish in the Gulf until the red fish stocks came back.

The fish plants on the south coast taken over from the Lakes at Ramea, Burgeo, Gaultois, and Harbour Breton, need access to those stocks. That is why they were put there in the first place. As to the Nova Scotia vessels, is the Government going to permit trawlers to re-enter and fish in the Gulf again for a certain quota of red fish or not?

What is to be the decision there? What does the Minister plan to do about that? How can this restructured company in Newfoundland be viable economically if it is not allowed to fish those stocks? The Minister should explain how they are going to be viable if they have to send their trawlers north off Labrador, even though they are not especially ice strengthened, at three or four times the cost and two or three times the danger? How will they have access to the fish stocks that will permit them to be lean, hungry and viable? The Minister has not even touched on that problem. What is he going to do about the unclear aims; economic efficiency and viability versus employment as well as Unemployment Insurance benefits or social considerations?

Who will be the directors? Will they be political hacks? Will it be Liberal hacks appointed by the Government, as is usually the case, or will they be independent-thinking people with some experience in business, law, the fishery or labour? What kind of people will be directors?

How can a miracleman be found who will be able to do all the inconsistent things he will have to do as managing director of one of those two huge companies? He will have to satisfy federal politicians, federal bureaucrats, provincial politicians and provincial bureaucrats. He will have to deal with his directors, the plant employees, inshore fishermen and trawler fishermen. They all have inconsistent purposes. The interests of one are not necessarily the same as the interests of the other. How will he be able to run an efficient company, look after marketing, sales in the U.S. and the European Common Market as well as fish production? Where is such a superman to be found? He will have to look after the members of every fishing district which has a fish plant apart altogether from Governments. When are they going to find such a man?

These two companies have no financial plan for next year. They do not know what their budgets will be for next year. They do not know who will be in charge. Morale is shattered. The Minister has not spoken of all these problems. The Minister thinks all problems will be solved because the Government will put more money in and it will be a Government-controlled corporation. What is the fishing plan for those companies for next year? What quotas of fish stocks is the Minister assigning to those two companies for next year? There is total confusion. The Government bungled the attempt to get the shareholders out of the way of those companies. It took so long that it did tremendous damage to marketing in the United States in the case of Fishery Products Limited.

There was bungling with reference to the Government's own Canada Development Corporation, complete bungling. That company, which is 48 per cent owned by the Government, could not even discuss with the Government some sensible way to compensate them to get their shares and those of the Monroes. The Government had to be brought to its knees by court action taken in Canada and the United States. It was a complete bungling. The Minister should submit his resignation now because of the untold damage caused by the shareholders. What agreement has been reached with the shareholders? What is agreed to be paid to the CDC, the Monroes and the Lakes? The Minister has not given us any figure as to what happened there. I hope it will all be discussed and explained in committee.

How are they going to overcome the disruption in the U.S. markets? The fishery was better off when the entrepreneurs were in charge, risking their money, such as they had, and borrowing from the banks. They were hard workers and gamblers. I would like to say a kind word about them as they depart.

The Lakes, the Penneys, the Moores, the Russells, the Monroes, their replacements will be hard to find. It is never the same when you are dealing with somebody else's money. There is no bottom line. The Government is going to put in the money. If they lose $100 million this year, the Government will put in another $100 million next year. It is not hard to find people who do not mind spending other people's money. It is a far different breed that built up this industry. They risked their own money and the money they borrowed from the banks, only to be finally done in by an incompetent Government which allowed interest rates to go to 23 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Is the Hon. Member aware that the Premier of his own Province has publicly stated that this is the most beneficial action for his Province taken by the federal Government since Newfoundland's entry into Confederation in 1949? Second, is he aware that the Premier of his Province has just tabled in the Legislature of Newfoundland a Bill ratifying the agreement that we have signed and urging that it be passed unanimously?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware that the Premier of the Province welcomed the fact that the Government of Canada had at last come to its senses and agreed to give the provincial Government some say in how the new company was to operate, and the Premier also welcomed the fact that the Minister had finally taken a more reasonable stand by dropping the position he had taken on July 2 and entering into an agreement that was more favourable to the provincial Government and would give it some say in the fishery. However, if the Premier ever said that this was the greatest thing since Confederation or sliced bread, then I would only have to say to the Minister that I do not agree with him.

I think that this action will stave off the complete collapse of the fishery industry but it is the only alternative that is presented to us. The only alternative to the collapse of the fishery industry is a blank cheque which the Government will now give these companies in order to save the industry for a while. However, I do not say that this is the greatest thing since sliced bread. I have not seen any plan presented by the Minister that would show us how this will result in any benefit other than to keep fish plants open at the moment. It is a confession of abject failure on behalf of the Minister.

The Premier of Newfoundland is pleased because the Government of Canada had to concede that the provincial Government should have some say over the operations of the company. Naturally he was pleased that the Minister dropped his previous stubborn and stupid attitude, but if the Premier said the words attributed to him by the Minister, then I would have to say that I do not agree. I think that this is a bad job that has been initiated by the Minister and his Government and we have no alternative but to support it and hail it. Other than on that basis, I would not agree with the Minister.

What was the second part of the Minister's question? The first part of his question was so jejune that I have forgotten the second part of his question.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech made by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I am not an expert in this field and I do not represent very many fishermen, but some things seem to me to be pretty obvious from the reports we have had.

The fishing industry, which is one of the main industries in Atlantic Canada and employs tens of thousands of people, was operated for many years by private companies. For various reasons, some of which include overexpansion, high interest rates and cutbacks in the markets, the industry was going bankrupt. The banks could no longer carry the private industry.

That being the case, there was an agreement reached between the federal Liberal Government and at least two Conservative provincial Governments, the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Nova Scotia. That agreement provided that the only way the industry could be saved and tens of thousands of people could be assisted was through massive Government intervention. That, Mr. Speaker, has been the history of so many industries in so many parts of Canada. The Government has intervened when the private sector could not do the job. This is not necessarily a criticism of the private sector, but that has been a fact of life.

The federal Liberal Government and the provincial Conservative Governments have reached an agreement. I am not competent to say whether that agreement is the best one that could have been reached or whether it will succeed, but surely it is obvious that the private sector did not and could not do the job. Yet it seems to me that the only solution which the Hon. Member for St. John's West has put forth as an alternative to what has been agreed on between the federal Liberal Government and the two provincial Conservative Governments is that somehow the Governments should give more money, either through grants or loans, to the private companies which have already failed. It seems to me that that is neither possible nor advisable.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for asking a sensible question. It is the only sensible question I have been asked this morning.

The situation is that this is not an industry like any other industry because the source of its raw material is controlled by the Government. The fishing industry is unlike the agricultural industry in which the farmer can decide how many turnips or how much wheat or whatever he will plant. The fish resources are common property resources controlled by the Government. As well, many other aspects of the industry are controlled by the Government, including the kind of boat that can be used, whether the fisherman can get a licence for a trawler, a 65-foot longliner or a trap skip, or whether he can fish at all. All of this is controlled and licensed by the Government, so we are not dealing with an ordinary industry.

We are dealing with an industry in eastern Canada which, because there are no large amounts of capital available to be invested, has always been undercapitalized while its equipment is becoming more and more expensive. It does not represent the normal industrial situation. The responsibility for what has happened in the fishery industry is, to a major degree, that of the Government itself because of some of those factors I have mentioned.

With respect to the two Conservative Governments, the Government of Nova Scotia itself has not yet reached any agreement with the federal Government except for a so-called agreement in principle. The details of that agreement which are more important than its principle have not been agreed upon.

The Government of Newfoundland had no choice but to accept an agreement that would give it some say in what would happen. Newfoundland is a Province in which the fishery industry is the most important of its industries and is the biggest employer of its people. The only reason anyone lives in rural Newfoundland is to work in the fishery industry and the fishery industry is not controlled by the provincial Government at all. It is as if the land and the grain and everything in the Province of Saskatchewan were completely federally controlled.

From the point of view of the Government of Newfoundland, first the fishery industry had to be saved and rural Newfoundland had to be saved. That could only be done by the federal Government and if the provincial Government could get an agreement to give it some influence over the issues that are to be decided upon in the future, that would be an advantage. Finally, after getting that concession from the federal Government, it entered into an agreement to which it had no alternative in any event. We cannot have fish plants all over Newfoundland collapse, and if the only way to keep them going is through money from the federal Government, the provincial Government of Newfoundland naturally must support that, just as I must support it because there are 23 fish plants in my district.

Although I am supporting the agreement on that basis, Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that I believe it is the right solution. I myself would have preferred to see the Government allow the industry to continue in private hands but have the Government take over the plants that it wants to operate for social reasons and operate them itself separate from the other companies. Fishery Products Limited should not be operating a plant that it does not think is economical because that would give it an excuse to say in future years, if it has not done well, that it was prevented from doing so by the fact that it had operated plants that were uneconomical. Those plants should be taken over by the Government. If they are needed for social purposes, they should be operated by the Government.

The Government should have made financial arrangements through loans or, to some extent, grants to assist the trawler companies to continue in business because it was the Government's own economic policies and incompetence that put the fishing industry in a position where it could no longer survive and made it impossible for the Bank of Nova Scotia to continue its financing. That would have been my preferred solution, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the last speaker that perhaps his concern should have been made known to his own provincial Government before it went into the arrangement, because it is now a partner to an arrangement. At least we from Nova Scotia have only an agreement to co-operate between the two Governments.

Bill C-170 is an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises. It is by far the most important piece of legislation I have seen come before Parliament in the years in which I have represented South West Nova. It may not be the Constitution, the Crow Bill, any one of the budget Bills, or the six and five legislation, but to the people in the Atlantic Provinces this Bill will have a far-reaching effect. I believe that as politicians we must make sure that we get the most out of this Bill before it is passed in this House. Certainly my constituents feel it will affect them, and they want more information.

This legislation came about because of the Kirby task force. The powers the Bill gives to the Minister seem to be unlimited. The Kirby task force was established in January, 1982. It was to study the Atlantic coast fisheries and report to an ad hoc committee of Ministers on the Atlantic fisheries. In December of 1982 it made its recommendations on establishing and maintaining viable fishery enterprises on the Atlantic coast of Canada.

The Kirby task force set out three objectives which form the basis of its recommendations. I would like to quote from the Kirby task force report because I feel it is important for us to know the context in which we now have this Bill before us. At page VII the report lists three objectives in order of priority which should guide Atlantic fisheries policy. And remember, these are in order of priority:

> Objective 1: The Atlantic fishing industry should be economically viable on an ongoing basis, where to be viable implies an ability to survive downturns with only a normal business failure rate and without government assistance.

That was the top priority. I will read the next two priorities:

> Objective 2: Employment in the Atlantic fishing industry should be maximized subject to the constraint that those employed receive a reasonable income as a result of fishery-related activities, including fishery-related income transfer payments.
> Objective 3: Fish within the 200-mile Canadian zone should be harvested and processed by Canadians in firms owned by Canadians wherever this is consistent with Objectives 1 and 2 and with Canada's international treaty obligations.

These objectives are important to remember because I feel that this Bill and the restructuring of the fisheries seem to be in direct contradiction of these objectives, particularly the primary objective of economic viability.

Before commenting on the Bill itself, I would just like to go back a couple of years and review some of the history which brought about the Kirby task force, as well as the present collapse of the five large fishing companies on the East Coast. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, does not seem to be taking history into account. What we saw happening in 1981 was that five large East Coast companies were holding inventories which were too high. This was mainly due to a softening in our existing markets. The East Coast fisheries had seen this happen before. In fact, the last time it happened was in 1973. In 1974-75 the federal Government put approximately $150 million into assisting these companies and their inventories. Again, at that time, Mr. Speaker, the markets were soft.

In late 1980 through 1981, with soft marketing conditions and increased fish landings, inventories were again high and the market price depressed. Fish inventories have always been financed by banks and in 1980 interest rates went up and continued to climb. The debt incurred to finance the inventories and to hold these inventories became too great for the companies and they came looking to the federal Government and to the provincial Governments, as well as to the banks, for financial assistance.

We also found at that time that we did not have any mechanism at the federal level to alleviate this problem. We had a fisheries prices support board which could only remove inventories and hold them at similar cost to the companies as that provided by the banks. The Government did not appear to have any ability to offer an outright purchase of the inventory and then try to resell it later when the market could take up the excess inventory, and thereby avoid dumping fish into soft markets at certainly lower prices.

The Government gave no financial guarantees to an industry which was the most important industry on the East Coast as far as employment and revenues were concerned. Some companies, in my view, might still be in existence had they been provided with some sort of assistance. Heaven knows, over the years federal Governments have assisted other operations in Canada, such as Massey-Ferguson, Canadair and Dome Petroleum, yet our basic resource industry got the Kirby task force.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, how will this Bill ensure orderly marketing when our marketing capabilities go soft? I have always felt that federal involvement, along with the provincial involvement—because the Provinces have the jurisdiction to market fish—should have been concentrated on establishing a voluntary orderly marketing program. Such a program would set up an organization which would be able to sell excess fish and not have to compete in an existing soft market. In other words, if there were high inventories these inventories could be removed at the wish of the company and sold into either new markets, which would have been established by some mechanism, or sold at a later date into the existing market when the market had hardened up.

Today we have before us a Bill which does not establish a voluntary marketing system on the East Coast. I must say that the Kirby task force does deal with marketing in great depth. However, this Bill does not mention any of this. In fact, the Minister stated in his speech on Monday that there would be three new marketing companies. Again, Mr. Speaker, are these companies to compete among themselves and the smaller processors? Will they eventually have the same marketing conditions which have existed in the past, without any relief?

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is that this Bill will set up and fund three super East Coast companies. It is a Bill which incorporates the exact amount of money needed to establish these three super companies and which, from what I have read, does not set up any financing for the small independent companies which may also be in trouble. This is a Bill which, in my view, does not even resemble the recommendations of the Kirby task force. We have in fact a Bill which talks about economic viability in the preamble, incorporating the primary recommendation of Kirby, but does not talk about the fishing excesses which the report says presently exists within the five companies which are to become two companies. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is a Bill which suggests that the provincial and federal Governments are nationalizing the fisheries. Yet the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the Nova Scotia Minister of Fisheries talk about the privatization of the two companies. How will this take place? What will the Bank of Nova Scotia receive in real terms out of this? Will it be a benefit? What about the company owners, are they receiving a benefit?

We are told in Clause 4 on page 2 of the agreement between the federal Government and Nova Scotia that:

> The governments agree that their participation in refinancing the company will be on terms such that the existing shareholders and financial institutions shall not be bailed out.

Yet we see an article in the Daily News in Newfoundland on November 11 stating that the CDC will receive $14.6 million for its shares. Then take that together with an article in the Evening Telegram of November 12 which says the federal Government will pay $14.6 million to the CDC, a major shareholder in Fishery Products.

We have been told shareholders will not benefit in this restructuring. I think that question has to be answered in committee because we already see some shareholders getting benefits. I think the people on the East Coast would like to know the answer to this question. Will the Nickersons receive a benefit? On the other hand, we hear they are going into receivership. These are all questions which have to be answered because they concern my constituents and other East Coast Canadians. They should be answered before we proceed further with the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery.

There are other questions about the agreement, Mr. Speaker. Why would the Province of Nova Scotia agree that the Nickerson scallop fleet go to Newfoundland? I would like to know in what way that benefits Newfoundland. I have already spoken about the economic benefits to existing shareholders and financial institutions. I am curious to know if we are going to be funding them. Clause 11 on page 3 of the agreement between the federal Government and the Province of Nova Scotia says:

> The two governments will ask financial institutions to provide credit support to ensure the province's independent fish processors are able to maintain continued normal operations.

I know of several operations in my own area which are suffering because the banks have already increased interest rates as well as dropped the level of financing that the small producers were used to. When will the Province of Nova Scotia go after these institutions? When is the federal Minister going to go after them? How much power do these two Governments have over the financial institutions? Mr. Kirby is quoted in The Globe and Mail of November 5, 1983 as saying:

> Governments and the bank have simply become the buyers of last resort, a possibility we had foreseen from the beginning—

I do not see that in the recommendations.

> —if no private investors could be found. And once we decided not to bail anyone out, we knew we were going to have to get something for our money and that something was equity in the new company.

I know some Members have already asked this question, but what chance were private investors given to invest? Until the company goes into receivership, who can invest?

There are other questions the Bill does not answer. How are these companies to be formed? We are told they will be privately run with provincial and federal money. Who has control over the directors? The bank and the federal Government will appoint directors to each new company in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Will these directors not have conflicts of interest? It is inconceivable to me that the Bank of Nova Scotia, which will make appointments to both companies, could not make a decision concerning one company which would not be beneficial to the other company. Will there be a conflict of interest concerning the federal Government? What will be the objects of these two companies? Will they operate as a public company in competition with the smaller, independent processors? Or will they operate as a private company? If private, will they be allowed to operate on the basis of good business practices, which might mean the shutting down of some operations as recommended by Dr. Kirby?

The one thing we have is a Bill which gives wide powers, but we have only one arrangement or agreement before us, Mr. Speaker, the one between Newfoundland and the federal Government. We in Nova Scotia are waiting to see what the arrangements will be. There are different players. We do not know what the shareholders in National Sea will do, whether they will accept this agreement to co-operate. We have to wait and see. But in all the recommendations Mr. Kirby and his task force made, I cannot say it was clearly and specifically set out that this is what we would end up with.

There were other things in the Kirby task force report which have not been dealt with. A key example of that is one whole chapter dealing with the herring seining fleet where he recommends there be a Government buy-back to reduce the capacity of that fleet. What is in it for the poor fishermen who are trying to make a living with too few fish and fleet overcapacity? They are being asked to do their own buy-back.

It seems to me that the players who were there prior to Dr. Kirby have not been heard from. That in itself shows a vacuum and I would like to know why. Why are the processors being bailed out, because we hear the CDC is being bailed out? Who else is going to be bailed out? What is going to happen to the other recommendations? Will the seiners be helped? What about all those small fishermen who, over the last few years, have seen their interest rates go up? Are they going to be helped out?

● (1220)

Mr. Speaker, I realize my time is up. It is my hope that the concerns I have raised will be fully discussed in committee. Unless we have a clear indication of where this Bill will take us and who it will help and affect, and unless those concerns are answered, we will have many days of graver concern on the East Coast.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Questions, comments.

Mr. Forrestall: Will the distinguished Member from South West Nova (Miss Campbell) in fact vote for the Bill in its present form?

Miss Campbell: The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) certainly has more experience than I have on voting. However, I have used all my efforts to get this Bill into committee to be studied. The Province of Nova Scotia with a Conservative Government supports this restructuring and the Province of Newfoundland supports it. I come from an area where there are a lot of independents in the fishery and my main concern has to be for them.

I certainly want to see the Bill go to committee. I know there is urgency on your own side. Your own Leader has said that he supports this Bill. When so many great people are saying this, who am I to say that it is not a good Bill? I will let it go to committee and we at least have the opportunity to study it there. I will have to wait and see what happens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Further questions or comments?

Mr. De Bané: Is the Hon. Member aware that the official critic of his own Party—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. De Bané: —has said in a speech that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Minister is not allowed to put a question to the previous questioner. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. Crosbie: I thought the Hon. Member made a very reasoned speech, bringing up many of the points and conundrums that have not been answered. Has the Hon. Member put these points to the Minister privately and in caucus and has he provided any answers privately or in caucus? Is it just that he is impossible to get through to, or is he ignoring these issues? What is the problem? Obviously there is a communications gap between the Hon. Member and the Minister.

Miss Campbell: Certainly I have had discussions with the Minister of Fisheries regarding some of my concerns. The person that I have had not had too many discussions with is Dr. Kirby. It was Dr. Kirby who was negotiating the arrangements in Newfoundland. I would like to have him come before the committee so I can ask him some of these questions. I have raised these concerns with the Members of my caucus. I hope Members opposite have raised their own concerns in their caucus. This certainly does not appear to be the case, from what their Leader is stating and what we are hearing here.

Mr. McGrath: The Hon. Member made a very interesting speech. Given her critical position as chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and her announced bias in the House against this Bill, will the Member remove herself from that position when the Bill goes to committee so there will be no question whatsoever that the Bill will receive objective, critical examination?

Miss Campbell: My chairmanship or my bias could be raised by the committee and if there is a vote of non-confidence in me, I will certainly step aside. In fact, I thought of asking my vice-chairman to handle this Bill so I could be better equipped to ask questions. The Hon. Member has sat on the committee many times and knows that the chairman must more or less ask questions with the consent of the committee members. I do not think I have a bias in its going to committee. My concerns are very much the same as those the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) raised. Some of my concerns are very similar and I would think that we might have had the same researchers on some of them as far as the corporate structures of the companies go. I certainly do not think I have a bias against Newfoundland having made the arrangement.

Mr. McGrath: Just trying to protect your Minister, that's all.

Mr. Crosbie: Does the Hon. Member agree that the Bill needs to be amended to ensure some accountability? At the moment it is a blank cheque to spend money and make guarantees. Would she agree that it would be sensible to have this Bill amended so that the Government must report to the House of Commons fishery committee each year on what has happened under the Bill, who have gotten guarantees, loans, grants and why, and exactly what progress there has been so there will be some accountability? Would the Hon. Member agree that this would be a good step?

Miss Campbell: The Hon. Member raises an important question. He must remember that sometimes chairmen of committees have to rule out amendments because they are not in conformity with the Bill. I suggest that we look to see where the accountability is. Is it to Public Accounts or is it to the Minister of Fisheries? If we continue the present trial rules in the House we could probably have accountability just under the general Department of Fisheries report at any time. I think that is a very favourable way of operating any committee. I think you put the chairman in a difficult position because sometimes, no matter who is chairman, because they have been given advice by clerks, not politicians, they have to rule as to the viability, the length or breadth of the amendment. I think there should be accountability.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, how does the Hon. Member reconcile her apparent support for this Bill at second reading stage with an article that appeared in La presse on November 16 in which she is quoted as saying:

Fishermen and small businesses have numerous reasons for concern about the future this restructuring holds for them.

How does the Hon. Member reconcile that expression of outrage on behalf of independents with the apparent support she has for this Bill at second reading?

Miss Campbell: I am sorry, I missed that. Would the Hon. Member repeat it?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoted clearly in La Presse yesterday as saying:

Fishermen and small businesses have numerous reasons for concern about the future this restructuring holds for them.

How does the Hon. Member reconcile this expression of outrage against the Bill on behalf of independent operators with her apparent support for this Bill at second reading?

Miss Campbell: I think I raised all those concerns in my speech. I would assume that in committee the Bill will be studied. We will have people there who may answer some of those concerns. They are definite concerns of the fishermen and small businesses in the constituency of South West Nova and across Nova Scotia, as some of my colleagues from Nova Scotia have said and which they will probably speak on. If those concerns are not resolved there is an independence in backbenchers that has always been there. I ask the Opposition, who have already supported this Bill in principle, what they will do?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one further question of the Hon. Member because she is the very distinguished chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and that is a very key role in this whole process. Will the Hon. Member support the opening of the Gulf to Canadian trawlers to catch the surplus ground stocks that are there at the present time? Does the Hon. Member support that position?

Miss Campbell: I know from whence the question comes; it is from the former Minister of Fisheries in 1979. He knows the answer. One has to remember that the Gulf was closed because stocks were greatly reduced. I think there are scientific outlooks that indicate the Gulf stocks have rejuvenated. I assume there is to be some discussion as to whether or not they have been restored to such an extent that perhaps we could allow some extra fishing in there. It is my understanding that it is one of the terms they will look at in the agreement to co-operate between Nova Scotia and the federal Government. Certainly, if the fishing activity in the area is able to take the stocks, they should probably be given first consideration.

• (1230)

On the other hand, if those stocks have been rejuvenated there should be some consideration given—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Debate.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-170, the federal Government's legislation to restructure the Atlantic fishery. At the outset, I should make it clear that I have deep-seated reservations about the Bill, especially from the point of view of my own Province of Prince Edward Island.

Prince Edward Island's interests have been all but ignored by the Government, so preoccupied has it been with other East Coast Provinces, notably Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Yet the Prince Edward Island fishery is an important part of the total industry in Atlantic Canada. Indeed, the fishery is the second largest industry on the Island in terms of jobs and earned income.

The fishery is more than just another industry in the Province. It is an integral part of the culture of the Island. Many communities of the Province, from Tignish to Nufrage, were originally settled because of the fishery. It continues to be the lifeblood of most of those communities to this very day. The fishery is practically the only way of life that the people of that Province have ever known. Salt water is in their veins. To destroy the fishery through Government heavy-handedness, or to allow it to die through neglect or mismanagement, would be to destroy the people themselves.

Therefore, we are debating today not just another piece of legislation, nor simply a plan to rescue yet another industry, though clearly it has elements of that. In fact, we are discussing the survival of an important part of Canada. If such sounds like so much rhetorical hyperbole or flourish, let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not exaggerating. The Atlantic fishery provides some 100,000 people with jobs, with about equal numbers engaged in the catch and processing sector. That total number is approximately 25,000 more than the members employed in the entire automobile manufacturing industry of this country.

Now, after decades of abject neglect by the federal Government, it has taken a veritable crisis in the fishery to shock the Government into paying any attention at all to this important part of our national life, and only in the form of an after the fact rescue operation rather than in the form of a rational, well thought out, well planned strategy. With most of the large fish plants bankrupt, in receivership or on the verge of it, with thousands of plant workers and fishermen idle and with the entire region reeling from the economic impact, the federal Government has decided at last to take some action.

The Bill before us sets out to do several things. In general, it seeks to provide the legal and financial powers for the federal Government to restructure the Atlantic fishery. The Bill would empower the Government to acquire, hold or dispose of any interest in any enterprise engaged directly or indirectly in the Atlantic fishery. In particular, the Bill provides for an immediate appropriation of $138 million to finance the federal contribution to the so-called restructuring plan. The bill also authorizes the Government to make loan guarantees to fishery enterprises being restructured. As part of the restructuring, agreements have been signed or tentatively agreed to by the federal Government and Newfoundland and Nova Scotia to restructure the deep sea fishing plants based in those Provinces. In the process, two huge nationalized companies are being forged from the ashes of private companies.

I use the term "nationalized companies" advisedly. The Nova Scotia restructuring agreement will take the two large companies in that Province—National Sea and H. B. Nickerson and Sons—and make one large state-dominated company. The Newfoundland deal takes three major fish firms in the Province—Fishery Products, the Lake group and John Penney and Sons—and creates a massive company controlling 85 per cent of the processing capacity in Newfoundland. The two new super corporations will have the dubious distinction of being, respectively, the largest and second largest fish companies in the entire world.

Let us make no mistake about the matter. The so-called restructuring arrangement is, at once, a full-scale nationalization of the affected parts of the industry and a bail-out of not only the former privately owned companies but also the Bank of Nova Scotia which otherwise would lose millions of dollars in bad loans. Indeed, this scheme is a takeover, not a restructuring at all.

Neither Parliament nor the public has been allowed to know the details of the arrangement. The whole thing has been shrouded in secrecy and mystery from the very beginning. I think one may never find out the whole story. In the case of Nova Scotia, apparently the deal is yet to be finalized. But this much we do know about the Newfoundland deal. I mention it only in the context of my Province of Prince Edward Island which has been, to date, ignored in all of this. The super company is 85 per cent owned by Governments. Eight of the eleven members of the board of directors are Government appointed. The chief executive officer is a joint appointment of both Governments. Significant corporate decisions are subject to the veto of the federal and provincial Governments. Most relevant of all, management must consult both Governments before the company can act. This control is above and beyond that exercised by the federal Government through its general management of the Atlantic fishery.

What the country has received, therefore, is a Government-dominated industry, one in which the state will have a direct day to day vested interest through ownership and control, including corporate voting rights. Decisions affecting the companies, and therefore the industry generally, because of their size and influence, will most certainly be made on the basis of political considerations rather than on the basis of the best interests of the over-all fishery or of the region as a whole. The wonderful people who have made a hash of everything else they have controlled, from Canadair to the post office, are now going to put codfish on our tables.

The restructuring plan has the potential to devastate the fishery in Prince Edward Island, however important or however temporary may be the relief it could provide to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. It could well ring the death knell to the independently-owned fish processing sector in my Province and consequently to a large part of the rest of the fishery there. The fact is, Sir, there are some 42 fish processing plants in P.E.I. About two dozen of them are independents operating outside the restructured companies and exporting produce on their own. The two largest independents, which process groundfish, are Georgetown Seafoods Ltd. in Georgetown and Usen Fisheries in Souris. The former, Georgetown, has not been in operation since the fall of 1981 but Usen and most of the smaller plants throughout the Province have been fully operational and profitable.

I do not know what will become of Georgetown Seafoods. P.E.I.'s Minister in the federal cabinet, the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), has been saying from one end of P.E.I. to the other that the plant's reopening is imminent. He was saying that as long ago as last spring and early summer. Yet in reply to my questions in the House as recently as October 7, the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) refused to associate himself with that commitment given by his colleague.

Moreover, a secret federal Government document prepared by the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Expansion last summer and obtained by the research office of my Party made very clear that the plant, in the eyes of the Government, was "permanently closed". Here we had a secret Government document, at a time when the federal Minister of Veterans Affairs was saying that the reopening of the plant was imminent, making it clear that, in the eyes of the same Government, the Georgetown Seafoods plant was permanently closed and its reopening was not imminent, as the Minister was pointing out.

Obviously, the future is grim for that plant. I believe the best bet is for the plant to reopen under provincial auspices and it is to be hoped with private investment money. But for that to happen, Georgetown Seafoods will need to be given back four of the original 11 trawlers still in the hands of the existing owners, H. B. Nickerson and Sons Limited. Those trawlers are now at Canso, having long since been wrenched from Georgetown, leaving it virtually impossible for the plant to operate profitably.

The new restructuring package has nonetheless loaded the deck of cards against all the independent plants across P.E.I. and, indeed, throughout the Atlantic region and parts of Quebec. Now, the federal Government is to be in the fish processing business itself in a massive way, why should it want to encourage competition against itself? From here on, the Government will hold all the aces. Who but the most extreme optimist would believe that the Government will not weight future programs and regulations in favour of its own client companies, to the detriment of the remaining private companies?

Even before the restructuring, the federal Government controlled everything from dredging operations to fishing quotas, to federal wharf construction, to DREE-type industry subsidies, to total allowable catches, to fish processing plant health standards, to import licences. Now the small, independent operators also face the prospect of having to compete against huge Government-owned and Government-subsidized fish companies in an industry where the Government could set all the rules to benefit its own industrial giants.

I have been in touch with many of the independent operators in my Province of P.E.I. and with both Premier Jim Lee and Fisheries Minister Roddy Pratt. Most of those operators are petrified about the potential impact of Bill C-170 on their plants. One such operator told me that if Bill C-170 passes as it stands he may as well close shop immediately. I know many others feel the same way. More and more of the independents are joining the Federation of Independent Fish Packers, recently formed for the sole purpose of fighting Bill C-170 that we are debating today. Premier Lee and Mr. Pratt share those concerns and fears, and I do too.

Independent operators have been assured by the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that the restructuring arrangement is only a temporary one, made to support the fishery until it can find its sea legs, so to speak—stand on its own two feet. Assurances have also been given by the Minister and by other spokesmen for the Government that the new Government companies will then be returned to the private sector; they will be privatized. I ask you, Sir, if that is actually to be the case, why is the Government afraid to incorporate such a provision right into the legislation itself? There is absolutely nothing in the existing Bill to protect the independents.

I urge the Government to devise a new section to provide for the Government's orderly withdrawal from an ownership position in the industry according to a detailed schedule. Such a section should either specify a date by which all Government equity must be sold or, alternatively, set a limit on its equity; for example, less than 40 per cent by 1986. A section of that kind would have the effect of making the relevant assistance under the so-called restructuring program a one-shot impetus to the industry, not a prescription for permanent nationalization of it.

Bill C-170 is so important to P.E.I. and to all of Atlantic Canada that it should go immediately, or as soon as everyone has had his or her say, to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for detailed study. Obviously, the Liberal chairman of that Committee, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell), who just spoke at some length, shares my deep-seated reservations and concerns about Bill C-170, for she is quoted in La Presse, as I pointed out a few moments ago, on November 16, as saying that "fishermen and small businesses have numerous reasons for concern about the future this restructuring holds for them".

Miss Campbell: In French!

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat the same thing in French later on.

[English]

I myself must insist, on behalf of the people I represent, on a full public airing of the views of independent operators in P.E.I. in committee. If those operators are denied a fair hearing, and if for whatever reason the Government denies a full and ample debate on the issue in committee, then I serve notice that I for one will muster every possible support from within the PC caucus and from the P.E.I. Government to fight this Bill at all remaining stages. In such a fight I am confident of the strong backing of the independent operators in my Province.

More than survival of a few canneries is at stake. And even more than the continuing viability of the fishery itself is involved. At the heart of the issue is the very fate of the Atlantic region. We must not let our people down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

● (1250)

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I represent a federal riding in Quebec where, as one of the municipal authorities in the Gaspé said recently on national television, fishing is the only valid alternative to unemployment and welfare. Today, Mr. Speaker, I wish to underline the very substantial role played by the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans in taking this industry in hand, and the Department's very definite intention to provide for restructuring of this industry through Bill C-170.

The House will recall that Quebec's Atlantic coast extends for over more than 3,000 kilometers. Here and there along the cost, there are a number of very small villages that depend largely on fishing, not only for a living but for their very survival.

That, Mr. Speaker, will be the focus of my comments in support of the legislation to restructure the Atlantic fisheries.

Not long ago, the TV news showed us some tragic pictures of Gaspé fishermen who were obliged to throw a day's catch back into the sea, because they were unable to find any fish depots that would take the herring they caught the day before. These fishermen had just been confronted with the dilemma that arises when supply exceeds demand and shore facilities can no longer handle the landing capacity of the fishing fleet. On television the situation even more dramatic, of course, but the point was very clearly made that such occurrences were not unique in the Gaspé.

In its report, the Atlantic Fisheries Task Force had already commented at length on the lack of infrastructures in the fisheries industry in Quebec, as well as on the need for restructuring, without delay, the entire industry in that Province and Eastern Canada, so as to make it economically viable, provide a decent income for Canadians employed in the industry and finally, to serve the interests of all Canadians.

As a result of the recommendations made by the task force in its report, it was clear that it would be necessary to reorganize the management of Quebec's ocean fisheries and also to renovate and modernize existing infrastructures in order to meet the pressing needs of an industry which in Quebec, in any case, had a lot of catching up to do.

It is also true, however, that in Quebec, there was a situation where responsibility for ocean fisheries was either shared or duplicated, and as a result, both levels of government were able to blame each other and meanwhile, for instance, equipment that came under one jurisdiction rather than another was allowed to deteriorate through lack of maintenance. In any case, this industry, which is not a major one for the Province but is very important to the Gaspé and especially to the riding of Gaspé, is desperately in need of upgrading, which will require very substantial funding by the level of government that will be taking on this responsibility.

I realize that the fisheries industry in Eastern Canada has experienced very severe problems in recent years. In the Atlantic provinces, there have been times when business was very poor and the threat of bankruptcy continues to hover over the fisheries. After long and stormy negotiations, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) managed to obtain a consensus on restructuring the fisheries industry in such a way that both the provinces and the private sector would share the cost and together make the effort required to revive the industry.

The Minister is therefore to be congratulated on the success of this manoeuvre, thanks to which this time, at least, the Government of Canada will not be left to bear the financial burden and related responsibilities alone.

Unfortunately, the Government of Quebec is still dragging its feet and would rather fund other projects instead of contributing towards the restructuring of this new industry over which it claims exclusive jurisdiction. This would in fact create a kind of enclave in a system where all parties are closely dependent on one another.

After concluding agreements with the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador and the Government of Nova Scotia, and after clearly indicating his intentions to the Government of Quebec, the Minister is asking the House today to give him the means to fully implement a plan that has had a very positive start. In his speech in support of Bill C-170 which is now before the House, the Minister amply demonstrated how complex the issue is and how directly it depends on the proposed restructuring. He made it very clear that he was anxious to give all partners in this plan an opportunity to be heard and to express their points of view. He emphasized they should be given an opportunity to contribute directly to and, eventually, to benefit, both individually and collectively from, the results of this plan.

Last week, when I visited my riding, I met several hundred fishermen and processing plant workers. They were very concerned about the future of the fisheries industry in Quebec, as a result of what the Minister responsible for fisheries in Quebec, the Hon. Jean Garon, was doing in the Gaspé. Since he became Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Garon's actions have been based far more on his political views than on any concern for the social and economic welfare of producers and fishermen in the riding of Gaspé and the Province of Quebec.

My constituents have asked me to inform the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that he should proceed with his plan for restructuring the fisheries industry, because in the past, it was always the Government of Canada that managed to save the fishermen of the Province of Quebec.

Between 1975 and 1978, a decision was made to revive the groundfish industry in Eastern Canada. During that time, the Government of Canada gave Quebec fishermen and producers grants amounting to $6,111,400. In 1976 and 1977, Quebec fishing enterprises received subsidies totalling $566,000 for ships of 100 feet or more, based in the Gulf, so that they could go outside the Gulf to fish and unload inside the Gulf. In 1972, Mr. Speaker . . . I believe I may call it one o'clock?

An Hon. Member: You have one minute left!

Mr. Cyr: —the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans introduced a program to protect Atlantic salmon and to stop commercial fishing, starting that year. The Government of Canada paid Atlantic and Gulf fishermen, including the Gaspé, to put away their fishing gear and refrain from fishing salmon commercially since 1972. In the Gaspé, people remember this, and they realize that it has always been the Government of Canada that managed to save fishermen in the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

SMALL BUSINESS

EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to yesterday's announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) of the two-year extension of the Small Business Bond Program. This is a most important source of support for farmers and small businesses in temporary financial difficulty. In just two years the Program has accounted for more than 2,600 low-interest loans totalling over $500 million. More than half of these loans have been made to farmers, and the Program is expected to continue to be of major importance for agriculture. During a period of very high interest rates, this special Program has generated welcome relief indeed.

The extension of this Program is a vital part of the network of federal government support for both agriculture and small business. These loans are provided under normal commercial arrangements with the low interest feature made possible by a tax exemption to the financial institutions. The result is that loans can be made as much as five or six percentage points below market rates, a very significant benefit. I urge Hon. Members to promote the widest possible awareness of this excellent initiative.

COMMUNICATIONS

NORTHWESTEL COMPANY—CRITICISM OF SERVICE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the last few months have seen an ever increasing volume of complaints directed toward NorthwesTel and the telephone service it supposedly provides in the western Northwest Territories. Public meetings have been convened to express citizens' concern with the deteriorating level of services.

NorthwesTel's policy of centralization just has not worked. The disastrous policy of laying off needed maintenance and service personnel has resulted in prolonged breakdowns, interrupted service, and long delays in telephone installation for both commercial and residential customers. HF radio communications are said to be in a deplorable state, with VHF not much better. Despite assurances to the contrary by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), facilities such as those at Hay River have been continuously downgraded, with necessary staff being discontinued. Unless the federal Crown corporation, NorthwesTel, can bring its service up to an acceptable standard, it should be replaced by a private telephone company forthwith.

THE PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

ATTITUDE OF CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the MNA for Lafontaine, former Minister of Environment who had already stated that he was quite prepared to use provincial government aircraft to promote the advent of a separatist party on the federal scene, this acting leader of the Parti nationaliste and sometimes radio commentator, this man called Marcel Léger has candidly admitted recently that he was devoting all his time to pave the way for the arrival of the Parti nationaliste in Ottawa, to organize people, raise the necessary funds, and so on. Mr. Speaker, that is an open admission that the residents of Lafontaine are no longer represented. His attitude reflects his contempt for his duties as MNA and for his constituents who had expressed their confidence in him. After Gilles Grégoire, a separatist who lives off his MNA salary behind bars, after the former MNA for Jonquière who used to spend his spare time as Speaker of the National Assembly wishing that he would be appointed judge of the Provincial Court, and was, we now have Mr. Léger who bares his soul. So the Premier of the Province of Quebec is now saddled with three separatists MNAs who, for some time now, have not done anything for Quebec or their constituents. It proves that the Parti québécois is sick, very sick, and I do not believe that Dr. Pierre-Marc Johnson will be able to cure this terminally ill patient.

BANKS AND BANKING

CONDEMNATION OF ESTATE LOCATORS PROFITEERING FROM LISTS PUBLISHED BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I, through this forum, draw to the attention of the Canadian people the fact that certain unscrupulous firms and individuals are taking advantage of The Canada Gazette's annual publication listing unclaimed bank balances. Members are all aware of the practice of the Bank of Canada to list names, by city and town, and by banks, and the amount unclaimed, and causing this list to be published in the annual edition of The Canada Gazette.

Certain operators calling themselves, in some cases, estate locators, are using this public information in a manner which may only be termed misrepresentation. For a price, or a finder's fee, these sharp operators are running a scam offering to inform relatives of deceased persons where funds are sitting waiting to be claimed.

This insidious, unethical practice can only be termed as bloodsucking, and the Bank of Canada, the Government, and the chartered banks ought to be asked to consult so as to make it illegal for anyone to profit from this information which is clearly in the public domain, and chartered banks ought to be encouraged to attempt more rigorously to contact the beneficiaries of these unclaimed balances, many of which are in the thousands of dollars.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN EMBASSY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are worried by statements of the Governments of the United States, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatamela and Costa Rica, threatening military invasion of Nicaragua and of the liberated areas of El Salvador. Although Nicaragua and the El Salvador guerrillas have each repeatedly offered to negotiate, the U.S. and those Governments it dominates have refused any answer except to build up huge armies and navies for invasion.

The Canadian Government, after being shamefully deceived by the U.S. Government about its intention to invade and occupy Grenada, cannot trust the U.S. Government to give honest information about its intentions against the peoples of Nicaragua and El Salvador. Therefore, I call on the Canadian Government to establish our independent presence in Nicaragua by sending our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to Nicaragua to discuss their recent proposals for mutual disarmament and removal of foreign military personnel, with on-site inspection, by opening an embassy in Managua to provide direct, independent day-to-day information about the illegal attacks by U.S. backed Somocistas, and by working closely with the Contadora group to block U.S. plans for war and to increase economic aid to Nicaragua.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—PROCLAIMED ESTABLISHMENT OF TURKISH-CYPRIOT STATE

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the northern portion of the island state of Cyprus seceded from that country and proclaimed itself an independent state. To sensitive, fair-minded people everywhere this is an unnecessary, tragic development in the life of the Cypriot people. As a Canadian living in a bilingual state and a multicultural society, I firmly reject the premise motivating the coup—that Greek and Turkish Cypriots are so fundamentally different in their lifestyles and aspirations that previous attempts to work out an accommodation within the established internationally recognized borders of the state should now be abandoned.

No one should forget that Greek and Turkish Cypriots had lived together in peace and prosperity for a generation before the armed might of the Turkish forces viciously divided the island. That experience must mean something. Surely it proves that the two cultures can co-exist, even thrive, under a common Cypriot citizenship.

Diversity is rapidly becoming one of the dominant features of the modern world. A wise leader knows that, and tries to build bridges, not walls. Mr. Rauf Danktash's actions have betrayed the history of the people of Cyprus and subverted the bright promise of their future. He should be roundly condemned by all of us in this House.

REFUGEES

ADMISSION OF AFGHAN REFUGEES TO CANADA

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, may I ask why the Government of Canada treats the estimated 4.5 million Afghan refugees who are now in Pakistan and Iran in a different manner than it treats refugees from Poland, Central America and elsewhere? One of my constituents recently returned from visiting his family in the camps in Pakistan and said that the impression there is that the Canadian Government sides with the Soviet Union on its invasion of Afghanistan.

I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that since 1979 Canada has accepted a total of only about 200 refugees from Afghanistan. West Germany and the United States have each accepted several thousand. Why can we in Canada not declare the Afghan refugees as a designated class for the upcoming year? I also remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian aid to the Afghan refugees is currently running at about $6 per refugee per year.

In the words of Professor M. S. Noorzoy of the Afghan Cultural and Charitable Society of Alberta, Afghan refugees "come with skills and education, but above all, with a great desire to re-establish themselves productively without delay". Canadians generally believe that human beings everywhere should be treated with dignity and respect.

EDUCATION

INSTRUCTION SOUGHT FOR STUDENTS ON HOW TO APPLY FOR JOBS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in a brief presented this week to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business delivered a stunning and devastatingly negative report on unemployed youth. One of the main criticisms was levelled at those who, according to the report, simply do not know how to apply for a job or how to conduct themselves at an interview. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, then surely the young people deserve not blanket condemnation but constructive help and co-operation from all levels of society. In this spirit, therefore, I urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) to contract from the National Film Board a series of "how to" documentaries which will be made readily available to all high schools throughout Canada.

EDUCATION

FUNDING NEEDS OF UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to explain to the House the difficulty that university students across Canada are having in getting financial assistance to continue at university or post-secondary institutions. This week I was told by Al Shpyth and Beth Olley of the University of Saskatchewan Student Council about the difficulties experienced by students in that university. They explained that the situation is full of Catch 22's. Provincial Governments are blaming the federal Government, and the federal Government is blaming provincial Governments for problems encountered when seeking loans and bursaries.

This morning I received a letter from Mrs. Meridel Magnuson, one of my constituents. Her letter explained the difficulties that her own two children were having in getting loans and bursaries needed to continue their university education. As we all know, it is a national problem and one which exists basically because the country has such a high level of unemployment. Universities are bulging, and many young students who are now attending university would not be there if there were a job for them outside the universities.

I would call upon the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and the person who is in charge of fiscal relations with the Provinces to get cracking and make sure that the Provinces are doing their fair share and are not hindering the process of seeing that young Canadians, our best natural resource, are receiving sufficient funds to enable them to continue their education.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, people of Canada, beware! Do not let the Liberal Government get its mitts on any of your money. It will either lose or steal it and then destroy the files, as occurred with the $1,000 instalment payment paid to Revenue Canada by a new Canadian who is operating a service station in Cochrane, Alberta, or it will hold on to it tenaciously like a bulldog, as in the case of the money paid into the Western Grain Stabilization Fund by the Farmers of western Canada, which amounts to close to $1 billion.

Progressive Conservative Member after Progressive Conservative Member has described the difficult cashflow problem now haunting farmers, and has begged and pleaded for a payout. The Grain Stabilization Fund was established to help producers when prices were down in times like this, but the Minister says that we should wait until the five years are up as specified in the Act. It is strange that the Government did not bother waiting when it wanted more money from the farmers. It just increased the payments from $500 to $900, to $1,200.

The Minister says the Government is reviewing the matter. How long will this review take? Long enough for a few more scores of farmers to go bankrupt? No wonder more and more farmers are wanting to opt out of this plan. The Government is hanging on to their money like totalitarian money-hungry sharks. A stabilization Act should have some flexibility. At least until the Government pays back the $1,000 to the new Canadian, and makes a sensible payout to farmers, people of Canada, beware!

NATIONAL REVENUE

COMPUTERIZED MUNICIPAL DATA BASES—DEPARTMENT'S REQUEST FOR ACCESS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In an example of "Big Brother" government at its worst, the Department of National Revenue has written to the City of Kitchener asking it to duplicate its computerized data base and hand over those tapes to the Department of National Revenue for it to search. I would ask the Minister in which municipalities the Department has reached an agreement to have full or partial access to the computerized data bases. Second, will the Minister instruct his officials that this odious practice is to stop?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that in the request we sent to the City of Kitchener we did not ask them to send us a duplicate. According to my information, we did not request a duplicate of their computerized database but we asked them what kind of information they had in their computer. As soon as we receive this preliminary information, we shall then be in a position to decide whether the database contains any specific information we need and could eventually get from this municipality.

[English]

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT CEASE PRACTICE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Minister a copy of a memorandum received by the City of Kitchener officials which indicates that what Revenue Canada wants is duplicates of the computerized tapes.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister with which cities such an arrangement has been reached. Second, will he instruct the Department that this practice is to stop? Third, in the letter that was sent to the City of Kitchener reference is made to other non-taxpaying entities such as hospitals, school boards and municipalities. Has the Department reached an agreement for direct access to the data bases of institutions such as hospitals and school boards, and, if so, in which cases?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good opportunity to explain that the Department of National Revenue is responsible for ensuring that Canadian taxpayers are paying the taxes they owe the Government, and that this is done out of a concern for justice and equity with respect to other taxpayers who pay their taxes in full. Thus, the Department has a monitoring function.

To discharge this responsibility of the Department of National Revenue under the Income Tax Act, we ask certain bodies, including municipalities, for information that will help us check whether a taxpayer has completed his income tax return in accordance with the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, we are certainly not interested in having any particular arrangements for obtaining all the information municipal or other authorities may or should have. We are interested in specific information, in order to discharge the responsibility and comply with the mandate given the Department of National Revenue under the Income Tax Act.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer indicates that 1984 has come a month and a half early.

DEPARTMENT'S AGREEMENTS WITH MUNICIPALITIES—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister lectures the House on his duties. Will the Minister tell the House whether he is aware of Section 4 of the Privacy Act which states that no personal information shall be collected by a governmental institution unless it relates directly to an operating program or activity of the institution? If so, will the Minister finally answer the questions I have twice put to him? With which municipalities and with which other institutions, such as hospital and school boards, has the Minister reached such an agreement, and will the Minister now instruct his officials that this practice is to stop forthwith?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member took the trouble to write to me a note and ask me about this matter, and I therefore made enquiries and asked my officials which municipalities had previously been asked for such information.

Among our various district offices, there are a number through which we have requested specific information, not general information or a whole database as the Hon. Member seems to infer. Specific information was requested from a number of cities including Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal and Calgary, and I could add several more. This is common departmental practice, when information is needed in order to discharge our responsibilities under the Income Tax Act, and the Hon. Member ought to know what those responsibilities are, since he himself, as the Opposition critic, is responsible for knowing what the duties are of the Department of National Revenue and the responsibility it has under the Income Tax Act for obtaining such information.

DEPARTMENT'S APPROACH TO HOSPITALS AND SCHOOL BOARDS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue this extraordinary practice, this big state, Big Brother practice by the Minister of National Revenue. He has said, if I understand him correctly, that he is seeking access to the records of other institutions in order to verify that the tax reports of individual Canadians are in fact accurate. He has admitted that he is seeking information from the municipal records of most of the major municipalities in Canada. Will the Minister tell us what other institutions he is seeking records from? Is he looking into hospitals?

Mr. Beatty: Yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is he looking into schools?

Mr. Beatty: Yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What other institutions is the Department of Revenue sending its people to look into, in the name of verifying the tax returns of individual Canadians? How extensive is this snooping?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised and I would even say disappointed by the holier-than-thou attitude taken by the Hon. Member who put this question, and I must say that he is even more naive than his attitude would lead us to expect, if his question was sincere, because, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who put this question held, during his term of office, the most responsible position in this country, and when he was Leader of the Government, he must have known what his Minister of National Revenue was doing and that the Minister's duties and responsibilities involved enforcing the Act, and that to do so, the Income Tax Act gives the Minister the authority to obtain information that will help to ensure the fair and equitable enforcement of the law in this country.

MINISTER'S POWERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Act does not give the Minister of National Revenue carte blanche—he does not have unlimited powers. Three times today, the Minister refused to answer, here in the House, our request for a list of institutions, other than municipalities, which receive enquiries we believe are made in excess of the Minister's legitimate powers. Once again, I want to ask the Minister for a list of other institutions that receive enquiries from the Minister, that is, hospitals, schools, and others.

I would also like to know whether, according to the Minister's interpretation, there are enquiries he cannot make under the Act.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not think and I am even positive there are no enquiries. The nature of the requests that are made does not contravene the laws of this country, on the contrary. I believe they comply with our statutes.

I may also remind the Hon. Member that most of the information we are requesting is in the public domain, that is, if, for instance, any Member of this House or any citizen of this country, I myself as a citizen and taxpayer, if I go to City Hall and ask them for specific information, they will give me that information because it is in the public domain, because these are public data, and I fail to see—

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"CANADA TOMORROW" CONFERENCE—PARTICIPATION OF LABOUR AND OF WOMEN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Last summer I released copies of a report from the Minister's own Department called "The Rocky Road to the 1990s" which predicted substantial job losses by 1991 due to structural and technological change in the Canadian economy. Last week the Minister finally responded by spending over $500,000 on a conference called "Canada Tomorrow". Would the Minister agree that this conference was a failure, partly due to insufficient participation by labour and by women, and partly due to its focus on the financial aspects of technological change and not on the people aspect or the social consequences like job loss, de-skilling, and the constant need for retraining due to this great problem of technological change?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I see the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has his tongue tucked well into his cheek. He knows from at least others who were present at the conference that there was very good participation by labour. There were 75 representatives of labour. I wish he had prevailed upon his supporters in the CLC to ensure their presence. However, they will, of course, have the benefit of the report of the proceedings.

With respect to women, the participation of such people as Wendy Dobson and Dr. Margaret Fulton, just to name two of many who participated in the panels and workshops, should alleviate his concern that women were not represented. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the lack of women in terms of absolute numbers is, quite frankly, a reflection of what happens too often in all areas of our society, particularly here in the House of Commons. The fact that we have only 14 women Members of Parliament out of 282 is, I believe, clear evidence that there is under-representation. Indeed, I would have liked to have seen more women represented from the various organizations which attended the conference. I am sure all Hon. Members of the House share that view. However, that having been said, I believe the points made by the women present were significant indeed and these women contributed very effectively to the proceedings. Therefore, far from being a failure I would say that it was a great success. I could go on, if it is the wish of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the question of the Hon. Member has been answered. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway on a Supplementary.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO PERMIT NEGOTIATIONS ON TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): My supplementary question is directed to the R2-D2 of the Cabinet over there. Is the Minister aware of the Harvard economist, Robert Reich, who has written, and I quote, "Unless members of a democratic society are persuaded—"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member is permitted a supplementary question. A supplementary question must be just that. It cannot be another question. Would the Hon. Member proceed?

Mr. Waddell: My supplementary question to the Minister is this: given these writings, and given the fact that workers in British Columbia showed they could fight back, will the Government do something for the working people, specifically, amend the Canada Labour Code to cover negotiating technological change, severance pay, conditions of work, and retraining of the worker who is affected by technological change? Is the Government prepared to give the House the commitment of amending the Labour Code, and doing it soon?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway might have addressed that question to the Minister of Labour because certainly a good part of the—

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT'S DESCRIPTION OF UNIVERSIAD SILVER DOLLAR

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It relates to the whole proposition of truth in advertising vis-à-vis the Government. The Minister will know that there have been a number of complaints with respect to truth in advertising by the Government and government agencies. Most recently, the Royal Canadian Mint has put out extensive advertising with respect to the sale of the so-called "silver" dollar for the Universiad. It turns out that the so-called "silver" dollar is 50 per cent alloy and only 50 per cent silver.

In view of the fact that there have been prosecutions of private citizens and private sector corporations, such as Sears being fined $1 million for misleading advertising with respect to jewellery, what does the Minister intend to do with respect to the clearly misleading advertising of "silver" dollars by the Canadian Mint?

• (1430)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time this matter has been brought to my attention. I can assure the Hon. Member I will look into it immediately and examine the advertising practices of the Royal Canadian Mint.

REQUEST THAT TRIBUNAL MONITOR GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister will know, the federal Government is by far the largest advertiser in this country. In 1980 it spent three times more than General Foods, the second largest spender. In 1982-83 it expects to spend $70 million of taxpayers' money on advertising. In spite of this, there seems to be one law for the governors and another for the governed.

Is the Minister prepared to set up an independent tribunal to monitor government advertising so there can be the same standards for government advertising as there is for the private sector? Will she take some action?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I would like to assure the Hon. Member that indeed those same standards do apply to all government advertising.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF ENTREPRENEURS—PROVISION OF SAFEGUARDS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Can he tell the House what safeguards he is putting into the immigration provision for entrepreneurs coming into the country so that this will not be abused by people who could use it literally to buy a Canadian passport, or by elements such as organized crime to gain legal entry into Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, those who come in under that program will still have to fulfil the normal requirements of a security and medical check. That will at least partially respond to the latter part of the Hon. Member's concerns. There is also a provision where, having made certain commitments about the level of investment and number of jobs to be created, the entrepreneur has an interim period of up to two years to ensure he meets those commitments. It is a provisional entry on a two-year basis. If he fails to meet the commitments he made, then the entry permit would be rescinded. That trial period, I think, is designed and will respond to the kinds of concerns the Hon. Member expressed concerning safeguards in the operation of the system.

USE OF ENTRY CARDS—APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on July 15 the Minister introduced a two-month trial program involving the use of landing cards for visitors to Canada, in order to control the flow of illegal immigrants. Can he tell us what the result of that assessment has been? Are the landing cards going to be permanent?

While he is on his feet, he might tell the House under what statutory authority he appointed the Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine to chair an advisory committee on illegal immigrants? Are there any emoluments or expenses to be paid to the Hon. Member?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Imigration): Mr. Speaker, those are two quite separate questions. The answer to the first is that the use of the entry card system at three airports, was on a trial basis and the results are being accumulated. I have not yet seen an analysis of the over-all impact. Once we have made that assessment we will consider the question of whether that system should be extended.

The answer to the second question is that there is no remuneration or emoluments attached to that appointment. As the former Parliamentary Secretary had considerable experience in that area, I thought it would be useful to use that experience in chairing the committee. I wanted to ensure the advice we receive from officials is tempered by some concern for the humane considerations which Members of Parliament in their work hold foremost in their minds. I answered that question previously from an Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, and the answer I am giving today is essentially the same answer I gave at that time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE BY TURKISH-CYPRIOTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the extremely serious situation in Cyprus resulting from the illegal declaration of independence on the part of the Turkish-Cypriot community. Would the Minister expand on his comments in the House on Tuesday regarding what Canada is doing diplomatically to express its disapproval of this move and to seek a withdrawal of the declaration of independence?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall we have already disapproved of this unilateral action. We do not propose to grant recognition to the new alleged Government of Turkish Cyprus. We are concerting with other countries at the United Nations to support the efforts of the Secretary General who, up until this unilateral declaration, had been working to bring the two groups together in Cyprus. Our efforts are in the diplomatic field, and at the present time they are centered at the UN with other countries, including the United Kingdom which is taking the lead in presenting a resolution which will be debated at the Security Council and on which Canada will speak.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR FROM ANKARA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister comment a little further about what other diplomatic moves might be undertaken, especially given the fact the Turkish Government has recognized the new illegal Government? For example, would Canada withdraw its Ambassador to Turkey as an expression of disapproval?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, that would not be appropriate in the circumstances. I understand the Foreign Minister of Turkey has stated that the unilateral declaration had taken place without the consent or knowledge of the Turkish Government, so in those circumstances the action proposed would not be quite appropriate.

PURPOSE OF GOVERNMENT'S PROGRAMS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the Minister consider programs such as NEED, CCDP and others under the Canada Works Program, to be primarily ones of social security income support, or primarily of job creation and economic development?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think both of these objectives are important to this Government.

GOVERNMENT'S POLICY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I think they are social security programs, as does the Department of Health and Welfare in its booklet "Basic Facts on Social Security Programs". What is the Minister going to do about job creation?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions we have outlined to the House the general strategy for job creation. That is reflected in the budget presented by the Minister of Finance, a strategy which does believe that the private sector is the main motor force for creating jobs. We believe the tax arrangements brought forward by this Government will create a climate in this country in which that will happen.

On a short-term basis, through such programs as NEED and the Special Recovery Projects Program, we are undertaking direct job-creation programs until the full impact of the tax measures can be felt. If the hon. gentleman is concerned that unemployment insurance is an income maintenance program, the fact is that it is the kind of program which Parliament created. There are people who would argue that unemployment insurance contains too many social aspects and should be more narrowly an insurance program. There are those who take a very different point of view. The point I would make, Mr. Speaker, is that the Unemployment Insurance Program has just shown what a substantial and extraordinary benefit it is to this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the Minister's replies are long, it is difficult to discourage long questions.

Oral Questions

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

SALE OF SHARES—POSSIBLE LOSS TO TAXPAYERS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, with reference to the proposed sale of Canada Development shares in the market in the next few weeks. Unadjusted for inflation, the average price the Government paid for these shares over the years is $10.48. The current price is $6 a share, and the sale will probably be made at something less than that. Could the Minister explain to the public why taxpayers must accept a loss of at least 45 per cent on their original investment?

• (1440)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the Hon. Member will appreciate that, his question being based on sheer speculation, it is impossible for me to give him an answer.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW FROM CORPORATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is absolutely no speculation in anything I have said. The average cost is $10.48. The shares are trading now at $6. You can get the price in The Globe and Mail business section. They are going to be sold at less than that. There is a 45 per cent loss on the part of the Canadian taxpayer. It is another example of the mistakes that the Government has made over the years that have wasted taxpayers' money. Let me point out the reason for this. It is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason for this is based on the fact that the Government meddled in the operations of this company some two years ago through the current Minister of Finance, by trying to impose its own management.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. Wilson: Would the Minister tell the House how long it is going to take for the Government to get out of that company and let it be operated in a more effective way?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is aware enough of stock exchange operations to know that the shares of various companies trade at various prices and that even the companies which the Hon. Member or other Members may consider as being under the best management hold shares whose price on the stock market may vary from day to day, either up or down. I also think that, before making any conclusion on prices, it is better to wait until a number of shares have been traded. In addition, the Hon. Member will agree with me that the measures taken by the Government will very likely contribute to strengthen the market value of CDC shares.

FISHERIES

PEARSE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—ROLE OF POLICY ADVISER

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. After the Pearse Report in British Columbia was brought down a year ago September, the Minister appointed a ministerial advisory board to study the report and make recommendations by this November. The Minister is also involved with his own Department in making recommendations to Cabinet. More recently the Minister appointed a ministerial committee with a senior adviser to his Department, to study those reocommendations also. What is the relationship between the Minister's policy adviser committee to M.A.C. and his own departmental officials?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in one word, the closest co-operation and interaction between those different instances. What I need is the best advice of the most competent people within the Department, the advisers and also the participants in the fisheries, whether they are the native groups in B.C., or the commercial sector, or the sports fishery. I need the support of all those people.

I am pleased to report to the House that the spirit that exists at this moment is really very encouraging. All of them are working together hand in hand. I hope that early in the new year I will be able to put before Cabinet an important program to give a new start to the Pacific fisheries, exactly as we have been doing for the Atlantic fisheries.

Mr. Crosbie: We hope not.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Members of the Minister's advisory committee have charged that the policy adviser basically has kneecapped their recommendations to the Minister, and are asking that that policy adviser be recalled. Will the Minister give his assurances that he will meet immediately with his ministerial advisory committee to assure them that their recommendations will be carefully considered? Further will he recall his senior policy adviser to restore some faith with his committee and within his Department which he is so much in need of, when considering these recommendations for the West Coast fishing industry?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard such an unfair criticism of one of my closest advisers who works with me on my staff. On the contrary, I have only the highest confidence in him. I can assure the Hon. Member that his opinion is not at all shared by the people. He is most dedicated and is doing exactly what I asked him to do. I have no intention whatsoever of doing what the Hon. Member is suggesting.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GRAND CAYMAN ISLANDS—LEGAL STATUS OF BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is used to being between a rock and a hard place. My question concerns the Bank of Nova Scotia which is being fined $25,000 a day by U.S. courts for not divulging bank records from the Grand Cayman Islands. At the same time, there is an injunction from a court in the Grand Cayman Islands forbidding the bank to give this information to the American authorities because of their secrecy laws.

Would the Minister advise the House whether the Government has made a decision to intervene before the U.S. courts to aid the Bank of Nova Scotia? The newspapers report that he has brought this up already with the Secretary of State of the U.S., Mr. Schultz. What was the response of Mr. Schultz? What action does the Minister plan to follow up this untenable position in which the bank has been placed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the meeting with Mr. Schultz, the answer is yes. We did have a continuing consultation on what Canada considers an unjustified extraterritorial application of American law. In this case the Bank of Nova Scotia and other banks are put in an almost impossible position in being asked to comply with American law which contravenes the local law. The American authorities have sought information in a way which we think is unnecessary as well as unjustified. We believe that a good deal of that information could be obtained legally through the application, for example, for the taxation treaties. All of this was discussed with Mr. Schultz. We have attempted to put in place some mechanism that will overcome this difficulty.

The Hon. Member asked whether we intend to intervene in support of the Bank of Nova Scotia before the American court. That matter is under consideration by the Department of Justice. I believe there is an intention to file an amicus brief or take that status at court. As far as I know, the exact details of the statement are still under consideration by the Department of Justice.

UNITED STATES REACTION TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Nova Scotia is being forced to pay $25,000 a day in the meantime. If I am correct in my mathematics, that is $100,000 every four days. I know that is not a lot to the Government, so I wonder if the Minister would consider this to be urgent. Was Mr. Schultz sympathetic and did he indicate he was going to attempt to take some action?

Is the Government considering the suggestion of Mr. Bell, President of the Bank of Nova Scotia, who suggested that we should hold the line on activities of foreign banks operating in this country until the matter is cleared up, in other words use some pressure with respect to the operations of foreign banks in Canada? There is a parliamentary report on that subject now. Is the Government considering that? Did Mr. Schultz indicate sympathy and that he is going to take some action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion Mr. Schultz did show sympathy and understanding of this problem and would like to have it cleared up. My information is that the collection of the fine from the Bank of Nova Scotia has been postponed for a month. To that extent at least, there is some relief from the situation which the Hon. Member has described. I hope it will not be necessary for us to apply actions to American banks which, in our view, are unjustified when applied to Canadian banks.

ONTARIO BICENTENNIAL

FUNDING OF FESTIVITIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Could he state when the information on the details of the $1.5 million grant program for municipalities and community groups to celebrate the Ontario bicentennial will be available, so that the municipal groups and other groups can get on with their planning for this important celebration?

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State did announce earlier this week the allocation of over $2 million toward the Ontario bicentennial festivities, with the emphasis on the fact that these festivities should encompass all cultural communities within the Province of Ontario. A board of community advisers has been appointed to assist with the allocation of these funds and the details will be forwarded to Members so that they can give the information to community groups and municipalities within the next couple of weeks.

Oral Questions

COMMUNICATIONS

CONTRACT ISSUED BY DEPARTMENT TO MAIL ENVELOPES

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It concerns the issuing and distributing of licences to C.B. operators. Would he explain to the House why it is necessary for his Department to contract the services of Prestige Mailing Systems Ltd. to place in envelopes licences which his Department issues, and mail them to the C.B. operators? Surely there are clerks in his Department who are capable of stuffing and mailing out envelopes, instead of adding to our horrendous deficit in such a ludicrous manner?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have tried to automate as much as possible the handling and issuing of all licences. We are doing so in the most cost effective manner possible.

DELAY IN ISSUANCE OF LICENCES

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Communications. Would he also look into the delay and distribution of the licences to the operators? Apparently it takes approximately eight weeks to have these licences issued because his Department is concerned about an operator's cheque bouncing and would like to save time in allowing for this. Is it possible for the Minister to instruct his departmental officials distribute licences faster, effectively and efficiently, perhaps by asking the operators to send their payment by money order or something of that nature?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the recommendation made to me to try to make the service even more efficient than it is at the moment, I will be pleased to discuss the Hon. Member's suggestion with officials of my Department.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK—DATE OF SIGNING

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Economic Development. Will an economic development framework agreement be signed with New Brunswick before the Finance Ministers' meeting is convened in December, in order that New Brunswick can maximize its potential to deal with very high unemployment considering that a very high percentage of its revenue comes in the form of transfer payments from Ottawa?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am most anxious, as are my colleagues on the Economic and Regional Development Cabinet Committee, to sign an agreement with New Brunswick as soon as possible. As the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury knows, work is moving forward in that direction.

I have had meetings and, in fact, Premier Hatfield has been in Ottawa and has met with the regional Minister and myself. I am optimistic that such an agreement can be signed with New Brunswick within a short time frame.

When we talk about a deadline such as before the Finance Ministers' meeting, I can make no promises in that regard. Certainly I can say that the priorities and the economic development perspective which was developed by our committee, and upon which I believe there is broad consensus, and which the New Brunswick Government has in its possession, are of course available and known by the Minister of Finance and the respective Ministers of Finance who have participated in its development.

I do not believe that the absence of an actual signature on an agreement will be in any way detrimental to the discussions taking place, particularly with respect to Finance Ministers. Again, I emphasize that we are anxious, as I hope the Government of New Brunswick is anxious, to sign an agreement as quickly as possible.

Mr. Howie: I thank the Minister for his answer.

REQUEST THAT SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BE EXPEDITED

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is probably aware that most of the fast track programs which have been announced for New Brunswick are on a relatively slow track and have not yet created any jobs, and that unemployment remains chronically very high. As well, the Finance Ministers' meeting is billed as a pre-budget meeting.

In view of these facts, would the Minister be good enough to give the House the assurance that he will approach his counterpart in New Brunswick within the next few days in an attempt to facilitate and expedite the signing of the agreement?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will not accept the premise that the fast track program is not on a fast track. In fact, I think things are moving well in New Brunswick. As the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury knows, New Brunswick has some very important projects, which range from general public works projects on routes, overpasses and so on, through to the most sophisticated kind of projects such as the Maritime Forestry Research Centre and the Forest Rangers School which is, of course, situated in the Hon. Member's constituency. I am sure he is most supportive of the program. I could go through the list of projects—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has answered the question.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

PAY TV—SALE OF FIRST CHOICE NETWORK

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The CRTC spent ten years looking into questions associated with Pay TV. In its policy declarations last year, it spoke out specifically against vertical integration in the system. Now, in the case of First Choice, with only ten days' notice it stretched the rules, rushed through a hearing with haste that can only be called indecent and suspicious, and permitted a level of vertical integration that is unparalleled and contrary to policies it has announced. Will the Minister initiate an investigation into this irregular and unusual action by the CRTC?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC has come down with a decision in the Pay TV area, which is an area that has been under intensive discussion in Canada by all parties. I will not launch an investigation into what the Hon. Member calls irregular activities of the CRTC. On the other hand, I am quite pleased to see that the regulators in Canada are now in a better position to respond quickly to the needs of the people who must appear before them. On many occasions in the House criticisms have been voiced to the effect that Crown commissions do not act quickly enough to take to heart and hear the problems that may be required to be heard rather quickly.

I have no comment to make on the merit of the decision since it is obviously a decision within the full jurisdiction of the CRTC to take.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW COMMISSION'S DECISION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister knows that the application, and the decision which came out of that application, have been objected to by virtually every group concerned with the production of TV material. In light of those objections, surely the Minister can at least consider exercising the right he has to overrule the decision of the CRTC. I would urge him to do that, or at least to look at it.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, indeed I can assure the Hon. Member that I will examine the decision of the CRTC very closely. After a preliminary reading of that decision I know that many of the points of view expressed in front of the CRTC were taken into consideration since, in allowing the application to go forward, the CRTC did indeed indicate a number of conditions that it considers to be essential to the decision it has taken.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

IDENTIFICATION OF NUMBERS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. I direct it to him due to his responsibility for Statistics Canada. We have received a number of press reports in the last few weeks, as well as other information, to the effect that there are approximately 300 Crown corporations and business enterprises in Canada. In fact, certain press reports indicate that there are some 306 various Crown corporations and business enterprises. Is the Minister of Supply and Services able to confirm or deny the accuracy of these reports?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member that Statistics Canada has never made a special statistical inquiry on the number of existing Crown corporations. I do not have that information.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DESIGNATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SCHOOL BOARD AS CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. On November 2 he told my colleague from Waterloo that his officials were going to pursue the full weight not of the law but of the regulations against organizations like the Canadian Mental Health Association and other such non-profit organizations. Since that involves their interpretation of such things as lobbying for changes in legislation, could the Minister explain the fact that earlier this year his Department gave charitable status to a school board in British Columbia?

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): First, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the latest case referred to by the Hon. Member and, second, when the status of charitable organization has been granted, it is of course because the organization which had applied did so in accordance with the requirements and standards of the Department. As to the particular case mentioned by the Hon. Member, I cannot comment since I am not aware of the facts.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the Governmenet House Leader—I assume we will be on the fisheries legislation again tomorrow—to indicate the business of the House should we some time during the day tomorrow terminate the fisheries legislation? Could he also go on into next week and indicate what the business for next week will be?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, after consultations I indicated to my hon. colleague this morning that we would like to see Bill C-170 sent to committee as soon as possible. I now have an indication that will not happen today but I hope it will be done tomorrow. If, as the Hon. Member for Yukon has just indicated, there is a possibility the Bill gets sent to committee before the end of the day tomorrow, the following item to be dealt with will be resumption of the debate on Bill C-91. If that Bill is sent to committee, then we will deal with Bill C-96.

In so far as next week is concerned, as I indicated this morning, we will be dealing merely with the business of supply. I would like thereby to designate Monday as the third allotted day, Tuesday as the fourth allotted day and Thursday as the fifth and last allotted day of this period of supply. I hope by that time we will have the report of the committee on the fisheries Bill, Bill C-170.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there was a matter that came to my mind after the House Leaders met. The Government House Leader knows that there has been substantial representation made, I think, to many Members of the House with regard to Bill C-653. I have raised this matter with the Minister on a number of occasions. Is there any possibility that that Bill might be reported back to the House in order that we could deal with it some time during the course of the next seven to ten days?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take into account the progress made on Bill C-12 and the possible amendments on Bill C-12 that have interrelation with some dispositions included in Bill C-653. I will have to consult and report to the Hon. Member later.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLENKARN—SUGGESTED IRREGULARITY IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to draw to your attention a vote in Supplementary Estimates (B) that I feel is out of order. It is Vote 6b under Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It deals with the payment to the Canada Post Corporation for special purposes of $8,109,406. The Estimates outline "special purposes" as being the relocation of the philatelic mail order service to Antigonish, Nova Scotia; special employment initiatives; a grant of some kind for propane vehicle conversion; special construction repair projects and federal off-oil conversion.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, you and your predecessors have ruled that the appropriations process should not be used as a substitute for legislation. To quote Madam Speaker's ruling of June 12, 1981:

—the government may not by the use of an Appropriation Act obtain authority that it does not have under existing legislation.

There is no legislative authority in the Canada Post Corporation Act to do the kind of things set out in this estimate. I would like to read into the record Section 28 of the Canada Post Corporation Act. Perhaps it is not necessary to read it in full but let me read Subsections (1), (2) and (3):

28. (1) Where at any time the available revenues of the Corporation are not sufficient to pay all the operating and income charges of the Corporation as and when due, the Minister of Finance, on the application of the Corporation approved by the Minister, may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, place at the disposal of the Corporation such amounts as may be required to enable the Corporation to meet all such charges.

(2) All amounts placed at the disposal of the Corporation pursuant to subsection (1) shall be reimbursed to the Minister of Finance from the annual revenues of the Corporation in so far as such revenues are sufficient.

(3) Where the annual revenues of the Corporation are insufficient for the purposes of subsection (2), the Minister shall cause the amount of the insufficiency to be included, in the form of a deficit appropriation item, in the next Appropriation Act laid before Parliament thereafter.

Nowhere in the Act is there any authority for an appropriation that is not an appropriation to pay losses. This is not a question of losses. This is a question of the post office entering into a series of activities that have nothing to do with its losses. Clearly if there were a loss in the post office, an appropriation could be made for the loss in accordance with Section 28 of the Act. But there is no provision in the Canada Post Corporation

Act for an appropriation to move an activity of the post office to Antigonish Nova Scotia. There is no provision for a loss, for special employment initiatives. It is not a loss necessarily to conduct a federal propane vehicle conversion program. In effect, what is happening is that this estimate is totally out of order.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to investigate the matter. If I am right, and I believe I am, that Section 28 of the Canada Post Corporation Act does not allow this kind of estimate, I ask that the estimate be disallowed and removed from the proposed appropriation Bill.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Before you rule, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you take this representation under advisement so as to give the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) an opportunity to give an explanation, if he feels an explanation is required, either tomorrow or at the latest the beginning of next week, on Monday. I think this may enlighten you before you render your decision.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter. The Chair would certainly wish to extend opportunities for Members to rebut the argument made before rendering a decision—

Mr. Nielsen: Or add to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —and to take some time to consider the matter. Or add to it, as the Hon. Member says.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WADDELL—OPPORTUNITY TO ASK SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege of which I gave you notice. It arises from the question period. I feel my privileges as a Member have been unfairly abridged, namely that my supplementary question was cut off unfairly and there were unfair comments by the Chair after the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please be seated.

Mr. Waddell: Do you want to listen to me?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please be seated.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please be seated. The determination of supplementary questions is always a difficult matter. The rules are clearly set out in Beauchesne for Hon. Members. In the judgment of the Chair, a supplementary was not accorded in that particular situation. This is not a matter of privilege.

• (1510)

Mr. Waddell: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot raise on a point of order what he has been denied on a point of privilege. If he is merely going to repeat his argument, the Chair can only restate its position. However, if the Hon. Member has a valid point of order, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. Waddell: I am just asking the Chair to check the "blues" with respect to what happened, and I reserve my right to raise it tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is simply repeating the same material as before.

MR. YURKO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO PASS BILL C-691

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for finally seeing me today. I rise on a point of order in connection with a possible change in the order of business for today. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that Private Member's Bill C-691, an Act to pardon Louis David Riel, be brought forward today for second reading, consideration by Committee of the Whole House, report stage and third reading. I hope you will seek unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Yurko: I did not hear you put the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry, but either because of difficulties with the sound system or for some other reason, I did not hear you actually put the motion respecting the Hon. Member's request for unanimous consent. I am not casting any doubt that it was done, but it could not be heard at this end of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognized the Hon. Member on a point of order. The Chair's understanding of the procedures of the House is that he cannot move a motion under such circumstances.

Mr. Deans: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the Chair distinctly heard a request for unanimous consent to proceed in a certain way. The Chair asked if there was unanimous consent. There clearly was not unanimous consent and, therefore, the Chair proceeded to the next item of business.

Mr. Yurko: A point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) has a valid point of order, the Chair will hear it. What does he have to say?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I have the highest respect for the Chair; I always have for a number of years. I have to say that I do not recall, unless my eyesight is abandoning me—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair distinctly asked if there was unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to introduce his motion. Hansard will have clearly recorded that there was not unanimous consent.

Mr. Waddell: You did not ask.

Mr. Heap: You did not ask.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to Hon. Members, the Hansard record will disclose that the Chair asked for it.

PETITIONS

MR. MURPHY—HEALTH CARE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the people of the Town of The Pas. In their petition to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, they point out that one of the prime objectives of the Canadian medicare system was to guarantee accessibility of health care to all Canadians. They also believe that the practices of extra billing, hospital user fees and premiums limit accessibility. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray that the new Canada Health Act reaffirm the cornerstone of medicare by forbidding these practices and thereby reinstating full accessibility to insured health services for all Canadians.

MR. ANGUISH—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a few petitions which I would like to present this afternoon. The first one calls upon Parliament to debate and pass Private Member's Bill C-678 standing in my name, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. This petition is signed by some 538 residents of the Province of Ontario who stress that the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada can escalate the nuclear arms race and is, therefore, a serious threat to world peace. The petitioners from all over the Province of Ontario urge Parliament to recognize that multilateral nuclear disarmament must occur in order to secure peace in the world and that Canada, as a traditionally peaceful nation, can and must play a crucial role in achieving multilateral disarmament.

In addition to petitions which I have already presented from the Province of Alberta, I have the further pleasure today to present one signed by residents of the City of Edmonton who oppose the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and call upon Parliament to debate and pass the Private Member's Bill standing in my name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. This Bill, if passed, would allow Canada to act in its traditional and historic role as a peacekeeper and mediator in the world-wide nuclear disarmament process, along with other countries that would wish to participate.

The next petition I am proud to present in the House of Commons today is signed by residents of the Province of New Brunswick. The signatures were collected by Saint John Project Ploughshares to mark disarmament week. The petitioners met in a storefront in the city's new downtown centre to focus attention on the relationship between the arms race and development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member realizes that there are certain forms with regard to petitions and that he should briefly state the purpose of the petition.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I have only a few more to present and I will try to deal with them as expeditiously as possible. These people emphasize that the specific commitment of Project Ploughshares of Saint John is to work for nuclear disarmament. The petitioners call upon Parliament to debate and pass the Private Member's Bill standing in my name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone.

Earlier I presented a petition signed by some 538 residents of the Province of Ontario who oppose the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. At the moment I would like to present a petition signed by another 74 residents of the Province of Ontario, most of whom are from Toronto and London. They also oppose the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and call upon Parliament to debate and pass the Private Member's Bill standing in my name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone. The petitioners urge Parliament to recognize that multilateral nuclear disarmament must occur in order to secure world peace and that Canada, as a traditionally peaceful nation, must play a crucial role in achieving multilateral disarmament.

Also I have the pleasure today to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by some 203 residents of the Province of Saskatchewan who believe that the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada escalates the nuclear arms race and, therefore, is a serious threat to world peace. They also believe that multilateral nuclear disarmament must occur to secure world peace. The petitioners call upon Parliament to debate and pass Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone, an Act which, if passed, will allow Canada to act as a mediator in world-wide nuclear disarmament processes along with other countries that wish to participate.

I have the pleasure today to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by some 157 residents of Canada who believe that the testing of the Cruise missile is an escalation of the nuclear arms race and is, therefore, a serious threat to world peace. The petitioners call upon Parliament to debate and pass the Private Members' Bill standing in ny name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone which would prevent the testing in Canada of the Cruise missile and allow Canada to act as a mediator in world-wide nuclear disarmament processes along with other countries that wish to participate.

I have the pleasure today to present to the House of Commons a petition which stresses the urgent need for the House of Commons to debate the Cruise missile and Canada's role in the peace-keeping process. This particular petition is more than 200 pages long and contains some 366 signatures, many collected one at a time by concerned Canadians from coast to coast. The petitioners believe that the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada escalates the nuclear arms race and is therefore a serious threat to world peace. The petitioners, who represent a true corss-section of Canadian society, ask your indulgence and that Parliament debate and pass the Private Member's Bill standing in my name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, so that Canada as a traditionally peaceful nation can play a role as a mediator along with other countries that wish to participate in the world-wide nuclear disarmament process.

I have other petitions, but I will conclude with one final petition today. In the last few days I have had the opportunity to present petitions to the House of Commons from thousands of Canadians from coast to coast. Even though I still have more to present, I am extremely pleased today to present a number of petitions signed by the residents of many of the communities within my own constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

The petitioners from such communities as Borden, Goodsoil, The Battlefords, Edam, Livelong, Medstead, Meadow Lake, Radisson, Dorintosh, Pinehouse, Meota, Turtleford and Vawn call upon Parliament to debate and pass the Private Member's Bill standing in my name, Bill C-678, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear weapons free zone. The Bill, if passed, would prevent the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and allow Canada to act as a mediator in the world-wide disarmament process along with other countries that wish to participate.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to present these petitions in the House of Commons this afternoon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

NOTICE OF VACANCY IN ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF NEPEAN-CARLETON

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on an occasion which I know would be moved or seconded by the former Member for Nepean-Carleton because we shared a belief that the by-election laws in this country are very antiquated. In fact, they are the worst in the democratic free world. It is because of that common belief that I rise to give notice of a vacancy pursuant to Section 10 of the House of Commons Act.

"We, the undersigned, hereby give notice pursuant to Section 10 of the House of Commons Act that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of the House of Commons in the electoral district of Nepean-Carleton in the Province of Ontario by reason of the untimely death of the Hon. Walter Baker, the Member therefor". Given under our hands and seals at Ottawa, the seventeenth day of November, 1983, signed by myself, the Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, and the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions. May I dispose of the reading of the rather lengthy number of items under Motions?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared once again to suggest, without, of course, setting any precedent, that you simply call upon Members who have Motions on the Order Paper in their names to determine if any wish to raise them. If they do not, perhaps they could be stood without reading them seriatim.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that the proper procedure be followed.

Motions stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, before recess, I was talking about the various times since 1970 that the Government of Canada has intervened to help fishermen in the Province of Quebec. I said that under its program to re-establish the Canadian groundfish industry, the Government of Canada had paid Quebec fishermen and processors grants totalling $6,684,400 between 1975 and 1978.

Furthermore, that in 1972, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans introduced a program to protect Atlantic salmon. He had to suspend commercial salmon fishing in the Gulf, and again. The Government of Canada subsidized ninety-five salmon fishermen, from 1972 to 1980, spending a total of $1,840,000 or an average of about $20,000 for every salmon fisherman in the Province of Quebec.

In the summer of 1982, there was utter chaos in the fisheries industry as a result of the dire situation at Pêcheurs-Unis. Here again, the Government of Canada stepped in to save the fishermen. In the spring of 1983, there was a recurrence of the same problem at Pêcheurs-Unis, and the Government of Canada guaranteed a bank loan so that Pêcheurs-Unis could start its operations and fishermen could start their fishing season.

Mr. Speaker, we, the people of the Gaspé, are not blind. We know what the Government of Canada has done for the fisheries industry in Quebec.

Within the framework of the Economic Development Plan for the Gaspé and Lower St. Lawrence, a total of $29,500,000 will be spent on the fisheries industry in the Gaspé in the next two years, for the construction of facilities for handling and unloading fish, manufacturing and storing ice, storing and distributing bait, and also for improving harbour facilities in the area. These funds are being contributed exclusively by the Government of Canada.

What has the PQ Government done since it came to power for fishermen in the Gaspé, the Magdalen Islands and on the North Shore?

Looking back, Mr. Speaker, we see that first of all, this Government did away with gillnet subsidies; second, it cut in half the Quebec Government's subsidy on insurance premiums for fishing boats; third, it abolished the subsidy program for lobster trap replacement; fourth, it closed several ice depots; fifth, it raised the price of ice provided by departmental depots from $8 to $20 per ton; and finally, it introduced its special tax on gas which put a heavy burden on fishermen and fish processors.

I could go on for much longer, Mr. Speaker, but that is how the Hon. Jean Garon has helped Quebec's fishermen.

During the week's holiday we spent in our ridings, I also met independent processors from the Gaspé. They realize that restructuring of the fisheries industry is necessary. Through their ability, initiative and sheer hard work, these processors have helped to maintain fisheries-related operations in the Gaspé and Quebec.

Private entreprise is absolutely essential to the future of the fisheries industry in Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces. The independent processors are also concerned about what will happen to their processing plants when a new giant company is established, with the majority of shares being held by the Government of Canada. They are not necessarily opposed to this new fisheries corporation based in the Gaspé, but they would urge the Government to set up management and control mechanisms in order to protect private enterprise.

We must not make it difficult for private enterprise to develop, to progress and to create jobs. If private enterprise were to disappear from the fisheries industry in Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces, the resulting economic disaster would be far worse than the bankruptcy of Pêcheurs-Unis. In the past, members of local co-operatives have had many problems with Pêcheurs-Unis du Québec. Today they are very pleased this organization will disappear when the new corporation is established, once the legislation before the House today, Bill C-170, is passed.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I urge Hon. Members to join me in supporting this Bill to restructure the Atlantic fisheries and to provide for financial assistance by the Government of Canada in defraying the cost of this restructuring, because of all the Canadians who depend on this and, perhaps also, because every day, our fishermen are exploring the living resources of our ocean boundaries and it is up to us to take advantage of these resources.

In committee, we shall be able to suggest amendments to this Bill. This morning, my colleague from South West Nova (Miss Campbell) wanted the Vice-Chairman, the Member for Gaspé, to chair the committee while this Bill is being considered. I can assure my hon. colleague that we can share the duties of conducting the debate in committee and thus ensure that the legislation is passed by the House before this session is adjourned.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill C-170, an Act to authorize the investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fisheries enterprises. I do recognize that this is perhaps the most important fisheries debate of any that we have had in this session of Parliament. I believe it was the Premier of Newfoundland who indicated that this was perhaps the most important phenomenon to happen to the Island of Newfoundland and Labrador since Confederation. I find it disheartening, though, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), who sponsored this Bill, does not see fit to be in the House. While one might be able to understand the Minister's absence, I find it difficult to understand that even the Parliamentary Secretary is unable to be in attendance in the House of Commons today.

Mr. Nowlan: It is an insult. Shame!

Mr. Riis: It really is an insult, Mr. Speaker, to the Atlantic fisheries and to fishermen and fish processors across this country. I think it indicates pretty clearly just how seriously Members of the Government take this particular legislation. I appreciate that what this Bill really represents to Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a recognition of what happens when there is a lack of adequate planning, a lack of any comprehensive planning regarding one of Canada's major economic sectors. Obviously, we are seeing today the result of what happens when the federal Government does not sit down with provincial Governments and with representatives of the fishing industry in order to develop some long-range comprehensive planning strategies. The result is that we have today what amounts, by and large, to a bail-out situation, throwing a lifesaver to an industry which has been extremely hard-pressed over the last number of months.

I would like to say that this particular drastic measure which we are looking at today is the result of Government activities, in part, over the last number of years, and the incredible optimism which both the provincial and federal Governments brought about in the industry because of the expansion of the 200-mile limit, with the suggestion that this was a sector of the economy, the Atlantic fisheries sector, which virtually had unlimited opportunities and potential. People were encouraged to move into areas in which they were previously hesitant to move. Corporations, both large and small, were encouraged to borrow beyond their means in anticipation of this incredible bubble which was about to occur in terms of the Atlantic fisheries. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that management decisions resulted in a great deal of over-capitalization and unnecessary debt which precipitated and persuaded the Government to act in this very dramatic way.

We also, of course, recognize that the present problems were compounded by the monetarist position which the federal Government took a number of years ago. I might say it was a position which was supported by the Conservative Party of Canada, represented through its short term in office by the then Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, who supported the position of Governor Bouey and the Bank of Canada. This position was later taken up by the present Government. It was essentially a Government policy of high interest rates, Mr. Speaker, the recognition that high interest rates would somehow cause investors to hesitate to make the necessary investments, which would cause the economy to wind down, slow down, and that is exactly what happened. We are looking at a situation, Mr. Speaker, in the Atlantic fishery, where, because of this high interest rate policy of the present Government and of the short-lived Conservative Government, fishermen, fish producers and fish processors were simply unable to operate effectively and efficiently. I will also say, Mr. Speaker, that these problems were compounded by the rather political nature of the DREE program, by the sort of indiscriminate throwing of DREE money out for political gain; some DREE money here, some DREE grants there. This resulted in a fisheries infrastructure unfolding which was not always based on economic advice and common sense.

Similarly, there was the indiscriminate doling out of licences, which resulted in there being more fishermen than the industry could support. As a result of that, restrictive regulations were brought in by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, which compounded the problem. I believe the most obvious over-exuberant expectations of what the 200-mile limit would bring about were demonstrated when the Department decided to dole out international fishing licences to foreigners to fish in our waters. That again was simply another factor which contributed to depleted resources and more pressure being brought to bear on an already over-extended resource.

This major problem of an industry which has floundered for years and years as a result of a lack of Government strategy in place can be seen on the West Coast of this country. Again, as a result of a lack of any real strategic planning with all the players involved, and with the lack of a comprehensive strategy for that resource sector, an ad hoc approach has been taken, which has resulted in chaos on both the East and West Coasts of Canada. It was certainly known many, many years ago that this would be bound to unfold in this way.

I remember the economic development task force, which was conducted by the New Democratic Party in Atlantic Canada. Various fishermen's organizations and various fishing organizations brought to our attention at that time the financial and economic plight of the industry. However, the action the Government took was to appoint the Kirby task force, which of course resulted in Bill C-170 which we are debating today, the restructuring of the fishing industry into two fishing giants.

While having two giants in that industry will place it amongst the largest fishing corporations in the world, it raises a number of concerns. One of the major concerns I have is what this Bill provides in terms of power to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister may acquire shares, debentures or securities of any fishery enterprise. The Minister may make a contribution or loan to any fishery enterprise. I use those two references in the Bill to show the unlimited powers which the Minister will receive if this Bill passes. Mr. Speaker, I feel that that ought to raise concern among Canadians generally because we are really being asked, as Members of Parliament, to have faith in the good intentions of the Minister. Through us he is asking people in the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada to have faith in what this Minister plans to do for the industry. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, when one looks at the rather abysmal record of the Government and the Minister regarding this very critical fisheries sector, I do not believe it is a reasonable request for the Minister to make.

As the critic for fisheries in our Party has indicated, this Bill really does not solve the problem. It simply breathes life into an ailing industry. What happens from this point on will be really critical. This is simply the first of a long trek to revitalize and restructure that very ailing industry.

I believe it is important to note the role of the banks in this solution. We have not to this point recognized that one of the reasons that the Government moved as it did to restructure financially this ailing industry was to provide relief to the banks which were involved. It was well known that virtually every chartered bank in this country was heavily in debt as a result of imprudent loans made to a number of large and small corporations. Once again, as we have seen so often in the past, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada, through the Government of Canada, have been asked to come in and bail out a number of corporations. And I believe that really the motivation has been to bail out the banks which found themselves over-extended in this very critical industry.

We have made a great deal of effort in Bill C-170 to assist some of the large players in the Atlantic fishery, including the Bank of Nova Scotia. But what about the 700 independents who have been left out of the equation and are now looking with some fear at these two megagiants in the fishing industry? They are being asked to compete alongside these major players. Are the banks going to be sympathetic to their plight? Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We have already seen the major chartered banks of this country saying to the fishermen that they are cutting back the lines of credit, they no longer have faith in the industry or the fishermen and their traditional lines of credit are being reduced virtually as a matter of bank policy. When you consider the privileged position of banks in this country, Mr. Speaker, when you consider the responsibility they ought to accept as a result of that privileged position, this is not the kind of behaviour we would expect from our major lending institutions.

I believe it is critical that the Government of Canada view this problem not simply in cold, hard financial terms. There is the impression that the Government plans to privatize this restructured corporate amalgamation. While one will perhaps laud that as a long-term goal, I do hope we do not lose sight of the fact that, in getting these restructured companies back on their feet financially and then selling them off to the private sector, there is more to it than that.

I believe that what we are seeing here is not only a financial and economic problem, it is also a social problem. Because of the dependence of so many medium and small communities in Atlantic Canada on the fishing industry, an ailing industry will result in a tearing of the social fabric in many of those communities. After all, for a great deal of Atlantic Canada fishing is Atlantic Canada. What happens to the fishing industry, not only these restructured companies but the small independents as well, will reflect on the social fabric of Atlantic Canada in the months, years and decades ahead.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that the Government keep in mind that financial viability is a major factor but it is not the only factor, and I suspect we can make a case that it is not the major factor. Long-term employment of people in Atlantic Canada, long-term economic stability in the fishing industry, ought to be the number one priority, as opposed to a rapid move to financial viability and a turnover to the private sector of these new-found corporations.

I want to take issue with some comments made by certain Members of the House, Mr. Speaker. The concern was expressed that the provincial and federal Governments, as well as the fishing companies, did not look actively enough for foreign money to come to the rescue. I think it is time that we as Canadians stood up and stopped using taxpayers' money to bribe foreign corporations into coming into this country. I believe, as do Members of the New Democratic Party, that we can do it ourselves. There is money in this country to do it ourselves. We do not have to go out on bended knee with grants and give-aways to the Japanese, Americans, Germans or others. We can do it ourselves.

I shudder at the number of people who have suggested in debate on this bill that we should have gone to foreign investors in foreign countries for the answer to our fisheries problem. If one could be so bold, one could perhaps argue the case that one of the reasons we have problems in many of our resource industries today is that in the past that is exactly what we did. We went outside of this country and asked foreigners to come in and make the investments, and more important the investment decisions, for this industry and the future of Canadians. I hope the days are long past when we have to look to foreigners to make a decision regarding the Canadian economy. I repeat, we do not need to use taxpayers' money to bribe foreign corporations to assist us in the bail-out of this particular industry.

I want to close, Mr. Speaker, by suggesting that this provides an ideal opportunity for the Government to show some real leadership in carrying out its intention to divest itself of these investments in due time. The Government should consider other viable alternatives simply to privatizing this organization. I raise as a concern the possibility of major co-operatives becoming involved. In other words, the fish producers and processors, the fishermen themselves in Atlantic Canada, are quite capable of running many of these corporations. They are quite capable of making the necessary management decisions. I think it is time we gave people credit where credit is due. These individuals have spent every working day of their lives in the fishing industry in one form or another, and to suggest they are somehow unable to make the necessary management decisions is a slight to these individuals. I believe the Government now has the opportunity, as it moves out of its involvement in the months and years ahead, to look at the people involved in these corporations to play a more meaningful role than they have often played in the past, particularly when it comes to making financial decisions of a marketing or investment nature.

While we in the NDP will do everything possible to remove any impediment to a rapid passage of this Bill, we do want to use the opportunity of second reading, when we are asked to comment on the principle of the Bill, to make it clear that one of the reasons we are in this situation today is the lack of attention paid to planning the future of this industry, particularly given the Government's monetarist policy concerning high interest rates. Rather than see this as a time of gloom and doom, as some other Members have suggested, we see it as a time of opportunity to place in the hands of those people in Atlantic Canada who are directly involved the opportunity to participate in the development of the Atlantic fishery to the maximum extent possible.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-170, the Atlantic fisheries restructuring Bill. I speak as a very concerned Nova Scotian rather than as a Member who at the present time has a very large fishing constituency. I used to have, and my colleague across the way from Central Nova inherited, that part of Digby which was one of the real king counties for fish in Nova Scotia. My heritage lies in Digby county and I can thereby relate very much to the concern in that county, and frankly in all of Nova Scotia, about the implications of this Bill. This is part of the paradox. It is the very size of the industry in Atlantic Canada, which employs about 100,000 people compared to the 75,000 employed in the auto industry, which we hear so much about from time to time in Ontario. Considering that there are 100,000 people in Atlantic Canada involved directly and indirectly in the fishing industry, one should appreciate the concern over this Bill. In effect, that compounds the problem because we know the industry is in "dire straits", to quote a famous phrase. It is in dire straits because of the mismanagement of the industry, because of Government policy, Government action and Government inaction.

When our fishing spokesman, the Member from South Shore (Mr. Crouse), replied to the Minister here on Monday he outlined, as other Members have, all the problems that the fishing industry had with a lot of the political interference that has adversely affected the fishing industry in terms of licenses, quotas and seasons. The entrepreneurial industry and the skills of those who ply the seas have really been hamstrung by Government interference and Government policy.

In the brief time that I have I am not going to review all those details. They were most ably reviewed by the Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). We also had a very interesting speech this morning from the Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). She is the Chairman of the Fisheries and Forestry Committee and has real concerns about this Bill. I am not going to waste the time of the House recounting what this Bill does. We know that the Government is pumping many millions of dollars into the industry to help it, but also thereby bailing out the banks who have over-extended credit to several of the major companies, two in Nova Scotia and three in Newfoundland. Out of this infusion of capital there are going to be two large fishing corporations, the largest and the second largest fishing companies in the world.

Mr. Speaker, we can bandy words about. I do not know what the official name is going to be for this new corporation or new corporations. I am apprehensive after having seen what happened with PetroCan and its establishment. It was the window in the industry, and there are some positive things to say about it. There are also things to be said about PetroCan and the national energy policy whereby PetroCan gets an unfair advantage against competitors in the oil and gas field. The new corporation, which I will call FishCan, for lack of a better word, may also have preferential treatment through the back door from a Government that is giving the funds. It is only natural to say that if the Government is going to create this Crown corporation, when the bottom lines are faced in the administration of a new corporation, the fears of the independent fish operators in Nova Scotia have a lot of merit. Until the lines of administration of the new corporation are defined and queried in the Committee I think those concerns are going to stay.

I listened to the comments of the Member from the New Democratic Party who preceded me about some of his hopes and some of the ideology of the New Democratic Party. I cannot understand how we can have blind faith that the Government, which created the problem through this new corporation, is now going to be able to cure it. I can quote the political phrase of a former Minister of Finance who said those immortal words, "short-term pain for long-term gain". I am seriously concerned that because we see the carrot of many millions of dollars to help an immediate problem we are going to have short-term gain for long-term pain in the fishing industry until we define how this new corporation is going to operate.

Mr. Speaker, the politicians across the way, and on this side too, have said with authority that the new corporation is not a Crown corporation in the sense of a Crown corporation. In actual fact, it is not. It is worse. It is strictly a creature of the federal Government with no one on the board from the private sector in Newfoundland. If we take that as a precedent for what might happen in Nova Scotia, we are getting a situation in terms of an administration of a corporation doing business which has to be approved by both levels of the Government, by the board and by political appointees. The problem is going to be compounded and not resolved. Regardless of how you lay down the rules, the Government is going to become a more dominant player than it already is. The Government already has a dominant interest in the fishing industry through its licensing practice, quotas and all the inspections it does. With all that dominance before the creation of the corporation, I do not have faith that the new corporation is going to be the cure that we are all hoping for in this very important industry.

I sympathize with those Members who have fishing communities in their constituencies where the plants are closed down and the boats are not at sea because the prices are down. If there were a free vote, which there is not going to be, it would be very difficult for them to vote against the Bill because of some of the principles that I think are wrong in this Bill. Philosophically, I have real difficulty, in terms of the history of Parliament, with the creation of Crown corporations to do business, not Crown corporations to do cultural things such as the CBC. The CNR was born out of a morass of bankruptcies in the railways and was a needed and necessary social creation. In some ways I can understand the argument for the social need for the Crown corporation.

Using the analogy of driving a car which goes off the highway and you need some help, you are obviously going to take help from anyone who comes along to give you help. However, you are not going to take help with as much confidence if the person who forces you off the road is the person who offers you the helping hand. I think that is the case here. I do not know if this new Crown corporation is going to be the octopus of the industry which will reach out with tentacles and unfairly choke, in a discriminatory way the independent fish operations. I do not know if it is going to be the shark of the industry which will eat some of the independent fish operators. I do not know if it is going to be a nice little sunfish which will sit in the sea with the other independent operators and get along with everybody in harmony.

Mr. Speaker, when the choice has to be made between the Crown corporation and the independent fish operator, it is only human and natural to say that the Government Crown corporation, which I call FishCan, is going to cut the deck for FishCan and not for the independent operator.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many questions that one has to ask. We all live by the sea in Atlantic Canada. It is part of our pulse. The sea is the womb of the earth. You cannot get away from that beat of the sea. I am proud of it. May I interject now to say that I am glad that my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), stood down to let me speak now so that I could catch a plane. He will be speaking later in his most eloquent style.

The sea is fundamental to us. I am appalled as a Canadian that this bounty of the sea is there to feed Canadians and the world. I would like to have the hopes of my friend from the Okanagan who spoke a little while ago. The reality is that we have mucked it up. We need to have questions answered. We have to know about the potential political power of FishCan against the independent operators. We have to know if there is going to be a back door subsidization program greater than what is there now in the infusion of initial funding. We have to know what the reality is about the privatization and the recognition. Is this just a temporary measure to help out an industry that is in dire straits for a time, or is it really going to be there forever and a day?

We used to look around the city of Ottawa and see temporary wartime Government buildings. They stayed there for 45 years. The most temporary law, which is still very much a part of the system of Canada, was the temporary Income Tax Act of 1917. That was a temporary measure. I suggest that we are dreaming in technicolour if we think that this is a temporary measure and the FishCan Corporation will back off once the immediate job is, hopefully, completed and the sales return, the prices rise and people get back to work. I believe we will be moving an amendment which will force Members to show if they believe that it really will back off in a programmed manner as the industry improves. It will be a sunset clause and we will see what happens when the Minister appears before the committee.

I do not get upset over socialization or nationalization. I fully support some of our Crown corporations such as Canadian National, Air Canada and the CBC. These have been creatures of compromise, talent and necessity which, despite the problems they do have, have done well and have provided a social need. That does not bother me. This is the creation of a state corporation but it is being called restructuring, according to the new jargon. I suggest it is misleading, especially for Members opposite who avoid mentioning socialization or nationalization and keep talking about restructuring. A rose is a rose by any name and a rose has thorns as well as a bloom.

I am suggesting most seriously to the House that in reality this is not a restructuring but a back door nationalization of the fish industry.

The Minister will have to be prepared to tell the committee what Canada's position will be with our friends to the south where the great fish market is. What will be the American reaction to public money going into this new FishCan Corporation when the U.S. is already apprehensive about many of our raw resources? They are already attacking the import of our potatoes and other raw resources into the States with countervailing duties, and if they believe there is an unfair advantage from using taxpayers' money to compete against their private interest, what assurance can the Minister give that the Americans will not slap on countervailing duties when we create the FishCan Corporation here? Because we can be sure that fish lobby in the New England States will say it is unfair trade. There are many questions which the Minister must answer before I will say how I will vote on this legislation at third reading.

The question is, what are the alternatives? They are difficult and, fortunately for Nova Scotia, we are still negotiating. There is not an agreement yet, as there is in Newfoundland. We have not received the assurances as yet from the federal Government, which I presume satisfied Newfoundland. I can think of several compromises in Nova Scotia, one of which would be one company going down and the other running the fleet. I personally believe that the record of Governments coming in after the event, having created the problem, is not good. We must face the reality. While it could happen that companies will fail and the fish stocks and inventories will deflate the market even further, that is the reality. Perhaps we should face that situation rather than postpone it for another two years while building up the infrastructure with the bureaucracy that is necessary to run a FishCan operation.

As I said earlier, I have real concerns about this temporary measure. We will see how serious Members are about its being temporary when the Member for South Shore perhaps moves his sunset provision. I suggest to my friend for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) that the Income Tax Act in 1917 was a temporary measure, and yet. I am not very confident about a return to private industry when I read the words of the Machiavellian author who is perhaps behind the whole thing. He is our friend, Dr. Kirby from Nova Scotia. He is an interesting individual with whom I have stimulating conversations on planes back and forth to Ottawa but, as he said, after the first agreement had been signed with Newfoundland and the Minister was flying to Nova Scotia to negotiate with that Province, as quoted in The Globe and Mail of November 5, 1983, as the plane hit the runway in Halifax—

Miss Campbell: It was Port Hawkesbury, not Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nowlan: It says Halifax here. But the quote is the main thing. It is the same as what Churchill said about nationalization, "When you scramble an omelette, you cannot unscramble it." Mr. Kirby must have been thinking of Mr. Churchill when he said:

> Whatever happens now, what we've pulled off—restructuring the industry and at the same time creating a new federal fisheries policy—can never be undone.

That is what gives me concern. We have an immediate problem, and this is a quick legislative fix that I believe parliamentary history has proven does not work. Until more questions are answered in the committee, I am not optimistic, and I believe we have legitimate reasons to try to negotiate a better deal in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. I share some of his concerns about the policy behind the Bill. Without getting into that at this point, I simply want to know how he can base his argument by saying that the federal Government is responsible for the problems in the fishing industry? It was the federal Government, under the former Minister of Fisheries, which told the companies and the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in particular not to overfish in the spring of 1981. Despite this advice they overfished and the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia were in a war in competition for the northern cod. They opened up some new plants against the advice of the federal Government. It is the companies and the two provincial Governments, particularly the Government of Newfounland, that are responsible for the overfishing in 1981. That is what led to the high inventories when interest rates went over 25 per cent. How can the Member say that the federal Government is responsible when it told the companies and the Governments not to do that?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that I had to catch a plane.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: There should be no oh, ohs. I said that I was not going to review all the history since it does not resolve the problem. But it is another concern which I have. In his speech the Minister stated that we are setting up a FishCan Corporation—this is where I disagree with Mr. Kirby—because so far there is no new federal fishery policy. It is the same fish policy that got us into the problem. Does the Member believe that creating a new corporation will resolve the problem?

The fact of the matter is that one can read the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, The Globe and Mail or the speech by the Member for South Shore. With respect to the fishing quota, restrictions in the St. Lawrence, the restrictions on licenses to boats, on the size of boats, everyone in the fish trade, including Mr. Nickerson of Nickerson and Sons which went under, National Sea Foods which went under, and the three companies in Newfoundland which have closed the three plants, knew that the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans had a bias against modern fishing operations. He wanted political interference to help support his fishing communities in New Brunswick. He had archaic policies. We now have a new FishCan Corporation, and there has been no indication so far that the policy will change. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I had many other questions to ask the Hon. Member, but he is in the habit of hitting and running. I am sorry that he could not stay. I will just repeat that his assumption, like that of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) when he spoke earlier this week, that the federal Government is to blame for the demise of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada, is wrong. The policy of the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and of the federal Government before the Kirby process started was one that would not have led to the problems in the fishing industry we have seen if they had been followed by the fishing companies, the main actors in the industry, and the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. Rightly or wrongly, I cannot question the political motives of provincial Governments. I am not entitled to do that as a member of the public. If they want to pursue a certain political action, that is fine. They should bear the consequences of what they do however. The fact is that the Government of Newfoundland was in competition with the Government of Nova Scotia. When I say the Government I mean the two provincial economies which were in competition for the northern cod and for groundfish. They overfished. They overdid it. The companies did this against the advice of the former Minister of Fisheries, and they got themselves into a jam.

One cannot ignore the fact that the union which Mr. Cashin directs in Newfoundland is not only a union. I guess he would accept the definition himself that it is a social and political movement as well which had the industry on strike in 1980 or 1981. Do you expect that to be without cost? Do you expect to have a total industry in a province on strike without any cost? Are they accepting the responsibility for that? It seems to me that when you put an industry on strike you should know that there are consequences at the end, and the consequences can be bankruptcy, failure. I do not think those people have accepted that responsibility. I am not suggesting they were wrong to go on strike.

Mr. Heap: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: No, I am not. It is not for me to decide. When you go on strike and stifle an industry for about half a year, you have to accept the responsibility for what you do. They should accept the responsibility for what they did. Nevertheless, we are in this situation now.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are studying Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishing enterprises. This afternoon, I will not deal with the Bill because, in my opinion, there is no need for such a Bill, we should not have to study the Bill, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (M. De Bané) should not have had to introduce it in the House because, in the winter of 1981-82, there were ways to cope with the situation in fisheries. The problem is that, at the time, the Government decided to have the situation in fisheries reviewed by a group whose political master was not the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Normally, such issues come under the structural and political responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Government decided to involve a group which would analyze the situation and make recommendations.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the group made a very serious mistake. It made the mistake of wanting to re-invent the wheel. It made a mistake when it listened approvingly to many interested parties in Atlantic fisheries, mostly the large companies and, in certain cases, especially the Government of Nova Scotia which kept saying that everything done by the federal Governement in fisheries was bad, the kind of comments we have heard from the Official Opposition in the past two or three days. Anything done about stock management or about quota management was bad because that was interference in an industry which ought to have much more freedom. In my opinion, the Kirby Task Force naively swallowed that premise. It is partly for that reason that we are experiencing problems today, yet another analysis of the fisheries problems, an attempt at re-inventing the wheel, while we did have the statutory, legal, financial and political means to solve the problem of fisheries in 1981-82, notwithstanding the origin of the crisis.

I would rather not delve too deeply into those issues. Mr. Speaker, the problem with Bill C-170 is not the Bill itself, that is only part of a more serious and much more wide-ranging problem. I am wondering whether there is an orientation and a philosophy in the field of fisheries, or whether we are simply faced with bits and pieces produced by a committee whose approach has been to compromise with everybody. One can compromise to the point where one's statements no longer mean anything.

There is nothing wrong with seeking a consensus, but in a field such as fisheries we just cannot ignore the fact that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is the federal Department which must be most politically aware, in the sense that it reacts to the people because, through that Department—and possibly it is the only one—the federal Government is related directly to the people. There is not other level of Government. A fisherman knows that he gets his permit from the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and he knows which jurisdiction, which sectors of fisheries come under the federal or provincial constitutional authority. It is therefore a highly political field.

So, Mr. Speaker, we do need a clear orientation and philosophy in the field of fisheries. And I happen to think that until the winter of 1982, we had a coherent federal policy in the field of fisheries. However, from that time on, it was decided to follow another path. As I said earlier, it turned out to be an attempt at re-inventing the wheel and to swallow faulty premises, therefore the analyses were wrong. And yet, we could have taken a different approach instead of introducing Bill C-170 and its famous concept of restructuration.

There is one thing which must be pointed out. The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) did so this morning. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) spoke in support of the Bill and, although I disagree with some of his conclusions, as I disagree with the Bill, I find it extremely difficult to endorse the Bill. Still, in his definition of the problem, he said something which I found very interesting.

[English]

When the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) at one point said that the banks had the Government in a corner—I am paraphrasing what he said, but he said we have to do something—he was right. He defined it well. I believe that, very naively someone early in this crisis, once the Kirby process started, intentionally or unintentionally, gave signals to the banks that there was an easy way out for this, that this matter could be easily solved, that this restructuring concept could fix things. I think that was very naive. I think that is where the mistake happened.

I notice in the Minister's speech as reported at page 28850 of Hansard for November 14, that he said this:

> History will note that in the case of all those commercial undertakings which I mentioned—National Sea Products Ltd., Nickerson, Fishery Products, Penny & Sons, North Atlantic, Pêcheurs-Unis—hundreds and thousands of creditors agreed to wait and did not take any action because they knew that we were trying to find a solution.

They agreed to wait. Were they asked to wait? They must have been. Their creditors must have been asked to wait. Who asked them? Was it the political authority that asked them or was it Doctor Kirby?

Then we say that there was no private capital. There was no way for private capital to be involved in the restructuring. There was never any attempt to solve the matter through private capital. Private capital will not buy the debts of the bank. Private capital will not come to a company that is going bankrupt and say, "Hey, Sir, I am going to buy the company and take on your debts". Private capital will say, "Fine. Let the bank get a receiver, put the plant in receivership and then we will see if we will buy." Normally, I thought that was the rule of the game. The banks puts the outfit into receivership; then private capital may look at it. That is when we can ask a private entrepreneur, "Do you have a restructuring plan? What kind of assistance do you want from the Government?" Then we decide what kind of assistance to give. As soon as a signal was given that there was an easy way out or that the Government would not let the industry collapse or go bankrupt, of course the banks and others had the Government in the corner. That is a lousy way to proceed, in my view. It will be disastrous for the future, not only of the fishing industry but of other industries as well. If this Bill goes through and if the restructuring goes through, I am afraid there will be further demands for restructuring. Other banks will come around and say that in other sectors they cannot go on, that the Government cannot let them collapse.

There were ways to deal with difficult situations in the fishery before. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) were correct when they said that the federal Government could not just let the companies go bankrupt with their high inventories and that prices could have been depressed through panic sales by receivers, particularly in the United States. I agree. Anyone who knows anything about the fishery knows that there were ways to deal with it. We dealt with that in 1969 and 1974. The Fisheries Price Support Board has the legal expertise and is the financial mechanism by which to do it. I am told that all the companies had to do was sign a piece of paper. If I recall correctly how it was done, there was a confirmation by the bank that it could not hold the inventory any longer. Then the Fisheries Price Support Board could finance the inventory, provide a loan guarantee and hold it until the price was acceptable. That is the way to proceed. That is the way to ensure an inventory is not sold by a receiver in a panic situation. Why was that not done? I know that was tried before they set up this new process of reinventing the wheel. Why did they not do that? That is what they should have done.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are told—and I am quite willing to believe the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans when he says this because, even though he is sponsoring Bill C-170, he is not responsible for this situation because he did not appoint the Kirby task force, he was not the one to choose its policy or to choose or even negotiate restructuring nor was he the one to negotiate and develop the restructuring plan—but when we are told that these corporations will operate at arm's length from the Government, I am quite ready to believe it, but whether we believe it or not, or whether all the Members of the House agree, it is not important. When a bill is passed and the Government acquires equity in a company, the matter of whether or not there will be political influence is not important.

However, Mr. Speaker, only two years ago, the Government tried to transform the Canada Development Corporation into a policy instrument for Canada. I was in agreement with that philosophy and with the fact that, if the Canadian Government held 45 or 49 per cent equity in the Canada Development Corporation, the Canadian Parliament should have something to say about the policies of this corporation, but there was an outcry at this suggestion and we had to reverse our decision. If we were trying to influence this corporation, why not do the same for this other one? I do not know which minister will be responsible for the equity in these companies one, two or three years from now. It could be someone who will want to make decisions and manage the company and who will put a stop to this. Once Bill C-170 gives the power to sell or buy shares, who can stop a future minister from doing so? Mr. Speaker, there is no danger for the federal Government to be judge and party with regard to fisheries decisions in the future. One of the reasons why the federal Government earned respect in the field of fisheries in the past is that, when the constitutional jurisdiction over fisheries was put into question, the fishing communities gave us their support; it is also because the federal Government has always acted as a an objective referee between small and large companies, between various fleets and between the provinces. But the moment we are no longer considered as an objective referee, because we have shares in companies such as National Sea Products Limited and in the other company in Newfoundland, no wonder the fishing communities are getting very nervous. People are wondering how the ground fish industry is going to survive, particularly in

New Brunswick, in Prince Edward Island, in certain parts of Quebec and Nova Scotia, because not only are we going to have a giant as we had before—we are used to having giants—but now it is going to be a giant owned mostly by the federal Government and the Government of Nova Scotia. Suffice to point out that the agreement with Nova Scotia had hardly been signed that already pressure was brough to bear so that Nova Scotia companies might gain wider access to the ground fish resources in the gulf. Of course, Mr. Speaker, because we can already see a link between the political interest of the new company established for Nova Scotia and the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans, when the Minister also says that the new company will look after marketing or will offer its marketing services to the independents.

[English]

I am talking here not only about plant owners. There are hundreds of communities in Atlantic Canada which have independent processors, independently-owned fish plants. They carry with them the community—fishermen, people who service the industry and people who work in the plants. There is a community spirit behind these independents. To suggest to independent processors that the federal Government, which provides a marketing regime or structure for wheat, dairy products and milk through the Canadian Dairy Commission, and for eggs, poultry and other products, will tell them that when it comes to fish they will have to go through a super company in Nova Scotia if they need marketing assistance is really very offensive and just about an insult. That is an abdication of the federal Government's responsibility in the marketing of fish, and that should not be allowed to stand as policy.

I was hopeful Dr. Kirby would come up with a clear idea about marketing. As I just said, we have a structure in our system for wheat, milk, poultry and other products. Why can we not have it for fish? What is the ideological sclerosis that we cannot have it for fish?

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the political aspect and dimensions of that restructuration cannot be ignored. I said that it was an indication of a more serious problem, and fishing communities are wondering what is going on when all of a sudden the federal Government is concerned about saving the large companies, what is going on when the federal Government buys $14 million worth of Canada Development Corporation shares. A company cannot properly administer its own business, it reaches a point where its operations are down, practically bankrupt, yet the Canadian Government gets into the picture and buys $14 million worth of shares. I for one cannot see any logic in that, yet there is no money to give grants to fishermen to buy boats, there is no money to solve the problem created by the over capacity of herring seiners. I do not know—

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I note from the signal of the Chair that the Hon. Member's time is expiring. I am sure the House would be prepared to grant him extended time so that he can complete this most interesting speech.

• (1640)

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, whether one agrees with his views or not, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is always very charitable.

Mr. Speaker, in any case, I shall be brief. I have already said that the restructuring bill reflects a greater problem and that I wondered whether there has really been a clear strategy for fisheries since the Government decided to create the Kirby Commission. We really have to wonder whether there is a strategy. Sometimes, to be kind and not say that there is a bad one, I tell myself that maybe there is none. In my opinion, when we decided to reinvent the wheel in 1982, we may have rendered the federal Government and the federal fisheries policy completely powerless.

I have already mentioned the problem of herring seiners. There seems to be an excess capacity of herring seiners. Early in August, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced a policy stating that the solution would be to reduce the landing capacity. Leaving aside the issue of whether we agree or not, let us look at the mechanism suggested by the Minister. In my opinion, this mechanism is the most unfair that I have ever seen ever since I came to this House, a mechanism through which herring fishermen will be able to purchase the quota of another fisherman without the Government doing anything to reduce the landing capacity. Mr. Speaker, this goes against all the earlier policies developed for fisheries, which were aimed mainly at encouraging independent fishermen as much as possible; this means that a wealthy fisherman, who has already had good years in herring fishing and who has paid back the loan on his boat, will be able to purchase other quotas, while someone who came to the fishing industry a bit later, who is necessarily younger—

Mr. Cyr: During the lean years!

Mr. Breau: —during the lean years, as noted by my colleague for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr), will be able to buy what? He can buy nothing because he has no money. He owes money on his boat. He has just come into the fishing industry. He is young. He has a new boat. He has not seen the good years of herring fishing. What can he do? All he can do is to sell his quota. How can he sell his quota without selling his boat? He is stuck.

Mr. Speaker, this is the most unfair policy ever developed, but once more, I cannot say that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is wholly responsible for this concept, as once again was developed by the Kirby Commission. I wonder how someone who knew anything about the fishing industry could have developed such a concept! Here also, the Kirby report states:

There should not be any subsidies for fishing vessels. Mr. Speaker, the fishing vessel subsidy program was the means through which independent fishermen were able to acquire boats. Today, in New Brunswick, for instance, over 90 per cent of all fishing vessels are owned by individual fishermen and not by companies, thanks largely to the fishing vessel subsidy program. This year, this program has not yet been in effect.

[English]

I hope that the Government and all Members of Parliament will look very seriously at this restructuring proposal, consider the broader problems and examine very carefully what went on since January, 1982. I hope we will consider the systems put in place then to deal with this kind of problem to see why they were not used rather than invent new concepts which gave a signal to the banks that we would not let the companies go bankrupt.

In conclusion I say that I was ready to accept the idea of an abnormal approach in Newfoundland. I was ready to accept that in the case of Newfoundland because of the relative importance of the fishery to the provincial economy. I do not think the economy of Newfoundland could absord any more shocks. Broadly speaking, there was justification politically for the Government to do something abnormal in the case of Newfoundland, to look at the problem there differently. The high unemployment rate in that Province is a chronic problem. That Province is isolated geographically. Its economy depends very much on the groundfish industry in particular.

In the case of Nova Scotia, no one will convince me that there was a need for an abnormal approach to restructure, if restructuring was necessary at all in Nova Scotia, other than to be involved in a political reaction because of the fact that Newfoundland would be receiving a restructured industry. Is the only reason for a restructuring proposal for Nova Scotia, an abnormal or different approach by Government, the competition between the two provincial economies as to who will get the fish? If that is the case, the restructuring proposals for Nova Scotia do not make any sense. They are a threat to the groundfish industry all around the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the Provinces of Quebec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

As I speak today, people who own fish plants in the groundfish industry or whose plants involve an important element of groundfish are not sure whether they will have to abandon them. If that happens, the Government of Canada, along with the provincial Governments concerned, will have participated in the demise of an industry all around the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In the case of Newfoundland, that will not necessarily be the result. The threat in the Newfoundland situation is not the same as in Nova Scotia. It is not a mere coincidence that in the agreement signed with Nova Scotia there is a paragraph which deals with access to more groundfish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I believe that the new company, the federal Government and the provincial Government in Nova Scotia will try to establish a link between the federal fisheries policies and the management of this company. That is inevitable. When people assure me that that will not happen, I believe that it is not their intention, but I cannot accept that as a political answer because I do not know what the political situation will be next spring, next fall or a year from now. I do not know who the Minister will be at that time. I do not know if the link will go much further than a mere peek at what management does. It may go much beyond that. This will mean that independent processors will not be able to obtain financing. They will not be able to maintain their marketing position because of the presence of super companies owned by the Governments, and the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct one or two short questions to the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) who just made a most interesting speech. He made a number of interesting comments which will certainly have to be looked at as the debate progresses, particularly when we get to the committee stage of this Bill. He said there are other ways in this Bill to go about solving the problems of the deep sea fishery of the Atlantic Provinces. That is a rough paraphrase, but he did say that. He then went on to put all the blame on Kirby and the banks. Obviously he feels very strongly against the method the Government has adopted and he spoke most eloquently in that regard. If there are ways other than the restructuring Bill now before the House, how does he intend to vote on this Bill in its present form?

Mr. Breau: First, Mr. Speaker, when I said that there were other ways, I did mention, in the case of preventing the collapse of prices through a panic selling of inventory, that the Fisheries Price Support Board could have provided loan guarantees, as has been done previously in times of crisis to make sure that the inventory would not be sold at panic prices. That is one of the ways of dealing with the problem.

What I said in my speech, and what I do believe strongly, is that when the crisis occurred in the fall of 1981 and the early winter of 1982, but particularly in the fall of 1981, there were other ways to deal with the problem. Once the Government, either politically or through officials, or the Kirby Commission, started giving signals to the banks and everyone else concerned that the Government would not let the industry collapse or go bankrupt, then I am not sure if any approach other than this one could have been used.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, I think there was a restructuring process occurring, not only for the fishing industry but for other industries. This would occur in a case where a plant was being sold by a receiver, as occurred in my constituency in the spring of 1983. The receiver put a plant up for sale. The bank lost a good deal of its money and, as well, many people lost a good deal of money. A new group came in and said that they would like to buy this plant if the Government would give it assistance and provide the means. The Government, through the DREE Program, provided some assistance, and the plant is now in operation. That is a restructuring process but it is one that does not give off signals that everybody around the plant will be bailed out. I think that that is probably what went wrong in this situation.

The Hon. Member must be aware that according to news reports, the Canada Development Corporation has apparently sold its shares in Fisheries Products to the federal Government for $14 million. In this case, Fisheries Products in Newfoundland run their company into the ground for whatever reason and the result is that the Canada Development Corporation sells its shares in Fisheries Products to the Government for $14 million.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I am not sure that there is any other way to go about it now, but there was another way in the spring of 1982. As to the question of how I will vote on this Bill, frankly, I have not yet made up my mind. I will listen to the debate very, very carefully. I said in my speech that I found it extremely difficult to support the Bill. I will reflect and I will listen to debate, after having added my speech to the debate, before I decide how I will vote.

I must tell the Hon. Member that one of the things that concerns me is the way his Party is trying to sit on the fence on this issue. The Hon. Member has not yet spoken and he normally does not sit on the fence. I hope I hear him speak from one side of the fence only. Either Conservative Members are for this kind of intervention or they are not, because there are some powers in this Bill that go way beyond what we were doing with Canagrex, with Canadair and with other Crown agencies, and the Hon. Member's Party attacks us all the time for those. I hope that I will hear that the Hon. Member for St. John's East takes a sincere position that comes from one side of the fence or the other.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, with the kind of opposition the Hon. Member has given this Bill, he does not need any help from this side of the House.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member one question. Many of the restructured plants will require access to the Gulf in order to get at those surplus groundfish stocks. That is a question that is very dear to the heart of the Hon. Member and I have the scars to prove it. I ask the Hon. Member if he would support opening the Gulf to deep sea trawlers so that they can catch that surplus stock and not allow it to die.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, first, the wide-ranging assertion of the Hon. Member that there is a surplus of groundfish in the Gulf is wrong. There is no surplus of goundfish in the Gulf. There is a temporary surplus situation with redfish, which is a kind of groundfish, but it is only a temporary situation. I know that the Hon. Member reads biological reports very carefully, as I do. Perhaps he should have read those reports more carefully in 1979, but I know that he reads them very carefully now. He should know that this is a temporary situation and that the assertion he makes that there is a surplus of groundfish in the Gulf is simply not factual.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I have never been dogmatic on this issue. He must remember the way I approached the question in 1979. The issue here is whether or not the problem in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia with the offshore fleets is caused by a shortage of fish. That is the real question. Anyone who looks at the facts cannot honesty say that the problems are caused by a shortage of fish. Newfoundland has tripled its landings of groundfish since 1977. Nova Scotia has increased its landings of fish by over 100 per cent. New Brunswick is the only Province that has yet to recapture its fish landings from the early 1970s and the late 1960s.

The issue here is one of fairness. Do we give all of the fish to the regions—no, I will say fleets instead of regions because I do not like to talk about this situation in interprovincial terms. Do we give more fish to the fleets that have tripled their landings, or do we preserve the Gulf of St. Lawrence for those fleets that have no other place to fish, do not have the boats to go offshore and can only fish in the Gulf? I approach this issue, Mr. Speaker, from the basic position of fairness. The resources of the Gulf should be kept for those who have access only to the Gulf and do not have boats capable of going offshore. The other fleets which have tripled their landings have problems other than the problem of a shortage of fish. They should address those problems.

While I am on that topic, Mr. Speaker, let me remind Hon. Members that I said in my speech that unions have a great deal of things to say on these matters and they tend to be socio-political movements as well as unions. They should bear the responsibility for the fact that the offshore fleet is apparently not viable now. It is not making profits and it is in deficit. Apparently its way of fishing with offshore trawlers is not a good way to fish. The offshore fleet should solve the problem in ways other than asking us who have access only to the Gulf to be sacrificed in order to subsidize their non-viable operations.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), may I deal with the adjournment motion for this evening? It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Fisheries—Newfoundland representation in Cabinet. (b) Agreement between Government and Bank of Nova Scotia; the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Public Works—Leasing of Department of Veterans Affairs building; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Stabilization program sought for beef industry.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a most interesting and eloquent speech made by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). In reply to two very simple questions, he told us in one instance that he is very much opposed to this Bill, has reservations about it and is keeping an open mind on it. That means of course, when one reads through that rhetoric, that if the Bill re-emerges at third reading in its present form, he will vote against it if he is to be consistent.

Second, with regard to surplus groundfish stocks in the Gulf, the Hon. Member would have us believe that there are no surplus stocks, and that would mean that the work of our federal Fisheries Department in rebuilding these stocks over the past number of years has been a total failure. That of course is not the case and he knows that.

He also knows, better than anyone in the House, that the capacity of the Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick fleets is such that they cannot catch all of the fish in the Gulf. That is a fact. The stock has grown beyond the capacity of the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island fleets and the Hon. Member knows that. He knows that full well, and he also knows, Mr. Speaker, that these stocks, if not caught, will die. I think he also knows, because he was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries for—

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker I rise on a point of order. I have the highest respect for my predecessor as Minister of Fisheries, but may I remind the Hon. Member that we are discussing a restructuring Bill that deals with some failing companies. We are not discussing the fishing plans for the next year. That is a totally unrelated matter, and I believe he would recognize that the topic he was discussing, while most important, has no bearing upon the Bill that we are discussing.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am really and truly surprised by that intervention because the question of Gulf stocks is one that is critical to this Bill. I prefaced my remarks by saying that if some of the restructured plants are not given access to that Gulf stock, they cannot survive. That is their whole raison d'être. The plants on the south coast of Newfoundland, for example, that are very much a part of the restructured Newfoundland company, must have access to that Gulf stock if they are to survive and prosper, and the Minister knows that only too well. If he does not know that, then I would say that we are in worse shape than I thought in terms of the administration of the fisheries of this country.

I did not want to get carried away with the question of Gulf stocks, Mr. Speaker, because that is a decision the Minister will have to make. And he will have to learn to live with that politically, as I did.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I hear the laughter of the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) and the Hon. Member for Gloucester. But they cannot have their cake and eat it too, because we will be watching very carefully at third reading stage of this Bill to see if they are prepared to put their money where their mouths are. Very simply, Mr. Speaker, they cannot have it both ways.

The Hon. Member for Gloucester went out of his way in his speech to blame the banks, the Kirby task force and the unions for the mess which brought us to the point where we had to bring forth this Bill. And, of course, he blamed the provincial Governments as well. He blamed everyone but the Government, of which he was a member at one time by being Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries for two or three years.

Mr. Breau: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: I did not interrupt the Member when he was speaking, and these spurious points of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Towers): Order.

Mr. Breau: I know my hon. friend always wants to be accurate. Unfortunately, I was never the Parliamentary Secretary to any Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Towers): That is not a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: That is not a point of order. Even if I have made a mistake in that regard, he has been Parliamentary Secretary to just about every other Minister. That is perhaps the only one he has not been assigned to. In any event, if he was not the Parliamentary Secretary, it is a known fact that he was extremely close to the previous Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who comes from an adjoining constituency or from the same part of New Brunswick as the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member for Gloucester proceeded to blame everyone but the Government of Canada. The facts are very simple. When we declared our 200-mile limit in 1977 there was a great aura of expectation, and rightly so, because we were going to get control of our fisheries. There was also a great opportunity, which was missed at that time, an opportunity to put our house in order. Instead of seizing that opportunity, we went on a binge in terms of over-extending to the point at which we got ourselves in very deep trouble.

I will bring you to the point, Mr. Speaker, of the appointment of the Kirby task force, forgetting what happened in between, and the problems which plagued the industry prior to 1977 with the rape of the fishing grounds by the international fleets and the failure of ICNAF to address itself to that problem. We will skip over all that and bring ourselves to the point at which the Kirby task force was appointed by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) in January of 1982.

The plants were failing one by one during the summer of 1981. Why? They were failing and closing during the summer of 1981 because of a number of things over which this Government had some control, one being high interest rates. High interest rates of 22 per cent were coming about at a time when there was a change in the market in terms of the strengthening of the U.S. dollar, which made our European competitors more competitive. There was a change in consumer habits in the United States resulting from the fact that poultry was becoming more competitive with fish in the marketplace. All these things came together at a time when we had a monetarist policy in this country of 22 per cent interest rates. The companies could not sustain their inventories and the banks had to move in to keep those companies alive.

We made the plea during the summer of 1981. I made plea after plea in the form of telegrams to the Prime Minister and to the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to act before it was too late. But nothing was done. The result is that we are paying for it today. Nothing was done until a final realization on the part of the Government reaching right into the Prime Minister's office in the winter of 1981-82, which resulted in the appointment of the Kirby task force.

What happened then? We know what happened. The Kirby task force found itself getting in deeper and deeper, and the report was delayed to the point that when the report did come down, there was no reference made to the question of restructuring. What we have here is not what was contained in the Kirby task force report.

Notwithstanding how we got into this mess, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one thing very clear to the Hon. Member for Gloucester and to this House. This Bill is absolutely critical to the survival of the deep water fisheries in the province of Newfoundland. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. de Bané) will receive no quarrel from me on that. What I do have to argue against and warn against is the danger that this Bill may somehow be presented as a panacea, as some kind of magic wand which will solve all the problems of the deep water fishery. We have no agreement in Nova Scotia. I do not know where that will lead. However, we do have a signed agreement with Newfoundland which not only has the support of the Newfoundland Government, but has the support of the Fishermen's Union and the principal creditors. I say to you, Sir, that if the industry is to survive, then the Minister must have the authority to proceed with this Bill. That speaks to the question of urgency.

The Minister knew all this in July of this year, when he proceeded unilaterally, when he could not get an agreement with Newfoundland. He certainly knew in September, when he finally did get an agreement on September 28, that it was a matter of some urgency. He knew back in the summer of this year that he would require legislation. He was warned that legislation would be required. He could not proceed without it. This was a major departure from normal procedure. It was a major venture for the Government of Canada, and it had to have statutory authority to proceed in this way. Yet, Sir, we were not presented with the Bill until October 31, one full month after the agreement with Newfoundland. We were then told we had to move very quickly. This was a matter of great urgency.

I do not really question the urgency; however, instead of proceeding with the Bill, it was allowed to stand for a week. Finally, when the Government did decide to move with second reading of the Bill, we had one day's debate, and at the eleventh hour, without any explanation, the Government decided to proceed the next day with an Opposition day. I still do not understand why we did not continue with the debate on Monday and Tuesday. If we had done so, this Bill would now either be before the committee or back in the House for third reading. In that case the Minister would not have the problems he now has. I do not blame the Minister entirely, although one would expect he would have a little more influence on his colleague, the Government House Leader. If he was not able to exercise his influence successfully, surely he could have called on his colleague, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), who chaired the committee which brought about this whole affair in the first place. I am sure that between the two of them they could have persuaded the Government House Leader to get on with this Bill, to get on with the very urgent and important business of restructuring.

However, the Bill ignores, and the Minister deliberately ignores, some of the serious problems facing the industry, for example, fleet replacement. Who is going to pay for the replacement of the trawlers? We have 140 trawlers in the Atlantic Provinces with an average age of 14 to 15 years. Many of these trawlers are over 20 years of age. They have to be replaced with new equipment. That is a major financial undertaking. That is one of the problems which the new company will have to face, and very quickly, because that was one of the things which brought the existing companies virtually to the point of bankruptcy. They had to face up to these questions in addition to carrying the burden of debt placed on them by virtue of the high interest rate monetarist policy of the Government. Who is going to pay for these new trawlers? Is the Government going to set up a new Crown corporation to pay for and operate them and therefore totally control the harvesting sector, then, in turn, sell the catches to the giant companies? In other words, it would buy from one of its companies and sell to another one of its companies.

We are dealing with an industry directly responsible for the lives of about 70,000 or 80,000 people in the Atlantic Provinces and Quebec. It is as important to us as the Crow legislation is to western Canada. It is critically important to us in Newfoundland. Yet no reference is made to the plight of the inshore fishermen. I would have expected the Hon. Member for Gloucester to have addressed that problem. God knows, we have about 48,000 inshore fishermen in the Atlantic region if you classify them as those who operate boats under 100 feet in length. The Minister knows we have serious problems with the inshore fishery regarding income and quality control. This year the inshore fishery in many parts of the Province of Newfoundland was a failure. Yet we still do not have any policy designed to address the problems facing the inshore fishermen which will give them an income they can depend upon and the opportunity to compete and survive. The average inshore fisherman in Newfoundland earns about $8,000 a year and works very hard for it. He has to content himself with unemployment insurance to get him through the rest of the winter.

There is no question in my mind that the moment this Bill is passed, and it will pass in this form or an amended form, someone will have to face these very serious questions of fleet replacement and our inshore fishermen, because you cannot deal with one at the expense of the other. I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Gloucester. He talked about the fact there was no underlying philosophy, that the Government was responding to task force kinds of responses in a dispirited way. On that score he was dead right, because that is very much a part of the problem. The Minister knows that full well because he inherited it, just as I did during my brief tenure as Minister. But at least we made an attempt to put our House in order. One of the first things we did as a Government was to order a total review of fisheries policy to try to get around some of the mistakes of the past, to try to get some kind of philosophy so that those depending upon the industry for their livelihood would know where it was going. That would deal with the question of fleet replacement, quality control and developing new markets. It would deal with the problems in developing new species and new markets for new species, which speaks to the whole question of research and development. All of these things were tragically ignored by this Government immediately it took office because it went right back to square one.

We put in place a total review of fisheries policy, which was immediately scrapped when the Liberal Government took over in 1980. We put in place a policy for rationalizing over-the-side sales, which at that time were chaotic. Both fishermen and Canadian processors would be able to take full advantage of this new marketing technique, but that policy was immediately undone by the incoming Government. We put in place a new salmon policy which called for the building of new hatcheries to preserve the Atlantic salmon. The only part of that policy followed through successfully by the Government was the conclusion of an international convention.

We are paying for these mistakes, Mr. Speaker, and paying dearly. We will continue to pay. What we have in front of us today is a Bill which is a direct result of the knee jerk, band-aid reactions of this Government to one problem after another facing the industry. I say to the Minister that the Bill he has in front of him today is the only thing he can do right now. I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Gloucester. The Minister had no choice. There was no other way he could go, he had to save the industry. In order to do that, there had to be massive federal and provincial Government involvement as well as that of the creditors. It is all very well to dump all over the Bank of Nova Scotia, but it is going to carry its share of the new company as well. I have no grief for the bank or the other creditors, and there are other creditors, but they will have to work with the two levels of Government to ensure the viability of this company to the point where not only will they become economically viable and be able to stand on their own two feet and compete in the markets of the world, but to the point where they can be handed back to the private sector where they rightfully belong.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder how the Hon. Member for St. John's East can, on the one hand, express concern for the inshore fishery and, on the other, argue for increased access to the resources of groundfish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence by larger trawlers. Can he reconcile those two positions? I do not really think they can be reconciled.

Secondly, when he says that the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island fleets do not have the capacity to catch the groundfish in the Gulf, how does he arrive at that conclusion? Traditionally, we were fishing upwards of 60,000 tons of groundfish through the new Brunswick fleet alone.

Mr. McGrath: That can be reconciled by information which is available to anyone in this country from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. It is available to the Hon. Member. If he was open-minded enough to make the inquiries, he would get the same information I was able to get. The fact is that the Hon. Member knows full well that is a trans-boundary stock anyway. He knows there are trawlers involved in catching that stock. He also knows full well—if he does not, he should—that there are plants on the South Coast and in parts of Nova Scotia which, if they do not have access to the surplus stocks—and I say "surplus" because the inshore fishermen must have first priority—then it is very questionable in most cases whether they can be viable, and in some cases they cannot survive.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I was at one time the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans so I know a little bit about it. As he and I both realize, one of the best warehouses is the sea but once a fish is caught, if it is properly taken care of, it is one of the most nutritious and best food products man can consume. Does he not think it has been a pretty poor marketing job?

• (1720)

Mr. McGrath: I cannot agree with the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Whelan: It used to be fisheries and forestries, and then we made it the environment.

Mr. McGrath: That is right. When it became the Department of the Environment, fisheries became a mere service within the Department of the Environment. That was taking place at a critical time in the growth of the industry. That is part of the problem as well. I am glad the Minister gave me a chance to put that on the record.

He talks about the fact that the ocean is probably one of the best storage facilities for fish. The difference is that if the fish stay in the ocean, they die. If they are caught and kept in cold storage, they are there to be marketed over a period of three months. The Minister put his finger on a very important problem which is going to be one of the major problems facing the new company. If we do not get access to the European market for groundfish these companies cannot survive. The Minister knows that full well and I am glad he gave me the opportunity to put that on the record.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Environment was created when I was with the Minister of Fisheries. It was not put in force until afterwards. It did not take over fisheries. There was still the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry at that time.

We know that when you catch the fish from the sea or from fresh water it is a product that can be used in many societies all over the world. I am accused of trafficking too much of it. I find in many instances our fish does not reach those people in the condition that it should. Mr. Speaker, that is bad marketing. This is what I am pointing out. I just returned from the World Food and Agricultural Organization meeting. I chaired the meetings attended by Ministers of Agriculture and Fishery. A lot of them in the Commonwealth countries have dual capacity and authority. Fisheries was one of their main topics. They are concerned about their own fisheries and needing assistance from countries like Canada that, they feel, have the know-how in conservation and the catching of fish. We know that we can improve that in Canada. I am sure the Hon. Member agrees.

Mr. De Bané: We need a "Fishagrex".

Mr. Whelan: The Hon. Minister of Fisheries says we need a "Fishagrex". Here is a product that we need to be distributed in the world. We need it to be marketed in a fashion that it can be put on many people's dinner and supper tables in such a fashion that they can afford to eat it. I am sure that if it is improved in the fashion that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries (Mr. De Bané), wants it to be, the fisheries can become the fisheries that we want it to be, one that will be economically viable and look after itself.

Mr. McGrath: Will you repeat the question?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I understood I could either ask a question or make statements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and comments.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in support of Bill C-170 which is now before the House for second reading. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) on Monday gave Members a detailed account of the measures that the Government proposes to take under this Bill. He has described very vividly the urgency of the situation which has caused the Government to introduce it.

Given that kind of introduction to Bill C-170, I have been somewhat disappointed in these last two days of debate to see that so many Members, rather than addressing themselves to the particular circumstances that now exist that give cause for this kind of legislation or to the fact that the legislation arises out of agreements that have been or are about to be reached with provincial Governments regarding the situation in the deep sea fishery, have instead applied themselves to talking about every kind of issue now affecting the Atlantic fishery, the inshore, deep sea, industrial, harvesting, processing side.

The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) warned the Government that this Bill is not a panacea. It cannot solve all the problems. I want to inform the Hon. Member opposite that the Government has never claimed this Bill to be a panacea that will solve all the problems of the fishery. We have said instead that this Bill is designed to prevent what is clearly, and has been accepted on both sides of this House, a disaster. This point seems to have been lost as every Member seeks to raise before this House his own personal priority as far as the fishery is concerned.

I intend to stick to the subject matter at hand. The deep sea sector of the fishery is the cornerstone of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. It is a sector which had sales in 1982 of $770 million, a sector which has meant jobs for 44,000 people, 20,000 fishermen and 24,000 plant workers. I ask Members to reflect for just a moment on what 44,000 jobs mean in a region as economically depressed as Atlantic Canada. More particularly, what do those jobs mean when you break them down to a few hundred in this community and a few hundred in that community? Regionally, the rate of unemployment is 25 to 30 per cent, but on a community basis where these jobs are located unemployment is sometimes tragically at 40, 50, 60, 75 per cent. That is what we are talking about, not every side issue that may be on somebody's personal agenda to be addressed using this Bill as an excuse.

When one relates the figures to the population of Atlantic Canada one can see the significance of these activities to the economy of the Atlantic region. In relative terms, the deep sea fishery is as important to the Atlantic Provinces as the automotive industry is to central Canada. This is not an expendable industry. It is too large, too central to the life of the Atlantic region. Beyond that it is too richly endowed with potential for us to allow it to go under.

When smaller companies and industries fall by the wayside, many times the effects can be contained and corrected without too much difficulty. The price of buying them out is oftentimes low enough to be tackled by private investors with relatively small resources. If a fast food franchise goes bankrupt, the communities in which they operate can absorb the shock.

When a giant like this one stumbles, the earth begins to shake. I assure you there have been tremors in recent months in Atlantic Canada. The deep sea industry cannot be allowed to fall, because in doing so it would create havoc and chaos throughout the industry. Because of its size, because it is a giant and because of its financial situation we cannot look to private sources to put it back on its feet. The Government knows this. We have looked. The industry, and the banks in particular, know this. They have looked to no avail. That is the reason why in this instance it takes the combined efforts of provincial Governments, the federal Government, and private financial institutions to get this industry back on its feet. Quite simply it is not feasible in this case to let the companies go bankrupt and wait for some entrepreneur to come along and, at so many cents on the dollar, pick up the pieces, and perhaps only some of the pieces, while 44,000 people are displaced directly. Indirectly, many thousands more are displaced in the name of private enterprise at any cost. I believe in private enterprise but not at any cost.

Let me give Hon. Members an example of the burden we are talking about. It has been estimated by financial analyses that the two consolidated companies visualized under this Bill will have to generate capital expenditures in the order of a quarter of a billion dollars each over the next five years. That is what they need for fleet replacement, maintenance of their plant capital, for new equipment to improve their productivity and other purposes. These are the kinds of obligations private investors, if you can find them, would be facing. Given the current condition of the industry, one cannot be surprised that investors are not lining up for the opportunity to shoulder them. If this lack of investment appeal were likely to be a permanent condition, we would face a much different situation. We in the House would probably be considering some very different action. But the evidence tells us that the condition is not permanent. There are solid reasons for long-term optimism.

There are many reasons why the deep sea fishing industry is in trouble. Inherent weakness and inadequate potential are certainly not among them. I am not one of those, as I have seen to my disappointment Hon. Members opposite do, to stand in the House and suggest that somehow all the problems in the current crisis that besets the Atlantic fishery can be written down in ten easy explanations and attributed to the policy of a single government. Anyone who really knows anything about the Atlantic fishery and who is really interested in making some helpful observations in the House will say that it is one of the most complex problems because of its socio-economic nature—I emphasize socio-economic nature—and one of the most complex industries that exists in this country.

The jurisdiction in the fisheries is shared. It is provincial Governments, not the federal Government, that control licences. It is provincial Governments that say how many fish plants there should be, where they should be, how big they should be and what they should process. It is not the federal Government. If one wanted to be strictly technical and was more interested in jurisdiction than in responding to a very real problem affecting human beings, we would say as federal Members that, if it is not under our jurisdiction, then let us toss this Bill aside, not discuss the problem and let the Provinces handle it. That is where negotiations began at the table. There were the Provinces, the industry itself, the banks and the federal Government. Only one player reached into his pocket to put money on the table. It was the federal Government. Why? Because we wanted to spend $200 million or more of taxpayers' money? Because we wanted to get into the business of processing fish because we believed we could do it better than the private sector, the Provinces or the banks? No. Quite frankly, if we were to list 100 activities in which we would want to become involved, the processing and fishery business would not even be on that list. But we are interested in people, and that is why this Bill is before the House and that is why it needs an urgent and quick passage.

Let us address ourselves to the Bill. What are the consequences of not proceeding with this legislation on an urgent basis? We will see continuing uncertainty in the Atlantic fishing industry and in the communities which, as I have tried to describe, are so vitally dependent on it. We will see a continuation of existing plant closures and possibly further closures and lay-offs. I believe we will see distress selling by companies facing financial difficulty, with serious consequences for independent producers who have managed so far to keep afloat. What does distress selling mean? It means that there are a handful of corporate giants that are in serious financial trouble and are technically bankrupt in many cases. If we do not provide an infusion—not a bail-out of cash—by way of equity, those giants who are in trouble will find it easy to take all of the fish that they have warehoused and dump it on the market at drastically reduced prices, driving those small independent private enterpreneurs, who have survived and made a dollar, into bankruptcy together with them. They will not be able to compete, and that would be a consequence of not moving with this Bill.

We would see increased difficulties for creditors. There are many small companies throughout Atlantic Canada that are owed millions of dollars in total. Those dollars will not be paid, driving yet many doezens of other small companies into bankruptcy.

Labour contracts are currently expiring. These can be renegotiated only after new management is put into place.

The independents have been expressing a great deal of concern about the notion of having a couple of super companies in which the Governments have equity. I want to say that I have a great deal of sympathy for those independent producers and small operations which have managed to survive the rough times and still make a dollar. They have every right and should be concerned, and I understand that. I do not say that their concerns are justified or that I believe for one second that the consequences they envisage will occur. However, I do have some sympathy, because anyone who has been able to survive the last three years in this industry only to see now a couple of large companies being created which they believe threatens their existence, has every right to be concerned.

However, I suggest that the removal of a major uncertainty facing the entire industry will have a positive effect on the independents. If the Governments had not acted to forestall the collapse of the large processors, the entire industry, including independent processors, would have been threatened with collapse.

The restructuring focuses on the restructuring of strategically important companies whose size and socio-economic importance are of industry-wide importance. The restructured companies will provide an urgently required stability that will be beneficial to the entire industry, including the independents. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has said in the House and elsewhere in Canada during the last few months that these large processing giants will not be allowed and will in fact be specifically instructed against taking any action that will have a negative impact on small independent processors.

Many Members opposite, as well as some on this side, have suggested that this Bill is in some way a bail-out of the Bank of Nova Scotia. The Bank of Nova Scotia has not been bailed out nor given preferential financial treatment. The bank still has substantial outstanding loans made to the companies concerned with restructuring and has agreed to convert a major portion of that debt to equity. It is not walking away from the table. It has very much a stake in ensuring that this restructuring works because it still has a substantial amount of capital tied up in the two companies that have been created.

I was pleased to see the Hon. Member for St. John's East stand in his place today and indicate that there is absolutely nothing more urgent before Members of the House than Bill C-170. The Hon. Member indicated that quick passage is essential to the economy of Newfoundland and indeed to the economy of Nova Scotia. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) spoke eloquently in presenting his views from where he sits and as he sees them. I was pleased to see that he so well recognizes the urgency of this Bill, fundamentally to deal with the problem as it exists today.

I am not going to debate how we got where we are today. The Hon. Member for St. John's East said, "We are where we are today because the federal Government has mismanaged the industry, but when I was Minister and my Government was in power we had taken bold new strides". But Mr. Peckford, I recall, during the 1980 election campaign said that he preferred the former Minister, who supposedly created all these problems, to the Hon. Member for St. John's East. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that both the Hon. Member for St. John's East and Mr. Peckford are members of the same Party. I recall campaigning in my riding and, to my delight, saying "Yes, I agree with Mr. Peckford. Let us get Roméo LeBlanc back on stream." It is not good enough to say simplistically that the problems have been caused by one administration. No one administration, no one level of Government, even if it wanted, can cope with the complexity of the Atlantic industry. That is why I say to Hon. Members that this Bill is not a panacea. This Bill does not pretend for a moment to deal with or attempt to resolve every problem, every item that needs to be debated. This Bill, only as a first step, will ensure that the deep sea industry does not collapse. This Bill will ensure that the capital required for equity taken by Governments to maintain that industry, to renew it, to retool it, is available. It will ensure proper management and a businesslike approach. Then, in a number of years we can divest ourselves as Governments of these companies and turn them back to the private sector, back to private investors and risk takers who are prepared to run a profitable organization. That is what this Bill does, I say again, not because we want to be here but because we have no other choice. And if we had any concern for the 44,000 people in Atlantic Canada who, believe me, if they knew and were aware this debate were taking place would listen with bated breath, with patience, and would pray that this House of Commons will move quickly to see this Bill pass second reading, go to committee and finally go through this House and to the Senate, and that is what we should do.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-155, an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which reads as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

November 17, 1983

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Brian Dickson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 17th day of November, 1982, at 5:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. We have not even formed a new company to save the Atlantic fishing industry and already the Parliamentary Secretary is talking about divesting the Government of ownership in that company. In view of the problems that communities such as Burin, Grand Bank, St. Lawrence and St. Anthony have had under private ownership, I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary may not fear, if this is turned back to private enterprise, that those same communities that were in fear of closing down permanently would not be in the same situation in the future? Would the Parliamentary Secretary answer the question about the community ownership and co-operatives in communities rather than turning them strictly back to free enterprise? Would the Parliamentary Secretary consider that an alternative to his haste to get rid of this company and put it back into private enterprise hands?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, to respond to the Hon. Member opposite, I want to assure him that the reason for my remarks was not to indicate that we should try to pass the Bill today and sell the companies tomorrow, but rather to point out that the Government really has, as a first motive, no interest in being in the fish business for the sake of being in the fish business. The Government really has as a first motive no desire to say that we own X amount of equity in the fishing industry. The Government only has as a motive a social responsibility, a responsibility as an elected Government to respond to a very real need that affects a great number of people in Atlantic Canada.

I want to say to the Hon. Member that to suggest that somehow when private capital is involved we run the risk of closures and people being negatively affected is really a philosophical question that we can address to any industry in Canada. The Hon. Member knows that his Party's position is one of public ownership wherever possible. I do not happen to share that view. My own view is that the private sector can do it best and can generate the greatest amount of wealth but that people sometimes fall between the cracks. That is where Government should be and that is where Government should step in, otherwise Government should not be there. This is an example. If you want to call it a crack, it is almost like the San Francisco fault line. But there is a heck of a big crack. Private capital is not available right now. We should move in but move in very clearly with the idea of running this company on a businesslike basis. That is why we said that if the company, if its board of directors, said if X or Y or B or C plant is not viable and it will close down, and if a Government wants that particular plant to stay open, then it is the Government, not the company, that will pay the cost of keeping an unproductive plant open. I simply suggest that it be run on a businesslike basis and that when possible the Governments divest themselves of their equity position in these companies.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments to address to the Parliamentary Secretary. First, I can appreciate the importance of the Atlantic fishery. The fishermen, I am sure, have been under a lot of hardship lately. I fully intend to support this piece of legislation although I might not agree 100 per cent with all that has been said this afternoon. But in listening to the speeches that have been made today I have a little better understanding of what has been happening in the Atlantic fishery.

I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that during his speech he said that the fishery in Atlantic Canada was just as important as the automotive industry is in central Canada. I would like to extend that a little further by saying that the Crow rate was that important to the farmers of western Canada as well. I would have hoped that some of the Members would have given consideration to that at the time the same way as some Members in the New Democratic Party are now paying attention to this piece of legislation, and we will be giving some support to it.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I have been dealing with the Minister's office for some time trying to get resolved a fishing problem in my own constituency which has a freshwater fish industry. I can appreciate that the Minister has had a lot of his own personal time taken up with dealing with this piece of legislation and the larger fishing industries in Canada. I would like to see, as soon as this Bill is passed, the Parliamentary Secretary, if the Minister cannot find the time, join with me and some other Members in taking a very close look at the freshwater fishing industry which is getting into severe problems in places like northern Saskatchewan.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's comments, I want to assure him that the Department, indeed, the Government, recognizes the great value, the activity that takes place in the freshwater fishery. I avail myself in my position as Parliamentary Secretary of the opportunity to travel west and to see firsthand some of the activities in western Canada. I can assure him that if I can be of any assistance to him in resolving problems he is experiencing, on behalf of the Minister I would be delighted to do so. I would be glad to sit down at any time with him, as would the Minister, I am sure, or his officials to discuss with the Hon. Member any problems he would like to bring to our attention.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to a problem which may or may not be ahead. Perhaps he could reconcile the difficulties we will have when consideration of Bill S-31 has been completed. As the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will know, this Bill will restrict or limit provincial participation in transportation to 10 per cent. In other words, it will put very severe limitations on a provincial Government or an agency of a provincial Government to buy up more than 10 per cent of a corporation, particularly if it is directly involved in transportation or that transportation is the major sector of it. It seems that the provincial involvement under the agreement between the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador and the federal Government will be extended to more than the 10 per cent interest in the restructured product. How will that square with the content of Bill S-31, the measure now before the Senate?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and his question. It gives me an opportunity to make a very important point which I attempted to make during my speech. My throat was becoming a little raw; perhaps the House could not understand what I was saying. The interesting thing about this particular Bill and the circumstances—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. colleague; I know the Messenger from the Senate is on his way. However, I need to put on the record an agreement which has been reached with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon. Before I reached the agreement with the Hon. Member for Yukon, I spoke with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party.

Therefore, I can state that we have reached an agreement, although I do not need an agreement, to undesignate next Thursday as the last allotted day of this supply period. Instead, I will designate the following Monday, November 28, as the last allotted day of this supply period.

In so doing, we have agreed that the Supplementary Estimates will be deemed to have been reported on Friday, November 25, at five o'clock. Notwithstanding the disposition of Standing Order 62(15) which indicates that the Supplementary Estimates are deemed to have been reported on the third day before the last allotted day, the agreement is that the Supplementary Estimates will be deemed to have been reported on Friday, November 25, at five o'clock and that the last allotted day will be Monday, November 28. That is the agreement between the two of us and, as I indicated, I talked with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. He told me—and I want it on the record—that he was prepared to accept that kind of agreement. I did not indicate the specifics to him, but it is within our understanding of the subject we were discussing. In other words, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain knows that I was to undesignate Thursday, possibly, and to push it a little further ahead to allow more time for the committees to study the Supplementary Estimates. Since this agreement produces exactly that result, I can say that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is in agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, it should be pointed out that I alerted him earlier in the day that the committees had not had the opportunity to examine Supplementary Estimates (B) and that the result of the designation of the allotted days made by the Government House Leader today meant that Parliament would not have the opportunity to examine Supplementary Estimates (B). He indicated that any arrangement made between myself and the Government House Leader which would enable such an examination would be acceptable.

For the sake of clarity, it should be understood that the votes which will now occur on November 28, the final allotted day, will be those votes which would normally dispose of the Estimates, the appropriation legislation and the like. In other words, the votes would all be on the Monday now rather than on the Thursday.

Mr. Huntington: Could we not make it on the Tuesday?

Mr. Forrestall: Some of our Members will be away.

Mr. Nielsen: A further problem has just been drawn to my attention. I do not think it would inconvenience the House to put the vote over to sometime on Tuesday from the Monday at six o'clock. It would just be the vote. It would not be taking up any House time except the time it would take to vote.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, this is a slight change in the agreement we have reached. I prefer that we stick to the agreement as we made it. However, I will be very openminded in having a further discussion about the possibility of postponing the votes to sometime early the following day. For the time being, failing a firm agreement, we will stick to the provisions of Standing Order 62(10).

Mr. Nielsen: That sounds eminently sensible. The factor of which I was not aware when we had our discussions was a commitment that will keep many of our Members in British Columbia. They will not be able to return until late in the day on Tuesday. I do not think that will cause any inconvenience, but I am sure we can overcome it by agreement.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it seems that we are carrying on a somewhat unusual procedure at this time. I most certainly accept the word of the Government House Leader and agree to the arrangement. However, if there are any other changes, we certainly hope that our House Leader will be consulted.

Mr. Pinard: Sure.

Mr. Nielsen: He was consulted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—NEWFOUNDLAND REPRESENTATION IN CABINET. (B) AGREEMENT BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on September 12, I again had the unfortunate experience of addressing a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It was, of course, a complete waste of time. I do not know where his mind is but it is not with us here in the House of Commons. Today he is riding his umbrella pursuing the peace cause around the world and we wish him well at that. We wish him more success at that than he has had with our domestic concerns here in Canada.

I asked the Prime Minister, in the context of the economic crisis in Newfoundland with 43,000 Newfoundlanders unemployed or 19 per cent of the labour force, what steps he was going to take in connection with the fishing industry. Of course, he has taken no steps. I asked him whether we will have a representative on the Cabinet from Newfoundland. I asked him if he would appoint to the executive council a Member from Newfoundland. There are seven of us here in the House. I am prepared, if necessary, to make the sacrifice in order to help the people of Newfoundland. In any event, there are five Liberal Members and two Progressive Conservative Members elected to the House from Newfoundland. When the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) formed his administration, both Conservative Members from Newfoundland were Members of the Cabinet. That is the kind of representation that Newfoundland then had in the House.

Today there is no representative from Newfoundland in the Cabinet of Canada and one of the Liberal backbenchers, the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Rooney), says that Newfoundland is actually doing much better without a Cabinet representative than it was doing when the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was a Cabinet Minister. Now there is solidarity for you.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, there is opposite me today a young Hon. Member who might well, in 50 years or 60 years time, have sufficient experience and calibre to be a member of the Government of Canada and in the Cabinet.

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that we do not now have a representative from Newfoundland in the Government of Canada, nor will we, and we are suffering as a result of it. There are five representatives from Newfoundland here and the Prime Minister has turned his back on all five. Like the witches in Macbeth, the Prime Minister has had a look at them and does not like the looks of any of them. He dismissed the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador from his Cabinet. He found him not to be of sufficient calibre to be in his Cabinet. The Prime Minister has found no replacement since he appointed, for the ten days that shook the world, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). He has found, since then, that the other three are not desirable, either; not of sufficient quality to be in his Cabinet. Imagine, not one of the five Liberal Members in this House from Newfoundland could even be Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. Not one of them is fit to be Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, not to mention "le ministre des pêches". Not one of them is suited to be Minister of Fisheries. Not one of them, apparently, is suited to be Minister of Mines. Not one of them could bear the responsibilities of being a minister without portfolio. The Prime Minister will not even give one of them a portfolio. He will not give them nothing; no way. And the people of Newfoundland are suffering as a result.

We see that today, when we notice facts like these. In constant dollar terms, DREE expenditures in the Atlantic region fell by 41.4 per cent from 1970-71 to 1977-78, while elsewhere in Canada DREE spending rose 5.9 per cent. That is complete political prostitution of the whole program to overcome regional disparity. For the Atlantic provinces which suffer from that regional disparity, spending has fallen 41 per cent, while elsewhere in Canada, in Quebec and other politically important areas, the spending has gone up 5.9 per cent. We need a Cabinet Minister from Newfoundland to stop that kind of discrimination, that kind of twisting of the DREE program for political purposes.

Is the Prime Minister going to appoint a Cabinet Minister from Newfoundland? Are we all waiting with bated breath to see what happens in a certain court case—which shall be nameless—on December 2? Is there not one of the other three Hon. Members who has the pristine purity to be appointed to the Cabinet now? What is to happen if the results in early December are not as the Prime Minister would like them to be? Are we to continue for the next year or year and a half without a Cabinet representative from Newfoundland?

Why is it, for example, the International Centre for Ocean Development was just established in Halifax rather than in St. John's, which is the natural home for it? St. John's is the whole centre of the North Atlantic, and the most suitable area, with the best facilities for an International Centre for Ocean Development. But instead of that, it now resides in Halifax.

Nova Scotia has two Ministers in the Government. One of them is at present hopping with the kangaroos in Australia, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). The other is in the House here, but we cannot understand what he is saying in any event. He is a bafflegabber. However, he has a lot of respect, apparently, and power within the Government. Nova Scotia has two Ministers; Newfoundland has none. When are the backbenchers on the Liberal side going to rise up against this and persuade the Prime Minister that he should stay at home, look after the backyard and see that Newfoundland gets some kind of equal and fair treatment in this House? When will the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), a young man with his future still very much in his past, put a stop to the way the Prime Minister is treating the Province of Newfoundland? When is he going to tell the Prime Minister to stay home and bring peace to Canada before he attempts to bring it to the rest of the world? When is he going to make an effort to solve our domestic problems here in Canada? We have unemployment at 19 per cent and the Prime Minister is going to spend all his time in the next three weeks in Bangladesh and Southeast Asia dealing with the problems of the Commonwealth and the world. Soon he will be dealing with the problems of the universe. There is no problem he cannot deal with, as long as it lies in the ethereal realm outside Canada, outside the real world and outside of helping the real people. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister or his assistant to appoint a Minister from Newfoundland quickly and do something to help with the desperate situation in that Province.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I must say it is with a great deal of sadness and disappointment that I stand here. I understood this time of the day was to provide more in depth and detailed information to Members who are seriously interested in the business of this nation. So I did a great deal of research and prepared quite an answer on the fishery. But I should not have been surprised because the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), if nothing else, is consistent. An unguided missile! Not only do we not know where his tongue will lead him when he begins to talk, he does not know.

That has been the story of his life, Mr. Speaker. I remember when I was a great fan of the Hon. Member opposite when he was a Liberal—yes, a Liberal! Not only was he a Liberal, but a young Liberal. I remember when he was not only a young Liberal, but a young Liberal for new leadership. Now he tells me that an old, distinguished and experienced fellow like myself has my future behind me. He is not to be taken seriously, Mr. Speaker. I have visions of the future and I want to assure him, when he talks about Cabinet representation, that I remember we had two Ministers, the ministers of fish and chips; very dignified fellows. They performed so magnificently for seven months—

Mr. Crosbie: The golden days.

Mr. Tobin: —that in the subsequent election the people of Newfoundland returned five Liberals, including yours truly, out of seven seats. That was the response to your performance.

Mr. Crosbie: They will not repeat that mistake.

Mr. Tobin: When he talks about how Newfoundland is being represented, I want to assure him that if the people of St. John's West are unhappy with their representation, or if the people of St. John's East are unhappy with their representation, there is a Newfoundland beyond the city boundaries of St. John's. There is a wider Newfoundland. There is Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe; Burin-St. George's; Bonavista-Trinity-Conception; Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador where people returned five Liberals to contribute to this majority Government in 1980, much to his dismay, Mr. Speaker. Get ready for a repeat, John. Your ability to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory is renowned. You are consistent, we are going to do it again.

So with great disappointment Mr. Speaker, I answer this question with all the seriousness and intelligence of the manner in which it was asked. I would have preferred a much more sober performance.

PUBLIC WORKS—LEASING OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS BUILDING

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I find that a hard act to follow, particularly that of the young man who claims he has visions.

I wish to extract some information from the Government on the subject of the lease arrangement for the new DVA Building in Charlottetown. On November 4 I posed a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) on the subject. He was unable to respond at the time but assured me he would look into the matter and write to me directly. To date the Minister has not done so. Perhaps this debate will elicit some response to my original question, which was:

Can the Minister indicate to the House the cost of leasing the DVA Building from Rampart Enterprises during the term of the lease which is, I understand, for 35 years?

I also requested that the Minister table in the House the leasing agreement. Since then I have tabled a notice of motion demanding that these papers be tabled.

● (1820)

The saga of the DVA building in Charlottetown is a long one and it seems to be getting longer. A claim was made by this Liberal Government when it decided in 1980 to move the building to a site in downtown Charlottetown from the shoreline site which had been chosen by the Conservatives that construction would be faster downtown. The Minister of Veterans Affairs at that time said that the building would be completed by the end of 1983. The building is now supposed to be ready by the Spring of 1984.

The construction of that building was supposed to follow one pattern, but has followed quite a different one. It was supposed to be completed in two phases. Phase one was the foundation and superstructure of the building. It was to be constructed for the Department of Public Works through tendered bids. The cost of that phase was $2.8 million and was completed in December of 1981.

Phase two took off in a different direction and tenders were let for the completion of the building by a developer who would construct and own the building and lease it back to the federal Government. This is a very strange way for the Department of Public Works to go about constructing government buildings. Rampart Enterprises of Toronto received the contract to complete the building. Under this arrangement Rampart is given title to the building and Public Works leases it for use by the Veterans Affairs Department over a term of some 35 years. The federal Government also has the opportunity of purchasing the building from the developer at some point during or at the end of the lease.

Some clarification is needed on a number of points of this agreement. What are the exact terms of the lease to purchase contracts? What is the annual cost of the lease? How much will the Government have paid by the time it purchases the building? All this information should be made available to the House of Commons as soon as possible.

When the Supplementary Estimates came out a few days ago I had hopes that we would be able to extract this information from either the Department of Veterans Affairs or Public Works during the committee meetings on those Supplementary Estimates. I have yet to hear from the Chairman of that committee, the Hon. Member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), who I thought would be in touch with me by now to see when we could arrange to have the committee meetings of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

I hope that the Minister's representative will tonight be able to answer some of these questions. If he is not, I hope that he will urge his Minister to reply to me as he promised to do in the House of Commons on the November 4, providing me with the details of the very unusual method that has been set in motion to construct the DVA building in Charlottetown.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to answer the question put by the Hon. Member to the Minister responsible for Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) on November 4 of this year, concerning the cost of leasing the DVA Building located in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and owned by Rampart Enterprises.

It is important to remember the facts. On April 25, 1982, the Minister of Veterans Affairs announced that a new building intended to house the central administration services of the Department would be built on property belonging to the Canadian Government and located on the corner of Kent and Grafton in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. In December 1981, the first stage of the project, which consisted in the construction of foundations and the concrete structure, was finished as a project carried out by the Crown.

In April 1982, Public Works Canada proceeded to let tenders for the construction of the rest of the building, according to the lease-to-purchase formula. So that the Department could assess all tenders on the same basis, bidders were asked to tender their bids on the basis of a 17 per cent interest rate for financing.

Among the five builders who tendered bids, Rampart Enterprises made the lowest offer. With a financing rate of 17 per cent, Rampart's bid worked out to $191 per square meter for the first five years of the 35-year lease. These figures will be adjusted when the building is completed, taking into consideration the current Government of Canada rate for five to ten-year bonds.

Mr. Speaker, the building is expected to be completed and ready to receive its occupants by the beginning of 1984. Since interest rates have dropped considerably since tenders were let, it is now estimated that the annual rent over the first five-year period of the lease will be $150 per square meter. As for the rest of the lease, the annual rent will be adjusted upwards or downwards, depending on financing costs for each subsequent period.

Mr. Speaker, regarding the last part of the Hon. Member's question, I can inform him that the Department would be glad to table in the House the complete leasing agreement between the Crown and Rampart Enterprises or to make a copy of it available to interested Members.

AGRICULTURE—STABILIZATION PROGRAM SOUGHT FOR BEEF INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this evening I want to talk about a beef stabilization program for Canada. On September 15, 1983, I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) asking him what progress was being made by the Department of Agriculture in the negotiations with the provincial Governments to establish a red meat stabilization program which would cover not only beef but pork as well. I understand that some progress has been made on this in the last few weeks but I would like to urge upon the Minister and the Department of Agriculture the importance of the red meat industry to the rural parts of our country.

During the past two years there has been essentially no increase in the price of beef cattle for the cow-calf operators, many of whom are in the Algoma and Manitoulin area and produce a significant percentage of the production in the Ontario region.

I want to quote briefly from a letter I received from Mr. Allen McKenzie, a beef producer in my constituency, from Tehkummah, Ontario. He says:

> I am writing about our concerns of the farming industry in Ontario particularly the cow-calf farmer of which we are one.
> I believe Ontario is the only Province without a program to subsidize the cow-calf man and it is here where the cattle industry all starts. Without us, there are no feeder cattle. What happens if we all go out of business because of low prices? One very startling fact is this: in 1973 we received an average price for our calves of 65 cents per pound.
> In 1983—ten years later—we received an average price of 75 cents per pound. Can you imagine a 10-cent per pound increase in ten years? You figure the percentage increase in our income for this period and then think of the percentage increase of all our feed, seed and machinery which we have to purchase and tell me how a farmer is to keep going.
> What percentage of increased income do most Canadians receive in one year? I'll tell you it is more than the one per cent that we have got for the last ten years.

I should point out that he has a herd of 35 stock cows, and the average increase in income over that ten-year period has only been $245 per year gross.

He concludes:

> Do you not feel from this example that something needs to be done now? We sure do. We must remember that the cattle industry starts with us and without us where would we be. Thank you for your time.

I sent a copy of that letter to the Minister of Agriculture in order to make him aware of the desperate plight that faces much of rural Canada, especially those parts of our country which depend on the beef industry.

As I pointed out earlier, the actual returns are something like 25 per cent or 30 per cent less now than they were four years ago and, as Mr. McKenzie points out in his letter, there has been barely a ten-cent per pound increase average for cow-calf operators during the past ten-year period.

As an indication of that plight I think we only have to look at the general downgrading that has taken place in rural parts of our country that depend on the beef industry. There are other sectors like the dairy industry and so on which have administered prices, or prices established by a formula, that are relatively more successful. But clearly for the beef industry some stabilization, some marketing program has to be put in place. I understand that the Ministers of at least four provinces met this year during July, August and October—I believe they met even more recently—and are in agreement at this stage, but that a final decision and agreement has not been reached.

I would like to urge upon the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary the importance of making a tripartite agreement very soon. I understand a tripartite agreement is what is being considered among the beef producers, the producing provinces and the federal Government. I think it is significant, as I understand the negotiations to date, that the four Provinces which have shown an interest in participating in the tripartite agreement represent over 80 per cent of the beef production in Canada.

If we look at the dairy industry we find stabilization payments of over $300 million. If we look at crop insurance, we find stabilization of $145 million. If we look at other forms of stabilization provided, for instance, in the grain industry, we find $140 million. In the federal budget there is $1.292 million for the entire budget of the Department of Agriculture, $682 million of which is for stabilization programs.

We are not just talking about assisting a few beef producers, we are talking about a large number of people. We are talking about that important sector of agriculture which really forms the backbone of many of our agricultural communities. I want to urge upon the Minister of Agriculture and his provincial colleagues, of which the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario is one, the urgency of establishing a stabilization program that is fair to the country, and fair to these valuable producers so that they may continue to operate in Canada and produce this valuable food for the consumers.

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) I would like to respond to the question raised by the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on the progress being made toward a new red meat stabilization program for beef producers.

By way of background, the Ministers of Agriculture from four Provinces, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, agreed on the general principles of a new stabilization program at the time of the federal-provincial Ministers meeting in Prince Edward Island in June. A task force was established, including representatives from these four Provinces and the federal Department of Agriculture.

After a series of meetings, a draft plan was established for cow-calf producers, slaughter cattle, hogs and lamb. On October 31, the federal Minister of Agriculture chaired a meeting in Ottawa, at which time three of the Provinces agreed to the principle features of these plans. The Manitoba Minister of Agriculture did not attend that meeting, but indicated it was because of a prior personal commitment and not because he was no longer in support of a national program.

The Provinces that have agreed account for the majority of red meat production in Canada, and consultations are proceeding on the basis of the October 31 agreement.

The Governments involved have decided not to release the details of the plans at this time because they are changing as consultations proceed. Yesterday, representatives from the four Provinces and the federal Government discussed the proposed beef plans with the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. This morning they met with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. This afternoon they met with the Canadian Pork Council. Tonight they are meeting with the Canadian Sheep Council.

In addition, arrangements are being made for meetings with the provinces that have not yet agreed to the principles of the new red meat stabilization program. If all goes well in these consultations the new, improved program could be in place by 1984.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock.

At 6.36 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PAKISTAN—PLEA FOR RELEASE OF TARIQ AHSAN, IMPRISONED UNIVERSITY STUDENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, two years ago a Carleton University Ph.D. student, Tariq Ahsan, was arrested and jailed in Pakistan for political reasons, on a trumped-up charge of possessing seditious material. After 17 months of imprisonment, Mr. Ahsan finally came to trial in April of this year. He was sentenced just last week to two years' hard labour, a sentence to begin at the trial, not even at the beginning of his imprisonment. Mr. Ahsan's physical condition was poor when he left Canada two years ago, and according to his family has worsened considerably while in prison. A sentence of two years' hard labour may be a death sentence for Mr. Ahsan.

Mr. Ahsan's teaching assistantship position is being held open for him at Carleton University, as well as additional scholarship funds. His colleagues in the political science department are anxious for his safe return to Canada.

This imprisonment constitutes a serious infringement on the most fundamental of civil liberties, and Members of all Parties and all levels of Government have already made their views known to the Government of Pakistan. Were Mr. Ahsan a Canadian citizen we could do more for him. What we can do, and what I urge all Members of this House to do, is to write to the Government of Pakistan and the Ambassador for Pakistan, appealing for Mr. Ahsan's release so he may return to Canada and continue his studies.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CLOSING OF RADIO READING SERVICE IN ONTARIO

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Special Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped I was shocked to learn recently that the Oakville-based radio reading service, which provided reading service for an estimated 3,000 blind and visually impaired persons, was forced off the air because of the provincial Government's refusal to provide any further funding for the service.

The station, which used voluntary readers to broadcast verbatim in-depth accounts from newspapers and other readings, was itself a newspaper to the blind. Its broadcast area extended through the Golden Horseshoe, Scarborough, Guelph, and Kitchener, and as far away as Simcoe. Last year the station had its operation cut back from seven days to five days in an effort to extend its limited budget. However, this did little to ameliorate the problem of inadequate funding.

It is important that the federal Minister of State (Mr. Joyal) responsible for the status of the disabled meet his provincial counterpart to inquire into this matter and recommend that careful consideration be given to reinstating the radio reading service so that the visually handicapped persons who were able to take advantage of it can continue to function in a more complete way.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTING OF INCIDENTS IN OKANAGAN-SIMILKAMEEN AREA OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, the CBC, in its program "The Journal", reported in a most irresponsible and inflammatory manner on a subject which deserves to be treated with sensitivity and understanding. People in the Okanagan-Similkameen area of British Columbia are incensed by the airing of unworthy statements which allege that they have a bad racist attitude, intolerance is institutionalized, that they practise harassment of minority groups such as Doukhobors, Chinese, Japanese, and now Québécois, and that there is a hard core of really bigoted people in the area. I say shame to the CBC for a distorted sensationalization of a lamentable situation where tensions have arisen in certain communities between farm workers from Quebec and a minor provocative element, some of whom are also transient to the area.

• (1110)

The CBC highlighted untruths, and generalizations such as "Orchard workers are classed as no good", and "People think that transient workers are simply a bunch of dirty hippies", the inference that the rape of two girls from Quebec was racially motivated, and the implication that people who resent the action of one who urinated openly on a Main Street store front are displaying racial intolerance. The CBC's mandate is to be a national instrument dedicated to unity and reconciliation.

The CBC contributes nothing by engaging in such objectionable programming.

THE CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—LEGAL EXPENSES OF COURT SYSTEM VICTIM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Munro) are now saying that they cannot provide funds to cover the legal costs of Donald Marshall. Ministers of the Crown stand helpless in the face of a gross injustice done to a fellow Canadian.

Mr. Marshall spent 11 years in prison for a crime he did not commit. Whether or not this comes under provincial or federal jurisdiction becomes irrelevant in light of his unjust suffering. Mr. Marshall's punishment for a crime he did not commit is a stain on Canada's entire justice system. It is something about which all Canadians should feel ashamed.

Considering other cases, such as that of Susan Nelles, the subject of general compensation for victims of faulty court proceedings would make a good subject for this House to consider.

Mr. Marshall faces more than $80,000 in legal expenses. The Government does not need to be helpless. It can bring in a Bill to pay these costs. My Party promises to deal with any such Bill expeditiously. I am sure the Conservatives would also want to pass such a Bill with a minimum of debate. I urge the Government to take action and not to stand by helplessly in the face of injustice.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN MEMORANDUM

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of countless requests which have been made to this House by the Official Opposition, I would ask for the tabling of a remarkable leaked document. The document is referred to in detail in a fascinating book called "The Contenders". The book is a modern day version of Julius Ceasar, recounting how the Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), in the role of Brutus, betrayed his leader on the way to the forum in Ottawa. The book reprints a confidential memo allegedly written to the Leader of the Opposition by one of his then key campaign officials, John Thompson. The memo tells the Tory Leader just how he is perceived by the delegates and members of the public generally. This is what the memo says, and these are direct quotes:

> Your image is fuzzy and people are scared of your candidacy because . . . they are scared off by your organization and they don't trust you . . . people perceive you to be both left and right—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some question about the validity of this.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—REPORTED OFFER OF PROSECUTION IMMUNITY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see both the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) in the House. During his trial before the Old Bailey in the United Kingdom, a former CIDA official, Mr. Hugh Hambleton, a Canadian being tried on espionage charges for passing information to the KGB, admitted to having seen in Canada in April, 1980, official confirmation from the Department of Justice to the effect that he would not be prosecuted in Canada if he were to "co-operate" with Canadian security authorities in determining the exact nature of his contacts with the KGB. The existence of any such offer has since been denied by the Solicitor General.

It is time some clarification of this matter was provided to the Canadian public. Why did the Canadian security authorities make such an offer? Why was Hambleton allowed to travel freely to the United Kingdom where, obviously, he expected to defect? Why was he warned twice, once before leaving Canada and secondly upon arrival in the United Kingdom, that he would almost certainly be tried in Britain on charges of espionage under law identical to the Canadian Official Secrets Act? Who prevented the Canadian authorities from bringing charges?

IMPACT ON CNR EMPLOYMENT IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Crow rate is now history, and the railways have had their way with the Canadian taxpayers. Years and years of striking by the railways, in the transportation of grain, have paid off handsomely and now farmers and Canadians in general will be paying for the investment and upgrading that far-seeing and responsible railway management would have put in place a long time ago.

In the course of creating the political context for killing the Crow, the CNR deliberately created the impression that changes to the Crow rate would result in a great increase in jobs at the CNR shops in Transcona, thus trying to undermine the position I was taking as the local Member of Parliament, and displaying, one might argue, an unusual and perhaps inappropriate interest for a Crown corporation in an issue with such obvious political dimensions. Nevertheless, the expectation of more and new jobs as a result of the Crow change is there.

I remain very skeptical, and I put the Minister of Transport on notice that employment levels at the CN shops in Transcona, and in Winnipeg in general, had better go up to and beyond their traditional levels, or he will never hear the end of it from me about the snow job CN did him and on other suckers like him in the Government.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

POSSIBLE LIMITATION ON FREEDOM OF ORGANIZATIONS TO INVEST PROFITABLY IN CANADA

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, because it relates to the general responsibilities of the Government and not to a specific department or minister.

The effect of Bill S-31 would be to drastically restrict the freedom of organizations, such as the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec, to invest profitably in Canada. This morning, the Government said it intended to introduce new amendments to the Bill. Will these be substantial amendments, as requested by almost all intervenors, in Quebec and elsewhere? Will these amendments deal with the objections expressed to date and when will they be tabled?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, amendments to Bill S-31 were introduced in the Senate some ten days ago and are now being examined by the Senate Committee. We have indicated that we are considering further amendments and will table those in good time.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: My question was addressed directly to the Acting Prime Minister because it deals with a national policy that, as we shall soon see, has been approved by the entire Government, and we shall see whether Bill S-31 also has the approval of the Quebec caucus. That we would like to know, and we soon will.

The Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec is a major instrument of economic development, not only for Quebec but for Canada as a whole. Its expansion is seriously threatened by this Bill, as was pointed out by many intervenors from all levels of our society, and these were people I would call moderates.

Could the Acting Prime Minister today give millions of Quebecers, whose pension funds are administered by the Caisse, the assurance that this vital instrument will not be prevented from proceeding legitimately to invest the assets of our taxpayers in Canada?

[English]

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is taking a very shortsighted approach to this situation. If he had considered it in terms of the national interest of this country and in terms of the interests of the people of Quebec, he would recognize that this is a very valid law and one that is generally supported by all of the Provinces. They see this as the kind of infrastructure that must be in place, parallel to the kind of law that exists in communications and in banking. I suggest to him that he take the long term approach and look at the national interest rather than the narrow definition which he is giving to the current situation.

INQUIRY RESPECTING EXPORTATION OF JOBS FROM QUEBEC AND ALL OF CANADA

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer contains some very serious errors, and I would invite her to think about that. I can guarantee those errors are there. When I hear someone in the Government asking us to act in the national interest, after everything they have done to divide this country, that takes a lot of nerve.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the Government is using a Bill to do to Quebec what it is afraid to do openly. That is what they are doing.

My question is: Considering the fact that one of the consequences of the Bill would be to oblige the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec to invest the assets of Quebec taxpayers elsewhere, in the United States, for instance, could the Government inform the House how many jobs, as a result of this policy, will be exported from Quebec and from Canada, considering the unacceptable limitations the Government wants to impose on the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec?

● (1120)

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is being taken totally out of context.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: No one is limiting the amount of investment Caisse de dépôts can make. They are limiting their own investment to 30 per cent, I would like to point out to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. We are limiting only those voting rights. They can invest as much as they want in this country, and should be encouraged to do so.

REASON FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN SENATE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, if the Bill has no effect upon the activities of Caisse de dépôt or other provincial emanations, why in the world is the Government bringing it in?

Let me ask this question. Why is the Government not finding the courage to bring this Bill directly to this House? Why is it sneaking it off to the Senate where it hopes the scrutiny will occur without full public debate and without the benefit of televised Question Period?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Will the Minister also tell us, now that she has announced her second round of amendments, why she will not give the Senate the whole Bill? Why do we have a sort of peep show approach to this Bill, where it is shown to the Senate piece by piece, and then changed amendment by amendment? Will the Minister withdraw this Bill until she knows exactly what she is preparing and then give this House, not the Senate but this House, the full Bill so that we can consider all of its implications at once?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the Hon. Member that the Bill will come to the House, that the Senate Committee has been giving it a very thorough investigation, hence the amendments, and the amendments that were brought forward the other day were warmly received by the Senate, with some further refinements which we are now considering. It is because of that full inspection, that very, very close inspection which the Senators have given it, that the amendments are coming forward. I can assure the Hon. Member that that Bill will come to this House.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the assurance with which the Minister purports to tell us what the Senate will do. I can assure her that if that Bill comes to this House, it will stop in this House.

LIMIT ON PROVINCIAL AGENCY ACTIVITIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, let me put, either to the Minister or to the Acting Prime Minister, the following question. This Bill has as its principle to place a 10 per cent limit upon the activities of provincial emanations, of provincial agencies. Why, in the name of consistency, if the Government is going to limit government activities to 10 per cent positions, is the Government not applying that same standard to federal agencies? What is there in law that would stop the CDIC, for example, from taking control of CP? Why is the Government of Canada trying to follow a double standard which imposes upon agencies of provincial Governments limitations that it will not impose upon agencies of the federal Government?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that the answer is not totally obvious to the Members of the Opposition—

Mr. Andre: Why are you always so amazed?

Mrs. Erola: —because it is assumed, in fact it is supported by the people of Canada, that federal Crown corporations would act in the best national interests of the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Even your own colleagues do not believe that one.

Mr. Beatty: You are going to regret that one.

FORESTRY

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS—PROVISION OF FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada told us yesterday that unemployment at its present level will likely stay with us for many, many months. I am directing my question to the Minister responsible for Canada's number one industry, the forest industry.

The economic development auction will be taking place among selected cabinet ministers next Tuesday. The Minister is well aware of the plight facing the forest industry in terms of high unemployment levels, necessary restructuring, as well as the abysmal state of reforestation. Will he tell the House, and indirectly the people of Canada, particularly those involved in the forest industry, what request he has before the economic development auction which will take place next Tuesday, and what additional funding we can expect to enable us to continue with provincial-federal agreements in reforestation programs?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a meeting of a Cabinet committee and he is asking me to put on the floor of the House matters that are still to be decided upon. May I indicate to him that of course I am very committed to the question of forest renewal and forest research. He knows that we have this year, in terms of forest research facilities, funded expansions to the tune of $22 million in the Maritimes, $10 million in the Laurentian research facilities, $30 million in the Great Lakes area, and $14 million in the Pacific research facilities.

In addition, under the pulp and paper research agreement sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Government is making some $17 million available, $15 million of which will be made available to the Province of British Columbia. In terms of fire-fighting, we have jointly agreed with the Provinces, under the Special Recovery Program, to the construction of some 29 fire-fighting bombers, 17 of which will be built with federal funds and 12 with provincial funds.

Since the inception—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caccia: —of the use of Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, we have made available in the forestry field for the creation of jobs some $140 million, $45 million of which will be available to the Province of British Columbia. I regretted very much to learn that the British Columbia Government withdrew from the subsequent implementation of this particular program for creating jobs in forestry.

Mr. Riis: If one listens carefully to what the Minister has to say, the amounts of money being set aside for reforestation in our country are pitiful. As a matter of fact, if we add up the figures for reforestation which he suggested, the Government of Canada gave more than that to the countries of Zaire and Rwanda in the last two years.

LEVEL OF AID TO FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has given $430 million to a variety of countries for their reforestation programs. We in this Party support in principle that type of foreign aid development. Will the Minister at least make the same commitment to the Provinces of Canada and to our forest industry, that he will see a reciprocal amount of money spent in Canada? With $430 million for reforestation in other countries, can we not expect the same for our own country?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed with the narrowmindedness of this type of question emanating from a Member of the New Democratic Party which claims to be in the forefront of foreign aid, in particular aid to developing countries in need. I remind the Hon. Member that when Canada becomes involved in aiding Zaire and Rwanda, it is because the climate of the world benefits by reforestation enterprises which are entertained in the Sahel region and in regions where desertification is taking place.

As to the "pitiful amount", and I am quoting the Hon. Member, I ask him whether he considers $80 million in reforestation, which is the amount that has been steadily made available to the Provinces throughout the years, is a pitiful amount of money in addition to the $140 million under unemployment insurance for the creation of forestry jobs of which, as I reminded him earlier, $45 million went to the Province of British Columbia, a Province which has withdrawn from the project itself.

INVESTMENT BY FRANCOPHONE GROUPS—INQUIRY WHETHER NATIONAL INTEREST HARMED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

[English]

Mr. Riis: A supplementary—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Joliette. The Chair will take care of these matters in the course of events.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: I realize from the answers the Minister gave earlier that she was not very knowledgeable about the consequences of Bill S-31, the Bill being sponsored by the Minister, for Quebec interests and national interests as well and the fact that millions of Quebecers are very concerned about this legislation. The Minister must be aware of the fierce opposition of people who believe in federalism with respect and who are opposed to this legislation.

Therefore, could the Minister who wants to defend this legislation on the basis that it is in the national interest, inform the House whether expansion of a Francophone group through investments inside our country is against the national interest she was trying to defend this morning?

Mr. Prud'homme: The Bill is going to die in the Senate.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Of course not. The question is totally irrelevant. French Canadians, as any Canadians, have a right to invest in this country. I think I understand this Bill a great deal better than the Hon. Member for Joliette understands it, because it is in the national interest. I want to reinforce once again that there is no limitation to the amount that anyone can invest. There is a limitation only in the area of voting rights. It is legislation parallel to the kind of legislation that currently exists in banking and in communications. It is not unique legislation. It is legislation that is of the very fabric and structure vital to our country.

INQUIRY WHETHER LIBERAL MEMBERS OPPOSE LEGISLATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the Government's hypocrisy with respect to this legislation is too obvious. The Minister knows perfectly well, and there are seventy four Liberals on the opposite side who are from Quebec and can explain, that Quebec is violently opposed to this legislation.

My question is simple, Mr. Speaker. Quebec would like to know how many Quebec members on the opposite side of the House have expressed their objections to this Bill, and I think the Minister should inform the House whether any Quebec members have objected to her Bill, which is unacceptable in the present circumstances.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to inform the Hon. Member that the Members on this side of the House are always in favour of the national interest, and his is a very narrow one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on a short supplementary. I call to the attention of Hon. Members that long supplementaries are not part of the Standing Orders.

FORESTRY

FUNDING FOR REFORESTATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for forestry. While we support the Government giving $50 million to Zaire, $15 million to Upper Volta, $35 million to Peru—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member put his supplementary?

Mr. Riis: Will the Minister guarantee to Canadians involved in the forest industry, particularly those involved in and concerned with reforestation, that he will give the same attention to Canadians that the Government has given to those in Upper Volta, Sudan and others, to the tune of $450 million? Will he do the same in terms of reciprocal behaviour?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion we have been and are pumping into the forest industry some $80 million each year. That $80 million a year is being made available by the federal Government for the renewal of our forests. If the Hon. Member can multiply 80 by the number of years involved, he will arrive at a substantial figure, that is, if he can count. In addition, as has already been brought to his attention, we put in some $140 million of Canadian taxpayers' money under Unemployment Insurance, some $157 million—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister is repeating information that he has already put before the House. With all due respect—will the Minister please be seated? This raises questions about which all of us have been concerned. Where there is a repetition of a supplementary and a repetition of an answer, this denies other Members of the House the opportunity of participating in the Question Period.

NATIONAL REVENUE

MINISTER'S POWERS TO OBTAIN PERSONAL INFORMATION ON TAXPAYERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead asked the Minister of National Revenue whether, in his view, there were any inquiries about personal information which could not be made by the Minister under the Income Tax Act. The Minister's response was "I do not think and I am even positive there are no inquiries." Upon reflection, is it the position of the Government of Canada that there are no limitations upon the range of personal information which can be demanded by the Minister of National Revenue under the Income Tax Act, including information held by municipalities, school boards and hospitals?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think the question should be put to my colleague when he returns to the House Monday. In any case, the question put yesterday concerned enquiries made by Revenue Canada to municipalities, including requests for information that is already available to anyone in Canada who takes the trouble to ask the municipal authorities, for instance, how many commercial contracts were authorized by the municipality in the past year. That is public information, and the Hon. Member can check this with his municipality.

ACCESS TO MUNICIPAL DATA BASES—INVESTIGATION BY PRIVACY COMMISSIONER

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, that answer is absolutely incredible, as the Minister will find if he reads yesterday's Hansard.

Today I have laid a complaint with the Privacy Commissioner against the Department of National Revenue, under Section 29 of the Privacy Act. Will the Acting Minister order a freeze upon such requests for direct access to data bases of municipalities, hospitals and school boards, pending the results of the investigation by the Privacy Commissioner who, after all, is an officer of this Parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think that in a case like this, wisdom dictates that the matter should be left up to the Commissioner, and it is not up to me to tell him what to do.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHERN LEG

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I congratulate him and the Government on their victory over me in the pipeline lawsuit. I have a simple question on the Alaska pipeline. Will the Minister please tell the House when the first shovel of dirt will be dug to begin the construction of the northern leg of the pipeline, in view of the ironclad guarantees that the Government gave the Canadian people that the pipeline would be built?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Hon. Member lost anything. He went to court and he received justice under the law.

We have completed the prebuild. The Americans have decided not to proceed with getting gas from Alaska to their markets. In the meantime they are buying some Canadian gas. I do not know when the next section of the Alaska pipeline will be constructed. We passed a Bill in Parliament some years ago, on the undertaking by President Carter that it was urgent and that the Americans wanted to have it passed. After we passed the law, the Americans did not proceed. We proceeded under the law with the prebuild. That is where we are today. I cannot give the Hon. Member a date.

GAS SALES TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, at the Canadian-American Parliamentary Conference, Senator Murkowski of Alaska and Senator McClure of Idaho said that the Americans would not build the line as long as they could get cheaper Canadian gas. What is illogical about that? What is he telling the Canadian consumer? The fact is that the Canadian consumer will have to pay for expensive Alaskan gas in the future after we have sold out all of our Canadian gas to the Americans.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite out of touch with reality. The only gas that we are selling to the Americans is what is surplus to the Canadian need. The NEB has ruled that we take the consumption of gas for one year and multiply that by 25. It is only the amount above that which is sold to the Americans.

The 17 trillion cubic feet of surplus gas we have today does not include the gas in the Northwest Territories and does not include the gas that has been discovered off Sable Island in Nova Scotia, because that gas is not in a position to be delivered to the market. Canada is in a good surplus position with natural gas and it is in the best interests of Canadians to sell that surplus at this time.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

SIZE OF CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Defence. In New York yesterday several unnamed United States officials were highly critical of Canada's contribution to NATO, to which the Minister is quoted in the press as replying:

> Canada contributes as much as the average within NATO. I'm not saying that it's sufficient; I'm not saying that it's permanent.

How can the Minister make that statement in view of the fact that Canada spends less than 2 per cent of its GNP on defence versus a NATO average expenditure of 3.5 per cent? Could he explain to the House what he means by saying that our contribution to NATO may not be permanent? Is he planning to make some changes in our relationship with NATO?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to point out to the hon. gentleman that Canada is sixth in order of importance in terms of expenditures for defence within the NATO alliance. Next year Canada will be spending $8.6 billion; this year, it is spending $8 billion. That figure does not include the facilities that we provide to our NATO allies in Suffield, Alberta, in Shilo, Manitoba, and indeed in Goose Bay, Labrador, to permit NATO troops to train within Canada. Neither does it include the cost that Canada bears for the CAST Brigade which has been identified for the north flank of Norway.

There are a number of factors that must be taken into account when Canada's contribution to NATO is identified. As I said in New York yesterday, Canada needs to take a back seat to no one in terms of its NATO contribution.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Blais: In terms of our contribution to NATO, Mr. Speaker, I wish to identify to the hon. gentleman that, of course, this Government is always looking at ways of improving our relationship with our NATO allies. As I pointed out yesterday, Canada has a history of depending for its security upon multilateral defence alliances.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, at meetings of NATO parliamentarians at The Hague in October there would not have been a single parliamentarian or military person from NATO who would agree with the Minister's contention that Canada is carrying its fair share of the weight. Canada is last among the 16 NATO nations in contributions to defence.

POSITION OF NATO MEMBER NATIONS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister say that it is sufficient to be last among the 16 NATO nations in contibutions to defence, and how can he indicate that we are carrying our fair share of the weight in view of the fact that no one else in any other NATO country agrees with him?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute balderdash. I received my NATO ministerial colleagues in Montebello, Quebec, two weeks ago. We had meetings there, and at that time none of my allies came to me and made any allegations of the kind made by the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman has one iota of patriotism, I would hope that he would refrain from making those sorts of allegations and statements.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON POPULATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will know that the United Nations is sponsoring an international meeting in Mexico City next year on the subject of population and development. In view of the Prime Minister's interest in this subject, and in view of the fact that Madam Speaker headed a Canadian delegation to Bucharest in 1974 on this same subject, could the Secretary of State tell us today what plans he has for appointing a delegation to go to Mexico City, and could he tell us if any preparations have been made for the briefing of that delegation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the preparations for this meeting are obviously under way in the Department, but we have not yet selected the delegates. The meeting is to be held quite some time in the future. It is not normal to select delegates at this point. However, when they are selected, they will be well briefed and well prepared.

DEPARTMENT'S PLANS FOR CONFERENCE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a brief supplementary question. I wonder if, while the Minister is stating that preparations are under way, he could at the same time tell the officials in his Department whom we must contact now that such plans are under way. At the moment, they know nothing about those preparations.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his misinformation.

FORESTRY

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT SPENDING ON REFORESTATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is a follow up to the question put by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap to the Minister of Forestry. I appreciate very much his reiteration of the commitment of the Government to the principle of renewing our forests. However, rhetoric will not relieve the backlog that has been created as a result of the deliberate policy of neglect of this Government over the last 15 years. May I ask the Minister what specifically he has done in preparation for this coming Thursday to assure that the earlier commitment to spend $130 million for the purposes of forest renewal in the next few years will be implemented and to assure that that figure is thrown into the arena, and what he has done to assure himself of adequate funding to meet the commitment that has been made by himself and by his predecessor to this very important area?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what I can say that would be new to the Hon. Member, or what I could say that would be in addition to what I said earlier. The Hon. Member's question is exactly the same as the one posed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. I did indicate to that Hon. Member that he was asking me to give him information relating to matters upon which a decision still must be made.

In his question the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River makes reference to rhetoric. I would have to come back to him and snow him under with figures that are mounting into the hundreds of millions of dollars, as I did previously when making reference to unemployment insurance funds for the creation of jobs.

I realize that you are getting impatient with me, Mr. Speaker, but I must deal with the Hon. Member's approach. I would have to remind the Hon. Member about what has been done with regard to firefighting equipment and the expenditure of some $150 million for water bombers. I would also have to remind him of the fact that, under DREE, the federal Government has been pumping, into renewal of the forestry industry and similar approaches, some $80 million a year.

However, what the Hon. Member does not seem to realize is that the Premier of his Province has a big responsibility in the field of forestry. If forestry is in such poor shape in his Province, it is also the fault of the provincial Government for neglecting that responsibility.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the federal Government takes in in excess of $1 billion a year as revenue from the forestry and wood-converting industries. The figures he has announced this morning are pitiful in relation to the commitment that was made two years ago to spend $130 million—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask his supplementary question?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FORESTRY AGREEMENTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister follow up on yet another commitment to put in place the forestry agreements with the Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario, a commitment that was to be fulfilled last year? When will these agreements be completed, and what will the Minister do to convince his Cabinet colleagues that the federal Government has a very real and direct responsibility in this area that cannot be passed on to the Provinces?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for giving me the opportunity of saying that I am personally committed to the cause of the forestry industry, as is everyone on this side of the House. We know of the contribution that the forestry industry makes to the economy, to the national interest, and to the long-term interest of future generations of Canadians. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that I will put forward my best efforts in this cause.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT PRESENTING LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister is trying to defend Bill S-31 by saying it is essential to protect the national interest. Since the Canadian Transport Commission already has the power to intervene in matters concerning interprovincial transport companies, how can the Minister justify a Bill that is really a present for friends of the Liberal Party, especially Mr. Ian Sinclair and Canadian Pacific?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the question does not even deserve a reply. However, I shall attempt to make one. As the Hon. Member is probably aware, the powers of the CTC are not sufficient to meet the problem in this case. It was obvious that we needed the kind of legislation that would be clearcut and could easily be applied across the country in the national interest; hence, Bill S-31.

As I have said previously, the legislation is supported by the Provinces. We have had a number of meetings with my provincial counterparts who see the need for this kind of infrastructure legislation, and who see the need to enact it now in order to prevent problems in the future.

• (1150)

I would add—and I want to make this very clear—that the reason, for instance, the Caisse de dépôts is not trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange is because it has, by refusing to disclose, prevented itself from trading there. Let us make that very clear here before we proceed with the assumption that there is a move afoot to prevent it from trading.

CANADIAN INTERESTS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON ROLE OF MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I have a supplementary for the same Minister. The Minister knows perfectly well that Quebec taxpayers and the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec have lost millions of dollars owing to the retroactive provisions of Bill S-31. Why is the Minister willing to entrust our interests to multinational corporations, while she opposes any action taken by provincial governments that are trying to serve the interests of their people by investing in Canada and not in Europe or the United States, and why does she favour the multinationals and not the Provinces?

Mr. Prud'homme: The Bill is going to die in the Senate anyway.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): There is absolutely no move afoot which would suggest we are favouring the multinationals. Bill S-31 is there to protect the national interest. As to the Caisse de dépôts losing, I find that very difficult to accept. If the Hon. Member has examined the Bill, he will see that it is grandfathered and that those shares owned by the Caisse de dépôts, which are at the moment 9.6 of the total, are protected. That is why there is a grandfather clause—to protect the ownership of those shares which are in existence now. The amendments which we have put forward give them an increase in that area of protection. I would find it very interesting if the Hon. Member could produce for me, in dollars and cents, the loss which he alleges.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A number of Hon. Members are seeking to be recognized and the Chair proposes to recognize Hon. Members for single questions only, without supplementaries, for the balance of the period.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that about a year ago the improvement of Canada-U.S. relations became one of the three priorities of Canadian foreign policy. Will the Minister tell us specifically what he has done to improve Canada-U.S. relations, particularly having in mind NATO, FIRA, the National Energy Program, and any other of the other perhaps score of issues where he might tell us what he has done specifically?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a question which would take a very long answer, and perhaps we could deal with it in the standing committee. However, I would like to mention to the Hon. Member that we have established a process of consultation between the Secretary of State for the United States and myself, which is unprecedented in our history. We have agreed to meet on a regular basis four times a year, at which time we discuss bilateral questions. The fifth meeting in such a series took place recently in Halifax, and I regard that enterprise as a major effort and a major success in Canada-U.S. relations.

RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

REPORT ON JAVELIN INTERNATIONAL LIMITED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On September 26 the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission reported to the Minister on an investigation into the affairs of Javelin International Limited which is in a scandalous state of affairs. Mr. Doyle, the controller of that company, is residing in Panama. Has the Government taken any action since receiving this report? Is the Government going to wind the company down in an orderly manner? Is the Government going to take action to put Mr. Doyle's shares in trust? And has the Government contacted the Panamanian Government to guard against any further erosion of the interests of the shareholders in Panama, as is recommended by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that we are now investigating ways to implement the recommendations of the report of the Commission. I have been in touch with the Secretary of State for External Affairs to see what moves can be taken to protect the interests of those shareholders of Javelin. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are moving in this area.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S SPEECH—CONSEQUENCES FOR WINNIPEG'S CULTURAL COMMUNITY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister may know that Winnipeg's cultural community was very upset with the comments of the Minister in which he inferred, at least, that Winnipeg would be bypassed as a cultural industry development centre in relation to a policy being developed which would centre itself on Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. Could the Minister indicate to the House whether or not this is, in effect, the policy? If it is not, could he placate any fear which members of Winnipeg's cultural community may have at the present time?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when one talks about the federal Government's programs in the field of culture, one must realize there are a number of programs, many of which have different objectives. As far as the Canada Council programs are concerned, for instance, the mandate of the Canada Council is to fund excellence wherever it is found in this country.

When I speak about "centres of excellence", I am basically taking about certain cultural industries which require a critical mass to develop and become productive and efficient. I noted, for instance, that the movie and program production industry in the United States has developed essentially in three cities, New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles. I query whether in this country we believe we can have centres of excellence in program production in the field of film and television programming in more than three or four centres. That is basically what I am saying.

I am not in any way saying that Winnipeg and other cities of that kind will not receive their fair share of cultural moneys. As a matter of fact I recently announced a contribution of $2 million to the Royal Winnipeg Ballet in order to allow them to build appropriate facilities for the schooling and training of people involved with the Royal Winnipeg Ballet. I am presently discussing with my counterparts in Manitoba the possibility of negotiating an ERDA sub-agreement on culture.

FORESTRY

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT TO FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FUNDING

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for forestry. There is an understanding in the Canadian Forestry Service that the Cabinet has approved in principle $130 million a year in federal-provincial agreements to be committed each year for five years. Would the Minister like to make that commitment on behalf of his Government and inform the Canadian Forestry Service, and this Parliament, if indeed the Cabinet has made that approval in principle?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for the originality of his question. It has already been asked by two Hon. Members previously, one of them from his own Party. As I indicated to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, that matter has not been decided as yet. It is to go to Cabinet. The question of the commitment, therefore, is one to which I cannot give him an answer right now, except to recite again the amounts of money which the federal Government has made available to forestry across this nation, for research, for water bombers, for the creation of jobs, for forestry schools, and the like. These amounts of money, as I mentioned earlier, run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONTROL OF ACID RAIN—ANTICIPATED INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN UNITED STATES

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. A few days ago our Ambassador Gotlieb was quoted in the press as saying that he would expect there would be legislation in the American Congress in 1984 with respect to acid rain control. Can the Minister tell the House whether that anticipation is based on an expectation of administration sponsored legislation, or does the Minister believe that legislation would come as a consequence of the initiative of both Republican and Democratic Senators and Representatives?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, at this stage it is extremely difficult to engage in forecasting from where the legislation will come. I raised this matter yesterday in Indianapolis with Mr. Ruckelshaus. I have asked him where, and when, he thinks he would be able to put forward a proposal which would be acceptable to his administration. It seems to me that at this point, Mr. Speaker, in light of our experience so far, the issue of acid rain between Canada and the U.S. is becoming a leadership issue which the President of the United States must resolve himself in order to come to a decision. The administration is divided on this matter.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON PREPAYMENT OF MORTGAGES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. A few years ago the Prime Minister issued a statement on consumer affairs in which he said:

> In the mortgage field, the Liberal Government intends to make it your legal right to prepay the mortgage on your home during the first five years of the mortgage agreement, if you wish to. This will enable many Canadians to achieve significant savings at a time of high mortgage-interest costs, and will protect the home buyer from excessively high prepayment penalties.

In view of the statements coming from the Minister's office, where does she stand? Is she trying to help the more than 750,000 Canadians who are trapped by high interest mortgages? Her statements do not indicate that. Or is she merely a tool for a handful of trust companies?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware, I am sure, that our Department has been investigating the situation for a couple of months now. We are very much concerned about the problem of those people who are locked into high interest mortgages. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that a contract is a contract, and we must be very careful to honour contracts, but also allow people an equitable way of reaching a solution. That is one of the reasons why my Department is acting, perhaps as an intermediary, to see if there is not a way to reach a solution.

I might add that in many circumstances we have been able to be of considerable assistance. In the meantime I can assure the Hon. Member that I, and the Minister of Finance, are looking at ways in which this Government could move to alleviate those very real problems that home owners are facing.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—REPORTED OFFER OF IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. While he is coming into the House, and I hope he will, I would like to recommend, Mr. Speaker, that you have glasses prescribed for the Government front bench because they seem unable to distinguish between Mr. Speaker and Madam Speaker.

Since the Solicitor General is not in the House I shall address my question to the Minister of Justice. The question relates to a former Canadian official of CIDA who was tried about a year ago in Britain on charges of espionage on behalf of the U.S.S.R.

It is clear from the evidence brought forward in public hearings at the Old Bailey that an offer of immunity was made to Mr. Hambleton, which offer has since been denied. Has the Minister read the evidence given at the Old Bailey, and has the offer of immunity been denied, or have there been second thoughts about the denial? Would he also examine the matter of who it was who warned Hambleton not to go to the United Kingdom, and why the warning was made?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I was not able to read all of the proceedings in that case because some of the evidence was taken secretly. I understand a summary of the evidence was made available to the RCMP, and I had that summary available to me. I do not believe there was, in fact I can say categorically that there was nothing in that evidence which would cause us to change anything that either I or my colleague, the Solicitor General, have said before in this House on this subject. We regard the matter as closed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION REPORTS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the people of Labrador, several thousand of whom have signed this petition calling upon the House of Commons to create a separate seat in this House for Labrador.

Labrador is unique in geography, culture and economic possibilities. It is my duty and pleasure to support this petition calling on Parliament to send the report of the Newfoundland Electoral Boundaries Commission, tabled in the House on May 27, 1983, back to the Commission to change its recommendations from a Labrador-St. Anthony district to a Labrador district and/or to introduce a Bill to create a district for Labrador.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of approximately 2,400 people in the communities of Port aux Basques, Ramea, La Poile, Fox Roost, Margaree, Cape Ray, Petites, Harbour Le Cou and Pool's Cove, all being in the riding of Burin-St. George's.

The petitioners express their dissatisfaction with the report of the Newfoundland Electoral Boundaries Commission tabled in this House in May, and the prayer of the petition is essentially that Parliament overturn the recommended changes included in that report. It is my honour to present this petition and support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member varied a little bit from the usual form of petitions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I dispense with the reading of the motions?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, some day I will explain the reason why, I am sure, but I would prefer that we deal with these matters in a normal and proper fashion.

Motions stand.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,961, 5,300 and 5,308.

[Text]

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Question No. 4,961—Mr. Corbett:

1. In the past six months were appointments made to the Enterprise Development Board from Atlantic Canada and, if so, who and from what locations?

2. Do any of the appointees have past active political connections and, if so, what are they and to what extent?

3. Have any of the individuals ever received other federal appointments to boards or commissions and, if so (a) what appointments (b) on what date and for how long?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1. No such appointments were made to either the Central Enterprise Development Board or to any of the four Atlantic Region Enterprise Development Boards during the period in question (December 8, 1982—June 8, 1983).

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

FISHING VESSEL INSURANCE PLAN

Question No. 5,300—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is there a $7.25 million surplus remaining in the Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan and, if so, for what reason did the Government recommend a rate increase?

2. Was the rate increased in the Scotia-Fundy area for 1983-84 in a manner disproportionate to that in other parts of Atlantic Canada and, if so, for what reason?

3. Is the Plan adhering to the 6 per cent and 5 per cent guidelines for rate increases and, if not, for what reason?

4. Does the Government intend to place the surplus into an interest bearing account with the interest received accruing to the account of the Plan?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. There was a balance of $7,250,171 in the Fishing Vessel Insurance Plan operating reserve on March 31, 1983. Premium rates have been increased because of the heavy losses experienced by the Plan in the three year period ending on March 31, 1983. The balance in the reserve fund fell by $3,375,112 in that period.

2. No.

3. Premium rates charged by the Plan are set so that premiums cover indemnities paid. They rise or fall as is required to pay indemnities and are not limited by the six and five program.

4. No.

TELEPHONES COMPATIBLE WITH HEARING AIDS

Question No. 5,308—Mr. Young:

Does the Treasury Board have a policy with respect to the availability of telephones compatible with the hearing aids of government employees with a hearing loss?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The Treasury Board Policy on Increased Participation of Physically Handicapped and Mentally Handicapped People in the Federal Public Service (PMM-Vol.4, Chap. 16 5.3.6.) states that Departments and Agencies shall: "ensure that funds are made available for the purchase of work-essential technical aids and services as required and feasible wherever the hiring or promotion of a physically handicapped person in an appropriate position requires such equipment or services".

A telephone handset compatible with hearing aids is clearly a work related technical aid and such handsets are installed when requested by hearing aid users.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Stand.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, November 17, 1983 consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises, be read the second time and referred do the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the proceedings were interrupted the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) had completed his remarks and was open to a ten-minute period of questions and answers. Are there Hon. Members wishing to ask him questions? If not, I recognize the Hon. Member for Malpeque.

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be given the opportunity to speak on this Bill today. Bill C-170 is an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises.

This Bill is being put through this House and Parliament to try and restructure the fishery of Atlantic Canada. We are all well aware of the problems of the fishery of Atlantic Canada. Different Provinces and different sectors of the fishery are going to be affected differently by this Bill. In this Bill "Atlantic fisheries" means:

—all the activities relating to the harvesting, processing and marketing of fish in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Quebec and in the fishing zones of Canada, as defined pursuant to subsection 4(1) of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, on the Atlantic coast of Canada—

According to the interpretation clause, "control", in respect of a body corporate, means:

(a) control in any manner that results in control in fact, whether directly through the ownership of shares, stocks, equities or securities or indirectly through a trust, a contract, the ownership of shares, stocks, equities or securities of another body corporate or otherwise, or

(b) the ability to appoint, elect or cause the appointment or election of a majority of the directors of the body corporate, whether or not such ability is exercised;—

According to this Bill "fishery enterprise" means:

—any person that is engaged directly or indirectly in, or controls or is controlled by a person that is engaged directly or indirectly in, the Atlantic Fisheries;

"person" includes an individual, a body corporate, a partnership, an association, a trust, a cooperative and any trustee or legal representative thereof;

"restructuring", in respect of a fishery enterprise, includes the reorganization, refinancing, modernization, rationalization and expansion of the enterprise, and any similar activity directed toward making the enterprise economically viable.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to facilitate the development of viable Atlantic fisheries that are competitive and privately-owned through the restructuring of certain fishery enterprises. That part of the Bill is something which is worthwhile and I can certainly support the objective of this Bill, but the Bill goes much too far in its powers.

As described in the Bill the powers are:

4. (1) To carry out the purpose of this Act, the Minister may, on behalf of Her Majesty,

(a) acquire, hold or dispose of or otherwise deal with shares, debentures or other securities of, or any security interest in, any fishery enterprise;

(b) pledge, hypothecate or charge any share, debenture or other security, or other security interest, acquired or held under paragraph (a); and

(c) enter into any agreement or arrangement necessary or incidental to any activity referred to in paragraph (a) or (b).

The guarantees under Clause 6 are:

To carry out the purpose of this Act, the Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, on such terms and conditions as the Minister specifies, guarantee the repayment of any portion of the principal and interest owing on any loan made to a fishery enterprise.

(2) The aggregate amount of guarantees given under this section that are outstanding at any one time shall not exceed one hundred million dollars.

In Clause 7 the Minister is authorized to exercise specific powers:

The Governor in Council may by order authorize any minister of the Crown, other than the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, to exercise in respect of such fishery enterprise as is specified in the order such powers referred to in this Act as are specified in the order.

Mr. Speaker, that is a lot of jargon that is hard to understand. It is definitely difficult for me, as a layman, to understand the full implications. My understanding of this Bill is that it is going to give the Government, through the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) or some other designated Minister, complete control of the fishery in Atlantic Canada. There are many "anys" in the Bill. The Bill gives the Minister the power to buy, sell, trade or hold "any" sector of the fishing industry. It also gives the Minister the power to loan or guarantee "any" amount of money to "any" fishery enterprise.

I will give you some background to the introduction of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. Due to the condition of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the appointment of a task force on Atlantic fisheries in January of 1982. The main purpose of this task force was to recommend "how to achieve and maintain a viable Atlantic fishing industry with due consideration for the overall economic and social development of the Atlantic Provinces". The Chairman of this task force, Mr. Michael Kirby, worked primarily with 11 other people in developing the Kirby report.

Mr. Speaker, the Kirby report is the most positive report seen in decades. It was presented as an interlocking package. The federal Government is threatening the integrity and future of the report by changing some of the recommendations. The federal Government seems to be picking, choosing and switching, to suit their needs, from a report which must be viewed as a whole package in order to be effective. In the Kirby report, in a section entitled "The Harvesting Sector", recommendations in the area of fishing licences are discussed. The federal Government must accept the licensing review process. This term should be explained as the process of licensing is currently political and controlled by the federal Government.

There are no written guidelines established for companies and fishermen to follow, should they wish to expand or develop their businesses. It is the damage done to the private sector fishing industry by many years of Liberal fisheries policies which has left no alternative but to restructure the industry. The Liberal Government has encouraged excessive expansion through federal improvement loans. It has shown political interference in licensing and capital expenditures. It has been inconsistent in policy areas and has not been effective in consultations with the Provinces.

The President of the Eastern Fisheries Federation expressed his concerns about the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada by stating that the use of Government incentives had ballooned in Nova Scotia's two largest companies to the point where so much money had to be made to stay afloat that the result is too much fish on the market. He feels that the fishing industry needs to be built by people who have an interest in the fishery rather than a bunch of bureaucrats.

So far under this restructuring, only large companies are being taken over and those companies not involved could find themselves penalized for their independence. Independent firms have already reported greater difficulty in getting bank loans since the announcement of the restructuring.

Governments will be able to distort the free market system and their criteria for assistance programs in favour of their own companies. The federal Government must ensure that independent fish processors retain their share of the industry and remain prosperous to be capable of buying back the industry in the natural process of expansion. The federal Government must follow its agreement to return the fishing industry to private ownership as soon as possible.

The restructuring of the fishing industry is a mixed blessing. While it restores needed employment in Newfoundland and offers a chance for greater provincial participation in the fishery, it also creates a situation which may lead to greater nationalization of the industry, worse economic performance and a greater dependence on Government subsidies.

The Maritime Provinces and Quebec are opposed to the federal intervention evident in the restructuring plan. These Provinces are concerned about the effects on the independent businessman and the future of these people in the fishing industry. Some Provinces are strongly opposed to the restructuring while others are reluctantly participating because they fear federal reprisals in the form of reduced quotas and expenditures.

In Nova Scotia, the largest fish processor in Atlantic Canada, H.B. Nickerson and Sons, Ltd. is to be dismantled and most of its assets turned over to National Sea Products, making that company the largest in Atlantic Canada. The amalgamation of Nova Scotia's two largest fish processing companies shows that the Governments are more interested in rescuing large corporations than in protecting the livelihood of fishermen, plant workers and small processors.

The Province of Quebec is strongly opposed to the restructuring due to federal intervention in the fishing industry. The industry is rallying fishermen and other groups to oppose the plan and is offering various types of assistance to companies or co-ops that wish to remain independent. Their main objection is that the federal plan would interrupt and delay the provincial program for plant modernization and product quality improvement. The federal Government's plan would interfere with privatization that is now taking place in the Quebec fishing industry.

Nova Scotia has agreed to take part in the restructuring largely because it fears federal reprisals in the form of reduced quotas, reduced small craft harbours funding and other types of discrimination. The Province has not signed the actual agreement as it is seeking stronger guarantees on matters such as returning the controlling interest to the private sector within a specific time. The major objections for Nova Scotia are that about 90 per cent of federal investment in the new company would go directly to repay the bank, leaving little for real industrial rebuilding; federal control in the companies; and an insecure future.

New Brunswick is also opposed to the federal Government controlling interest in fishery enterprises and the effect of the restructured companies upon independents. The industry in New Brunswick also sees a conflict of interest when it comes to distributing fish quotas, subsidies, funding and so on.

In my own Province of Prince Edward Island, the fishermen and people generally are opposed to another form of the old absentee landlord system. They fear that there will be a loss of local decision-making in the fishing industry with a negative effect on the Prince Edward Island independent companies. They are not confident that the federal Government will look after the interests of the P.E.I. fishing industry as it will have to meet demands of larger companies and Provinces, and the larger companies will be given more preference than the independent processors in matters of loan guarantees, subsidies, etc.

The main concern can be summed up in the lack of confidence in the federal Government's handling of an industry which is so important to the livelihood of the Province and indeed to all the Maritime Provinces. It is the lack of trust that makes the Provinces so leery of the whole restructuring plan as the Government has a tendency to change parts of an agreement to suit the needs of the federal Government. An example of this is the way the federal Government has changed the Kirby report. It took a very detailed and comprehensive report and changed portions of it to suit its needs.

While understanding the need for restructuring the Atlantic coast fisheries, one can see that the current action of the federal Government will only create more problems as it tries to nationalize the fishing industry. Do not be fooled when the federal Government says that this is not a plan to nationalize the fishing industry. I personally believe that this is a federal Government plan to nationalize the industry. First, it will nationalize the Atlantic fishery and then move to the West Coast next year and nationalize the West Coast fishery as well.

I am most concerned about the smaller businesses. We do not have any large companies in the fishing industry in Prince Edward island that are suffering financially and about to go bankrupt. In Prince Edward Island there are fish processors, family-owned companies, and there are co-ops owned by the fishermen. Most of these companies are surviving though not as well as they would like. However, they are still in business and are not looking for Government bailouts. They are concerned about the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery because they fear that the Government controlled fishing companies will squeeze them out of business. They are also afraid to come to Ottawa to present their concerns in front of the standing committee. I suggest it is a sad state of affairs when citizens of this country are afraid to come to Ottawa to voice their concerns to the Government.

Mr. Tobin: Nonsense.

Mr. Gass: The Parliamentary Secretary says nonsense. I have talked to processors from Atlantic Canada and those are the exact words they spoke. They are afraid to come here to voice their concerns before the standing committee because they depend on the federal Government for other forms of assistance to keep them in business. They depend upon the federal government to dredge their harbours and to put money into their harbours. They are afraid and it is not nonsense.

In his remarks on the first day this Bill was before the House, the Minister, as reported at page 28852 of Hansard, stated:

In entering into this agreement, the Government is acutely aware of the need to consider the situation of smaller companies in the five Provinces and the way they will relate to these three new large entities.

That is somewhat reassuring to the small independent processors but the Minister also goes on to say:

Some of these—

Referring to the small companies.

—are watching developments with a certain degree of uneasiness.

I might say that in all of the Minister's remarks about the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada, the greatest understatement he has made is that these small companies are looking at these developments with a certain degree of uneasiness. They are terrified. The processors in P.E.I. to whom I have talked are terrified of this Bill. In fact, two small processors in Prince Edward Island have told me that if the Bill passes in its present form they are seriously thinking of not opening their doors next spring. Why would they do that? They are afraid that the Government will slowly squeeze them out of business. They have decided that they may as well quit now while they still have some money in the bank rather than wait until the effects of this Bill have squeezed every last dollar out of their businesses and they have to close their doors because the bank has moved in.

● (1230)

The small processors in P.E.I.—and it is P.E.I. that I am speaking mostly for today—and other processors in Atlantic Canada say this new Bill will cause the total demise of the small independent processors as we now know them. They have also informed me that this Bill through restructuring will probably cause the demise of the Fisheries Council of Canada because a lot of the people who participate in the Fisheries Council of Canada will be absorbed by this new company.

You might be appreciative of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the independents have formed a new organization in the Maritime Provinces. They call it FISPAC, the Federation of Independent Seafood Processors of Atlantic Canada. The people forming this new organization are putting their own money into this organization to prepare a brief, an argument, to present to the Standing Committee expressing their concerns about this Bill. I was delighted to hear that they were going to spend their own money because they believe so strongly that this Bill is not the Bill they want to see come forward. I repeat, these people are forming this organization because as individuals they are afraid to come before the Standing Committee on Fisheries because of the reprisals they see down the road from the Government in some other form.

During the course of this debate there has been some discussion as to whether or not the non-Gulf-based fleet should be allowed into the Gulf to catch the supposedly surplus stock in the Gulf. It depends upon whom you listen to as to whether or not there is a surplus of stock in the Gulf. The biologists tell us there is a surplus. The fishing companies and the fishermen of Prince Edward Island tell me their catches are going down. In fact, in 1982, with a total allowable catch in the Gulf of 31,000 metric tonnes, the total fishing capacity of the Gulf-based fleet caught only 26,000 metric tonnes. They were not able to catch the amount of fish there for the catching because the fish were not there to catch.

In 1983, with the same quota of 31,000 metric tonnes, with the same effort, the fleet in the Gulf caught a total of 21,000 metric tonnes. Their catch was down 20 per cent in 1983 from 1982. Does that indicate, Mr. Speaker, that there is a surplus of fish in the Gulf? To me it indicates there is not a surplus of fish in the Gulf, especially when you take into account the fact that, with the same fishing effort in 1983 over 1982, the total catch was down 20 per cent.

The other concern which the independents have is the marketing approach and the countervailing U.S. tariffs that may be applied if this company is set up and the U.S. sees it as a heavily subsidized Government-operated company.

I see you are indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker; I will conclude quickly. The bottom line in this Bill, as far as my appraisal of it is concerned, is purely and simply that there are just too many "anys" in this Bill. I have counted them and would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that there are 13 "anys" in the Bill? Those "anys" give the Government power to do anything it wants to do. Thirteen is a very unlucky number. Thirteen is the number of coils or loops on a hangman's noose. It is the independent processors in the fishery in Atlantic Canada who are afraid they will be hung out to dry by this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Comments, questions, answers? Debate.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity today to speak to Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic fisheries for the purpose of restructuring certain fishery enterprises. This Bill is obviously one of the most important pieces of legislation that has come forward as far as its impact on Atlantic Canada is concerned since I came to this House in 1980. I say it is important because it affects the lives of many people throughout Atlantic Canada, not only the lives of those who are primary producers—for instance, our fishermen—but also the lives of the plant workers, the lives of the processors, large and small, and, of course, the lives of the many people who are involved in the service industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but I do want to listen to him. Regrettably, the conversation behind the curtains is coming across his microphone.

Mr. Henderson: This Bill affects the lives of those many people who are involved in the service industries who service the fishermen, the plants, the structure of the plants and, the physical infrastructure which makes the total fishing industry what it is. I suppose since it is a Bill that is creating controversy and has a lot of changes in mind, that is why many of the speakers before me have made eloquent speeches. They made those speeches not altogether in terms of the over-all impact of all Atlantic Canada, but being politicians from all sides of the House Members are inclined to be protective of our own areas. That is exactly the way it should be.

I suppose that because it is a Bill that affects the lives of so many people, that is the reason for so many divergent opinions. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), mentioned there were 13 "anys" in the Bill. I did not take the time to count the "anys" but I must say that when you have a Bill with those kinds of powers it will cause a great deal of concern to those people involved. Probably it is not what is in the Bill so much that accounts for concerns but possibly what we do not see in the Bill.

I have been around legislatures for a number of years. I was in the provincial Government of P.E.I. before I came here. I understand it is very difficult to provide a piece of legislation that is all encompassing for debate in a House. Not only is it difficult but there has to be a certain amount of latitude left in any piece of legislation so as not to be so restrictive that when passed it will be no good because it will not fulfil what it is intended to do.

I do have a number of concerns, especially about the small independent processors and fishermen. I represent a riding in Prince Edward Island. In the Province of Prince Edward Island fisheries is the second largest industry next to agriculture. In my riding it is probably the number one industry. There are a number of processing plants which are large by the standards of Prince Edward Island but perhaps small by the standards of Atlantic Canada.

I would like to mention specifically a few of them. For example, there is Tignish Fisheries which is co-operatively owned by fishermen. A new plant has been built to replace the old one that was there for many years. It has been the lifeblood of the Village of Tignish. It employs about 200 plant workers. It probably purchases fish from upwards to 250 fishermen in the area. The service industry in Tignish and surrounding areas service both fishing vessels and the plant itself and would employ probably another 30 people to 40 people. It is an industry, a company or a co-operative which has a great deal of involvement in the area. It has been the example of a very well-managed business, probably the best in the Province of Prince Edward Island and perhaps the best co-operative business anywhere in Atlantic Canada. It took part in the federal program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, built its new facility and modernized. That Government program was available to all small business and industries. Also the co-operative members put a lot of work into the industry itself, not only the co-operative members of today but their forefathers and indeed their grandfathers.

Also there is the Acadian Fishermens Co-op, another company with one of the most modern plants by any standards in the country. However, it has a problem as a result of the lack of resource going to that plant. I could also speak of an independent company in my riding, Polar Seafoods. It employs less people but it almost works on a year-round basis. It processes lobsters, buys and ships eels, and processes smelts in the wintertime. Of course, it has a great impact upon my riding.

Another company in my riding is Paturels, a division of National Sea Products, one of the corporations which will be absorbed by this Bill. While that plant generally operates on a five-month to six-month basis, it is also important. Then there are a number of smaller processing plants, mainly buying stations throughout the riding, such as Alberton Fisheries, Milligan Fisheries, Howards Cove Seafoods and so on.

I would be very dishonest today if I rose in the Chamber and said that I was not concerned. I took the time to telephone and talk with the managers of most of those plants about the Bill. They told me about their concerns. I would also be dishonest if I did not indicate that at least three of the managers said that perhaps they do not understand the Bill. It is unfortunate that the industry found itself in its present situation and that the Bill had to come forward at this time. However it appears to be the lesser of many evils. They recognized that something had to be done for the industry.

The Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary indicated in their speeches that this was not a panacea for all ills of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. I am sure it is not. However, I have not heard any speeches in the House on this Bill—and I have read most of them—which provide any clear-cut alternative to the situation with which we are faced.

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) made an excellent speech yesterday on the restructuring Bill. He indicated in glowing terms what it meant to his area. I can fully agree with that because it means an awful lot to the Province of Newfoundland. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said that he was supporting it because it meant a lot to his area; he has many plants in his area. Other Hon. Members indicated to the House in glowing terms that although they were not totally satisfied, it was necessary at this time in order to save an industry which affects so many people. I have read the speech of the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). She expressed the same concerns as many of us. However, as I went through all these speeches, I could not find any suggestion better than what is contained in the Bill before us today.

I spent four years in the Province of Prince Edward Island as the provincial Minister of Fisheries. I remember back in 1977 when the federal Government, under the former Minister of Fisheries, negotiated and signed the 200-mile limit agreement for the country. I think everyone hailed it as a great step forward as far as the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada was concerned. However, I also remember the headlines in the Nova Scotia newspaper. The former Minister under the former Government and Ministers thereafter hailed it as such a tremendous agreement that they must immediately jump in, expand the industry, replace vessels and build new vessels. I remember the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for Canada telling them at that time to go slow, that we had the catching capacity. At that time there were talks about $200 million and even more to be invested.

I heard some Hon. Members opposite laying the total blame for the situation today on the shoulders of the federal Government. I do not agree that the total blame should fall on the shoulders of the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans. As a former Minister of Prince Edward Island, I know that we all tend to be parochial. Provincial politicians have to be parochial and we can understand that. They would not be doing their jobs if they were not.

Let me look at the management of some of the businesses. A number of years ago managers were scrambling for DREE grants to improve their facilities, to expand their facilities, to buy up quotas and so on. They put pressure upon the federal Government for larger quotas and more access to fish. I remember also the provincial Governments of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland saying that they want more. They are still at it. Very little came from the 200-mile agreement for the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or the Gulf-based ports and fishermen.

There are concerns. This Bill is totally necessary for the Province of Newfoundland. We are here today to discuss a situation. We can look back and blame whoever we like, but that is not why we are here. The situation has to be addressed as it is today. An industry in Newfoundland is facing total collapse. There are problems in Nova Scotia as well. What happens if we allow those companies to go bankrupt? What happens to the small independents? There is concern about inventories and fire sales. There may be some vehicles within Government to prevent that, but I have not seen any vehicle that would be satisfactory to all Governments and all people.

The independents have some concerns and I hope they will be addressed when the Bill goes to committee. One concern is what will happen with the market situation. Will the small independents have the same access to markets as the large corporations? These questions must be addressed. Government through its shares will be a partner in these corporations. They will control the allocations. Will these allocations be used to the advantage of the corporations, thereby creating unfair competition for the independent plants? That question must be addressed.

Will these corporations use the profits from one species to subsidize another species? For example, will profits from groundfish be used to subsidize lobster, or vice-versa, there by creating unfair competition? These concerns can be addressed. I do not think it is the intent of Government to create unfair competition. However, once this Bill goes through, there must be some direction as to how these Crown corporations operate. They must help the small businessmen and the fishermen rather than work in opposition to them. I am sure no Member would agree with Government creating unfair competition for the small businessman.

When this Bill goes to committee, I hope we will hear from the small independents, the fisheries groups and all those involved in the plants, the catching sector and the marketing of fish. I hope they will air their concerns before the committee and that the Minister and his staff will be able to alleviate some of these concerns.

That is the main problem for the small independent processors. If they are convinced that this Bill will not provide unfair competition, they will have no problem accepting it. Like the rest of us, they understand the impact of the fishery on all Atlantic Canadians. The processors and fishermen from my area realize what this Bill means to the Provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec. However, other Provinces than those around the Gulf expect a fair shake from this restructuring.

I do not want to prolong this debate. I hope all Provinces will take an objective view of this and bring their concerns before the committee. We are here to help all those involved in the industry, whether they be involved in catching, processing, marketing or in the servicing of the industry. I appreciate the opportunity to make these remarks.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment. I listened closely to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). He shares some of my concerns for the independents. Toward the end of his remarks, he made a statement on which I would like to comment. He referred to unfair competition for the independents as a result of this large corporation owned and controlled by the Government. I believe he was sincere when he said that this large corporation would not get involved in unfair competition.

I would point out that in the past Government-owned companies have become involved in unfair competition. Petro-Canada has taken out giant, full page ads in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere to advertise giant tire sales in direct competition with tire dealers in Atlantic Canada, paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. There have been $100,000 ads in local papers in direct, unfair competition with tire dealers in Atlantic Canada. I hope there will not be this type of unfair competition for independent processors in Prince Edward Island and other parts of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I will just respond briefly. I said in my speech that these concerns must be alleviated for the small, independent processors so that there will be no unfair competition. Over the last number of years, with regard to the setting of shore prices for lobster, for example, processors have been in competition with National Sea Products and Nickerson's which over the years have received tremendous sums of money from Government, far more than the small independents.

They have had to compete with those people. I said in my speech that sometimes the large corporations would use the profit from one section of their operation to try and put the small businessman out of business. That is not fair. We should look at that and ensure that competition is fair. The managers of the independent processors are not afraid of fair competition. We must do our best to ensure that competition is fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. The Chair has been made aware through the courtesy of some Hon. Members that there may be a wish to accommodate the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), who I understand has a plane to catch this afternoon. So far as I understand, it would be appropriate if I were to recognize that Member and call it one o'clock so that he might begin promptly at two. That understanding includes the idea that since there would have been two Government speakers in a row, I would look twice to the Official Opposition for Members to speak. I know that these consultations have been limited. Provided Hon. Members seem to be content, we will proceed that way.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, on the question that you have raised, the procedure that you have just outlined to the House will be entirely acceptable to those of us on the Opposition side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member. Accordingly, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) to be seen at two o'clock for purposes of debate.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by thanking my colleagues on the other side of the House, particularly the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), for allowing me to speak in this specific order. I will be brief in my remarks. However, I do believe it is important to place certain things on the record with regard to this Bill. It is certainly not my intention to hold up the passage of this Bill but to give it support.

I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, the earlier discussions we had with regard to the restructuring of the fisheries on the Atlantic coast, resulting from the Kirby report. One option certainly was to allow the companies as they existed at that time to declare bankruptcy and then to allow the private sector to pick up whetever pieces it could. That particular option, although it lent itself to the consideration of the Cabinet at that time, was not considered because of the dislocation it would cause, particularly among those who worked in the various plants. There would be a wide disruption throughout the Province.

Also, although it is important to have the private sector front and centre—and I hope eventually the private sector can regain its prominence in the fishery in Newfoundland—it seemed to a lot of us, including myself, that having the Government of Canada involved was the best option we could follow. Ensuring federal support would ensure the success of that particular company. Indeed, it was not clear how it could be done otherwise, in view of the fact that the investment required was obviously not readily available in the private sector. Therefore, I believe this option, although not perfect, is the best option to follow.

That view, of course, is shared by this Government and the Government of Newfoundland, I believe by the fishermen in Newfoundland, and indeed by a lot of the companies in Newfoundland. However, there are some small independent processors in the Province who have some concerns.

I believe the present arrangement is a good compromise and I want to congratulate this Government and the Government of Newfoundland for working out this particular compromise. I want to pay particular tribute to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané). Without him we would not have had the agreement we have now. Indeed, had he been allowed full rein at a much earlier date we would have had this settlement much earlier on. The judgment, concern and personality of the Minister was no small factor in arriving at this compromise. He is from rural Canada and understands what our Province is all about and what the fishermen and processors in the small communities need and want. I pay tribute to his personal work in bringing about this compromise we have.

However, there are some concerns among the independent processors in the Province. Their fear is that they will be swallowed up by this giant company and eased out of the marketplace. We have to assure them that is not going to be the case. I for one will ensure that once this agreement is in place and both Governments have put the new company into operation, the interests of the small, independent fish merchants in Newfoundland are looked after, both in processing and marketing. They have survived the recession. They have prospered, survived and provided employment. It is the big players in the industry who have conducted themselves in such a way as to need this help. That is regrettable, and all the more reason why we have to make sure that even though this does not address in particular terms the interests of the small independent processors in the Province, those concerns have to be addressed and I am sure will be once this restructuring is in place.

I am also concerned about the Kirby report recommendation for what is called the resource-short plant program. Plants along the northeast coast of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador have been seasonal operations principally because there has not been the supply of fish readily available. A lot of these plants depend on the inshore, small boat fishery and the supply of fish has been such as not to allow them to operate for the major part of the year. This throws fishermen and plant workers on unemployment insurance, which they do not want, and the only way to resolve the problem is to ensure a steady supply of fish throughout the greater part of the year. That can be done only through a supply of offshore fish with a dragger operation. There have been negotiations in the Province between those who own the draggers and trawlers and those who own the small plants along the northeast coast with regard to ensuring that steady supply of offshore fish. There is a stalemate at the moment, no agreement, and I want to say we must have that agreement. We must have assurance of supply for the northeast coast and for the coast of Labrador if we are to ensure the prosperity of those small plants and communities, indeed of that whole area. I hope putting this agreement into place, the restructuring, and the creating of a new company, will be a positive factor in bringing about an agreement to deliver offshore fish to those resource-short plants.

I want to address something not contained in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, which gives me a great deal of concern. It is an idea that I for one have had for a number of years now, although it did not rest solely with me. There are a number of other people in the Province who had it as well, including the president of the fishermen's union. The idea was for a northern development corporation to operate those plants in the northern part of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador which were not being operated very well or at all by private enterprise. The Government would create for them and that area north of the 50th parallel a special northern development corporation. That idea is not contained in this particular Bill although it was recommended in the Kirby report. After looking at a number of options for northern Newfoundland and Labrador, his recommendation is as follows:

> Amend the Saltfish Act to allow the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to buy, process and market fish and fish products in addition to saltfish in that part of the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundalnd north of 50° and in Labrador and the Québec north shore of the Gulf. In particular, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation might purchase and operate the plants such as the one it operated in the summer of 1982 at St. Anthony, though it would not have any monopoly on the purchase, processing or marketing of uncured fish in this area.

In the summer of 1982, Mr. Speaker, Fishery Products decided it would close its plant at St. Anthony. The people there were left with no place to land and process their fish, so the Government of Canada asked the Saltfish Corporation to step in. They did so, operated the plant well and at a profit. Certainly for several years before it had been operating at a loss. What Mr. Kirby is saying is that we want that idea to continue to be enshrined in legislation and to continue in the foreseeable future for the people of that area. What he says to supplement and support his recommendation is as follows:

> The key to economic development in the area is to ensure that the fishery is organized for the benefit of local participants, and that cross-subsidization takes place internal to the local area. Thus, for example, profits from shrimp allocations might be used to cross-subsidize losses on groundfish plants, or revenues from possible over-the-side sales could be channelled into investments in shore processing facilities and infrastructure.

He goes on to say:

> The Task Force favours the use of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation (CSC) as the 'designated instrument' for fisheries, economic, social and community development in the northern area of Newfoundland and Québec. However, we do not recommend that it be given a monopoly over fish processing or marketing in this area.
> The vulnerability of the area to outside decisions not in the best interests of the area became clear this spring with the closure of the plant in St. Anthony—a problem that was resolved only by federal government intervention to re-open the plant. This experience showed how well plants can be operated if all concerned appreciate that they are working for themselves and their community rather than for the benefit of a distant head office.

He then says:

> We favour a change in the mandate of the CSC over the option of a more broadly based development corporation because the Saltfish Corporation is already operating in the area and because a new agency would take time to set up. Moreover, a new agency would create another level of bureaucracy that would have to co-ordinate (or be co-ordinated by) a multitude of federal and provincial agencies. We believe it would be preferable to use the present fisheries Crown corporation, with its existing expertise and presence in the area, to act as the agent for change, with its activities, and those of other federal and provincial agencies, co-ordinated by existing mechanisms.

● (1420)

He also says:

> We reject the view that the change in the mandate of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation would result in its special role eventually creeping into other areas. Its role would be defined in legislation, and any expansion of the geographic area to which its enlarged mandate would apply would require amendments to that legislation.

After having looked at options, Kirby is clearly on record as saying that the best, easiest, quickest, most profitable and effective option in the long term is to amend the mandate of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to allow it to act as the agent for change in that particular area.

I would like to talk about that particular area. A lot of the Members in this House will not know it, but it is an area which I would term as one of the most disadvantaged in Canada. It may be economically poor but I would not say it is the poorest. It is disadvantaged in terms of development and the possibility of taking advantage of the vast resources off its shore.

The richest cod stocks we have are off the coast of Labrador. Yet Labrador fishermen and plant workers probably benefit least of all from those stocks. There are giant shrimp stocks which only now, thanks to the previous Minister of Fisheries, are we able to take advantage of. There are char and salmon. Yet in spite of having those stocks, the development has not taken place.

We have to look after the companies and the structures that are in place, but I intend to see that attention is paid to those who live in disadvantaged areas of northern Newfoundland and Labrador. If this Party is serious about its philosophy of helping first those who need help most, it will look at the situation in northern Newfoundland and Labrador and will give a lot of support to this particular idea.

The Province of Newfoundland has said that it is in favour of the Saltfish Corporation per se, and is not against having it as a vehicle. The Premier said in a speech in the House of Assembly recently that although the Province supports in principle the idea of a northern fisheries development corporation, it feels that there have to be checks and balances to ensure a strong provincial and federal influence in fisheries development. He feels the current amendment does not offer the Province those checks and balances.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to see an amendment to this particular Bill which will put into practice what Kirby has recommended. The Government of Newfoundland has said it would like more time to study this matter. At a future date I may propose an amendment to this Bill which will put into practice what Kirby has recommended but which will not proclaim that amendment in law until such time as the Provinces of Newfoundland and Quebec, if this is to apply in that Province too, have been consulted.

Possibly there are other ways of doing what we want to do but I have not been shown them to the present time. I can accept that people may need more time to study this particular matter. However, I cannot accept that those plants will not open next Spring. At this time there is a great danger that if something is not done, not only will St. Anthony not open, but there will be plants along the Labrador coast which will not open next year. I cannot support or tolerate that, Mr. Speaker.

It is my intention to put forward at a later time an amendment that could possibly be of help. That amendment will propose changing the Saltfish Corporation Act to allow it to do what Kirby has recommended and what we believe should be done. If that particular vehicle is not the answer, I hope some other mechanism can be found. Until such other mechanism is found, I can only stand behind what the Kirby report has recommended.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I support this particular Bill. I believe it should be speedily passed by the House because it is extremely important to our Province. The fishery is the mainstay of Newfoundland. Possibly it is not the most lucrative industry that we have, but it is the most important in terms of culture and heritage as well as economically. The communities in rural Newfoundland and Labrador which are based on the fishery capture the heritage that has been passed on to us from the past. Without a strong fishing industry the very communities that give Newfoundland its unique culture and flavour would be very severely jeopardized. I hope this Bill can get speedy passage and this restructuring idea can be put into practice very swiftly indeed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members seeking to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the idea put forward by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) that he would like to see a northern fisheries development corporation put in to effect to look after the fishing industry off the coast of Labrador and possibly northern Newfoundland. Could the Hon. Member elaborate on the way that such a corporation might be controlled? Who would sit on its board of directors? Does he envisage both provincial and federal membership? If such an organization ever came into being, how would it be financed? How much money is he looking for? Is it $50 million or $100 million? Where would that money come from? Would some of it come from the fishing operators? Would some of it come from the Province? What would he expect the federal Government to put into the kitty?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that question was asked. The Government of Canada has already approved $15 million for the capitalization of this new venture. Although it has not yet gone through all of the Government channels that money has been approved by the Government of Canada and is ready to be spent on the capitalization of this new company once approval has been received. It is understood that plants would have to be bought and upgrading would have to be done.

The details regarding how it would operate have not been worked out. We are talking about the principle of setting up a northern development corporation. I can give an example of how the Canadian Saltfish Corporation has operated in the past, and that is to use agents. The Canadian Saltfish Corporation has operated as a clearing house for agents in the private sector up to the present time. It has told small companies that if they catch and process saltfish they will be the agents of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and the Corporation will buy it from them. The Corporation will market the fish and if it gets a better price than it pays the fishermen, that money goes back to the actual fishermen involved.

I think the fishermen in Newfoundland would say that the Canadian Saltfish Corporation has been a blessing to them. All through this time when the fishery itself was suffering severely, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and saltfish market was a positive force in the fishery in Newfoundland. In 1982 the Canadian Saltfish Corporation ran the plant at St. Anthony. It had a subsidiary company. Although we did not have an actual board of directors from the community, there was an advisory group in the community that advised the Saltfish Corporation.

I would be open and flexible regarding how this would operate. I fully support the idea of the Government of Newfoundland having a say in this because fish plants are a provincial operation. I welcome the co-operation that we have seen between the two Governments. I would not want to see it dissipate. I believe there are ways of ensuring that the provincial voice is heard in the operation of this particular company.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). My question relates to that underlying misgiving that I detected in his comments relating to the uncertainty of the role that the individual processor can have under this Bill.

• (1430)

Given the deplorable record of his Government in handling the fisheries problems off the East Coast, what gives him any encouragement at all to feel that under this Bill, where there is nothing explicit in this regard, due account will be made for these individual processors? I would like to hear his comments. I suspect that he has real misgivings here that the Government may not take into account the proper role of the individual processor?

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, my approach is to fight one battle at a time. I do not think we can solve all of the problems today. I believe we have laboured long and hard to get where we are today.

I said that this Bill is not perfect but it is the best that we can do. It is the best that the human mind could come up with and the best on which two Governments could agree. It is a step we had to take today and I think we should take it quickly because I believe it is important for the industry in Newfoundland.

It does not answer all the concerns. I do have concerns about the small, independent processors. However, I will say that they have survived in the past in spite of the fact that we know what has happened to the larger companies. I think the Government of Canada has been cognizant of their operations and indeed I know specific instances where Government programs were used to support the small, independent processors.

I do have some concerns. I do not believe that all my concerns are answered today by this Bill but that is a battle we will have to fight at a later time. All of us who are concerned about those small, independent processors will have to make sure that within the mechanism that is set up and within Government policy generally, those small processors who have survived and have given employment to small communities are not left out in the cold but are looked after. I believe that very firmly and strongly.

I make the commitment to the Hon. Member that I, for one, will see to it in the days to come that their interests are not neglected but indeed very much looked after.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in hearing the Hon. Member from Newfoundland talk about the importance of the fisheries in terms of the heritage of Newfoundland, the importance of these corporations and agencies and why we in Parliament should be very supportive of him.

My brief comment is that I am just a farm boy from the Prairies and I do not know much about fish. However, I support what he says and the way he said it with respect to the necessity to recognize this as an important part of the heritage of the people of Newfoundland. I am hopeful that the House will be very supportive of helping the fishermen.

Why did he not support us when we talked about the importance of the Crow rate to the heritage of the Prairies? Why did we not get the same kind of support from him? I put that in the form of a question because I am curious why we could not persuade him to support us for something that was very important to the heritage of our country and to what our pioneers built? Why was the Member not very supportive of us and would he be more supportive of us in the future?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not obliged to answer a question.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his support for this particular Bill and for what I am trying to accomplish. However, I would have to say to him, as he said, that I am from another part of the country and perhaps I do not fully understand the implications of what the Crow is doing. But in answer to his question, I would just read from an editorial in the Edmonton Journal:

> The federal NDP fought for the old Crow as though it were fighting for its own life—which it is in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.
> The federal Tories counselled delay as they tried to come down on both sides of the fence.
> In the end, the Liberals came to Western Canada's rescue, mostly under the leadership of former Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin. For this, the Liberals deserve our thanks.

I put that on the record as being as impartial, I suggest, as one would want to get—certainly from my perspective—from the Edmonton Journal. If it says good things about the Liberals it should not be questioned. That would be my answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One short comment because time is almost up.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I do not care what the Edmonton paper says; I want to know what the Member feels because I would like to support him and what is important to his heritage. I want to know how he feels as a Member about my heritage and my part of the country.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, in order to accomplish things in the long term sometimes tough decisions must be taken which are painful in the short term. We have experienced this in the Atlantic region. I can tell the Hon. Member that in the same way he may feel some people are experiencing this in the West, we have seen changes in CN Express in Newfoundland. We have seen some changes in the marine coastal operations. We have also seen a lot of improvements. We in the Atlantic Provinces feel that we should be putting our money into what is important in the long term for our area. While that may cause some change and short-term pain, I believe in the long term that the politics that are put into place will be beneficial.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for that exchange which took place just now because I think we must regard this particular legislation in the same way as the Prairies regarded the Crow Bill. Fisheries and fish are to the East Coast, and particularly to Labrador, what grain and grain shipment are to the Prairies. There is no question about that in my mind.

Whether this Bill is doing the right thing or not is another matter but it is an important Bill. I call Bill C-170 the FishCan Bill because I think we are looking toward the emergence of a creature of Crown proportions which we might call FishCan. My initial comments on this Bill relate to the unusual form which this Bill takes. I do not know how many Members have noticed that it is almost in the form of a resolution rather like the Constitution with all its "whereases". In fact, there are four whereas clauses before we come to the Bill's short title. I examined a couple of Bills in the consolidated statutes to see whether there is any parallel to other legislation. It may very well be that when this Bill is published in the Statutes of Canada, the preamble will vanish and it will begin with the short title. However, I still find it rather unusual that there should be these reasons for bringing the Bill forward through the "whereas clauses". I hope the Minister or some other Member opposite will be able to explain that to us. This Bill has been brought forward in an unusual form.

I wish to confine myself to three or four comments on specific areas related to this Bill. My first comment concerns a caution that we must all bear in mind. We are seeing emerge from this Bill a monstrous creature of two Governments which, by what must be a very formal agreement, are deciding to act in concert for the salvation of an important industry. During the preparation of my speech I saw in the material the notion that this Bill is not going to create a Crown corporation. I find that extremely difficult to understand. Perhaps it is a two-Crown corporation since the federal and the provincial Governments are entering into the agreement together. It will have to be a double Crown corporation similar to the dual monarchy in the Austrian-Hungarian empire. Perhaps that is why I have read that it will not be a Crown corporation.

Nevertheless, the manner in which this particular creature of Governments will be acting will be similar to a Crown corporation. This leads me to the conclusion and fear that this may just be a model for something that is going to come about on the West Coast as well.

● (1440)

In this connection I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the reply made yesterday by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to a question put to him by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller). As reported at page 28940 of Hansard, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans replied to that question as follows:

> I hope that early in the new year I will be able to put before cabinet an important program to give a new start to the Pacific fisheries, exactly as we have been doing for the Atlantic fisheries.

I am sure the NDP will be delighted at this particular operation. It looks very much as though we are going to have two Crown corporations, one on the East Coast and one on the West Coast. I think though that it will be done in the face of a great deal of opposition.

The direction by Governments of industries of this sort is contrary to the whole philosophy of the fishermen on the West Coast. I speak with some knowledge of one particular group, and I venture to say that even the UFAWU might have some misgivings at being bunched under the same Crown with a number of other enterprisers in that part of Canada in an effort to model, direct, control and put fisheries into a common mould on the West Coast. I wonder how, given the dreadful record of this Government in managing anything in the enterprise field, it should have the temerity to stand before us and bring forward another management technique. However, it was a decision in many respects, I suppose, which was forced upon them by the consequences of past performance. I will come to that in a few minutes. In order to bail itself out and to bail out those enterprises which the Government has virtually destroyed, it has had to resort to this particular means.

I do think it is worth entering a word of caution at this stage about the impact and the long-term significance of a move of this sort—the creation of a Crown corporation, with virtually unlimited powers, to enter a field of enterprise.

My next comment relates to a peculiar what I think must be described as a conflict, if not of laws, at least a conflict of Bills. In Bill C-170 we have the proposal that the federal and provincial Governments enter into agreements to run a fisheries enterprise. They are doing this in any manner that results in control in fact, whether directly through the ownership of shares, stocks, equity or securities. In other words, there will be an equity position of Governments in this operation.

I see in the Newfoundland agreement, the only one so far of which there is any text, that the proportions as between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland of the common shares of the enterprise shall be for the Government of Canada to hold 60 per cent and for the Government of Newfoundland to hold 25 per cent, with the remainder partly being held by the Bank of Nova Scotia and a small proportion being held by the employees. More employee participation would obviously be welcomed. But the point I am trying to make—and I think this needs to be underlined—is that the Government of Canada, once the restructuring is completed, will hold the shares in the proportion of 60 per cent, with 20 per cent held by the Government of Newfoundland. That is as foreseen by an agreement that will depend on Bill C-170.

I have before me Bill S-31 which we shall be seeing, no doubt, in the not too distant future. I would like to read Clause 3 of that Bill into the record because it deals with limitations. It reads as follows:

> Subject to section 6, no government shall hold or beneficially own more than ten per cent of the shares of any class of shares of a corporation.

Let me point out that the Bill states 10 per cent. We are talking on the one hand of 60 per cent ownership by the federal Government and 25 per cent ownership by the Government of Newfoundland in Bill C-170. But here is Bill S-31 which has a specific purpose in mind, but it has limitations of ownership in any corporation and any Government. The definitions make that quite clear as follows:

> "government" means Her Majesty in right of a province and includes
> (a) an agent of Her Majesty in that right, and
> (b) a body corporate that is controlled by Her Majesty in that right.

That limits that Government's participation to 10 per cent. We are talking about an agreement that has already been concluded, according to the Government of Newfoundland, giving a 25 per cent share in this enterprise. I have a funny feeling that this Government does not know what it is doing. Its right hand does not know what its left hand is doing. Mainly it is left-handed; I mean that in the philosophical sense. I am not talking about ambidexterity at all; I am talking about philosophical leftists. That is the problem. I guess it has two left hands and one of the left hands does not know what the other one is doing.

Ten per cent as against 25 per cent causes me considerable concern, Mr. Speaker. We will in the course of time, no doubt, be asked to look at Bill S-31. Unless we are aware that Bill C-170 has already accorded to a Government a holding of more than 10 per cent in a corporation, then we may just blunder into accepting S-31 without thinking.

There is one proviso we have to recognize also. This is the other side of the story; it is to be found in Clause 6. Clause 3 does say "subject to Section 6". Clause 6(2) of Bill S-31 reads:

The Governor in Council may by order declare that setion 3 or 5 or both shall not apply in respect of any corporation or class of corporations specified in the order.

Section 3 above referred to is Clause 3 I read earlier. The Governor in Council "may" order. In other words, this is not going to be a parliamentary decision; this will be a Government decision. If Bill S-31 were to be passed and be matched side by side with Bill C-170, we would find that the Government would eventually catch up to itself and that it had passed some inconsistent legislation. Then, without reference to Parliament, it will by order declare that Clause 3 shall not apply. This is a danger which I think is worth drawing attention to.

My next comment relates to international agreements. I noticed something in the agreement worked out with Newfoundland, and this is drawn from a press release issued by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans dated October 31. There is provision in the agreement the federal Government worked out with the Province of Newfoundland for the creation of a resources utilization task force composed of equal representation from the two levels of Government. One of the prime objectives of the mandate of this task force will be to review and report upon, first, the displacement of foreign fishing effort and, second, the harvesting of underutilized species and the development of markets for those species.

This takes us back a few years to the days just before the unilateral declaration by the Government—and it is an honourable declaration—of a 200-mile exclusive economic zone, in particular the 200-mile fishing zone. Prior to that declaration there was forethought; there is no question about that. However, what was behind the conclusion of the agreements with foreign countries for the exploitation of stocks, particularly on the East Coast, was the assurance that the countries with which Canada was concluding agreements would be on the same side as Canada in the discussions relating to the Law of the Sea Conference. That was a worthy objective.

What happened in order to buy that support for subsequent meetings of the Law of the Sea, which is very important to us, was that certain countries, some for historic reasons and some for perhaps philosophical reasons, were granted authority to fish stocks in our waters within the 200-mile limit, stocks which were not utilized by Canadian offshore fishermen. I am speaking only of the East Coast at the moment. It may be of interest to Hon. Members opposite, who may not have looked into the matter very deeply, to learn that the countries with which Canada concluded agreements to use surplus stocks and stocks Canadians did not use, did not have to process them in Canada. I will come back to that in a moment, but they were to take off the stock for use in their own countries or for use in barter deals with third countries.

The countries with which Canada made arrangements at that time were Bulgaria, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and Romania, an interesting collection. In addition, of course, there were the historical fishermen off the East Coast—Denmark, France, United Kingdom, Portugal and Spain. Probably Portugal and Spain were fishing off the East Coast before any Canadians were here. They had their historical rights. As for Romania, I wonder. Was Romania fishing there before Canada was settled? Was Bulgaria fishing there before Canada was settled? What about Cuba? Perhaps Cuba, through Spain, was fishing there. Were the German Democratic Republic and Poland fishing off the East Coast before Canada was settled?

Mr. Waddell: The German Democratic Republic was looking for red snappers.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is probably what they were after. As a matter of fact, they were fishing for capelin and other unused and surplus stocks. What was forgotten in the conclusion of those agreements was that once those surplus stocks were caught, they should have been brought to the mainland or to Newfoundland to be processed. That is part of the dismal record of the Government. It did not ensure that what was caught in our waters was processed on our shores. Now we find that it has to resort to extraordinary devices such as dual Crown corporations which have been devised in order to rescue an ailing but important industry.

I do not deny—and I mentioned it right at the beginning—that the fishing industry on the East Coast is extremely important, as it is on the West Coast. However, I am talking mainly about the East Coast because we are dealing with an East Coast matter. This is another aspect of the Bill which has not been given proper attention. Are you feeling uneasy, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Your time has just about expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That being so, I thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and will conclude my remarks. I have more, though.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). I was very interested in his presentation and in the facts to which he referred about the amounts of Canadian fish being taken by countries that cannot claim to have historic fishing rights off Newfoundland, countries such as Bulgaria and Romania. If the Hon. Member suddenly became Secretary of State for External Affairs or Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, how would he approach the problem? Presumably we have agreements with these countries that cannot be abrogated out of hand. How would he go about reducing the catch taken by these other countries?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for his question. It would not be an easy matter to abrogate treaties. I do not think treaties can be abrogated. Canada has no tradition of abrogating treaties. However, the treaties are for a term and when they come up for renegotiation, the most suitable manner of renegotiating them would be to allow the take to continue, provided the processing was done on Canadian territory.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short question for the Hon. Member. It follows on the heels of something which he raised. It deals with the matter of putting their position on the record. We probably share some common positions on the matter. However, since he raised it and since there are many outstanding issues, would the Hon. Member put on the record his Party's position on cancellation of B fishing licences? What kind of action would his Party take against chartered banks that have been very difficult on fishermen over the last couple of years with vessel seizures in some of the most nefarious circumstances which could be conjured up?

What is its position on the removal of such things as the punitive tax on fuel which is extremely difficult for fishermen? What position has his Party put forward on that? What is its position on the delay in providing adequate harbour facilities? As he knows, the fishing industry is under tremendous strain. What is his Party's position on icing facilities, harbour and mooring facilities? We know its position on restraint, but where does it stand on assisting and developing the economy? What is his position on fleet reduction and fleet structure when the reduction is complete? Finally, what is the position of his Party on royalty and the proposal for finnage tax? The previous speaker did raise the spectre of parallels between East Coast solutions and West Coast solutions. His Party had better put some of those positions on the record very quickly so that people can make judgments.

● (1500)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My friend from the New Democratic Party is, of course, playing a game this afternoon. This is a very serious debate on a Bill which is designed to alleviate a crisis situation in Atlantic Canada. The question that my NDP friend from the West Coast of British Columbia is asking of my colleague who just spoke has almost no relevance whatsoever to what we are discussing today. He knows perfectly well that on all of those questions there has been plenty of evidence in committee and in other places and at meetings I have attended as well as press releases I have made on the West Coast which has given adequate answers. I urge, Mr. Speaker, that you exercise your prerogative and rule him out of order.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hopefully the Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) will keep his comments short.

Mr. Skelly: Yes, Mr. Speaker, very definitely. The problems in some areas are common to fishermen on both coasts. Second, the previous speaker raised the matter in a somewhat flippant and frivolous manner. If they continue to do that, they should put up or shut up on the issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has a brief period in which to comment, if he cares to do so. However, the Chair would caution him on relevance.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I shall be absolutely relevant to the questions that were asked.

Mr. Skelly: Don't flounder now.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am no piker, I can assure you of that. The quickest way to find out what are the policies of a Progressive Conservative Government would be to support the Progressive Conservatives in a call for an election. Then you will find out that there is a much more co-ordinated and rational policy on the West Coast and on the East Coast for the fisheries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Hon. Member for Western Arctic rising for questions and answers?

Mr. Nickerson: For debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I was concerned that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was standing both this morning and again this afternoon. I do not have in front of me a list of speakers. If the Hon. Member for Western Arctic is agreeable, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am reminded that earlier today I indicated that there would be two Official Opposition speakers as a result of the consent that was given in the House. Perhaps I should look the other way. I will ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway to stand down for a moment and I will recognize, pursuant to the agreement made earlier today, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I enter this debate unhampered by any degree of first-hand knowledge of the issue we are discussing. Therefore, I can assure you that my views will be entirely objective. I also want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that despite my name being Nickerson, I have absolutely no conflict of interest with this Bill. As far as I know, I have no relationship with the well-renowned Nickersons of Nova Scotia who have had a long and honourable association with the fisheries business. In discussing the Bill before us today, Bill C-170, which seeks to facilitate the reorganization of the Atlantic Fisheries, I want to go back a bit in history.

Canada is extremely well endowed with natural resources. Not only do we have fish on the East Coast, West Coast and the inland areas, we also have minerals, oil and gas and a lot of good agricultural land. Despite this endowment by nature, we are not the world's wealthiest country, which we should be. I suspect that our climatic conditions may have a little bit to do with this, but I am sure that the main reason in the other resource industries is the same as in the fishing industry, namely that we have been pursuing the wrong policies for many years. The Government of the day always wants to concentrate on those sexy industries in central Canada.

We get carried away with computers and microchip technology and forget that probably the real wealth of Canada is in the resource industries, agriculture, timber husbandry, mineral development and, the matter we are discussing today, fisheries. Europeans first came to Canadian East Coast waters in the sixteenth century, I believe, to exploit the fantastic potential of the fisheries in that area. They have been there ever since.

Just a few years ago on the occasion of the extension of Canada's fishing boundary up to the 200-mile limit, I remember reading in publications such as the Financial Post that the future of the Canadian East Coast was assured because these moves had been taken. It looked like that part of the country was to become the most wealthy part of Canada. I wonder why this never took place. It never worked out the way the predictions said it would happen.

I guess that costs continued to escalate in large part because of the Government's inflationary policy, high interest rate policy and taxation on petroleum products, which are so important to the fishery, and also because of its high income tax on fishermen. The Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), who I would have suspected would have had the best interests of fishermen at heart when he was Minister of National Revenue, came down harder than any previous Minister of National Revenue in Canada on the fishermen whom he represented. Therefore the costs have increased.

The market demand for the products of the East Coast fishery unfortunately has not escalated in the way we had hoped. Perhaps some of the problems brought to light by my friend, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), such as the continued volume of East Coast fish being taken by foreign competitors, has something to do with that. Because the market demand has not been there, prices have not risen as we anticipated. In fact, they decreased considerably in many instances.

My colleagues from the East Coast described the failure of the Liberal Government fisheries policy much better than I could do. They demonstrated in this House how these failures of Liberal policy have exacerbated a bad market situation. We come to the present time where the major part of East Coast fishery, the deep sea industry and the operators of large plants, are bankrupt to all intents and purposes. Faced with this question, what is it that a Government should do? I guess that if we could look at this in strictly academic terms and run the whole fisheries of Canada out of the building across the way from here and did not have to bother with the social issues the way they should be faced, the Government would have to do very little or nothing. We could let the fishing companies, the processors and the banks take their losses. I suspect that after awhile, the industry would reorganize itself. It would not need a Bill from this House. Somebody would eventually come along and buy out the assets at ten cents on the dollar or whatever the market value of those assets were. Some of the smaller marginal plants would probably be closed down and the purchaser would get the industry going again. Perhaps some of successful smaller companies that exist at the present time would take over some of the plants that are not operated economically by the larger companies.

It is unfortunate but true that we cannot allow that to happen. I do not think any Government of Canada could allow that to happen because, Sir, the social consequences would be disastrous. I listened carefully to the speech made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Tobin) yesterday, and I am convinced that what he said could happen in those parts of Newfoundland that he represents would come true were the Government to do nothing. Therefore, the Government must do something and must be seen to be trying to do something.

The plan that we have before us now would see possibly two large fish companies coming into existence with part Government ownership at the provincial and federal levels in which the bank and the fishing companies would have some interest. It would appear that an agreement has been reached in the case of the Province of Newfoundland, but unfortunately it appears that negotiations have already broken down with the Province of Nova Scotia.

I have listened to the debate so far in the House, Mr. Speaker, and I have found it quite interesting. It is a debate that has not broken down along Party lines. It has broken down along geographic lines with Hon. Members representing the deep sea areas where these large companies operate generally being very supportive of the Bill. The two Hon. Members who represent the constituencies of St. John's East and St. John's West, for instance, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries have spoken in favour of the Bill. We on this side of the House have listened to those arguments and see the reason in them. For those reasons, we will not oppose this Bill on second reading.

However, we on this side of the House have also listened to Members such as the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) and several Hon. Members from Prince Edward Island on both sides of the House. We have listened to the Hon. Members for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and South West Nova (Miss Campbell). The Hon. Member for South West Nova was extremely vocal on this issue yesterday. These Hon. Members representing the inshore areas and the small plant areas have a very different perception of the Bill.

The people in those areas are scared of what might result from this Bill if it is taken to its logical conclusion in the years to follow. They see a very large Government backed competitor possibly becoming a monopoly. They see these large organizations having a great power in the marketplace that is not available to the smaller operators. I can see that possibly, a couple of years down the road, the Government will be coming back to the House of Commons asking for an exclusive monopoly on marketing by these corporations. I certainly would be very scared of that if I were a small fisherman or small plant owner or operator.

The Government, Sir, controls all of the rules of the game in the fishing business. It controls the quotas and the regulations governing the way in which one might fish. The Government decides where improvements such as wharves and harbours might be built. This would cause me great concern were I to be a small fisherman or small fish plant operator. Those small fishermen and small fish plant operators are scared of the competition from highly subsidized Government backed competitors.

In a way it is ironic, or perhaps it shows how the market system operates fairly well when left alone, that many of these small operators, even with today's depressed prices, have still been successful, especially those who concentrate their business on a selected area of the market. We have heard of the experience of plants specializing in lobsters or scallops, for instance.

I believe that the fears voiced by these people are fully justified. I have had some experience with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. The experience we have had in the West and the North is that when the Government first comes in, it is not satisfied until it gets full control of the market. It keeps getting a little bit more and a little bit more control until it ends up with a full and complete monopoly. All of the small fish buyers in my constituency were swallowed up by this Crown corporation and the industry has been nationalized. The fisherman has no alternative but to sell his product to the nationalized company at the prices it dictates. There is no freedom left in the industry.

If the Liberals stay in office in this country, and I do not believe there is much of a possibility for that to happen, then I am sure that what has happened with the FFMC would also happen on the East Coast. This, Sir, is feared by many, including myself, as being the first step in a wholesale nationalization of the East Coast industry. If I have time, toward the end of my presentation I will make suggestions for possible amendments to the Bill which would see that these worst fears will not be realized.

As well, Sir, judging by the experience I have had with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, I can guarantee that nobody but nobody is worse at selling fish than those in the Government. Bureaucrats simply cannot sell fish. They are not equipped to sell fish. There is no way that they can sell fish.

There was once a viable industry in the Slave Lake area of my constituency. People went fishing in that lake and in the inland lakes nearby with the idea that they could make money, and they usually did. However, since the Government took the industry over, there is no longer a viable industry. It is entirely dependent upon subsidies. If those subsidies were to be taken away, the industry would die overnight. It is more like a welfare system than it is like a living industry at the present time. I would not want to see that happen to our friends on the East Coast of Canada.

The plan that is now before us was described by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) as being the lesser of many evils, and I am inclined toward that way of thinking. If we must accept that plan, then let us examine the Bill to see if it does what the Government says it is designed to do or if it can be improved. My first observation is that this is a typical Liberal Bill. It is designed to grant the Government wide-sweeping powers. The Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) spoke about these powers in a great deal of detail so I will not repeat what he said.

The Bill seeks to give the Government virtually carte blanche authority to do anything the Government wants with the East Coast fishery industry. Not only that, Sir, the Bill goes on forever and ever. The authority that the Government is seeking from Parliament never comes to an end but goes on forever. The Government says it needs extraordinary powers in order to reorganize the fisheries at the present time, but this Bill would give the Government those powers forever. The Government would have those powers not simply in the case of the present emergency but forever and ever. I think that that is unacceptable.

This Bill needs a very critical examination in committee. For instance, Subclause 8(1) gives the Government authority to invest up to $138 million until March 31, 1985. However, if we look at Subclause (2), we will find that there is no limit in the future. The Government can go through the normal Appropriation Act procedure whereby that Act is deemed to have been approved even if we do not debate it in the House for five minutes. So there is no real control over those appropriations. Government can come back in 1986 and put $300 million into it, and the following year a billion dollars, and there is nothing that Parliament can do.

I believe there has to be within this Bill a guaranteed maximum spending limit so that if the Government wants to exceed that, it has to come back to Parliament. I am pleased to see there is a limit on the amount of guarantees it can make. However, in my opinion, a limit should certainly be there in respect of the amount of cash it can spend and invest. To assuage the fear of back door nationalization, which has been spelled out by those Members who represent the smaller aspect of the industry, there should be within this Bill a specified limit of Government participation in any one of these entities which they intend to create.

My last point is that if we look at the Bill in its present form, it is like a lobster trap. We can get into it very easily, Sir, but it is going to be very difficult ever to get out unless we make the necessary amendments. There must be a way specified within the Bill as to the way it will end and the way we can get the East Coast fishing industry back into private hands where it really belongs. I would foresee a schedule laid out in the Act where the maximum participation which I mentioned previously would decline over a number of years. There would be a declining maximum participation specified over a period of a number of years.

Most important, there must be a termination date as to when the authority, which the Government is asking be granted to it by Parliament, comes to an end. By that date, the Government should make sure that the industry is returned to private hands and that the state no longer has an equity position in the East Coast fishery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could say right away that I find it very ironic that what we are really faced with here is a Bill which nationalizes a very troubled East Coast fishing industry, at least the major part of the industry, creating the largest fish company in the world out of the rubble of the Nickerson National Sea empire. This is done by a Liberal Minister and that famous or infamous wheeler-dealer, Mr. Michael Kirby, and by two Conservative Premiers in Nova Scotia and in Newfoundland, and which is supported in the House today by the Conservative Party. I find it ironic because if we in the New Democratic Party were to do that, we would be condemned for being nasty socialists who were nationalizing a troubled company. Yet here are all these Hon. Members supporting this Bill.

I believe the Bill is a good idea and I am going to say something about that in my remarks. However, I want to say right away, Mr. Speaker, that, as the last speaker admitted at the beginning of his speech, I also am not an expert on fish. I am a long way away from being an expert in the fisheries. As a matter of fact, my riding is probably the only riding in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia which does not front on the ocean. However, I did want to say a few words today because I am very sympathetic to the Atlantic Canada region. I find certain similarities with my area of the country, namely, British Columbia. It is a region where one industry dominates, as in our part of the country where we have the forest and mining industries.

I can sympathize with the people of Atlantic Canada who, I am told, out of a population of two million, have about 100,000 directly employed in the fishing industry. Of course, many other people are employed as a result of spin-offs from the fishing industry. If you consider that there are nine million people in Ontario and about 75,000 are auto workers, which is one of the major industries in Ontario, you can understand how important the fishing industry is in terms of people being employed in Atlantic Canada. There is an additional problem in Atlantic Canada. If you look, Mr. Speaker, at the eastern seaboard of the United States, you find that people who are fishing there, when fishing is difficult, can always quit and go and work in manufacturing, then come back to the fishery a few years later. You cannot do that in Atlantic Canada because of the general economy there and the lack of a manufacturing base. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I understand that when you close a fish plant, just as when you close a mine or a pulp mill in British Columbia, it means a death sentence to a community.

I would like to ask why the fishing industry is in trouble. Why is it—if you will pardon the pun—floundering on a sea of red ink? I feel there are a number of reasons and I would like to go through them. I think there were tremendous expectations which came about because of the extension of the 200-mile limit. The result was overcapitalization in the industry. Another reason was the recession of 1980 which resulted in fewer products being sold and in lower prices to the fishermen. Therefore, there was a decline in sales and a decline in prices. I believe also that part of it was due to a management position to expand even at the beginning of tough times. Perhaps the reason was over-optimism, furthered by the hope of getting Government grants and so on.

The Liberal Government must bear some of the responsibilities for the difficulty in the industry, and the Conservative Government before it, because both the Clark Conservative Government and the present Liberal Government favoured high interest rates and monetarist policies.

Mr. Evans: Come on.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member says, "Come on". I ask him to look at the interest rates in this country in the last three years.

Mr. Evans: Look at the height of the sky also.

Mr. Waddell: These high interest rates brought on by the Liberal Government, and the body which it controls, namely, the Bank of Canada, through its appointment of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, really squeezed out any hope that these fishing companies could make a go of it. So while some fishermen could even double their catch, they were tripling their debts and, as you know, Mr. Speaker, you cannot survive if you do that.

I would like to quote from some remarks which were made in this House by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), who is the fisheries critic for our Party. I quote as follows from page 28,858 of Hansard for November 14, 1983:

> Companies had paid little enough attention to increasing the quality of their catch or improving their marketing strategies. This led to a decline in the ability to sell fish and the ability to support the economics of the industry.

What happened then was that the industry in fact collapsed. We then saw a deal between the present Fisheries Ministry, the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Premier of Newfoundland. That odd couple, Ottawa and Newfoundland, finally got together to deal with the fisheries industry. As I understand the Bill, it provides authority for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to spend $138 million to restructure the groundfish processing sector in eastern Canada. This restructuring is based, as I said, on two agreements, one with Newfoundland and one with Nova Scotia. This will see the creation of two new super companies, the largest in the world, from the dregs of the five major and a few smaller processors. I do not think my colleague was here at the time, but I said that I find it ironic that this is nationalization of part of the industry and while the Conservatives and Liberals are scampering not to say that, they are still supporting it.

The federal Government is going to inject $138 million in cash and hold the majority of shares in each company. The provincial Governments and the Bank of Nova Scotia, by converting debt into equity, will hold minority shareholder positions. Not bad for the Bank of Nova Scotia. Perhaps it gets rid of that tremendous debt on its fisheries account. The Nova Scotia agreement is not completely finalized, but in the Newfoundland agreement there is a potential for employee ownership and a seat for the union on the board of directors. Can you believe it? We might even be getting a little bit of progressive legislation. We might be able to get some legislation where employees of the company will start feeling they are really part of the whole process and will become more productive. That of course is the way to productivity, not by beating them over the head as the Conservative-Social Credit Government of British Columbia tends to do.

We in the NDP will be supporting the Bill, as I gather you have surmised, despite some of the shortcomings which I want to go into in a couple of minutes. There is no doubt that some form of intervention was necessary. As I said, many smaller communities in eastern Canada are completely reliant on the continued operation of the plants and related fishing activities. We do not see any viable alternative at this particular time. There is some necessity for getting this restructuring in place very soon, before the next fishing season, because sales contracts and renegotiation of the union contract are pending. I want to again quote our fisheries critic from his opening speech at page 28858 of Hansard where he said:

> It is necessary to proceed with this Bill because the future of the next fishing season in Atlantic Canada relies on it. If this Bill is not passed, if there is not a restructuring of the industry and if a board of directors is not appointed to the new companies in Atlantic Canada, there will be a great deal of uncertainty about markets and our ability to sell the product that is harvested over the next year. As well, the matter of negotiations between the fishermen's unions and the company for contracts in Atlantic Canada depends upon this Bill and suppliers must know whether the debts that are owed to them at the moment will be repaid. There are a great many other uncertainties in almost every community in Atlantic Canada and hundreds and hundreds of those communities are dependent upon the fishing industry.

That is all the more reason why the Bill should go to committee.

I gather, in following the debate, that the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) brought up the problem of smaller companies which are not included in this deal. I acknowledge that they need some assurance from the Government that they will not be forced out of business. Even a rampant socialist like myself can say that. There also needs to be some concerns about selling off the companies to foreign owners and so on. I also think we should not be in any hurry. I notice various speakers have talked about this hurry to have the Government bail out the industry, get it going again and then sell it out to private enterprise. If these big companies work, and if the workers in this industry can really feel they are part of the whole thing, that it is not "them and us", it is all "us" in these two large companies, then I would think we would want to continue with these companies. But that is looking into the future and that is difficult to do.

Before I sit down I do want to look into the future at one aspect. We all know Michael Kirby; he is a man who, I suppose, has made as many enemies in Atlantic Canada as he has made deals. But he is to be, if not congratulated, at least we will acknowledge his hard work and sincerity in getting these deals together. It is obviously a lot of hard work because there must be a minefield of competing interests in this area. However, I would like to caution the Government that, when it comes to dealing with the West Coast industry, and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) are much more expert on that industry than I am, the Government should be very careful in the way it treats the West Coast industry. It is a different kind of industry. If there is to be restructuring there, I ask the Government to do it openly with as much consultation as possible. Put everything on the table, because that is the way to negotiate. I would not want to repeat the spectre of the Crow in the sense of Ottawa taking the position, as viewed from western eyes, that Ottawa knows best and therefore we will force whatever restructuring we think the industry needs. I have my nose to the wind and I understand that there are some things about to happen to the industry on the West Coast, perhaps the purchasing of companies and so on, but I just say to the Government that it should be open and above-board and that there should be much consultation.

I think I have touched on all the areas I wanted to. I think the detail can be done in committee, where I hope the Bill will go soon. As someone who lives a long way from Atlantic Canada but who has a great deal of sympathy with what the people there are trying to do and what they are going through in the fishing industry, I wish them luck. They are going to need it. I wish them a future in a really viable industry. While there are problems, I think the Bill really sets the basis for doing that. It really is quite a unique opportunity for fishermen in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland to take from this dead, bankrupt industry and build something which can be really viable. All Canadians can be proud of a real working industry there.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I know it is late on a Friday afternoon and perhaps everything that can be said about this Bill on second reading has been said, but I would like to add my comments to what Hon. Members have said in this Chamber.

First of all, there must be an absolutely clear understanding that this Bill must be accepted, perhaps reluctantly, by this House because the Government has put forward nothing else to meet a crisis which has continued now since at least the summer of 1981, and to which the Government has not made any adequate response. This is not to say that this Bill is a perfect Bill. Because the Government waited so long to act, the Bill amounts to a piece of enabling legislation to put into effect one agreement that has been entered into between the federal Government and the Province of Newfoundland and to give power to implement another agreement which the federal Government hopes to enter into with the Province of Nova Scotia. It also enables the Government to establish a huge national fishing corporation. The bulk of the power to make decisions will rest with the Government, not only because of the structure of that fishing corporation, but because the Government already regulates and controls the resource to which all of the user groups of Atlantic Canada must resort. That is the fishery. The consequence of this is an establishment of immense state power. It is done in response to a crisis. The tragedy is that it is done in response to a crisis for which the Federal Government must take responsibility to a significant extent.

During the summer of 1981 my colleague, the former Minister of Fisheries, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), was warning the Government that action was required. At that time it was quite clear that the companies were not going to be able to carry on for two reasons. The first reason was the difficulty because of markets. The second reason was over-expansion and the extreme difficulty in carrying the loans as a consequence of high interest rates. Those interest rates continued to go up. Those companies and the banks which had made loans to them were in a position where they could not get sufficient cash flow to get out of the difficulties.

During the 1980 elections the Hon. Member who is now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) said that he would resign rather than belong to a Government that did not bring interest rates down. Tell that to the people in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. McGrath: They were 14 per cent then.

Mr. Fraser: At that time they were 14 per cent, as my hon. colleague points out.

An Hon. Member: And went up to 24 per cent.

Mr. Fraser: And went up to 24, as another hon. colleague points out. I am sure if I stand here for a few minutes, other rates will come to mind. Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the situation in Atlantic Canada was clearly visible in the summer of 1981. All during that autumn, questions were asked in the House repeatedly. There was a special debate. The Minister of Fisheries at the time kept saying that the situation was not too severe. He was trying to get away from the responsibility that the Government of Canada held by saying it was the fault of the companies, they should not have built so many processing plants. In one speech he said that he had warned the corporations and companies, both large and small. While he was giving the warnings, the Department of Economic Expansion was putting up the money and practically forcing the industry to build the processing plants. The Government of Canada is the Government that controls the fishery and regulates its catch and allotments. It intervenes, and not always to good effect, into the fishery. The result of delay between 1981 and now resulted in a frantic attempt to be seen to be doing something.

In January of 1982 I was in St. John's, Newfoundland. I was asked what the Conservative Government would do if it were in power then. I said that the Atlantic fishery needed then an immediate influx, either through guarantees, loans or some other mechanism, of $100 million to stabilize the industry and to save the industry and the private sector in the industry. Mr. Kirby laughed. He said my figures were excessive. The then Minister of Fisheries laughed and said they had nothing like that amount in mind. Mr. Speaker, this Bill starts off with $138 million. It carries on to guarantees of $100 million. That does not even begin to count the money that has been committed to the Atlantic fishery as a consequence of the Kirby Report some months ago.

An Hon. Member: Fleet replacement.

Mr. Fraser: Fleet replacement and other things, as is properly pointed out by my hon. friend. Mr. Speaker, in the first week in January of 1982 we, who had an answer that would have retained a viable private fishing industry, were laughed at. We were told they were not even thinking of $100 million. If the Government had acted then there would have been no need for this particular Bill.

Mr. Pepin: Why didn't you act?

Mr. Fraser: As my hon. friend on the Liberal side of the House knows, in January of 1982 we were not the Government. He represented the Government and sat on the Treasury benches. The question is why he and his colleagues did not act. We could not act. The power in this House lay with the Government.

The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) yesterday said: "There is no need for such a Bill". He was referring to this particular Bill. I agree there is no need for this particular Bill, but because of the neglect of his own Government there is need for a Bill. As I said at the beginning, we must, with reluctance, accept the passage of this Bill.

My hon. friend, the Liberal Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) is from a part of Nova Scotia that understands well the difficulties of and also the opportunities for the Atlantic fishery. She said: "Certainly my constituents feel it will affect them, and they want more information . . . The powers the Bill gives to the Minister seem to be unlimited."

It is all very well for my hon. socialist friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), to offer some caveats about the power in this Bill. It is understandable that he does so. While he wants to endorse nationalization, even he understands that the powers in this Bill are quite extraordinary. The Bill, in Clause 4, says the power is:

> To carry out the purpose of this Act, the minister may, on behalf of Her Majesty,
> (a) acquire, hold or dispose of or otherwise deal with shares, debentures or other securities of, or any security interest in, any fishery enterprise;

This Bill is a Bill to execute and implement one agreement and another that is hoped to be signed by the Government. The Bill does not confine itself just to the subject of the agreements, which are not mentioned in the Bill. It gives power to do these things with other fishery companies which may well not be in financial difficulty at the moment and which we can call the independents. Because of the neglect of the Government over a long period of time something had to be done. The people in Atlantic Canada cannot be thrown out of work completely. Their means of making a living cannot just disintegrate as a consequence of this neglect.

But there is another section of the Atlantic fishery of which other Hon. Members, especially on the Government side, have spoken. That sector views this piece of legislation with concern. They do not want to see fellow fishermen thrown out of work and do not want to see a large part of the Atlantic fishery collapse. They do not want to see it forced to go through a painful process of re-establishment.

They also do not want their viable, effective and competent part of the industry to go under, which is a concern of theirs over the sweeping powers of this Bill. My hon. friend from the NDP commented on this a few minutes ago. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway said that some form of intervention was necessary. I understand that, because I am aware of the political ideology which lies behind that statement. However, even he recognized the concern of the independents. He said, "They need some assurance that they will not be forced out of business". This matter has not only been raised by my colleagues from the NDP who are the advocates of nationalization and socialization but also by my colleagues on the Government side. While they are perhaps more content with intervention and nationalization than some others in the House, they too have raised the concern of fellow fishermen in Atlantic Canada about the extraordinarily immense power of this particular Bill. They have commented that for all practical purposes there is no accountability. While the Hon. Minister can argue that parliamentary approval is required in order to get additional sums, we know that that is not the kind of accountability that is required. What is required is a constant reporting mechanism to the House.

Hon. Members on the Government side also know that the independents in their part of Atlantic Canada are getting clear signals from the banks and the investment community that there will be a diminution of the necessary funds for them to carry on and plan their business affairs until there is a more clear idea of what kind of power might be exercised under this Act.

Since this alarm has been raised by all Members of the House—I fully compliment my friends on the Liberal side for having the good sense to recognize it for what it is—I hope that those Members from Atlantic Canada on the Government side will come forward at committee stage and assist us in bringing forward some witnesses who will be able to help us perhaps in making amendments which might be necessary to alleviate that concern. I also hope that all Members of the House will address themselves to the question of accountability.

There is another side to this legislation. It is the intention of the Government eventually to reprivatize the capital assets and corporate structure that will be taken over by the Government, at least in the initial stage. It is terribly important that if there is to be any capacity to reprivatize, the independent sector of the Atlantic fishery must not become so frightened or concerned that it ceases to have economic viability to be in a position to help the Government in its stated objectives of reprivatization. Those of us who have put many long days and weeks into the study of the Atlantic fishery and have spoken here on many occasions in support of a viable and effective Atlantic fishery want to be assured that there will be an honest expression of intention made very clear during the committee and further stages of this Bill. We want to be clear that the objective is indeed to withdraw Government intervention as soon as possible.

I think it has been made very clear from the debate so far that all Members of the House, for different reasons, understand that this Bill must now be accepted. I also believe that all Members understand there are some problems with the Bill. For instance, the Hon. Member for Gloucester believes that this Bill should not have been necessary. Although he says it is not necessary now, I believe it is. Perhaps the Bill could be in another form, but something must be done. We do not believe that the situation had to develop to this point but it has, and on behalf of my Party we are saying to all people involved in the Atlantic fishery that we know the Bill must now be accepted and we will do nothing to prevent the Government from doing those things that must be done now to maintain employment and some kind of viability in the Atlantic fishery.

But we must also say to others in Atlantic Canada that we are very conscious indeed that this Bill must be watched carefully. The powers contained in it must be constrained to meet the Government's stated objective eventually to withdraw and allow the Altantic fishery to carry on in a viable and healthy way with as much private initiative as possible.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is a disposition that we put the question at the second reading on this Bill. Perhaps subsequent to putting the question, we might call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has suggested that there may be a disposition that the Chair should see the clock as five o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered. It being five o'clock I do now leave the chair until eleven o'clock Monday morning.

At 4 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RESOURCE INDUSTRIES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) moved:

That this House regards the Government's failure to take action to encourage the development of Canada's resource industries and ensure their competitiveness in world markets as a betrayal of all Canadians whose standard of living depends upon the resource sector of Canada's economy and calls upon the Government to bring an end to the nationalization of Canadian resource industries which has discouraged investment in Canada; introduce tax incentives to restore competitive advantage and stimulate resource production and further processing in Canada; initiate a program of incentives for research and development; and incentives for marketing activities of Canadian industries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the House will not be surprised that we should have chosen to put aside a day in the busy life of Parliament to discuss the state of our primary resource sector, and therefore the economy in general. Naturally we would have preferred to discuss issues so vital to the well-being of our entire nation and her people in connection with any Government initiatives.

Despite our strong urgings here in the House and the danger signals which we are receiving from the industry, the unions, and the scientific community associated with it, and from the investment communities that invest in the resource sector, this Government sticks stubbornly to a deliberate policy of indifference and neglect. This Government sees our primary resources such as trees and minerals as artesian fountains of wealth which will flow uninterruptedly to be tapped and sapped at every stage without regard to the health of the resource itself or the industries that are sustained by it. It makes no difference whether we talk of our forests which could be, with reasonable care, renewable, or the minerals which we extract and refine and which are such an important part of our commerce and trade. This Government's only interest is what these industries can be made to contribute to satisfy the monstrous appetite for public revenues to support a spending spree over which no one any longer has any control.

My colleagues will, in the course of this debate, Mr. Speaker, tell you of some of the horror stories which are the result of 15 years of Liberal mismanagement. We will speak of the imminent crisis facing our resource sector. We will also point out the great opportunities that we have missed in the past and will surely miss in the future if we fail to act responsibly and decisively to arrest the disease which has been inflicted on private sector industries in general and the resource sector in our economy in particular.

I share the view of many economists who say that Canada could hardly survive as an important and viable trading nation without its resource wealth, if for no other reason than the fact that the volume and potential for growth of one's industrial production is, in the main, limited by the size of one's markets. All of us want to expand our secondary manufacturing capacities and our markets for such products through trade with foreign countries. But it is in the resource sectors wherein lies our natural strength and advantage. It is our resource industries which provide the foundation for the economic structure which permits us to compete in a significant way in world markets. It is our resource sector which is the source of our economic well-being, our prosperity, and social contentment.

Permit me, in the few minutes that I have to speak on the motion standing in my name, to give a profile of just two of our more important resource industries, mining and forestry. I think I might best be able to describe the importance of those two industries by comparing our total economic structure to the trunk of a tree which supports its branches and its leaves through a network of roots through which flow its life-supporting juices.

There are now more than 350 small and not so small communities throughout our country, from the Great Lakes to the Arctic Ocean, which depend almost entirely on one or the other of these two industries I have mentioned. These communities are at the end of the root structure or network, generating wealth and nourishment which sustains the life at the end of the branch.

Fifteen per cent of our country's entire work force is either directly or indirectly engaged in the forest and mining sectors. In better times these two industries have generated directly close to $40 billion of industrial product, $25 billion of which is earned from trade in foreign markets throughout the world. The mining sector alone accounts for over 50 per cent of all our rail freight volume, with crude minerals making up 44 per cent and fabricated minerals 9 per cent of all the railways' revenue freight handled. Forty-one per cent of all goods shipped through the St. Lawrence Seaway originate from the end of one of the root canals, from a quarry, sandpit, mine smelter or refinery, a sawmill, pulpmill or logging camps some place in mid-Canada or the North.

It is the activities of the miners and the loggers which sustain some form of economic life in over 60 per cent of our entire geography. The further the roots have been extended, the healthier and stronger our tree has become.

But something has gone terribly wrong. The engine which pumps the vital juices through the trunk is working at only 50 per cent capacity. On the mineral side, half of our mines are shut down or have drastically reduced production. The Government says that it is just another cyclical problem, the result of a world-wide recession in the economy, and is something we will just have to wait out. Of course, that is true to some extent but it would be extremely dangerous to ignore a number of trends and factors which will undoubtedly have a profound effect on the timing and rate or extent to which our mining industry can recover from this deep valley of a cyclical curve.

First, it must be obvious by now to even the most casual observer that there is a fundamental shift of resource-based industrial production toward the developing world. Industrial countries in Europe and Japan, even ourselves and the Americans, are making massive investments in the resource sectors of many developing countries. We see it as our contribution or form of development aid or assistance. But in the case of our industrial competitors from Europe and Japan, it also has the purpose of adding to the supply of raw materials to achieve greater and more diversified access to natural resources and, through it all, to create keener price competition. As well, the World Bank is very active in this field. While all this activity may produce significant benefits to the target countries and the industrial countries which make the investments, it spells bad news for Canada.

A second, equally important factor is the substitution in the manufacturing process of certain base minerals for new materials and a general impact of a new technological revolution of which we are becoming the beneficiaries, or perhaps the victims, at an extremely rapid pace. For instance, the same tonne of coal that it used to take to produce 90 miles of copper wire now turns out 80,000 miles of fibre cable capable of delivering 100 times more impulses. Or an automobile which used to weigh 5,000 pounds ten years ago now weighs only 3,000 pounds. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, it would take unprecedented growth in world markets to generate the kind of demand for our base metals needed to restore our mining sector to its original health.

Finally, there is another factor more of a home made kind which will undoubtedly delay the recovery of our industry and therefore the economy generally. That has to do with the unreasonably heavy and crushing tax burden and economic rent structure which all levels of government have loaded on the shoulders of the resource sectors in recent years, a burden out of all proportion to any return the industry has achieved from its investment.

There have been unconscionable increases of certain so called non-profit taxes, such as property tax, fuel taxes and so on. In some cases these charges have increased by over 100 per cent in one year, diminishing the efforts the industry has been making in cutting costs and increasing productivity.

The Mining Association of Canada in its submission to this year's conference of resource ministers gave a number of examples to illustrate this point. Let me quote:

> In British Columbia and in the period 1980-1982, costs to the industry have increased by $118.5 million in direct payments arising from a very large number of actions by Government, both federal and provincial, on several fronts. This represents a 105 per cent increase in only two years. For 1983 it is anticipated that further substantial increases have occurred. More specifically, we have evidence to show that in the past 12 years, two large mining operations in British Columbia have seen their property, fuel, water, provincial and municipal taxes escalate from $4 million to $35 million.
> In Quebec, salary and fringe benefits, which in 1980 represented 32.2 per cent of the average value per tonne of ore, increased in 1982 to 38.8 per cent of this average value, representing a 20.5 per cent increase. On the other hand, the cost of social policies, indirect taxes and electrical power, which in 1980 represented 9.67 per cent of the average value per tonne of ore, reached a percentage of 15.62 in 1982, i.e., an increase of 61 per cent during the period. So together, the cost of all these items measured, on the average value per tonne of ore, went from 41.9 per cent in 1980 to 54.3 per cent in 1982.
> In Alberta, over the past five years mining companies have experienced percentage increases of over 100 per cent for fuels, 80 per cent for electric power, 75 per cent for freight costs, 60 per cent for property taxes, 85 per cent for provincial health care premiums, 62 per cent for unemployment insurance, and 41 per cent for pension contributions.

Very similar increases could be documented in every province or territory across Canada where mining is carried on. To add to all that, we keep inventing ever more stringent rules with respect to environmental safeguards, health, safety and standards of social amenities in the mining and logging communities.

Now, Sir, you will find me among the very last to suggest that some of the standards which we have all worked hard to achieve should be sacrificed to assure the future health of the resource sector. But it is now painfully obvious to everyone that the industries alone are no longer able to bear all the costs related to these laudable social objectives. We have simply strapped the industry too tight. We are depriving it of its competitive edge and rendering ourselves extremely vulnerable and unprepared to meet the new challenges and forces which have distorted the conventional rules of trade in market places of the world.

Our new competitors, as you know, Mr. Speaker, may not play by the same rules or by what we would consider conventional rules. They are in the main state-owned enterprises, their prime objective, understandably perhaps, being foreign exchange earnings and jobs. Their plants will be heavily subsidized from funds to which we ourselves are contributing. It is as if we are all too eager to finance our own demise.

Well, Sir, one might ask how is the Government on the other side of the House reacting to these worrisome trends? Surely it must have the same information we have. To some of us it appears as if its answer to our dilemma is to succumb to the rule changes and attempt to compete on an equal basis with the new players in the developing world and the not so new players in the socialist world. It appears as if it sees states ownership, or at least a very advanced form of state control, in our own country's economy as the only way to survive this onslaught.

In a sense we have advanced some way toward that goal. The justification for Petro-Canada, for instance, was to provide us with a window on the world and permit us to trade with countries that refused to deal with the private sector. Our tax laws are designed to permit our companies barely to cover their costs of capital and operation and leave no room for modernization and technological innovation.

"Not to worry," says the Government, "after all have we not given you grants to modernize or subsidies for labour costs when that became your problem?" That may be true, but do you believe, Sir, that this is the kind of climate to which either our own or foreign investors feel attracted? That must be a worry, unless we either believe the Government can create money out of thin air or we assume that after necessary adjustments to our economy have been perfected we might ourselves become eligible some day for loans and gifts from the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

What happens if one falls out of favour with the Government on which one has to rely for grants when things get tough, or what happens if it is too late before the bureaucrats in Ottawa get around to a particular problem? The forest industry is a case in point. It is suffering not only from all the pains of the recession and the fact that we have not permitted the industry to build and maintain its own capital resources to ride out the storm, but because we have also neglected to assure that our forests are replenished to provide our mills in the future with the necessary feedstock on the basis of a sustained yield. All of a sudden we have come to realize that we have been mining our forests for the last 200 years instead of farming them and that nature alone is no longer able to replenish itself in sufficient time to meet our demand.

For some mills and towns in mid-Canada, coming to grips with this realization is too late. No matter how many grants the Government might make to bail out a troubled company, we will shortly experience timber shortages in most areas and regions of the country, causing lay-offs and shutdowns not only of mills but of whole towns and regions, because it takes 60 years to grow a tree and sometimes much longer, depending upon the climate and other factors.

I have little doubt that had it been the responsibility of the private sector to manage the resource, either through direct ownership or long-term tenure, we would not find ourselves in this fix today. The United States, where 60 per cent of the forest land is privately owned and managed, provides us with an interesting model for comparison.

To sum up, we see difficult times ahead for our resource industries and therefore for our economic wellbeing. Any prospects for recovery and new growth are admittedly, as I pointed out, influenced by factors and trends over which we have little control. However, much of the pain we must suffer during the recovery period is self-afflicted and can be cured only by ourselves, even though some of the larger corporations and their sector organizations still refuse to speak out in defence of the system from which they have grown, I suppose for fear that the Government might not think kindly of them at their time of need. Some do speak out and, more important, the average Canadian has become weary of the dream of a just society which our centrally-structured and planned economy was to deliver, a dream which for some has turned into a nightmare. Canadians now understand that state planners are not very good in creating new wealth and that Government cannot distribute wealth which has not first been created by someone.

It is true that we have built for ourselves a very sophisticated socio-economic structure, one which is still the envy of most of the world and indeed one which can feed on itself for a short period of time. However, like the maple tree that has been tapped too deeply, it will eventually die, and like any tree that has been cut off from its roots, it will rot and decay.

We draw our confidence for not only bright but exciting future prospects for economic growth and prosperity from the confidence Canadians are expressing in my Party's ability to recapture the promise which inspired earlier generations of Canadians, the promise of a just reward for individual effort and free enterprise. Most assuredly if we should manage once again to set this spirit free, we shall have no trouble meeting and beating whatever our new competition will throw at us in world markets.

I thank the House for giving us this day to state the case and for preparing Canadians for the challenge ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions or make brief comments on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle)? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to rise today to address what has to be one of the most critical problems facing our country. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing forward this motion which in part reads:

> That this House regards the Government's failure to take action to encourage the development of Canada's resource industries and ensure their competitiveness in world markets as a betrayal of all Canadians whose standard of living depends upon the resource sector of Canada's economy—

While the motion goes on to refer to a number of other interesting and important matters, the essence of the motion is presented in those few words. Indeed, it is a betrayal of many Canadians.

I want to focus my remarks this morning on one of our most critical resource industries, the forest industry of Canada. One could comment, as the previous speaker did, on the mining industry, the fishing industry and all the resource sectors. By and large the critical comments would be appropriate in terms of how not only the federal Government but the provincial Governments, and in many cases industry itself, have failed to live up to the challenges of the present time.

I want to focus my remarks today on the forest industry. This industry has by and large been overlooked by Canadians.

We have now been in session in excess of 600 days, the longest session of Parliament in Canadian history. We have managed as a result of an Opposition initiative to discuss forestry for a single day.

When you consider the importance of the forest industry and the impact which the forest industry has on the balance of payments in this country, Mr. Speaker, there is more economic impact in terms of our country's trade balance than the entire agriculture industry, mining industry, fishing industry and auto industry combined. That is the immensity of this one industry that we are discussing today. It is of incredible importance.

If you look closely at the statistics, you find that 1.3 million Canadians are involved in one way or another with the forest industry in terms of their jobs. In other words, they are employed either in a direct way or in an indirect way with the forest industry. It involves 1,300,000 Canadians. There are 5,000 forest companies spread from one end of the country to the other. Three hundred communities depend 100 per cent on the forest industry. We are talking about an industry of immense proportions.

I believe it is fair to say that the problem associated with the forest industry has not been clearly understood by many Canadians. A number who have watched or who live close to the industry have known for many years that it is in a virtual crisis situation. I would say there is a national emergency in Canada today as it touches on that critical resource industry, the forest industry of Canada.

We can look back, however, to a politician from 1871, none other than John A. Macdonald himself, who at that time said that we are recklessly destroying the timber of Canada and there is scarcely a possibility of replacing it. Here we are, more than 100 years later, Mr. Speaker, and we are saying that same thing today in the House of Commons. We are saying that we are seeing the erosion of the most critical industry in the country in terms of the balance of payments and employability of Canadians, and we are seeing the erosion of that industry in every single Province.

When we consider that last year we harvested approximately 800,000 hectares of forest land, it is interesting to note that we managed to replace 25 per cent of that in terms of reforestation. Only 25 per cent of the most critical resource in the country was replanted, albeit additional hectares were replanted naturally. However, there is nothing to say but that the shortfall in reforestation in the country is absolutely astounding.

I would like to focus on a couple of points that simply indicate the critical nature of the problems facing us today. I suppose it is not surprising that Canadians have not been alert to the nature of this problem. After all, 95 per cent of Canadians are urban dwellers and live in big cities like Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Regina and Hamilton. We do not come into contact with the forests of Canada on a regular basis, so naturally many of us are a little out of tune with the realities out there.

However, Mr. Speaker, if you ask any single individual in the logging sector, the lumber sector, the plywood sector, the pulp and paper sector, the shake sector or any other sector of the forest industry, they will tell you that the industry is in serious trouble today. Every professional organization in the country related to the forest industry will say the same thing. As a matter of fact, I remember a number of presentations in the last three years from professional foresters to Members of Parliament on an individual basis, a caucus basis and a professional basis. Those organizations have said that this industry is in serious trouble and that we must do something about it not next year, not next decade, but immediately.

What do we do, Mr. Speaker? Do we take action? Does the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) who is responsible for forestry call for special debates in the House of Commons? Does he call for extraordinary steps to be taken? I do not hear a great deal from him, but to give the Minister credit where credit is due, I will say that he has indicated an interest in this area and has recognized some concerns. Perhaps he is having difficulty with some of his Cabinet colleagues when trying to put his money where his mouth is when identifying the problems and their solutions in the forest industry.

I would like to quote from a number of people I feel are representative of respectable forest voices. Jack Walters, the director of the UBC research forest on the West Coast, had this to say recently: "Our forests are in a shambles. It is a tragedy of the first dimension." This is a professional forester speaking out in an attempt to communicate to the powers that be and particularly to the politicians both provincial and federal, that we have a serious problem. Mr. Michael Innes, the manager of forestry for Abitibi Price, the world's largest producer of newsprint, said: "We are gradually running out of wood." He is saying that we are gradually running out of merchantable timber in the country and that we must now transport the product in many cases hundreds and hundreds of miles from the forest to the processing plants. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are failing to replant those forests which stand right in front of the processing facilities.

The forest industry's advisory committee to the Government, Mr. Speaker, recently made a plea for more financial assistance to this troubled industry. The Science Council of Canada targeted the problem clearly, I believe, when it said that 6,000 square miles of forest land is destroyed or wasted each year. The IWA said that we are running out of merchantable timber, that the industry is virtually at a crossroads and that it will either fail or succeed, depending upon the initiative taken by governments and industry. The Quebec and Ontario furniture manufacturers recently brought to our attention that they are now required to import maple logs from the United States because sufficient supplies of maple do not exist here in Canada for use by the Canadian furniture industry.

I would like to go on and relate to you, Mr. Speaker, two or three of the problems that were brought to our attention as parliamentarians and legislators by the Association of B.C.

Professional Foresters. That association has brought to our attention the fact that more than 800,000 hectares are harvested annually in our country but less than 25 per cent are planted or seeded. In British Columbia, more than a million hectares heed reforestation and British Columbia is adding 20,000 to 50,000 hectares annually to this problem. Yet the B.C. Ministry of Forests recently had budget cuts in this area which will simply exacerbate the problem.

The number of person-years available to research in the Canadian Forestry Service has declined by more than 50 per cent since 1968. We are talking about an industry in which research and development has never been more needed and demanded than today. Yet the professional foresters tell us that money for research and development in the Canadian Forestry Service has declined by more than 50 per cent since 1968. Increased research is required in almost all phases of forestry management.

The association goes on to say that current spending on silviculture by all parties, including industry and provincial and federal Governments alike, amounts to about $240 million a year. This is less than 1 per cent of the total value of the annual forest production in the country; we are reinvesting less than 1 per cent of its total value in that critical resource. We can look at some of our competitors in western Europe. For instance, Sweden spends between $700 million and $1 billion annually as compared to our expenditure of $240 million. That is the kind of husbandry with which our competitors are treating their forests in terms of silviculture, reforestation, spacing, thinning, road building, fire prevention and disease prevention. They are spending up to $1 billion annually compared to our paltry expenditure of $240 million. If that does not spell doom for this industry in the long run, Mr. Speaker, then I do not know what does.

The Canadian Forestry Service is a part of Environment Canada and $69.4 million was allocated to the Canadian Forest Service. Within the same Ministry, $146 million was budgeted for the Atmospheric Environment Service and $275 million was allocated for Parks Canada. The Professional Association of Foresters from British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, goes on to say that it is a national disgrace that the federal Government spends twice as much money monitoring weather as it does on our forest industry. That is not to suggest that any cutbacks should occur in weather and climate monitoring, Mr. Speaker, but I think that when these people put their professional careers before the public for scrutiny by standing up and saying that this is a national disgrace, we as Members of Parliament cannot stand idly by and say: "Well, I suppose that is just more rhetoric about this issue". The people who are most knowledgeable about the state of the forestry industry in Canada are calling the present situation a national disaster.

The association goes on to speak, Mr. Speaker, about a problem in the Province of British Columbia which is, of course, the major forest producer in the country and one of the major areas in terms of available merchantable timber. The association indicates that forestry is the largest economic activity in B.C. It generates more direct and indirect Government revenues and employment than any other sector by far. This wealth comes from forests which are 95 per cent owned by the people of the Province yet less than 1 per cent of the new provincial budget in British Columbia is set aside for reforestation, a significant drop from last year. Can you imagine anything more akin to committing economic hara-kiri, Mr. Speaker, than spending less than ever before on reforestation at a time when the need and the demand is so great?

The association indicates that no money has been allocated this year for improving this resource, and that includes money needed for thinning, refertilization of young forests and particularly for dealing with the 29,000 square kilometers of forest land that sits idle in British Columbia. This is a critical statement, Mr. Speaker. If reforested, these lands could produce more than six million cubic metres of wood annually, and up to 20,000 new permanent jobs in the Province of British Columbia. It further states that more than 40 per cent of the funding was cut for forest protection activities. We have, it is said, more than a million hectares of idle land in the Province of British Columbia which requires treatment to return it to a new forest. At the backlog planting rate of this new plan of the provincial Government, it will take that Government 50 years to reforest these areas. I believe there is no question but that we are at a crossroads with Canada's number one industry.

The situation in which we find ourselves in terms of provincial governments, the federal Government, as well as a good part of the industry, is a crisis situation. Last year the forest companies in Canada lost $500 million, but they were anticipating an improved situation for this year. However, I believe any Hon. Member of Parliament who comes from a forest related area will know that things have not turned around, that the pulp and paper industry is in a very tough situation and that the lumber industry is simply struggling to survive. Most of us with saw mills in our riding will know that they have closed, or shifts have been laid off in the last two or three weeks. That would indicate what is coming down the pipe in the months ahead.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, we have an ideal opportunity now as parliamentarians to take a positive step and show that, yes, we are concerned and are prepared to do something about it. We must recognize that we have created an evergreen ghetto in this country. What was once a dynamic, thriving community is now decaying. There is now a sense of despair and a demoralization in the ranks. We are turning our backs on that part of our community. However, the evergreen ghetto can be turned around with some positive leadership and initiatives. We have heard speakers today indicate what some of those actions should be. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would entertain a call for unanimous consent of the House to present a motion asking the Minister of the Environment, who is responsible for forestry, to call a meeting of all provincial ministers of forestry early in the new year, to have as the number one agenda item the formation of a federal ministry of forestry. I have circulated a letter to the House Leaders of both the Conservative and the Liberal Parties indicating that I would be asking for unanimous consent to present such a motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member care to present the Chair with a copy of the motion he has in mind?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, if I may say for clarification, realizing that at this point to present a motion would be presumptuous on my part, I am simply asking for unanimous consent of the House to enable me to present such a motion. The motion would in fact urge the Minister of the Environment to call a meeting of provincial ministers of forestry and the number one item on their agenda would be the formation of a federal ministry of forestry. I am asking for unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have a motion before us in the name of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). It is in order for the Hon. Member to present an amendment to the motion before us. However, the Chair has some reservations as to whether the amendment as indicated would be proper as an amendment to the motion, although the Chair would be prepared to receive such an amendment and consider it. If it were found in order, the Chair would put it to the House. However, if this is not what the Hon. Member has in mind by way of procedure, would he please indicate what he does have in mind?

Mr. Riis: I appreciate your patience on this issue, Mr. Speaker, and also the patience of Hon. Members. Not feeling that a motion to amend the motion before us may be in order, I was, first of all, seeking unanimous consent of the House through you, Mr. Speaker, to allow me to put such a motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has the right to present a motion. However, there are limits in terms of a motion by way of an amendment to the present motion which can be presented. If the Hon. Member cannot present a motion which is within the scope of an amendment permitted at this stage, then he cannot otherwise present such a motion which would not be acceptable within the normal scope of amendments. Would the Hon. Member read the amendment to the present motion which he has in mind?

Mr. Riis: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your patience. It will be a motion asking the Minister of the Environment responsible for forestry in Canada to call a meeting of all provincial ministers of forestry early in the new year and to have as the number one agenda item the formation of a federal ministry of forestry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member will present the proposed amendment in writing to the Chair, the Chair will consider the proposed amendment before ruling. Meanwhile the debate will proceed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I question whether or not such an amendment is in order, first of all; second, if it were in order and were introduced, since this motion is under Standing Order 62(11) which requires no vote, what possible power would it have? I would think another forum, perhaps, would be better. Usually there are discussions between the two sides when a Minister is going to be asked to do something so that the Minister can respond properly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has not accepted the amendment. The Chair has merely asked the Hon. Member to present his amendment in writing so that the Chair may decide whether such an amendment is or is not in order. That is all the Chair can do at this stage. The Chair is the servant of the House. This is a limit which is on the Chair at this point. The Chair at this stage invites the Minister of the Environment to make his remarks.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I quite appreciate that you have already ruled on what the Hon. Member was asking. What I would like is the opportunity to question the previous speaker under the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is perfectly in order. The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) wishes to put a question to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. That is in order at this point.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, on the motion today and the remarks made by the Hon. Member, I wonder, based on the fact that he made a very strong plea and placed a very strong thrust on the subject, whether he has any comments to enlighten the House with respect to any recommendations he would make in light of the difficult situation of the variation in value of money in various countries where we have to sell our products, the question of competitiveness with other countries south of the border, the American pulp and paper industry? Would the Hon. Member tell us exactly what he would put forward, not in terms of the motion brought forward today by his Party, but what firm recommendations can he make with respect to the difficulties with which this particular industry is faced today? Could he tell us something about that?

Mr. Riis: I certainly would like to respond to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to suggestions as to what may be done to improve the situation in the forest industry, I would like to focus, perhaps, on one aspect, and that is the whole matter of what might be termed "reforestation". I can recall at least seven presentations which various organizations related to the forest industry have made to Members of Parliament in the past 12 months. They dealt with such recommendations as site preparation; burning or ploughing for reforestation; planting trees or seeding areas, using genetically improved seed or planting stock; choosing the best species for a site; thinning and spacing trees for optimum growth; pruning and fertilization when needed; reducing losses through fire, insect and disease; improved utilization of our present resource during logging; concentrating our efforts on the best reserved forest areas for the time necessary to grow the crop, and so on. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the need to reforest is accepted as a reality by all who are sensitive to the forest industry.

This type of "Government spending" I believe is a misnomer and ought to be called "Government investment". After all, what we are doing is investing in a resource which will presumably pay back to the Government both in terms of royalties and personal and corporate income taxes in the years ahead. Considering that this investment made now will result in returns to the Government in the years ahead, it has to be done now, and it will never be done cheaper. The need for employing people in this particular activity has never been greater. Instantly, once the decision is made to embark on a massive initiative of reforestation in all parts of Canada, it will literally provide tens of thousands of jobs for Canadians in every Province and territory. At a time when the need for job creation in a meaningful sense is so acute, surely a step in this direction has to be one of the most appropriate the federal Government could initiate at this time.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not disagree with that aspect. I underline as well the importance of reforestation. Indeed, in my home Province of New Brunswick we have to this date accomplished a great deal in reforestation through various companies such as the Irving Group, International Paper and others.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, taking the term used in the Hon. Member's motion with respect to competitiveness, I was asking what concrete proposals does the Hon. Member have regarding the economics of the day, the problems we have with selling these products? We have the problems of competitiveness, variations in the value of the pound and the dollar and other currencies used by countries we trade with. What does the Hon. Member have to tell the House about concrete proposals and recommendations he would make to the Government or industry to try to alleviate this serious problem he has stressed so forcefully in his speech today?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, let me identify three or four things I think would be appropriate, particularly when it comes to the competitiveness of our industry. For too long our marketing procedures have resulted in Canadian exporters going abroad and saying: "This is the product we have; are you interested?" That as opposed to going abroad, identifying the needs for forest products, coming back to Canada and creating those products to meet specific market demands. That would be a major step forward for many producers in our country. In other words, identify the markets more precisely and take advantage of them, and perhaps become more aggressive in seeking out those markets. Also, a great deal can be done through the federal Government to assist our export sector and assure the necessary financial support so we can compete with some of our major competitors.

The Hon. Member mentioned productivity. When you look at countries with which we compete, western European countries and some of the American countries, one of the things they have in place that we do not is what I will refer to as industrial democracy. They have recognized that by involving all employees in their operation, be it large or small, in a meaningful way, their ability to be competitive is that much greater.

As a first step in this direction, and I emphasize only a first step, I suggest that something like the profit-sharing schemes we have seen in certain corporations ought to be looked at in Canada. The United States has over 400,000 profit-sharing schemes; we have approximately 2,000. In other words, we are abysmally behind even the U.S., let alone our western European competitors who are miles ahead of us, not only in profit sharing but in the whole area of involving employees in a responsible way through profit sharing, responsibility sharing and information sharing.

When we begin to democratize the workplace and involve all employees in the productive capacity of our plants, then we will see our competitive advantage increase substantially. However, while we maintain the old-fashioned, neanderthal approach of bosses and workers, we will continue to have difficulties as we act in a mode which was perhaps more appropriate in the 1920s but which has no place whatsoever in the labour management world of the 1980s, let alone the 1990s.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member having to do with the fact that in British Columbia at the present time much of our forest land is being devastated by insect attacks. In his riding there is a problem with the tussock moth and Douglas fir trees. Can he comment on what is being done about that? I think there was a virus they were going to use and there was a problem getting it licensed. Perhaps he could give us some information on that program.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, indeed, the tussock moth was a major problem in the forests of central British Columbia. The solution was brought to my attention by a number of people involved in entomology who said that the virus was really the only solution. It had some problems but it was the most obvious solution. I brought that to the attention of various officials in Ottawa whose approval was required for its application. I must say they took some extraordinary steps to provide intermediate approval to allow this to proceed, but because of the unavailability in Canada of an adequate source, nothing very much was accomplished.

What that proved to me was that while the bureaucrats were quite conscious of the problem and aware of the solution, they lacked any sort of comprehensive plan and were acting on their own individual initiative. With inadequate funding and a lack of any long-term plan, they were really unable to respond to this mini-crisis in central British Columbia. So rather than politicians planning three or four years in advance, we need to look at it over 40 to 60-year intervals, the time it takes to grow a mature tree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and answers has expired. We can continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Murphy: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I rise on an issue raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) when he asked unanimous consent of this House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has not yet received the proposed amendment. It is not in order to ask for unanimous consent at this stage of an opposition motion. The Chair has invited the Hon. Member to present his amendment, which will be considered. There has been no amendment presented to the Chair at this point.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, all I wish to do is to point out that Citation 13 and Citation 14 of Beauchesne say that at any time a Member may ask unanimous consent. That is what the Hon. member did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has now presented to the Chair an amendment and this will be considered in the normal way. The amendment as proposed by the Hon. Member, after consideration by the Chair, is another motion and is inconsistent with the main motion before us in the judgment of the Chair. The Chair regretfully must make this determination.

If the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has a point of order he wants to raise, then it is in order for him to do so.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong this, but in light of what you have ruled, and I accept that, that indeed the intent of my amendment was certainly not going against the principle of the motion but was opening up some new areas for consideration, I would now ask for unanimous consent for that motion to be presented.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to present such a motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today raises a number of fundamental questions. It is couched in the language that is customary around here and which may come as a surprise to onlookers and watchers on TV, namely the phraseology of Government failure to take action. Of course, I do not agree with that kind of approach and terminology because, as we all know, in particular in relation to the development of resource industries, there has been a lot of government action, a lot of activity and a lot of taxpayers' funds which have been put into the development of our natural resources over the past decade.

• (1200)

I would conclude, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a question of failure here. The Hon. Member in his motion is putting a basic, fundamental issue on the floor for debate today for a critical analysis on the part of all concerned individuals and Members of this House. In that respect he is doing everybody a great service by allowing us to look at this issue in a partisan way, and at the same time I hope in a constructive way.

If there is trouble in our resource industries, I would be inclined to think it is because we have had a slowdown in the economy, some very serious downturns in certain aspects of the economy. There has been a very serious drop in demand which has affected the prices of our natural resources, particularly in mining and the lumber industry. Certainly to attribute the behaviour of economists in the world to inaction by the Government is not just stretching it too far, but is pointing the finger in the wrong direction.

Over the years this Government, as colleagues will subsequently demonstrate, has shown an enormous sense of awareness of and sensitivity to our interests in natural resources. As some of the speakers have already indicated, our natural resources represent a substantial form of income for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. They represent jobs in very large numbers and therefore are a substantial part of our Gross National Product and of the wealth that we all share and benefit from.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt very briefly to outline our position on the question of forestry which is very close to our minds and hearts. This House has been made familiar, on a number of occasions since the beginning of the life of this particular Parliament, with our concern for forestry. We have given the Canadian Forestry Service higher status by identifying the person at the top of it with the title of an Assistant Deputy Minister, who was also given at the same time the assignment of preparing, in conjunction with my predecessor, a strategy.

My predecessor released the strategy in 1981 which summarized the problems which are facing forestry in Canada, and also outlined a plan for action. The strategy has its foundation in a national forest policy based on co-operation with the provincial Governments. We recognize ownership on the part of the Provinces of this resource and we realize that there must not be a pulling apart or a moving at cross-purposes between the provincial and federal Governments in this particular field of resources. Rather we must work together and we must both work with industry and unions as well.

As a result, this policy which the federal Government is pursuing is one which rests on co-operation with the Provinces. In this regard we have utilized the forum of the Canadian Council of Resources and Environment Ministers as well as held bilateral discussions with provincial Governments. The forest sector strategy pointed out that, in effect, the virgin forests have been mined and little thought has been given in the past to future crops. We must focus our attention therefore on farming and managing properly the forests and on emphasizing intensive forest management and forest renewal.

Not only must we do this, Mr. Speaker, we must also address problems that we recognized, including the need to protect our forests from fire, insects and disease, to encourage the management of private woodlots, to increase the management of the forests on Indian reserves, to fill the need for professional foresters, and to foster the important area of forest research necessary for all of these objectives.

The role and involvement of the federal Government in forestry is basic to the health of the sector. The federal Government is committed to forestry and will continue to act in its support in concert and co-operation with the Provinces. It has indeed been on this basis that we have been able to achieve a series of accomplishments initiated by my predecessors which I hope to continue and build upon. As the first step we felt it necessary, prior to the implementation to the forest sector strategy, to establish a national system for the collection, analysis and dissemination of forestry data in furtherance of intensive forestry management policies, planning and programs. This work is being conducted as a component of the Petawawa National Forestry Institute. Financial resources approved for this program for the period of 1981-82 to 1983-84 amount to some $5.7 million. It has enabled us to produce the 1981 Canada forest inventory as a basic step.

Responding to the challenges of forest management and renewal, and in the spirit of co-operation, we have committed ourselves to enter into agreement with each of the Provinces in support of programs to meet the reforestation needs of the forest sector. Two agreements have already been signed, one with Nova Scotia of August of 1982 which provides some $30 million of federal funds over five years. A significant program of aid to private woodlot owners is built into this agreement. An agreement with Prince Edward Island was signed in July of this year which allows for federal funds of some $15 million over five years.

In the case of Newfoundland funds have been provided to enhance the existing agreement totalling some $16 million over three years for employment stimulation. I hope that we will soon be able to announce a new agreement with Manitoba. Another agreement is being put into motion with Saskatchewan and with Alberta. Negotiations are well underway with Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and British Columbia. These Provinces are currently under agreements arranged by DREE which expire in March of 1984. I would like particularly to bring to the attention of the NDP critic and the Progressive Conservative Party that the agreements which are now in place total some $400 million over the five past years alone.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Forestry Service also prepared a private woodlot development policy. It provides the basis for private woodlot programs in federal-provincial forest agreements. Earlier this year, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) announced the plan for the development of the Gaspé Bas-St. Laurent region. In the program some $19 million will be devoted to assistance to the Groupement Forestier for private woodlot management.

All of these agreements, Mr. Speaker, are based on the Government's policy that is tuned in to and focuses on forest renewal. This policy requires a financial commitment on the part of the federal Government and an even larger amount by the Provinces and by industry. It remains to be seen whether all levels will be able to find these funds in times of fiscal restraint.

Given the high unemployment in the forest sector, we began a job-creation program last year using Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Canadian Forestry Service was provided with $34 million to top up the benefits of unemployment insurance receipts under this program. As I said last Friday, this totalled as a combined amount some $140 million. To date, this has provided 14,000 positions, representing a quarter of a million weeks of employment.

The program was particularly successful in British Columbia where it was known as EBAP, the Employment Bridging Assistance Program. Unfortunately, in June of this year the Province of British Columbia decided to curtail its involvement in this program, sharply reducing its effectiveness. However, the federal Government is continuing this initiative under the new Canada Works Program. We are hopeful that industry and the Provinces will generate sufficient projects to allow us to make a substantial contribution to our forestry renewal objectives with these funds.

The federal Government has historically provided Canada with its basic forestry research and development. This has been done by the Canadian Forestry Service with support from sister organizations such as the Forintek Canada Corporation. The forest sector strategy recognized the situation of underfunding to this institution and is moving in that direction.

The House may recall that Cabinet approved the research and development component for the strategy and provided some $5.5 million to the Canadian Forestry Service for research and development for this fiscal year. The R and D component calls for a substantial increase in funding for subsequent years, including basic support for Forintek to maintain our competitive position for forest products and lead us to forest renewal as called for in the strategy.

In addition to that, however, funds have already been committed to the expansion and upgrading of Canadian Forestry Service research labs across the country, including some $14 million for the expansion of the Pacific Forestry Research Centre in Victoria, some $13 million for an addition to the Great Lakes Forestry Research Centre in the Soo, some $10.5 million for additions to the Laurentian Forestry Research Centre in Ste. Foy and some $22.5 million for a new Maritimes Forestry Research Centre in Fredericton. Also some $17 million has been provided for the expansion of pulp and paper research facilities in Victoria and Pointe Claire.

As part of the Maritime forestry complex in Fredericton, the Government is providing over $10 million for a Maritime forest ranger school. Also in keeping with the spirit of co-operation with the provincial Governments, we have signed a memorandum of understanding with the Provinces on the co-ordination of forestry research.

I am sure that Members of the House are in part familiar with the activities in support of the control of forest fires which have cost Canada as much wood as is harvested in certain years. The CL-215 water bomber program will contribute significantly to our efforts in fighting forest fires. I believe this has been a major illustration of co-operation with the Provinces in response to a major problem. Through joint arrangements with the Provinces, we are purchasing some 29 water bombers from Canadair, of which 17 will be owned by the federal Government, four to be used exclusively by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for use north of 60. The entire fleet will be co-ordinated by the Interagency Forestry Centre in Winnipeg which is, in itself, a very good example of federal-provincial co-operation in forestry methods.

Let me say a few words on our forestry initiatives on Indian reserves. I agree with the mover of the motion that the forests on Indian lands have been neglected in the past. It is understood that this resource could provide twice the benefits to the Indian people that it currently provides. We have been recently working in close co-operation with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), to develop a comprehensive program of Indian forest land management. A working group of officials from the Canadian Forestry Service and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been set up for this very purpose. What is significant, however, is that this working group is headed by representatives of the Assembly of First Nations.

The basic objectives and principles of this program are that it will provide for economic, social, cultural, spiritual and environmental benefits for the Indian people through the wise management of forest resources on Indian lands. It will be controlled and administered by the Indian people and implemented at the community or band level. This approach is entirely consistent with the recommendations of the House of Commons Special Committee on Indian Self-Government. Within the context of Indian ownership of India resources and in the control of Indian development, the objectives of the proposed program are: to increase the number of hectares of productive Indian forest land; to increase the sustainable annual harvest on Indian lands; to increase the number of Indian persons productively employed in all aspects of the forestry sector; to increase the number of Indian enterprises actively engaged in direct and indirect viable forestry and forestry-related activities; and finally, to develop the technical, operational and managerial skills of Indian people consistent with the requirements for an economically viable Indian forestry sector.

The financial support for this program will come from several sources and the Canadian Forestry Service will provide the necessary technical and scientific expertise. We are now taking an excellent opportunity for the federal Government to establish a useful and rewarding program in co-operation with the Indian people.

Turning to human resources, it is indeed a potential problem for the future but we have anticipated well what may happen and have taken steps to address it. The human resources development component of the sector strategy addressed this concern and we have been able to provide over $15 million to expand the pool of professional forestry manpower. This money will provide for forestry scholarships, contract research and development and summer student employment to some 300 students per year. Most of this money will go to Canadian universities and particularly to the six forestry schools across the country, the University of British Columbia, the University of Alberta, Lakehead University, the University of Toronto, Université Laval and the University of New Brunswick.

Another area of increased federal activity in response to the forest sector strategy is in international trade. In recent years there has been a successful program of overseas market development of British Columbia forest products under agreement between the federal Government, the Province and the British Columbia Council of Forest Industries. This program will be expanded to other Provinces and negotiations are under way to do so by my colleague, the Minister responsible for DRIE.

An important issue to forestry is the use of pesticides and insecticides. Pesticides are designed to kill organisms that cause environmental disease, insects and weeds. By their very nature, pesticides are toxic and have the potential for adverse effects on non-target life. Management of pesticides requires weighing risks and benefits on the basis of value judgments, including economic and social factors. There is public dissatisfaction with the current management system from both the environmental protection and research development perspectives.

I suggest that two major issues emerge from the analysis of pesticides management. One is the lack of public confidence. Contributing factors to this lack of confidence include confidential information, shifting burden of proof, little public access to the decision points, uncertainty of risk assessments and conflict of interest between environmental protection and resource development.

The second issue is the public concern extending from immediate human health to long-range environmental quality. There are multiple jurisdictions involved, including federal, provincial and municipal, which complicates this issue.

A great deal must be done to improve this situation. For its part, in improving the situation for the forest sector, the Canadian Forestry Service is developing effective and environmentally acceptable materials and methods to respond to the needs of the forest manager and is developing biological and non-chemical methods and means for forest pest management.

I see you are impatient with me, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude briefly. In summary, much has been accomplished since the preparation of the forest sector strategy for Canada, including increased support to forestry schools, expanded forestry research facilities, the development of a national water bomber fleet, forestry job-creation projects and an expanded overseas trade program. There remain two major priorities: increased research and development and the major task of forest renewal. Research and development is essential to protect our forests from threatening insects, disease and fire.

I see you are looking at the time, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you could request the House to give unanimous consent so I may continue for a couple more minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Minister to conclude his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caccia: As I was saying, research and development is essential to protect our forests from threatening insects, desease and fire, to develop faster growing species, to develop means of managing forest productivity from a shrinking land resource base. The Canadian Forestry Service requires a substantial increase in resources to do its work. A major investment in forest renewal is required by the Provinces, industry and the federal Government to ensure an adequate supply of wood in order to sustain and enhance the forest industry which remains Canada's largest employer.

The evidence is clear: failure to act will jeopardize the 300 or more single industry, forestry-based communities and critically affect our balance of trade. The investments are labour intensive and give employment, particularly to our young people and our native people. However, in times of tight fiscal restraint and low profits for industry, the tendency is for us to postpone these essential tasks. Industry and Provinces must also confirm their resolve to rebuild our forests to ensure that future generations benefit as we are benefiting today.

Can we save Canadian forestry, it has been asked. The plan to do so is there. It has been supported and endorsed by various organizations, including the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, by the Canadian Forest Advisory Council, the Forestry Industry Advisory Committee, industry associations, professional institutes of foresters and by all Parties of this House. The policies and plans are being implemented and the decisions are also being made.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister which I think are pertinent to the debate. In the Minister's final comments he admitted what we have suspected all along, namely that there are tendencies by both federal and provincial Governments to postpone what the Minister called the major effort that must be made to save our forests. Since the Minister is approaching a critical deadline this Thursday when there is the annual auction to redistribute money that has not been used, and knowing that the Minister is behind in his commitment to come up with this $130 million for forest renewal, is the forest renewal side, which the Minister thinks to be critical, one of the things he has a tendency to recommend postponement of, or is the Minister confident that on Thursday he will get the necessary funds to meet the commitments he has made to the whole forest community?

Second, knowing of the tragedy, that of the resignation of the Assistant Deputy Minister and knowing of the invaluable contribution Mr. Reed has made in the effort to rebuild against all possible odds a federal forestry service, what is the Government's plan to replace Mr. Reed? Also, what is the next stage of the upgrading of the forest service? Is it to appoint a deputy minister? As the Minister well knows, and I am sure he agrees with me, the environmental side of his portfolio is overshadowing and taking precedence over some of his other responsibilities. I give the Minister credit: his heart is in the right place but he has the responsibility of a dual portfolio. Unfortunately, bureaucrats on the one side are overshadowing his responsibility on the forest side. I would appreciate the Minister responding to these questions.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I will try. Both are very difficult questions. The first relates to a decision to be made next Thursday. I cannot anticipate the answer because I lack the ability of a clairvoyant to know what the outcome will be. If the Hon. Member wants to know from me, as he did last Friday, whether I will put into the cause of forestry all my energy and commitment, my answer is definitely yes. I hope we will eventually find the funds required for the implementation of this policy, keeping in mind, as I mentioned earlier, that this is a joint kind of effort and that the Provinces will also have to indicate that they, too, put forestry at the top of their priorities in the selection of priorities which they have themselves. That it be recognized by the Provinces is extremely important since, after all, they own some 90 per cent of Crown lands.

As to the departure of the Assistant Deputy Minister, it is a great loss but not a tragedy because the departure was the wish of the official himself. He came to Ottawa with the intention of filling the position for three years and his three-year tenure expired at the end of October. It is a position that will be very difficult to fill by someone else with the same commitment and dynamic drive that Les Reed demonstrated during his three years. He has left with us a very important legacy. We are, however, in the process of looking for potential candidates willing to fill the position.

As to the final half of the Hon. Member's second question, I do not see, in all frankness and having been in the Department for only three months, a situation whereby the Canadian Forestry Service is overshadowed by other sections in the Department. I think it has all the scope and its place in the sun, as have other interests in Environment Canada. Certainly as long as I am in this portfolio it will have my ear and fullest attention.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. In all modesty the Minister has not mentioned his qualifications. I would point out to the House and to the people that the Minister is a professional forester. He is to be commended.

The Minister mentioned in his remarks the very substantial amount of $400 million which was DRIE money. That money will certainly not all be channelled through forestry even over a five-year period, which would amount to $125 million a year because the budget of DRIE in the past has been $600 million or $700 million in total a year.

One other thing. Since he wears the hat of the Minister of the Environment, I must tell him I am concerned and greatly interested in the acid rain problem. We on the committee, and I think the Minister as well, are aware of the possibility of grave injury to reforestation, to the small seedlings coming up. I hope his Department is giving top priority to that as well.

Mr. Caccia: Dealing with the second point first, Mr. Speaker, the answer is definitely yes. We are devoting all possible attention to the long-term impact of acid rain on forest growth. The scientific data on this continent is very recent and young. However, there is enough evidence in Europe to make a strong case about the serious damage and effect of acid rain not only on seedlings but on grown-up stands. This is the kind of persuasive message which I have to bring to our American friends whenever I meet with them on environmental issues, particularly on acid rain, in Washington, Indianapolis or in New York.

● (1230)

I report with regret to the Hon. Member that the operation of convincing our friends to the south is not an easy one because in some quarters they are still looking for scientific evidence to prove the point the Hon. Member made so eloquently a moment ago. This is very serious because we are talking about long-term damage for which there is already evidence in Scandinavia and Central Europe. While I can assure him that we are paying a lot of attention to the consequences of acid rain on the growth of existing stands, I also report to him the fact that we are still in the phase of trying to convince certain quarters south of the border. My counterpart in Washington, the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, is having an absolutely miserable and difficult time convincing his own administration that this issue deserves attention in order to reduce damage to American forests themselves. It has now reached a point where unless there is clear indication of leadership on the part of the American government, we will be engaging in this debate for a long, long time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning the matter of procedure, with one question on the other side and then a question being allowed from this side. I have an important question for the Minister concerning his statement today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has used its best discretion. Unfortunately the Chair did not see the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) seeking the floor. However, he was recognized earlier this morning, and the Chair is now recognizing someone who was not recognized earlier.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister. First, he pointed out that money had been spent under Section 38 to help with the EBAP program in British Columbia. He went on to say that the program would be continued under the Canada Works Program. Will the Minister admit that there is no specific forestry component in the Canada Works Program and that forestry projects will have to compete with a wide range of very worthy projects for a limited amount of money? There is no specific forestry amount of money. Could he answer that question?

Second, he mentioned something about which many of us are very concerned, that his Department was working to develop biological and non-chemical forms of pest control. Could he provide the House with more information on how much money is being spent on that, at what stage of development it is, and when we can expect some real results from the process?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the Hon. Member an answer to his second question specifically, but I do not have that figure available or at hand. I suggest that he put that question on the Order Paper for a reply in due course.

As to the forestry employment program, my understanding of the creative utilization of funds under Section 38 is that it exists and is available, and that we have renewed with the British Columbia forestry sector at the end of September an agreement that was expiring at that time. I do not see any conflict or restriction in availability of funds. Funds under Section 38 continue to remain available. I hope the forestry sector, through initiatives by public institutions or private institutions, will continue to make extensive use of funds under that Section.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House to extend the question period for a short period of time, as there are Hon. Members on both sides seeking to be recognized?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to follow up with the Minister responsible for forestry the question I asked the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) earlier. It concerns the motion before the House today. Setting aside the negative aspects of it and dealing with the positive side, I want to ask the Minister about a situation which exists in New Brunswick. First, I can tell him that we certainly applaud the forestry school at the University of New Brunswick and all other efforts carried out by DREE and by the federal Government in making available funds to protect this all-important industry which represents billions of dollars annually to the country.

My question relates to a difficulty which the International Paper Company is experiencing in New Brunswick. The Minister mentioned co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments. Could he speak with his counterparts, the Minister of Commerce and Development and the Minister responsible for natural resources in New Brunswick, regarding the high power rates? We know of the moneys that have been made available to Lepreau and nuclear generating stations in New Brunswick, moneys which have been made available for renewal of equipment and plants through DREE. Now we have this difficulty. If one of the pressures on being more competitive is high power rates, would the Minister responsible for forestry agree to consult with his counterparts in that Province to see if there are any ways or means which can be found to alleviate the pressure and to have the Ministers responsible in that Province through their Premier agree to some alleviation of pressure by reducing power rates for that plant at this time?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make note of the Hon. Member's intervention and the concern he has expressed. I have an opportunity twice a year to meet with colleagues in charge of forestry and environmental matters and I will certainly raise it with them at the earliest opportunity. I understand the difficulty posed by the fact that high power rates tend to have an effect upon the cost of the final product and that, therefore, it may be disadvantageous to some aspects of the New Brunswick economy. This is the reason the federal Government and the New Brunswick Government entertained an agreement for the construction of a new nuclear plant in order to increase the quantity of power available and thus hopefully reduce rates. Having said that, I will indicate the Hon. Member's concern to my colleagues and discuss that matter with them at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, the Minister stated that forestry did not take a second-rate position in his Department. Pursuant to that, I would like to ask him whether he had frequent and regular meetings with the Assistant Deputy Minister responsible for forestry. Was his telephone open to the Assistant Deputy Minister, or did he have to go through other Deputy Ministers to present forest problems to the Minister? It seems to me the fact that we have no better than an Assistant Deputy Minister for forestry would indicate that it is very badly subordinated, though it is the most important of the trade-generating industries in the nation.

Mr. Caccia: I would like to reassure the Hon. Member that he need not worry about accessibility. On several occasions I indicated to the Assistant Deputy Minister that he should feel free to call me and to approach me on matters related to his responsibility. I invited him to do so on several occasions.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to speak this morning on the motion brought forward by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). Normally the only time we get to talk about resources in this House is when the Government comes forward with a new proposal for yet more tax burdens on a resource industry or comes in to nationalize an industry either through the back door or front door.

My intention this morning is not to examine any one resource industry. We were pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River indicating the importance of various industries. However, my intention is to examine the reasons for the failure of this Government's policies in these areas, the philosophy that it maintains and its ideas which have given rise to the failure of forestry, mining and other resource industries.

Before I get into that, I would like to preface my remarks with a couple of observations. The first observation that is apparent to almost every Canadian is that we are the most resource-rich nation in the world, especially when you take relative populations into account.

The whole history of Canada, or a very great part of it, deals with the development, exploitation and utilization of the natural resources of this country. It was in the sixteenth century that fishermen from European ports, Portugal, Spain and other countries, first came over in small vessels to exploit the riches of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the fur trade blossomed. It was probably the most important industry in New France. The fur trade helped to develop the rest of the hinterland outside of that small area in the St. Lawrence Valley. The fur traders went far afield and penetrated into the vast interior.

I was fortunate to receive just the other day a publication by the Fur Council of Canada entitled "The Fur Industry in Canada". It gives us a description of the proud history of the fur trade. It is sad to relate that at the present time the fur industry is under something of an attack. The trappers have been faced with inequities in taxation and are finding it tough to survive. An even greater threat to that industry are certain people who do not like to see fur-bearing animals taken in Canada. It is incumbent upon this House to protect the trapping industry.

In the nineteenth and twentieth centuries we got under way with the exploitation of our forest resources and agriculture, especially western Canadian agriculture potential. There was a taking up of agricultural lands in western Canada. The forests of eastern Canada, especially in the time of the continental policies of Napoleon with regard to the timber industry of New Brunswick, first came into being.

In the twentieth century, Canada and Canadian resources have really come into their own. We have had the development of mines. Around the 1940s we had development starting in the oil and gas industry, especially in western Canada. That industry is now finding new worlds to conquer offshore in eastern Canada and in the Arctic. In this century we have developed hydro-electric resources. There is more to come, of that I have no doubt.

It is interesting that we have to take into account that a lot of our natural resources can only be developed and exploited if we have the knowledge available so to do. We must have the capital available to develop them and find people who are skilled in the exploitation of resources. For these reasons, we on this side are most concerned with the continuation of research and development in this country on natural resource issues and the training of personnel.

With all our resources, Canada ought to be the richest nation on the face of the earth. In fact, in the fifties and sixties it looked like we were getting there. We were second only to the United States in standard of living throughout the world.

That brings me to my second undeniable observation, that since the present Government under the Prime Minister (Mr.

Trudeau) took office in 1968, everything has slid downhill. We are now no longer second in standard of living of the world but fourteenth, fifteenth or sixteenth. We have slid downhill. The underlying reason for this is that we have neglected our resource industries and those who work and invest in our resource industries, those whose livelihood depends on the forests, mines, agriculture and fishing. Had we husbanded our resources and adopted policies conducive to their continued development, we would not be fifteenth in the standard of living table in the world. We would be first, where we deserve to be and by rights should be.

Let us look at the over-all policies and the reasons Members opposite have failed to increase the Canadian standard of living but have allowed it to decline, and the reason there has been failure of resource industry policy. The first reason has to be that hon. gentlemen opposite—a bunch of academics, professional politicians, people with an administrative background—have had little experience in the outside world. Gentlemen opposite have not been involved with industrial organizations. They do not come from areas where resource industries are of fundamental importance. They are more interested in philosophical ideas, particularly in changing the way of thinking of people. They love to do that to Canadians. They want everyone to think a certain way. They engage in advertising and everything else in order to get people to think their way rather than concentrate on practical, economic issues.

For example, for two years this House was preoccupied with the constitutional issue. It was a manufactured issue. I did not come across a farmer, miner or logger three or four years ago who had that at the top of his list of priorities. There was nothing wrong with the Constitution we had before, yet we spent two years, to the exclusion of almost everything else, talking about a Constitution when we should have been talking about getting the economy of Canada back on track.

Gentlemen opposite are imbued with these socialist ideas. They think that the state should control and regulate every aspect of the economy and other areas of life throughout Canada. They think that as the Government they can direct everything that goes on in the country. It does not work. Instead of having one huge pyramid with the Prime Minister and the Cabinet at the top, giving direction to and regulating everything that goes on in Canadian life, there should be a series of pyramids. Much of industry should be fairly independent of Government. The Government should give only the most general direction. Industry should be relatively independent. Universities and education facilities should be independent. As well, the artistic community should be independent and we should have these independent societies operating together rather than having everything directed by the Government.

We see that the Government is using its direct influence to get into the resource industries. An example of this, of course, is Petro-Canada. I cannot see one good reason why we need a nationalized oil industry in Canada, without which we were doing far better. What has happened is that the Government has taxed every gallon of gasoline and heating oil that Canadians buy in order to fulfil its socialist ideals.

The situation with Petro-Canada is bad enough. It was only recently that, through the use of closure, the Canagrex Bill was forced through the House of Commons. The Government's intention for Canagrex is clear. It wants to get a stranglehold grip on agriculture in Canada, which is another area that ought to be independent.

Socialist views have come to the forefront with Bill C-48 and its back-in provisions. If someone acquires some land and drills an oil well or a gas well in what the Government calls Canadian lands but what I call territorial lands and risks his own money to find something that looks profitable, along comes the friendly Government of Canada, through Petro-Canada, saying: "Okay, we are going to take over 25 per cent of this venture". I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if this is the way to encourage enterprise in the nation.

The Government has the idea that all resources belong to the state and that anyone who gets into the resource exploitation or development industry is entitled only to what is called an economic rent. That means that the investor takes his risk, spends his money, devotes his time and energy to something, and if it does prove to be successful, somebody from the Government of Canada will come along and say: "We figure that you should get 7 per cent on your investment and that is all you are going to get. We are going to take every other nickel that you make and put it into our coffers because the state owns the resources."

This concept is evident in the progressive incremental royalties that apply to oil and gas exploitation on federal lands under Bill C-48. Unfortunately, this concept is now so pervasive throughout Canadian government, not only the federal Government but provincial Governments as well, that it goes almost unchallenged. I can tell you that the concept of the state owning all of the resources is wrong. Resources should belong to the finders of those resources and the people who have worked to make a go of them.

In the case of minerals and oil and gas, the people who find the ore deposits or the oil and gas on Crown lands should become the owners of those resources and deposits. If a fisherman were to find a new area for fishing, he should be entitled to extraordinary profits from developing that new area. I am ashamed to think of what is happening within the Department of Fisheries in Winnipeg where officials are trying to use the same concept of economic rent on fisheries. A fisherman will be entitled to make so much money a year and no more. If he makes more than that amount of money, the Government will take it all back or tell him to stop fishing because he has been too successful.

In the case of farms and agricultural operations, the concept is not so much one of the resource belonging to the person who finds that resource but rather one of the persons who puts the effort into breaking the sod where it has never been broken before and building up something which will be a part of Canada becoming the owner of that resource. In exchange for doing that, that farmer or agriculturalist should be entitled to ownership in the resource, which in this case is agricultural land. That is the concept that existed when the western Canadian Prairies were settled. I think we must get back to that way of thinking rather than the concept of the state owning everything and perhaps allowing a little bit of farming, a little bit of mining and a little bit of fishing to take place while saying: "Do not by any means make any profit out of those ventures because, if you do, we will take it all back in the form of taxes and royalties".

We on this side of the House agree that resource exploitation should be subject to taxation. I am not saying that there should be no taxes on mines, farms and oil fields. However, these taxes should not be designed to skim everything off the top and leave nothing. In cases where some people are eminently successful and come up with a greatly profitable venture, those people should be and deserve to be highly rewarded. It is necessary that some people be successful and rewarded in order that their success act as an incentive for others to do the same, to risk money in prospecting ventures and to risk hard work in developing agricultural lands.

Last, Sir, we recognize that Members opposite, especially those on the Treasury benches, are by and large people from the central metropolitan areas of Canada. They do not have a first-hand knowledge of the resource industry and they do not have a feeling for the resource industry. The fact is that enterprise in Canada is by and large to be found in the extremities of the country. The core, Sir, has a tendency to grow soft. Ideas that result in the exploitation of the hinterland of Canada where those resources are located and result in that money and wealth and power being brought into the central area of Canada find favour with the present Government.

In the few moments left before one o'clock, I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, an editorial in the October 13 edition of The Northern Miner. That editorial contrasts the $275 million combined grant put up by the federal and Quebec Governments to build a helicopter plant in Montreal, which admittedly is to create some 3,700 jobs over 20 years, with the gold mining developments in the Hemlo area of Ontario. It is expected that as a result of new gold finds in that area, some 5,000 to 8,000 people will move there and the direct number of jobs created will be very much equivalent to those created by the so-called investment of some $275 million of taxpayers' money in Montreal. However, the big difference is that in the Hemlo area, the situation was all brought about by private investment. Not one dollar of taxpayers' money was expended. What will happen is that that privately developed area will be taxed in order to provide funds for the helicopter plant in Montreal.

This is the approach that is taken by the Government. The Government will not allow economic developments to occur naturally according to market conditions in Canada. It insists that it has the responsibility to redirect funds into the areas in which it can mine for votes.

I see that it is rapidly approaching one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you would be kind enough to allow me to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. He cannot call it one o'clock unless he has the unanimous consent of the House.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

CONDEMNATION OF IMPACT ON WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last week Royal Assent was given to Bill C-155 and the Liberal betrayal of the farmers of western Canada was completed, a betrayal which will have its impact on all of Canada for a long time.

It could have been a glorious day, a day of triumph for the producers of our nation, a fair deal for the grain growers, a chance for the cattlemen, the hog raiser and the processors of the West to realize their great potential. Exports of Canadian grain could have been greatly increased from the present $6 billion, and the economic spin-off in direct employment of at least another 25,000 jobs could have resulted, with the manufacturing industries of central and eastern Canada reaping the benefits of some $3 billion for farm machinery alone. Yes, it could have been a wonderful day had the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and the Liberal Members of Parliament in the House not betrayed western Canada by refusing to legislate Gilson's recommendations.

Instead, it was a black day. Grain farmers in western Canada will have to pay double, and then five times the Crow rate, with an already shrinking income. The cattle industry, the hog industry, and the processers of western Canada have had their hopes dashed to the ground. There is joyous laughter in the board rooms of the railways, but only tears and dismay and disappointment in the homes of western Canada.

The Liberal majority forced the Bill through over the opposition of the Progressive Conservative Party. The only hope for Canada's agriculture now is that, out of the ashes, will come a Progressive Conservative Government which will be fair to all regions of Canada.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

QUEBEC INDUSTRIAL PARKS—RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT IMPLEMENT CERTAIN MODIFICATIONS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has introduced a new program to help business in Canada. The new Regional Industrial Development Program, also known as RIDP, has received praise from all sectors of the economy. Last Friday, I was able to attend a seminar at Black Lake in Frontenac County, where industrial commissioners, mayors and businessmen expressed their satisfaction with the Government's decision to create a one-stop program for providing assistance to business. However, there is a problem concerning levels of financial aid. For example, since industrial parks in the riding of Lévis are located in a level II area, theoretically they will receive less aid than level III sites on the Quebec City side. In this particular case, industrial parks in Lauzon, Saint-Romuald and Laporte, located several kilometers from the Quebec City Urban Community's industrial park at Saint-Augustin will be at a disadvantage because of the way dividing lines were drawn, which, I feel, should be easy to correct by changing Acts and Regulations accordingly. As things are now, for a million-dollar investment, the mere fact of selecting Saint-Augustin on the Quebec City side, instead of the Laporte industrial park in the riding of Lévis, would mean a difference in funding of $150,000, although these are two areas facing each other on either side of the St. Lawrence. I therefore urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) to make appropriate changes for the benefit of a program that has otherwise been well received.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—DISAPPROVAL OF DECLARATION OF TURKISH CYPRIOT REPUBLIC

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed sad to see what has taken place, the Turkish Cypriots' unilateral proclamation of independence in the occupied part of Cyprus. This action has dangerously increased the tension already prevailing in this sensitive part of the world. There is no doubt that mainland Turkey remains internationally exposed because the present situation is exclusively the result of the continuous occupation by its troops of a large part of Cyprus. Turkey must accept full responsibility for this move which has undermined the intercommunal dialogue and the initiatives of the Secretary General of the United Nations to promote an agreed, just, and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem.

It is encouraging to see, Mr. Speaker, that many countries around the world, including Canada, have protested the deplorable action which has taken place. Commendable as this may be, words alone, after a time, have a way of dissipating into thin air and becoming soon forgotten. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Government not only to restate its strong disapproval of an independent Turkish Cypriot republic in Cyprus, but to underline this by calling on all nations to undertake further diplomatic actions and other deterrents which would reverse the deplorable decision that has been taken in occupied Cyprus.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATIONS OF PREMIER OF PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, during the past weekend, the Premier of the Province of Quebec, at a meeting held in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, expressed his Government's intention to proceed with Bill 38 which prohibits municipalities from accepting money from the federal Government. It is most unfortunate that the Premier of Quebec is claiming that the federal Government refused to sign an agreement with Quebec and was distributing funds without prior planning. I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it has never been the Canadian Government's intention to ignore the Constitution and deal directly with the municipalities. We have already had discusisons, and we even signed an agreement with the Government of Quebec for handing over the money to the municipalities, an agreement that was broken by that very same Government. We are still willing to continue negotiations and pursue them so as to reach an agreement with this Government. It is, however, unfortunate that the Ministers responsible within the Quebec Government should cancel, without notice, meetings scheduled with our federal Ministers, and that they do not seem to want to reach an agreement.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the Canadian Government has concluded similar agreements with the nine other Provinces and the two Territories, and I find it difficult to understand why we cannot conclude a similar agreement with the Government of Quebec.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALARIES OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we in this House have learned that a number of senior executives of Crown corporations, and other Cabinet appointees, may be earning as much $227,900 per year. The fact that Canadians are kept in the dark about the salaries of Jack Horner, Claude Taylor and Pierre Juneau is unacceptable government secrecy.

In the private sector this same attitude prevents us from finding out the salaries and benefits of our corporate elite from Canadian sources. When I and others have risen to complain about those salaries and benefits in the private sector exceeding $500,000, we have had to quote from American sources. Surely, in the spirit of open Government and freedom of information, we should be entitled to these figures from published Canadian sources.

When public and private sector leaders preach restraint, they should be practising it. When these same leaders are reaping the benefits of a strained economy, they should be subject to scrutiny by the public. When they accept outrageous and immoral salaries and benefits, they rob from the needy in our society. They rob jobs from the jobless, food from those who are hungry, and homes from those who are in need of shelter.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ORDINATION OF FEMALE CLERGY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Parliament of Canada continues to support the changing role of women in Canadian society. Women must play a full part in all facets of life and we parliamentarians, of both sexes, encourage their participation and hope that opportunities will increasingly open up to ensure that participation. However, in one segment of society progress has been remarkably slow. I refer to the church.

Although some denominations have made real efforts, by and large the established churches have been slow in recognizing the full worth of women and their potential for enhancing things spiritual across the nation. We must be able to look forward to the eventual ordination of female clergy in all churches. One would hope that churches that wish to be heard on a variety of social issues would first make a real effort to improve the status of women within their own organizations.

UNITED NATIONS

MEDIATION OF CYPRUS DISPUTE—CALL FOR SUPPORT

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, having just returned from a visit to the United Nations General Assembly, I am more convinced than ever that the UN plays a unique and important role in fostering world peace. We, as Canadians, should be aware of the fact that the UN is one of the few forums through which smaller powers can have an impact on world affairs. This is an especially important point to remember in light of the renewed dispute in Cyprus. Canada maintains a contingent of about 500 soldiers in Cyprus as part of the UN peace-keeping force, so now, more than ever, Canadians must place their trust in the United Nations Security Council and General Assembly as a means for resolving the Cyprus dispute.

Clearly, Canadians have a commitment to retain peace-keeping troops in Cyprus at this time. But it is also just as clear that Canadians have been sending soldiers to Cyprus for 19 years and there is still no sign of an imminent resolution to the dispute between Greek and Turkish Cypriots. In fact, the latest developments in Cyprus demonstrate clearly the futility of simply providing peace-keeping troops. Those troops must be viewed only as a mechanism for keeping the peace while a permanent solution is being negotiated. The United Nations plays an instrumental role in both of these functions. Therefore I wish the UN Secretary General well in his effots to mediate the Cyprus dispute. I call upon Canadians to continue to have faith in the United Nations as a mechanism for fostering world peace.

RAILWAYS

RETENTION OF MANITOBA BRANCH LINES URGED

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the Government has moved very quickly on the Crow rate. Of course that affects constituencies such as Dauphin-Swan River. In view of the fact that this decision has been made on the Crow rate, I urge the Minister to examine seriously the impact on farmers surrounding some of the rail lines presently slated for abandonment. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the line which goes through Amaranth, Manitoba, which is slated for abandonment in August, 1984, and also to the line that goes through Fork River and Winnipegosis, otherwise known as the Winnipegosis subdivision, which is slated for abandonment in 1985.

It is very important that these lines be kept open so that farmers do not have to transport their grain an inordinate distance to market. It is also very important that the Minister review the operations of the western arm of the CTC.

In Manitoba we have had approximately 18 rail line abandonment hearings. It is a shame the way the western arm of the CTC has been operating. Of the 18 hearings held, all have been decided in favour of the railways. Now is the time that decisions should be made to assist the farmers, so I urge the Minister to look very seriously into these matters, reverse the decisions of the CTC and see that these lines are kept open so that farmers can transport their grain.

SPORTS

ATHLETIC BIAS IN FAVOUR OF TALL PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, competitive sporting events provide major entertainment for those actively participating and those attending as spectators. Yet there has crept into the field of athletics, especially in rowing, basketball, volleyball and swimming, an overwhelming bias in favour of the tall and the very tall. It is, in a sense, unfair and discriminatory that in so many sporting events height is an essential asset to achieve acclaim and recognition. Indeed, many of the enjoyable sporting events are almost exclusively the preserve of the very tall. Yet many team events could probably be played as spectacularly and expertly by players of shorter stature if the handicap of height could be eliminated.

The merits of existing rules in athletics should be reviewed. Ways must be found to remedy the seriousness of the height bias in competitive sports. This would promote greater participation of the general public in sporting events. In international events, athletes from Asia, Africa and Latin America would stand a greater chance of success when competing in events where height bias now exists. Such changes would be more in keeping with the first charter of the Olympic Games which proclaims "They assembled, the amateurs from all nations, in fair and equal competition."

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

EXTENSION OF EMPLOYMENT TIME NECESSARY TO QUALIFY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, not very long ago the federal Government introduced a program called NEED, the purpose of which was to fill a gap so that when people no longer qualified for unemployment insurance benefits they would be able to requalify themselves through ten weeks' participation in this Program creating jobs. This was the Government's intention not very many months ago.

I am saddened to report to the House of Commons that, during the course of this Program, the Government changed the rules. What the Government has done in Peterborough is to say that people in Peterborough now require 16 weeks in order to qualify, rather than ten weeks. It is grossly unfair and discriminatory, and I call upon the Government to reverse its position and go back to the original Program of ten weeks on NEEDs in Peterborough so people can then qualify for UIC, rather than changing the rules, as it so often does, in the middle of existing programs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Last Friday, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that all Liberal members were in favour of Bill S-31. That day, however, the distinguished Member for Saint-Denis showed his fierce opposition to the Bill when he said the following, and I quote:

The Bill is going to die in the Senate any way.

The Member for Saint-Denis, who is an experienced and respected Member of this House, was very definite about this. Considering the disastrous effects the Bill would have on an instrument that is vital to the economic well-being of Quebecers, could the Acting Prime Minister confirm, as was said by the Member for Saint-Denis, that he intends to let Bill S-31 die on the Senate Order Paper?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to remind the Hon. Leader of the Opposition of various comments that were made by the media in Quebec and I shall quote the newspaper Finance of November 14, which said that Ottawa's reaction was legitimate: "It would be dangerous to let Minister Parizeau decide how broad sectors of the Canadian economy should develop". Regarding the Hon. Member's question, I may add that I believe that the Members of this House and this Party will have an opportunity to examine in committee all amendments tabled by the Minister and to consider this question in the House, and that our Members will give their answer in the final vote on this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: I want to hear it from the organ grinder and not the monkey.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacBain: No brains and no manners.

Mr. Mulroney: The Government is trying to do in a round about way what it would otherwise be afraid to do directly, and we are going to get at the truth behind Bill S-31.

The Member for Saint-Denis—a respected and experienced Member of this House and excellent Cabinet material, more so than some Members who are in Cabinet today—said that Bill S-31 was going to die a natural death. Considering this categorical statement, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Government intends to withdraw Bill S-31, and if so, I would ask the Government to withdraw it today, instead of continuing a debate that has become increasingly useless.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what kind of no is this? We have no way of knowing!

I am going to get back to the Acting Prime Minister, because this is a Bill that would have disastrous consequences for Quebecers and because the Government is putting up a smoke screen and lacks the courage to say what it wants to do about this legislation—the Member for Saint-Denis knows, however, and he said most definitely that the Bill would not be passed.

An Hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Mulroney: Considering those facts, and also considering the fact that last Friday, the Minister based her argument on the objections of the Provinces, could the Acting Prime Minister inform the House which Provinces objected to the Bill, and could he also table in the House any relevant correspondence?

An Hon. Member: You are a clown!

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that before any Bill can become law it has to pass the two Houses of Parliament. In this particular case the Bill is before the Senate. Before it becomes law it will have to come to the House of Commons and be debated. It seems to me that is the time when we deal with all the questions in which the Hon. Member is interested.

LIMITATION PLACED ON INVESTMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): My question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. Will the Acting Prime Minister confirm that Bill S-31 limits the investment by the Caisse de Dépôt in at least 35 large Canadian transportation companies, and potentially in hundreds of other large federally incorporated companies whose activities include transportation? This Bill forces Quebecers who want to invest in Canada either to look outside Canada or to go back to their Province. This is a separatist Bill. Will the Acting Prime Minister explain to us the logic of forcing Quebecers, who want to invest in this country, to turn their backs on Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead is so concerned about the lack of investment opportunities for the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec, perhaps he could suggest that the Caisse comply with the regulations of the Toronto Stock Exchange, and it would then be allowed to trade on the TSE.

PETRO-CANADA HOLDINGS IN WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I prefer to let the Stock Exchange settle its own affairs. Here in the House, I am concerned about the business of Parliament and about the threat hanging over Quebecers.

If I may, I would like to put a supplementary to the Acting Prime Minister.

[English]

If the Government is worried about government agencies operating outside the jurisdiction of the government that sponsors those agencies, will the Acting Prime Minister tell the House what actions the Government of Canada is going to take about the fact that Petro-Canada holds more than 31 per cent of the shares of Westcoast Transmission, a pipeline company operating exclusively within the Province of British Columbia? Why is there one standard for provincial agencies and a different standard for federal agencies?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to come back to the point which I made earlier. In Question Period we are having discussion on a Bill which is in the other place and which will come before this House. There will then be plenty of opportunity to debate it. I do not intend to debate, in Question Period, a Bill that will be before the House in the normal way.

Mr. McDermid: You don't even know what it says.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS IN AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY—INTRODUCTION OF JOB-CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. In the months of September and October we lost 48,000 full-time jobs in Canada. On Friday last McDonnell-Douglas laid off 500 people. This is part of lay-offs that are occurring in many parts of the country. Precisely when will the Minister put before the House of Commons the program that the Government has been touting around the country; is there such a program simply waiting to be implemented, to create employment for Canadians who are presently unemployed?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that since last Autumn there have been something like 350,000 new jobs created in the Canadian economy. The answer to the second part of his question is that I am looking forward to the presentation of the Speech from the Throne. Within that context of government policies I hope to be able to present the reinforcement of our present programs, and perhaps some new ones which would focus on the question which concerns him.

COMPANIES' RESPONSIBILITIES TO CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Notwithstanding the Minister's claim that there have been substantial numbers of new jobs created, the overwhelming majority of those jobs are part-time jobs that do not meet the needs of those people who are providing the only source of income for their families. In addition to the 500 that McDonnell-Douglas announced it laid off, it is subcontracting work which could provide for an additional thousand or more manyears of work to other employers, some in Canada but not all. What action does the Minister propose to take to guarantee that those companies in Canada which are currently enjoying higher profit margins than they were a year or a year and one-half ago, and which still have people unemployed, are undertaking their responsibility to this country and its citizens by giving Canadians an opportunity to go to work?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question, I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that the largest part of those 350,000 jobs are short-term jobs. A very significant number of them are permanent. Moreover, I do not think it is wise to heap scorn on short-term jobs, particularly for young people and those entering the economy for the first time. That first job, even if it is a short-term job, is extraordinarily important in giving them the work experience which enables them to go on and subsequently have more permanent employment in the labour force.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): All across the country we have people who have been laid off. Many of them have reached a point where they are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance. Many of them cannot find employment. Given that one month from now will be Christmas, is it the intention of the Government, since it cannot produce employment for those people, at least to give them an opportunity to have a halfway decent income over this very difficult period by extending unemployment insurance benefits to ensure that those who have run out of benefits will, in fact, receive unemployment insurance benefits up until the time the government programs take effect?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that the approach that we are taking is the one presented by the Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, speaking on "The Nation's Business" this weekend. I recommend that presentation of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway recognized that there is a strengthening of the economy taking place. We on this side of the House believe that in that strengthening of the economy jobs are being created for Canadians largely as a result of the policies which have been brought forward by this Government. It is that approach, the creation of jobs in the private sector, which is partially as a result of co-operation with the federal Government, that is leading to the response to the job needs of this country, which we support.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—PRESENCE OF PLO AND SYRIAN FORCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. After weeks of meetings and briefings to clarify the Minister's unfortunate statements with respect to the Middle East situation, questions are still unanswered. Two weeks ago, for example, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs asked in this House:

> Why has our Department of External Affairs not moved to condemn the presence of the parasite PLO in Lebanon and the Syrian invaders, and demanded the withdrawal of Syria and the PLO?

Would the Minister now answer that question? Why indeed has our Department of External Affairs not moved to condemn the presence of the parasitic PLO in Lebanon and the Syrian invaders, and ask that they withdraw from Lebanon?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question contains an implication which I reject totally, namely, that Canada has not taken a stand on all foreign forces in Lebanon. Our view, which we have stated frequently, is that all foreign forces should withdraw unless specifically requested by the Government of Lebanon. That applies to all forces.

We have made it clear about Israeli forces. We have made it equally clear about Syrian forces and the PLO. Let the Hon. Member be under no misapprehension about the over-all view of the Government of Canada with respect to the occupying groups in the sorely afflicted country of Lebanon.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN CAIRO

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Bearing in mind that Israel is Canada's friend and our traditional ally, and if the Minister's last answer is correct, would he indicate why, when he was in Cairo on October 23, he specifically called for the unilateral withdrawal of Israel's troops from Lebanon but made absolutely no mention of the withdrawal of the Soviet-backed Syrian troops from the same country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member should examine the many transcripts of press conferences given in my visit to the Middle East. I made it abundantly clear that, in the view of the Government of Canada, Syrian forces should withdraw from Lebanon. If the Hon. Member has any doubt about that policy let me repeat it. It is the view of the Government of Canada that Syrian forces should withdraw. That statement was made on a number of occasions—

Mr. Stevens: When?

Mr. MacEachen: —on my visit to the Middle East. It was certainly made to my interlocutors in the various conversations which I had. Let the Hon. Member not try to create a false issue here.

Mr. Stevens: They are your words.

Mr. MacEachen: The matter has been fully dealt with in a number of statements which I have made, including those made in the course of the Middle East visit.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SYRIAN POLICIES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. The Minister will know that the impression which was left from his trip, as a result of his comments about the potential role for peace which Syria had to play, was that in fact Canadian policy had shifted toward a pro-Syrian position. Therefore I invite the Minister today to make the record as clear as possible for all Canadians, and particularly for our allies in this case, and simply say that the gravest possible threat posed to peace in the Middle East, to Israel, and to Lebanon, is currently posed by the policies and actions of Syria. I think he probably believes that if he represents Canada's policy, and I invite him to make that statement.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regarded the visit which I made to Syria as an important one which illustrated to me the influence which Syria presently has in the Middle East. That was confirmed, the influence which Syria does have in the Middle East, either constructively or destructively. It can either be a positive force or a destructive force.

In my discussions with the President of Syria, Mr. al-Assad, I pointed out to him the influence which his country has, and I expressed the strong view that he ought to exercise that influence in a constructive way in order to facilitate the peace process in the Middle East. That is the view of the Government of Canada.

REQUEST FOR CONDEMNATION OF SYRIAN ACTIONS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of clarity let me ask the Minister to use his own words and say to Canadians, Israelis and our friends, that what Syria is presently doing is using its influence, its force and its support destructively. Will he make that simple statement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must provide me with what particular action conducted by Syria I should condemn. We have condemned the presence of Syrian forces in Lebanon. We have urged them to withdraw as quickly as possible. We have urged Syria to participate in respect of the peace process in the Middle East.

We have made all of these suggestions in the course of the Middle East tour, and the Hon. Member should not attempt to draw in side issues that were not part of my discussions in the Middle East. I know what the Hon. Member is up to, and I do not respect his attitude very much.

I want to tell him that the trip to the Middle East was a success. My visit to Israel was a success, and it was so described in subsequent exchanges by the Prime Minister of Israel who regarded the trip as a confirmation of a longstanding friendship between Canada and Israel.

It was my purpose in going to the Middle East to draw closer Canada and Israel, and to improve bilateral relations between Canada and all countries in the Middle East.

FORESTRY

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT'S EXPENDITURES ON REFORESTATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who is responsible for the forest industry. He knows full well the importance of new initiatives for reforestation. Last week he indicated that the Government was spending $80 million in reforestation moneys. Considering that the Government of Canada will give to the oil and gas companies of Canada something in excess of $1.5 billion this year, would he tell the House if he still considers $80 million not to be a pitiful amount of money, as I suggested last week?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member, in posing the question, is at all interested in finding sources of energy in the North so as to strengthen Canada's independence from foreign imports. When that policy was established under the National Energy Program some years ago, it was natural that the Government would pursue the policy vigorously in order to ensure Canada's self sufficiency.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister did not get the gist of my question. It dealt with forestry and the lack of money for reforestation. Considering that his Assistant Deputy Minister recently quit in disgust at the lack of initiative the Government was taking, would the Minister agree to follow the advice of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who suggested recently that it was time that the Government of Canada set up a Department of Forestry? Would he give some consideration to actually setting up a Ministry of Forestry and, if not, would he at least follow the advice from his colleague in Cabinet and set up a Department of Forestry to give it the much deserved credit that Canada's number one industry deserves?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member will agree that the creation of another Department will not help the growth and strengthening of our forest industry. What is needed is a commitment by industry and the Provinces, which are the owners of 90 per cent of Crown land, and by the federal Government, in co-ordinating a national policy. If he believes that the structural change he suggests would enhance the cause of forestry, he would have to make a case for it.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON SALARIES OF SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Privy Council my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On Thursday, November 17, the President of the Privy Council tabled in the House of Commons, very quietly I might add, a 264-page report dealing with special pay for special public sector people who apparently are not covered generously enough by Treasury Board guidelines.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why there is only one copy of this report in the Library of Parliament, and why there is only one copy down in Sessional Papers, particularly when, the day before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates sits, those copies are not available to Members who are interested in the report for their work on that committee?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the Hon. Member why there is only one copy in the Library or in the committee branch. The document was tabled in the House of Commons and therefore it is a public document which can be made available in any numbers required. It is the purpose of the Government to make the information available and that is why it was tabled in the House of Commons. I hope the Hon. Member regards the House of Commons as a very public place. All of its documents are available to the public.

CRITERIA GOVERNING NON-CLASSIFIED APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, three Members on this side of the House have attempted to get copies of that document and they are not available to Members of the House of Commons who are interested in operating properly on the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

• (1440)

What are the criteria and guidelines for non-classified appointments? Are the Treasury Board statutes and guidelines obsolete? One can understand the need for special remuneration for the president and the chief executive officers of the Bank of Canada, Air Canada, and maybe the CNR—maybe even PetroCan, but why the Chairman of the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency? What is so special about the President and the Chairman of the Canada Museum Construction Corporation, the Special Adviser to the Minister of Finance and the Chairman of VIA Rail, who, every time he sells a ticket, has to come back to the Consolidated Revenue Fund for $50? Why are these special rates of remuneration spread so widely across the sector?

An Hon. Member: Because they are Liberals.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member has asked why data on these particular classifications or particular employees are included in this report. As I understand it, it was an effort to make information public with respect to the compensation paid under Order in Council appointments. The Hon. Member will have noticed it is not a range of compensation but an effort to show the very top salary and the lowest salary in that group of persons appointed by the Governor in Council. That was an effort required under the law passed in connection with the six and five program.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PUBLICATION OF BOOK ON PATRIATION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. There are 1.4 million unemployed Canadians seeking work. The Government has refused funding for the Farm Credit Corporation, restricting the capacity of our farmers; and the Acting Prime Minister knows that many students are seeking employment. In the context of the lack of availability of funds, why has his Government suddenly, despite all urging toward restraint, unveiled this elitist book, "Constitution 1982", costing over one-quarter of a million dollars? Would the Acting Prime Minister explain why his Government has made it a priority to publish this expensive book, breaking its own commitment to restraint at this time?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised the Hon. Member would raise questions about that particular publication on the Constitution.

Mr. Crosbie: It is a sleazy piece of work.

Mr. MacEachen: It was published to pay particular attention to an historic landmark in the history of our country. I am very surprised that the Hon. Member would take that attitude. I have seen the book which the Hon. Member has in his hand.

I think it is a splendid effort on the part of the Secretary of State, and I think the money was well spent in the interests of Canadian patriotism.

COST TO TREASURY

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Acting Prime Minister. In his introduction, the Secretary of State calls this book an exercise in "fostering among Canadians an awareness and understanding of their history and symbols". In the light of the Acting Prime Minister's answer, how many Canadians do he and his Government think are somehow going to get their minds into the Constitution at $20 or $30 a crack? What will be the loss to the federal treasury? Are we going to go on and on with further printings in order to follow through what the Secretary of State says is the purpose of this book?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member should take a walk into a book store and find out what is paid today for books of much less merit than the particular one he has in his hand.

Mr. Crosbie: It is propaganda.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

SCREENING OF "THE DAY AFTER"—REQUEST THAT CANADA BAN CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Last night countless millions of people on this continent saw the all too graphic television movie entitled "The Day After", which outlined the horror a possible nuclear war would bring to this planet. Since an important part of the Prime Minister's peace initiative is a call for expanding the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, why is Canada helping to develop a deadly new nuclear weapon, namely, the Cruise missile? Why not put our money where our mouth is, and ban testing the Cruise missile here in this country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member began his question by talking about the film which was shown on television last night and which obviously had a dramatic impact in indicating to us the consequences of a nuclear war.

Mr. Crosbie: You watched King Lear, I suppose, to bone up on Trudeau.

Mr. MacEachen: We are all too aware of what the consequences would be, and that is why we have advocated and stated so frequently that we do not believe any nuclear war can be won. That is why we are part of an alliance which is built upon a philosophy of deterrence; in other words, to prevent the possibility of a nuclear war in a number of ways, one of which is the reduction of arms and the bringing about of a better political atmosphere in which that arms reduction could take place. That is why currently the Prime Minister is devoting so much time to this particular effort in realization of the consequences of a nuclear war and the consequences of a continued buildup in hostilities.

REQUEST FOR TOTAL BAN ON NUCLEAR ARMS TESTING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question.

[Translation]

But I would like to ask a supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker. We in the New Democratic Party are prepared to go along with any peace initiative, but I wonder why the Prime Minister has not included in his present plan a total and immediate ban on nuclear testing and a nuclear freeze, and finally, why he did not include, as well, a proposal for nuclear-free zones? Why has he failed to include important issues like the three I just mentioned?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that underlying the Prime Minister's efforts is the belief that there are a large number of arms proposals now in play. There have been proposals made at the Geneva negotiations by the United States, and counter proposals by the Soviet Union. Some of these proposals merit attention.

One asks why is it that no progress has been made? It is not because there are not good arms proposals lying around; it is because the political atmosphere is so bad that it is impossible to move ahead with constructive conclusions. The Hon. Member may have very good ideas on arms control. I do not think that is the real block to present efforts to bring about solutions in the world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the interests of recognizing as many Hon. Members as possible, the Chair proposes to recognize Members for single questions only at this point. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. McKinnon: How did I get lucky enough to come in at this stage?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CF-18 AIRCRAFT—FAULTY ENGINE MOUNTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence, who has the country quite confused about the CF-18. He said on November 18, 1983:

—the needed engineering changes will be incorporated within the aircraft which are now entering the production line. There is, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, a fix being put in which will remedy the problem which he has identified.

Canadian Press in an article on November 19, 1983, wrote:

The U.S. Navy has ruled out replacement of the engine mounts as too expensive and no production design changes are planned—

Could the Hon. Minister assure the House that all of our F-18s—and we have some 20—will have their engine mounts replaced? Could he tell us what kind of a contract we have wherein the supplier might not be held responsible for the defective parts? Does it have anything to do with the short term of the warranty, which is 180 days—which is what you would expect on a $7 wrist watch?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the company has accepted the responsibility of performing the changes that are required, as was pointed out in my initial reply. The requirements are being looked at now in terms of incorporating the changes within aircraft No. 53 that is going onto the production line. That is the information with which I have been provided.

In terms of the changes contemplated for the aircraft that have already left the production line and have been delivered, I am advised the repairs are being performed now. In terms of exactly how the repairs will be completed, that is something which has not been identified to the satisfaction of my Department. We are still pursuing, with a great deal of interest, the solution being implemented.

UNEMPLOYED BRITISH COLUMBIA ENGINEERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. A recent study by a committee of professional engineers in British Columbia has identified that there are over 1,400 professional engineers unemployed in that Province, that 400 graduating engineers next spring have no job offers to which to look forward, and that about 2,500 registered and unregistered professional engineers will be unemployed within coming months.

My question is important because it appears that the lead time between the inception of projects and the spin-off work to contract and other trades personnel is at least a year and a half. What specific initiatives can the Minister offer, other than concrete and asphalt projects, like repaving parking lots in airports, such as the one in my constituency? What type of long-term hope can he offer to professional engineers in Canada, for example, in the area of technology and trades centres which may acquaint young professional engineers with the new opportunities that might present themselves in the years ahead?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are very conscious of the necessity of employing as many of these professionals as possible. In fact, many specific initiatives have been undertaken. The Hon. Member has asked for specific initiatives. He said that he did not want to hear about the paving of runways and highways, but I suggest that these in themselves are significant.

Apart from that, for example in British Columbia, as he knows, under the Special Recovery Capital Projects there is the $15 million facility for pulp and paper research in Vancouver. That is a major area of employment, of which I am sure he will be very much in support. We also have, of course, a number of other significant projects, such as the Block 15 Development in Vancouver, which in itself is another $41 million project. In addition to that, there is Canada Place and the tremendous amount of work which will be undertaken with respect to Expo 86, largely as a result of federal Government initiatives. This will clearly provide very substantial employment for engineers. Of course now, with the passage of the Crow Bill and western transportation initiatives, there will be a whole series of spin-offs, not to mention—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, the Hon. Member asked for specific—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps, if further detail is sought, a question could be put on the Order Paper.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The opinion expressed very strongly by high-ranking officials in the United States—and it is strongly rumoured that the two who expressed the opinion were Cabinet officers who requested anonymity—was that Canada's contribution to NATO is shameful. As this is precisely what Canadian delegates to NATO meetings have been hearing from their American and European counterparts for the past 15 years, does the Government not believe that it is long overdue to increase our NATO force to the full 10,000 fully-equipped men which it pledged when NATO was formed, and maintained until 1968 when the Prime Minister became the Prime Minister of our country and cut the force in half and, by so doing, brought shame and great embarrassment to our country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has referred to United States Cabinet officers.

All I can tell him is that I have had quite a number of discussions with the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Shultz, in the course of the past year, and at no point has he ever registered with me the view which the Hon. Member has attributed to the United States Cabinet officers.

I have pointed out to Mr. Shultz, on at least one occasion, and maybe more than one occasion, that Canada is committed to 3 per cent real growth in its defence expenditures. We intend to carry that out. We have undertaken modernization of the forces, and the annual nominal increase in our defence expenditures is quite substantial. If the Hon. Member would look at the rate of nominal growth in defence in comparison with other sectors of government expenditures, he would conclude that the amount spent on defence is quite impressive. I have no reason to accept the words of anonymous Cabinet officers as against the conclusions I draw from direct conversations with the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Shultz.

Mr. Hees: If I were allowed a supplementary question, I would murder him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF MEXICAN INDUSTRIAL ZONE ON CANADIAN INDUSTRIES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Minister knows, Mexico is developing a 50-mile wide industrial zone immediately south of the United States, bordering on the United States, and is promoting the moving in of both American and Canadian manufacturing industries where the labour rate cost burden is on average 92 cents per hour. I would like to know what our Government, through the Minister's Department, is prepared to do to stem the flow of Canadian manufacturing industries, not just United States branch plants in Canada but Canadian industries, into that industrial zone where labour rates are about 90 cents or 92 cents per hour.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that what Mexico is doing with respect to trying to encourage industry around the world to develop, by using its cheaper labour rates, is not something which just happened in the last couple of days. That is one of the reasons why we proposed—and it was adopted by all Parties in the House—the IRDP program to enable the Government to be proactive in encouraging small and medium-sized as well as large companies across the country to undertake investment programs to create more industrial jobs. We have the program. Now the question is: do we have the projects from the private sector right across Canada?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST FOR FULL DISCLOSURE OF SALARIES PAID SENIOR EXECUTIVES

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, a short time ago the acting Prime Minister took some pride in disclosing the list which was published giving upper and lower salary limits for senior quasi-public servants of Crown corporations. I wonder if he would like to take a further step and indicate why it is that the Government cannot indeed publish the salaries paid to chief executive officers, some of which extend to the limit of $228,000 per year, and in that way make full disclosure not only to the House but to the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the information which was tabled was in compliance with the law passed by the Parliament of Canada. Obviously with respect to public servants, we have made public the range of salary. In this particular case, because it is impossible to find anything equivalent to a range, we have shown the maximum salary and the lowest salary. One should not draw the inference that every person in that category is eligible to receive the maximum salary. The Hon. Member may find a good deal of value by referring to a survey which was published this year in the Financial Times, showing the salaries of top executives in the private sector which, in many cases, were much more than salaries paid in the public sector for those who, in some cases, were operating much larger and more expensive public corporations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my question has been preempted by the early departure of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF FISH TO PLANT AT FERMEUSE, NFLD.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries of Oceans my question is directed to his parliamentary assistant, who is not yet dry behind the ears. The Government has promised a resource-short plant program to supply fish to inshore plants which do not have offshore vessels, so that they can operate longer in the year. In particular, this was a promise made to the plant at Fermeuse in my district, and to the people there, some three or four months ago. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell me when that program will commence? When will fish start to be landed at Fermeuse or other inshore plants? Is the Minister prepared to permit foreign trawlers to be used to catch this fish if no satisfactory arrangements as to payment can be made with Canadian trawlers?

Point of Order—Mr. Berger

● (1500)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that this question is very much on the mind of the Minister, his Department, and his advisers. We are dealing with it even today. We would like to give him an answer as quickly as possible. Obviously I cannot do it in this House on short notice today. However, I want to say to the Hon. Member, in all sincerity, that it is much better to be wet behind the ears and trying sincerely, than to have dry sawdust for 15 years in a row between the ears, as one sits in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MR. BERGER—REMARKS OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention some comments made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I had hoped we would be here to listen to my comments. Unfortunately, he has already left the House. I am referring to some less than praiseworthy comments he made during oral question period. I find those comments rather surprising, especially since the Hon. Leader of the Opposition had said he hoped debate in the House would be more civilized.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to Citation 359(7) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which says, and I quote:

(7) A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.

I can assure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that I am quite capable of examining a Bill, of determining its substance and of making a considered decision. I merely want to ask him to withdraw his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is disposed to say at this time—and the Chair was listening attentively to the remarks which were made—that with all due respect to the Hon. Member, while the remarks were not complimentary, they were not unparliamentary.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that you would hear a spokesman from this side before making a ruling. I didn't hear—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) realizes the Hon. Member raised the point as to whether certain remarks were parliamentary or unparliamentary. The Chair has ruled that they are not unparliamentary, that they are acceptable within this House. Surely that disposes of the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that in questions of this nature, when the remarks are attributed to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), that we on this side might be heard before the Chair comes to a ruling. In the meantime, I of course agree wholeheartedly with the ruling of the Chair. It is sometimes very difficult for us on this side to distinguish the monkeys from the donkeys over there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I invite Hon. Members to reflect on whether they are contributing to the dignity of this place.

MR. FRETZ—RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition signed by thousands of people in the Province of Ontario. Whereas they believe that abortion clinics are the first step toward an even more relaxed abortion law and abortion on demand and are convinced that human problems must be solved by loving and caring, not by killing more than 65,000 unborn Canadians each year, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation to guarantee the right to life of all Canadians as yet unborn, while at the same time promoting in every way possible those groups which seek to provide life-saving alternatives to abortion. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 5,037 and 5,315.

[Text]

PART-TIME STUDY RELATED EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 5,037—Mr. Howie:

Did the Department of Employment and Immigration sponsor a program at the University of Winnipeg and at the University of Manitoba to provide a special initiative for employment stimulus which would involve part-time work for students attending these universities and, if so (a) within what time frame did the program operate (b) is the program still in existence (c) what amount was expended in support of the program at each University (d) is it intended to expand the program to include other universities in Canada?

Mr. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): In the fall of 1982, the Department of Employment and Immigration signed one agreement with the student union of the University of Manitoba and one agreement with the student union of the University of Winnipeg to provide part-time study related employment for students attending those universities. (a) The agreements initially covered the period from November, 1982 to August, 1983. (b) The agreements have now been extended to cover the period from November, 1983 to August, 1984.

(c) University of Manitoba November, 1982 to August, 1983—$375,000 November, 1983 to August, 1984—$500,000

University of Winnipeg November, 1982 to August, 1983—$80,000 November, 1983 to August, 1984—$100,000

(d) There are no proposals for other universities under consideration at this time.

RECIPROCAL SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT

Question No. 5,315—Mr. Young:

Did the Prime Minister make a representation to the Prime Minister of Great Britain that the Governments of Canada and Great Britain enter into a reciprocal Social Security Agreement and, if so, did the Prime Minister of Great Britain respond that representation and what was the nature of that response?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Yes, the Prime Minister did raise the subject with Prime Minister Thatcher and the question of U.K. pensioners in Canada and the possibility of a reciprocal Social Security Agreement was discussed. Prime Minister Thatcher noted that discussions were under way among officials.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RESOURCE INDUSTRIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Oberle:

That this House regards the Government's failure to take action to encourage the development of Canada's resource industries and ensure their competitiveness in world markets as a betrayal of all Canadians whose standard of living depends upon the resource sector of Canada's economy and calls upon the Government to bring an end to the nationalization of Canadian resource industries which has discouraged investment in Canada; introduce tax incentives to restore competitive advantage and stimulate resource production and further processing in Canada; initiate a programme of incentives for research and development; and incentives for marketing activities of Canadian industries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) had just completed his speech when the House adjourned at one o'clock. The floor is open.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on the motion put before the House today by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I must say that having read the motion I am amazed that such a motion has been put by the Official Opposition in view of the many actions which have been taken by the federal Government, not only this year through the Special Recovery Capital Projects which were announced in May of this year, but as well the many other activities which have been announced during the past few years.

I do not have to look at the national scene to identify many of the initiatives designed to aid and assist the resource industry taken by the federal Government because my own constituency is one which is very heavily dependent upon resource industries. These include the forest products industry, the pulp and paper industry, the mining industry, the agricultural products industry and the steel industry.

As I look back over the past three or four years, I see a number of initiatives which have not only made these resource-producing industries more acceptable in terms of environmental problems but as well have helped them to be able to meet the competition abroad in the years to come. In the pulp and paper industry in the Town of Espanola, which is in my own constituency, we have seen during the past two or three years a modernization program costing some $250 million undertaken by the E.B. Eddy Forest Products company. Its rehabilitation of an old plant that was not operating efficiently has almost been completed in the last few months. That undertaking required that a massive capital expenditure be made by the company but it was stimulated and assisted by an incentive program of the federal and provincial Governments.

This modernization will result in a much more efficient plant that will be turning out some 30 per cent to 40 per cent more pulp and paper a year. At the same time portions of wood fibre produced by our forests that are more suitable for use as lumber and other wood products are being used effectively in that way. We can see that a relatively modest stimulation grant of $7.5 million which was made by the federal Government a few years ago has resulted in a massive capital expenditure of over $200 million and will give an old mill that once produced some 600 tonnes of pulp and paper per day the capacity to turn out something like 1,000 tonnes of pulp and paper per day.

I went through that plant three or four months ago, Mr. Speaker, and I was impressed when I saw that in one pulp and paper facility which had cost some $20 million, the total work force in that mill was only some four people per shift. We often speak about robotics and modernization. That industry has really modernized to meet the competition abroad. I believe it has done so despite the difficult recession which began in the latter part of 1981 and continued into 1982. The plant was still able to continue to operate, and of course it will be that much more efficient and that much more beneficial in the years to come when the economics of the industry will improve and the demand for products will increase.

In the years to come, the size of that sawmill operation will be increased to an ultimate capacity of something like 130 million board feet of lumber a year. Historically, that is a massive kind of operation. In the past there existed in the Blind River area a very large white pine industry operated by McFadden Lumber. In its best years back in the 1930s and 1940s, that company produced only something like 30 million board feet per year. I understand that when this mill is completed, its capacity will approach 130 million board feet of lumber per year. We can now catch a glimpse of the magnitude of its future operations.

In the next few months, however, I believe it is urgent that the federal Government and the provincial Government of Ontario reach a consensus on a new forest renewal agreement. I understand that negotiations in that regard are now taking place and that the federal Government and the Province of Ontario are looking at a five-year agreement under which they will spend some $250 million to $300 million. Some of that money will be spent building roads into resource areas in the forest, but a great deal of it will be spent on forest renewal. I think it is impossible to underestimate the importance of forest renewal.

Some would argue that the actual care, management, licensing and so on of forest resources is a provincial Government responsibility. Constitutionally there may be some validity to that argument. However, the entire industry is too important to wait for the Provinces to act. I believe it is clear that the federal Government should renew that agreement, which runs out next March, and put in place a new agreement for the forestry resources which will have a great deal of emphasis on forest renewal. As well, there is need for a research component to an agreement between the federal Government and the Province. However, the agreement must stress forest renewal to encourage replanting, silviculture and intensive reforesting.

I was pleased to note that in the announcement made after the budget came out last spring regarding the Special Recovery Capital Projects, a number of research station projects were approved. In the federal forestry domain alone some $13 million has been allocated for the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie which is in the riding of Algoma. That money has been allocated to increase extensively the size of that facility. As well, the budgets of other forest research stations in western Canada, Quebec and the Maritimes have been augmented. It is to the credit of the federal Government that it has made such a massive commitment. Without the necessary research we will not be able to meet the demands that are being put on the industry.

While mentioning the Special Recovery Capital Projects, I would also like to compliment the Government on the commitment made in the budget for funding under the Special Recovery Capital Projects for the water bomber fleet. That fleet will make a substantial contribution not only to Ontario but to many of the other Provinces as well by providing a mobile airborne firefighting service to assist the industry in the year ahead.

I would like to mention that energy, agriculture, fisheries, forestry and mining are all key sectors in Canada's economic development, sectors which the federal Government has given particular interest to over the past few years. The technological revolution will have a profound effect upon the future development of our resource industries and it is paramount that we take advantage of the opportunities which will be presented to us in these important areas.

One of the chief characteristics of research and development in the resource sector of Canada is the major contribution which the federal Government makes in undertaking the research for this industry. Because of the structure of the resource industry, the relatively small and scattered units of production, the federal Government has traditionally undertaken the role of the research arm for the industry. In agriculture, for example, the Department of Agriculture has had a major research program in place to support the industry ever since Confederation.

In 1983-84, the federal Government will be spending over $3.2 billion on science and technology in Canada. This is an increase of more than 10 per cent over the expenditures of $2.9 billion in 1982-83, and in a time of the six and five restraint program that shows the kind of commitment which the federal Government is placing on science and technological research. Much of this will be in support of the resource sectors such as forestry, mining and agriculture.

Some expenditures of the federal Government for science and technology in 1983-84 in the resource industries are: the energy sector, $385 million; agricultural research, $288.2 million; oceans and fisheries, $94.9 million; and natural resources, $214.2 million. Most of these expenditures are mission-oriented research expenditures within the Departments themselves. The Department of Agriculture, for example, will be spending $211 million on intramural research and development in 1983-84. Fisheries and Oceans will be spending $158 million. Energy, Mines and Resources will be spending $181 million, and the Canadian Forestry Service will be spending $62 million. These latter expenditures do not take into account the incentives which the federal Government provides to universities and industry to encourage them to support science and technology in the resource sectors. Nor do they take into account the approximately $200 million which the federal Government provides through tax incentives to encourage industry to invest in research and development.

Aside from these expenditures which are committed in the Main Estimates for 1983-84, further support to R and D in the resource sector has been provided under the Special Recovery Capital Projects program. This program, highlighted in the technology policy which was announced in the House of Commons on May 3, has allocated $337 million to the accelerated construction or expansion of research and training facilities. These projects are expected to expand substantially research capabilities to serve the forestry, fisheries, agri-food, manufacturing and mining industries. Another $15 million has been allocated to the construction of a fluid-bed minerals research centre in Chatham, New Brunswick. This project is expected to make a major contribution to Canadian mining technology.

Forestry research has received a major boost from this program. For instance, $22 million has been provided for a Maritime forest research centre in Fredericton, New Brunswick; $13 million, as I mentioned previously, has been provided to augment the Great Lakes Forest Research Laboratory in Sault Ste. Marie, and $14 million has been provided to increase the forest research facilities at the Pacific Forest Research Centre in Victoria, British Columbia.

As part of the joint industry-Government plan to spur technological development and innovation to enhance our forests' potential, the program has provided $2 million to expand the Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada's facilities at Pointe Claire, Quebec, and $15 million to construct new facilities in Vancouver, British Columbia. In the fisheries sector, $40 million is being provided to construct facilities for oceanographic and other fisheries related research at the Fisheries Research Centre in Mont Joli, Quebec.

In agriculture, $30 million is being provided to fund the construction of facilities for food research at the integrated research centre in St. Hyacinthe, Quebec. The results achieved at this research centre will support the growth and diversification of the food industry throughout the country. Also, $6 million is being provided to expand the NRC's prairie regional laboratory to house the western centre of the national biotechnology program. Research undertaken here will be primarily focused on the application of biotechnology to the agricultural industry. As well, $19 million will be provided as a contribution towards construction of the Atlantic Veterinary College in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. This is a total of $186 million in support of research facilities to improve research and development in the resource sectors. This does not indicate that the resource industries are being ignored by the Government of Canada; rather, it is a strong indication of the importance the federal Government is placing on supporting our resource development industries.

It is easy to fall into the trap of thinking that technology development is only high-tech or microelectronics. One of the objectives of the technology policy is to dispel this myth and to emphasize the importance of technology to all sectors of our economy. The very first objective of the policy is to strengthen the Canadian economy through the development of new technologies for producing goods and services and the widespread adoption of new and existing technologies. Canada has not always had a good record on technology diffusion within our industries. A recent study by the Economic Council suggests that we lag considerably behind other countries in the adoption of new technologies, particularly in the non-central regions of Canada. Not only is R and D critical to keeping our resource industries competitive, but diffusion of the new and available technologies is particularly important to our continuing ability successfully to make the most of our rich resource base.

Because research in the resource sector is so heavily dependent on research undertaken in the federal laboratories, the federal Government is particularly concerned that the research in these labs is both effective and relevant to the industry it serves. With respect to the research and technology development performed or funded by the Government itself, the objectives of the technology policy are: to ensure that all federal programs and policies related to technology development contribute as effectively as possible to the over-all federal objectives for technology and economic development; to ensure that the research undertaken in federal laboratories in support of technology development is relevant to industrial requirements and compatible with the stated economic objectives; and to ensure that Canada develops and maintains a national competence in the research and development necessary for technological development.

The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) has recently appointed a task force to review and recommend improvements to federal policies and programs related to technology development. The task force, which will report directly to the Minister, will review the Government's intramural science and technology activities and make recommendations on whether Government research is relevant to industry's needs. It will also study the Government's industry support programs, policies currently in place to enhance our R and D in the business sector, and possible improvements to university-industry co-operation with regard to R and D. The task force, comprised of representatives from industry, university and labour, was appointed in early November and has been asked to report within the next six months.

Public awareness of science and technology is also a critical factor in the abilities of our industries, our universities, our labour force and, in fact, our citizens to recognize the opportunities which the new technologies can offer and to avoid the pitfalls which technological change may place before us. This is as important in the resource sector as it is in any other.

As a first step in encouraging awareness of the effects of technological change and to encourage each sector to manage instead of just reacting to technological change, the federal Government sponsored the Canada Tomorrow Conference. This conference drew representatives from each sector in Canada, including agriculture and the forest and mining industries. The conference opened up lines of communication which had previously been unknown or had lately grown lax from disuse. This communication is vital if Canada is to apply successfully its technological potential to its future economic development. It is a first step but one which will be used to build future ties and develop further policies, not only by the federal Government but by the participants from those various industries such as agriculture, high technology, and resource industries including mining and forestry.

I want to conclude by saying that Canada is a country rich in resources. We cannot ignore the advantages we have in this area. The federal Government has long invested in the future of our resource base by investing in research for our resource industries. Almost 40 per cent of the Government's R and D intramural expenditures are spent on our natural resources, and we will continue to provide this kind of support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) confesses that he is perplexed as to why we put forward this motion. He says he cannot understand it, then by rote he rhymes off item after item of Government money going into NEED programs and the like. This is the first opportunity in some time that I have had to speak of my own riding of Yukon, some 237,000 square miles, if I am still permitted to use that term in this place. That part of Canada this Government has virtually closed down. No amount of NEED programs, no amount of paper jobs and no number of speeches along the lines of the one of which the Hon. Member for Algoma has just divested himself, will cure that ugly fact.

The most recent project which provided some glimmer of hope for the hundreds of unemployed in Yukon was turned down in early November by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). I speak of the north slope development where there exists a substantial potential for the development of oil and gas, but which requires construction of a port on the north slope of Yukon. I think it is an apt way to start my contribution to the debate by reading this telegram sent by the Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce in Yukon to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

Dear Mr. Trudeau:

The following resolution was passed at the monthly membership meeting of the Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce on November 8th:

"That the Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce request that Mr. John Munro be asked to resign and further that a new Department of Northern Development completely separate from Indian Affairs be formed."

The Chamber passed this resolution due to Mr. Munro's announcement on November 7th prohibiting development on Yukon's north coast.

The following points are relevant:

1. The Minister is charged with responsibility for northern development, as well as Indian affairs. The Yukon economy is severely depressed, due to the shutdown of the mining and transportation industries. New development is required to provide jobs for the many native and non native people who have become unemployed over the past two years. For the Minister to turn down potential new jobs and business opportunities under such circumstances is a renunciation of his responsibilities for northern development.
2. The decision is also a powerful psychological blow to Yukon, as the proposed north coast developments offered a glimmer of economic hope to the Territory. Members of the Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce have asked themselves in the past whether the federal Government is interested in the existence of a viable private business sector in the north. We see development proposals going through extensive hearings and reviews which give the impression that development, jobs and taxes are not welcome in the north. Most recently, we see federal Government Departments, leaded by the Northern Affairs Department, proposing new regulations for the placer mining industry in Yukon when even the Government's own studies show that the regulations will put 16 per cent of the present operators out of business. If the Government persists in these actions and adds to the rolls of the unemployed, while refusing to let new projects proceed, we cannot expect to solve the unemployment problem in the Territory or expect private business to survive. Under such circumstances we find it very hard to be optimistic and we await with trepidation the Minister's decision regarding implementation of the placer mining regulations.
3. The Minister has responsibility for the way in which development proposals are handled. Each proposal in Yukon is dealt with on an ad hoc basis. Each has to meet rules, regulations and concerns that are expressed by Department employees at the time of application and which may differ from application to application. Nobody is sure of the ground rules or of the possibilities of success when they make an application. We understand that both applicants in the current issue were encouraged by Department of Northern Affairs staff to proceed with their applications and that both had met the various concerns identified by Departmental staff.

I will be reading into the record a departmental document to show the truth of that assertion. It continues:

The refusal of their proposals after a protracted period of discussion lasting many months, and on the basis of issues that had not been identified before, leads to waste of investment money and effort on behalf of the applicants. It also discourages future development proposals, as proponents will not know what the ground rules are, will have no faith in the bureaucrats knowing what the issues are and will face inflated and additional costs with no assurance that they will see any return. In conclusion, I repeat again that Yukon is suffering severe economic problems. Unemployed residents must move south to find work and our young people graduating from school must do the same. Initially this situation was caused by the international economic slowdown. However, the uncertainty in the placer mining industry has been caused by the federal Government and in the north coast case we cannot understand how a Minister of your Government can turn away a potential solution to the economic problems of Yukon by disallowing new industrial expansion in the Yukon by Canadian companies.

We urge you to obtain Mr. Munro's resignation and to establish a new department responsible solely for northern development headed by a new Minister who is aware of the need for northern development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It is signed "Sincerely, P. G. Dixon, President, Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce." I have a better solution than that, Mr. Speaker. That is a modest request by the Chamber of Commerce on behalf of Yukoners. A far better solution would be to get rid of the whole damn mess on the Treasury benches, have them move aside so that we can move with some energetic and visionary policies with respect to developing this country. What does the King Point Quarry proposal mean? What would it have meant to Yukoners, to Canadians not just in Yukon, because certainly it has its national aspects in the potential oil and gas fields off the north slope of Yukon? It would have created a harbour facility, an air strip, quarry facilities and a haul road. A camp would have accommodated 300 people, 400 during the construction stages. Over a quarry life of 20 to 25 years it would have meant an average employment of 300 people, most of whom would have been Yukoners. The vast majority of those would be northerners. It would have meant spin-offs of $3.5 million a year in goods and services required at one operation. This is the proposal that the Minister has rejected. Why has he rejected it? He has rejected it on the basis that it might jeopardize the final conclusion of native land claims. What a cop-out, Mr. Speaker. We have had the Government of Canada, the Government of Yukon, and the Council for Yukon Indians studying and negotiating since 1973. Their target, which is still realistic today, was for announcing the final agreement in principle by the end of this month. Yet on November 7 the Minister gives us the excuse of native land claims for not proceeding with this project.

● (1540)

Another vital factor here is that there was a window within which this project had to be approved or lost, a window which was imposed as a result of the need for the project to go ahead on time. Otherwise the proponents would have to look elsewhere for the method and materials to construct the off-island sites for exploration for oil and gas. That window is now gone. I dare say that if the Minister changes his mind, which I hope he still might do, it could very possibly be that the proponent will still go ahead with the project.

Let me quote from the Department's own document, a presentation to the north slope project review group, that is a group that was set up by the Minister himself, by the northern affairs program department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This is the Department's own document that was presented about five weeks before the Minister made his decision. I am quoting as follows from the third heading, "North Slope Package":

> At the time the Hon. John Munro announced the creation of the Project Review Group, he indicated that he hoped to be able to announce in the Fall a "package" for the North Slope, consisting of land claim settlements, a caribou management board, a National Park, a land use planning mechanism, and limited industrial development. While each of these are being carried forward in another forum, DIAND would like to make you aware of the progress toward each major element of the package in order to assist you in your deliberations.

Here follows the Departments' own assessment, obviously designed to encourage the project review group to bring down a favourable decision to proceed with north slope development. Under "Land Use Planning" the Department says:

> As you are aware, extensive consultation and discussions with the territorial governments and the native organizations (CYI in Yukon, and the Dene, Métis, COPE and TEN in N.W.T.) have resulted in agreement on the implementation of land use planning in Yukon—

Under "Land Claims" the Department says:

> It is hoped that negotiations on the sub-agreements which will constitute the over-all agreement in principle, will be completed in October, subject to subsequent ratification.

Since this document was prepared, the sub-agreement collection has been made public and they are completed with one or two minor exceptions, none of which have any direct bearing on the reconsideration of the Minister's decision on the north slope.

Paragraph 4, "Some DIAND Objectives for the North Slope of the Yukon", reads:

> Finally, we would like to put several major elements of the Department's thinking with respect to the North Slope on the record to assist the Group.

Two paragraphs on the following page are pertinent:

> While the Department is just started on the intensive review of the Kiewit proposal, we have had the Gulf proposal for over a year now. In looking at both, we have wanted to determine if both were good projects, were they serious, viable, needed projects. We have concluded that the Gulf request for a marine support base is such a project, and our scrutiny to date of the Kiewit proposal suggests that it too meets these tests.
> We have wanted to determine if negative environmental impacts can be managed, or mitigated, and if what one could call the down side of the project can be controlled. In the case of the Gulf application, we are confident that these tests can be met, and while the review of the Kiewit proposal is very much in progress, nothing seen to date suggests an unmanageable problem.

And on the next page:

> These projects especially entail a high degree of industrial and employment benefit for the people of the Yukon.
> If we look to the future, a site on the Yukon North Slope has a significant set of advantages, not the least of which is enhancing the economic future of the Yukon, a goal shared with the Government of the Yukon. If tied in with a quarry, it opens the chance for Canadians to earn potentially hundreds of millions of dollars in the foreign trade market, and to have available if needed a technique for building hydrocarbon production facilities with a very high Canadian content. If properly located, such a port opens the door to valuable business opportunities for all Canadians and especially Northerners, for marine support activities aimed at the American Beaufort. And, if properly sited, it will of course have a substantial similar role if and when hydrocarbon development takes place in the Canadian Beaufort.

The Member for Algoma went through a lengthy list of moneys that were being expended on these "make aid" programs financed by billions of Canadian taxpayers' dollars to make work for unemployed people whom they themselves have put out of work. Now the private sector and private industry come along wanting to make an investment in Canada's future. What does this Government say to it? It says, "We do not want your dollars. We do not want your jobs."

The chances are that the technology that will be required to be used now in order to proceed with that port facility is not available in this country and those jobs and dollars will be exported to Japan or to some other offshore location. I find it totally incomprehensible that the Government goes to such lengths to turn a cold shoulder to the private sector in this country which wants to invest in its own future and wants to create jobs. The Government says, "No, because we do not want to prejudice native claims that are now on the verge of completion." I think I can safely stand here and say, with one or two i's and t's to be dotted and crossed, that a total agreement in principle will be out by the end of this month.

It is a sham for the Minister to say that the project is not proceeding because of native claims. I find it difficult to try to figure out why, unless it is because he wants to use the time for announcing the Yukon agreement in principle and the time for announcing the COPE agreement in principle to tie in somehow with his own personal ambitions for what he expects to be a leadership convention of the Liberal Party. That is the only possible reason I can think of why he would reject this project. I understand negotiations are underway through which the CYI might be provided with a loan of $80 million by the Canadian Government so that it can take an equity position in the Kiewit project, in the King Point project. If that loan is made, over a period of 20 to 25 years the Government will certainly recover its $80 million loan to the native organizations there. At the same time the native organizations will ensure that their own people are employed in the project.

I would find it quite acceptable if the Government wanted to follow that kind of course. It would be a sound investment. However, if that is the case, and I understand the case is that these negotiations are ongoing, I urge the Government to make that kind of loan so as to ensure that the project goes ahead because it will certainly see its money returned in very short order.

I wanted to say something about northern Canada Power Commission and how tragic that National Energy Board report is and how tragic it is that the Government is not proceeding with the unanimous Penner report in that regard. I wanted to say something about the suffocation that is occurring with respect to the placer mining industry in the Yukon, which is virtually being shut down by the Government's action. I wanted to say something about the taxation of northern benefits, which we have enjoyed in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and indeed throughout northern Canada for so many years now. Again, the Government is acting in a way that shows a total and complete insensitivity to the problems of northern Canada and particularly to my part of the country.

These and other measures surely have to be reviewed and they must be reviewed by a Minister who is sensitive to northern concerns and the concerns of northern people. They must be reviewed in a fashion which totally separates the Minister from his two hats, one where he is obliged to care for the general welfare of our Canadian native population and the other where he has an obligation to ensure reasonable development in northern areas.

I might say that the Yukon Government is totally supportive of the Keiwit proposal and if we had the decision to make, I can tell you that a Conservative Government would be totally supportive of this kind of development. It is totally incomprehensible why the Minister and his Government would refuse the only succour that is on the horizon for a part of Canada that has been virtually frozen by the policies of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments and answers. Debate.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to apologize for the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). The Minister was notified only fifteen minutes before three o'clock that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would be speaking to the motion before the House today.

There are two important aspects to this debate. It is clear that Canada's North must be developed, but always within the context of native rights. I think that is essential, and the Member for Yukon is well aware of this. As the Member for Manicouagan, I realize the implications, since the Fort Chimo area is part of my riding, and we are very aware of the fact that, in both cases, Canada's North and the issue of native land claims cannot be seen separately from one another.

That being said, I would first like to point out to the Member for Yukon that asking for the resignation of the Minister of Indian affairs and Northern Development is not the way to settle the issue. I was in Fort Chimo only ten days ago, and their position was the exact opposite. They wanted the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to stay for a long time, and people were saying that he was one of the few Ministers who had done as much for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I feel that the report tabled by a House Committee not long ago proves beyond a doubt that the present Minister is very sensitive to native rights and land claims and also to the need for development of the North.

Mr. Speaker, to answer the Member for Yukon, I would like to point out that the present Minister has certainly not dismissed the Keiwit proposal. The minister wanted to examine other suggestions as well, because, as the Member for Yukon pointed out earlier, all kinds of studies have been made concerning the Yukon North Slope project.

Very shortly, in a matter of weeks, a definitive report will be submitted to the Minister on the issue of native land claims. At that point, the Minister intends to consider several other proposals aimed at creating maximum employment and especially at bringing about a balanced development process in the Yukon area, not only for industry but for the native peoples as well. I imagine both sides of the House will agree that development of the North must be achieved in co-operation with the first inhabitants of this area as well as with the various companies involved.

Where the Member for Yukon commented that through nationalization, the Canadian Government was preventing the development of the private sector in Canada's North, I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that in my riding, the industrial sector includes both a number of private enterprises and Government-owned corporations. As far as iron ore is concerned, I don't think the federal Government, the present Government, brought about the present situation which, as far as I can see, is a matter of economics.

In Canada's North, we are often faced with the same situation. There is oil, which is in demand today, but there are also minerals, Mr. Speaker, which are there for us to mine and market. However, my colleagues on this side of the House as well as those opposite will realize that it would be entirely premature at this stage to issue licences to various companies or to approve various industrial proposals at a time when we are about to sign agreements on native land claims. I think it is a matter of responsibility, and it is also absolutely vital to any negotiations that we should know how the land will be apportioned and what are the costs involved.

The Member for Yukon also raised the fact that Keiwit was anxious to proceed immediately. Perhaps I may point out, for the benefit of the House, that negotiations are still taking place between the Department and the company in question, and that it was never the Department's intention to set aside the Keiwit proposal. The important thing now is to ensure that the Keiwit proposal, as so many other proposals and suggestions, is analyzed in the light of native land claims. I think that is extremely important. I think it is unrealistic of the Whitehorse Chamber of Commerce to ask for the creation of separate Departments of Northern Development and Indian Affairs. Anyone who knows the history of Canada's North, and I am sure my friends opposite do, knows perfectly well that all these issues are related. Anyone who decided to work only on the business aspects without considering the other issues would soon realize that not only is this a useless exercise, but it only makes the problem worse.

I think Members opposite who are as experienced as Members of this side of the House will agree that proceeding today with issuing licences and agreeing to large scale projects in the Yukon territory, while within a few weeks we can expect to have definitive proposals signed by various parties, would be premature and irresponsible on the part of the Department. I think we should realize that during the past four years, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has done tremendous work in bringing all parties towards an agreement that will be binding on the signatory parties. I think that is important. Of course it would be nice to be able to act quickly and get into the North and develop it, but doing so without having a formal agreement with the groups in the North would, in my view, be an abuse of authority. I think the Department is right in wanting to examine this aspect more specifically, before giving the go ahead for any project whatsoever.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the House, that a number of suggestions were submitted to the Department, not only the Keiwit project, but many others. When I hear the Member for Yukon asking for the Minister's resignation, I must say his request seems rather out of touch with reality, since that is not going to solve the problem. On the contrary, there may be a case for asking for additional time, although I agree these delays are a nuisance, but it does take time for people to understand each other. It takes time, if we are to avoid pitched battles, to reach a carefully considered agreement that will be acceptable to the two or three parties involved, because we have to consider the Yukon Territory as such, and the native people's issue and the position of the federal Government. It is a complex matter involving several parties. Once an agreement is concluded, I think we will be able to proceed quickly, while respecting the rights of all concerned. That is very important, and that is how this country should develop. I think this question can not be properly debated if we ignore these basic issues.

● (1600)

Where it says in today's motion, and I quote:

That this House regards the Government's failure to take action to encourage the development of Canada's resource industries and ensure their competitiveness in world markets as a betrayal of all Canadians—

I think that is a misrepresentation of facts and a verbal abuse of the present situation.

Anyone who has visited Canada's North, Mr. Speaker, will acknowledge that a great deal has been done about developing the North. The main problem in this country is our domestic markets. That is often the problem with which we are faced when dealing with the issue of developing these areas, and we must not forget another major problem, which is the high cost of access to these areas and the cost of the projects themselves, considering the constraints of our northern climate and the distances to be travelled. All this is, of course, related to the availability of transportation. Therefore, taking a very harsh stand against the Government and using censorious language is not going to solve the problem.

The development of the North will always be a tremendous challenge for Canadians. People tend to refer to it as a problem. It is a fact that developing the North takes a lot of imagination, a lot of financial resources and a lot of know-how. But taken as a whole, those projects amount to quite a challenge. Several companies are now operating very far up north, including Crown corporations—I might point out that Crown corporations have made their presence felt in the Beaufort Sea and everywhere in the Arctic—and lots of research is being done to develop the North.

The way the motion reads, Mr. Speaker, it is suggested that we have not done everything possible and that it remains——a betrayal of all Canadians whose standard of living depends upon the resource sector of Canada's economy and calls upon the Government to bring an end to the nationalization of Canadian resource industries which has discouraged investment in Canada;

—but I think it does not reflect reality. Again the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) made every effort in the last budget to make it easier for companies to drill and come up with concrete projects to diversify the economy in Canada's Arctic lands, but all that cannot be done overnight.

Perhaps I should urge Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party to ask their leader just how much energy and effort is required to develop the North. Schefferville is only in the mid-north of Quebec, a far cry from the Far North. For those who are aware of the situation in Schefferville, Gagnon and Fermont, I will get back to the Schefferville issue some other day when the Leader of the Opposition is in the House, and I will talk about the development of Schefferville and Sept-Îles and about mining. It is important to know the full story of mining development in that region. In any case, just to keep the debate on an objective basis, let us ask the former Iron Ore Company president what it means to develop those places. It is a giant task. Even at that, no matter how governments or private enterprise might plan ahead, see what happened and what is happening now on the North Shore. None of the public or private sector experts had expected the collapse of the iron ore market, everybody was taken by surprise. So much so that, in 1974, the Iron Ore Company poured $350 million to install a concentrator at Sept-Îles, but it was never put into operation, not because the Sept-Îles workers had not done the job properly, but simply because the demand for iron ore pellets went flat between 1974 and 1979. After reading the motion under consideration, I realize that it is meaningless, although I understand why some Members may be impatient. I understand, but those remarks do not justify that impatience.

Mr. Speaker, it is much more rewarding to try to find formulas which are a bonanza for everybody rather than to impose development. When development is imposed without the agreement of all parties concerned, solutions which are worse than the problem are arrived at and, in the case of the development of the Yukon, I think it is imperative to settle the issue of the native peoples' territorial rights. All Members know that it has always been one of the key factors in the development of the North. The town of Schefferville was developed right next to an Indian reserve, and the company held lengthy negotiations with the Indians before reaching agreements.

I should point out again, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to agreements, we experience difficulties, not only with the federal Government or private companies, but also with a provincial Government, that of Newfoundland. Here again it boils down to tradition, because the North Shore Montagnais and the Naskapis are not allowed to hunt, fish or trap in the Labrador territory of Newfoundland. They will soon seek to meet with Mr. Peckford to find a solution. If someone wants to resort to force, the police will be called in. It is a very simple case, but people have to live with it every day and it is taking ever more significance.

I am saying that only to show that if it is difficult to convince the Newfoundland Government that the traditions of the North Shore Montagnais ought to be respected, it is just as difficult to launch major industrial projects unless all parties concerned have first agreed to a joint or common plan.

Within a few weeks, the report will be completed, agreements will have to be made, and I think that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will do his utmost to give every consideration to the suggestions made to him by various interests about the project on the north slope of Yukon.

Mr. Speaker, there is a last point I should like to make, since my time is rapidly running out. It is that we must ensure, once the native land claims are settled, that the various companies and Government levels act quickly to meet with departmental officials so that the different projects can go forward. It often happens that a project is reviewed long before a decision is made, but the Department hopes that once the land claims are settled, we can do as the Hon. Member for Yukon and other Members for northern and southern Canada have suggested and act quickly. I simply want to emphasize that provincial governments as well as private companies and Crown corporations should meet quickly with departmental officials in an effort to speed up the implementation of these projects.

The Minister was telling me earlier, Mr. Speaker, that his major objective as far as Yukon development is concerned was to create the maximum number of jobs and develop as many aspects of the Yukon economy as possible, because of the tremendous potential of the area and we would not want this development to be delayed by anyone. We want to make sure that will take into account the people who live in these regions and the companies working there will reap the benefits of that development. This is very important. I believe that Members of a Central Government must be aware of all the problems encountered in such negotiations. If by chance someone had wanted to undertake certain projects before all the agreements were in place, what would have happened? Everyone knows what would have happened, namely injunctions, court appearances and longer legal delays than those caused by the negotiations, especially now that these negotiations are coming to an end. I believe that the Minister had the responsibility to negotiate with the various parties involved so that once an agreement was reached the various projects would not be further delayed by legal proceedings. We really want to go forward and make progress once these agreements are reached.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close simply by saying that the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Yukon that the Minister should resign, is abusive and irrelevant. On the contrary, I would ask for everyone's forebearance in view of the fact that the Minister will have the pleasure of announcing projects for the Yukon in the very near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments, answers? On debate, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). It is another indication of how badly things have turned out under the leadership of the present Government. I rise today to speak on the crucial issue of forestry and to commend the Hon. Member for his motion.

I would like to begin by providing a brief outline. The Trudeau years have not been good for forestry. Since 1968, the forestry service staff has been cut in half, as has research money. In 1978, for example, a decision to cut funding by shutting down the Petawawa Forestry Research Station met strong resistance. Fortunately, the decision was reversed and this important research centre continues to work on the problem of reforestation.

Just last August, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), as Minister of the Environment, announced a forest renewal cost-sharing agreement. This agreement would see the two levels of government and private industry pouring $300 million immediately into reforestation, rising to a total of $650 million by 1987. Today, the sad fact is that the Government has not gone far on this agreement. It is too easy to argue that the federal Government is helpless in this regard, being actual landlord to a mere 1 per cent of Canada's huge tracts of forest. Taxes and export benefits are so vital to the federal Government that the lack of attention forestry has received in recent years is both ludicrous and tragic.

Today, more than a dozen significant interest groups from the Woodworkers Union to the Science Council of Canada have called attention to the dismal neglect of our forests. I also rise as a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party representing the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, which is very concerned and dependent upon our immediate environment for our livelihood.

My concern with this vital issue of forestry is that forests are an integral part of the acid rain dilemma. The riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka is slowly being eroded and is dependent on a clean environment, as is our major industry of tourism. Tourism, in turn, is dependent upon good forests.

To understand the Canadian forest scene, one must look at land ownership. Unlike the United States where 60 per cent of the land is privately owned, Canada is almost entirely publicly owned. The federal Government owns about 40 per cent of the nation's almost four million square miles, the Provinces own about 50 per cent, and private owners own only 10 per cent. Within provincial boundaries the Provinces own 91 per cent of forest lands, with the federal share reduced to only 1 per cent and private land accounting for about 8 per cent.

Just what do these figures prove? They demonstrate that the use of our natural resources is unavoidably an immediate political issue. They also suggest that co-operation is absolutely necessary for effective national forestry and underlie the possibility of overlapping authority, wasteful repetition and internal dispute. All of these have arisen from time to time and are still present.

Curiously enough, Canadians are generally in the dark in this our largest industrial sector, perhaps because forestry has been an industry of the country for so long, nearly 400 years, and because the forests seem so abundant that we take it for granted. For decades this indifference was of little consequence since there were always good supplies over the next hill. However, today, when decisions must be made which will have serious effects on every Canadian, the reduction in forestry has become a problem. The sheer size of the industry will surprise and enlighten most Canadians. There are more than 300,000 Canadians who work in jobs directly related to forestry. An additional 700,000 jobs are indirectly supported by the industry. Of these, many are manufacturing jobs; one out of every seven manufacturing dollars is forestry related.

In addition, the industry represents a vital component of some provincial economies. In the cases of New Brunswick and British Columbia, it amounts to almost half the value of all provincial manufacturing activity. The political importance of the industry is further heightened by the fact that it is frequently located in communities which are almost entirely dependent upon it for employment. At least 300 communities across Canada are one-industry forestry towns without viable options; that is why it is so important.

Forestry is Canada's major contributor to our balance of trade, outstripping the combined net contribution of mining, agriculture, fisheries and petroleum fuels. Sales of forest products, domestic and foreign, mean close to $25 billion in trade for Canada annually. Forestry also stimulates other industries. It is the largest purchaser of manufactured goods in most of Canada's Provinces, the second largest purchaser in Quebec and the fourth largest in Ontario. The industry generates more than $1 billion annually in taxes for the federal Government, and it produces another $1 billion or more in taxes for the various provincial Governments. This does not take into consideration the millions of dollars paid out in municipal taxes. By recent estimate, just 1 per cent of the forest land base may contribute up to 3,000 jobs and $20 million in provincial tax revenue. In light of these figures it is surprising that warnings about potential threats to the industry have been ignored by the Government.

By the 1970s, a number of structural weaknesses in the industry became evident. New pulp and paper products, particularly in the southern United States, began to compete effectively in traditional Canadian export markets. Their access to lower labour, production and resource costs, plus a wood supply that regenerates itself more quickly, meant that these producers had a considerable price advantage. Also during the 1970s studies suggested that Canada's economically exploitable forest resources were much less plentiful than expected. A lack of long-term planning had resulted in insufficient forest protection and poor use of some timber species. In addition, poor harvesting techniques and rudimentary silviculture practices meant that more potential usable timber was wasted and that reforestation did not keep pace with harvesting.

In eastern Canada these problems were compounded by outdated capital equipment in the pulp and paper sector which wasted energy, caused pollution and required labour intensive production techniques. Also, low profit margins and low energy and wood supply costs gave little incentive to producers to re-equip. Thus, by the mid-1970s, a significant investment backlog had developed. Producers faced rising energy costs, tighter pollution control regulations, and machinery which was rapidly reaching the end of its productive life. The need for public action is obvious; today even more action is called for.

In its March 1983 report, the Science Council of Canada warned that the forests are essential to our social and economic wellbeing, yet we have allowed them to degenerate to a dangerous point. We have been felling, selling and shipping timber for so long and at such a rate that today a $23 billion industry is facing economic stagnation.

The comments of the Council and its report were welcomed. Concerned citizens, politicians from all sides of the House and spokesmen for industry have been warning the Government for many years that careless exploitation of the forest resource would mean its destruction. Today, despite improved utilization of the forest in the mills and efforts toward replacing the forest, the warnings have become more frequent. The real problem as I see it is that none of the forests we see around our urban areas are marketable.

Why are our forests disappearing? The first big attack on them is logging. We cut about 2.6 million acres each normal year. Of this, at least one-third is not sufficiently restocked. Each year, 400,000 acres are added to the National Science Research inventory. About 12 per cent of our forest land is now in this category. If we had this to cut again, we could sustain our present harvest for about 30 years on this land alone.

The forests are also diminished by pest and disease. At its height, the spruce budworm epidemic had defoliated more than 150 million acres of forest land, about two-third the size of Ontario. Annually we lose about $1 billion in potential forest trade because of insects. Something can be done about this. Fire is another major factor in forest loss. In the last few years we have lost up to six times the annual harvest to fires. Acid rain is becoming a great concern as far as it affects growth in our forests. On this matter, the Europeans are now bringing evidence of their concern. To all these factors we must add the withdrawal of the forest base for parks, reserves, roads, hydro lines, urban expansion and agricultural expansion. Finally, better co-ordination between the forestry organizations and Government Departments would help on this account.

What then is to be done? This morning we heard the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) outline what the Government has done and is doing and laud his accomplishments. Without sounding disrespectful, I commend the Minister. However, this is not enough. It is only a beginning. As he pointed out, there are still many priorities that remain. They are, more research and development which is essential for protection and a further increase of funds for the Canadian Forestry Service. To this list may the Official Opposition add a few of its own concerns or areas that the Minister can consider when he approaches his colleagues for additional funds.

The Minister should enhance forestry to a higher prominence as a distinct federal ministry, eliminate areas of federal-provincial overlap and, where desirable, develop further joint management jurisdictions. In conjunction with the Provinces, he should encourage improved management and protection of the forest resource with the intention of increasing productivity by at least 50 per cent by the year 2000.

The Minister should consider accepting a share of forest-related costs consistent with the benefits received by Governments from the forest sector, linking federal funding to a set percentage of the federal revenue, averaged over five years, taken from that sector. Through tax measures, he should encourage industry involvement in more intensive forest management, regeneration and product research and, finally, manage more effectively the large federal lands currently being neglected.

It is rather a coincidence that in the Sunday Star the lead editorial was headed "Our Threatened Forests". I quote the editorial:

> The forest industry is Canada's largest. One out of every seven of our manufactured goods is a forest product. And the industry is responsible, directly or indirectly for about a million jobs.
> Obviously, it would be an unbelievable catastrophe to lose this resource through waste, mismanagement or neglect. Yet apparently we're doing just that.
> Our forests are threatened. As Patricia Orwen reported in The Saturday Star recently, large areas of once-lush land already are barren. Canada's trees are being lost while much of the public believes that the supply is endless and that Government and industry are taking measures to protect that supply.
> These beliefs are mistaken. The evidence says we're harvesting our trees faster than we replace them.
> According to the Science Council of Canada, one-eighth of the country's productive forest area has become useless and will remain so for the next 60 to 80 years. And a 1981 federal discussion paper says Ontario's timber industry faces widespread shortages this decade, unless we do a better job of managing our forests. And we dare not wait.
> Basing its calculation on the Ministry of Natural Resources' own figures, a New Democratic Party task force says we're writing off 37 acres of forest an hour. In 1980 and 1981, almost 30 per cent of what was cut—about 270 square miles—was laid to waste and not replanted. That's an area larger than metropolitan Toronto. Some forest will regenerate itself. Some of the waste land, it's true, is not suitable for replanting.
> But the conclusion seems unescapable that, overall, a much greater effort is needed to replenish what has been cut throughout the Province.
> Clearly, a new effort is needed. Ontario has made a start by entering into new forest management agreements with a number of large lumber companies. These agreements provide the companies with provincial money and require them to replant in areas they harvest.
> Such agreements are good, and there should be more of them. But agreements alone are not enough. We need to treat forestry like farming. Trees are crops that must be tended and nurtured before we move down the road to look for more.
> And we need to spend more money. The Science Council says we should more than double our funding for reforestation and research. Ottawa, Queen's Park and the timber industry may quibble about who should pay more for what, but there is no doubt more should be spent.
> Otherwise we may squander the future of a $23 billion industry.

As a member of the Special Committee on Forestry, a few years ago I visited the forestry station at Pembroke. At Kemptville we saw the new hybrid poplar which is being developed there. It grows much quicker and will provide the necessary raw product for our paper mills. There are currently about 3,000 acres, with a total of 5,000 well established acres. These plantations are increasing by 1,100 per year. There are 600 acres cared for by the Ministry and 500 acres privately run.

The emphasis of this program is on technology transfer. The companies involved, and I give them full credit, include Domtar and Granville Christian College as it purchases fuel for each. Other projects are by Ontario Paper, Malette Waterford and the Eddy Match Company. The Government is financing with a fifty-fifty split between the two levels of Government, and the 1980-84 term has provided $500,000. In addition, the National Research Council is involved.

It is interesting to note that it takes 60 years for a hardwood tree to reach maturity. Pulpwood trees require about 40 years. The hybrid poplar can be harvested within seven years. It will have a diameter of about seven inches. That is amazing.

As I pointed out earlier, we are in tough competition with Georgia, where vegetation and growth is much superior. Our friends in Sweden spend $1 billion a year on silviculture, protecting their forests, reforestation and protection against acid rain. We in this country spend probably no more than 25 per cent of that amount.

As a member of the Subcommittee on Acid Rain, Mr. Speaker, I am vitally interested in the subject and am interested in the fact that acid rain is doing considerable harm to our forests, not only to the seedlings but also to the mature trees. People have pointed out to me that during certain periods of time after a severe rain, one can actually see what has happened to the leaves of the trees from acid rain.

I know there are other Members who are interested in the subject of acid rain and I know how important this subject is. I hope the Government will give serious consideration to this, the most important industry in the entire Dominion of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments, answers? Debate.

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, once again I welcome the opportunity to say a few words about Canada's resource sector and what the Government has been doing to encourage and develop this sector over the past few years, particularly since the Government obtained its latest mandate in February, 1980. I am very proud to be a supporter of the Government at a time when economic fortunes have not been as promising as we would have liked.

The Government has been able to stabilize and preserve the welfare program at a time when other voices have been saying that it ought to cut back. The Government has been able to hold its own in terms of the balance of trade and in terms of exports to other countries. However, it is in the achievements of the Government in the resource sector over the past four years in particular that supporters of the Government can take greatest pride. I say that having in mind particularly what the Government has done in the energy sector.

The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), when wording his resolution, must have had in mind the speech made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) which was delivered in Calgary a few days ago. I am sure Hon. Members of the Opposition will remember that speech. They want very much to forget it but it is on the record. It will be difficult for them to forget that speech. We on this side will not let them forget that speech for a couple of reasons. The first reason we will not let them forget that speech is that it is the closest the gentleman from Central Nova has come to putting himself on the record in so far as any policy position is concerned. We will remember it for that reason. However, Mr. Speaker, it is a landmark speech for another reason. What the Leader of the Opposition put on the record one day, he tried to disown the following day and the day after that. He will have difficulty disowning that particular speech, but that is another subject, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying that the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River must have had that particular speech in mind when he worded his resolution because, in some respects, it seems to me that the Hon. Member cribbed some of the wording and perhaps some of the ideas from the very first speech made by the Leader of the Opposition on the subject of energy policy. At that time, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that he would change some of the energy measures and would abolish others, but in the end he really did not tell us what energy policy he would follow as the Leader of the Government. A few days after that speech, no one is really sure what it is that the Leader of the Opposition wants to change. I am anxious to know and I believe all Canadians are anxious to know what he wants to change. It is a pity that we may never know.

In the meantime, Hon. Members of the Opposition continue to ramble on condemning policies without ever telling the Government what they would put in place of those policies. For example, the Leader of the Official Opposition accused the Government of over-taxing the oil industry. The question to be asked is, would a Tory Government tax the industry less? Are Tory Members telling us that they would tax it less? The oil industry now receives 50 per cent of energy revenues; that is right, 50 per cent of revenues as compared, for example, to the 46 per cent it received just five years ago in 1978. The current share of 50 per cent is much higher, for example, than it was three or four years ago. What was the share in 1979 when the Tories were in power? It was 41 per cent; that is right, 41 per cent under the Tory régime. The industry now receives an additional 9 per cent, totalling 50 per cent of revenues in 1983. In terms of revenue shares, Mr. Speaker, the Government feels that the industry is being treated fairly.

In terms of dollars, the industry revenue position has increased dramatically from $4.5 billion under the Tory Government in 1979 to $11.7 billion today. Industry revenues are now two and a half times what they were when the Tories were in power four years ago. Tory Members who were in power four years ago are those same Tories who are now somehow implying that the industry is not being treated fairly. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the industry is being treated more fairly now than it was four years ago under the Tories. It is receiving $11.7 billion this year compared to the $4.5 billion it received four and a half years ago under the Tory Government.

I am not suggesting that that kind of money, although it is a monumental amount, is too much. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) believes that it may be too much, but of course his socialist views are well known to the House and to the country. I do not agree with his views, but I respect his right to hold them. He and I share many of the same views on the fishery issue and I congratulate him on his enlightenment in at least some areas of the economy.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that $11.7 billion is too large a sum for the industry to receive. The Government thinks that it is a fair share. Indeed, I think that the provincial Governments and the industry would say the same of the current federal share of 20 per cent. The provincial Governments and the industry would say that that is fair as well, and they have told us exactly that. However, Opposition Members continue to blame federal taxes for any negative energy event. Why are they not honest with themselves and with Canadians? Would they settle for a lower federal share? Would they increase the deficit through tax concessions? Is that what they are trying to tell us?

Another common Tory argument is that the effect of our policies has been to discourage investment. Again, Tory Members should check the facts and listen to the authorities on this subject. Just a few weeks ago, for example, Oilweek magazine, a respected Canadian magazine published in Calgary, reported its assessment of oil industry activity. Oilweek magazine estimates that there will be considerable increases in oil and gas industry investment. It expects petroleum exploration and development expenditures in Canada to total $5.6 billion this year, a record level.

While Oilweek magazine is confirming what the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) has been saying for some time, which is that we are headed for record levels of investment to the tune of $5.6 billion this year, and while that is the reality and everyone in the oil patch has been saying that that is the reality, what have the Tory Members been saying? They have been saying that it is not enough to have record investment projections at a time when the economy has been fairly slow, and I hope they know that it has been slow. The fact has been with us for some time. Yet they persist in maintaining the fantasy that things are as bad as they wish them to be. Things are not as bad but are much better then the Tories would wish them to be. Oilweek magazine says so and others say so.

From our own perspective, the amount mentioned of $5.6 billion in investment is over 70 per cent more than the industry invested only four short years ago. Who was in power at the time, Mr. Speaker? That is right, the good old Tory Members who now say: "Not enough, too little, too late". In four years, since the Canadian electorate kicked the Tories out of office, this Government, in collaboration with the provincial Governments and the oil industry, has managed an increase in investment of more than 70 per cent—

• (1640)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Debts. A lot of debt.

Mr. Simmons: —to $5.6 billion this year.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Debt.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) should really watch his blood pressure. I would not want him to get overly exercised by what I am saying.

Mr. Blenkarn: Then be careful of what you are saying, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: I am merely telling the truth. I know he does not like the truth.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Why do you not try the truth for a change?

Mr. Simmons: And I invite him, if he has some documentation, to contradict the figures I just gave him. And I will give those figures again: a 70 per cent increase in investment since the Tories were booted out of office by a smart Canadian electorate; an investment this year of $5.6 billion—

Mr. Stewart: Added to the deficit. Right on top of the deficit.

Mr. Simmons: Is the Hon. Member saying that that is not true? If so, he is contradicting the respected Oilweek magazine in Calgary. But he has been known to contradict respected sources before. He is known to have had egg all over his face before. However, if he wants to contradict, I invite him to contradict.

Mr. Taylor: I don't know how you get that report.

Mr. Simmons: The gentleman from Bow River wonders as he often does. I can stand before him because I have the facts straight out of one of the most respected oil magazines in western Canada. I suggest he read it some time. He might learn something. It seems to me I have hit a nerve somewhere.

An Hon. Member: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Simmons: In this latest Tory motion they condemn once again our decision to expand the role of Petro-Canada. Where have we heard that tune before? It seems to me we heard it just before the last election. Remember the great Tory plan, the great Tory promise? I do not mean the one to move the embassy, but that is another one we can talk about. I mean the plan to dismantle PetroCan. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, how they were going to bring in a new regime? They were going to privatize PetroCan.

Mr. Taylor: And make it less than 18 cents.

Mr. Simmons: Does the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) deny that? Does he say he never made that promise?

Mr. Taylor: To make it less than 18 cents.

Mr. Simmons: He made the promise. He would like to forget it now.

Mr. Blenkarn: Eighteen cents a litre, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: The people of Canada are not going to forget it.

Mr. Taylor: Now it is 76 cents.

Mr. Simmons: The Conservatives made a promise to dismantle PetroCan, to "privatize it" in their words.

Mr. Taylor: How about the 76 cents? You should remember your promise.

Mr. Simmons: Then the Conservatives got in power and soon, when they had access to the facts instead of the fantasy—

Mr. Taylor: It was 76 cents after you got in power.

Mr. Simmons: —they learned the people of Canada wanted PetroCan. They learned that the people of Canada still want PetroCan, and that is why we have expanded the role of PetroCan. What would they do now with PetroCan, Mr. Speaker? We heard the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) tell the people in Calgary what he would do. I think he has weasled a bit since and changed his mind a few times. However, that is typical of the Tory stance on PetroCan. They have had a different policy for most days of the week.

Mr. Taylor: How about your 76 cents when you said it would be less than 18 cents? It was a different policy once you were in power. Your face should be red.

Mr. Simmons: Someone was telling me earlier today Mr. Speaker, that I was wearing my "Tory" suit. It is not a blue suit, but it is a Tory suit, nevertheless. It has a pocket inside on this side and another pocket here. It is a very convenient type of suit. It is called a Tory suit because in one pocket you can have a policy about any issue—

Mr. Taylor: I could buy a suit, too, if I did not pay my taxes.

Mr. Simmons: —and if the public does not like that policy, you can always pull the other one out of the other pocket. The Tories have a policy in every pocket depending on the audience they have on that particular day.

Mr. Taylor: I could buy ten new suits if I did not pay my taxes.

Mr. Simmons: Why does the Hon. Member for Bow River not learn that it is not how loud he shouts which makes the point, but how well he does his homework?

Mr. Taylor: You had better practice what you preach.

Mr. Simmons: No, Mr. Speaker, we will not privatize Petro-Canada because Petro-Canada—

Mr. Taylor: You set an example and we will follow it.

Mr. Simmons: —and the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) agrees with this—has done great things for this country. He agrees with that. Most sensible people in this country agree with that. We have been known to take good ideas and make them available to the people of Canada. We have never denied taking good ideas from whatever source.

An Hon. Member: Pensions, medicare.

Mr. Simmons: Even if the Tories give us a good idea, we will take that idea.

Mr. Taylor: That is the only place you get them.

Mr. Simmons: We should get ideas from the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker. The reason this Government and the Liberal Party have been able to be in power so long, have been asked for so long by the people of Canada to provide good Government, is that we have listened to the people of Canada in terms of the kinds of programs they want, how they want the economy stimulated, what kind of welfare programs they want. We have listened to those people and we have then, using their tax dollars as is proper under law, given them the programs which allow this country to move forward.

Mr. Taylor: What about the 18 cents?

Mr. Simmons: If the Hon. Member wants to talk about the 18 cents, he should put that in context also. What the Tories said in their December, 1979 budget is that no matter what the price of energy was, they would add another 18 cents on top of everything else. That is what they said. And you will remember the people's answer to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Why don't you tell the truth?

Mr. Simmons: PetroCan represents an achievement—

Mr. Taylor: You have gone to 76 cents. What is the matter with you? Go down to the gas pumps.

Mr. Simmons: —an achievement for Canadians. The Tories condemn our policy to expand Petro-Canada, but condemnations aside, we will continue to allow PetroCan to play a good role, an expanded role in this country, because it is serving Canadians very well indeed. Most of the progress to date in expanding the role of Canadians in the energy industry has been achieved through private sector initiatives.

Mr. Blenkarn: Right on.

Mr. Simmons: The Tories condemn even this because we help Canadian companies through our PIP program. The Leader of the Opposition said he would change the PIP program. He would stop the progress. He would apply his Schefferville formula. He would close it down. That is what he would do.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): He would get a letter from the former Minister of Mines thanking him for it.

Mr. Simmons: He is not going to get the chance to apply his Schefferville formula to the PIP program to the energy industry. The people of Canada will not give him a chance to shut it down.

Mr. Taylor: He would not close down half of the industry in Canada.

Mr. Simmons: He would do whatever Cleveland told him to do, such as he did in Schefferville. Do not tell me what he would do. He talks about monkeys and organ-grinders. He knows all about organ-grinders. The organ-grinder was in Cleveland that day. Do you want to know where the monkey was?

Mr. Blenkarn: We know where the monkey is right now. We are watching the monkey, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: There is no doubt in my mind who would call the shots on the energy industry if the Tories were in power. The multinationals have always called the shots for the Tories.

Mr. Taylor: The people will.

Mr. Simmons: The multinationals in Cleveland and Chicago. The Hon. Member is agreeing with me. The people in Chicago and Cleveland. That is what I have been trying to tell him.

Mr. Taylor: No, the people of Canada.

Mr. Simmons: Finally he has the point. The people in Cleveland and Chicago—that is in the United States, you understand that.

Mr. Taylor: Well, it will not be a handful of Liberals telling them what to do.

Mr. Simmons: We do not settle for an organ-grinder who lives in Cleveland. That is the difference between my Party and the Party of the Hon. Member for Bow River. We recognize organ-grinders and we will tell you where the organ-grinders are. The organ-grinders for us are the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I suggest that the reporters are having some difficulty getting all these interjections. Would you interject a little slower, please?

Mr. Taylor: If the Hon. Member talks directly to me, I have the right to talk back. He is not talking to the Chair.

Mr. Simmons: Of course, the Hon. Member for Bow River has the right to talk back. The only requirement is that he should say something when he talks back.

Mr. Taylor: I know what I am talking about. You have been on your feet for 15 minutes and all you have said is slander.

Mr. Simmons: How does the gentleman from Bow River know what I said? He has not been listening. If he will listen for a minute, I will tell him some good things about the PIP program.

Mr. Taylor: All right, I will listen for a minute. Let us hear what you have to say. One minute only.

Mr. Simmons: Instead of recognizing our PIP program as a positive instrument, which it is, and a program which is needed to help Canadians play a greater role in the energy investments, the Tories, of course, are screaming discrimination. They choose to ignore the fact that there is room for Canadian investment and foreign investment. We have delivered this message—not only in speeches but by working out deals, such as for example, a proposed $600 million heavy oil upgrader in Saskatchewan; two projects to extract oil from the tar sands in Alberta; a production plant at Wolf Lake costing $200 million, and another expansion at Cold Lake costing $300 million. Are these the facts or are they not?

• (1650)

Mr. Taylor: Tell us how many you have closed down.

Mr. Simmons: The gentleman is confused again. The one that was closed down is at Schefferville, and we did not close that one down.

Mr. Taylor: You closed down scores of them in Alberta.

Mr. Simmons: We have two new ones at Cold Lake and Wolf Lake, and one in Saskatchewan. Those are just three of the many projects made possible by a very exciting, aggressive energy policy of the good Liberal Government of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member's time has expired. Are there any questions? The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say—

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the natural rotation of speakers the NDP gets a speaker for every third speaker from the Conservative Party. I was on my feet at the same time as the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and I believe I should have been recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The way the debate proceeds, whether it be on a Government motion or an Opposition motion, there is a first round of speakers, one from each Party. That occurred this morning. Depending on which side presents the motion, in this case the Official Opposition, the ratio is four Conservatives to three Liberals to one NDP. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) will be the fourth Conservative, following which the Hon. Member will be recognized.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say it is a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's

(Mr. Simmons). I have always had some sadness that I was a Cabinet Minister for only nine months. I truly hoped that it would have been a lot longer than that. But ten days is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where did he go anyway? Roger left.

Mr. Huntington: The issue in the motion today, Mr. Speaker, is a very serious one. It cuts right to the heart of political debate in Canada. This country is controlled by that political ideology and those people who believe that interventionism is the right way to rule the people. On the other hand, I come from a Party which has a tendency to believe that behaviourism is the right way. If you define your laws and the sense of behaviour properly, and allow people to work in widely different activities within those laws and patterns of behaviour, then you will bring out the magic of the human powers of innovation and development, the incentives which encourage people to work and create wealth, and you will not have the dilemma we are facing in this country today.

The motion is a very serious one, Sir. As I was wandering through the Lambert Royal Commission Report on Financial Management and Control, I was reminded of an excerpt from a speech by Prime Minister James Callaghan to a Labour Party conference on September 28, 1976. I would like to read that into the record because I think it goes right to the heart of the reason for the wording of this motion today. It says:

> When we reject unemployment, as we all do . . . then we must ask ourselves unflinchingly—what is the cause of high unemployment? Quite simply and unequivocally it is caused by paying ourselves more than the value of what we produce . . . It is an absolute fact of life which no government, be it left or right, can alter . . . We used to think that you could just spend your way out of a recession and increase employment by cutting taxes and boosting government spending. I tell you in all candour that that option no longer exists and that insofar as it ever did exist, it worked by injecting inflation into the economy. And each time that happened the average level of unemployment has risen . . . And each time we did this the twin evils of unemployment and inflation have hit hardest those least able to stand them—our own people, the poor, the old and the sick.

What we are dealing with here is that even leaders of opposing ideology share the view that modern day parliamentary democracies so far have been unable to bring their spendthrift and wasteful habits under control, each apparently aware that not to do so will aggravate the economic and social tragedy facing us. That is the political dilemma we are in. It does not matter whether you are of the interventionist ideology or the behaviourilist ideology, here is a British Prime Minister addressing the Labour Conference in Britain in 1976 and laying out the dilemma. It is a Catch-22 situation. We stand in this House and yell and shout at each other, a perfect example of which was the performance of the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's, who fancies himself an absolute and perfect politician; that is what politics is all about. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I am not here for that type of behaviour, that type of debate or that type of comment. I have learned a little bit about history, and the other day I saw an article in Richard J. Needham's "A Writer's Notebook" which I thought was very applicable to the dilemma we are in today. He points out that:

> In countries like Malaysia and Sri Lanka, the industrial revolution is just beginning; but in Britain, where it originated some 150 years ago, the industrial revolution is drawing to its end.

Then he points out some very interesting data from a Washington Post editorial:

> In the past 10 years employment in British manufacturing has dropped 30 per cent. British steel production, declining steadily, is now about half of the 1973 level. Automobile production is about half of the 1973 level. Ten years ago just over one-fourth of the cars sold in Britain we imported; currently well over half of them are.

Does it sound familiar, Mr. Speaker? We are always just a little bit behind the British Fabian socialist movement, but we have imported the mistakes they made which they are now trying to correct. It goes on:

> Increasingly, Britain buys its manufactured goods from other countries.

That is the dilemma the mother country of the industrial revolution faces today. So where do they go? What are they going to do? There are some 55 million in that country and some three million are now unemployed. It is pointed out that there is nothing to prevent that figure from going to four, five or six million. This raises the question that was asked some weeks ago in Newark, New Jersey:

> —what do you do, what can you do, with a huge surplus population unwilling or unable to support itself?

He points out that that was the problem that destroyed Rome. What we are dealing with is an element of human nature which seems to just cycle in and out of societies as time goes along. II think we are at a point where we had better wake up. We had better get our anticipation levels down. We had better understand the reason for this Opposition motion today put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). We had better get rid of the political rhetoric and address the Catch-22 situation that we are in to see if we cannot put the nation on an emergency basis of some kind and start to become competitive in the world once again. It points out too in this article of Needham that Ben Franklin said in 1789:

● (1700)

> Though we may set out in the beginning with moderate salaries (for politicians) we shall find that such will not be of long continuance. Reasons will never be wanting for proposed augmentations, and there will always be a party for giving more to the rulers, that the rulers may be able in return to give more to them. Hence, as all history informs us, there has been in every state and kingdom a constant kind of warfare between the governing and the governed: the one striving to obtain more for its support, and the other to pay less. And this has alone occasioned great convulsions, actual civil wars, ending either in dethroning of the princes or enslaving of the people. Generally, indeed, the ruling power carries its point, and we see the revenues of princes constantly increasing, and we see that they are never satisfied, but always in want of more. The more the people are discontented with the oppression of taxes, the greater need the prince has of money to distribute among his partisans, and pay the troops that are to suppress all resistance and enable him to plunder at pleasure. There is scarce a king in a hundred who would not, if he could follow the example of Pharaoh—get first of all the people's money, then all their lands, and then make them and their children servants forever.

These words apply today, Mr. Speaker. We have just heard the Member for Burin-St. George's talk about the National Energy Program under which the Government gathers and collects it all up and then delivers it out only to those people who will do as the rulers and the princes want them to do. It is called suasion. The other thing we have today is a Government that puts priority on information. It shovels and bulldozes unbelievable quantities of money into advocacy, information, propaganda and advertising. This is the stage we are at. This is the ultimate stage of the interventionists and it is bringing the nation down to the point where it can no longer produce the wealth to carry the social programs that we have all been so proud of.

Mr. Speaker, we hear a lot from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and others that there is recovery coming and everything is going to be all right. We should keep our eye on the ball. If you look at the Royal Bank trendicator you will find that the balloon coming up has now levelled off and is flattening. There is not really going to be a recovery in this country that means much more than a temporary aberration of some 20 or 30 months until we start to see the products of our resources, our mining, our harvesting, our refining, moving out once again to world markets.

Is it not interesting that we have moved so much of our foreign assistance and our know-how and engineering into the creation of competitive plants in Third World countries? It is very generous of us indeed. But our at-home resource production has to compete with very modern plants that we have put into Third World and other emerging countries. We have a lot of pressure on any recovery. I do not see, and economists that I talk to do not see, the raw products of our resources really moving back in a stable fashion in the world markets for nine to 11 years. I think that not until we see those products from our natural resources moving out again into world markets, or moving into Canadian plants that are capable of giving "value-add" to them, are we going to see the movement of capital goods. It is "value-add" that creates more jobs. Until you see the movement of capital goods you are not really going to address the increasingly serious unemployment factor in Canada. You get bulges from railroad infrastructure building and from housing, and you get bulges from infrastructures like northeast coal. It is these infrastructures that are so important to us in hard times. That is where we should have enough money in the bank to be able to spend money. We have put well over a billion dollars into northeast coal and all we have done is to make available two sources of supply of metallurgical coal on the same coast of Canada to the Japanese and to world markets which they can bid one against the other. We do not seem to be able to plan, use and market what we have wisely. We therefore aggravate and increase the dilemma that we have.

Mr. Speaker, we have a Government with a Minister of Revenue who absolutely attacks and destroys all the junior mining exploration in western Canada. That is where all the risk money is. You have to attract real gamblers into the game of staking claims, diamond drilling, trenching and bringing about something that has the potential of being harvested as a mine or put into a mine and something that can come through to various classes of refineries. They attack those types of investors before they actually get their hands on their winnings. They tax them with capital gains when they exercise their options into other paper certificates. It is just throwing cold water on the whole industry and all that type of activity in our part of the world. It is deliberate. It is the interventionist mindset that destroys the opportunity of all the frustrated talent that exists throughout the country in creating the wealth and paying the taxes that we need to support our system. Mr. Speaker, we have truly lost our sense of excellence.

I was in the B.C. Research Council the other day. That is a very frustrated organization. It is a group of men and women who have tremendous talents and abilities. They have developed and broken through and are the world leaders in the biological reduction of ores to deliver pure metal. They have even done something that the biologists said could not be done. In the microbiological leaching of ores and the delivery of pure metal out of these leaching piles they have been able to stop the process at elemental sulphur. Now we do not have to worry about disposing of sulphuric acid or the contamination it causes. Can they get a nickel from the federal Government to assist them with this work? No. All of this leaching and all of this technology has to be sold in Mexico and Sweden and other markets in order to get the pennies that these brilliant people need for their research.

While I was on that tour I saw absolute breakthroughs in the formulation of roe and caviar. It is sitting there unused, probably to be picked up by the Japanese. It is Canadian minds that create these things. We do not allow the cost of marketing and research to be a deductible item with the incentive to take a risk so that people who understand these words in the market can act on them. No, it has to be somebody in a white coat in a government lab, or somebody at a desk in Ottawa who will say, "Yes, you may have these dollars to do this and that." As a result, we stifle and smother the country.

We have the national energy policy with all its Crown corporations. We have Canagrex which was politically forced by tobacco growing areas. We now find a key executive from the tobacco industry as its chief executive officer. We have a fishery takeover in the Atlantic region, where the problem has probably been lack of capital for processing and getting a high quality product to market. Mr. Speaker, the other night the Minister said, "Do not worry Ron, it is going to come out in the Pacific. We are going to spend $200 million out there next year. We are going to take over a major processing plant". There are two different fisheries in Canada. There is the Atlantic fishery and the Pacific fishery. We sell every single thing we produce in the Pacific fishery. Some of our smaller operators have been caught as a result of the botulism scare on an Alaska pack. But we are peanuts compared to Alaska. At least we have been able to sell and produce a high quality pack.

Some of our small packers get into trouble and require a special agency to help them with good harvests so that they can finance inventories over a hurdle. Perhaps that is an endorsement which some commission must give to the bank in order to subsidize them over these inventory hurdles when they get into trouble. I assume that is much of the problem that exists on the Atlantic coast.

The Department of Fisheries is moving into and taking over the Pacific fishery with a massive Crown corporation that will eventually eliminate everyone else. It will all be state-controlled because that Department has a sense of possessiveness over that resource. It keeps using the argument that the resource has to be protected and that it is reducing at 2 per cent compound per annum. However, that is totally misleading, and if the Minister keeps saying that, he will be challenged for misleading the House and the people of Canada, because I have in my hand the annual report of the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission. This commission works with approximately $31 million a year. It is poverty stricken, receiving $15 million from Canada and $15 million from the United States. This 1983 report shows that the $30 million a year has created an upward curve on the return of fish to spawning grounds. It has created an upward curve on pinks and sockeye in terms of harvest on all the fish sources and fish runs for which it is responsible. If these dedicated scientists in the international salmon commission can achieve this with $30 million, there must be something wrong with our Department of Fisheries and Oceans which needs over $1.5 billion to run its operation. It has recently asked for another $484 million. Perhaps the trouble with most of the delivery of the federal services is that they are all too fat. Perhaps if we returned to thinner budgets and thinner operating expenses, these services could be delivered more effectively. For instance, the Fisheries Department disallowed patrol personnel on the fishery patrol vessels to clear streams any longer, such as clearing a fish stream of a fallen tree. That is now disallowed. I have seen university students who were hired on crews working their way up a stream to clear it when they suddenly received a call from their office saying that there is no more money and they should return from the bush.

The behaviour in the federal service in terms of the delivery of quality input into the preservation of that resource is unbelievable.

The reason given by the Government for getting into marketing in the Pacific is that the fish resource on the Pacific Coast is reducing 2 per cent compound per annum. In 1977 I was assured by the Department of Fisheries, when I was asking questions in committee, that it did not need any more resource to protect or conserve the species on the West Coast. Suddenly, it admits that the resource is going down 2 per cent compound per year, when I can show that, as stated in the annual report of a small organization like the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission with $30 million, it has an upward curve of performance taking place. If we took another $30 million from the $1.5 billion which we seem to spend on fisheries and oceans and gave it to them, they could open up new tributaries for the Fraser River fishery and perform miracles out there. That international commission is absolutely frustrated by the lack of support it is receiving from the Government.

I thank you for your tolerance, Mr. Speaker, but the motion is important. The motion is bogged down in a Catch-22 situation, which is the struggle between the interventionists, who are represented by the Liberal Government and the NDP, and those of us who believe that laws defining behaviour and tax incentives allowing the magic of man's inventiveness to explode are the political issue. It is this Catch-22 that causes motions like this in Canada today.

This House will remain irrelevant until we can make a breakthrough and address the Catch-22 situation. It is obvious from the history of Great Britain that the interventionist mentality will destroy a country in terms of creating enough wealth to sustain its social services. I believe that both the people of Britain and Canada sense that we are running out of time and we must begin to become more relevant. The reason the House is irrelevant is that we hear these nasty political speeches such as we heard from the Member for Burin-St. George's today instead of fundamental debate in addressing and resolving the Catch-22 situation that we have in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments and answers? Debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) for bringing this motion forward. I and my Party are in substantial agreement with it except for the unfortunate phrase calling for an end to nationalization of Canadian resource industries which has discouraged investment in Canada.

This phrase essentially reflects the Tory tendency to let the right wing ideology interfere with a very legitimate concern they have about Canada's mismanaged resource economy. Do Conservatives really oppose all programs of nationalization, even when they are needed to save an industry, to save a community such as Ocean Falls or to save thousands of jobs? We know that former Conservatives did not oppose nationalization when it was needed to save some investors who had put their money into some bankrupt railway schemes. They were not afraid to nationalize then in order to protect the Bank of Commerce. Now they say they are opposed to all nationalization. We saw the same kind of right-wing ideology intrude into legitimate business when the Liberal, Conservative and Socred coalition in British Columbia brought in its restraint legislation. There is no doubt that the Socreds won a mandate for restraint in the May 5 election, but they did not have the kind of mandate to put an end to the Human Rights Commission. They did not have a mandate to do away with the rentalsman or to destroy unions. The NDP Opposition in the B.C. legislature and Solidarity on the streets and on the picket lines have forced the Government to modify that legislation slightly.

The Tories should consider carefully the consequences of this ideology getting in the way of common sense. It is something with which Canadians are becoming concerned with respect to the Tories.

As I said, we are concerned, as is the Member for Prince George-Peace River, about the serious nature of the resource industry crisis that is facing Canada right now. The crisis that Canada faces in terms of its economy is based on the fact that our whole economy since the Second World War has looked to Canadian prosperity on the basis of branch plant manufacturing on the one hand and the exploitation and export of resources on the other. The whole Liberal welfare scheme that we have come to depend on is based upon those two factors. When we are now in the situation in which branch plants have been closed down or are running at half capacity and our export resource industries are in trouble, we find that the Liberal Government and the Conservative Opposition are talking about cutbacks in basic standards of welfare. We have seen cutbacks in the established programs of financing and we have seen capping on pensions. We have heard talk about questioning the whole principle of universality for family allowance by the Liberal Government. A few years ago we saw the implementation of a block funding system for medicare that really caps the federal contribution there.

The fact is that our Canadian economy grew after the Second World War but did not really develop. It was something like a force-fed turkey that was fed until it grew large but it never really developed its own muscles so it could be an independent bird. It was just force-fed until it could be brought to someone's table and carved up. However, now we are in a situation where our branch plants are shut down. At the same time the best of our resources have been creamed and we are in a situation where other resources are harder to reach, harder to develop and we face increased competition from other areas of the world. At the present time and for the last several years, Canada has run deficits for manufactured goods of $20 billion a year. This means we have to export more and more of our resources in raw and semi-processed states in order to keep our balance of payments in line. We have seen developments take place that often ride roughshod over the needs of aboriginal people.

I was interested to hear the House Leader for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) saying that they should go ahead with the developments on the north slope without real regard for the land claims process under way. In our Party we recognize that Canadian prosperity depends now upon a proper development of our resources and a proper export policy for these resources. Canadian prosperity will depend on these for a long time. We cannot have Canadian prosperity by a sell-out of our resources. Perhaps the best example of a sell-out is the prebuilt pipeline that was pushed through by the Liberal Government and supported by the Conservatives a few years ago. This was the building of the prebuilt pipeline to export natural gas into the mid-west United States at a time when there were supposed to be ironclad guarantees that once the lower part of the line had been built and once the gas was flowing into the United States the Americans would then finish the rest of the line so that Alaskan gas could flow through Canada. Any gas that was sold from Alberta would be replenished by Alaskan gas. There were supposed to be thousands of jobs for Canada. Where are those jobs now? Where are the spin-offs from this project? All we see is the export of our resources and a piece of paper that was supposed to be an ironclad guarantee. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) cannot give a date for the beginning of the pipeline and the Tories are strangely silent on this whole issue.

Another example where we see a neglect of our resources is in the area of fisheries. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Salmonid Enhancement Program that was originally designed to invest $150 million in federal money over five years in phase one was stretched to include seven years so that money was stretched over a longer period of time instead of being spent when it was most needed. At the same time, when money should have been spent, some $21 million was estimated to be needed to plan for phase two, only $5 million of planning money was spent planning for phase two on the Salmonid Enhancement Program. Now we are in a kind of interim period. No one is sure what the long-range plans are for SEP. On the Pacific Coast, and I am sure the East Coast as well, we are all aware of the Government's failure to protect fish habitat. There is a continuing shrugging of shoulders in the Fisheries Department in the face of expanding log booming in our estuaries. There is a lack of any activity at all to protest the leaching of toxic chemicals and sewage into fish habitat. There is inadequate protection of spawning channels. We see the turning of a blind eye to steep slope logging that destroys streams. But perhaps the prime example with which we are concerned today in terms of the federal Government's neglect of Canada's resources is in the forest industry. As speaker after speaker has pointed out, it is Canada's number one industry.

The attitude of waste and prodigality that we have adopted with respect to this resource in the past is something that we are beginning to pay for now. I can remember as a child, when we moved to our farm on Vancouver Island, walking through the bush and finding log after log that had been cut 10 or 15 years previously. These were logs that were three feet through and 40 feet long. They were just left because they did not meet the exacting demands of the mills at that time. They had some kind of a pitch seam in them, and so they were left to rot or to be cut up by farmers for firewood. If we had those logs today, they would be number one prime. We wasted this resource because it was cheap and we thought it was inexhaustible. We treated it with contempt.

As Canadians we are very much aware of our northern tree line, a line that stretches roughly diagonally from the Yukon into southeastern Canada. North of this line we know that climatic conditions prohibit the growth of trees. Perhaps we should also be aware of a second tree line in southern Canada. Here we find that wasteful logging practices, growing urbanization, hydroelectric projects, transportation corridors and the need for agricultural land are slowly but surely eroding the total forest land base in Canada. In addition, there are additional pressures from environmental fisheries and parks interests.

It has been estimated that for every 130 hectares of average productive forest land in British Columbia that is lost we also lose one permanent sustained job. Yet we are in a situation where over one million hectares of forest land in British Columbia needs reforestation. We are still falling behind some 20 to 50 hectares a year.

In 1981, commercial forest land had declined in B.C. over the last decade between 16 per cent and 20 per cent. It is estimated that over the next 20 years there will be a further reduction in the forest land base in British Columbia of about 25 per cent, amounting to some 2.3 million hectares. This amounts to the loss of thousands of jobs, simply because we are not concerned about maintaining our forest base. The situation in other Provinces is similar. Perhaps some of these factors can be checked by better land management. We still face a declining forest base.

This morning I listened with interest as the Minister responsible for the Canadian forest industry talked about the federal-provincial forest agreements. It was rather sad to reflect that only two agreements with Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have been signed and to note that a renewal has been signed in Newfoundland. Nothing yet has been signed with the four Provinces which produce the most in terms of Canadian forestry, namely, British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick. Knowing the present Government of British Columbia, I have to admit that not all the failure can lie on the federal side. In British Columbia, as I mentioned earlier, we have a phoney program of restraint. This has resulted in some very severe cutbacks in forestry.

I was talking with a forestry official this past week. He told me they were faced with a crisis where there might not be enough seedlings for planting in 1984 because the provincial Government decided that in the name of restraint it is going to cut back on its nursery programs. This is false economy of the most blatant kind, Mr. Speaker. If trees are not planted in the year in which the ground is ready, then all kinds of weeds and weed species come up, and the whole task of site preparation becomes very expensive if there is to be a proper seeding at some later time.

Our provincial Government is being most foolish in this so-called restraint. While we can condemn the provincial Government, we also have to ask how vigorously the federal Government has pursued these federal-provincial agreements when only two Provinces have signed them. We in our Party certainly regret the low status of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) in the Cabinet pecking order. There is now a very real fear that the money allocated to forestry programs will be redistributed to other Ministers, unless the Minister of the Environment is able to hold on to that money later this week.

What is the matter? Perhaps the Minister should have been more forthcoming in his speech. Perhaps he should have told the House why the Provinces are not signing the agreements. What is the hold-up? Is the problem the false mythology or ideology of restraint, or is there some real problem with the federal-provincial agreements which he is trying to get them to sign? He did not really answer the question as to why his Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of forestry quit. We on this side of the House were very encouraged by some of the initiative he had shown in trying to get some federal activity in this whole area. However, there is a well-grounded suspicion that the Assistant Deputy Minister quit out of frustration with the low priority the Government gave to the entire forestry situation.

The crisis in our forest industry is now. We need action now. People want answers now from the federal Minister responsible. Why is something not happening? Now is the time when people are looking for work. We have unemployed foresters. We have young people who would love to be involved in forestry projects. Now is the time for the provincial Governments, the federal Government and forestry companies to be putting more money into forestry programs. Certainly, private corporations have not done their share. British Columbia Forest Products, one of the more progressive forestry firms in British Columbia, has cut back on its forestry component. Of course, part of the reason was that BCFP, like many other big companies, a couple of years ago became involved in cannibalizing other countries. BCFP has had to face a $8 million per year interest charge for taking part in the cannibalization of the western forest industry.

During the Remembrance Day week recess, I had an opportunity to visit one of the EBAP programs in my riding. It was very interesting to see some of these young people at work pruning and thinning, doing jobs which the forests badly required. I agree with critics that this kind of program should be paid for by British Columbia Forest Products on whose land this is taking place. However, it is still a good program. There are problems with it. Although it has a five-month extension, it is more or less on an ad hoc basis. It is involved in topping up the unemployment insurance of young people. I talked with three young people whose UIC would expire in two or three days. As soon as their UIC benefits were finished, they lost their jobs at the same time. Somehow it seemed to be a very twisted and perverse way of creating jobs. At the very time when young people had been trained in what needed to be done and were of most value to the project, they were laid off because their UIC benefits expired. Certainly we in Canada can do better for our young people and our forests by providing something other than a stop-gap program to top up UIC benefits which lays them off at the time their benefits expire.

Last week, Kenneth Greaves, President of the Ontario Forest Industry Association, pointed to the need for a massive increase, a quadruple increase, in the amount of money the federal and provincial Governments have to spend on forestry.

If we want to maintain our position as the world leading exporter of forest products, we have to spend $1 billion a year on forestry. The Association of British Columbia Professional Foresters presented a very significant brief to the Macdonald Commission on the Economy. It pointed out that the number of personyears available to the Canadian Forest Service had declined by more than 50 per cent since 1968. Before the Tories cry too much over this, they should be reminded that these cuts were the result of their favourite program of privatization.

In conclusion I say that we would like to see the federal Government take real initiatives on this. It should give a higher priority to the signing of these federal-provincial agreements. We want to see a higher priority on programs to develop non-chemical control of disease or insects and pests. There has been much more research conducted in this area. Canadians are afraid of the sprays which are still being used. Those fears are justified. New Brunswick is now hooked on the whole business of spraying. When I asked the Minister about this matter this morning, he was not able to provide any specifics. He had many statistics on other programs but was unable to give any on this particular program. That suggested to me that the whole business of non-chemical ways of controlling insects and pests is really incidental and peripheral to his other concerns. As Minister of the Environment and as Minister responsible for the forest industry, this is one area in which the two concerns should come together. I would like to see it receive a higher priority in the Ministry.

Finally, I would like to see some federal Government help in the area of community co-operative initiatives for forestry. If the people of Honeymoon Bay or Mesachie Lake had controlled their forest areas, would they have allowed them to become depleted in a matter of 30 years or 40 years so that they are now ghost towns? I believe the people in the community can plan for a wise and rational use of forestry resources in their area. Would the people of Chemainus have allowed their mill to become run down so that they could invest money in Alabama as MacMillan Bloedel did, or would they maintain a modern, up to date mill which would still be running today if they were involved in the management of it?

I would like to see some federal Government money being put into community co-operatives in the whole business of forestry. Finally, we want some kind of industrial strategy which will provide the maximum number of jobs per tree. We should be manufacturing forestry equipment in Canada. There should be no export of raw logs. In conclusion, we want to see a higher priority on Canada's number one industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments, answers? Debate.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate in a debate on our resources. For the usual reasons, when we get on to this subject, there is in all Parties a tendency to speak constructively; we instinctively realize that we are a developing nation when we are a resource nation. Also we realize that some day we will move into a more sophisticated match between our resources and our industrial value-added industries.

My remarks today will be on matters which I do not think have been covered by other speakers. I will refer mainly to perhaps one of the most hard-pressed industries in the Canadian resource field. Of course, I am referring to mining. We have had good mining tax laws in the country for most of our mining history. This is why Canadians set an example for the whole world on how to develop mines at minimum cost and maximum productivity. Of course, we have lost this for several reasons.

Let me go back. Until 1971, through the federal Government three-year tax holiday on capital intensified mines, which included all of them, our mining industry was the most efficient and best in the world. Under the regime of the 50-year period, our mining industry prospered. Along came the Carter Commission. It recommended that all risks should be treated equally and that the tax incentives that had been given to the mining industry be removed.

Before the federal Government moved, the provincial Governments took advantage of the rising prices of mining products in the world markets. They doubled, tripled and in some cases quadrupled their tax levels. The federal Government grew very angry with this and under the Turner budget of 1974 made all provincial taxes and royalties non-deductible. This meant that in effect there was double taxation on the mines of Canada. It hit all mines desperately hard, but none so hard as the low-grade mines of British Columbia. This unfortunate doubling and tripling of the tax rate at the provincial level and the making of the provincial taxes non-deductible has brought our mining industry, in so far as the base metal industries and low quality minerals are concerned, to a dead halt.

Since that time, two Provinces, British Columbia and Alberta, have reduced their taxes somewhat. However, the whole discussion of getting this back to normal broke down with the introduction of the national energy policy, which interfered from 1974 on under the Petroleum Administration Act and later the national energy policy, in the right of the Provinces to own these resources and to have full advantage of them for provincial purposes.

All this is history. When this matter was raised in the House in 1973 and 1974, the Minister of the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, and the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. John Turner, agreed with the quantitative analysis that I presented to the House. As a result of that, they set up a committee, supported by all the Provinces, centred at Queen's University. That report came down two years ago. I have never heard a single Member on the Government side mention that report. They know about it and I know the Minister knew about it.

It struck me as passing strange for two responsible Ministers on the Government side to admit that there was no future for the mining industry and then set up a committee to look into it, and you can get a copy of the report in the library, entitled "The Effects of Taxation on Base Metal Mining in Canada" supported financially by the two main levels of Government.

The report says in effect that there will never be another mine developed in Canada as long as the present tax regime exists. This document was supported financially by the Government, yet no one has raised this as a subject of discussion. Until we read the reports presented to this Parliament and prepare policies to meet them, all the rhetoric in this House is useless. We must read, study and do something about it. What I want to do today is to outline three or four points that should be in the policy of any Government. I certainly know they will be in the policy of the new Conservative Government after next year.

Let me say at the outset that, unknown to most Members of the House, something has been done in the last two or three years. I refer in particular to the 1981 budget of the present Government. It brought in a whole series of measures in the so-called MacEachen budget that roused this country to furious opposition. It led to the promotion of the Minister to higher places. It led to a complete demoralization of almost every aspect of our industrial set-up. In that uproar we forgot that hidden in all these proposals was one that brought some justice to the mining industry. If I may use general words, it allowed to those who invested in the mining industry, the junior mines, the same right of flow-through of shares that corporations have always had in relation to the oil and gas industry. The former Minister responsible for Mines, now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola), did make one speech on it and did send out a press release. If I had been a supporter of resources on the Government side, I would have trumpeted that policy all across the country. It has been in effect for over two years and, outside of that one case, I know of no other.

The brokerage firms have not taken advantage of this and have not made it known to their customers. This is where a person can invest in a mining company directly into the Treasury, get a tax deduction for his investment and get the right to shares. When he pays his taxes, he pays them on the basis of the capital gains on the shares that he purchased. This is one good step.

In 1983, the same Government gave recognition to depletion which in effect equalled what you got in oil and gas, and what was available to corporations is now available to individuals. I could add that that research is now available to industry, but I have never seen that in a clear press statement. Maybe I missed it, but I know it is available.

What then are my proposals? First, I go back to the basic beginning of all mining discoveries, the old-fashioned prospector. He still has the track record of being the most successful of any type of operation, including all the high technology and electronic techniques for finding mines. Of all the biologists and the rest of them, he still has the best track record. The prospectors used a canoe or jeep. They now use helicopters.

If the prospector found a successful mine, we have always awarded him by giving him a $50,000 deduction off his five, ten, twenty or thirty years work. With the high cost of helicopters, the risks and one thing and another, we have to improve that deduction. I am not the final authority on what it is worth, but I would certainly suggest between $250,000 and $500,000 for that man who spent years of his life hunting, either on foot or by helicopter, for those things that can only be found by a hands-on operation.

Second, I have divided this investment proposal into several parts: a) the flow-through pattern that I have enunciated should apply to any form of mining and any form of energy production. If you think that through, you see that all of a sudden these heavy oils of Alberta and Saskatchewan become economic. All these oil sands projects which are stalled in northern Alberta and which can only be put forward by tremendous sums of money advanced by Governments' would become roughly economic. You are drawing equity in the form of a 100 per cent deduction which is prepared to wait for five, ten or fifteen years for any return. It cuts out the heavy front-end loading charges. We must also consider all the geothermal energy that exists in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and a little bit in Manitoba. All through that whole area that runs from Michigan to almost Hamilton, through the Gaspé area and the Cumberland Basin there are hot water and hot rocks underneath the ground. We have so much fun whenever there is an earthquake or a volcano erupts. They can be making money for us. Let us milk that hot water, harvest it and put it to use.

I would like to suggest, in quantitative figures, that on the basis of the information from scientists in Ottawa who have done a tremendous amount of work on this subject and from information from the oil and gas industry mainly, there is now 360 times more Btu's of energy in the hot water underneath the Prairies than there is in all of the gas we will ever discover. When we realize that we have already located, on a potential basis, some 440 trillion Btu's of gas, we can then multiply that huge figure by 360, which gives us the amount of Btu's available through geothermal energy. The advantage of hot water energy is that it is renewable. You can use it and then send it back down to get reheated again.

In effect, this would mean that we would offer tax incentives not only to oil and gas and to mines, although the people who handle the shares of those mining companies have not told the people about it, but would offer them to all of these other forms of energy including heavy oils, oil sands, geothermal energy, low grade energy, energy from the ground, the air, and particularly from the waste. I do not want to take any more time discussing that last item because it is ten times more powerful than all of the others.

The second proposal under the investment approach is to do something that has become a sickness throughout North America for hundreds of years. The concept of financing that Governments have is that the minute one starts to develop a resource, the Government immediately loads on him all of the charges possible. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that in western Canada, as in Texas, when one wants to look at a place to explore, the Government charges a huge fee? One must bid simply to get into the poker game. If you went to a poker game where they charged you $50,000 to sit down, Mr. Speaker, you would not join many poker games. That is why only 400 companies, with huge backlogs of financing and self-earned earnings, are able to afford that poker game.

I could go on and list all of the things that have been done in the House over the last 25 years. I shall suggest a policy that I originally proposed in 1957. That proposal was accepted by all of the oil companies, both American and Canadian, in 1961. It was finally accepted in the House of Commons by the present Government in 1976 under the Hon. Judd Buchanan. That proposal is to go back to the commonsense way of financing for these great risk enterprises in which the biggest cost is interest on the money that must be borrowed in order to go forward with these enterprises and to give to these capital intensive enterprises with their high interest load a contractual arrangement that was put forward in the Liberal Government's regulations of 1976. That was accepted by all Parties in the House, but instead of that, we now have the so-called National Energy Program of 1977.

The contractual arrangement that I refer to has been discussed in the House. It has been discussed in committees of the House. The Hon. Don Macdonald, in committee, accepted the proposal. When I asked him what he thought would be a fair break after all of the debts were paid off, he gave me some figures, and I am willing to accept those figures.

The Hon. John Turner, standing up in the House, said that my figures were correct but that, unfortunately, businesses did not operate that way because most of the business in Canada, not in the mining sector but in the oil and gas sector particularly, follow a financial practice that has been copied from the Americans. The Americans have never been able to get rid of that type of financing.

When the great oil play started in the North Sea, the British Government accepted this type of regulation very quickly, as did Norway, Denmark and The Netherlands. Today, with all of the debts paid back, the British Government receives nearly 50 per cent of the gross value of the oil and gas from that field. The companies are well rewarded with about 30 per cent which pays all of their costs. They get all of their money back and they get an amount of money in addition that gives them a 25 per cent profit on all of the money that was invested and has now been returned. As well, Venezuela has copied that system in part.

I suggest that we return to the fundamental way of handling these problems, which is to return to common sense financing. If we look at the costs of the oil industry and the gas industry in western Canada from 1922 until 1957, we see that 75 per cent of those costs were interest payments. I do not have the figures from the last 30 years, but I am sure they would be as high. When one spends 75 per cent of one's costs on interest, one goes broke. This happened to all of our corporations in 1982. If one looks at the figures, approximately 70 per cent of the costs to all big corporations in Canada was interest payments. That is why so many corporations went down the tubes.

Without stressing that point any longer, the final point I make is that we must consider the infrastructure in an isolated mining area. I would simply apply the same rules as are applied to a mining company or an oil and gas company to the infrastructure costs so that the people who live in those areas may share in the investment and the returns as these costs are part of the total costs. The last point I have to make, which I will not discuss, is simply what we must do in the international market.

I would like to think, Mr. Speaker, that the House, in this moment of constructive discussion of resource policy, will give honest consideration to moving immediately toward some form of mining tax improvement to put the mining industry back in the position it was in some ten years ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will pursue the matter of whether or not there are questions and answers.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—RESOURCE INDUSTRIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Oberle:

That this House regards the Government's failure to take action to encourage the development of Canada's resource industries and ensure their competitiveness in world markets as a betrayal of all Canadians whose standard of living depends upon the resource sector of Canada's economy and calls upon the Government to bring an end to the nationalization of Canadian resource industries which has discouraged investment in Canada; introduce tax incentives to restore competitive advantage and stimulate resource production and further processing in Canada; initiate a programme of incentives for research and development, and incentives for marketing activities of Canadian industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 62, proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL SECURITY—EXPULSION OF SOVIET EMBASSY OFFICIAL. (B) STAFFING OF SOVIET EMBASSY

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, on April 2, 1982, I asked the then Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in light of the expulsion from Canada of a certain Mikhail Abramov, Soviet diplomat, for unlawfully attempting to obtain high technology materials, it would not then appear appropriate to reduce the size of the Soviet diplomatic mission in Canada and thereby reduce the risk of further spying by the Soviet Union in our country. The Minister's reply was typically evasive and might well have been appropriate for another question. However, it certainly was in no way relevant to the question which I had asked.

Permit me to review the conduct of Soviets in our country in recent years and to tie in the significance of that question which I asked 18 months ago to circumstances as they apply in Canada today. The House will recall that in 1945, at the conclusion of the Second World War, a certain Igor Gouzenko defected to Canada and disclosed the existence of a Soviet espionage ring operated by the Soviet Union in our country, the act of a hardly friendly former ally. In 1978, 13 Soviet diplomats were expelled from our country for spying. In 1980, three staff members of the Soviet embassy were expelled for endeavouring to obtain classified materials. In 1982, Mikhail Abramov, the Soviet agent to whom I referred on April 2, was expelled, and then, more recently, on September 12 of 1983, two further Soviet agents were expelled for endeavouring once again to purchase high technology materials contrary to the laws of our country.

The most recent expulsions in September proved the point which I had endeavoured to make in April of 1982. The Soviets have absolutely nothing to lose in unleashing upon our nation their professional KGB agents to conduct the activities for which they are well trained. There appears to be, certainly in the minds of most reasonable Canadians, a need for some kind of penalty which could be imposed upon a Government which specifically instructs its agents to break the laws of Canada. In the event that we are serious about curtailing the activities of the Soviet Union, and its agents in spying and conducting espionage activities or otherwise conducting themselves in an illegal fashion, principally endeavouring to obtain information which is otherwise unavailable to them, it is incumbent upon this Government to establish some stringent guidelines which would guide the Soviet Government in the conduct of its affairs and the affairs of its agents while in Canada.

On a number of occasions I have mentioned those specific remedial actions which should be taken. On one occasion I suggested it would be appropriate to advise the Soviet Union that, in the event it persisted in instructing its agents to behave illegally in this country, its staff should be reduced by one half. Its staff, of course, being those who are associated with both its embassy here in Ottawa and its consulate mission in Montreal.

There is little likelihood that my recommendation will be adopted by this Government. The incident in 1978 probably gives rise to the best kind of response which we could expect from the Government of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said, after being confronted with the knowledge of the activities of the 13 Soviet agents, that their activities would naturally be disturbing to the friendship between our two countries. I should have thought that his reaction, rather than being one of amazement, would have been one of anger, coupled with a dedication to the adoption of policies which would preclude that kind of conduct from occurring again. Yet the statement of the Prime Minister in 1978 was to the effect that he well expected that kind of activity to continue in the future. Of course, he has done nothing to discourage the Soviet Union from conducting illegal activities in our country since that date.

As a result of a question which I placed on the Order Paper, the House now knows that there are 44 Canadian citizens on the embassy staff of our country in Moscow. There are 45 Soviet citizens on the staff of the Soviet embassy in Ottawa and 16 Soviet citizens who work at the consulate in Montreal. Very clearly, as an initial step, Mr. Speaker, the 17 excessive Soviet representatives in this country should be eliminated in terms of establishing some parity between Canadian representation in the Soviet Union and Soviet representation in this country. I would urge the Government, in the interests of precluding the kind of activity which we find reprehensible, to take some steps to reduce the staff of the Soviet embassy in our country as a penalty for future espionage activities in Canada.

● (1805)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question and his subsequent comments tonight are typically extreme. He ignores the fact that the vast amount of daily business between the two countries is profitable and necessary for both sides.

Instead, he zeros in on extreme behaviour and therefore loses a chance to stress those positive things which help to normalize relations between the East and the West.

In the past two years Canada has declared three Soviet officials personae non gratae because they were conducting themselves in a manner unacceptable to this country. In April, 1982, on the basis of evidence at its disposal, the Government took the decision to expel one official, Mikhail Abramov. In September, 1983, after assessing the information available very carefully, the Government asked Victor Tselekovskiy to leave Canada and prohibited a second official, Anatolity Solousov, who was out of the country on holiday, from returning. The Government has no wish to comment on the alleged activities of other officials in the Soviet embassy. Of course, we encourage greater Government to Government dialogue through official contact. In that sense, Soviet diplomats are representatives of an important and powerful country and their work is essential. The record clearly shows however, that we have not hesitated to act promptly and resolutely when Canadian security interests are threatened by the conduct of officials who behave in an inappropriate manner.

It would be a mistake to underestimate the disruptive effect on the Soviets of these expulsions. The Government has pointed out strongly to the Soviet embassy that activities such as those for which these three officials were expelled will not be tolerated, nor will we hesitate to take appropriate action to ensure that Canadian interests and security are protected. At the same time we have no intention of interfering with the normal working and commercial activities between the two countries, and we have no intention of interfering with opportunities to open avenues of dialogue between the two countries.

TRADE—UNITED STATES POTATO IMPORT HEARINGS—REQUEST FOR CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have asked questions in this House with respect to the recent ruling of the U.S. Department of Commerce that there should be a duty surcharge imposed on the export of Canadian potatoes to that market. I want to give you some background on the trade between Canada and the U.S., and some figures to back it up. I asked for some documentation on this subject matter from the Library of Parliament, and they gave it to me with respect to tomatoes, onions, carrots, cabbage and many other items. In their closing paragraph they say that Canada's horticultural trade is an important component of Canada's agricultural exports. Horticultural producers can be found in virtually every part of Canada. Canada imports substantially more horticultural products than it exports, primarily from the U.S. Canada also represents a major market for U.S. horticultural products.

Let us take a look at how important our market is to the U.S. Without going into the detail about cabbages, carrots, etc., I want to point out that in Canadian imports of fruit and nuts, the U.S. generates a net balance of trade of $714 million. To broaden that a little further and include vegetables along with the fruit and nuts, again the U.S. generates a trade surplus with Canada of $382 million for a total of well over $1 billion in trade surplus in fruits, nuts and vegetables.

Our trade with the U.S., particularly as it relates to potatoes, is somewhat minuscule on a relative basis. For instance, between the years 1971 and 1981, which is as far as Statistics Canada has prepared these figures, the import of potatoes from the U.S. fluctuated from a low of 7.1 per cent of Canada's consumption in 1971, to a high of 17.2 per cent in 1977.

In the reverse trade, on a relative basis again, we supplied to the United States a low of 0.2 per cent to a high of 1.3 per cent of their requirement for potatoes in 1982. Under those terms and conditions, who is hurting whom? If they supply to Canada up to 17.2 per cent of our requirement and a low of 7.1 per cent while we reach in one year only an export which is equivalent to 1.3 per cent of their requirement, who is damaging whom? Yet on that basis it has been decreed in the rulings to date that there should be a surcharge of duty on potatoes exported to the United States from eastern Canada. This raises an element of very serious concerns if, in a field in which there is over $1 billion of U.S. trade surplus, we begin to find ourselves in difficulty with individual items which constitute that billion. It does not bode very much good for us. I submit that we should have taken a very serious look at the structure at a much earlier stage.

The probable responder tonight is from Ontario. I want to say to that gentleman from Ontario, through you, Mr. Speaker, that every single potato grower east of the most westerly Ontario destination, North Bay, and I think it would be proper to say east of Thunder Bay, will receive a lower price for his product if we do not successfully either fight or negotiate our way out of the surcharge on potatoes. Mr. Speaker, if those potatoes do not leave the country and go down to the natural market on the East Coast, they then must find a market somewhere east of Thunder Bay. That has a very major consequence on the return of potato growers throughout all of eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the market and the price for potatoes is a continental price. I hope that our Government officials will extend that knowledge to the American officials. If the total continental supply, that is those potatoes grown in Canada and the United States, exceeds what is a reasonable consumptive capacity of the consumers of this continent, we will in fact get a low price. This will not only apply along the East Coast and in the so-called northeast region which has applied for surcharge of duty, but in virtually all of the North American continent with a few isolated situations which are protected by geography against transportation costs and therefore against price fluctuations as they relate to supply. Those will only be isolated instances. It is, therefore, very pertinent that the Government of Canada should make the strongest possible representations to the Government of the United States before the final answer from the United States Department of Commerce is passed down on December 19.

• (1815)

In view of the major resources of agricultural organizations, I want to make an appeal now to all Members on the Government side that the Horticulture Council be given the sincerest possible congratulations for the way it has defended Canada's needs in this industry. Those congratulations should be extended to potato organizations and the Governments of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick and there should be a special grant to the Canadian Horticulture Council which has exhausted its reserves and will end up seriously in debt in the protection of trade for Canada as a whole. I believe this should be the responsibility of the federal Treasury from some Department, under the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

I hope that I will not be answered with a prepared text but in a businesslike discussion on the subject matter of the question and the remarks I have made tonight.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has pointed out that I come from Ontario, and of course he comes from New Brunswick. He could have gone on to say that I am a Member of the Government and he is a Member of the Opposition. Despite those differences, I would like to extend my personal congratulations to him for the concern he has shown over this issue and the activity he has undertaken. He has stated his case well. I understand that he personally has travelled to Washington—

Mr. McCain: Only to Portland.

Mr. Fisher: He has travelled to Portland, he says, and I appreciate the chance now to give him an updated report on the Government's activities.

Ministers have, on a number of occasions, expressed to their American counterparts the Government's concerns about continuing American actions aimed at limiting potato imports from the maritime Provinces and about the consequences for Canada of the current anti-dumping investigation.

The United States Commerce Department issued an affirmative anti-dumping determination of November 4 which cited higher anti-dumping margins than those in the Department's preliminary determination of July 26. The interdepartmental team that has been working on this case for Canada since its conception, met with the Canadian Horticultural Council and with the New Brunswick, and P.E.I. Ministers and Deputy Ministers of Agriculture. We expressed our collective concern over the final anti-dumping determination and agreed that we now need to focus our energies on the injury case.

The Government sent a team comprising officials of the Departments of External Affairs, Agriculture and Finance to the U.S. International Trade Commission's injury hearing in Portland, Maine, on November 18. Indeed, as I mentioned, the Hon. Member himself also attended the hearing. The reports on this important hearing are encouraging. Mr. Ince, our Washington counsel, made a strong and persuasive intervention. The Government remains convinced that a good case will continue to be made that Canadian exports of the type of potato under investigation are not injuring the U.S.A. industry. The U.S. Department of Commerce must make a final determination of injury by December 19. If its decision is negative, the investigation will be terminated.

May I again compliment the Hon. Member for his obvious concern for his constituents and for the industry generally.

FINANCE—CAPITAL GAINS TAX AMENDMENTS. (B) TREATMENT OF STOCK PURCHASERS. (C) APPLICATION OF TAX TO SPECULATORS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on October 3 last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled in the House detailed ways and means motions with respect to the indexed investment security plan. You will recall that I raised this matter in the House on a number of occasions. I was rather disturbed by the text of the ways and means motion which was tabled. That is why I raised the matter in the House with the Minister on October 6.

Briefly, the indexed investment security plan is one in which a person decides to make his stockmarket investment behind a plan administered by his broker. The capital gains tax is only paid on the actual real capital gain, inflation aside. Losses are deductible on a formula in the plan.

It is a detailed ways and means motion that explictly sets out for the House the terms of the proposed change to the Income Tax Act. The problem is that we are not really dealing with investments in the way the ways and means motions sets out the case. We are dealing with such things as stock options. Imagine a put or a call or an option agreement being treated somehow as an investment? On a matter of that nature, there is no investment whatsoever. What a person does is to pay a fee or an option price to take an option on some stock. If the stock goes up in value, a profit is made. If it goes down, there is a put, you can also make a profit. You are speculating on the market.

Until now that has always been deemed as an adventure in the nature of trade. It is a business activity. It has nothing to do with investment at all. Not one nickel goes into the till of the company. Not one nickel is put up to create jobs in Canada. Not one nickel is put up to improve the investment picture, the capital of a corporation in the country. It is merely a method whereby this Government enables those people who are speculators in the market to escape not only income tax on their trading activities, but capital gains tax as well, except to the extent that there is a real gain in terms of a real gain after inflation being taken into account.

It is abominable that under the guise of trying to increase equity investment as set out by the Minister, the Minister should allow this class of activity to be buried under the indexed investment security plan.

If we really wanted to get to the problem of increasing equity investment, what we would do is to get rid of capital gains completely. Capital gains have not turned out to be a great source of federal revenue. In 1979, the total revenue derived by both the Provinces and the federal Government was but $650 million. If you add some indexing and add some possibilities to that, perhaps there is a billion dollars of revenue in it. But the damage to the economy is so much greater that we would be far better off as a nation to get rid of capital gains tax completely. This proposal gets rid of capital gains tax for those people who are able to trade in listed investments on the market. It is a practical matter. They will pay tax on their real gains but they will be able to write off all of their losses. It is only a tax on real gains and then only at capital gains tax rates. Probably, in fact, after it is all washed out, some people will pay tax, a lot of people will have losses, and the net result will be that the Government will not get any revenue. Maybe it is equitable that some should pay and some should not. But the real purpose of an Income Tax Act is to raise revenue. This amendment does not.

You are indicating to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say that this is no way to increase equity investment in Canada. What we ought to do is to treat all investment as being free of tax, free of capital gains tax. What we ought to do is to put some sizzle into the market. What we ought to do is to encourage people to invest. What we ought to do is to tax those who are just traders. This amendment lets the traders off the hook and puts the ordinary real investor on the hook for an unfair capital gains tax.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member often rises in this House to attack the existence of capital gains tax. We have had lively debates on this topic in the past. Tonight he has announced a new wrinkle in the theory, namely, that a billion dollars is not significant revenue for the Government. I think that is an important policy statement from the Progressive Conservative Party and it is one that I am sure we will hear more of in the future. But I ask the Hon. Member, what about the people who have to bankroll his taxation theories? What about the people who have to pay for all the guys who get a free ride under his theory? Of course these are the people who have payroll income but no capital gains income. These are the people who work in factories and teach in schools. These are the people who have their own small stores or small businesses which pay them a salary but no real capital gain. The Hon. Member is recommending that these people finance the high rollers he is supposedly attacking.

Turning to the indexed security investment plan, individuals who speculate or deal with shares, options or other properties as a business venture are taxed on the profit generated from their activities at regular business tax rates, not at the lower capital gains rates. Those people pay the full rates. Speculators do not receive the benefits that ISIP offers to "true" investors.

The option trading which the Hon. Member attacked this evening is an integral part of Canadian equity markets. Our position in the ISIP is something which was recommended and supported by the Investment Dealers Association and the Toronto Stock Exchange. ISIP, along with other measures announced in the April 19 budget, are positive steps in encouraging new equity investment in Canadian corporations. I repeat, just in case my colleague across the way does not understand my position on this, that the capital gains tax is a fair tax. It is a productive tax and it is one that treats income equitably for all Canadians. It does not create a special class of income or a special category of people who get a free ride from other taxpayers. The tax policy must treat all income fairly. The capital gains tax is one part of the entire spectrum of tax which avoids unfairness and gives the Government satisfactory revenues.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock. May I extend best wishes to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn); have a good evening.

At 6.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should indicate to the House at this time that the Chair is in a position to arrive at a decision in the choice of the motions on the Order Paper which are now before the House. If Hon. Members wish to make a comment at this time, the Chair is prepared to hear them out.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, could the Chair indicate what it might be disposed to do without argument, because we might save the time of the House by doing that? I am prepared to make argument but it will take some time. Normally we get an indication from the Chair with respect to these matters before calling for submissions.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a reasonable request. I would also like to hear from the Chair what its predisposition might be without actually making a ruling, because I am equally prepared to argue the point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair should indicate at this time to Hon. Members that it is disposed to call the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 62, which in essence provides for three supply periods and 25 allotted days during those periods, is an innovation in the rules. The Standing Order provides that those days are available for the moving of motions by the Opposition. In each of the three semesters, not more than two of those motions will have votes attached. In the supply period ending December 10 are five such allotted days. In the spring semester there are seven and in the summer semester there are 13.

I point out the rules provide that these allotted days are intended for the Opposition. While there are two Parties on the Opposition side of the House, there is one Opposition and that is Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, sometimes called since the days of Mackenzie King the Official Opposition. But the right to those allotted days is the right of the Opposition, not the Opposition Parties but the Opposition.

Since the invocation of the Standing Order providing for this supply process, it has been the practice of the Opposition to divide the allotted days in a fair way with the New Democratic Party, with the other Party that sits on this side of the House. In all cases, in arriving at that decision there have been several factors taken into account, but the chief one is that the allotment has been determined on the basis of numerical representation on this side of the House. That criteria would be applied and I have so assured the Hon. Member from Hamilton Mountain in this instance.

The total of 25 allotted days, the global number of allotted days available and provided to Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Opposition, the Official Opposition—whatever you want to call it—following the unwritten interpretation on which we have always proceeded as being fair, should be divided by 30 per cent and 60 per cent, or as close thereto as we could come to it. In my view, if you want to look at the rigid and strict interpretation of the Standing Orders, we need not apply any allotted days to the New Democratic Party. The same thing applies to the votes. On some occasions though, having given an allotted day to the NDP, we have withheld a vote until well on into the final supply period.

When we first came back to this interminable session of Parliament we started into the spring semester where there were still some allotted days that had not been allotted in the supply period that had to be disposed of. I take it from where the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain comes that by using a calendar year he may be advancing the argument to you, Mr. Speaker, as he has to me, that in this calendar year we have not yet reached that one-third position. If you take the calendar year he is, of course, correct. But if you take the supply cycle which commenced when we returned, then he is not correct.

I have examined the history of the allotted days, commencing with the period ending December 10, 1980, through to the period ending June 30, 1983. Of course, in this semester we are in now, this will be the fourth allotted day. In the event that this historical work has not been done for you, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to make this examination available for your perusal. In all cases Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Official Opposition, has allotted days to the New Democratic Party in keeping with that fair approach over the period from February, 1980, which was the hangover period, through to June 30.

I submit that the Chair should not instruct the Official Opposition on how it must deal with the division of the allotted days to which the Official Opposition is entitled during supply periods. I suggest to the Chair that the discretion of the number and the discretion of the timing are discretion lying within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Official Opposition in the House.

The Chair is confronted with not only two but three motions on the Order Paper with respect to allotted days. One is in the name of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). I will cite them in chronological order with respect to the time they were accepted for filing by the Chair. As I said, the first is in the name of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, the second is in the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the third, which was tabled yesterday, is in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. As I understand it, after having failed to obtain unanimous consent to put the motion yesterday, it was then filed with the Table. In any event, the motion was filed subsequent to the motion filed by myself on behalf of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

There are some numbers which should be taken into account in exercising your discretion, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 62(4)(c). Based on the fact that New Democratic Party Members in the House constitute approximately 23 per cent of the Opposition, according to practice they would be entitled, in our view, to roughly six of the 25 Opposition days in any given year. We agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that this would be their normal entitlement. However, he is wrong in the manner in which he has chosen to calculate these days. He will be making his own argument in that respect, as he has in a letter to me which requested the allotment of one of these five days. The letter was delivered to me by hand after I had already filed the motion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

I want to emphasize that the first supply period in this session was an extended period ending December 10, 1980. Therefore, the calculation of the annual allotment of supply days should begin in the fall trimester; that is when it should begin, not on January 1. On this basis it can be seen that last year Members of the NDP received six Opposition days out of a total of 25, which is their fair allotment.

We are now about to commence the fourth day in the fall trimester, the first trimester of supply for the purpose of our calculations. Although the first four supply days have been taken by the Official Opposition, there is no obstacle which prevents the NDP from receiving a share of the remaining 21 days, accepting my submission that we start in the fall trimester. I have indicated to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain that we are prepared to give those days to the New Democratic Party, as we always have in the past. Indeed, just before coming in here I gave him that undertaking. However, this is done at the initiative of the Official Opposition, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, or the Opposition, however you want to call it.

If we operate on any other principle, there not being any specific divisions set forth in the Standing Orders, then what we would be doing would be negating the idea that there is an Official Opposition in this House with some exclusive rights by virtue of being that Opposition. What we would do if we depart from the practice of allowing that discretion to remain with the Opposition would be to give a minority Party in the House the right to decide at any time when it will elect to have an allotted day.

I might point out that while there are three motions on the Order Paper attempting to use the fourth allotted day, the NDP, in making the submission that they are now entitled to have their motion considered before two others filed in priority, are making a presumption with respect to the disposition of the final day in this trimester. That argument happens to be academic, because not even the Chair knows what disposition is going to be made with respect to that day coming up on November 28.

Mr. Malone: Nor does the House Leader.

Mr. Nielsen: Nor does the House Leader at the moment, as my colleague points out. There is nothing in our Standing Orders that requires the Opposition—and I submit that the majority on this side are the Official Opposition—to make any division.

Second, we have functioned in the past on the basis of fairness but without any requirement technically in the Standing Orders to divide those Opposition days on the basis of numerical representation in the House. We have done that on a global basis. We have allotted a little less than one-third out of the 25, not out of the five in the fall trimester, the seven in the spring trimester and the 13 in the final trimester. We have not approached it that way. In the past we have operated on the basis of the 25 days being divided. Nor is there any obligation, with respect to the two votes in each of those semesters, as to when those votes are going to be allotted.

The strongest argument I make to you, Mr. Speaker, is the right of the Official Opposition to exercise that discretion. It has not been abused in the past. Even though there is no technical requirement for allotting any days, we have been fair throughout. Even the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain will agree with that. They have never been dealt short on a fair division of the days, but that discretion rests with us and, with great respect, with no one else.

Even if that argument does not find favour with the Chair, there is the argument that if any discretion is to be exercised under Standing Order 62(4)(c), then that discretion should be exercised on the basis of the time of filing of the motion. There are two motions that were received by the Table prior to the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, the one filed by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe which we prefer not to have called today, and the one filed by myself on behalf of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. I did not note the time that it reached the Table, but it did reach the Table, I believe, prior to the commencement of yesterday's debate. Perhaps I am a few minutes out on that one way or the other, but it certainly reached the Table before the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

On that basis, Sir, with great respect, I suggest to the Chair that it allow the practice to continue whereby the Official Opposition has the discretion to determine when the New Democratic Party will obtain its allotted days of the total of 25, having operated on the basis of the semesters as they come up rather than on a calendar year. We are following practices that have not been abused in the past. I can assure you, Sir, that as long as I have any power to make recommendations for my caucus with respect to the allotment of those days, that practice will not suffer any abuse in the future. I can assure you, Sir, that the New Democratic Party will, as it has in the past, obtain its full allotment both of days of a total of 25 and of votes.

I would strongly suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you exercise your discretion in favour of calling the motion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands even if it is only on the basis of its having been filed in priority.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I ask only for fairness and I concede that we have had no reason to complain up until now. In fact, I can recall at least one occasion and perhaps two occasions where, at the request of the Official Opposition and in order to facilitate its own particular requirements of the time, we took an Opposition day. I can recall that on two occasions there were other events occurring outside of the House that Hon. Members of the Official Opposition were desirous of attending. On those occasions we accepted the day although, quite frankly, it would not have been a day of our choosing if we had had any choice at all.

I would like to deal with some of the arguments raised by the Hon. Member. To begin with, if one were to accept the argument put forward by the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition that the time of filing should be a predetermining factor, then of course we could today file half a dozen motions that would then sit on the Notice Paper throughout the entire period of supply. That would give our motions priority if one were to accept that argument. Of course, that argument cannot be accepted. The time of filing does in no way interfere with the right of the Speaker to determine the business to be called at this point in time.

I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that contrary to what has been said by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition, it is not solely the responsibility of the Official Opposition to determine which Party will in fact be allocated the day for the purpose of supply debate. Quite clearly, the Standing Orders give that right to the Chair in cases of doubt and in cases of dispute. It is therefore incumbent upon the Chair to make a decision in circumstances such as these and is not incumbent upon the Official Opposition to dictate to anyone how that decision ought to be made.

I am operating on the basis of the provisional Standing Orders which are in place for a calendar year. If so, I can only assume that one must argue about the right of individuals to be recognized, the right of certain processes to be followed, within the calendar year. There will be a new calendar year starting in January next, hopefully with the continuation of the provisional Standing Orders, and we would anticipate that we would get our share of the allotted days during the calendar year 1984.

One argument made by the House Leader of the Official Opposition is that the Chair does not know who will be granted the fifth allotted day. As the House Leader for the Official Opposition would no doubt affirm, I want to make it clear that I raised that matter with him before we filed the motion. I raised it last week, in fact, and asked whether or not we would be receiving one of the three days designated by the Government House Leader. The response was an unequivocal no. I then assumed, I think quite rightly so, that it was the intention of the Official Opposition to utilize each of those days for their own use. That would mean that out of the five allotted days during this period, we would not receive any. Not only would we not get a voting day, which I am not going to argue about at the moment, but we would not even get a day at all.

I waited to see whether the Official Opposition had in fact filed the motions, which they did to take up each of the days, before I filed on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. I was hoping that perhaps as a result of communications I sent to the Official Opposition House Leader, they would see the fairness of giving us one of the five days. I say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the five days would be less than one might reasonably expect given the numerical breakdown of the Opposition, but we understand that you can only break it down according to an even division. You cannot get part of a day. So we are prepared to accept less than what we expect we might be entitled to as a result of the numerical breakdown in the Opposition.

If, however, we were not given the day today, it would mean, since we now know the Official Opposition intends to take the final day also for themselves, that out of the 25 days in this calendar year we would have received five. That is clearly less than we would be entitled to and it would mean we would be denied the opportunity of putting forward a motion which we frankly feel is of some considerable importance.

On the basis of fairness, we are asking for no more than we should reasonably expect to get. Having waited, hoping the Official Opposition might change its mind, I think we dealt with it in a reasonable way. We waited until the motions were clearly there for both days before we decided to file, in the hope that maybe the Official Opposition might change its mind.

I would argue very strongly that it would be a bad precedent for the Speaker to determine that the Chair has no jurisdiction in determining which of the two Opposition motions—three in this case but two that we are arguing over—should be be called for debate today. The Chair would be derelict in its duty if it accepted the argument of the Official Opposition House Leader that, by virtue of being the Official Opposition, they and they alone should have the jurisdiction and discretion.

Quite clearly, the Standing Orders, and I need not cite them now, give the Chair the obligation of making such a decision. Nowhere in the Standing Orders or in Beauchesne or anywhere else that I can find is there any reference to there being some discretion to be exercised solely by the Official Opposition in the determination of the allocation of Opposition days. The only reference to allotted days is in the following way, where it is said that although technically the business under discussion is Government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by Members in opposition to the Government. It makes no reference to whether they sit in the Official Opposition or whether they sit, as my colleagues do, in a third Party in the House of Commons.

I concede that we have not been shortchanged over the course of the last two or three years, but I appeal to the Official Opposition House Leader to consider in the interests of fairness that we would be receiving considerably less during this calendar year than we would be entitled to. That is no guarantee we would be given an appropriate number, although the House Leader says that he will make every effort to persuade his colleagues that we should. We are not asking for more than we would reasonably be entitled to, given the numbers in the House as broken down by the Parties represented here. We are not asking for a voting day, although we might feel it would have been appropriate to have allocated one for this Party during this particular point in time. By granting the day to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap's motion, we would be receiving what would be fair during this period consistent with what has gone on in the past.

I would ask that the Chair continue with the preliminary ruling the Chair has given, recognizing that allotted days are not only for the Official Opposition. The decision we are asking for is not in any way an attempt by us to abuse the Standing Orders. Though we may in fact be a minority in the House of Commons, we are surely entitled as Members of the Opposition to receive consideration on matters such as this. I point out that it is not precedent-setting. Quite clearly, the Standing Orders give the Chair the discretion to allow for a matter such as this to be resolved by the Chair. I ask the Chair to uphold the preliminary ruling the Chair indicated it was about to make, and give the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap the opportunity to discuss during this important session a question of vital importance to many people in western Canada, in fact many people across the country.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have called for and now obtained precise times for filing which I think should be taken into account in your consideration in this matter. There is something I am going to have to raise on another occasion with respect to the parliamentary documents here, parliamentary publications. The Order Paper lists all three motions which have been filed, one in the name of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, one in the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and one in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, in that order. While I realize that the Projected Order of Business is not an official parliamentary publication, nonetheless we find only two of them listed. The first one under No. 112 is the motion filed under the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, and No. 113—and I point that order out to you, Mr. Speaker—in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. Our motion, the one in the name of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, Mr. Speaker, was filed at 2.50 yesterday afternoon and was witnessed by the deputy principal clerk of Journals. So clearly that has priority.

I would point out, Sir, that we are embarking on pretty dangerous ground when the Chair, if it does, exercises discretion under Standing Order 62(4)(c)—and I say this with great respect—in ordering, really, what are the internal affairs of one side of this House. I might also point out to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, that last year his Party received two voting days, which is 33 per cent of the voting day entitlement, notwithstanding the fact that his Party by numbers is entitled to only 25 per cent. One-quarter is the entitlement.

On the basis of that timing, Mr. Speaker, since the motion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands had been filed at 2.50 p.m. yesterday, well before the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, plus the fact that the Projected Order of Business lists it as No. 112 as opposed to listing the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap as No. 113—obviously, the Table gave it priority—plus the fact that on the Order Paper our motion appears as No. 2, whereas the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap's motion appears as No. 3, once again, I would strongly suggest that the Chair allow the Opposition to proceed with the motion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Deans: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, and dealing only with the point the Hon. Member has raised, I cannot for the life of me understand how the argument can be made both ways. You cannot on the one hand claim that he or she who files first should be given precedence, while at the same time claim that the Official Opposition has the right to decide. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not both ways.

Mr. Deans: It would seem to me that if the Chair were to take the position that the person who files first will receive priority, then we could quite legitimately file at the beginning of each period in advance of the Official Opposition and keep them from getting any precedence. That would be ridiculous.

Miss MacDonald: That sounds like you.

Mr. Deans: The Official Opposition likewise could file and make the argument that, since it filed first, it was entitled therefore to have all of the days. I do not see how anyone can make that kind of argument. The reason the Official Opposition was able to file first was that we were not prepared to file until we were sure that it did not have in mind to give us one of the two days.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonsense!

Mr. Deans: We were awaiting some indication that perhaps the Official Opposition would change its mind and that we would be able to have one of the days. We had to wait until we were sure that both today and Monday next were going to be taken up by the Official Opposition, that it had that intent. Otherwise, the House Leader for the Official Opposition could then legitimately claim that we had no knowledge of what was going to happen on the subsequent day of Monday next, and we therefore were moving without justification to ask for something which those Members themselves might otherwise be prepared to see us have. Therefore, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the time of filing is irrelevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There being no further comments, I will now proceed with my ruling on the matter.

I should point out initially though that the Chair is again faced with a situation whereby Hon. Members—if I may put it in these terms—agree to disagree among themselves. As the Hon. Member for Yukon so rightly pointed out, it is not for the Chair to meddle in those affairs, and the Chair respects that entirely. However, there are three motions standing on the Order Paper under today's supply proceedings; two motions are sponsored by Hon. Members of the Official Opposition and one motion is sponsored by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

The Chair finds itself in the unenviable position of having to exercise its power of selection under Standing Order 62(4)(c). However, the Standing Order places a clear duty on the Chair to make a choice under such circumstances. It is a clear duty imposed on the Chair by the Standing Orders. The Standing Order is very clear and explicit about the Speaker's power of selection in this situation, and I will read Standing Order 62(4)(c):

> When notice has been given of two or more motions by Members in opposition to the government for consideration on an allotted day, the Speaker shall have power to select which of the proposed motions shall have precedence in that sitting.

I draw the attention of the Hon. Members to the words "by Members in opposition". The Chair is clearly in the presence of a situation where Parties disagree among themselves. The argument that the Chair should take into account the time of filing may be an argument which the Chair certainly would want to look at, and has looked at, but it does not appear to be the paramount factor in the case this morning. Past practice indicates that Parties in opposition to the Government, other than the Official Opposition, have received their share of allotted days in any supply period. Since this is the fourth day of a five-day period, and taking into account that three of the days have been used by Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, it is my intention to put to the House the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

This ruling is consistent with the duty of the Chair to give special attention to the protection of minorities. Should debate terminate before the ordinary hour of adjournment later today, this does not prevent the House from moving on to one of the other motions now standing on the Order Paper.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FORESTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

> That the Government respond to the emergency in the forestry sector by:
> 1. creating a new Forestry Ministry with the mandate to advance the Canadian forestry industry; and
> 2. convening a conference at the earliest opportunity of responsible Federal and Provincial Ministers to address the challenges presently facing the forestry sector,

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that, apart from the very eloquent argument put forward by my House Leader, the reason that we in the New Democratic Party felt it was so important—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member was recognized to make remarks on the motion now before the House. I do not believe he should reflect in any way upon arguments advanced previous to the ruling, or the ruling itself.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate those comments. I would like to say that we were very anxious to have this motion before the House today for three substantive reasons. One reason, of course, is that we are talking about such a major industry in our country, a major industry which certainly deserves more attention than it has received in the past.

Just to take a moment or two to present in some context the importance of the forest industry, I would like to remind Hon. Members that it is an industry which results in a $23 billion income to this country on an annual basis. In terms of our balance of payments, it plays a more significant role than all of the exports from mining, combined with all the exports from agriculture, combined with all the exports from fishing, and then combined, Mr. Speaker, with all the exports from the automobile industry. That is some idea of the size of the exports from the forest industry of this fine country.

It is an immense industry, Mr. Speaker, which employs somewhere in the neighbourhood of 5,000 different companies from one end of Canada to the other. It employs 300,000 Canadians directly in the forest industry and at least a million other Canadians in related industries which service the forest industry in one form or another. It is an incredible sector of our economy.

As well as the forest industry itself, which includes the sawmills, logging operations, pulp and paper mills, plywood mills, shingle mills, shake mills and other aspects of the forest industry that are directly related, one must not lose sight of the fact that we are talking about forests today and the importance of Canadian forests. We have to remind ourselves that we are also talking about the tourist industry, recreation industry, hospitality industry, and indirectly the fisheries industry, and of course the very important area of wildlife preservation. We are not only talking about the forest industry in the traditional sense, but of an industry that touches the lives of every single Canadian in one form or another. It is an industry that stretches through every Province in this country and is involved in every territory. It is of immense proportions.

The reason we wanted to get this topic before the House today, in light of its immensity, is that the Minister responsible for forestry, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia), is going before his Cabinet colleagues this week asking for additional funds. He has promised the Canadian Forestry Service the sum of $130 million to assist in federal-provincial agreements for this year. We all recognize that that is an inadequate amount of money, but nevertheless it is an increase. We want to highlight the importance of this industry. We want to give the Minister of the Environment responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service every encouragement to go into that Cabinet meeting and to fight for these additional funds.

Perhaps the most important reason that we have decided that this topic ought to take precedence in the House today is the fact that the only other day in the past 600 days that this House has sat when forestry was on the Order Paper for discussion was May 30, 1983. We have set aside only one day out of the last 600 days in this House to discuss Canada's number one industry. If it was just to discuss an industry that was healthy and wealthy and going well, that would be one thing. But this is an industry that has dire problems today. It is experiencing serious difficulty and challenges. These challenges are something that we cannot wait around to address a year from now, a decade from now, or later on in the century. These are problems that must be addressed today virtually in an emergency situation.

Individuals who are knowledgeable of the forest industry, and I suspect the Minister himself, who is a professional forester, and any individual who is involved directly in the forest industry, whether that person is a faller, a scaler, an employee in a logging camp, a sawmill or pulp and paper mill, will know full well that this industry is in serious trouble today. There is no getting away from that fact, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to take a moment or two to support the statement that this industry is in serious difficulty today. The other day Kenneth Greaves, the president of the Ontario Forest Industries Association, said that we must quadruple our investments in this industry if it is to survive and meet the challenges of the nineties. The country of Sweden is one of the most progressive nations when it comes to dealing with the forest industry. While we struggle to set aside two or three hundred million dollars a year for reforestation and research and development, Sweden is prepared to set aside a billion dollars a year to support and husband that industry.

The Swedes have provided us with a lesson that we certainly must follow to get away from the mining of our forests. We must take this industry much more seriously. Sweden is a major competitor in world markets and at the moment is generally outdoing us on the world markets. In the years to come there is certainly no question that the country of Sweden and a number of our other major competitors will be marching past us in terms of lumber and newsprint sales. This is something, Mr. Speaker, that we must work against and address immediately.

Jack Walters, the director of the U.B.C. forestry research centre in British Columbia, has said that our forests are in an absolute shambles, that it is a tragedy of the first dimension. He is a professional forester who understands the seriousness of the problem only too well. Michael Innis is a spokesman for the largest producer of newsprint in the world, Abitibi-Price. Mr. Innis has said that Canada is gradually running out of wood.

Mr. Speaker, the short and long of this is that we are harvesting more trees than we are replanting. If we were farmers talking about the future of agriculture and we saw that 75 per cent of the topsoil was simply disappearing each year, the farming sector, the agricultural sector, the food sector would become alarmed. Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what is happening today. The topsoil of our forest industry is being blown away and we are not doing a thing about it. As a matter of fact, some Provinces, like that illustrious Province of British Columbia, are cutting back on the number of seedlings that they are putting into the ground annually. Specifically, Canada harvests 800,000 hectares of forest land annually. We replant 25 per cent of that land. Natural planting occurs and lifts it up to something in the neighborhood of 40 per cent. That leaves a shortfall of somewhere between 50 and 70 per cent of the land harvested annually in this country not being replanted. If that is not forest suicide, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is.

The figures put before us by every single organization involved with the forest industry tell us that we are running out of merchantable timber in this country. Considering the importance of this industry, it is something that we should indeed become alarmed about. That is why this motion urges the Minister of the Environment responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service and for forestry to call together his provincial colleagues in a working conference to deal with the challenges that face this industry, not only in reforestation, sylviculture, fire protection, disease prevention, marketing problems, but all of these combined. We have got to sit down and address the situation. Recognizing that this industry cuts across every Province and territory, I believe it is up to the federal Government to provide leadership in this respect. That is why this motion is calling upon the Minister to stand up and join together with his provincial colleagues and provide the necessary leadership that this industry so sorely needs at this point.

The Science Council of Canada just recently presented a magnificent report for Members of Parliament and others. The report says that we are destroying or wasting, on an annual basis, 6,000 square miles of forest land. I would like to talk about the encroachment of subdivisions, the movement of farms into some of the forested areas, the flooding of valleys, the unleashed disease and pests that are invading our forests, hydro right of ways and road building.

The head of the IWA of British Columbia makes no bones about it when he says that we are running out of timber in this Province. We are at a crossroads with the industry. Mr. Speaker, the other day it was brought to our attention by a number of the lobby groups in the forest industry that now the furniture industries of Ontario and Quebec have to import maple logs from the United States. It is absolutely unbelievable that our wooden furniture industry must now import logs because of the casual approach that we take to our forest industry. I hope the Minister responsible will respond to this particular point made by the professional foresters. The information that has been provided to us by the Association of British Columbia Professional Foresters suggests that:

● (1200)

The number of person years available to research in the Canadian Forestry Service has declined by more than 50 per cent since 1968. This has occurred during a period of higher demands for more information and new technology to be applied to the forest industry. Increased research is required in almost all phases of forests and forest management.

At a time when we should be doing more research in this very critical industry in order to remain in a competitive position with competing nations around the world, what is the Canadian Forestry Service doing? It is cutting back the amount of funds provided for research in this largest Canadian industry. I suggest that the saddest comment on this issue is provided again by the British Columbia Professional Foresters. Our current spending on silviculture by all parties, including federal and provincial Governments as well as the private sector, amounts to approximately $240 million a year. This is less than 1 per cent of the total value of the annual forest production in Canada. Less than 1 per cent is being invested in silviculture. Again, this is something which competing countries such as Sweden consider to be a mindless position for governments and industry to take.

The figure which makes us acutely aware of the seriousness of the problem is the amount of money that we set aside for the Canadian Forestry Service. This past year it was $70 million. In the same ministry and by the same Minister, $146 million was budgeted for the Atmospheric Environment Service and $275 million for Parks Canada. While one does not have anything of a disparaging nature to say about money being spent on climate and weather monitoring and Parks Canada, I do say that it is nothing short of a national disgrace that the federal Government spends twice as much money monitoring weather as it spends on our forest industry. I suggest therein lies the crux of the problem in terms of lack of financial support that this Government is presently giving to this critical industry.

One could go on and on outlining the serious problem facing Canada's number one industry. The other day Members of the House found out, much to their disappointment, that the assistant deputy minister responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service has left the employ of the federal Government after working for it for a number of years. One can only speculate why he left but this was a person who was attempting to do a great deal to heighten the role of the Canadian Forestry Service in this country.

The federal Cabinet had promised, a year and a half ago, that it would set aside at least $130 million for this year and on an annual basis. That was 18 months ago. I suspect that this individual was waiting month after month for that money, having been given that commitment, only to find no money of any substantive nature coming to that critical department. I suspect that that individual simply gave up in disgust. He could not stand before his professional colleagues in the country and say that he is responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service as assistant deputy minister responsible for the major resource sector of our economy and the major exporter in our economy but was unable to get the funds that were promised to him. How could such a person who was a legitimate professional, knowledgeable about the state of the forest industry in this country and knowing what was happening to it, with the compassion and commitment of a professional forester, stand idly by and watch the demise and decay of our forests, based on the lack of interest and negative attitude presented by the Government? That is why we are asking the Minister to bring his colleagues together?

We are also asking the Minister to lift up the role and importance of the forest industry in the Government's eyes. After all, we are talking about the major industry in this country which employs the equivalent of the entire population of greater Vancouver, 1.3 million people. But to what is the industry relegated? Do we even have a minister of state responsible for this area? Is there a deputy minister? There certainly is no minister. There is an assistant deputy minister in the Department of the Environment, which is really an agency. The federal Government is clearly overlooking a role that it should be taking up.

I appreciate the fact that forestry is a provincial responsibility. However, there is also provincial responsibility in other areas for which there are federal Ministers responsible. I do not pretend that creating a Ministry of Forestry will solve the problem overnight. I will not even suggest that creating a Ministry of Forestry at the federal level will provide most of the answers. But it will send a very clear message to the industry that the Government is serious about forestry and is committed to the forest industry in terms of providing an appropriate infrastructure and financial support system to it.

It is quite clear how the forest industry feels about the role that the federal Government is providing. I do not want to suggest for a moment that I am necessarily casting any dispersions or negative comments on the role being played by the Minister because I think most Members understand that we are dealing with a situation where most Members of the House and the Cabinet come from urban areas. They have been raised in the urban tradition and perhaps they lack some appreciation for the forest industry, which tends to be rural by definition.

In closing, I suggest that the federal Government must provide a federal department, as called for by the Science

Council of Canada, to provide leadership in research in such areas as basic research, forest production and, most importantly, to ensure that adequate forest protection research is conducted. As well, the Government should work for additional federal-provincial research agreements. I believe the Minister told us the other day that there are federal-provincial agreements in place with only two or three Provinces. There is some difficulty with the major producing Provinces and that certainly must be overcome. As well, the Science Council of Canada calls on the Government to stimulate investment in research, provide priorities and co-ordinate research opportunities, to develop more support for forestry schools and also to provide more long-term funding for university research.

I urge the Minister to give serious attention to our call today for the creation of a Minister of Forestry and to consider a meeting of Ministers responsible for forests as early as possible.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to accept and commend the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his ideals and goals with respect to the forest industry. In his remarks he mentioned Sweden several times and compared us to that country.

Would the Hon. Member indicate to the House whether he would prefer to see Canadians go the route of higher taxation in order to achieve this billion dollar input into the forest industry, which he laments we are not doing, or would he prefer to see us go the route which Sweden is increasingly taking, which is asking their people to become more involved in their own social programs by increasing their contributions as individuals to their social programs?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that question because it is a critical one. How do we involve people in the forest industry in a more meaningful way? I will respond by making two points very quickly.

First, we will not become a competitive country in the forest industry until we involve all employees in a meaningful way in the forest industry. To a large extent, we are still of the neanderthal viewpoint that there are bosses and there are workers in the forest industry. Our competing countries no longer possess that attitude. Until we democratize the workplace and involve all employees in a meaningful way in the production of our forest products, we will not develop to our maximum in terms of competitiveness and productivity.

A first step in the right direction that we could learn from our colleagues south of the line in the United States of America is profit sharing involving all employees, not just senior executives. This would be a major step toward real democratization of the workplace.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a follow-up question to my friend from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It seems to me there have been some very major efforts to democratize the work force but they have for the most part been resisted by the leadership of the Canadian Labour Congress. Would the Hon. Member be prepared to agree that there is a need for a change of attitude at the highest leadership level in the Canadian Labour Congress on this labour-management democratization?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to that question. I am not aware of any leader of any of the labour unions of this country that has not advocated such a position. I have yet to see a single incident—and I watch this very closely—when management has made a genuine offer of involvement that was not taken up by the employees. I have yet to see a single incident when such an officer was turned down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Are there any further questions or comments? The Hon. Minister for the Environment.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity for this debate. It will be difficult to say things very novel in view of the debate that took place yesterday, but I will try. I also express the hope that a debate of this kind will take place in the respective provincial legislatures across Canada.

I was pleased to notice that the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) did recognize that there is in the matter of forestry a very heavy and important burden to be carried on by provincial jurisdictions. Perhaps I might also be so bold as to express the hope that a debate of this kind will also take place by boards of directors in the forest industries that have benefited so far. If things are done properly in the future we will continue to benefit if this industry and resource is managed properly. It seems to me, however, that the Hon. Member is engaging in a doubtful exercise of mixing figures when he begins to compare a federal responsibility like the weather services with expenditures made in forestry, which is a joint responsibility. I would urge him not to do that.

The Hon. Member also seems to overlook the fact—and I wish he were more au courant as to what is happening—that we do have a number of agreements in place in addition to the ones with Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. These are agreements made jointly, federally and provincially, under DREE some years ago which have resulted in a contribution by the federal Government to the Provinces in the neighbourhood of some $80 million or $82 million a year.

I am looking for a moment at the motion before us today. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap makes two propositions. One is the creation of a new ministry. Long speeches could be made on this subject. If the creation of a new ministry will result in the planting of one more tree, I would be quite positive to that kind of proposal. But it seems to me today that, given a golden opportunity to do so, the Hon. Member from Kamloops-Shuswap failed to make a good case for the creation of a new ministry. He really did. I did not hear in his remarks any substantiating evidence that by creating a new ministry our country would benefit through the planting of trees in large numbers and better forest management. The Canadian Forestry Service is there to perform that service all the time. Its ability to perform that task has been enhanced in recent years, as I will try to demonstrate in a moment.

The second part of the motion deals with the convening of a conference at the earliest opportunity of federal and provincial responsible Ministers. Here again, I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap—because he does not seem to realize it—that a conference of this nature took place on September 14, 1983, in Winnipeg. I could even put on record the agenda of that meeting where we discussed the forest sector strategy in Canada. That was a big item in Winnipeg in September. We discussed employment in forestry, pest control, water bombers, softwood lumber contravening duties, fire research, the Canadian Institute of Forestry resolutions and even the restructuring of CCREM. Finally, we discussed the launching, which was itself an important development in joint federal-provincial ventures, and creation of the Canadian Interagency Forest Fire Centre. Therefore, if I look at the motion and at the reality, I must reject the motion put forward by the Hon. Member.

In addition, two years ago, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced a significant reorganization to more closely realign policies and programs for economic development, keeping in mind the needs of major economic sectors including the forest sector. Under this reorganization the responsibility for negotiation and management of federal-provincial forestry agreements was transferred to the Canadian Forestry Service in the Department of the Environment from the Ministry of Regional and Economic Expansion. This decision of two years ago, I am sure the Hon. Member would know, was followed by a period of consolidation which is still continuing. We are still, therefore, in the process of consolidating after having hired some 100 new people and started negotiations toward new agreements in the light of those expiring in the future. We have also expanded and reinforced our regional offices to perform that duty. As I pointed out yesterday in this House, you may recall, Mr. Speaker, this Government has responded and continues to respond to the challenges facing the forest sector.

As a first step we felt it necessary to establish a national system for the collection, analysis and dissemination of forestry data in furtherance of intensive forest management policies, planning and programs. This work is being conducted as a component of the Petawawa National Forest Institute. The financial resources approved for this program for the period 1981-1982 to 1983-1984 total some $5.7 million. It enabled us to produce the 1981 Canada forest inventory.

We have committed ourselves to enter into agreements with each of the Provinces in support of programs to meet the reforestation needs of the forest sector in Canada as a subsequent step. As I mentioned yesterday, two agreements have been signed, one with Nova Scotia worth $30 million in federal funds over five years, and another one with the Province of Prince Edward Island, which was signed in July of this year for a period of five years in the amount of $15 million in federal funds. Then we have provided an additional $16 million to enhance the agreement with Newfoundland.

Also we have prepared a private woodlot development policy which provides the basis for private woodlot programs in federal-provincial forest agreements. This was consequent upon the urging of several Hon. Members on our side particularly those from New Brunswick. Given the high unemployment in the forestry sector, last year we began a job-creation program by using Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Canadian Forestry Service provided some $34 million to top up the benefits of UIC recipients which under the program delivered some $140 million. It has provided some 14,000 jobs, representing a quarter of a million weeks of employment in the particular area of forest renewal.

I would like to stress that this program was particularly successful in British Columbia. Unfortunately, in June of this year that Province decided to curtail its involvement in the program, sharply reducing its effectiveness. In terms of forestry research and development, we have supported Forintek and we have approved the research and development component of this strategy. We have provided $5.5 million to the Canadian Forestry Service for research and development in the current fiscal year. Also we have already committed funds for the expansion and upgrading of Canadian Forestry Service research labs across the country.

The House may recall that yesterday I made reference to the Pacific Forestry Research Centre which received $14 million; to the Great Lakes Forestry Research Centre, where some $13 million was allocated; to the Laurentian Forestry Research Centre, where $10.5 million was allocated; and to the new Maritime Forestry Research Centre, where some $22.5 million was made available. In addition, some $17 million has been provided for the expansion of pulp and paper research facilities in Victoria and Pointe Claire. We have provided some $10 million to the Maritime Forest Ranger School as part of the forestry complex in Fredericton.

When it comes to human resources, we have anticipated well what might happen in requirements in this field and have made available and provided over $15 million to expand the pool of professional forestry manpower. This money will provide for forestry scholarships, contract research and development, and summer student employment for some 300 students per year. Most of this money will go to Canadian universities, particularly to the six forestry schools across the country—the University of British Columbia, the University of Alberta, Lakehead University, the University of Toronto, l'université de Laval, and the University of New Brunswick.

Another area of increased activity has been in the field of international trade. We have developed a reasonably successful program of overseas market development of British Columbia forest products under the agreement between the federal Government, the Province and the British Columbia Council of Forest Industries. This program is expected to be expanded to other Provinces, and negotiations are under way by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley).

I could recite other elements which have been triggered in supporting and giving momentum to an approach which is so badly needed. The upgrading of the Canadian Forestry Service to the assistant deputy minister level, together with the transfer of responsibility for forestry agreements to the Department of the Environment, have helped to increase the focus and importance attached to the forestry sector within the federal Government. We must now allow the time and the opportunity for forestry initiatives to be further advanced without another organizational disruption.

The figures I mentioned earlier, whether they are taken in block form over a period of years or whether they are taken singly year by year, amount to somewhere between $700 million and $800 million which is being or has been injected into the forestry industry. Also I mentioned before the fact that forestry ministers meet every year. They met as recently as September of this year.

As I explained yesterday in the House, the strategy we have put together includes the programs the federal Government would implement to meet the challenge and the needs in the forestry field. The ongoing consultative process at the present time takes place through the CCREM annual meeting, where ministers of forestry meet and discuss issues on an agenda of the kind to which I made reference a moment ago. We met in September to discuss forestry matters. In the same month, in Winnipeg, CCREM met and discussed forest fire controls and pesticides. The Canadian Forestry Advisory Committee is composed of provincial, industry and labour representatives. It is another forum for the consultative process. The Department of the Environment, including the Canadian Forestry Service, holds annual public meetings across the country for the discussion of environmental concerns which include forestry. A federal forest sector strategy committee, which co-ordinates all federal forestry activities, chaired by the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Canadian Forestry Service, is another place where the consultative process takes place on an ongoing basis.

As well, there are constant informal consultations between provincial colleagues and myself. Actually, the whole federal program is now based upon a continuing and evolving process of consultation. A good example this year was the Canadair CL-215 water bomber program which was the result of a federal-provincial task force that called for increased forest fire protection. The Special Recovery Capital Projects program provided an excellent opportunity to respond to this particular problem. There are formal committees for discussion as well as informal ongoing consultations; there is no question about that. They have resulted in the present federal actions which were developed in a truly co-operative manner.

Therefore, I would conclude that what the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap suggested is already happening. There is an ongoing process. I would conclude my remarks by underlining that the importance of the future of the forest industry and its importance as a resource in our country will depend upon the initiatives taken at the federal level, by a number of provincial Governments, and by all participants in the forestry sector. If there were not this kind of awareness of the problem, as already outlined by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, if there were not a co-ordinated effort between the employers and the unions, the provincial and federal Governments' even changes of a structural nature by creating additional ministries or redesigning the whole structure of the federal Government would not result in any additional trees being planted for the benefit of future generations.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister would like to respond to the facts put out by his own Department, upon which the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) touched in his speech. They indicated that only five cents on the dollar brought in by the federal Government, and in fact by provincial Governments as well, is put back into forestry. That is what we are trying to address in the debate. In this session of Parliament, the single largest industry in Canada has never been raised by the Government side. This is the second time the Opposition has raised it in the close to 600 days of this session of Parliament which has gone on for almost four years.

With five cents return on the dollar in 1979, and since $3 billion was brought in by the Government in 1982 dollars—and I think we can expect it was double that—does the Minister think the amount being spent by his Government on forestry and forestry-related projects is adequate?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I suppose that a similar argument could be made looking at other industries. Agriculture could probably claim a similar ratio. Maybe a similar ratio could be established by other sectors in our economy. Evidently each industry or sector at this time feels that it has to be more and better recognized by the public sector. The final result is a competitive claim on public funds. That is what this debate is about.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, let me give the Minister an example so that he can respond more directly. In Cape Breton, where the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has a seat, over $100 million a year is spent in the heavy water plants for the nuclear industry. There is no use for that heavy water in Canada. For three years it has been produced without any exports or any use in Canada. I, and I believe most Canadians, consider that to be a tragic waste of our tax dollars.

Within his own Ministry at this time, less than that is being spent on forestry. Canadians in areas of Canada such as British Columbia, who see their forest industry going down the pipe, want to know whether the Minister thinks that five cents on the dollar, when the Government is harvesting all those tax dollars from British Columbia, northern Ontario, the Maritimes and some areas of the Prairies, is adequate. Even comparing it to the nuclear industry which brings no direct revenue to Canada, does the Minister honestly think that is a good return to taxpayers and the resource industry?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would be inclined to conclude that people whose jobs depend on the plants referred to by the Hon. Member do not consider that expenditure a tragic waste of tax dollars. It keeps their jobs.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware of my grave concern for the environment. Yesterday I asked a question with regard to acid rain. A serious contributor to acid rain is nitrous oxide emissions from automobiles. We know that is very detrimental to our forests. The Minister is also aware that Canada is three times as lenient as the United States in this regard. The Minister hopes to sell a much stronger acid rain program in the United States.

I know the Minister will have to talk to his counterpart in Transport, but is he prepared to recommend to Cabinet that Canadian emissions must be brought in line in order that we will have a strong card when talking to our American colleagues. Has the Minister given consideration to that? Could this not be put in force for the 1985 models? A great many Canadian-built cars meet the American standard emissions because they are exported to the United States and sold there. This involves a cost of about $200 per vehicle, but that could be included in the selling price. It could be available for the 1985 cars rather than four or five years down the road.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair will allow the Minister to reply to the question, but I remind Hon. Members that questions and comments must be germane to the previous speaker's remarks and not introduce a totally new topic. However, I give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. It may be that the Chair did not listen as attentively as it should have to the Minister's remarks, but in my opinion this is a different subject.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would hate to be perceived as contradicting you. The Hon. Member has a point when he links the issue of nitrogen dioxide, NOx, with damage to forest growth. In that respect he could be understood. I thank him for his eloquent plea. I made good note of what he said. My answer is yes, I am proceeding in this direction. It is a long road. Limitations cannot be imposed in a very short time. The time frame will have to be more than two years. I hope the efforts I am making on this subject will come to fruition soon. I will make an announcement at the appropriate time.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, before I make my contribution to the debate, I want to ask the Minister a question. On several occasions over the last week in Question Period and yesterday in debate he was asked about the forest agreements with the Provinces and about the auction that is to take place this Thursday. Can the Minister confirm or deny that his two colleagues, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) from Manitoba and the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), will attempt in this auction to lop off the Manitoba agreement the sum of $50 million because the benefits of that money cannot be forecast? They are unpredictable. They are nebulous. Trees only mature in 60 years. If you make a direct grant to a pulp mill or saw mill, it creates jobs right away.

Can the Minister confirm or deny that is the type of competition he is facing in this auction and how is he responding to it? Is the Manitoba agreement going to be deprived of $50 million? When will that agreement be signed? What does the Minister have to say about it, particularly since he made such a strong commitment yesterday and on previous days that he will make his best efforts to ensure that these funds will not be depleted?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, as much as I would like to be forthcoming to my colleagues in this House, and I consider myself very deeply rooted on the floor of this House as a House of Commons man, I have to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that I am bound by an oath of office whereby I cannot divulge matters that are before Cabinet. While I fully understand his desire to know, I hope he will understand my inability to give him a straightforward answer.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, in speaking about and bringing before the House the meetings with CCREM, the Minister brought back memories. I would like to pose a question to the Minister. As far as I remember, the Ministers of Agriculture were not often represented at CCREM meetings. The forestry industry involves production, conservation, marketing and employment. It is a renewable industry similar to agriculture. Some of us wonder why it is not related to a much greater degree to the agriculture sector of the economy of Canada.

I remember a suggestion that forestry should be combined as a ministry with agriculture so that one might consider a ministry of agriculture and forestry. This was given consideration at the provincial level. I want to ask the Minister, in his responsibility for forestry, about his contacts and liaison with the Department of Agriculture. Are they constant and extensive in the area of joint research, marketing and the many other areas where the two industries have a common heritage and common objectives, because they are both renewable industries? They both deal with renewable resources as opposed to the non-renewable resources that we deal with in the nation.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is making an excellent point. Perhaps I should say that my contacts with agricultural representatives are not as frequent as perhaps they should be in light of the point raised by the Hon. Member, and I will keep that point in mind. I certainly have frequent exchanges and conversations with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) but the basic conversion of interest is a question which the Hon. Member has outlined very well and which I will keep in mind in my future work.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall follow up the question I posed to the Minister. My sources tell me that $50 million will be lopped off the agreement that he is about to sign with Manitoba. That $50 million is money that was earmarked for forest renewal in that Province. The Minister's answer was that he cannot reveal Cabinet confidence, and I appreciate that. However, I take it that his answer is in the affirmative and that that money is being lopped off the agreement.

The Minister from Manitoba and the Minister for Economic Development in the federal Cabinet have begun initiatives to reduce the amount that would have otherwise have been committed to forest renewal in the forestry agreement. I think that that is a tragedy, Sir, and I suppose that I commiserate and sympathize with the Minister because he may have his heart in the right place. However, he certainly does not sit in the right place around the Cabinet table and consequently does not get his message across to the Cabinet. It is perhaps for that reason that it is timely that we should for the third time this year debate the subject of Canada's forests. It is unprecedented, Sir, that today, for the first time this year, we will devote a full day to this important sector of our whole economy.

I welcome the initiatives taken by my hon. colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He has put before the House a motion that is both timely and pertinent. However, I cannot help but ask myself where Members of the NDP were in 1979. At that time we were criticized for not having a clearly thought out strategy. It took us a little longer than perhaps it should have taken to lay before the House our strategy, the Throne Speech and the budget. When we did so, Sir, there was one component of the budget and the Throne Speech about which there was no doubt at all and that was our policy on forestry. There was no question or doubt about the commitment that we had made at that time to begin the painful and tedious process of rebuilding the Canadian Forestry Service. I wonder where Hon. Members of the NDP were at that time.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, they chose to join the Liberal interventionists across the aisle and defeat a Government which had set out a policy which would have respected the history of the country and the potential for economic growth in this particular sector of the economy. They rejected that in favour of certain other objectives.

There was a motion on today's Order Paper that dealt with one of those other objectives. That motion dealt with unemployment. Hon. Members of the NDP like to think of themselves as the champions of the unemployed and particularly of the young unemployed. That question was on the Order Paper today and NDP Members have now chosen to deprive us of that important debate in favour of a debate on forestry. I will not argue with them, Sir. I would like to talk about forestry for a whole week, but I sometimes question where their priorities are and just what kind of political games they are playing.

Nevertheless, I appreciate the belated interest the NDP Members take in this subject and welcome their contribution to the debate. I have no argument with anything that has been said by Members of the NDP so far with respect to the importance of the industry and what should happen in terms of assuring that the industry makes as great a contribution to our economy and our social well-being and contentment in the future as it does presently and has in the past.

Members of the NDP feel that in order to achieve that objective it would be necessary to hold meetings with the provincial Ministers. Well, Sir, I must admit that these meetings would probably be very productive. Incidentally, the Minister is quite right: these meetings are now taking place. This is one area in which we have experienced quite an enlightened and effective form of co-operative federalism because such meetings have been held on an ongoing basis. The last such meeting was held on September 14. If my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, does not know that, it is probably because his interest in forestry came late. He can certainly be forgiven for that.

Forestry is not an area in which the federal Government would be intruding on provincial jurisdiction even though the resource does belong to the Provinces. Provincial Ministers come to the Government and beg it to play the traditional and very significant role it has played in this very important area of forestry. As you know, Sir, forestry not only represents the most important industry in the whole country but has attached to it as well whole range of very important social dimensions. A whole range of important environmental and ecological considerations must be taken into account when one talks about forestry.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the fresh water and clean air generated by our forests that we in the country enjoy and breathe are not things which respect artificial political boundaries. Therefore, there must be an over-all co-ordination by and involvement of a central agency in this important area. I must agree with my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, that it would perhaps be better if there were a federal Minister of forestry who could meet on an equal basis and with equal authority and jurisdiction with his provincial counterparts to talk about some of these important things which I have mentioned.

When we consider that matter, Sir, it may be helpful to go back and consider a little bit of the history of the Department of Forestry as it relates to our present circumstances. It was in 1899 that the House for the first time established a Department of Forestry. That Department was likely established because of the keen interest shown by Sir John A. Macdonald himself in this area. As you know, he expressed a concern for the forestry industry and his words were quoted extensively in the House yesterday. He was concerned in 1877 about the imminent danger that he saw of our forests being totally depleted and this most important of our industries being destroyed.

We have now discovered all kinds of innovative ways to push back the frontier, to build road and rail infrastructures in order to gain access to the far North and discover that there are trees there. We have learned to harvest trees everywhere in Canada. However, in the Ottawa Valley, which I suppose is the area which concerned John A. Macdonald, forestry is no longer a main preoccupation. Other industries have now taken hold in the area. In this particular city, the industry of Government is now the main preoccupation which benefits the economy of the region. However, we cannot build in all parts of Canada a House of Commons and put into place governmental structures to replace the prime resource industries.

We have built roads and gained access to trees wherever they stand in Canada and there is literally no place else to go. That is why all of a sudden there is the realization of an impending crisis in our forests. We can no longer build roads or railways, there is no place else to go and we are experiencing shortages of merchantable timber in every region of Canada. We have now discovered that in the last 50 or 100 years we should have done what other countries have done ever since they began harvesting their forests, that is, farm our forests instead of mining them. That means whenever you cut a tree, either for clearing or selective logging, you take great care to ensure that another tree or two are put in its place. It would not hurt to plant two in case one did not survive.

In 1949 Canadians were acclaimed throughout the world as leaders in the forest sciences. We had established research facilities and recognized, at least up until 1949, that our forests would in the foreseeable future always be our most important industry. That has been restated in this House over the last couple of days.

In 1960 we established a Ministry responsible for forests. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that was three years after the election of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. It was a Conservative Government which felt that forestry is very important and should therefore have a full Department of Government. The forest industry is of a very cyclical nature. We have our ups and downs. Indeed, the Department of Forestry had its ups and downs. The ups continued from 1960 to 1966 when it vastly improved federal-provincial relations. So for those who argue that a federal Ministry of Forestry would be an intrusion in provincial jurisdiction and take away from good relations with the Provinces, quite the opposite was the experience when we had a federal Minister of Forestry between 1960 and 1966. It resulted in the expansion of forest research facilities and a growth in staff to more than 2,000 persons. The top ranking official was a deputy minister. There was a growing awareness throughout the country at that time of the importance of our forestry sector, so 1966 was when we reached a peak in the structural profile of forestry.

Then under the Liberal administration forestry was merged first with rural development. The top official was reduced to an assistant deputy minister. In 1968 forestry was absorbed by Environment Canada. The top official then became a director general and staff reductions began. Forest economic institutes were closed and federal-provincial agreements were phased out. That is from 1968 to 1978, and that is where our problem started. I can show Hon. Members the results because they are here for everyone to see. My colleagues will elaborate on some of the consequences of what emerged as a deliberate policy of ignorance and neglect of this, our most important industrial sector.

In 1978, as you will recall, Sir, because you were with me here in this House, a federal Minister of the Environment who was to preside over the demise of the Canadian Forestry Service announced that the federal forest laboratories would be privatized. There were more staff cuts, which continued until the total manpower complement of the Canadian Forestry Service was reduced from 2,000 to 1,000 people. In 1979, that ever so brief period of enlightenment when we had another Progressive Conservative Government, we began the painful rebuilding of the Canadian Forestry Service and we started with the reappointment of an assistant deputy minister to serve the Minister of the Environment.

Let me say that I do not think forestry is well placed under the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia). There are entirely too many conflicting interests, responsibilities and jurisdictions in that Department. For instance, if we wanted to begin farming our forests we would have seriously to think about the effective and responsible use of insecticides and pesticides. Would you think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that we could take chemicals away from agriculture? Well, we cannot take chemicals away from forest farming. But if we want to restore our forests to their former health, we will have to make effective and responsible use of insecticides and pesticides, artificial fertilizers, and all those kinds of things.

Even though it is said that the Minister has some kind of educational background in forestry, his priorities are of course very much on the other side of his responsibility, on the environmental side. He has no time at all even to listen to any of the scientific community who urge him to be very careful in the way he deals with the Provinces and in the manner his Department assesses, regulates and controls the use of chemicals in our forests. So you can see that the Department of the Environment is not a good place for forestry.

The proposition has been advanced that maybe it should be combined with agriculture. Well, there are some very obvious mutual interests between forestry and agriculture and maybe that should be considered. I would commit to you, Mr. Speaker, that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decides to give Canadians a chance to choose a new Government, and when a Progressive Conservative Government gets back into power, we will immediately, as a matter of the highest priority, begin where we left off in the process of rebuilding the Canadian Forestry Service. Whether it will be a Ministry on the first day or not, I do not know. Certainly I hope the process will be accelerated and we can get back to the peak we reached in the 1960 to 1966 period where we had a full Minister.

I am becoming rather partial to the idea that a resource Ministry would be ideal because I do not necessarily think that mining is ideally placed with energy. There are a number of conflicting jurisdictions there as well. But the mining sector has a lot in common with the forest sector.

We talk about isolated communities in the north which depend entirely on one industry, be it mining or forestry. We talk about international trade, or about a clearly defined role for research and development which the federal Government has in both these areas. Therefore mining and forestry would be a compatible role for a federal Ministry. We might want to give consideration to all that, but the status quo is not acceptable, certainly not to me and my colleagues in my Party, and as it appears now to our friends from the NDP.

Sir, if I may call it one o'clock, would you permit me to finish my remarks after Question Period?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should perhaps at this time inform the Hon. Member that he has one minute of allotted time left.

It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE

LOCAL BAN ON TELEVISING CONFERENCE FINALS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, while everyone is talking about the program "The Day After", the day after, a program which many Canadians did see, I am more concerned, two days after, about the program that hundreds of thousands of Canadian football fans were not allowed to see. The volume of complaints from fans in the Hamilton-Toronto viewing area about the Eastern Conference final game blackout testifies to the insensitivity of the Canadian Football League and the CRTC in permitting these blackouts.

Consider these facts: Fact one: The Eastern Conference final was sold out at Toronto's Exhibition Stadium 72 hours in advance. Fact two: The CBC French network carried the game for those lucky enough to be on cable companies receiving Radio Canada. Fact three: The National Football League has established a policy which allows a blackout to be lifted if tickets are sold out 48 hours before game time.

I find it ironic that Canadian football fans are forced to grasp a signal out of the air, by driving to Buffalo, cramming into a beer parlour with an American satellite feed, or climbing onto their roofs to rotate their antennae, all because the CFL refuses to come out of the dark ages and enter the world of progress in 1983.

Those Eastern and Western Conference finals are as much national institutions as the Grey Cup game itself. The CRTC should instruct the Canadian Football League to lift those final game blackout provisions, beginning next year.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

IMPACT ON MINISTER'S POLITICAL FUTURE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, press reports tell us that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and his colleagues celebrated the demise of the Crow by imbiding Old Crow bourbon whiskey. It would appear, on the surface, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may have offered up the Minister of Transport as a sacrifice by abruptly shuffling him into the responsibility for the Crow. It may well be that his colleagues were really drinking Old Crow to his demise since he must, by now, have guessed his fate at the hands of western voters come next election.

A young Transport Minister came out of the west;
The Prime Minister really gave him the test.
"Rob the Old Crow", Himself said with glee,
So the Minister started climbing the tree.
Even with an axe your chances are slim,
You can't cut down a tree, when you're out on a limb!

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to point out to the House the unacceptable conduct of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney). I refer, Mr. Speaker, to a statement made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition in which he called the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) a monkey.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Chénier: What kind of language is this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The rules governing Standing Order 21 do not permit personal attacks on individual Members of the House.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM

FORESTRY PROJECT LAY-OFFS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms prohibits cruel and unusual treatment or punishment, but the Liberal Government is inflicting cruel and unusual treatment upon Canadians whose only crime is to be unemployed. Two weeks ago I met with young workers on a Canada Works forestry project. They had received training in basic forestry, operation of power saws, and safety procedures. When I saw them they were busy spacing trees for faster growth, which is very important and necessary work for our forests. However, some of these young workers have now been laid off, not because they were bad workers and not because there was no work to do, but because they had exhausted their unemployment insurance.

The project was not really job creation. It was only a topping up of UIC. At the very time when these workers lost their unemployment insurance, they also lost their jobs. At the very time when they had developed the necessary skills for their jobs, they were laid off. One of these workers said he would have to leave his rented apartment and move in with his in-laws. Another worker said he had nothing to look forward to except welfare.

What twisted and perverse methods the Government uses in its so-called job creation! At the very least provision should be made for these workers to continue until the end of the project's life. I call on the Government to take action which will create real jobs, at real rates of pay, so that working people can have a real future.

THE ECONOMY

DROP IN INFLATION RATE

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, inflation has dropped below the 5 per cent mark to 4.9 per cent. This represents our best anti-inflation performance in 11 years. The co-operation of the people of Canada, acting together in their own best interests and in the best interests of the economic health of our nation, has helped move Canada from economic stagnation to economic recovery in little more than a year. The six and five voluntary restraint program offered by the Liberal Government has been a key to this downward trend in inflation.

The inflation rate in October of 4.9 per cent is a demonstration that the 5 per cent target of the second year of the six and five program is a manageable one. The 4.9 per cent inflation rate in October is a confirmation that the six and five program is not about loss, as the opposition Parties would have Canadians believe, but offers new vigour and growth for our economy. That 4.9 per cent is another ray of sunshine burning through the clouds of doom and gloom which the Opposition uses to try to frighten Canadians into adopting the Opposition's economic policies, which would mean recovery for only a few well placed individuals.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CALL FOR HOLDING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government has brought the once buoyant united Canada to its knees. Today Canada is in a shambles. The National Energy Program and taxation have all but destroyed the oil and gas industry. The Gestapo Revenue Department is sucking the last drop of money out of small business, including farmers, causing hundreds of bankruptcies. Bill C-155 is paralyzing agriculture in the West, killing the potential of cattle and hog raisers and processors. Babies of the unemployed are crying for milk.

These socialist Liberals have killed the incentive to invest, have driven capital and jobs out of the country and, at the same time, through FIRA, have discouraged foreigners from investing in Canada. A million unemployed, thousands with no UIC benefits, are desperate, a situation leading to divorce and even suicide. So bad has this administration become that even a Liberal who is on the so-called Campagnolo Reform Committee told Maclean's magazine that the Liberal Party, and I quote:

—is tired, arrogant, self-serving, self-satisfied and irrelevant—

Cabinet Ministers are telling the unemployed to "starve" until the Speech from the Throne comes up, and even the Liberal President, Iona Campagnolo, is panicking. She set up a committee to "review, renew and reform" the Liberal Party. She should have told them to "embalm, encoffin and bury" the Party. I call on the Liberals to come out from behind the smokescreen, resign, and let a new leader, Mr. Brian Mulroney, and the PC Party take over the Government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

ELECTION OF TENTH LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, yesterday saw the election of the tenth Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. In extending the congratulations of this House to the successful candidates, we would do well to recognize that, without exception, every Member of the new Legislature supports the concept of responsible government for the people of the Territories and an end to the vestiges of colonial rule retained by federal authorities.

● (1410)

Let us therefore join the new and re-elected Members of the Assembly in adopting their position, which is that espoused by the Official Opposition, namely, that the people of the North should have control over their own land, their own lives, and their own destiny; that they should be entitled to the same democratic rights and privileges as southern Canadians; and that the heavy hand of the Department of Indian Affairs be removed from their affairs.

S.O. 21

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY ON NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House that there has been some criticism of the Liberal policy on the NEP. I think we should look at the fact that the Tories have modified their stand on most issues according to which part of the country they are speaking from, or to what they think Canadians want to hear. The energy issue is no exception.

Last week in Calgary the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) outlined what his Party would do if it formed the Government. He said it would dismantle the "confiscatory and punitive provisions of the NEP." He said it would change the federal Government's exploration incentive program to include foreign companies. The Leader of the Opposition was not thinking of the good of all Canada. He was thinking about the gaining of western votes. Meanwhile a Member of the Tory Party was telling a group in Ottawa exactly what they wanted to hear. He said the Conservatives supported the Canadianization of the oil industry.

The next day in Edmonton the Leader of the Opposition decided not to repeat the controversial statements which he had made the day before in Calgary. Now the Tories own energy critic cannot outline the Conservative energy policy.

We would like to know where that Party stands on the energy issue. The Leader of the Opposition and his Party's members are doing a great disservice to the people of Canada by creating confusion about a National Energy Program that is working. Canadians are informed, and they want answers.

MEDICAL CARE

QUESTIONNAIRE CIRCULATED BY MEMBER FOR PROVENCHER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives in this House have been noted for their silence about the concern that Canadians have about extra billing by physicians and user fees for medical and hospital care, and the need to preserve and strengthen the principles of medicare. This silence has only barely hidden the fact that the reason they do not call for action to stop these user charges is because they privately prefer the commercialization of health care for philosophical reasons.

The PC Party health critic, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), has once again proven the old adage that it is better to be suspected of something than to open your mouth and prove it. In a recent report to his constituents he has clearly given away his Party's preference for extra billing and user fees by asking leading questions on both these topics.

On user fees he wants to know whether "heavier users" of health care, perhaps those who visit a doctor more than three times a month, should pay more. This is even more mean spirited than that which the Alberta Government proposed. It is in favour of deterrent user fees that are charged only for the first few times. The Hon. Member for Provencher goes much further than this. He does not just want those who are mildly sick to pay for health care. He wants to put a special burden on those who are really sick and who may be asked by their doctors to come back often for close attention.

On extra billing the Tory health critic explores the idea of making extra billing acceptable by allowing it to be deducted for income tax purposes. This will be of no great comfort to the poor and others for whom regressive mechanisms like tax deductions are not beneficial—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Hamilton West.

ABORTION

OBJECTION TO USE OF UNION DUES IN SUPPORT OF LIBERALIZATION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a constituent of mine is employed by Canada Employment and Immigration and, as such, is a member of the Canadian Employment and Immigration Union, which is a component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. The PSAC is affiliated with the Ontario Federation of Labour and the Canadian Labour Congress. Both of these organizations have passed resolutions urging the liberalization and legalization of abortion in Canada.

Since my constituent's moral and religious beliefs are totally opposed to abortion he has asked his union to divert his dues to a charitable organization, but it has refused. A section of the program administration collective agreement allows only people who belong to a religion which forbids membership in unions to divert their dues. As he is Roman Catholic he does not qualify under this section.

Mr. Speaker, it is of concern to me that the Canada Employment and Immigration Union would not allow my constituent to divert his dues to a charitable organization. Therefore, I would like to recommend that the Canada Employment and Immigration Union either withdraw its support for the abortion resolutions passed by the Ontario Federation of Labour and the Canadian Labour Congress, or seek to ensure that in future contracts members whose religion is opposed to abortion are allowed to divert a portion of their union dues to charitable organizations.

METRIC CONVERSION

NOVA SCOTIA'S RETURN TO HIGHWAY MILES PER HOUR SIGNS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report to the House that today the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. John Buchanan, has made the decision to revert back to miles per hour on all highway signs in the Province of Nova Scotia.

I would also like to report to this House that the federal Government, after forcing, by Order in Council, the retail grocers of this nation to go to kilograms, has decided to keep the federal stockyards of Canada, from Montreal right through to Prince Rupert, using imperial measurement on every pound of red meat we import and export from this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: A word of congratulations should also go on the record to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. After forcing all of the gasoline dealers across this country to go to litres the Government has decided to continue to sell at its own Canada Post at the main post office branch in downtown Toronto, all gasoline by the gallon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immmigration. It has to do with unemployment. Incidentally, the House would be debating this subject today if it were not for the fact that it does not rank in the order of priorities of the NDP.

The Economic Council of Canada today, in an appearance before the Standing Committee on Labour and Manpower, forecast that unemployment would remain at around 11 per cent well into 1988, and indeed would increase in actual numbers. Given the fact that we have had a peek at the "cafeteria of job creation programs", and it is more like Mother Hubbard's cupboard, can the Minister give the House an assurance that whatever programs are introduced in the Speech from the Throne to create new jobs, they will be operable during the peak unemployment months of the winter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, rather than look at forecasts put out by one organization I would have hoped that my hon. friend would have looked at the statistics that have been released this morning by Statistics Canada. These statistics show that, for the first time since 1972, inflation was down to 4.9 per cent last month. This is the first time we have inflation below 5 per cent in over 11 years.

As far as employment and unemployment are concerned, my hon. friend knows that Canada has been creating jobs faster than any other industrialized country this year. This record is one that we maintained during the seventies. During that decade Canada was creating jobs faster than any other industrial country. That is the record and the performance that we, as a Government, want to pursue. We want to create jobs faster than anybody else and bring unemployment down as fast as we can. As to the forecasting question, I disagree with it.

CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES FIGURES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to the House why Canada is still approximately one-quarter of a million jobs behind, since the commencement of the recession, as compared with the U.S. which not only has picked up the 1.5 million jobs lost, but has in fact created a million new jobs in the economy. How does the Minister explain that, and Canada's poor performance?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the number of young people coming into the work force in Canada is proportionately larger than in the United States and the growth in the participation rate has been faster and larger than in the United States. Although we are creating jobs faster than anybody else we cannot bring unemployment down as fast as we would like because of the large increases in our manpower.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—IMPACT OF CAREER ACCESS PROGRAM

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the only program now in place which addresses jobs for young people is the Career Access Program which called for $90 million to create 31,000 jobs. That Program did not become operative until the end of September. We have had about a month or two of experience with that Program. Can the Minister tell the House how many jobs have been created under this Program, and can he give the House an assurance that whatever new programs are to be announced in the Speech from the Throne they will in fact become operative immediately so that their impact can be felt during the period of peak unemployment?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to one particular program. He does not refer, for instance, to the Summer Canada Program that was in effect last year and also created thousands of jobs for young students. Rather than referring to a single program, I would point out there have been several programs addressed to youth which the federal Government has financed.

I would also like to remind him that about 40 per cent of the jobs created under the general job-creation programs of the Government of Canada have gone to young people. Thus, all the programs we have are addressed to Canadians at large, and young people are benefiting from them.

In addition, we have a number of programs addressed specifically to young people and, as my hon. colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has said, he is reviewing those progams in order to try to ensure the young people of Canada will get the maximum impact and the maximum beneficial results from our money.

Mr. McGrath: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has had two. A brief supplementary.

SIZE OF CONSTITUENCY FUNDING

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Incidentally, the Minister's last statement will come as news to the 550,000 young people who are still unemployed.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration reduced the constituency allocations under Canada Works by one half, by $100,000. At the same time he expanded the Program to include the private sector. The consequence of that is that there are millions of dollars worth of applications now coming to Members of Parliament for their signature. What advice does he have for Members of Parliament who now have to explain to the private sector that there are, in fact, no funds to fund their programs?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have to correct a slight inexactitude in the Hon. Member's statement. It is not that the funding has been reduced by half to $100,000, it is that the minimum funding is down to $100,000. Above and beyond that there is an allocation which is basically rooted in the labour surplus rate which exists in each constituency, so that there are many, many constituencies which receive far more than $100,000, indeed up to $3 million, which is the upper limit for a constituency. Therefore, whether there is a reduction in comparison with last year will depend on whether a constituency is one in which there is a high labour surplus rate or not.

I will take the Hon. Member's concluding remarks in relation to the funding for the Program as a representation that more funds be provided, and I will give serious consideration to that representation.

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS FOR JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I am sure the Minister has read, as I have, the leaked outline Speech from the Throne which comprises a so-called "cafeteria" of job-creation gimmicks. Will the Minister commit to the House that this cafeteria of so-called job-creation programs is not simply rearranging or renaming programs, or rechanneling the funds, simply to give the impression of activity purely for political reasons, and to raise the expectations of those who are out of jobs right now?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would make two replies to that question. First, I believe the programs which we have presented now, and perhaps the new programs that we will be presenting, are programs of great importance and substance and not simply rearrangements or cosmetics, in the Hon. Member's words. I think he should also recognize that there are very substantial funds already being spent.

It is not simply a question of doing things that are new. Something over $350 million is being spent each year on training. Close to one-half a billion dollars is being spent on job creation, and $140 million on employment counselling and placement services. There are well over two million young people in this country who, over the past year, have used services provided by the Employment and Immigration Commission.

Mr. Wilson: It sounds like the Government is planning again to rearrange the deck chairs on the Titanic.

REQUEST FOR NEW POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, surely the Government must realize that this last recession was a warning. It was a very serious recession, but not nearly so severe as the next recession will be if fundamental policy changes are not introduced in the next Speech from the Throne.

With current unemployment as it is, how can the Government think only of tinkering with job-creation programs such as a conservation corps, cleaning of trails in the woods, and wage subsidies, when it should be proposing far more extensive policies to address the problems of the technological revolution, the new competitive position of countries like Brazil and Korea, and the very serious problem of the complexity of the Canadian tax system?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are not rearranging programs. We have undertaken intensive efforts to find new approaches by, yes, using existing money more effectively, and finding new approaches in support of employment, particularly on the part of young people in this society.

The Hon. Member criticizes that approach. I suggest to him that it is far more effective than that which was followed by the Government of which he was a member, which suggested closing down Canada Works and Summer Canada.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON WORLD-WIDE PROLIFERATION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will know that there are at least two great dangers facing us from the nuclear arms race. One is the spread of nuclear weapons around the globe, and the other is technical advances in these weapons which make limitation and verification virtually impossible.

In light of the Prime Minister's efforts to promote non-proliferation, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if the Government is now fully committed to efforts to end both horizontal and vertical proliferation of nuclear weapons? What new steps is Canada prepared to take to end such proliferation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be convinced that the Prime Minister is presently making a major effort to bring about the very objective which she is seeking in her question today. As I stated in my reply yesterday to a similar question, there does not seem to be a shortage of good arms control proposals. There seems to be a shortage of an ability of willingness to come to an agreement.

It has been the view of this Government that the principal reason for that stalemate, or situation, is the worsened East-West relations. If we can improve the state of that relationship then there may be a possibility for countries to look at arms proposals in a different light.

I do not, for a moment, depreciate the importance of specific proposals, but I do not think that is the real deficiency presently in the international climate. There are lots of good proposals around but, strangely enough, despite their merit, they are not being implemented. We have to ask ourselves why is that.

REQUEST FOR HALT TO CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister himself has said that he is pursuing efforts to create a greater degree of non-proliferation, I am assuming both horizontal and vertical, will the Deputy Prime Minister not now, on behalf of the Government, consider very seriously ending Canada's participation in the production and testing of the Cruise missile, since the Cruise missile itself will lead to both vertical and possibly horizontal proliferation? If he will not do so, will he then at least allow us to have a free vote on the subject?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the question of the Cruise missile has been debated very extensively, not only in the House but in the country. I, and other representatives of the Government, have given the explanations for that policy. Happily, it is supported by most Members of the House of Commons. In this case the NDP finds itself in the minority because it does not share what I consider to be the larger consensus in the House in support of the Government's policy.

Miss Jewett: That was a vote of confidence, and the Deputy Prime Minister knows it. We believe that what is lacking is the legitimacy of the Government's position because it does not have House of Commons support.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE AND FREE VOTE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I repeat and add to my question. In the Speech from the Throne that will be coming before us soon, will the Deputy Prime Minister consider bringing forward a commitment at least to try, if he wishes, to give legitimacy to what the Liberals, and apparently many Tories, want, by allowing a full debate in the House, followed by a genuinely free vote?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is somehow attempting to cast aspersions on the votes which Members of Parliament cast in the House in the course of their duties. I do not cast any aspersions on these votes. I think they stem from the convictions of Members, and I do not share the Hon. Member's cynical outlook. I think she wants more to liberate herself from the situation rather than to liberate Members of Parliament from party policy and party principles.

EFFECT OF UNEMPLOYMENT ON FAMILY LIFE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns a survey that was released on Sunday by the Family Service Association of America. It shows that unemployment has become the greatest threat to family stability in Canada and the United States. It points out that agencies surveyed say that unemployment and the related financial stress have aggravated wife battering, child abuse, problems with alcohol, drugs, depression, and loneliness. Is the Minister aware of this report? Is the Minister also aware that every day he postpones job-creation programs he is adding to the suffering of families that are already in desperate straits?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no, I had not been aware of that report. I thank the Hon. Member for drawing it to my attention. I do share the kind of concern which she has expressed and which the report, I gather, indicates of the social and traumatic effects that high levels of unemployment have. I have myself spoken out often on that subject. It would be wrong for her to suggest, as I think her question implied, that we are delaying the implementation of employment programs. That is not the case. We are spending something well over $1 billion this year on job-creation programs. We are not holding back. I do hope, and I suspect in the context of the Speech from the Throne, that we will be able to indicate to the House some suggestions and proposals about how we may do an even more effective job in spending government funds for these purposes.

Mr. McDermid: It had better be good.

Mr. Roberts: We are already assaying to accomplish and achieving considerably successful results.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my concern is with the social and human costs of unemployment. The Government is not taking them seriously, and the New Democratic Party would not even agree to debate them today.

SOCIAL AND HUMAN COSTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to address my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister, if I could have his attention.

I have spoken about this report that has just been published and the correlation between unemployment and the desperate costs of human suffering. Is there any effort under way by the Government which the Minister represents, any real effort, to calculate the social and human costs of unemployment? Is that kind of study or correlation being carried out by the Department of Health and Welfare or by the Ministry of State responsible for Social Development?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. I believe we all understand that unemployment does create hardship, economic hardship, social hardship, that can be seen by any one of us in our work in our constituencies. I do not believe it is necessary to have studies in order to demonstrate that fact. It is obvious.

Miss MacDonald: Just ignore it.

Mr. MacEachen: That is why the Minister, in his answer, has indicated that at the present time this Government, because of the hardship caused by unemployment, is devoting such substantial sums to the relief of the unemployed and to alleviating the problems of unemployment. I appreciate her precise interest in knowing exact correlations. I will inquire whether any specific studies of that point are being made. But on the larger point I acknowledge, and we all do, the impact of unemployment on the social condition.

Miss MacDonald: It has got very much worse in the past few years.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALARIES OF EXECUTIVES—DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week the Government tabled a report which outlines the salary ranges for Governor in Council appointees. Will the Minister explain to the House why Americans can find out the exact salaries paid to heads of Crown agencies which do business in the United States, and Canadians, who pay those salaries, cannot?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, last week, when I tabled a very detailed report on salary ranges of employees appointed by order in council, I was merely observing the provisions of an Act of Parliament, and in the circumstances, I fail to see why my hon. friend is upset that the Government has acted within the period provided under Section 13(1) of Bill C-124, the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. I wonder why he is so shocked about the fact that we have observed to the letter the provisions of that particular section of the Act.

[English]

NUMBER OF EXECUTIVES IN CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Minister's detailed knowledge of that report, I would like to make a suggestion to him. The report indicates that, for positions outside the Treasury Board guidelines, the salary range is from $63,000 to $228,000. There are 16 agencies reporting 39 positions with employees in that salary range. Can the Minister explain to the House and to the Canadian people why 18 of those positions, almost half of them outside the guidelines, are Canada Post employees? Why does Canada Post need so many highly paid executives who are outside of Treasury Board guidelines?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, once again, when we provided details on salaries of people appointed by order in council, we had to observe the provisions of the Act that was passed by Parliament not long ago. As I indicated earlier, the Act is very specific. It prescribes that we are to table a report containing the names and ranges of compensation of the persons concerned. Last week, for positions for which there is no salary range, we gave the minimum and maximum rate of pay for employees appointed by order in council, for whom there is no specific salary range. We therefore had the option of not publishing those figures because there was no salary range, as required under Section 13(1) of the Act, but in order to respect the intent of this particular Act and the Access to Information Act, we decided to give the maximum and minimum figures I just mentioned, and I think my hon. colleague has no grounds for complaints. The Government, in fact, bent over backwards in tabling such a detailed report, and if my colleague would take the trouble to read the report from beginning to end, he would realize that it contains far more information than the Government was obliged to provide under the provisions of the Act concerned.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REJECTION OF SASKATCHEWAN CABLE COMPANIES' APPLICATION

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications.

An Hon. Member: Turn on the mike.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the operator, having come out of that discipline, in his difficulty finding the right switch.

According to an article in The Globe and Mail recently, it was indicated that the rejection by the CRTC of an application by Saskatchewan cable companies to receive American network signals from Canadian Satellite Communications Inc. would have a serious detrimental effect on that company. Would the Minister please comment on the impact of this decision on CanCom, and on the equalization of broadcasting services in general?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation put on the CRTC decision by The Globe and Mail is indeed an erroneous one. I think it is important that it be restated quite clearly that the Government's thrust for extension and equalization of viewing opportunities across the country remains a high priority for the Government and that the Government sees CanCom as one of the major vehicles to help attain this objective.

I would also like to add that the rejection of the application by the CRTC was based on deficiencies in the application. My understanding is that the Saskatchewan cable operators will be applying anew for this service.

INCOME TAX ACT

NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES BY HIGH INCOME PEOPLE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, along with his Government colleagues, has been asking Canadians to make sacrifices over the last two or three years, in digging us out of the recession. He has also imposed additional taxes upon most Canadians. However, at the same time, Revenue Canada tells us in the last few days that this year there were more winners of the golden loophole award for taxation than ever before; 239 Canadians earning over a quarter of a million dollars per year did not pay a single cent in income tax in 1981. Will the Minister explain to the people of Canada, as he is calling for equality and a fair level of sacrifice by all Canadians, why his Government allows this to occur with our taxation system?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I refer my hon. friend to the budget which I announced last April 19. In that budget, if he remembers, he will have noticed that we geared the benefits of tax reductions in favour of low income people. For instance, workers will be able to benefit from a significant increase in terms of the tool allowance going from 3 per cent to 20 per cent. That will mean that several hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers will be benefiting from this kind of advantage. We did the same thing with the extension of the Child Tax Credit and with the provision for child care expenses. I could go on enumerating a number of benefits which have been geared to low income people.

As far as the specific point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, he knows that, depending upon what happens in a particular year, where particular individuals have suffered for instance large losses either on the equity market or in other ways such as in their business operations, they are entitled to claim those losses against their income. In a particular year we may have an individual with high income not paying taxes, but this individual will be called upon to pay taxes as time goes on and as the losses he can claim disappear.

Mr. Riis: Of course those who lose their homes do not get similar types of tax breaks.

REQUEST FOR ABOLITION OF CANADIAN OWNERSHIP SPECIAL CHARGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, considering that the Minister is asking Canadians to support a consumer-led recovery, would he consider in the months ahead removing the Canadian Ownership Special Charge and leaving the federal tax reduction as it is, to allow Canadians to retain $7.4 billion in their pockets to participate in the recovery program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I explained my position on this matter in my last budget. I may remind the Hon. Member that funds thus collected will be used to finance energy self-sufficiency in Canada and Canadianization of the oil industry, an objective I am sure the Hon. Member strongly supports. This tax will therefore be used to expand Canadianization of the oil industry and also to ensure Canada's energy self-sufficiency.

PUBLIC WORKS

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT CONSTRUCTING OFFICE BUILDING IN HULL, P.Q.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Yesterday, like so many other people, I noticed the Government promised to build a fifty million-dollar office building in Hull in order to relocate a number of public servants. Since the Government already has more than 47,000 square meters of office space in the City of Hull, I wish the Minister would give the real reason why his Department or the Government is pursuing this plan, although the federal Government already has enough office space.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that in a Department like mine, space requirements cannot be met instantaneously. We have to make projections and that is what we have done. The Hon. Member may be interested to know that Bell Canada now wants the space where the Department of Finance and Treasury Board are located and will continue to be, but only for a few months, for its own employees. This means we must look elsewhere. An other example is that of the temporary military facilities at the base in Rockcliffe, which will have to be moved elsewhere in the National Capital Region. In any case, we have made projections, which I find eminently reasonable, that indicate there will be a space requirement, and we want to maintain, more or less, the one to three ratio that was accepted several years ago, and that is why we want to build another building on the Hull side.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT COSTS COMPARED WITH PRIVATE SECTOR COSTS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Since the people concerned, those who invest in construction of office buildings, are very worried about competition from the Government, can the Minister give the House the assurance that the rates the Government will be paying will not be more than what the private sector is offering to pay at this time? The Minister knows perfectly well that in Montreal, with Campeau or in Hull, with Teron, good friends of the Government . . . Could the Minister give the House the assurance that the Government will be getting a price that will at least be similar to, if not less than, the going rates in the private sector?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would rather not endorse the Hon. Member's mathematics, but I can inform him that tenders were submitted in the summer of 1982, that they were analyzed, and that those selected were in line with the usual tenders and costs for this kind of building.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Has the Minister taken a decision on the implementation of any of the recommendations of the Federal-Provincial Task Force on Compensation for Victims of Crime? Will he be proposing statutory changes to deal more justly and humanely with victims of crime in criminal procedures before our courts?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the brief answer is yes, but may I be permitted to add that this report on victims of crime, the so-called Sinclair report, is a very well written one which I hope will be widely studied by Hon. Members of the House and by the public. There are many kinds of steps we must take to ensure that our law properly reflects the concerns of victims and concern for other interests. I am pleased to assure the Hon. Member and the House that the Government will be moving in this direction legislatively, and that we will also be continuing discussions with the Provinces to try to bring about fuller concern for the plight of victims in our society.

Mr. Howie: I thank the Minister for his answer.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there are 79 recommendations. Will he tell the House whether the nature of his amendments or changes will be extensive in terms of number or substance?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of those 79 recommendations, my recollection is that only something like ten are directed to the federal Government. We will be moving on most of those recommendations, and some of the others require some discussion with the Provinces. Most of the recommendations, as I recall, are directed primarily to the Provinces.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISIONS DEALING WITH HATE LITERATURE

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Justice. I am wondering whether he can confirm news reports this morning indicating that Cabinet has approved amendments to the Criminal Code which will make it possible to take greater or more effective action against the dissemination of hate literature. At the same time, could the Minister indicate whether those changes, if indeed they have been approved, will remove the necessity of getting the permission of a provincial Attorney General to lay a charge of hate mongering?

Mr. Nielsen: Privileged information.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would say to my hon. friend, who has for long been concerned about this matter, and in his previous role was very directly involved in helping to bring about racial peace in our society, that I will be making a statement on the subject this afternoon in committee. I am not at liberty at this point, before the Speech from the Throne, to release details of what the Government will do.

Mr. Nielsen: Leak. Leak.

Mr. MacGuigan: In particular, in this case we want to await the recommendations of the committee before which I will be appearing, to know just how to move. But I would indicate that there is certainly a disposition on the part of the Government to ensure that the law on hate propaganda is effective.

IMPACT OF B.C. HYDRO POWER EXPORTS ON JOBS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is with regard to this week's report of the B.C. Association of Professional Foresters. I am sure the Minister is aware its conclusions are that 20,000 permanent forestry jobs are threatened or are likely to be lost as a result of hydroelectric projects in British Columbia, and that an area considerably larger than Prince Edward Island has been or is about to be flooded by the B.C. Government. Since the B.C. Government has indicated an intention to sell firm contract power to California at a cut rate, does the Minister not think it is in the nation's interest to have studies of the real cost in lost jobs and losses to the environment before that occurs?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a question of great significance touching many other areas of responsibilities than mine. I will be happy to take the point which the Hon. Member has raised and discuss it with other colleagues, including the Minister of the Environment, who is responsible for forestry and see if there is some appropriate response that either he or I should make.

ENVIRONMENT MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment, who seems to be the one responsible. Since it is clear, certainly to British Columbians, that B.C. Hydro is a corporate monster quite out of touch with reality, last year being the second largest borrower in the world bond market, will the Minister tell this House and British Columbians whether he supports and endorses B.C. Hydro's proposal to export cut-rate electricity to the United States?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this matter when it is brought to my attention in its full complexity and detail.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the interest of recognizing as many Members are possible, Members will now be recognized for single questions.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CIVIL DEFENCE INFORMATION PROGRAM URGED

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. According to projections of the 1979 U.S. Congressional Committee on the effects of nuclear war, a nuclear attack only on the United States would result in the death of over two million Canadians from fallout alone. For the 23 million Canadians remaining, the federal Government commits a crime against its own people by withholding currently printed and stored information on survival. In view of the reality of modern technology that has reduced warning time to minutes rather than 30 days, and that preparations for civil defence 30 days prior to any proposed hostility would be destabilizing and inadequate, why does the Government of Canada not launch a major civil defence information program now?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the consequences of a nuclear war are disastrous and that if a direct attack were launched on North America, the chances that Canadians would escape such an attack would be minimal.

However, I can inform the Hon. Member that our emergency measures planning includes provisions that we are trying to improve and which will help warn people who would be far from the centres of attack. We are also seeking to upgrade communications systems for informing the population through available electronic facilities. We have a number of nuclear shelters and we are trying to build more. We are working closely with municipalities and provinces, through our civil defence organizations, in order to inform and increase the awareness of Canadians. I can assure the Hon. Member that everything is being done to make as much information available as possible, even if a nuclear attack were to have the disastrous consequences he mentioned. In fact, I think the best way to prevent this is by supporting and encouraging those who are trying to get the two world powers together, in an attempt to bring about nuclear disarmament.

AIRPORTS

IMMIGRATION ADMISSION PROCEDURES—DELAYS CAUSED FOR RETURNING RESIDENTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the Minister of Transport met with his colleagues, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, regarding the disastrous results for people entering or re-entering our country at our major international airports, such as the line-ups which result when going through immigration when there may be a problem with a certain person coming into the country. Will the Minister, in conjunction with his colleagues, implement the recommendation that there be separate lines for returning Canadians, those from the United States, and others entering our country?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the proposals put forward in the report on illegal immigration have been referred to different Departments to examine their feasibility, and certain pilot projects are being examined at the present time. I will undertake to consult, as the Hon. Member suggests, with the other two members of Cabinet to determine if and when they may be implemented.

PETRO-CANADA

PROPOSAL TO BUILD OIL-SANDS PLANT AT FORT McMURRAY, ALTA.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Wilbert Hopper, the Chairman of Petro-Canada, has stated that Petro-Canada is seriously considering and investigating the prospects of building an oil-sands plant in Fort McMurray. He also stated they are not prepared to go ahead or even consider building a plant unless the Government is prepared to make certain tax and royalty concessions. What is the Minister doing about this?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, such discussions are under the responsibility of the Minister of Energy. As the Hon. Member has indicated, this would involve the co-operation of both the Government of Alberta and the Government of Canada. We have shown in the past that the two Governments can co-operate in this regard. With respect to a specific proposal that the industry may put forward, the actual negotiation of the specific agreement would be under the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

APPOINTMENT OF LOTTERY CHAIRMAN

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. If she would return to her seat, maybe we could give her a little publicity. Mr. James Gow was appointed gambling czar and head of the federal sports lottery. Will the Minister advise the House what qualification he has for this $85,000 a year job, besides being a Liberal flack?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Gow, who has just been appointed by the Prime Minister as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Sports Pool Corporation, is a very good choice. He is a very competent person. He has worked with my Department as Chairman of the Sport Advisory Council, and as such, he is respected by the sports community and all those who work in this field.

AIRPORTS

USE OF NEW TERMINAL AT PRINCE ALBERT AIRPORT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On November 4 the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board turned the sod to start construction on the long-awaited terminal building at the Prince Albert airport. Unfortunately, on November 10 East-West airline service to the city ceased when the temporary licence held by the Aero Trades Airline expired. Can the Minister inform the House what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the new terminal does not turn out to be a white elephant?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, these are two very separate issues. I hope the Hon. Member will recognize the important investment we are making in creating jobs in this area with the new terminal for that region. As to the question of which airline will be able to fly in and out, any airline that meets the licensing requirements of the CTC will, of course, be approved. That really is the question. If there is an appeal to be heard on that, I am sure we would be prepared to give it full consideration. At the present time it is a matter that will be judged by the CTC.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SHELTER ALLOWANCES FOR NEEDY FAMILIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for housing. As the Minister will know, in its most recent report the Economic Council of Canada recommended that the Government bring in a system of shelter allowances for needy families looking for assisted housing. That recommendation was repeated this morning in the Labour Committee. Will the Minister confirm that the Government will bring in that program in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that. We are releasing, in fact I think this very week, the evaluation of the social housing program which had been ordered by my predecessor and which is now ready for publication. From that should come changes which could examine alternative options like shelter allowance, but I am not necessarily committed to that form.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA

AVAILABILITY OF WEATHER REPORTS FOR PRIVATE PILOTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, but I would hope that his colleague and seatmate, the Minister of the Environment, would listen as well because I am not entirely certain of the division of responsibility for the sourcing and delivery of aviation weather reports. On behalf of private pilots everywhere I would like to complain about the lack of availability of weather reports. There is no question that that information is available, but in fact it is not easily accessed by private pilots, particularly those in major centres.

Before a plane takes off, we of course ask the pilot to check the weather reports. I wonder if either Minister could first tell me who is responsible for the delivery of this information and, second, how that Minister would go about making it more easily available to private pilots so that they do not have to wait for that information for an hour to an hour and a half.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct in saying that pilots do call upon the services offered by Environment Canada's meteorological services and depend very much on them. Our services have been strained because of budget cuts. If the Official Opposition will support increased budget allocations, we will be very glad to expand and/or enhance those services at any time.

PETITION

MR. FRETZ—RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) on Monday, November 21, 1983 does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * * * *

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which relates to what I feel is a very important historical event for all Members of the House. I am sure all Members will agree, when they recall the passing 20 years ago of the thirty-fifth—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. He might well have availed himself of the opportunity of making a statement under Standing Order 21 in order to discuss a historical event. However, his point is not a point of order.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a legitimate point of order, the Chair will entertain it. However, a reference to a historical event is not a point of order but should be the subject of a statement under Standing Order 21.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, may I then seek the unanimous consent of the House to make my intervention?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions. At this point, shall we have the usual intervention made by the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have been giving this matter a great deal of thought, and I hope that perhaps in the not too distant future we might arrange a meeting among the House Leaders to deal not only with this question but with others as well. However, in light of my normal attitude of co-operation,

I am prepared to allow the waiving of the reading of all of the motions for today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair expresses its appreciation to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have certainly been suggesting this for the last two weeks and it has been persistently refused by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I would assume that his reason for agreeing to it today is self-motivated by reason of the fact that it is an NDP motion that is being debated.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if I were to take the words of the Hon. Member at face value and if he meant what he said, then I would simply have to revert to my normal practice. My agreement has nothing to do with self-motivation but I do believe it may well be that we could work out a more civil way of dealing not only with this particular order but with other orders that require the Speaker to read into the record each day the names of Hon. Members who are not yet prepared to proceed with matters standing on the Notice Paper.

Motions stand.

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

[English]

Mr. Yurko: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I am threatening to use a red flag in order to be recognized. I wanted to make a comment with respect to the reading of the motions on the Order Paper and simply—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We have proceeded to a different stage of the agenda. We would have to revert to the motions stage by unanimous consent. Perhaps the Hon. Member could hold his comments until tomorrow when I am sure he will have ample opportunity to make them.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I do want to indicate that I am not recognized when I should be recognized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FORESTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

That the Government respond to the emergency in the forestry sector by:

1. creating a new Forestry Ministry with the mandate to advance the Canadian forestry industry; and

2. convening a conference at the earliest opportunity of responsible Federal and Provincial Ministers to address the challenges presently facing the forestry sector.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has approximately one minute left to finish his speech.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will use the final moments allotted to me to sum up what I said to the House before the lunch break. The Minister, in his speech, confirmed and confessed to the tendencies of the Government and the Provinces to delay what he calls major efforts to save our forests and delay the decisions that must be made in order to postpone or forgo the impending crisis in our forest industry.

I had also pointed out to the House that the present Minister is doing the same thing that the predecessor of a former Liberal Government had done, which was to continue to preside over the demise of the Canadian Forestry Service. The appointment of the Assistant Deputy Minister in 1979 was an initiative taken during the short term of the Conservative Government. We now see that the Assistant Deputy Minister has once again resigned his post in frustration because there is no encouragement for him or for anyone to work in pursuit of the objectives that would pay dividends to all Canadians in the future through the Canadian Forestry Service.

The Government is simply pursuing the wrong priorities and delaying the pain associated with the demise of our forest industry that will be felt by future generations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I am sure he is aware of a speech given a little over a year ago by Les Reed of the Canadian Forestry Service. At that time he was bemoaning the actions that were taken to that point by the then Minister. He said the following:

Figures presented by my Minister, the Honourable John Roberts, at a recent meeting of the CIF Central Ontario Section indicate that the United States has about one graduate forester per 8,000 ha of forest land; the world on average has one per 12,000 ha; and Canada has one per 80,000 ha.

● (1510)

In light of the Hon. Member's last comment, would he indicate what kind of increase in staff and budget he would like to see in the Canadian Forestry Service, keeping in mind that he said in British Columbia a week ago that he would like to see at least 60,000 public servants fired as soon as a Tory Government took office?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer that question. Incidentally, the statistics the Hon. Member quoted are somewhat wrong. A combination of Sweden, Norway and the U.S. would have one forester for every 15,000 hectares, whereas we have one for every 450,000 hectares.

What my friend should anticipate, if it is the decision of Canadians to ask Conservatives to manage the economy, is that there would be an entirely new set of priorities. We look at the forestry, mining, fisheries and agricultural sectors as the producing sectors of the economy. We would not delay decisions so that we can avoid depriving future generations of the benefits of our natural resource strength. There will be a rearrangement of priorities.

In 1960, when the Progressive Conservative Government established a full Department of Forestry, and in the period up to 1966, there were 2,000 people engaged in the Canadian Forestry Service in pursuit of very legitimate federal objectives, such as research and development, forest renewal and protection. As the Hon. Member knows, there are today 1,000 people in the Canadian Forestry Service. One American company, Weyerhauser of the U.S., does more in forest products and genetic research activities than the entire Canadian Forestry Service. We would turn that around. There would have to be a strengthening, as we demonstrated in 1960 and 1979, of the Canadian Forestry Service. There would be an increase in morale and therefore an increase in the productivity of the Department, which is simply lacking at this point.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to get answers from my colleague from northern B.C. Perhaps he could be a little more specific as to what the Tory policy is on how big the increase would be in the Canadian Forestry Service. Would it be doubled, tripled, quadrupled, or quintupled? Can he say whether or not he thinks five cents on the dollar is adequate, which is what occurred under both the Liberal and Tory administrations, and at what level there would be a return of tax dollars to R and D and to the forest sector directly?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell my hon. friend without equivocation that a return to the source of 5 per cent of revenue generated for the federal Government is simply not enough. If the Hon. Member would like me to tell him what the Progressive Conservative policies would be, I have a simple message for him. In the period leading up to the election it will be the policies of those people opposite and these people on my left who supported them in 1979 when they defeated the Progressive Conservative Government which will be on trial. So if the Hon. Member wants to find out what Progressive Conservative policies will be, the quickest way is to convince their bedmates opposite to bring on the next election.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) when he commented on federal-provincial jurisdiction and the fact that so much forest land in Canada is held by the public sector. Does he agree with his colleague from the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who yesterday indicated he felt the resources of Canada did not belong to the people of Canada but only to those who found those resources? Does he agree with his colleague when it comes to forestry?

An Hon. Member: Misrepresentation.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of my colleague from Western Arctic in the debate yesterday. He said that the people who faced the elements, who pushed back the frontier and used their industry and resources to identify, develop and bring to market the resources in the North ought to have some incentive and reward for their efforts. I dit not hear my colleague from Western Arctic say that Canada should give all resources to individuals regardless of their efforts. Usually, when we have individual enterprise and initiative, that is when Canada is most productive. He was really saying that socialism does not work, except in heaven where you do not need it, and in hell where they already have it.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I thought he gave us a very good historical background of developments in forestry. I was especially pleased to hear the overview from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), whose general philosophy is more in line with my thinking on this particular subject.

The problem we have had is a problem the present Minister was stuck with. He is a hard worker, experienced in forestry, wants to do the right thing, but unfortunately, federally and provincially, we do not give forestry the priority it deserves. The former Minister of the Environment said he gave as many speeches on forestry as he did on acid rain but it was only the speeches on acid rain which were published. That is the truth.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, there has been no greater stupidity, no greater tragedy and no greater lack of interest perpetrated on this country than in our wanton disregard of our forestry sector. We have learned much from Sir John A. Macdonald onwards but we have done little. I call our federal-provincial efforts in this regard a national disgrace. We have the worst forestry record collectively of any free country in this world. That is documented. When was the last time any caucus talked about the forestry sector? Search your souls. We talk about how to exploit our petroleum and manufacturing industry, how to dig things up, how to get rid of renewable resources. But when was the last time anyone in any caucus dared to stand up and talk about regeneration or reforestation? If it is one time in 100 meetings, it is a bonus.

How important is the forestry sector? Right now in Ontario it accounts for 64,000 jobs, 300,000 jobs in Canada, with 600,000 jobs in secondary manufacturing. It represents 18 per cent of all Canadian exports. It is greater than agriculture, mining and fishing exports combined. We have a Minister for fisheries, a Minister for mines, a Minister for agriculture and a Minister for energy, but where is our Minister for forestry?

In Ontario we have 750 saw mills, 22 pulp and paper mills, 21 veneer and plywood mills, and 12 paddle board plants. We bring in—and this is the tragedy—$1.5 billion in revenue provincially and $1.5 billion federally, yet we return only $300 million. That is a pittance. If we applied the percentage which is put back into forestry in Sweden, we would have to be putting back at least $750 million. In my area of Canada, northern Ontario, like Members from most ridings in Canada, we think generally in terms of our constituency, what the peole around us do. If you talk to people in northern Ontario, Mr. Speaker, you will find that most think it is the mines or the steel plants of northern Ontario which supply the jobs. In fact, in northern Ontario 54 per cent of our jobs come from the forestry sector, 55 per cent of our manufacturing, 57 per cent of value of production, and on and on. In Atlantic Canada it is the first or second industry in ten of the 16 regions. In Quebec, it is the first or second industry in eight of ten regions. In Ontario, it is the first industry in all six regions. In British Columbia, it is the first industry in eight, the second in two. In 1980, we shipped $22 billion worth of forest products. These figures are common. Most of the people who deal in the forestry sector know this.

It just boggles the imagination, Mr. Speaker, to understand why we spend so much time on other subjects and the most important subject in Canada is given so little time. The Hon. Member from New Brunswick will be speaking in this debate, but in his Province the wood industry accounts for 40 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Ken Greaves was mentioned. He said that the Ontario industry "spends almost nothing on reforestation". The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap told us how much Mr. Greaves wants the Government to spend. Michael Keating of The Globe and Mail summed it up. He said that "it is an industry that wastes up to half of each tree it cuts and fails to replant most of what it harvests". This is a fact which is recognized, yet nothing is done about it.

The former Minister of the Environment, now the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), said that Canada must double its spending on reforestation to $650 million annually. When is the money coming? When is it going to happen? What we have now is a policy of restraint with controlled exploitation, nothing more, nothing less.

Of the money which the Province is spending, two-thirds to three-quarters of it is being spent on roads. Access roads to do what? To cut more trees. Some 25 per cent of fires are caused by lightning and these fires cause 90 per cent of the damage in forestry. Where are the road patterns? Where are the water bombers which we need to control the damage being caused by fires? They do not exist now, Mr. Speaker, and they are not going to exist in the next ten years unless we in common, without looking at the politics of it, insist we have these things.

Right now in northern Ontario we have serious shortfalls of timber, especially in the Hearst area, and nothing is being done about it. The UN reports indicate that by the year 2000 there will only be half of the forests we now have on this planet. The Science Council of Canada recently put out a report to which the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap referred, but how many people read it? Or if they read it, did they think about it for more than half an hour, a day or even a week? Everyone is calling for a federal Ministry of Forestry. The industry is calling for a federal Ministry as well as the northern Ontario caucus and the Province. Yet we do not have a federal Ministry of Forestry. It is said that we look on the forests as something to exploit. It is said that the high quality, old growth forest has gone. It is said that much of which is remaining is overmature and defective.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap referred to the hardwood which they have to import for the furniture industry in Quebec. A walnut tree now costs from $7,000 to $9,000 to bring in because most of our good hardwood has gone. If we continue at this rate, most of our black spruce, our pine and our tamaracks will be gone with it.

There has been reference to the former assistant deputy minister of forestry. I thought he was a fine man who went as far as he could within his scope, basically as a senior civil servant. The policy has to come from here and from the Provinces, not from the assistant deputy minister or the deputy minister. The ADM said that each year 200,000 to 400,000 hectares of valuable forest are being added to this shameful waste, and he was right. The Science Council of Canada said that it wants a jump in reforestation and stand treatment from $300 million to $650 million. It sounds like a lot of money, but it is not when compared to what is at risk. It wants a jump from $250 million to $500 million for protection costs, which again is not a lot money when you look at the risk. As a matter of fact, there is a report which says we spent $89 million in other countries on their forest programs. We have more foresters per capita working out of Canada than any other country in the world. It is said that we do a better job abroad than we do right here in our own country. Our job is to grow trees, not to export civil servants.

The Science Council of Canada said that we could generate another 100,000 jobs if we brought in a reasonable program of reforestation. I do not know about other Hon. Members, but I am a little tired of these programs we are putting out which go nowhere, which do not give the people any pride in what they are doing and do not give us a profit in return. What can be better than to have a program which hires 100,000, 200,000 or even 300,000 Canadians to go out and do something which involves a little bit of pride? They do not have just to plant trees; there is more to reforestation than that. It is an industry in itself. They would have the pride of working and we would be providing for the future.

There is a phrase I use often because I like it so much. I heard it in Michigan at a conference of Amish farmers. The phrase was:

> We did not inherit this land from our forefathers, we borrowed it from our children.

We have to get that fact through our thick heads.

There are now 300 communities in Canada which could fail partially or totally if the forest industry in those areas fails. One of those communities happens to be mine. I almost laughed aloud when I heard the comment one of the Hon. Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition put to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, that perhaps it was the labourers who were holding back the program. That is about the silliest thing I ever heard. I have never heard of a labourer in the pulp and paper or hardwood industries say: "I am against your putting some money in reforestation or regeneration".

The Abitibi Pulp and Paper Company in my riding employs about 400 or 500 men. It is basically your average company. There are no evil men at Abitibi. However, the thinking of that company is exactly the thinking which brought the forest industry down in Canada. In 1972, when I was mayor, the company threatened to close. It is threatening to close this year, 1983. I met with the president and he said to me: "When I started with this company 30 years ago we used to build one mile of road and harvest that one mile for three years. In 1982 we had to put in three miles of road for one year of harvest." Who does he think cut the trees? The beavers? It was Abitibi which cut those trees and did not reforest that area. Mr. Les Reed said—and he is right because it is being done in Scandinavian countries—that all you need is 100 kilometres around the plant; if you reforest that area properly, you can go on ad infinitum. But that has not been done. Certainly not in Canada. The historical summation by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) of the Canadian Forestry Service was excellent. We have to be reminded that at one time we did have a Minister of Forestry. As Canadians we always tend to support the status quo. In this case we do not even support the status quo. The last Minister was the Hon. Maurice Sauvé in 1966. This institution goes back from 1899 to 1930. It handles four western Provinces and in some of them it did not do that great a job. Until the provincial Government of Saskatchewan took over the forestry business we had run havoc in that Province. The Canadian Forestry Service has brought much of it back under its care. From 1930 to 1983 it was concerned with basid research. Now it is "the lead agency for forestry" in the federal Government. That sounds great, but basically there is no funding. When I last looked about a year ago they had a budget of $63 million for the lead agency for forestry in the federal Government.

Somewhere along the line, I guess 15 years ago, someone convinced the powers that be that the federal Government does not belong in forestry. They were probably the same fuzzy thinkers that thought that we did not belong in urban renewal. I cannot think of any place in which we do belong more than in the forestry sector. One in ten jobs in Canada comes from the forestry sector. Half of the jobs in my area come from the forestry sector. If we do not belong in forestry then where does the federal Government belong? Cutting the CFS by 50 per cent has been a tragedy.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asked the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River what the Conservatives would do if they were in power. I was hoping he would say that as a first step their policy would be to go back to what we formerly had. I do not think you can be parochial when it comes to forestry. That is why Ministers get in trouble. After two or three months the press wants to know what they are doing next week. It has taken us 100 years to get into this mess and, no matter what Government is here, it will take us ten years to bring us out at least partially and to head in a new direction.

I support the appointment of a federal Minister of Forestry. The Nova Scotia Forest Products Association wants a full-time senior federal Minister. That is another problem. If provincially and federally the Ministers of Finance or Energy or Trade and Commerce say, "This is the way it is going to be", then that is the way it is going to be. In the Scandinavian countries they tend to take agriculture and forestry and make them senior Ministries. At all eleven levels plus the Territories forestry has to be a senior Ministry.

I will deal with one aspect of acid rain and then close off. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) asked the Minister about acid rain and what it does. Mr. Speaker, you say that perhaps he should be more relevant. The forestry sector is concerned about carbons and nitrogens and damage that is being done to the forestry sector. From 1980 to the present we have been standing still or going backwards regarding carbon and sulphur. We put out five billion tonnes a year of sulphur in 1980. We are still putting it out. We put out two million tonnes of nitrogen in 1980. We are still putting it out. The memorandum of intent with the U.S. is in a state of limbo. Noranda will not have any controls, unless it is forced, at half a million tonnes a year. Inco, at 850,000 tonnes a year, say they do have the money. Falconbridge is doing a pretty good job at hiding behind Inco. The two main sources in Manitoba are just being monitored but there have been no controls. Ontario Hydro is a disgrace. They have no program at all except to get off coal burning and go over to using uranium. They have the problem of high level nuclear waste that they have not even solved yet. They are not environmentalists. They are just using that issue to hide the fact that they are going to get out of coal completely, which was never the recommendation of anybody around the House of Commons. That is the state of acid rain, sulphur and carbon in Canada, Mr. Speaker.

I will end with this. I heard the statement made before I got here that there is a difference between a politician and a statesman. A politician has to look to the next election and a statesman to the next generation. I do not think that these things are mutually exclusive. During Question Period we can be politicians, have a lot of fun and attack each other. When it comes to what is going to feed us and our kids and is going to take care of our workers, then we can be statesmen. On the question of forestry we can be statesmen. We can work together federally and provincially between Parties. We can bring to the attention of the Canadian public that it is vital and necessary. We can give it more attention. We can get better budgets and we can do what has to be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the obvious question that occurs to me as a Member of the Opposition is that if it is so great a priority of the Members of the northern Ontario Liberal caucus to establish a Forestry Ministry and to restore the Department of Forestry and the Federal Forest Service to the position that it enjoyed under the administration of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker from 1960 onwards, what influence does that part of the Liberal caucus have on the administration? What kind of response does he and his colleagues from northern Ontario get from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to their efforts to bring about a greater awareness? There is an awareness now throughout the country in all the communities that he enumerated; the scientific communities, the Science Council of Canada, the forest industry, the forest community in general, 300 small municipalities through the country, many in northern Ontario entirely dependent on that one industry. What response is there from the Prime Minister to their efforts to establish a forest Ministry and bring about a forest renaissance?

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I personally have not spoken to the Prime Minister about this particular problem. Since the countervailing tariff dispute we have had with the United States my prognosis is that within the next five years we will have such a Ministry. We talk about Ministries of Youth. I think Ministries of Forestry are more important because they help the youth. I see a wave now that was sparked off by the Washington State-B.C. countervailing tariff dispute that has shown the importance of the forestry sector that may do just that if we stay with it, if there are more Opposition days like this and if more of us get out in the public. If that does not happen, there will be no such Ministry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Debate.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to follow the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) because of the comments that he made in conclusion about the difference between the stateman's approach and the politician's approach. I think you too, Mr. Speaker, would probably agree that forestry of all matters requires the statesman's approach, if only because it takes anywhere from 40 to 80 years for a tree to mature and be a resource that we can use in this country. We must look beyond the next election in forestry. That is one of the problems that has beset all Parties.

I am delighted that, despite the misgivings that I might have had about this particular resolution insofar as it involves the expenditure of public funds to set up a new Ministry, it has been accepted for debate so that we may continue today what we started yesterday.

In order to further that notion about how long it takes for the trees to mature and be of use to our society, I would like to quote a comment made by one who has devoted his working life to forestry. He is Mr. Les Reed, who was, until very recently, as the Assistant Deputy Minister in the Department of Environment in the federal Government dealing with forestry. He made a notable contribution at that time and one of the comments he made was, "Land is not something we inherit from our parents but something we borrow from our children". This is just as true of the forests. We do not inherit forests from our parents but they are something we borrow from our children. We must borrow them very carefully and we must make sure that they are restored so that our children will be able to harvest the forest.

Once again, I think of those young people who are sitting in the Chamber as pages. It is their forests that we are consuming, and if we want to borrow them we must replace them. They are not our forests, they are their forests and we must replace them in such a way and with such scientific precision that they will know, when their turn comes, how to use them in that way as well and pass those forests on to the next generation. This is one of the most important messages that we must draw from this particular debate of today and yesterday.

If we think we are being inventive by deciding to bring this matter up today, I would just like to remind the House and those who will read the Debates, that as long ago as 1938 the same message was laid out before us by economists and economic historians of Canada in a book on the relations between Canada and the United States. It is a series by the Ryerson Press. The principal author as A. R. M. Lower, and the other contributors were Prof. Carrothers of the University of British Columbia and Prof. Saunders. While I am sure this was written earlier than 35 years ago, A. R. M. Lower had this to say at page 201:

> Scientific reforestation may play a part, for much of old Ontario has soil fitted best for tree growth and for the white pine especially.

Speaking of white pine, I recall in the reading I was doing in preparation for this debate, although I cannot locate it at the moment, that in the days when the woods were being wantonly destroyed in Ontario—cleared for agricultural purposes but thoughtlessly destroyed—a white pine stood 250 feet high not far from where we are standing. The Peace Tower is just over 300 feet high. Have you seen a white pine standing 250 feet high?

Mr. Evans: Neither have you.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, I have not.

Mr. Evans: Because they do not grow that high.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They used to and they ought to. That is the purpose of this debate. It is to make sure that that age can return and that we shall again see trees of that magnitude and of that beauty.

I do not know whether the Hon. Member remembers that there was a storm out in British Columbia approximately a week ago which blew down some trees in Cathedral Grove on the road from Nanaimo to Port Alberni. Since members of the road crew were on strike, the people went out and cleared the road. The trees that fell across the road—and I hope they were not my favourite trees—came from a grove on the south side of that road and were standing there over 750 years ago. Those trees were standing 20 feet tall when the Magna Carta was being signed. That shows the durability of those magnificent trees.

I believe that one cannot be deeply and irrevocably tied to the soil and know what Canada is until one has seen the trees in Cathedral Grove, looked up and seen them standing hundreds of feet in the air. They have been standing there for over 700 years and it is an awesome sight.

That is what we must preserve. One of the ways of preserving it, I believe, is to follow the recommendation that is in this resolution and return to that age when there indeed was a Ministry of Forestry in the Canadian Government. The record of that Ministry was laid before us this morning by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). That Ministry was instituted by the administration of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker and was then dismantled and redistributed after a period of about seven years by the Liberals. At the insistence of the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), at least a special forestry branch of the Department of Environment was established and Les Reed, whom I mentioned earlier, was brought in to head that particular branch.

Today we are dealing with a renewable resource. I think we should recall the difference between renewable and non-renewable resources. I would like to remind the House of the manner in which the Alberta Government is dealing with a non-renewable resource. It has established, for posterity, for those like these young pages and their children who come after us, a fund which it calls the Heritage Fund. It was established out of the revenue of a non-renewable resource. While we are talking today about a renewable resource, we can establish a heritage fund as well. This is possible if we behave as the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) has suggested, like statesmen, and remember that that renewable resource has to be planted, tended and then harvested. It will then be harvested not by us and perhaps not even by the next generation or even their children. However, this can be done progressively, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, I am not telling you anything you do not know, considering the Province from which you come. It rests to a considerable extent on wood and wood products.

● (1550)

I have before me two advertisements produced by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association of Canada. One appeared in The Globe and Mail on November 7. The other one is from one of the editions of this month's Maclean's magazine. They are pulp and paper reports, and and I am delighted to put on the record that the industry has done at least this much. In 1977 the pulp and paper industry claimed it spent $170 million in forest renewal across Canada. Five years later those expenditures reached $300 million. These expenditures for forest renewal did not double in five years. In the next five years—this is a projection up to 1987—the pulp and paper industry expects to reach forest renewal expenditures amounting to $650 million. That is barely a doubling over the previous five years. That does not take into account the backlog that has to be restored if your forest industry in 40, 50, 60, 70 years down the line is to be a meaningful resource in this country.

Here is the second advertisement from Maclean's for November 21, 1983. I think it is a shameful one in some respects, commendable and heartening in another. This particular advertisement indicates that the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association is now making use of waste paper and recycling it in order to prevent the wanton destruction of our forests, in order to make use of a product that has already been processed.

Since 1977 to 1983, the Canadian pulp and paper industry has not quite doubled the amount of newsprint or paper, mainly newsprint, which it is recycling in order to save trees. But here is the surprising thing, Mr. Speaker. The industry has admitted it right in the advertisement as follows:

> In fact, over one-third of the recyclable paper consumed by Canadian mills is purchased elsewhere, mostly in the United States.

We are importing used newspapers in order to produce more newspapers. The rate at which the Canadian people—and I think Parliament is not to be exempted from this criticism either—pour forth paper is enormous. While it may be somewhat amazing, it is also frightening, terrifying, because it means that some of our forests have to be destroyed.

I read a recent publication, which I would commend to all who are interested in the forestry matter in Canada, a publication called "Cut and Run", subtitled "The Assault on Canada's Forests" by Jamie Swift. At page 208, writing about the consumption of our forests, Mr. Swift says:

> Each year the Great Lakes mill was processing over 200 square miles of the boreal forest.

That was in the early 1980s. That is 200 square miles of virgin forest. That cites just what one company does in order to produce paper. I am sure that in your Province, Mr. Speaker, in the Province of the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) and the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie and in my Province as many square miles are being destroyed annually. But how many are being replanted? Somehow or other we have to think beyond the next election and have our forests restored so there will be that heritage fund to reproduce and replicate, to use the modern word, in living timber the heritage fund that has been established in Alberta to deal with the wasting resource, the non-renewable resource that is being consumed rather wantonly, I think by us, but being produced in Alberta.

There are so many of these facts which I would be pleased to be able to set forward uneditorialized. Maybe what we need is to be shocked into realizing how wanton we are with that which is not ours, which is ours in trust but which really belongs to the generations to follow, and which we received and should keep in trust, restore and reforest.

There are a number of such stories in this book entitled "Cut and Run" by Jamie Swift. I do not even know where to start because the cost, for example, in 1978, of regenerating a single hectare of forest is calculated in British Columbia as being about $500. What is it now, five years later? That is replacing only those trees cut that year, not taking account of the backlog and replacing those so that we will have something approximating the forest resource that we were so fortunate to inherit.

I do not know how much time I have left but there is one other thing I want to mention: not only are humans attacking our forests but we have to deal with fire and insects as well. We have to deal with those problems. I think we should do so jointly and co-operatively. But I cannot see this Government, because of its confrontational policies, really facing this problem.

We also have to remember that our forests are very much involved in the climate we have. They provide the shade, or they used to, for the soil so that when the rain does fall it does not evaporate immediately. The trees provide nutrients when the leaves or when the needles fall. Even when some of the trees are chopped down, nutrients are provided for the soil so the next generation of trees may grow. Trees break the wind and thereby prevent erosion.

Those of you who may have crossed the Prairies in the 1930s, as I did, can remember farms just moving from west to east. Trees used to be known on the Prairies but they have been destroyed.

The Sahara desert is gradually creeping south because of the manner in which those south of the Sahara are using what little scrub there is to boil beans or whatever it is, and this is causing the Sahara to expand foot after foot, year after year. Let us remember that our forests are not just a resource to make money. They are a resource for our protection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments, debate?

• (1600)

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, at least once a year in the House we have a debate on Canada's forests. I think it is altogether fitting and proper. As has been said numerous times already today, no resource is more important to the country than our forests.

I will try to make my remarks today along the lines of the two or three speakers who preceded me and stay away from the partisan approach. I believe the forests of Canada are too important for partisan politics. I could pose many questions to the two Members of the Official Opposition who have already spoken, but I will leave it to another time. However, I want to say that it is unfortunate the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) had to refer to the so-called confrontational attitude of the Government of Canada in dealing with the Provinces. Of course that is nothing but an invention of the Tory Party and the Tory provincial Government. No Government in the history of the country has ever been more generous with its tax resources to the Provinces than this Government. In fact, in my Province forestry is more important to the daily livelihood and to the economy of the Province than in any other Canadian Province. Most of the provincial budget comes directly or indirectly from Ottawa. The forests of New Brunswick are noted to be the most productive in Canada. We harvest more wood per acre and we have more acres per capita in our forests than any other Province in Canada. I believe more people in New Brunswick rely on the forests for part or all their livelihood than in any other Province. Yet it has only been in very recent times that any serious effort has been made to ensure that the forests will be regenerated; we still have a very long way to go.

There are companies in New Brunswick that have exploited the forests for generations and until the last two or three years never planted a tree. Now, under the new regime of the Department responsible for natural resources, they are required to take much better care of the forests than they have in the past. We have a lot of room in which to grow in the forest industry, but it is diminishing all the time because of the waste of the past and the waste of the present. Unless we stop the wanton waste of wood fibre, we will not have room for expansion.

This is one of the reasons I believe there should be a Minister of Forestry at the national level in Canada. It is rather strange that we have Ministers of State for almost everything imaginable these days, but we do not have a Minister of Forestry responsible for a predominant industry in Canada which is the largest earner of foreign dollars and our biggest provider of jobs. In fact, Canada sells enough forest products on a yearly basis to offset more than our deficit in auto trade. Those are pretty significant figures. We should have a federal Department of Forestry with a Minister in charge of Forestry at the national level, his Department being a co-ordinating body for research and development, if nothing else.

However, I can understand why there is not one. When there was a federal Ministry of Forestry, co-operation and co-ordination among various Provinces and the federal Government were not all that great. Some Provinces were jealous that there was a federal Minister of Forestry and indicated quite boldly that there should not be such a Minister at the federal level because forestry was a provincial responsibility. If there is no Minister of Forestry today, it is not just the federal Government which must shoulder the blame. Let us not worry about the blame. Let us continue to lobby for a federal Department and a federal Minister of Forestry which will be the co-ordinator and facilitator of research and development in forestry that we need so much if we are to continue to be the leader in forestry products we have been over the years. That will take some co-operative federalism and some co-operative provincialism.

It would be interesting to know—and I hope in coming months that we will know—what the Tory policy on forestry will be. I look forward to hearing it and debating it. I do not think any Party will be able to go to the Canadian people in the future without a clear policy on an issue as important as forestry.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You change your policy after an election; that is the trouble.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): We have a prairie forester, a city forester, speaking from his seat because he has nothing to say on his feet.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are lots of trees in Saskatoon.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): He is not a bad guy; he just talks too much. A moment ago I spoke about the willful destruction and waste of our forests. I wonder how many additional products there might be and what value they might have if we utilized all the wood harvested in the country. It has only been in very recent times and as a result of an incentive program of the Government of Canada that we have had major forestry plants using their own waste products as hog fuel to cut down on the consumption of other natural resources such as petroleum.

Also it is important to realize that forestry is not only important from the point of view of the money or products obtained from wood fibre. It is important for other reasons as well. To some extent the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich referred to how the land will dry up and turn to desert if there are not the necessary plants to hold in the moisture. Some of the plants have to be sturdy plants like trees. There are other consequences which we have to bear in mind in terms of the destruction of our forests, such as what it does to our lakes, rivers and streams, to the wildlife of the forests and to valuable fish resources which spawn in our water systems. I have no doubt that one of the main reasons for the decline in Atlantic salmon stock is the denuding of the forests of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec where not very many years ago the rivers were rich and teeming with salmon; today they are very scarce indeed. It is not the only reason. Some pretty foolish management policies contributed to that as well. Wanton destruction of those species in the oceanographic feeding grounds by greedy nations also contributed to that situation. Destruction of the forest contributes to the destruction of our wildlife, fish and water resources as well as to the destruction of recreational facilities and land. It contributes to the greater devastation of forests when fire strikes.

Many who spoke before me spoke about the need for better management of the forests in order to protect them. For example, there should be a better expenditure of funds on forest roads. That is important. As well, we need a strong program to educate our young people. There are many of my generation who will never learn that unless they respect each tree of the forest, they will not respect them all. The roads that have been constructed and which give easy access to the forest today also contribute to the destruction of the forest through greater incidents of fire and theft of wood. It may sound like a rather strange occurrence in Canada that someone would steal wood, but that happens all the time. For example, the Department of Natural Resources of New Brunswick loses thousands of dollars each year in stumpage fees because of stolen wood. I am sure it happens in other Provinces as well.

I will conclude so that more Members will have an opportunity to participate in this debate. I reiterate my support for a federal Department of Forestry or federal Ministry of Forestry with a full-time Minister who will co-ordinate and plan with the Provinces if they agree to do so in order to enhance the reforestation and the re-establishment of the wealth of forests that once were Canada's.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments, debate?

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is probably a little under-estimation of the value of the forest industry. Canada's forest industry contributes to our balance of trade, more than agriculture, mining, oil and gas all put together, more surplus than they do in our trade balance. It should not be correlated merely to the auto trade imbalance, but must be recognized as the greatest contribution that we have to our favourable balance of trade. I repeat what the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) said. It is indeed fact that, relatively speaking, the forest industry to New Brunswick is of more economic importance than it is to the Province of British Columbia, which happens to have a multitude of other resources contributing to its GNP, many more than we have in New Brunswick. I would like to read some remarks I made some time ago with respect to the forests.

It was of little consequence 300 years ago that insect or disease infestation might wipe out wide areas of a particular species. With or without probable fire, nature would then replace a dead species with another. Maybe spruce would be followed by white birch and poplar, in turn to be replaced by other varieties familiar to all of us. Pine, maple, spruce or birch forests were never in one area in perpetuity, and the supply of all species was never constant in any century. Nature followed its own course. Budworm damage was then of no particular consequence. It ate itself out of house and home and starved to death. It would do the same today, in this century.

Federal Government participation in forestry as it relates to New Brunswick has been in the University of New Brunswick, the Acadia Research Station, in the research area of forestry associated with the University, and it has indeed made a contribution, but there must be a greater contribution made. I am not particularly critical of the historic conduct of the forest industry because that industry operated within a different sphere than the industry which is operating today. It operated in a sphere of over-supply of product in a viable location for the viable operation of lumber mills, pulpmills and so on.

That era in New Brunswick disappeared in 1970 or thereabouts. With encouragement from Government and with the proper investment opportunity which existed, new operations opened in New Brunswick which then reached a level of consumption which absorbed the production of our forests in total. Unfortunately, at about the same time the budworm had made an infestation in our forests which reduced our annual growth and reduced our available supply of wood. I want to give you an idea of just how that supply is balanced at this moment in time.

All told, the wood supply available annually for the New Brunswick industry on a sustainable basis totalled 7.9 million cubic metres annually. The softwood supply from small freehold totalled 1.7 million cubic metres, from large freehold, 1.4 million cubic metres, from Crown, 4 million cubic metres, and the net import/export amounted to .8 million cubic metres, for a total of 7.9 million cubic metres available to the industry.

How well do softwood demand and supply balance? The balance between sofwood demand and supply in New Brunswick is extremely tight. The 7.9 million cubic metres available annually will meet the average annual consumption levels of the existing softwood industry on a continuing basis. The forest could not sustain the industry if it operated continuously at its maximum capacity of 8.8 million cubic metres annually.

The annual demand must be matched by an annual supply both in terms of total volume and in terms of the quality of raw material. While a major portion of the total demand is in the form of pulpwood, which has a relatively low quality requirement, sawmills require about 30 per cent of the total roundwood volume, and this must be in logs that are of a size and form suitable for conversion into lumber.

Based on present sawlog specifications, the current sawlog harvest cannot be maintained in the future. This is a chronic problem. The custom of high-grading the forest for the highest quality components began with the exploitation of white pine and has continued ever since with an inexorable decline in the quality of material available at each successive harvest. The balance between demand and supply for raw materials to the forest industry indicates that, in terms of quantity, New Brunswick can maintain its present softwood industry, but that there is no room for expansion. New Brunswick is harvesting quality material faster than it is produced in the forest. Please note, Mr. Speaker, that New Brunswick is harvesting material faster than it is produced in the forest. That means that we in New Brunswick are harvesting our capital. We are withdrawing from our bank account, and this is a very serious situation. Sawmills, and other users of quality material, will have to adopt better utilization standards than are currently practised, and accept lower quality raw material, if they wish to survive in the future.

Can this balance be improved, Mr. Speaker? I submit to you that it can, but it can only be improved if forest policies in New Brunswick and, in a very rapidly expanding way, in all of the Provinces recognize that our present forest harvest is at a level which puts us in the sphere of farming on forest land. If we do not treat this land and its harvest as the agricultural sector would treat its crops, we will find ourselves in a position which will be economically embarrassing. It will then, of course, become a very important social problem.

I am, have been and shall continue to be supportive of the agricultural approach to forest management and harvesting until greater evidence than has ever been amassed as yet can persuade me otherwise. I would like to tell you why this is so, Mr. Speaker. I remember at one time being associated in the provincial Legislature with the former Minister of Highways from the County of Northumberland, Mr. Anderson. He is since deceased and was quite old when I knew him. However, he said to me: "I want to tell you, Fred, about a time when we had the budworm in the Miramichi. I was just a young boy at that time, but the devastation that that budworm perpetrated in our area was such that one could stand on a hilltop and look for miles and not see a live evergreen tree." He said: "You could go into the woods to hunt. There were no deer and no moose, but you could travel on deadfalls without ever putting a foot on the ground because those evergreen trees had died as a result of the budworm presence." He went on to say: "My family was a forest family," as I am sure the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi knows, "and our family business existed and survived for years with only little patches of forest. However, while we existed, virtually all of the then massive logging industry on the Miramichi disappeared from existence."

How important was that conversation, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi will remember when Chatham was one of the biggest banking centres in Canada by virtue of the export of lumber from the Miramichi and other watersheds close enough to be exported through that facility. More money changed hands in banks in Chatham than in most city banks in Canada. The depression which exists on the Miramichi today can be attributed in very large measure to the early decline of the forest industry and its failure even to this day to recoup itself through natural regeneration to the level that existed in 1900.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It started in 1825.

Mr. McCain: This was an additional infestation. The first one was in 1825.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): And the great fire.

Mr. McCain: At that point in time, the great fire of the Miramichi took place, and I think it is of interest to note that if one is to examine the history of the forest from the Miramichi to the Penobscot watershed, one would find that the budworm did in fact virtually eliminate forest from the estuary of the Miramichi to the Penobscot watershed in the State of Maine, and most of it burned shortly thereafter. It is from that state that nature did regenerate a forest.

I say that we must farm the industry because we have what is known as a fire forest. That is the official professional term applied to the kind of forest that exists particularly in eastern Canada. The forest grows up, matures and becomes a victim of old age, insect or disease and is replaced. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you yourself can remember the white ridges of hardwood that came into existence as the yellow birch died and whitened. We no longer had a significant hardwood industry over those ridges nor will we have in this century any significant yellow birch harvest.

That is an example of what has happened to the forest in our lifetime. We are also experiencing at present the infestation of the budworm. I will refer to an example of what would happen if we do not treat this industry as a farm operation. As all Hon. Members will remember, there was a court case in Nova Scotia, and I am sorry that I do not have my summary of that court case with me. I have said this before and I reiterate it because it is so important. Among other evidence given at that trial, it was said that if forest management is not improved and if the budworm is continually allowed to ravage that forest, there will be a loss of 8,000 jobs in the forest industry in the Cape Breton area of the Province of Nova Scotia. That is what we are looking at in southwest New Brunswick where we have already lost 10 million cords of wood, wood that is no longer fit for harvest. That is the price we have paid. How close does that price come to the loss of 8,000 jobs in the southwest corner of my Province?

Those who object to spraying the forests have said many a time that forest management is the answer, and I agree. However, the application of pesticide must become a part of forest management if we are to have a forest crop at all. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? That is the only way the reforestation referred to by the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi can be carried out effectively in not all but in much of New Brunswick, because the soil is so productive that not only will it produce wood fibre but it will produce ferns, white birches, blueberries and hazelnut bushes. These plants spring up almost simultaneously when the ground is denuded of forest coverage. If we then reforest that ground and if we do not protect the seedlings from the cover of these weeds—and I refer to them in the farming sense as weeds because they are not of an economic value—do you know, Mr. Speaker, what the mortality rate would be of the little trees that are planted there? It would be higher in some instances than 80 per cent in the reforested area. If we do not find and use a weed killer which will in fact protect the reforested area, our efforts at reforestation will virtually be in vain and we will not be able to anticipate a crop.

I have some sympathy for the environmentalists who say that we should not spray the forests. However, I shall ask them to have sympathy for me. I am allergic to wool. Should I then form an association for all of us who are allergic to wool and say: "Let us destroy all of the sheep in the world because I am allergic to wool"? I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it would be as practical for me to say that as for the environmentalists to say: "Let us not spray at all." That is the problem.

I speak particularly about the forest industry in New Brunswick because I know it so well. Not only in New Brunswick but in Canada as a whole, we must start to farm our forests. I do not want to be partisan because this subject is too dear to my heart. However, I do want to say one thing. If there is support for good forestry practices in this nation and in the House of Commons, I ask for that support from all Members of the House. So that the Forestry Committee of the House of Commons can in fact sit down and study the best forest management practices that can be put in place. Along with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), I tried to generate meetings like this last srping, but they fell afoul of someone's opinion about what the committee should do and there were only one or two meetings held.

Since we are not going to be partisan, I will support the Government and ask Government backbenchers and Ministers to support me. Let us study the forest industry in committee. Let us put on the table all the facts concerning the hazards of pesticide application, forest management, fire forests and the rotation of crops in our forest lands. In that way let us learn to understand the economic meaning of forestry, why it should have the attention of that committee and why we should have a Minister of Forestry.

Since I have been in this House, Mr. Speaker, forestry has been the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment. There has been an automatic conflict of interest which has never been resolved. The environment dominated employees working at any level in forestry, and I wonder how often the ADM of forestry had access to the Minister and how often he was told to go through his Deputy Minister, not to the Minister of the Environment. That happened, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe the present Minister knows that, and I believe it is proper to give him credit for not knowing that that situation existed in the forestry branch of his Department.

The initial action in New Brunswick for reforestation, Mr. Speaker, was taken by the Irving interests, and they deserve full marks for their leadership. They are approaching the point at which they are planting as many trees as they are harvesting. They have set the example which has stimulated Government and other forest harvesters to take more action in reforestation. But that brings us back to forest management. If we do not manage in such a way that the reforested plots are allowed to grow productively, then that is a serious loss to both the Irving interests and the Province of New Brunswick, along with all other interested parties.

We have been told not to spray; let us manage the forests. Our forests are in such a position that if we begin management now, the earliest adequate supply of pulp we can supply is 30 to 40 years away, in some areas 50 years away, depending on the growth capability of the land. If we are looking at replenishing the supply for the saw log industry, it will be from 40 to 70 years. If we are looking at hardwood species, we are looking at 100 years. That is the kind of management program that has to be in place. But we cannot wait for reproduction of trees; we must preserve the trees we have. Therefore, not only should we have a Minister of Forestry, but we should immediately have, with or without him, a meaningful and in depth forest study in committee, and I challenge the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi: let us get it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—FORESTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

That the Government respond to the emergency in the forestry sector by:

1. creating a new Forestry Ministry with the mandate to advance the Canadian forestry industry; and

2. convening a conference at the earliest opportunity of responsible Federal and Provincial Ministers to address the challenges presently facing the forestry sector.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate. Before putting a bit of factual material on the record, I would like to spend a few moments touching upon what the Minister responsible for Forestry had to say. The motion before the House is really quite simple and one would have hoped it would have been supportable by the Government. It is designed to set up a new Ministry under a senior Cabinet Minister and set a date for a First Ministers' conference to deal in a much more serious way with the plight of the forest industry in Canada. It is interesting that the two Liberals other than the Minister who spoke, the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) and the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) supported these two ideas. It seems the Minister has left himself somewhat out on a limb in that he seems to be the only one speaking in this debate today who is opposed to this very sensible idea.

The reasons the Minister put on the record for saying no to this proposal seem to me to be highly simplistic. He says there are no facts to support a separate Ministry, but I am going to add a few further facts to those already put on the record today by those who support the idea. The Minister went on to say that the major thing done in the three years this Government has been in power is that regional economic expansion programs have been placed under the umbrella of the Canadian Forestry Service and Environment Canada, and the $34 million has been put into a fund to top up the UIC. Well, that is the Liberal response to the largest single industry in Canada, certainly the most important in balance of trade, employment, and an industry which is now in dire trouble.

I think a few of the facts I am going to put on record today will make clear why Canadians across this country, certainly in the 300 main forestry communities, are alarmed that the federal Government is doing nothing really to help in reforestation or finding new markets, new technology and so on.

As I think most Members know, the Science Council of Canada came out with an extensive report just over a month ago. I would like to put some of that on the record because I think it is important that the Minister finds the time, since he could not be in the House today for this important debate, to sift through a few facts one night while he is mulling over the need for a Minister for forestry. I quote:

On a world scale, Canada has more than 10 percent of the world's forest resources. The total area of Canada is 9.9 million Km^2. Over 40 percent of our land area is in forests which cover more than 4.4 million Km^2 and contain a wood volume of about 23 billion cubic metres. About one-half is commercially productive forest land with the balance having some tree cover but not capable of sustaining significant annual wood volume production.

About 10 percent of Canada's land area, 4 percent of Canada's forest land, and 19 percent of Canada's productive forest lands are found in British Columbia. The most productive forests are also located in British Columbia as evidenced by the fact that the Province has more than 40 percent of the total wood volume in the nation.

SOCIO-ECONOMIC IMPACTS OF OUR FORESTS

Canada's forests generate an industry worth $23 billion. It has more economic impact in terms of our country's trade balance than agriculture, mining, fishing and fuels combined. More than 300 communities, many in British Columbia, are solely dependent upon the forest for their existence and provision of a high standard of living for their residents.

In excess of 10 percent of the nation's employment, more than 1,000,000 jobs, is generated by forests and forest manufacturing. In British Columbia, more than 100,000 people, second only to the retail trade sector, are directly employed by the forest industry. Approximately 40 percent of the wealth of B.C. is generated through forest-based activities.

Mr. Speaker, those first few statistics should reveal to the Government side the need to have someone senior on the front benches dealing with forestry matters. We have Ministers of State for almost everything imaginable, lotteries, you name it. But for Canada's largest, most important industry we have no one effectively speaking for forestry from the Government side. The Science Council of Canada articulated a few of today's problems, which I think is also worth having on the record for Hon. Members to mull over, and I quote:

The forests of Canada are renewable but not without a degree of reinvestment of the wealth they create. Government and the public have perceived the forests of Canada as an endless resource that requires little attention to maintain productivity after harvesting. More than 800,000 hectares are harvested annually in our country but less than 25 percent are planted or seeded. The Canadian Forestry Service estimates that 25 to 50 percent of the area harvested annually fails to regenerate or reverts to non-commercial weeds. Losses due to fire, insects, disease and wind are equal to two-thirds of the annual harvest, more than 90 million cubic metres annually. This waste of productive land lying idle is a national shame and will result in serious consequences for the future and our nation's ability to employ its citizens. The results will affect all sectors of our society. The costs of dealing with the problems increase annually and will not be solved by short-term, single-program solutions.

The situation in British Columbia is somewhat better than the rest of the country but only marginally. Less than half of the forest area cut annually is replanted. The balance can be left for natural regeneration but still requires some degree of assessment or treatment to prepare for a new crop. More than 1,000,000 hectares need reforestation and B.C. is adding 20,000 to 50,000 hectares annually to the situation. Recent B.C. Ministry of Forests budget cuts will increase the problems.

I believe the Association of B.C. Professional Foresters has really hit the nail on the head. In British Columbia now we have a Social Credit Government which is interested in cuts. At the same time it is allowing forestry companies to take the profits which they have made historically from the forest industry to Indonesia, to Brazil, offshore or wherever. However, the industry is as culpable as are those right wing Governments which refuse to put money back into making sure we have good quality forests for future generations to reap.

The recommendations, Mr. Speaker, are of particular importance and I am only going to put two of them on the record. However, I believe they are particularly important because the foresters call them "Political Impediments to Forest Management". Point four, I believe, is worth mentioning, and I quote:

High technology, political fascination with high profile projects such as jet planes, nuclear reactors and electronics are viewed by many as the prime economic motivators for job creation in the future. We believe that the forests of our nation suffer from our efforts being applied to areas that do not result in wealth creation. The forests and their management can utilize our best efforts in the fields of technology.

Time is a major factor in forest management in our country. We take 40 to 100 hundred years to produce a commercially harvestable tree. In the growing period of a forest, there can be as many as 20 elected governments, all with varying priorties and demands from the public. Forest management suffers from instability in government priorities and this has been the case in Canada to date. We need a long-term commitment to management with fixed goals that aim to maintain productivity of the forest land base. We cannot continue to shift our priorities in the forestry arena.

I believe that really hits the nail on the head. Governments are always promising to do things, yet in the lifespan of a forest, as the foresters point out, there may be 20 or more Governments, all with different priorities as to what they want to do. Some want to spray. Some want to cut. Some do not want to replant. Some do not want to put any money back into forestry, and some do. It is one of the largest problems we have to face in this country. As I said before, this is only the second time in the longest sitting Parliament in the history of this country that the issue of forestry has been debated. One of the recommendations of the professional foresters is worth quoting: It reads:

The federal government estimates that the benefits of improved management would create 100,000 new jobs, increase product sales by $22 billion and increase exports by $12 billion, doubling the present values, have significant indirect benefits in supply and service industries, and create additional tax revenues of $3 billion.

One cannot help but wonder why, Mr. Speaker, for such a small investment with such large potential benefits to be accrued, not only to workers but to the economy generally, the Government continues to sit on its hands.

The report goes on, and I believe here is where we really see the results of forest policies for British Columbia and Canada generally:

European foresters have estimated that Canada could produce three to four times more wood per hectare through better practices. The Scandinavian countries (Norway, Sweden and Finland) are capable of cutting a volume of timber equal to all that is harvested in Canada. The production is from an area of one-third to one-quarter of Canada's productive forest land.

It is astonishing, Mr. Speaker, how backward our policies are in this country. They recommend the following:

The present status of the Canadian Forestry Service must be elevated to a departmental level with its own Minister to reflect the actual importance of forests to the nation.

I quote that for the record, and for the Minister who thought there were no facts. I believe Hon. Members of this House need to know where the priorities of this Government lie in terms of forestry.

Just a few days ago I received a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) extolling the virtues of CIDA and what he is doing internationally. Many of the projects which I am going to touch on today are ones which I support and endorse. However, I believe Canadians from coast to coast must be alerted to what the present Government is doing—and what its Tory colleagues did while they were in government—with forestry projects internationally. From 1976 to 1983, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has spent $430,165,000 on 102 international forestry projects. Before I comment on some of the specifics of that, Mr. Speaker, it is worth quoting from The Globe and Mail of March 24 of this year. The headline reads "Forest spending seen rising to $650 million in five years". It was the big announcement of the then Minister responsible for Forestry, now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), who said the following:

"The federal Government is moving into increased direct support of forest renewal,"—

"We have approval in principle to spend a minimum of $130-million a year by 1987," compared with $50 million in 1982, he said.

This Government, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, spent this year $18 million in Guyana for forest management and planning. Canada is spending in one country, Guyana, half of what it is spending in the whole of our country for our largest industry. In Bangladesh, for rehabilitation and upgrading of a mill, it spent $8 million; $35 million in India for a social forestry project; $25 million in Honduras, with a militarily inclined government, for "development of a new district in the Corocito region, including forest industry". The Government has spent in Honduras this year half of what it spent in all of Canada for silviculture, and so on. In Brazil, for post-graduate training in Canada to the Ph.D. level, it spent $800,000. We offer better programs in forestry training to Brazilians than we do to Canadians, whether they be from Vancouver or Prince Rupert, British Columbia, or from Fredericton, New Brunswick. There was $3.5 million spent in Peru for the establishment of a post-graduate school in forestry sciences, and a further $26 million spent in Peru for a loan for logging and sawmilling equipment. It goes on, Mr. Speaker, page after page. In most cases, perhaps, Mr. Speaker, these are very worthwhile projects, but what kind of government spends more money every single year on forestry outside of Canada than inside its own country for its single largest industry? I will leave it to Canadians to determine what kind of government that is. However, I think we can agree that it is a government which is not particularly bright or future-oriented.

The business section of the Vancouver Sun last week ran a headline which reads, "Foresters condemn hydro projects". I raised this today in the House with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia). I pointed out, again as the B.C. Professional Association of Foresters have noted, that 20,000 permanent forestry jobs have been lost or are about to be lost in British Columbia as a result of flooding for B.C. Hydro projects. They go on to point out that some 834,000 hectares of land are flooded, are reserved for flooding, or for power lines and so on.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth noting that the last speaker was from New Brunswick. Maritimers know that Prince Edward Island covers only 565,000 square kilometers. We have a situation in British Columbia where we are losing our very best forest land. We are damaging our salmon and fisheries resources. We are damaging our tourism because all the dams have draw-down areas so at certain times of the year the banks of these man-made lakes are muddy and there is no tourism potential. They were not properly logged. Mr. Speaker, the association concludes by saying:

The Association believes alternatives to large-scale projects exist—such as co-generation of power from industrial processes and waste products. Political will is required to encourage the development of these resources.

The Association's brief was endorsed by a coalition of resource industries, user groups including the B.C. Federation of Agriculture, B.C. Forest Foundation, B.C. Wildlife Federation, the Fisheries Association of B.C., the B.C. Institute of Agrologists, the Canadian Institute of Forestry, Greenpeace and the Sierra Club.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is pretty clear that when we are talking about forestry matters it goes far beyond what one might think. The companies in this country in many cases have gone in and ripped off the resource. They have gone in and cut it, made the biggest boom profit that they can and then they have taken off with the profits and left a heritage, as is pointed out by the Professional Foresters Association, of close to half the land that is logged being of no value to future generations in terms of logging or wildlife values or fishery values and so on.

The Minister of the Environment is saying no to the proposal for a new Ministry. This famous Royal commission with the $800 a day man travelling around does not agree obviously with the Liberal Cabinet. We read this:

FOREST PRIORITY HINTED—MACDONALD PREDICTION AT HEARINGS

Royal commission chairman Donald Macdonald dropped his first hint Thursday about what he will recommend to the federal Government—higher priority for the forest industry.

The article goes on to say that it is about time the federal Government did something about it.

Some of the speakers today touched on the fact that provincial Governments are at least partly responsible for the devastation that we see now in the forest sector. In British Columbia we now recognize that there is what is called a 20 year falldown effect. There simply are not enough trees to continue at today's level of harvest and mill production. We cannot continue to cut at today's rate 20 years from now. Where are the logs going? What are the Tories' good friends in Victoria, Bill Bennett and the Socreds, doing with trees during this downturn in the marketability of pulp and of sawn wood? Mr. Speaker, any day you can take almost any newspaper in British Columbia and see lists of logs for sale, application no. 1914, application for hemlock spruce pulp, Metropolitan Trading, E.R. Probyn Limited, Crown Zellerbach, Canadian Overseas Log, and so on. The Socred proposal is simply to go in and cut the logs and send them overseas, let them be milled somewhere else and let the jobs occur in another country. They consider that to be good business. Let us see what the effect of those kinds of log exports are. I quote from a report run just a little while ago. It reads:

Log exports alone are going to cause a shortfall of 30,000 jobs—

Those are permanent jobs, Mr. Speaker:

—by the year 2000.

The IWA in British Columbia was protesting the export of those logs. Those are the same workers who would be affected by slowing down the cutting of trees for that kind of processing.

Mr. Speaker, Harrowsmith recently ran an editorial which I think is worth reflecting on for a moment in the House in terms of whether or not this House is actually going to do something, get a senior Ministry, get a First Ministers' conference together and actually get on with the job of getting the forest sector back on its feet.

Reflecting on the report of the Science Council of Canada, which apparently the Liberals have no intention of pursuing, they say the following:

One-eighth of Canada's productive forest area has deteriorated to the point where huge tracts lie devastated, unable to regenerate a merchantable crop within the next 60 to 80 years. Each year, some 200,000 to 400,000 hectares of valuable forest are being added to this shameful waste.

Those are lands, Mr. Speaker, that are now lying totally idle in terms of the capacity for them to be exploited, whether for pulp marketability or for saw logs:

Annually, from coast to coast, some 350 million tree seedlings are planted in Canada. By contrast, Sweden, which is roughly the size of Alberta, plants 400 million seedlings. Some 300 Canadian communities are primarily dependent on logging and timber processing for their livelihood . . . Moreover, as each job in the woods and mills is associated with one additional job locally and a second elsewhere in the national economy, a decline in the forest industries will have a pervasive effect on the economy as a whole—

Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what we are seeing now. The Minister of Employment and Immigration sent me a letter saying I should not worry about getting additional funding from the federal Government because unemployment in the forest sector in Skeena and the northwest of British Columbia is now only 50 per cent of peak employment levels. Well, la-di-da! I simply cannot sympathize with a Government that takes that kind of approach, not only to the individuals affected but to an industry of such great consequence to the country. Canada's forests generate over $1 billion in tax revenues for the federal Government, more than the earnings from fishing, mining, fuels and agriculture combined. What is the Government spending? I think this is what Canadians and workers in the industry need to know. Those in the media need to know this so they can start writing some appropriately sharply pointed editorials about the lackadaisical attitude of the present Government.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from a speech given by Les Reed who was the Assistant Deputy Minister and who brought a ray of hope and sunlight into the Canadian Forest Service of this country. Unfortunately he has now resigned, one can only assume because of the lack of action on the Government side. He said the following:

Provincial, federal, and industry spending for silviculture in 1979 was estimated to be about $178 million. Estimated public revenue generated by the forest industry for 1979 was over $3 billion. Unfortunately, only 5 cents of each dollar of revenue generated to governments is put back through forest renewal.

Mr. Speaker, I think that says it all. The Government, in the largest single wealth producing sector of this country, is only prepared to put back 5 per cent. I think that is shameful. One final point just to sum it up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired, unfortunately.

Mr. Fulton: Just one more point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent of the House to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you Mr. Speaker. It is a very short point and I will be very quick, pointing out that Canada now imports telephone poles from Finland and railway ties from Malaysia. The quotation of Sir John A. MacDonald of June 22, 1871 is appropriate with which to end my speech:

> The sight of the immense masses of timber passing my window every morning constantly suggests to my mind the absolute necessity there is for looking into the future of this great trade. We are recklessly destroying the timber of Canada, and there is scarcely a possibility of replacing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Nickerson: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), Mr. Speaker. He proposes a very ambitious program, one which in general terms, I am sure, most Members of the House could support to some degree. He would like to see further processing of logs in Canada. He would like to see a good deal more reforestation and attention given to forest lands. If these programs were to be implemented it would undoubtedly be pretty expensive. Has the Member given any attention to how these programs might be financed? Would he expect additional taxation on the forest industry so that Governments could then carry out these programs? Would he further worsen the deficit by spending existing Government revenues without increasing taxation in any way? What would be his approach to the financing of these ambitious programs?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to that. The figures that I put on the record make it quite clear. Of the $3 billion in direct revenue taxation that the Provinces, the Territories and the federal Government are bringing in, only 5 per cent is right now going back into any kind of forestry programs. I am talking here about university level programs relating to silviculture, reforestation, investigation into pesticides and so on. The Government is putting in less than 5 per cent. That revenue is already being brought in so that right now there is $3 billion that I see as being very readily earmarked without changing the level of taxation of anyone in this country, including that of the industry. That money should be first applied to the programs.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I come from an urban area, as most Members of the House now do, where we have cut down our trees. We know about the forests from what we see from the plane or the train. We also know about them from Canadian literature and the music of singers such as Gordon Lightfoot and Bruce Cockburn who write about the wilderness. I think people from urban areas are aware of our forests.

I know that the Member is perhaps the only Member in the House who actually lives in a log cabin in Tlell, British Columbia. What kinds of jobs are available in the forest industry for urban people if, in fact, the Government did what the Hon. Member suggested, which is to undertake, as also suggested by the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), an ambitious program of upgrading the forest industry in this country? What kinds of jobs could people in my riding expect to get from this industry that perhaps they are not getting already?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the studies that have been completed both by the Association of the British Columbia Professional Foresters and the Science Council of Canada indicate that for every one job there is in the bush, which includes skidder operators, buckers, fallers and people involved in silviculture, road construction, pulp mills and saw mills, which jobs are in rural Canada and mostly in northern Canada and British Columbia, there are two spin-off jobs as a result of the nature of the forest industry. In some Provinces it is 1.7, but across Canada it is roughly two.

When I am talking about a major ambitious program in terms of forestry, moving at least that initial $3 billion into the forest sector and silviculture in order to get those backlogged lands into a growth process, there is an indirect spin-off of two jobs for everyone whether in Vancouver-Kingsway, Edmonton, Regina or anywhere in the country. I think that is the important point that needs to be made to people in urban areas. It is the urban lethargy in this country that is creating the devastation in rural areas.

An example of that is the new proposal in British Columbia, in order to try to get the industry on its feet again, to cut the environmental ease strips. They are the two chain areas along the edges of streams, lakes and rivers in British Columbia which have been put there for good, sound, scientific and biological reasons in order to protect the fish and enhance the wildlife, including moose, deer and bears. Those are now being proposed to be cut as a quick shot injection into the cash flow of the forest companies in British Columbia. Not only is it chaos, it is fiscally, scientifically and biologically criminal to be involved in those kinds of activities, especially when we see the barrenness that already exists in British Columbia.

One can only conclude that the message is not being given by Members of the House, politicians in the country and the media to urban Canadians that it is important to help the forest industry. It is important for the House to take it more seriously. This is only the second time in four years that this vital issue has been debated. As my colleague pointed out, I built my own home out of logs in my own constituency. I cut the logs, peeled them and built the dwelling myself. I split the shakes. It is beautiful to work with wood and to see the life systems that live within the forest.

As I said earlier, Sir John A. Macdonald noticed 112 years ago what was happening to the forests of this country. Nothing has been done for more than a century but, hopefully, urban Canadians will wake up and realize that there is a great future in spending wealth to create more wealth in this sector of our economy.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) knows that between Juskatla and Charlotte City in his riding, MacMillan Bloedel is engaging in extensive tree farming and working with hydrids to shorten the growing time for trees and enhance productivity. Is he satisfied with the work that MacMillan Bloedel is doing in his riding?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, certainly some of the projects and programs that MacMillan Bloedel and other companies are involved in are good. However, the essential problem I see with corporations such as MacMillan Bloedel is that they are taking the lion's share of cash flow and available capital to Brazil, Indonesia and other areas of the world at a time when one can fly over the Queen Charlottes and see huge areas where there is no regeneration of any kind. What happens when one cuts some of the very ancient forests, which in some cases are 800 to 1,000 years old with trees 20 feet across the butt, is that when the level of precipitation is high the water level comes up and the small trees simply cannot get a good roothold until the stumps actually rot. This means that 40 years from now small seedlings begin to grow on the stumps of the forests cut down around the time of World War II when spruce was cut from the Queen Charlottes for small Mosquito bombers that Canadian airmen flew overseas.

It is a situation in which MacMillan Bloedel is doing something, but I suggest one would be hard pressed to find many knowledgeable foresters in British Columbia who believe that there is a single company in British Columbia which is doing what it should, which is to take a long-term approach to the forest lands which have been tenured to them not simply on behalf of our generation but of many generations to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in my riding, the most important industry is the forest industry. In Quebec, and especially in the Saguenay, Lac-Saint-Jean, Abitibi, and Témiscamingue areas, the forest industry, including pulp and paper and sawmills, is the main source of income.

I am delighted that the Member for Kamlops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) decided to present a motion dealing specifically with the forestry industry.

An Hon. Member: Too bad he could not stay in the House!

Mr. Gimaïel: It is too bad he could not stay in the House to hear the rest of the debate, including speeches by his own colleagues from British Columbia who spoke to the motion and asked questions, all of which is of considerable interest to them, to him and to all the people of the Province of British Columbia, which, I must admit, made a tremendous impression on me when I was there, especially the trees which are fantastic. I think this marvelous wood from British Columbia is one of our most beautiful resources, and one that is so often used in Canadian artifacts and in decorating our own homes, and as for the New Democratic Party, as I was saying, I am happy to note its interest in the forest industry.

I admit I am a little more surprised at the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Party, because I was told that this morning, the Progressive Conservative Party's House Leader did not seem to be interested in having the motion considered today. Furthermore it seems that yesterday, a motion on resources which was also presented by the Official Opposition got only three paragraphs on forestry resources, and the same Member who was responsible for those three short paragraphs on forestry came back today to speak again to the same subject, owing, I believe, to a definite lack of interest on the part of the Official Opposition with respect to the forest industry. I know that their new Leader comes from one of the mining regions of our country, which is quite all right, but this may have prevented him from being equally familiar with the forest industry, which is the largest industry in Canada, if we realize that $20 billion are involved each year in this industry. I think the Official Opposition would do well to have some of its Members specialize in this area, and I know some of my colleagues who have been involved in the construction industry are already well aware of the importance of the forest industry for our country. I was rather surprised that yesterday, the Opposition did not give more consideration to the forest industry as a resource and that today, it preferred to delay the debate on this extremely important issue.

Personally, I shall, if I may, get back to what was said by the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) in British Columbia, when he referred to the $48 million the Canadian Government was spending each year on the forest industry. The Hon. Member forgot a host of other Departments that are now involved in the forest industry. For instance, in the past two years, the Department of Employment and Immigration, especially under the provisions of Section 38, has been playing a major role in cleaning up our forests, collecting organic matter on the forest floor, planting trees, developing access roads, improving land and whatever else is involved around sawmills and pulp and paper mills, while we must not forget that for years, all on-site or on the job training in the forest industry has largely been paid, for periods of between six months and one year, by the federal Department of Employment and Immigration. These policies are not given a lot of publicity by the Government, but they are effective policies that affect a great many people.

• (1710)

In my riding, for instance, the sawmill at l'Ascension belongs to Abitibi Price, which started the mill a few years ago. The mill's several hundred employees were trained with the help of federal funds made available to the company by the Department of Employment and Immigration. The same is true of other facilities belonging to the same company at Saint-David-de-Falardeau. The same also applies to another company for which the Canadian Government has just earmarked $1 million to modernize facilties at Saint-Fulgence and Sainte-Rose, in another part of my riding, which belong to Consolidated Bathurst, and the same may be said for many other sawmills and companies involved in the forest industry, whether they are manufacturing particle board or pulp and paper, where Government involvement has taken place in ways other than through direct funding by the Department of the Environment.

And when people accuse . . . Earlier, I heard the Member of the Official Opposition accuse the Department of the Environment of playing a negative role in the development of the forest industry, and attribute this negative attitude to the Government itself. I think it is unfortunate the Hon. Member should have such a limited view of what is being done by the Department of the Environment. In fact, this Department is trying to meet one of its increasingly important responsibilities, which is perceived as such by all Canadians and especially our youth, for protecting the Canadian environment and doing so in conjunction with the economic development of our country. I think these objectives have been achieved. There has been a kind of specialization so that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, created in 1968, has tended to be more often involved in the financial side of developing the forest industry, including pulp and paper, the lumber industry and related activities. Why? Because the majority of these industries are located in resource areas. Because until the middle of the 1960s, these were areas whose economic development had been somewhat neglected. The resources were taken out, and I am reminded here of a quote by the Hon. Member for Skeena of what Sir John A. Macdonald said several decades ago, the resources were taken out and that was it.

DREE, however, started developing local industries that would use these resources, in order to create employment in areas where this was a tremendous problem for young people, and so forth. Hundreds of millions of dollars were spent by DREE on converting sawmills to making particle board in Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean, Abitibi, Northern Ontario and all the Western Provinces, including British Columbia, and on all kinds of industrial development, plus various infrastructure projects. In fact, even if the DREE Act prevented the Department from getting involved in the infrastructure area through the Regional Development Act, DREE did so in 1978 through agreements signed with the Provinces. The agreements dealt with forest development, forest access and developing forest regeneration. And in that respect, in the Province of Quebec alone, DREE contributed $190 million to forest development over the last five years. This is not to mention certain special agreements that led to the development of plants, such as the Donohue-Normick facilities in Amos and the Donohue plant in Saint-Félicien. These plants produce either pulp alone or pulp and paper. Without that investment by DREE, it is unfortunate to say that this probably would never have been accomplished. The best proof of this is the Saint-Félicien case where, after a 12-year wait, the project finally could proceed when DREE said: "Yes, we will provide the $30 million". And I am proud to mention this because at the time I was Executive Assistant of the Minister who signed that agreement with the Province of Quebec. I can certify that this agreement has been instrumental in creating a number of industries, in achieving a rationalization of the entire forest industry in a large section of my constituency of Saguenay Lac-Saint-Jean, and the consolidation of a number of mills and, to wit, in the maintaining of many very important jobs.

Therefore, to blame the Canadian Government for not discharging its responsibility in the area of forestry is in my view, quite misleading, because if Environment Canada did protect the environment as it is required to do, the other departments, whether Industry, Trade and Commerce, or CIDA the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) a short while ago drew a fantastic picture of the extent to which the Canadian Government is involved in the development of forestry. All the examples he gave show that in this country, we have the best qualified people in matters relating to forestry and also in the area of servicing the forest industry. Those people who went ahead and built sawmills, pulp and paper mills—they are still doing it all over the world—are considered to be the best engineering firms, the best manufacturers of sawmill equipment, the best builders of pulp and paper mill facilities. This is why they are sought after, because in that area of federal jurisdiction, the Government has done what was required for us to become the most qualified people in the world and so we are fortunately, from whatever province we are. Because I can say, for instance, that the engineering firms which built a sawmill, rather a pulp and paper mill in my area were from British Columbia. The Hon. Member for Skeena forgot to mention that fact, which tells a lot about the people of British Columbia; that small detail is being ignored.

There are proposals in the air. Indeed, my colleagues from Abitibi and Saguenay-Lac Saint Jean, the Hon. Member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Marceau), the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet), the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras) and the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant), and I did not simply wait for the Government to act, Mr. Speaker, this last year. You see this bulging file? It has to do with a proposal for a possible half-a-billon plus investment, allocating to each of our six constituencies whatever can be done by the Canadian Government over the next five years in the area of forestry. If we had been satisfied to sit and weep as did the NDP Members, we would never had gotten this paper. What we did was to pack our bags and go round to see our constituents. We met with companies, we sent them information about what the Government planned to do, we asked for their advice and for some answers, and we worked with them to put together an integrated forest development program.

Today, we know that what the Canadian Government can do unilaterally will be done in our region because we cared and did our job fully aware that 65 per cent of the lumber produced in Quebec came from our region; this means 2,030,-000 fbm a year, Mr. Speaker. We also knew that 25 per cent of the pulp and paper industry is located in our region. We were aware of the billions of dollars this meant for our people. We did our homework and made some recommendations, some of which have already been implemented, such as asking the Government to become directly involved in the private industry through programs such as Canada Works, and to spend so many dollars per man-week both for non-profit corporations and the private sector.

The recommendations which came from our caucus and ourselves as representatives of our constituents have been implemented. What we did, Mr. Speaker, was to understand that we must represent those who sent us here. In this context, far from being satisfied to simply make speeches, we went to see these people. We asked them for their opinions and wishes and we worked a year and a half at preparing a paper. We then gave this paper to the Government which now takes this material into account as the development takes place, because we are involved.

This is what the Hon. Member for Skeena and his colleagues should do. The same is true for the Progressive Conservative members. Unfortunately, as I have already said, it is a well-known fact that they show a lack of interest in forestry. It is not their fault. Their constituencies probably have mostly oil and mineral resources or else fishing resources, and so on, but it is a fact that the whole country benefits from our forest industry. It is extremely important that we can now sit down and express our views as Members of Parliament not only orally, but also by writing to our Government.

This leads me to mention another aberration which came to my mind earlier when I was listening to the Member of the Official Opposition, namely the creation of a new Federal Department of Forestry. I am not automatically opposed to the creation of such a ministry. Constitutionally, Mr. Speaker, forestry comes under provincial jurisdiction, and the way my colleague was talking a few moments ago, I got the impression that the provinces had disappeared and did not even fit in the picture. I think that the existing structures enable us to do everything we can to improve the situation, fully develop our forests and help our forest industry pick up steam, but perhaps a federal or interprovincial body might be required to coordinate everything. That may be the shortcoming I can notice. Given that context, it is not up to the Canadian Government or any Member of Parliament to twist the arms of the provinces. They own their resources, they can decide who will have cutting rights, they have their own logging operations and forestry development is their responsibility. The federal Government has no business telling them what to do. Even if I, Pierre Gimaïel, wanted to pass myself off as an expert in British Columbia forestry, I would not fool anyone because a tree in British Columbia is 25 times bigger than a tree in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, because the entrance of a British Columbia sawmill must be huge, a lot more so than the entrance of a Lac-Saint-Jean sawmill. We must keep in mind the technical constraints, the different climates, and the fact that Canada is a continent bordering on two oceans. That being said, I think it would be an aberration as well as a constitutional encroachment to create a new federal forestry ministry.

I would much rather leave things as they are—we have a Department of Environment which inclues the Forestry Service. That service can play a larger role, as it has been doing for two years in cooperation with various federal Departments to coordinate the activities of Manpower and Immigration and Industry, Trade and Commerce, or, if you will, regional and industrial development in forestry and silviculture. There is nothing to stop us, provided we respect the various jurisdictions.

It would be unfortunate if we went to war over our forests. We have had the experience of this department which the Government of Canada had set up to deal with urban affairs, which had to be abandoned because of its overlapping with provincial organizations here there and everywhere.

I am surprised at the attitude of the Official Opposition, especially as this Government has spent hundreds of millions of dollars over the past few years under various agreements with the provinces. The more so because most premiers except the creditist premier of British Columbia and the PQ premier of Quebec, are representatives of each of the parties in this House. Therefore it is easy for Hon. Members of both the Official and NDP opposition to have their say about their parties policies in their own provinces. Moreover, I suggest that in this area the Government of Canada should let the various provinces find their own solutions to their particular problems. What it should do is allow them to rely on the huge resources of the Canadian Government. That is what our job is all about. We are not supposed for instance to force a solution devised here in Canada, upon the Government of British Columbia but rather to urge the people, as I have done myself in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area, to come to Ottawa and tell us of their requirements so that we may negociate with their province the setting up of an upgrading system for our forests.

What is needed is imagination and a new department. I have nothing against that. It means Liberals would have one more minister possibly for one hundred years more. Apparently, Liberals are always heading the Government in this country. Perhaps that is a good thing. Such a department would provide new political leverage, but for the sake of efficiency, I feel that the existing system is better.

While I am on my feet, I shall deal with an important issue. As Hon. Members know, we are wasting our forests. What I mean is that we should have encouraged recycling, although some provinces have already taken the initiative. Thirty per cent of our forest resources could be spared by merely recycling the paper we use. Never or almost never do we hear anything about that. This was also mentioned in that document, Mr. Speaker. It is something we have also dealt with, because in our own areas, more and more emphasis is put on the subject of recycling, we see more and more youngsters salvaging used paper, and sending it to feed pulpmills to be processed into an excellent grade of paper. This is another area in which the Canadian Government has shown leadership.

Somebody was asking me: Why those brown paper envelopes? Because it is impossible to make white envelopes from recycled paper. It is easy for a Government to say: We are going to use kraft paper envelopes instead of white ones. This is what is being done. Ninety per cent of the time, correspondence from the Canadian Government is forwarded in kraft paper envelopes to help the recycling industry. Such initiatives are taken by the Canadian Government without any fanfare, and should be imitated by others. The Provinces should follow the lead. Hon. Members here should be aware of that. Our environment problem is very much the same as the problem facing the forest industry.

Earlier, one Hon. Member opposed the two. It amounts to almost the same problem. If sulphur escapes through our chimneys when we burn wood, it is because it is not reclaimed. The sulphur goes up through the chimney. The same thing happens in our forest industry. If we waste so much of our forest products, it is because once the fibres have been used, they are thrown away.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by stating that forestry in my constituency of Lac-Saint-Jean is a major industry. We have nine sawmills. As a Member of Parliament, I took the liberty of outlining here what was needed to help my people develop that industry, and I would urge Hon. Members to do the same. Let us go beyond speeches, let us help the Government develop good policies by rolling up our sleeves and working with the people in our constituencies.

[English]

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament from northern Ontario, I realize the great importance of the Canadian forest industry to the economy of the towns and villages in my riding of Timiskaming. Since one in ten working Canadians are directly or indirectly employed in the forest industry, it is very important to my riding.

I would like to take a moment to discuss how directly forestry is involved in the riding of Timiskaming. Cutters, timberjack operators, truck drivers, sawfilers, boardwalk workers, owners of saw mills and waferboard plants are related directly to the forest industry. I could go further and deal with the schools, hospitals and municipalities in northern Ontario; they are directly or indirectly involved in that industry. It has been estimated by the federal Government that 70 per cent of the manufacturing labour force in northern Ontario is employed directly or indirectly in forestry-related work.

I do not want to bog down the debate with reams of facts and figures, however the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) indicated yesterday and in his excellent report entitled, "The Green Ghetto", that the forestry industry is in serious difficulty with respect to its place and position on the world stage. Our nation's traditional competitors, the United States, Finland, Sweden and Norway, are now stepping up their efforts to increase pulp and paper export sales. This, coupled with new international competitors such as Brazil, Chile, New Zealand and South Africa, to name a few, are in positions to undermine the entire Canadian forest industry. Cheaper labour conditions in many of these countries, together with greater Government subsidies, allow these countries to enter the world market as very formidable opponents for Canada to compete against.

The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association indicated in one of its recent reports:

> Competition will continue to be tough, and the low-cost producers, whoever and wherever they are in the world, will be the winners.

The importance of the Canadian forest industry was recognized by the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker when, in 1960, his Government, with unanimous support, created the new Ministry of forestry. Mr. Diefenbaker had the foresight and vision to realize the importance of lumbering and its related industries back in 1960. Today our Party is still on record as favouring the establishment of a Ministry of Forestry.

I am a Member who represents a riding where another primary resource plays an important role, namely, mining. Like the Canadian forestry industry, mining employs several hundreds of thousands of people in direct and indirect jobs. It adds significantly to the GNP of the nation, last year totalling over 4 per cent. However, another similarity mining has with forestry is the lack of concern and attention that the Government has shown to this extremely important sector of the Canadian economy. Like the forest industry, the mining industry has no one in the federal Cabinet to represent exclusively the concerns and interests of those associated with the mining industry. This week represents the second month that the mining industry has not had a voice in Cabinet. However, more astonishing is that the federal Cabinet has not had a separate Ministry of Forestry since the 1960s when Mr. Diefenbaker proposed that one be established.

● (1730)

I was not so much shocked as I was amused when the Minister responsible for the Canadian Forestry Service, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia), said in the House today that he did not think it was necessary to create more paperwork and another Department to take care of the forest sector of our economy. This statement comes from a Minister who represents the same Government that forced Canagrex on the Canadian agricultural scene. This is the same Government that created Petro-Canada and created the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. With all of this bureaucracy, it is a wonder we have not run out of trees to produce all the paper required for the paperwork this Government has thrust upon the Canadian people.

The establishment of a separate and distinct Ministry of Forestry is needed in this country. At present, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out in an earlier debate, the jurisdiction for Canadian forestry policy is now handled by an Assistant Deputy Minister. Our number one industry in Canada does not even rank Deputy Minister status.

The forest industry is in deep trouble for a number of reasons. World-wide competition has hurt us, together with the fact that the federal Government has not paid enough attention to the industry. The Science Council of Canada's recent report on the state of Canada's threatened forests is frightening, to say the least. It is frightening because if decisive action is not taken jointly by Government and business, our forestry industry will meet the same fate as the dinosaur and the dodo bird. These species did not respond to the challenge of change in order to survive and they became extinct.

Today, we cut about one million hectares of forest each year. At least one-third of that amount is not sufficiently restocked, and today we find about 12 per cent of our forest land in this sad state. What can be done about this horrendous situation? According to a survey carried out with 34 Canadian pulp and paper companies in 1980-81, of every dollar earned by this industry, only ten cents on the dollar goes into dividends. Not surprising, an additional ten cents from every dollar goes to Government fees and taxes. It is therefore of the utmost importance for Governments at all levels to realize that taxing the industry over and over again will mean that more and more money will not be put back in reforestation. it will not be re-invested to update equipment in order to remain at the same level of competition with the United States and the Nordic countries.

In conclusion, a several pronged approach is needed to help the forest industry grow, expand and develop. Reforestation and forest management are vital aspects that have been neglected far too long. Neglecting them any further will simply mean that future generations will never be able to debate this subject again because the forestry industry, if neglected now, will not be around tomorrow for debate.

The first point I would like to make is this. Year in and year out we have a tendency to look at reforestation. The problem that we run into each year is this. At the time we are dealing with reforestation, whether it be with the private sector or the provincial Ministers, the tubelings and the trees and the hiring of individuals each spring must be looked at. We have a problem when we start off. We are hiring inexperienced people. In doing so, we have the problem of thousands and thousands of trees being destroyed. There is not a proper understanding of the planting of trees. I have been in touch with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) asking him to give thought to having a program instituted each spring for those who will be employed in the industry. Those who do not have the good fortune to be fully employed look for this seasonal employment. There should be a training program at the beginning of each season. In this way, we will have proper soil and planting. This would not only save the industry, but would save the taxpayer thousands and thousands of dollars. There should be a one-week program implemented.

Second, in order to co-ordinate the efforts of all provincial Governments and the aspects of the forestry industry that are a federal responsibility, a new Ministry of Forestry is needed. For an industry to be ignored as much as is forestry is truly a shame on the part of the Government. Within the Ministry of the Province of Ontario, one that I can maybe relate to better than others, thousands and thousands of cords of wood are left in the bush to rot each year. I urge all Members of Parliament, particularly those from Ontario, to give serious consideration to this.

We look at saving energy. Why not have a program whereby individuals can go into the bush and cut the tops of the trees that are left and the remaining cords of wood? This can be brought into the communities and sold or given to senior citizens and others who cannot afford to purchase wood for fuel. We have thousands of cords of wood not only in Ontario but in other parts of Canada that are not being used and are being left to rot. This is something that should be looked at.

Northern Ontario, which has always had as its major economic base primary industries such as forestry and mining, will not survive if the forestry industry is allowed to rot like a decaying tree. If the Government is not willing to examine the problems that are plaguing the forest industry now, we may soon find ourselves in very serious trouble.

The over 300,000 men and women across Canada in the forest industry join with me in urging the Government to make this all important sector of our national way of life a priority once and for all. I know there are others who want to speak. I appreciate the opportunity of being able to speak on this very important subject.

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) would like to say a few words. I will divide the time in such a way that he has that opportunity.

Timmins-Chapleau in northern Ontario is really the microcosm of the forestry sector of Canada. We have in our area lumber mills, wafer board mills, pressed wood mills, pulp and paper mills and finally, I am sorry to say, we also have in our forestry sector wastage in the same way that there is in the rest of the country. When a person walks through the forests in northern Ontario, it is almost shameful for that person to see whole timber tracts, hundreds and thousands of hectares, wasting in the bush. It is a shame for that person to see mature trees that are standing ready to fall because they are rotting. Why is this so? Because at the turn of the century when the pulp and paper companies moved into the area, they were given large tracts of land. In those days, it was not a matter of cutting timber but a matter of mining the forests. There was no thought given at that time to reforestation, regeneration or forest management. It was a matter of using the forests as if they were a renewable resource.

• (1740)

What do we see in northern Ontario today, Mr. Speaker? We see that these large tracts are dying. In other areas, we see that clearcutting has taken place with no replacement planting, and we see weeds and shrubs growing in place of the forests. That is why I believe the federal Government does have a role to play but not necessarily the role as described by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). He feels that the Government should do all of the work. I think he should speak to the Leader of his Party and then to officials of the Province of Ontario who have been collecting royalties on the timber lands of the Province for over a century and have not put one cent back, except perhaps in the last two or three years. Let him talk to that Government which has done nothing for the forests of Ontario.

We in the federal Government do collect income tax from the people who work in the lumber industry. We collect taxes from the wood producers. I believe that some of that money which has been going back to the lumber industry and to the forestry sector must continue to be paid to the federal Government, and perhaps the amount should be increased. However, I think it is not a one-sided affair. We will have to work with the provincial Governments and see that they put some of their royalties into regeneration, reforestation and management of the forests of Ontario.

I have looked at an agreement we made with the Province a few years ago. We wanted to turn to reforestation and regeneration, but officials from the Ontario provincial Government said: "No, no, we want roads for access to resources". We gave them roads. What did they do with those roads? Were they used for reforestation or regeneration? No. The roads were used to play their own political games with the mining companies and with certain privileged timber tract owners, and we have really not benefited from that.

I believe we must try to co-operate with the provincial Government, but we also must do some of the things we want to do. I can think, for example, of some of the things that need to be done in the transport sector of the forest industry. There is a port in my riding, the Port of Michipicoten. If that port were to be developed, we could transport our lumber, pulp and chips out of my riding and out of the riding of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming at probably half the money we are spending now. This is what I hope the federal Government will spend its money on. I hope it will spend money not necessarily on doing what the Province of Ontario wants it to do but on what the lumber and paper producers want it to do. As well, another sector in which the Government could be of some assistance is the private forest owners in reforestation. If it is possible, I would rather put our federal money directly into programs such as those.

We must immediately begin very intensive negotiations between the Canadian Government, the provincial Governments and the producers in order to achieve a more efficient use of our forests. I have seen logs coming into certain paper mills which are 60 centimetres, 70 centimetres, 80 centimetres in diameter. These logs were to be made into pulp and paper while, in the cities of Timmins, Chapleau and Wawa, I have seen wood that is 15 centimetres in diameter being cut into studs. What a waste that is, Mr. Speaker. We must have an efficient approach to the use of the logs across northern Ontario. I believe that this is where research and development facilities can get involved, provided the Provinces wish to co-operate. We must get involved in the use of the other kinds of wood that we have in our forests. Right now we are using poplar for waferboard, but what about all of the white spruce that dies the moment the foresters come? The use of those trees must be developed.

What about tree tops? The Hon. Member mentioned that we could use tree tops as firewood. When a forest in northern Ontario is clearcut, 40 per cent of the wood remains on the floor of that forest. I think we can make better use of that wood than firewood. I think we need to have portable chippers and portable mills so that that wood can be turned into something that is productive.

The Government of Canada has done more than its share regarding fire losses. We were criticized by those dear Conservative provincial Governments across the country whose officials said: "Why is the Government trying to shove those CL-215's down our throats?" We were not trying to shove those planes down their throats. We were trying to encourage them to protect their own forest by telling them that we would buy one plane for every plane they bought.

Mr. Nickerson: You were trying to bail out Canadair, that's what you were trying to do.

Mr. Chénier: The Hon. Member says that we were trying to bail out Canadair. Maybe that is true, but does he have something to say about the Government trying to fight forest fires in his area? He is a person who comes from the Northwest Territories where there are fires every summer. He has been crying in the House that he does not get protection. We give him the planes to protect his forests, and he says that we did so because we wanted to protect Canadair. He would probably prefer us to buy an airplane from the United States or from Poland or from somewhere else but if it is made in Canada, we should not buy it. What a true Canadian. I love him. He is a great Canadian.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a number of Hon. Members have suggested that we need a Forestry Ministry. I am not really against that concept, but on the other hand, I believe we are now starting to move in a very positive direction. The present Minister is totally committed to forestry. I think that if the Official Opposition and the other Opposition get together and work closely with the Minister, we can really encourage the development of programs with the Provinces, programs north of sixty and follow-up conferences such as the one that was held in September of this year. In that way, I think the forest industry of Canada will remain a viable industry and will not continue in the direction it appears to be going in now. If it does in my riding and, I am sure, in the riding of the Hon. Member for Timiskaming and the riding of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), there will no longer be any more wood to cut 20 years from now. Ten years from now, Abitibi in northwestern Quebec will begin to close some of its lumber mills.

That is a shame, Mr. Speaker, and I will not accept total responsibility for it at the federal level. I think we have done our share and we have done more than our share. However, I think we must do more again in order to encourage the Provincial Governments to return to the forests some of the money they receive from the forestry sector, money they throw into the general fund to use for the little political games that they have played over the last 40 years.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise and speak to this motion which calls for the Government to respond to the emergency in the forestry sector. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) had two suggestions to make which were aimed at involving the Government a little further in the forest industry of the country.

I would like to begin, Mr. Speaker, by reacting to the speech of the Hon. Member who just spoke. In a normal year, the Governments in Canada collect $3 billion in taxes. Half of that amount is collected by the federal Government. Only 25 per cent of that amount, and in most years even less than that, is put back into the forest industry. Of this amount, about half goes to the federal Government and half to the Provinces. However, spending on forest renewal is 20 per cent by the federal Government and 80 per cent by the Provinces. So it is the federal Government which needs to look at how it is protecting and helping to regenerate our forests, which is really the biggest issue as far as we are concerned here.

I come from an area with a pulp mill, a great number of saw-mills, a plywood factory and a number of businesses related to the forest industry. About 60 per cent of Saskatchewan is covered by forests, but commercial timber is disappearing at a dangerous rate. Out of the total productive area of 4.4 million hectares, about 11,000 hectares were burned last year. About 16,000 hectares were harvested, and only 7,390 hectares were naturally reseeded and 6,470 hectares restocked by the forestry branch. That means something over 13,000 hectares of forest disappeared last year in Saskatchewan. This causes us to be very concerned about the fact that the Government does not spend enough time, money and effort to make sure that the forests of Canada will be producing 10, 20 or 50 years from now.

Softwood timber is being cut in Canada 20 per cent faster than it is being regenerated. We are in competition with countries like Sweden and the U.S. which employ methods which allow them to harvest five to six times as much per acre in Sweden and ten times as much in the southern States. I spent a number of years in New Zealand where a tree was grown from a seedling to pulp size in seven years. That kind of competition is going to be very hard to deal with, and we are not even bothering to plant the trees let alone selecting those which will reproduce at a much faster rate. A couple of years ago I spent some time in Norway which is now replanting all of its forests because they found that selected seedlings will produce pulpwood or lumber class wood twice as fast as the naturally reseeded forest.

Foresters tell us, Mr. Speaker, we are a little bit stupid as Governments because the Canadian forest industry has declined more than 50 per cent since 1978, and provincial foresters tell us that money for research and development in the Canadian Forestry Service has declined by more than 50 per cent since 1968 as well. They also tell us that if we were to put some of that money into research and development and into reseeding and reforestation, we would have an immediate return in the form of an increase in jobs in the industry. We could have as many as 500,000 people helping in reforestation, which would increase the Government take from income tax a great deal.

The forest industry in Saskatchewan Mr. Speaker, employs 3,600 people directly, mainly in the Prince Albert area. There are another 7,000 indirect jobs and that is only in a very small area around Prince Albert. The value of Saskatchewan forest products was the second highest of any commodity in Saskatchewan's manufacturing sector last year. So in Saskatchewan, as in other parts of the country, it is a major industry. Direct revenue from that industry in Saskatchewan in 1982-83 was approximately $2.8 million. This is expected to go up to $413 million in the next 20 years. That is partly because the Saskatchewan Government has in the past insisted on a much higher level of reforestation in relation to the amount cut. The failure to regenerate forests adequately threatens the existence of as many as 300 communities over the next 15 to 20 years. Each year an area approximately the size of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia combined is removed from the world forest inventory and not replaced. That is approximately 50 acres a minute.

So we cannot lay all the blame on Saskatchewan, on Canada or on any particular part of our country, because it is happening all over the world. The difference is that some parts of the world have recognized that something has to be done and are starting to do it. I give you as examples Sweden, Norway, New Zealand, and even Brazil is making some attempt at reforestation. Right now in Canada we are buying our telephone poles from Finland and railway ties from Malaysia, things that we supplied ourselves for many, many years.

Of the 800,000 hectares of timber harvested each year in Canada, only 25 per cent are replanted artificially. Granted, about another 37 per cent will be naturally replaced, but it still means we are losing 400,000 to 500,000 hectares of forest each year. So it is very necessary that this Government, indeed all Governments in Canada, look at the forest industry as a priority and establish a policy which will allow us to regenerate and continue to be one of the major industries of this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL REVENUE—DESIGNATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA SCHOOL BOARD AS CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the better than nine years I have been here an issue has arisen periodically in the House during Question Period regarding the policy of Revenue Canada as it affects charitable organizations and non-profit organizations. Usually it centres around the issue of lobbying because, as you will understand, Mr. Speaker, non-profit organizations are very interested in the interpretation bulletins. I am not speaking simply of the law now. I am speaking of interpretation bulletins which are sent out by the tax department and which guide tax officials in applying the law to organizations across Canada. The issue usually centres around the interpretation bulletin which focuses upon what the tax department considers as lobbying.

I feel we should understand, Mr. Speaker, that any organization in Canada, a non-profit organization or a charitable organization, is interested in how the law is drafted and how it is going to affect that organization, so that when it comes to speak to Members of Parliament, Members of Cabinet and to the Government, it naturally is engaged in some form of lobbying. It seems to me that it is just pure logic that an organization, as a Canadian corporate entity in Canada, ought to be entitled, under the freedoms which we enjoy, to lobby the Government regarding the application of laws and how those laws would affect those organizations. Nevertheless, the Government has always been very twitchy about the activities of some organizations and the lobbying in which they might engage.

I will be the first to admit, Mr. Speaker, that there are some organizations which I suspect sometimes exceed the bounds of propriety, and I speak particularly of some church organizations. I wonder if some of the preachers are not frustrated politicians rather than preachers of the Gospel. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it is wrong, I feel, on the part of the Government to put in jeopardy the entire organization because some of its members might exceed the bounds of propriety in the way they lobby.

In that spirit, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) several weeks ago raised a question of an organization in Canada, the Canadian Mental Health Association, and the fact that it felt jeopardized by members of Revenue Canada in that its charitable status was going to be called into question. When the Hon. Member asked that question, I called back to my memory something I had read in the Vancouver Province under a headline, "The taxman giveth". It came to my memory, Mr. Speaker, that during the past year, good old National Revenue gave charitable tax status to a school board in Kelowna, British Columbia. I hope my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bloomfield) is not going to get up in his place and say that that is a piece of misinformation, because I want to inform him that it is not. The tax number for that school board is 0646737-20-26.

We now have the strange situation of a school board having charitable status in central Okanagan, and that raises some very profound questions as to the effect that that is going to have on the taxpayers across Canada. For example, if that school board derives its authority from a municipality, might the municipality not be able to issue tax receipts for the purpose of charitable donations? The school board received its charitable status under the category of advancement of education, which we can understand. I think all of us accept the fact that trustees of that school board compaigned very vigorously, politically for that position. As a matter of fact, the New Democratic Party in its conventions for the last number of years has urged its members to get elected to local offices under a Party ticket. It would be pretty hard, therefore, to suggest that a school board is a non-political organization since it is engaged almost exclusively in lobbying.

How can the Minister give a number to a school board as a charitable organization, a school board which conducts much of its activity in lobbying! We might ask ourselves whether those taxes that we pay, our property taxes, allocated to schools and education, would now be a tax deductible item on our income tax. That would be a very interesting innovation, Mr. Speaker, which I frankly would like to see happen if the Government is going to do this. Mr. Speaker, it opens a wide area of dispute if the Government is going to do this. Sooner or later the Government will have to decide this issue of what constitutes lobbying.

I would like to have my friend tell me tonight what the Government defines as lobbying. Are charitable organizations permitted to lay their case before us as Members of Parliament, before the Government, without being accused of lobbying and therefore being threatened by the tax department to have their charitable status removed?

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member appears to have problems with the matter of charitable registrations. He refers to the fact that the Department has counselled a charitable organization against changing its constitution so as to be in a position to undertake different activities, the different activities being related to political objects. Strangely enough, charity has not been defined in the Income Tax Act. That being the case, in our common law tradition we look to the findings of the courts. We discover that the courts have held consistently over the last hundred years or so that charity comprises the relief of poverty, the advancement of education, the advancement of religion and other purposes beneficial to the community that do not fall under the three other headings. It is true that certain school boards are currently registered as charity. Each application for a charitable status received in the Department is evaluated on its own merits and must meet the stated criteria to be approved. The Department endeavours as well to ensure that the groups which have been granted status as charities adhere to the objectives as they have been outlined to the Department.

I should further explain that the courts have held that political objects are not charitable in nature, that is, they do not come under the three specific headings or under the general heading of other purposes beneficial to the community. Since the Income Tax Act requires that all the resources of a charity must be devoted to charitable purposes, an organization seeking registration or wishing to maintain a registered status may not, therefore, engage in political activities. This is not to say that the purposes of an organization seeking to affect our laws may not be highly commendable. It is only to say that the organization may not be given the right to issue receipts for donations that may be subsequently claimed as deductions from taxable incomes.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—PAY TV—SALE OF FIRST CHOICE NETWORK. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW COMMISSION'S DECISION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last week I directed two questions to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). I asked him to look into the application which was made to the CRTC for the right to transfer ownership of the First Choice pay television network to Astral Bellevue Pathé, and not only to look into the question, but to look into the haste which the CRTC was ready to deal with the question, and to look into whether or not he should overrule the decision of the CRTC to permit that transfer of control. That proposal, which the CRTC approved, was objected to and criticized by virtually every person and organization involved in television, except the appellants.

I have a copy of a letter sent to the Secretary of the CRTC written by the national office of ACTRA, which represents over 8,000 members of the Canadian film and television production industry, including writers, performers, directors, producers, technicians and production management personnel. I will read one sentence from this letter, which was ignored by the CRTC. They state, "We oppose a transfer of control because it is in violation of the Commission's established policy on vertical integration and is contrary to the interests of both the public and Canadian film and television industry."

The CRTC spent ten years and commissioned a number of in depth studies about how to deal with pay TV when it would be offered to the Canadian public. It made a number of policy decisions. For instance, it decided that it would have a number of competing companies and that no company should be permitted to control all aspects of television production. Those policies, which were adopted after ten years of study, have, in the space of less than one year, been proven to be completely unworkable. We have First Choice, Super Channel and C Channel. C Channel is gone and First Choice is in such difficulty that it had to ask for an infusion of new capital. That is the reason for its proposal to be taken over by Astral Bellevue. Super Channel is in trouble as well. There simply have not been enough Canadians willing to contract to get pay TV to allow the healthy operation of a number of channels.

When this company takes over pay TV, it means that the policy which was worked on for so long by the CRTC will be stood on its head. As I have indicated, the CRTC's policies have proven to be a total failure.

The CRTC ignored its own rule that applications should be held for 50 days before they are considered. It is a rule which makes a lot of sense because a 50-day delay would give all those interested enough time to prepare their positions and detail their objections if they had any. The CRTC ignored its own policies and agreed to hear this applicant after ten days and to make a decision quickly. In effect, this excluded many of those organizations and other industry participants who wanted to prepare and make submissions. Therefore, we have the takeover of First Choice by Astral Pathé. This is a holding company which controls companies which are in every field of activity in films and television. It controls Astral Film, Astral Bellevue Classics, Astral Video, Astral Television, Pathé Video, Pathé Quebec, Pathé Sound and Postproduction Centre and Astral Film Productions. It has an agreement with Twentieth Century Fox to fund jointly production projects for pay TV and television markets.

Therefore, this is a company which will control everything from the concept of television production, writing, producing, acting up to the delivery to the customer. That is completely contrary to established CRTC policy, completely contrary to policies which the Government agreed to over the years. What it will do is to give a completely unfair advantage to this one company. It will put all aspects of the industry from the writers to the actors to the producers virtually at the mercy and give complete control to this one company. This is what the CRTC has done. This is what the Government has agreed to. It is something which has received the unanimous condemnation of virtually everyone in the industry except the people who were involved in First Choice, who were afraid, for good reason, that they would lose a major part, if not all, of their investment, and give control to Astral Bellevue and the people who are involved in very large corporate interests and have very large financial stakes.

• (1815)

We are told by the CRTC in its ruling that it has laid down very stringent rules as to how Astral must not do the things which the CRTC has always said companies shall not be permitted to do, that is, it will not be able to use the power which it has as a vertically integrated company.

Over the years the CRTC has said to applicants for TV licences that they would have to do these things and have Canadian content—plays, music and ballet. Those have been ignored by the successful applicants for the regular TV channels. I predict they will be ignored by Astral Bellevue when it takes over First Choice.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first may I say that I am rather surprised at the criticism levelled by the Hon. Member upon the CRTC regarding this transfer of control of First Choice to Hees International. It seems to me that quite often the CRTC is criticized for not responding quickly enough to the needs of the broadcasting industry. Here is a perfect example where the CRTC has responded to a specific problem relating in this case to First Choice and it has responded in a very positive manner.

Mr. Orlikow: To the detriment of everybody else.

Mr. Burghardt: The Hon. Member mentions a letter from ACTRA regarding the vertical integration. The CRTC has specifically made mention of this, that this is one of its major concerns as well in considering the application of transfer of control. The Commission also said that it gave consideration to the concerns expressed by interveners, obviously ACTRA as well, particularly with respect to this issue of vertical integration.

I might mention, Mr. Speaker, that the Member has mentioned the strict conditions placed by the CRTC in granting approval. All he has to do is to read the decision handed down by the CRTC and he will inform himself of those strict controls. Never in my experience in the broadcasting industry have I seen such strict controls placed upon a particular decision.

Mr. Orlikow: What happened to the other controls?

Mr. Burghardt: So the CRTC in this case certainly has put very stringent controls in approving this application.

The other point which the Hon. Member does not mention is that some of those who opposed this application of transfer of control took their case before the Federal Court of Canada. The Federal Court of Canada obviously felt that there was no case, and allowed the decision to be made.

If time permitted I could go down and list some of the very strict commitments which this decision renders upon the principles involved. For example, the board of directors of First Choice will be independent of the board of directors of Astral. The Hon. Member knows this.

Mr. Orlikow: If you believe that, you will believe anything.

Mr. Burghardt: The board of directors of First Choice will include, in addition to the present representation from some of the Provinces, additional representation from British Columbia and also from the Atlantic Provinces. There is complete separation of First Choice from Astral. The management of First Choice will be entirely separate, distinct and independent from that of Astral.

I see that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, but I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he read in detail the decision handed down by the CRTC in this case and I am sure he will feel much better about the decision.

METRIC CONVERSION—COURT DECISION ON LEGALITY OF IMPERIAL AND METRIC MEASUREMENT SYSTEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) INQUIRY WHETHER APPEAL WILL BE LAUNCHED

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, on November 2, 1983, we had some discussion in the House dealing with the regulations which caused the Government to force metric on various sectors of the retail trade. At that time it was pointed out to both the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that a judge in Toronto had ruled that imperial measurement would remain legal in the Province of Ontario and that they could not enforce the regulations.

The Prime Minister confirmed in the House of Commons, in response to questions on November 2, that it would be impossible to enforce metric regulations in Ontario at that time. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs alluded to the possibility that if they were to launch an appeal of this provincial court decision, at that time they would start enforcing the regulations. I am pleased to announce that since that day the Minister has agreed with the Department of Justice which advised her that it would not be possible to prosecute anyone in the Province of Ontario for the use of imperial measurement until the outcome of the appeal was known.

In my discussions with various lawyers involved in the case, it has been drawn to my attention that it will probably take a year or two to get through the appeal courts if the Government decides to appeal the case. The sad thing is that the Government cannot seem to make up its mind on whether or not it intends to appeal. While it is trying to make up its mind, I would like to draw its attention to a couple of incidents which have occurred in Canada. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary who will respond to my comments will endeavour to answer these concerns.

The Premier of Alberta, Peter Lougheed, has clearly stated that anyone prosecuted in his Province would be defended by the Department of the Attorney General of the Province. Because of that claim or statement by the Premier of Alberta, the Government dropped its charges in the case involving the floor covering industry over a year ago against Mrs. Kasparian in Calgary. It decided not to proceed and allowed her to continue selling carpet by the square yard. Also in the Province of Alberta, the Government itself, through inspectors, went into a service station and removed wires which it had placed on the pumps of a service station operator in that Province. The service station operator was a Mr. Carritt. I would ask the Government, or offer a word of caution to it that, as inspectors, it has been removing wires from pumps in the country. Who should be in the courts today if not the inspectors from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who removed wires from the pumps of retail operators in the Province of Alberta?

If we add this dilemma to the Government's problem of trying to decide whether or not to prosecute, I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) what the response of the Government might be on the legal matter of prosecutions and the statements by the Premier of Nova Scotia on the six o'clock news on the CTV network this evening that if they are going to prosecute any retailers in the Province of Nova Scotia, they had better start prosecuting the provincial Government in Nova Scotia.

Does the federal Government intend to prosecute provincial jurisdictions on consumer matters which both Mr. Lougheed and Mr. Buchanan claim are their jurisdictions, or will it do what it does in other areas of the law where federal regulations or legislation conflict with that of a provincial regional area? Will it respect those provincial regional areas and not prosecute?

It is not sufficient to tell the majority of Canadians, some 70 per cent to 80 per cent who do not really understand metric, that they are a tiny group of fanatics, that they are a dying group of dinosaurs, that their opinion does not really matter and that only the opinion of the Metric Commission, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and a few Members of Cabinet who support mandatory metric matters.

There has never been a vote in this House of Commons making it illegal to sell by the pound in the grocery stores of this nation. We have been denied that opportunity to represent our constituents. There has never been a vote in the House of Commons making it illegal for gas stations to sell a gallon of gasoline. This has all been done by Orders in Council. They can talk about the permissiveness of the regulations and legislation passed in 1970 all they want. The truth is that we agreed on two basic principles when we went metric in Canada. First, we would move keeping in pace with our major trading partner, the United States, where we do 70 per cent of our trade in Imperial weights and measures. We do not do one cent of weighted food for the United States in metric. It is all in imperial measurement.

Why is the Government converting back to using only imperial measure in the stockyards of this nation where we buy and export all our red meat in imperial measure? They do not use metric. They do not auction meat at the stockyards in metric. Why is the Canada Post Corporation, the former responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is also responsible for the Metric Commission, dispensing gasoline at the main Post Office in downtown Toronto in gallons?

All of these questions need to be answered. The most important question is, when will this Government listen to the majority of the Canadian people? They do not want metric rammed down their throats. They do not want Orders in Council making it illegal to use imperial measurement. The farmers do not want their fertilizer bags marked in metric only. They do not understand. It is a disservice and an insult to people with regard to safety when dealing with crops and air traffic. They do not understand. I hope the Government will listen. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) listens to the judge in Toronto and stops this nonsense about mandatory metric.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In his remarks, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the Government cannot seem to make up its mind on whether or not it intends to appeal the decision rendered by Mr. Justice Ross on November 2 last. I can tell him that the written grounds for the decision were received late last week and they are now being fully looked into by officials of our Department and those of the Department of Justice.

[English]

The Hon. Member said that the Government was forcing metric on the various sectors of the retail trade. It is quite something how he takes isolated facts, makes them into general principles and distorts this debate. I have said on many occasions in this House that metric conversion was introduced as a result of requests from many sectors of the economy; industry, the teaching profession and every other sector of the economy. Less than a month ago the Minister met with a number of representatives from the retail food industry and the Consumers Association of Canada. This group expressed a strong desire to complete the implementation of the metric program as early as possible.

I am sure the Hon. Member also understands the many issues that have been raised by the judge's decision, one of them being the effective administration of the Weights and Measures Act which is designed to protect the business community and consumers alike, to prevent the use of inaccurate measuring devices and prohibit the use of devices that have been deliberately altered or modified to measure in a faulty manner. These questions must be considered prior to making a decision about the appeal.

In conclusion, I want to refer to the matter of our trade and Canada's exports. We all know the importance of exports to Canada's economy. It so happens that one half of our exports to the United States today are in metric units. When it comes to taking lessons from the Americans, I think the Hon. Member might like to reflect upon the tremendous commercial deficit in the United States. It might be better for Canadians to take our lead from the Japanese and the Germans in this case and perhaps base our commercial policies on countries that have shown how to succeed in the area of exports.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock in the afternoon.

At 6.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE LATE JOHN F. KENNEDY

ANNIVERSARY OF ASSASSINATION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, 24 hours ago marked a very important and historic day for the whole world. I had intended to recognize and pay homage to the thirty-fifth President of the United States, the late John F. Kennedy, and to request that all of us in this House who, I am sure, remember quite vividly and with sadness the assassination that took place 20 years ago, do so also. Considering all the negotiations that go on between this country and our friends, our neighbours south of the border, some 225 million Americans, I would like to transmit a special message of condolence, not only to the President and to the citizens who live in the United States of America, but also to the Kennedy family.

If it is at all in order, Mr. Speaker, I would request and seek unanimous consent that we send such a message from this Chamber to the President of the United States and to the American people and, in particular, a special message of condolence to the Kennedy family, marking that recognition—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—AGONY OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN REFUGEE CAMPS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, a year ago in September the world was shocked by the news of the terrible massacre in the refugee camps at Sabra and Chatila. All of us were unnerved by the heinousness of that massacre. Headlines in the world's newspapers were vividly describing what was going on. There were headlines such as, "Reprisal for Gemayel death was horrible, indiscriminate". There were placards that read, "Down With Begin's Blood-shedding Government". All of this was accompanied with the clinical scrutiny of the cameras as to the brutality of that massacre in those camps, all of the scrutiny necessary, and all of it deserved.

Now another massacre is occurring. It is the conflict between the PLO forces in Lebanon, and again it is the true refugees who are suffering. The women and the children and the Lebanese nationals who have absolutely no interest in that conflict at all are suffering the most. But there is this difference, Mr. Speaker, the difference of the deafening silence on the part of the world's media on the agony being suffered by those refugees and Lebanese nationals. Where are the cameras now to examine the agony of the women and the children in those refugee camps? Where is the condemnation of the warring factions using refugee camps as armed camps rather than refugee camps?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, two years ago today the women of Canada won a resounding victory in their battle for equality. After an 18-day endeavour, Section 28 of the Canadian Constitution was amended to guarantee equality of the sexes. On that historic day, the House of Commons was informed that the Government had been able to obtain agreement from all those Provinces party to the accord that Section 28, on the equality of men and women, would apply without the override clause.

The Minister responsible for the status of women has pointed out that during these past two years there have been many important initiatives in the area of women's rights. These initiatives include Canada's ratification of the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women; Treasury Board guidelines concerning personal harrassment and sex-stereotyping in government communications and the first federal-provincial-territorial conference of Ministers responsible for the status of women.

There was also the appointment of Bertha Wilson as the first woman on the Supreme Court of Canada, and of Constance Glubé, appointed first Chief Justice in the Province of New Brunswick.

The child care expense deduction has been doubled to $2,000 per child. Amendments have been made to the Unemployment Insurance Act to improve maternity benefits and, for the first time, payments will be available to adoptive parents.

While serious problems remain to be addressed and there is still much to be done, all women should feel both proud and encouraged by the initiatives already taken by this Government.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—UNRESOLVED ISSUES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) said in the House on Friday, in answer to a question of mine, that as far as the Government was concerned the Hambleton spy case was closed. How can the Minister take such a stand when the account of that espionage operation on behalf of the KGB, which lasted some 30 years, as set out in Leo Heap's recent book, entitled quite simply "Hugh Hambleton, Spy", outlines a number of unresolved issues?

● (1410)

For instance, was the Canadian Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) correct in denying that an offer of immunity from prosecution was ever made to Hambleton by Canadian authorites, when evidence that such an offer had been made is on the record of the trial in Britain, as brought out by the British Attorney General who was prosecuting the case? Or was the Canadian Solicitor General suggesting that the British Attorney General was dealing with tainted, or even falsified, evidence?

Here is another unresolved issue. Why did the Government not bring this case to trial in Canada under a law similar to the one under which Hambleton was tried in Britain? Who, in this Government, was sheltering a spy? Who was it that warned Hambleton, not once but twice, not to go to Britain or, having gone there, to turn around and fly back to Canada? Who did that, and why? Who is responsible for bungling this espionage case involving—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time is up.

IMMIGRATION

HUNGER STRIKE BY POLISH IMMIGRANTS SEEKING EXIT VISAS FOR FAMILIES IN HOMELAND

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, ten Canadian residents of Polish origin have been outside the Polish consulate in Toronto for 17 days on a hunger strike. They are all week, anxious, and tired, but remain determined to achieve their objective—reunification with their families. They have applied for family reunification under the joint Canadian-Polish program, and the families of four of these men have received negative replies for exit visas from Polish authorities. Our Department of External Affairs had promised these individuals some action by Monday or Tuesday of this week, causing some additional anxiety as these days slipped by without movement on the part of the Department of External Affairs or the Polish Government.

It is with deep regret that I must express my disappointment and that of my Party, the New Democratic Party, at the continued violation by the Polish Government of one of the most basic human rights—freedom of movement. With calculated cynicism some Polish citizens are virtually blackmailed into leaving their homeland, while others are held to ransom. I hope the Polish Government will rectify this state of affairs in the future, and I urge that the Department of External Affairs redouble its efforts and press its representations to the Polish Government on this very tragic human drama.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

SUPPRESSION OF QUOTAS—CONSEQUENCES FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—NECESSITY TO TAKE IMMEDIATE MEASURES

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, the ministers concerned, are certainly aware that import quotas in the shoe manufacturing industry will be lifted as of November 1984. This industry plays a major role in the economy of my riding, because of the great many jobs it provides for both men and women. Several plant owners are already worrying about what will become of them after the quotas are lifted.

On behalf of this industry which is a major source of revenues for Canada, I wish to make Cabinet ministers aware of this situation and ask them to meet with the representatives of the Canadian shoe manufacturing industry and listen to what they have to say concerning shoe imports. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues will certainly agree with me that we had better act quickly to avert the problems we experienced two years ago.

NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER

SUGGESTED PROCLAMATION IN 1984

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, permit me to cite a proclamation made by the President of the United States of America in the first month of 1983. I read the President's words:

> Now therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, May 5, 1983, "National Day of Prayer". I call upon every citizen of this great nation to gather together on that day in homes and places of worship to pray, each after his or her own manner, for unity of the hearts of all mankind.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 27th day of January, in the year of Our Lord, 1983, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 207th.

Canada did not follow the President's example in 1983. However, may I suggest that this Parliament proclaim a day of prayer in Canada in early 1984, a day on which we might all pray for world peace and brotherhood.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Last Friday, the Minister said that the Liberal caucus unanimously supported Bill S-31. Is that still the case and does the Minister intend to proceed with consideration of this Bill?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be here in a few minutes, but I can inform the Leader of the Opposition that the caucus has examined this matter and has made suggestions to Cabinet. Bill S-31 is now before the Senate, and since the House intends to adjourn shortly, it stands to reason we will not be able to consider and pass this Bill before the end of this session. The caucus—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I wonder why my hon. colleagues opposite are so surprised, because they know perfectly well we intend to start a new session very shortly, and that this Bill, like so many other Bills that are before the Senate or before the House, may not be considered by the House before the end of this session. Regarding the legislative program for the next session, the Leader of the Opposition will have to wait until the program is announced. However, as the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is aware, Members of the Quebec caucus have suggested that before proceeding with a new Bill during the next session, there should be further consultation with business and the Provinces.

Mr. Mulroney: I assume, Mr. Speaker, the Minister meant to say no.

Since the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is now in the House, as far as Bill S-31 is concerned, the Member for Longueuil said this morning, and I quote: "Bill S-31 is already dead."

Considering this very straightforward statement, does the Minister intend to let the Bill die on the Senate Order Paper or does she intend to proceed with this legislation?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the normal course of events, of course, will unfold, and as to the future of S-31, I would say to the Leader of the Oppsition, and I am terribly pleased that we have the head organ grinder asking the question today, S-31 will be thoroughly discussed with the business community. If the House prorogues, the normal course of events will follow and the bill will die. This Government, and I might add this caucus, even those members of the Quebec caucus who issued a statement this morning, approve in principle the intent of S-31.

OPPOSITION OF CERTAIN QUEBEC INDUSTRIAL LEADERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Minister, twenty-one Quebec industrial leaders, all of whom . . . , the Minister is being coached by the Minister of Finance, perhaps I can wait for a while . . . , all of whom are reasonable and respected citizens, twenty-one industrial leaders wrote to the Minister . . . I know this hurts the Liberal Members from Quebec, I know it does. They are busy changing their position, and I can guarantee we are going to see them all do that. Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: twenty-one Quebec industrial leaders wrote to the Minister this morning, if I am not mistaken, stating their fierce opposition to the Bill. Does the Minister intend to take into consideration the views being expressed by reasonable and serious minded Quebecers, in her decision concerning Bill S-31.

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the Leader of the Opposition in this manner: if he is going to quote and use numbers, I shall also use the same technique.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: The supporters of this Bill within the Province of Quebec are numerous. If the Leader of the Opposition and Members of his caucus have followed events carefully, they will know that The Gazette said that "the truth is that this Bill, or something very much like it, is in the interest of Quebecers as well as all other Canadians". It is reported in Le Devoir:

[Translation]

Mr. Campeau, in his arguments, is acting more like an irrational alarmist, instead of being logically persuasive.

[English]

Those are only two of the opinions, Mr. Speaker. May I add that within the Leader of the Official Opposition's own caucus there is considerable support for Bill S-31.

I would like to indicate that a Conservative Member, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), said in 1977:

Good laws should be applied to the interprovincial and international movement of goods and passengers. This is necessary for the sake of the industry as a whole and the proper and good order of the development of the movement of passengers and goods interprovincially and internationally . . . The intent of the Bill is clear. It is a good one and one we are prepared to let pass.

Those comments were made by one of the members of the Conservative caucus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Last supplementary.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL ALLOW BILL TO DIE IN SENATE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is having some trouble with this problem, the Chairman of the Liberal caucus is not—

[English]

Given the genius of the Quebec Liberal Party for solving difficult problems, we have heard this morning that the Quebec Liberal caucus will recommend that this thorny matter be submitted to the Macdonald Royal Commission for resolution. Now, there is a stroke of genius for you, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Did the chairman of the Quebec Liberal caucus charge $800 a day for that opinion?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we just want to know whether the Minister intends to withdraw her Bill, yes or no? This Bill is becoming increasingly obsolete, and we would like to know whether the Minister, considering the objections to the Bill voiced by Liberal Members, intends to let the Bill die on the Senate Order Paper.

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the Leader of the Official Opposition how I think events will unfold. However, I would like to reassure him that the future of Bill S-31, or similar legislation, is still a principle to which the Government adheres. I would suggest to him that he wait until the new Session begins to see when and if a version of Bill S-31 is introduced.

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am pleased to see that the other side can still generate enthusiasm for something, because after the general retreat we have witnessed here in the House, there is certainly no great enthusiasm for this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

ENFORCEMENT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION'S PROVISIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just admitted the political collapse of Bill S-31. I would like to ask some questions about legality and propriety. Will the Minister confirm that, even though this Bill has not been received or approved by the House of Commons of Canada, it is already being enforced as the law of Canada? If that is the case, will she tell us on what authority she is enforcing a law which the House of Commons of Canada has not received, let alone approved?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the second hitter. There has been no attempt to enforce this Bill but we will, of course, be getting legal opinions.

PARLIAMENTARY PRACTICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter signed by the predecessor of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which is addressed to Canavia Transit Inc. indicating, and I quote: "However, I feel that an exemption to the Corporate Shareholding Limitation Act", that is Bill S-31, "—would be inappropriate and in many ways unnecessary." In other words, the Government is acting on a Bill which has not been received here in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, this is a dramatic breach of the practices of this Parliament. It is objectionable enough that budget measures should be administered before they are approved by the House of Commons, but at least budget measures must be introduced in this House. This Bill was not even introduced in the House of Commons. It was introduced in the Senate of Canada. This is an entirely new dimension in the breach of the privileges of this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): On what authority is the Government of Canada entering into this brand new breach of the rules of Parliament? Will the Minister give us her undertaking right now that this practice of enforcing this Bill stop immediately, at 2.27 p.m. this afternoon?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Member for Yellowhead that the Senate is a part of Parliament. It is not unusual to introduce legislation in Parliament. There has been no attempt to enforce this Bill. There has been no need to enforce this Bill. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Bill, of course, would not become law until it has passed through both Chambers.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CITE PRECEDENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister cite one example, in the whole history of Parliament, where this has been done before?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some concern about questions that involve an interpretation or a level of detail.

Some Hon. Members: She needs all the help she can get.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that a number of Bills have been brought in with effective dates which do reflect a certain amount of retroactivity. I will undertake to find all of the precedents and bring them to the attention of the Member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT'S POLITICAL WILL TO CUT UNEMPLOYMENT IN HALF

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, the Government's own economic advisory body, while appearing before the Labour Committee of the House of Commons suggested that unemployment could be cut in half if the Government of Canada possessed the political will to accomplish that. Do the Minister and his Government have the political will to cut unemployment in Canada in half within the 1980s?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET UNEMPLOYMENT TARGET

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, considering the strategies that the Minister of Finance has raised in this House, that answer is completely unacceptable. The Minister's colleague, sitting behind him, who is the Minister of State for Economic Development, while appearing before the Macdonald Commission, as well as before the Finance Committee last night, indicated that it was absolutely necessary for the Government to set performance targets in order to measure its performance.

• (1430)

The Government has set targets for research and development. It has set targets for inflation. It has set targets for the growth of the Gross National Product. However, there is one obvious and glaring omission. The Government has failed to set a target for reducing the level of unemployment. Will the Minister now continue on in that tradition, support the vision of his Cabinet colleague, and set a target for unemployment in this country so that we will have something to shoot for in the months ahead?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall consider the Hon. Member's question as a suggestion and take it under advisement. I may remind the Hon. Member that under the 6 and 5 program, the Government set a target, and that we were able to meet this target and even to go beyond it, that is, we have succeeded in bringing inflation in this country down to even lower levels.

Regarding specific projections for inflation, unemployment and so forth, I would remind my hon. colleague that in my last budget I gave a number of projections covering a period of five years. If and when a budget is brought down in 1984, I should be pleased to revise these projections, and the Hon. Member will be advised of such revisions at the same time they are announced to the Canadian public.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe we are all encouraged to hear that the Minister will now consider setting a target for unemployment.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be prepared to consider one other item? With the huge balance of payments surplus now, a number of analysts have suggested that the Canadian dollar will remain firm if real interest rates were reduced. A number of organizations and agencies have suggested to the Minister of Finance that the best step he could take to bring consumer and investor confidence back would be to reduce the real interest rates in this country. Will the Minister consider approaching the Governor of the Bank of Canada and directing that real interest rates be reduced, to allow more investment and consumer spending in an effort—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is going beyond a supplementary at this point.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that the consumer confidence to which he refers stands at an 18-year high. This is the highest level of consumer confidence we have known in 18 years. I remind the Hon. Member that today inflation is at its lowest level since August, 1972. I remind him that personal loan rates at the present time are at their lowest level in ten years. These are quite significant factors happening in the economy at the present time.

Mr. Riis: What about investment?

Mr. Lalonde: With respect to the specific question raised by the Hon. Member, I do not intend to give such a directive to the Governor of the Bank. The Canadian dollar has been floating over the last ten years. I believe that policy has served our country well. I do not believe that an artificial directive would be something which would instill more confidence in the Canadian economy, either among investors or consumers. I believe that the policy which has been followed by the Government in the monetary field over the last year has been very successful, and we should continue to pursue it.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

OPPOSITION BY QUEBEC BUSINESSMEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, you were in the chair when the Minister told us that there were no objections from her Quebec colleagues to Bill S-31. I am not saying that she deliberately lied to the House, for I think she was quite misinformed about the opposition taking place, and she knows that today, she knows now that several Quebec Members have come to the conclusion that it is a bad piece of legislation. She was received a letter from about twenty Quebec businessmen who are not separatists and who are urging her to shelve the Bill.

In light of such strong opposition, why does the Minister refuse to announce today that she will drop the Bill which is unacceptable to a French-speaking group that is entitled to voice its opinion about Canada's economy?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the impression which the Hon. Member has that there is no support for Bill S-31 among the Quebec caucus. Au contraire, the Quebec caucus this morning stated explicitly that it was committed to the principle of Bill S-31 but felt perhaps there should be a change in tactics. No more, no less.

TEN PER CENT LIMIT ON INVESTMENT BY CAISSE DE DÉPÔT ET PLACEMENT OF QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO CONSEQUENCES OF BILL DYING IN SENATE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, here is my supplementary question: since the Minister refuses to tell the House that she is prepared to forget that Bill—indeed, it is obvious that the Government will let the Bill die in the Senate—under the circumstances, can the Minister, honest as she is, I admit, tell us whether the moment this Bill dies on the Senate Order Paper, the 10 per cent ceiling on investments by Quebec's Caisse de dépôt et placement will be automatically lifted and that this institution, like all others, will be free to expand on a country-wide scale?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course if there is no legislation in place, as I said earlier, in the normal course of events it would die. However, as to the future of a similar Bill, or a commitment to the principles of Bill S-31, I would like again to reiterate that this Government is committed to those principles. The Hon. Member will just have to wait and see what happens in the Speech from the Throne.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

LEVEL OF GRAIN QUOTAS ALLOCATED TO FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in regard to wheat quotas on the Prairies. According to "Grain Update", the export of wheat and grain from the Prairies is up 29 per cent while at the same time farm deliveries are down 19 per cent as of October 19. Considering the cash flow problems which farmers are facing, will the Minister look into the problems of quotas? At this time last year the quota for the delivery of grain was nine bushels. Today it is three bushels. Or is it the Minister's intention to play into the hands of the railroads with regard to Bill C-155?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the purpose of Bill C-155 is to expand substantially the capacity of the railway system so that farmers can grow more grain, sell more grain, and export more grain. That is the purpose of Bill C-155. I will certainly take note of the Hon. Member's concern about the present quota system and raise it with my colleague, the Minister of State. We will try to have an answer for the Hon. Member as soon as those consultations are completed.

CASH FLOW POSITION OF FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If the Minister would check with the grain elevators across the Prairies he would find that many of them are empty and have no grain to ship, while others are possibly half full. The Minister said earlier, in terms of cash flow and so on, that he would move at a time when it was prudent. Is the Minister playing politics with the cash flow of farmers, waiting for a prudent time?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the question of the Hon. Member once again demonstrates how essential and vital Bill C-155 was, so that we could have in place a new system for allocating and organizing the transportation system.

As far as the second part of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I continue to exercise my prudence.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TÉLÉ-MÉTROPOLE STRIKE AT MONTREAL—PARTIES' POSITIONS ON APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour, and as a preamble I would like to stress, with respect to the Leader of the Opposition's attempts at rationalizing my quotes, that there is one which he overlooked, namely that I will never have the opportunity to suggest that the Progressive Conservative party is already dead, because it has never existed and will never exist in Quebec, especially his leadership.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the Télé-Métropole strike or lockout in Montreal, where workers have for quite a long time been affected by a labour dispute. Some weeks ago, the Minister called upon both parties to state whether they agreed on having a special mediator appointed. Will the Minister now report to the House that both parties are in agreement as to having a special mediator appointed, and if so, when does he expect to appoint one?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have indeed received a formal request from both parties for the appointment of a special mediator in this dispute. This morning, I informed both parties that Mr. Raymond Lebœuf, from Verdun, had been appointed mediator under Section 195 of the Canadian Labour Code. Hopefully, this development will get both parties closer together and lead to a satisfactory arrangement. I am sure that with the help of Mr. Lebœuf who is an experienced mediator, this long standing dispute should be resolved for the benefit of both parties and the general public without further delay.

CORPORATE SHAREHOLDING LIMITATION ACT

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT NOT PROPOSING AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the distinguished Senator for Nickel Belt. Last Friday, the Minister told me that the Canadian Labour Board lacked the authority needed to regulate in the area of interprovincial and international transportation. In view of the statement made yesterday by prominent Quebec businessmen that the Board has all the authority it needed, can the Minister explain exactly what are those essential powers needed by the Board to regulate in the national interest in that area, and why she did not introduce any amendment to the National Transportation Act if the current powers are not adequate?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that on February 22, 1977, in the case of Pacific Western Airlines, the Supreme Court of Canada, in a unanimous decision, found that Her Majesty in right of the Province is not subject to the jurisdiction of the Canadian Transport Commission. I do not think I have the time now, but I will be very pleased to provide the Hon. Member with the complete written decision which states very clearly that the CTC does not have the power we need in Bill S-31 which we are presenting in the Senate.

CONSEQUENCES FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is very much aware that Quebec's Caisse de dépôt et placements is not an agent of Her Majesty. So that is ridiculous! Despite the statement made by the Minister that all the Members from Quebec support the principle of Bill S-31, the Liberal Member for Longueuil had this to say yesterday, and I quote:

The people of Quebec and the Quebec caucus are against Bill S-31.

Given the opposition from the Quebec Liberal caucus and that of even the unanimous Progressive Conservative caucus from Quebec, how can the Minister insist on reintroducing in the forthcoming session of Parliament that Bill which has stolen millions of dollars from the Quebec taxpayers?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made some charges which I think he must substantiate, because this is not a Bill which is robbing millions of dollars from the people of Quebec. Indeed, it protects the investments of millions of Quebecers. I would like to make it very clear that the Bill grandfathers those voting shares owned by the caisse populaire. I would also like to make it very clear that the caisse populaire is an agent of the Crown. I would like the Hon. Member to substantiate those charges, and I would be very happy to provide information which will prove to him that Quebecers are winners, not losers, in S-31.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PRICING AND MOVEMENT OF FEED GRAINS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who answers for the Wheat Board. Presently there is complete chaos in the pricing and movement of feed grains in western Canada because of barley quota manipulation, a large differentiation in the barley and other bases, and a low initial board price for barley and other feed grains. Will the Minister immediately cause an investigation to take place to eliminate the reasons for this totally unacceptable situation?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, again I think it would be prudent to take the description of chaos by the Hon. Member with some degree of skepticism. We are examining the question. I think he would recognize that the Government did advance payments on feed grains, particularly barley, because of the substantial increase in world prices of some 30 odd per cent over the last two or three months. We are providing a much stronger cash flow to the farmers in this area. If, however, he has some evidence of problems he is encountering in his area, I would certainly be very glad to look into it.

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, the off board quota is traditionally seven bushels higher than the board quota, and those quotas are now the same. The price of board grain is $15 lower than off board grain. Farmers are sitting on their grain, the Wheat Board does not have sufficient quantities to deliver for export, and barley sales are being deferred. While the Minister is partying over the death of the Crow tonight, will he look at immediately increasing the initial prices for board grain, and also ask the Wheat Board to increase the off board quota so that some semblance of a system can be put back in place in the West?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when we honour this evening the proclamation of the railway expansion act which will bring major benefits to western Canada, we will also give some time to consideration of the situation in the feed grain area. As the Hon. Member knows, we have had a very volatile market in feed grains over the past two or three months, which has caused some of the disparities he mentioned. We are attempting to look at it, and I would have to do this in consultation with my colleague, the Minister of State. We will undertake those discussions and try to have a report back to this House as soon as possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO MUNICIPAL DATA BANKS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board who has the responsibility for regulations safeguarding the privacy of Canadians. Was his Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Kitchener, speaking on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board in an interview with the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, in which he condemned the attempt by the Department of Revenue to plug into municipal data banks and said he was "convinced that the request was inappropriate and I am making representations to ensure that similar requests are not made in future of Kitchener or any other municipality"? Was his Parliamentary Secretary speaking for the President of the Treasury Board?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my Parliamentary Secretary was speaking in his capacity as Member for Kitchener. In that capacity he was and is doing a very good job for his constituents.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER END PRACTICE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we will see how effective he is. The Hon. Member said that, in addition to lobbying the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Justice, he sent a letter to the Minister of National Revenue condemning this and asking for a change. He also gave an interview in which he said this is not the way things are done in a parliamentary democracy.

In light of the growing opposition, both within his own Caucus and among Canadians as a whole, to this outrageous request, is the Minister of National Revenue now prepared to put an end to this odious practice, to admit the request should never have been made to the City of Kitchener, and give a guarantee to Canadians that similar requests will not be made to other municipalities, as has been suggested by the Hon. Member for Kitchener?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this whole question should be clarified. The Hon. Member and everyone else in this House will recall that when I replied to his question last week, I did state that it was not our practice to ask for all the information and data stored in the date banks of a city or municipality. What we wanted to get was specific data concerning certain information which in any case are available to the public, and this is what we are doing. If the letter sent by a departmental official to the City of Kitchener gave the impression that something else was required, it is a wrong impression which does not reflect the policy of the Department.

SOCIAL WELFARE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF QUEBEC PROVINCIAL POLICIES

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This morning, the Minister met her Quebec counterpart, Mr. Marois, who is responsible for social development policies in Quebec. This meeting followed a recent announcement by the Premier that the welfare policies would be changed in Quebec to provide work for young people.

Since the federal Government pays at least 50 per cent of the cost of Quebec welfare programs and even more because of equalization, I would like to ask the Minister what resulted from her meeting with Mr. Marois this morning, and what are these major initiatives which the Quebec Premier did not mention when he announced the new social welfare policy for Quebec?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will let Minister Marois announce himself, since he so wishes, the details of the projects which he discussed in general terms with me this morning. I can confirm that I told him after this meeting, where he showed a very good spirit of co-operation, which was a pleasant surprise, that we indeed pay 50 per cent of every dollar spent for welfare assistance, and that, whatever means Quebec wants to take to help people on welfare, as long, and this seems to be the case, as the rights of welfare recipients are respected, and that everything is done on a voluntary basis, that all the usual rules apply and that no cheap labour is created, we shall be very happy to continue to pay 50 per cent of the costs of the Quebec social welfare plan.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

GENEVA TALKS BREAKDOWN—REQUEST THAT CANADA REFUSE CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the tragic breakdown yesterday of the Geneva talks. He has said repeatedly in the House that the problem in Geneva was not a lack of proposals but the lack of a good political climate. Of course, now that political climate has taken a turn for the worse.

Would the Minister not agree with George Kennan, the former U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union, that a dramatic move is needed to break the stalemate? Would the Minister not make that dramatic move himself and help us get off of the nuclear treadmill in this world, by announcing, for example, that Canada will not test the Cruise missile in our country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that suggestion, if it were implemented, would have the effect that the Hon. Member desires. The negotiations have broken off in Geneva, and that is very regrettable. However, the Soviet Union has known for four years now that, if an agreement was not reached at the talks, deployment would take place. That is what is about to happen.

The Soviet Union has taken the view at the Geneva talks that it ought to have a monopoly of land based intermediate missiles in Europe. Since the beginning of the negotiations, the Soviet Union itself has deployed 100 SS-20s in Europe. It seems to me that for Canada to say at this stage that we will not test the Cruise would have no effect and would likely confirm the Soviet Union's view that it ought to have a monopoly of land based intermediate missiles in Europe. It wishes to deploy all of these missiles and give the U.S. nothing. Therefore, the Hon. Member ought to understand that that problem has to be tackled, and it would not be helped very much but by what I would consider not only useless but dangerous gestures by Canada at the present time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halton.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Halton.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF TAX IMPOSED ON PROMOTIONAL MATERIAL PRODUCED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure that he knows that there have been over 70,000 jobs lost in the tourist industry in Canada in the first six months of this year alone. This is primarily due to the Government's taxation policies, which have virtually been pricing this vital sector out of business.

Instead of taking initiatives by way of tax rebates and other positive measures, why has he resorted to counterproductive protectionist tactics, such as a recently implemented 9 per cent tax on American material destined for Canadian markets? Can he justify the creation of this latest obstacle to the tourist industry in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could care to be more specific about the 9 per cent tax to which he is referring. I would remind him that with a $31 billion deficit, the Government is not putting an undue burden on taxpayers, and that we have taken all kinds of measures to stimulate the tourist industry, and I hope that in the months to come, we shall also be able to announce further measures to encourage the tourist industry in Canada.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW SALES TAX

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that, as a result of his Government's action, the United States is now retaliating by taxing Canadian promotional tourist material, to be specific, that is destined for the United States. Since Canada sends far more material to the United States as a result of its larger market, the clear loser in this area is the Canadian tourist industry. Therefore I ask the Minister, very clearly and specifically, as a result of this negative obstacle to the tourist industry in Canada, is he prepared, in fairness to the industry, to withdraw this detrimental 9 per cent sales tax on U.S. tourist material?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, for the simple reason that the Hon. Member ought to know that we also want to encourage employment in Canada, and that insofar as this kind of work for the tourist industry can be done by Canadian printers, we are prepared to support this measure rather than stimulate employment in the United States, at the expense of Canadian workers.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN RIOT—GUARD WRONGFULLY BLAMED BY PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In 1977 a parliamentary subcommittee on the penitentiary system, of which the Minister was the chairman, reported that prison guard Bernard Evans uttered statements that precipitated the riot at Millhaven Penitentiary. After a lengthy judicial procedure, the Public Service Appeal Board ruled yesterday that Bernard Evans did not make the remarks attributed to him by the subcommittee.

Given the injustice that has been perpetrated, and the negative impact that this has had on Mr. Evans' career, what steps is the Minister prepared to take to see that the stigma that has been attached to Bernard Evans no longer exists?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is not a question which is addressed to me in my capacity as Minister of Justice but, I gather in a former capacity, and since the Speaker has allowed the Hon. Member to ask the question, I guess I may be allowed to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Speaker does not attempt to determine which Minister, but the question should be asked of the Solicitor General.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only say at this time that the Correctional Service of Canada is reviewing and seeking legal advice on the decision which was handed down yesterday to see whether anything can be done within its terms of reference in relation to the findings of that Board.

Miss MacDonald: This is hardly good enough, Mr. Speaker. I was seeking legal advice from the Minister of Justice, and that is to whom I directed my question. What I am saying is that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, legal advice is not permitted. If the Hon. Member wishes to ask a question involving the operation of the Solicitor General's Department, then that is in order.

Mr. Nielsen: That is up to the Minister.

REQUEST THAT APOLOGY BE EXTENDED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough that the House of Commons, or a Minister of the Crown, cops out on this question. A serious mistake has been made, a serious mistake by Parliament. If we in Parliament cannot admit to our mistakes and take methods to correct them, how can people expect justice here—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask her supplementary question?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister at least arrange for an apology to be extended to Bernard Evans for the wrong that has been done to him?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the wrong to which the Hon. Member refers was not done by the Correctional Service of Canada. The wrong to which I gather she is referring is the unanimous report of a parliamentary committee. I do not think that a Minister of the Crown should be called upon to take steps in relation to a report of a committee.

THE ECONOMY

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBER'S OPINION

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Some time ago, when speaking to an Ottawa Valley audience, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South was questioned by the audience on how long it would take a PC Government to turn the Canadian economy around. That great fountain of accurate news, The Renfrew Mercury, reported that the MP said it would take—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has considerable concern about the nature of this question within the rules. The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

QUOTA SETTING POLICIES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. When the Minister checks into the conditions that were referred to by my colleagues from Assiniboia and Wetaskiwin he will find out there is a serious problem. When he is checking into it, I would ask him to see what he could do to rectify the situation so that it does not happen again. Producers are being hurt. We should not have to raise these kinds of issues in the House of Commons. They should be looked after before getting to that state of affairs.

● (1500)

One of the suggestions I would make to the Minister, if he is looking for remedies so the situation does not happen again, is that the Canadian Wheat Board be more open in its policies of setting quotas so that producers know when a quota is going to come and, if the quota is not coming, the reasons for it not coming.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I never thought there was anything particularly wrong about the Chamber of the House of Commons being used to raise a variety of concerns and issues of constituents. That is what the forum is for. However, as I say, we will be taking a look at that aspect. The Canadian Wheat Board is one that has commissioners on it who are chosen and who do reflect a pretty broad base of interests. We will be reviewing that situation as it now exists to determine to what extent the problem exists, and how we might solve it.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. When the Resource Development Impacts Funding Program for Indian people expired last March, the Minister said that other funds would be found. However, this has not happened. What help would the Minister give to people like the Carrier-Sekani Tribal Council which faces massive impact from such projects as the Northeast Coal and the Kemano II project? Does the Minister have any help for them, apart from writing nice letters to Gulf Canada and other corporations asking them to be considerate? What real help is there to aid these people face these impacts?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would tell the Hon. Member that we do have moneys, not nearly as many as last fiscal year—the Hon. Member is quite right—to fund Indian people for social impact studies. If the group of Indians in British Columbia, for whom the Hon. Member is speaking, are short of money, I hope to be able to address that this year. I am taking matters up now—I have not got a decision—but I am taking matters up now with the purpose of getting additional moneys for that very objective. I hope to have a decision very shortly.

POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION OF YUKON INDIANS IN KING POINT DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the Minister or his Government considering a proposal by the Council of Yukon Indians for the advance of a repayable loan of $80 million, or of any sum, to enable the CYI to participate in the King Point development with the proponent of that development? If so, is that proposal being considered favourably with a view to the Minister reconsidering his freezing of the project, to the lasting benefit of the economy and the unemployed in the Yukon?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, knowing the Hon. Member for Yukon to be such an authority on House rules, I view his question with some humour as to how he could piggy-back that on as a supplementary to a question about impact funds for Indians adversely affected by development.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Nevertheless, let me say this. Yes, I think that proposal, prior to my rejection of the application of Keiwit, was under consideration by my colleague, the Minister responsible for industry. I would suggest that when the Minister is back in the House the Hon. Member for Yukon address the question to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Presenting reports from special and standing committees.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a short supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have gone beyond the normal hour for Question Period and I did extend a supplementary to some one else's question to the Hon. Member for Yukon, a courtesy not always extended. I will allow a short supplementary, but could it be short?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Point of Order—Miss MacDonald

MINISTER'S POSITION ON KING POINT PROJECT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am acting on the assumption that the application by CYI will be approved. Will the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development then reconsider his refusal to allow the King Point development to go ahead, and give a green light to that project?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, one thing I have learned from watching the behaviour of the Hon. Member for Yukon over the years is that I know enough now not to answer hypothetical questions of that kind.

Some Hon. Members: A short supplementary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Presenting reports from special and standing committees. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CLARK (YELLOWHEAD)—STATEMENT OF MRS. EROLA DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicated by her answers today in relation to Bill S-31 that the Government may be intending to carry on a practice of enforcing a law which has not been received or approved by this Parliament. I am rising simply to reserve my right over the next few days to regard the propriety of this and perhaps—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has made his point. It is not a point of order strictly. He has made his observation.

Mr. Nielsen: He is the Right Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Presenting reports from special and standing committees.

MISS MACDONALD—INDICTMENT OF BERNARD EVANS IN REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the questions I raised during Question Period which have to do with a report of a parliamentary subcommittee on the penitentiary system. In this report a person by the name of Bernard Evans was indicted, which indictment has subsequently been proven incorrect. That has, as a result, had a very adverse impact on the life and career of that individual. This report was issued by a subcommittee of this Parliament.

I am seeking your advice, Sir, as to how I should now proceed to have this situation corrected since neither the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) nor the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), when I asked them the question, would undertake to address this matter or to have that very serious grievance rectified. Therefore, I would like to know how something that has been done by Parliament itself, which is incorrect and unjust, can now be corrected?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair cannot direct a committee to reconsider anything.

Mr. Nielsen: Parliament can.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair cannot give instructions to committees of the House. However, the Chair will examine the matter raised. I have one observation, however. There is the device of a motion available to the Hon. Member which she may well wish to consider.

THE LATE JOHN F. KENNEDY

ANNIVERSARY OF ASSASSINATION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that if you seek it, you may find unanimous consent with reference to a statement made under the provisions of Standing Order 21 this afternoon on a very special matter relating to a request of the House to transmit a message through the Acting Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to the American people and the Kennedy family on the assassination of the President, the late John F. Kennedy, the thirty-fifth President of the United States of America.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member present his motion?

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I refer to my statement under the provisions of Standing Order 21, which sets out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has been given leave to introduce a motion. Will he present his motion?

Mr. Harquail: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move:

That the Acting Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs on behalf of all Members of this House and Canadians transmit and express our condolence on the occasion on the twentieth anniversary of the assassination of the thirty-fifth President of the United States, the late John F. Kennedy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe we share the sympathy expressed by the Hon. Member. Let me make that clear. But since what he is requesting is that the feelings of all Members of this House be conveyed to the Kennedy family, I think it would be much more appropriate if that sentiment were conveyed by yourself on behalf of us all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement that on behalf of Madam Speaker, I convey such a sentiment to the representative of the United States of America in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would endorse unanimously and agree that this message be transmitted through the Chair.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

MISS MacDONALD—INDICTMENT OF BERNARD EVANS IN REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) in her question and subsequently on her point of order seemed to leave an implication that there was a question to which I should have responded. The document to which she was referring was a report of a parliamentary committee representing Members of all Parties. It was an unanimous report. All of the Members of that committee have equal responsibility for it and none have more than others. It is not a matter on which I can pronounce in my present position. I said publicly recently in the Hon. Member's city of Kingston, that it did appear, in the light of the coming forward of another gentleman, the words would not be to take credit—, but to admit to responsibility for having uttered the words to which the report referred, that we had indeed made an error in our attribution. I presume all other members of the subcommittee would feel the same way. I do not know any way a subcommittee, which no longer exists and has not existed since 1977, can now make amends. I am certainly prepared to endorse any move which would have the effect of doing that on behalf of the House.

• (1510)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has indicated that it will take the matter under advisement. Does the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) have something which he wants to add to this point?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has been allowed to do so. Since he was chairman of that subcommittee, he knows that it was set up primarily due to my own personal instigation. I was one of those on the subcommittee who provided part of that unanimity in the report, but I am also one of the first to say that we made a dreadful mistake in the conclusions that the subcommittee reached with respect to Mr. Evans.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Minister avers that he should not in his official position now be taking a position on the matter, I agree totally with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) that Parliament, having set up the subcommittee and being responsible for the deleterious effects on Mr. Evans, now has the responsibility to undo the wrong it has caused him.

I urge the Government and the Minister, particularly as past chairman of the subcommittee and as part of the present Government, to urge his Cabinet colleagues to take the matter under advisement for the purpose of finding some solution which will restore Mr. Evans to his previously respected position in the Public Service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has previously indicated that it will take the matter under advisement. The Chair, however, made a suggestion that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) may wish to consider putting forward a motion on the matter. That is something the Hon. Member may well want to consider.

Mr. Nielsen: The Government should act.

Miss MacDonald: It should be the Government.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one very brief comment on this matter. I think the point is being missed, quite frankly. An apology is one thing; it is about all we can do on this side of the House because we do not have the ability to introduce any motion which would involve compensation or the expenditure of public funds.

I think the point my House Leader made is a very appropriate one. It is the responsibility of a Government Member, a Member on the Treasury benches, to bring forward a proposal that would in fact compensate Mr. Evans for the loss he has suffered as a result of a very unfortunate occurrence in the subcommittee. Mr. Evans was precluded, for whatever reason, from giving evidence as to his side of the case. Only one side was heard, and that was the allegation made against him. My point in brief is that it is the obligation of the Government to come forward in terms of compensation for Mr. Evans in this very unfortunate incident.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), on the same point of order.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Speaker, yes, as a Member of the Sub-Committee, I would like to point out that it bothers me a little that Hon. Members are trying to turn this into a matter of one side of the House against the other side. If we are to seek an equitable solution, we should do so, but then as Members of this House and not as a Party or as the Government, and I would urge the Minister to consider the matter in this light.

PETITIONS

MR. YOUNG—ENACTEMENT OF SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by approximately 5,000 residents of the Province of Ontario who ask the House to provide a remedy for the problem of toxic chemicals posing a serious threat to the potable waters of this Province. They indicate that presently there is no legislation to guarantee the safety and healthfulness of those waters and that Canada's neighbour, the United States of America, has legislation entitled, "The Safe Drinking Water Act, 1974".

Wherefore we, the undersigned, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the safe drinking water Act which will protect and enhance drinking water quality in all areas of Canada. This petition was circulated under the auspices of Pollution Probe.

MR. DOMM—INCREASES IN BELL CANADA RATES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition protesting increased Bell Canada rates in townships in the northern part of Peterborough County, namely the Townships of Smith, Dummer, Harvey and Burleigh-Anstruther. These townships now have to effect price increases, in some cases for telephones just across the road, when dealing with municipalities of fewer than 3,000 people.

I humbly request the consideration of both the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) and the House in reviewing the petition to see if anything might be done to provide corrective measures for the hundreds of constituents who are petitioning the House in terms of increases in these extremely rural areas of Peterborough County effective November 15.

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-697, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce Bill C-697, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada. This Act would provide opportunities for public involvement in the making of regulations to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water. It would also provide that it would be an offence for the operator of a public water system to provide water which contravenes the regulation or to fail to comply with monitoring and notice requirements.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF HULL

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-698, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Hull.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this public Bill which concerns the district of Hull is to add the name of Aylmer after the present name.

The new federal riding of Hull has regrouped the constituents of just two towns, Hull and Aylmer. It would therefore be logical and reasonable to identify the district in which these constituents are located in such way that the name reflects their location, namely, as the district of Hull-Aylmer.

Mr. Speaker, that is the gist of my presentation on this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,931 and 4,981.

[Text]

ABORIGINAL RIGHT TO FREEDOM OF TRADE

Question No. 4,931—Mr. Anguish:

Is the Department of National Revenue taking any steps to ensure that Canadian Indians can enjoy freedom of trade with their American counterparts across the border, which is a basic aboriginal right guaranteed in the new Canadian Constitution?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise is responsible for the day-to-day administration of various legislative provisions which regulate the movement of persons and goods into and out of Canada. In the case of goods, the Customs Tariff Act, Excise Act and Excise Tax Act provide the statutory basis under which rates of duty and other taxes are established and assessed. The provisions of these acts fall under the purview of the Department of Finance, while the administration of them remains a Customs responsibility.

There are no special or unique provisions in Customs legislation which apply specifically to North American Indians. However, in response to representations from Indian groups, Customs is currently participating in discussions with Finance regarding the possibility of introducing new tariff provisions dealing with personal exemptions for Indians returning to Canada and the importation of Indian handicrafts.

For several years now, Customs has been addressing Indian concerns on an ongoing basis through departmental representation at Indian conferences and meetings, task force participation, and by special training programs for Customs personnel.

CMHC BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 4,981—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the composition of the Board of Directors of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and what is the address and occupation of each individual?

2. What is the compensation and what are all the benefits paid to the chairperson, directors, president and vice-presidents of the Corporation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Current members of the CMHC Board of Directors, including occupations and business addresses are shown on the list below.

2. Up to June 30, 1983, directors will be paid $159 per day while attending Board meetings; as of July 1, 1983, the fee will be $166. Salaries for the Acting President and Vice-Presidents of CMHC range from $55,978 to $88,610.

In addition to regular CMHC benefits for which the Corporation's share is valued at $8,800 to $10,000 per individual, the Acting President and Vice-Presidents are eligible for the following: a leased car, considered a taxable benefit to the employee under the Income Tax Act, is provided on request; business club memberships paid by the Corporation on request (five official are in receipt of these benefits for a total of $4,495 in 1983); one Vice-President was offered a preferential rate second mortgage as temporary financing when he relocated to Ottawa; and senior officials who are employees of CMHC can voluntarily participate in a deferred compensation plan. This is more of a service than a benefit per se since the Corporation does not contribute to this plan, and except for a minimal amount of bookkeeping, no costs are incurred.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to ask for information with respect to Question No. 5,038 placed on the Order Paper on September 21 of this year, over two months ago. This question happens to be a starred question. The information in response to it is rather important in determining certain actions this House might take with respect to matters before it. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) could be any more helpful than his colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). Perhaps he may be able to enlighten me as to when I will get an answer to this question.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I shall be quite happy to refer the matter to my colleague, the President of the Privy Council.

DIVORCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ALIMONY AND MAINTENANCE ORDERS

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 10, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Huntington that Bill C-250, to amend the Divorce Act (alimony and maintenance orders) be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, allow me to read the first sentence of the explanatory notes that accompany this Bill just to inform Members of what is contained here in substance. I quote:

> The purpose of this Bill is to propose a scheme . . . whereby maintenance and other money orders made pursuant to the Divorce Act could be enforced by the courts making the orders.

The initiative before us today is not a stranger to this House, the subject having first been discussed here in 1972. The Hon. Barney Danson, before he became a Minister of the Crown, placed this Bill, then Bill C-377, on the Order Paper in the Twenty-ninth Parliament. In the second session of the Thirtieth Parliament, the principle was carried forth by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) in Bill C-203, later in the third session as Bill C-302 and then yet another time in the fourth session as Bill C-350.

I had the honour of carrying on the battle on behalf of the Hon. Member for Capilano in the Thirty-first Parliament when the Hon. Member was a Cabinet Minister. I prepared for the debate on the Bill, but I was requested to allow the Bill to remain in the draw because the then Minister of Justice assured me that the Government was vitally interested in the issue and was going to take action on it. Unfortunately, because of the short life of that Government, this did not occur.

In this Parliament the Hon. Member for Capilano once again submitted the Bill, this time as Bill C-250. It came up for debate on February 10, 1981 and was talked out by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, also the former Member for Broadview-Greenwood, and the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier, the present Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette). It is interesting that the Liberal and NDP Members who profess to care so much about suffering have seen fit to impede the passage of this legislation.

One notes that the present Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, the same Member who talked out Bill C-250 in 1981, put a similar Bill, C-364, on the Order Paper. Ironically, she thought so highly of the Bill before us today that she incorporated two of its clauses, clauses 15 and 15.1, into her Bill. When her Bill C-364 came up for debate on March 23 of this year, the Member had the good fortune of having an amendment adopted that referred the subject matter of the Bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. What has happened since then, according to what I can ascertain, is noting. What is the use of having the subject matter of Bills referred to committee if nothing is to happen? It is a farce.

I should add too that on October 15, 1979 another Liberal Member, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) moved a Standing Order 43 requesting that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs consider an immediate review of the history of default and consider the advisability of instituting public means of enforcement. This also resulted in no action.

On February 25, 1983, the Conservative Member for Vancouver Centre (Mrs. Carney) raised this issue under Standing Order 21, thereby demonstrating her support for the principle of enforcing maintenance orders.

For over eight years, the Hon. Member for Capilano has been attempting to have this legislation approved by the House. He deserves the praise of all Members for his tenacity in this long struggle. I have briefly outlined the sad history of a number of initiatives that have come before this House in an attempt to enforce maintenance payments to divorced spouses. Everyone appears to agree that there is injustice and indignity being perpetrated on divorced spouses by a system which tolerates default in maintenance and support payments. I have talked to many Hon. Members in the House who belong to all Parties and have found no one who is against the substance of this legislation.

• (1530)

The Law Reform Commission reports that as many as 75 per cent of maintenance payments are not being made to deserted or divorced spouses and their children. That is a national disgrace and a black mark upon a court system which brings down maintenance orders and then allows them to go unpaid. It is a shameful situation and one which obviously begs for correction.

This correction must be made here in the House, and the fact that this legislation has been stalled and stonewalled for 11 years is a clear indication of how desperately we require the reform of this institution. That this legislation, which is so clearly and urgently needed, has been tangled in a political and bureaucratic web for over ten years should shame every Member of the House. Perhaps there is hope for this Bill today because the powers that be have now seen fit to allow it to be debated for a second time in Parliament.

The subject of family law has been under continual study in the country for years and improvements have been slow in coming. There is no doubt that the passage of the Bill C-38 on June 18, 1982, by the House was a step in the right direction. That legislation now permits the garnishment of salaries paid to federal employees for court order payments. However, that is only a very small part of the answer to the ongoing and growing problem of unpaid maintenance orders.

With divorce rates continuing to reach new highs according to every published set of statistics, it is urgent, it is mandatory that the matter before us here today be properly addressed. If nothing else, surely we have an obligation to the children who are innocently caught up in the stressful and tragic experience of broken marriages and homes.

Another point to consider in this debate is the submission made by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier in defence of Bill C-364. She stated, and I quote from Hansard of March 23, 1983:

> —hundreds of millions of dollars are still being paid through the welfare system because the spouse has moved to another Province and cannot be reached.

This point has also been mentioned in every speech concerning this Bill that has been made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano. One would think that this fact alone would spur Governments to action, seeing how hungry they are for revenue these days.

I could go on and list more reasons why this legislation should be adopted. It has all been said far too many times before. Surely Government Members can see the need for this legislation. The Hon. Member for Capilano, when debating this same Bill on February 10, 1981, over two years ago, stated:

> My hope is that the Government will see fit to have the Bill withdrawn and send its subject matter to committee where we can bring in the experts of the land and where we could probably start debate on an amendment to Section 15 of the Divorce Act, as is outlined in the Bill.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, that hope must be the same hope of any reasonable, compassionate and conscientious Member of Parliament.

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to commend the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) for taking the initiative to bring this Bill before the House. I submit that in doing so, he does a service to all of us who are concerned about this issue and especially to the many victims of the inadequacies of the current enforcement of maintenance and custody orders relating to divorce. I would also like to draw to the attention of the House the remarks that have just been made by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway). He encapsulated very well and quite graphically, I thought, the gravity of the problem which this Bill seeks to address.

The enforcement of financial support orders continues to be one of the major problem areas in family law in the country. Indeed, it is a problem not only in this country but in other jurisdictions as well. Jurisdictions both here in Canada at the provincial and federal levels as well as jurisdictions outside of the country are seeking to develop new and more effective methods of enforcing these monetary obligations in an attempt to promote the welfare of the family and respect for the legal system.

The current process for enforcing maintenance orders obtained pursuant to divorce is uniform across Canada and is found in Sections 14 and 15 of the Divorce Act. Section 14 reads as follows:

A decree of divorce granted under this Act or an order made under Sections 10 or 11 has legal effect throughout Canada.

Section 15 reads as follows:

An order made under Sections 10 or 11 by any court may be registered in any other superior court in Canada and may be enforced in like manner as an order of that superior court or in such other manner as is provided for by any rules of court or regulations made under Section 19.

By virtue of these sections of the Divorce Act, each maintenance creditor, in whichever Province of Canada he or she may live, under Section 10 interim maintenance order under the Divorce Act, wherever in Canada that order is made, automatically has available to him or her all superior court remedies of every Province for enforcement. These include, for example, the remedy of garnishment proceedings. It is worth noting that today, in the last half hour, the House took an action on the first reading of a Bill relating to garnishment of wages, a Bill standing in the name of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan). Other such remedies include equitable receivership, examination as a judgment debtor, attachment of debts and bank accounts, seizure of personal property, execution against land and proceedings for commital.

In addition, in most Provinces of the country, provincial legislation permits the filing of superior court maintenance orders in provincial Family Courts to make available the enforcement procedures of that court. These procedures include traditional show cause hearings whereby the defaulting debtor must explain his default or face imprisonment on summary conviction and continuing attachment of wages.

Indirectly in this way, maintenance orders made pursuant to the Divorce Act in a superior court of one Province may be enforced by the Family Court of either that Province or of any other Province in the country. Enforcement by the provincial Family Courts is becoming increasingly more productive through the development of automatic systems of enforcement under which enforcement is processed by the court with money being paid directly into court to the benefit of the dependent family members.

In certain Provinces, orders made for maintenance upon a divorce are programmed into a computerized monetary system within the Province. In some Provinces, the superior court maintenance orders may also be filed in small claims courts so that summary enforcement mechanisms which are peculiar to these courts, such as judgment summonses and summary garnishments, may be used.

● (1540)

Enforcement procedures under the Divorce Act nevertheless have not been without some difficulties. A number of proposals have been suggested for changes to the Divorce Act to improve enforcement of orders. One of these proposals is to use the Federal Court of Canada as an enforcement mechanism. Maintenance orders differ from other civil judgments in that they tend to create continuing liability based on the means of the debtor and the needs of the creditor, and are subject to variation because of the circumstances of the parties may change. It is suggested that new Federal Court rules could provide for garnishment orders which would effect collection and minimize cost and effort for the creditor while, at the same time, avoiding any injustice to the debtor. Like most garnishment orders, the order could be obtained ex parte and payment could be made directly to the creditor. This is not unlike the proposal contained in the Bill before us now which has been put down by the Hon. Member for Capilano. Both of these concepts are being studied within Government with a view to determining their implications.

Mr. Speaker, much of the difficulty in enforcement of maintenance orders arises as a result of inability to locate the delinquent debtor. The current Divorce Act does not deal with the problems relating to the tracing of a person in order to obtain or enforce a maintenance order. The only federal law which partly deals with support and enforcement of custody orders is the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act. That Act provides that provincial laws will apply to procedures taken under the Act. There is a specific provision indicating that where any inconsistency or conflict exists between a provincial garnishment law and any Act or regulation of the Parliament of Canada, the federal law will prevail. Therefore, in proceedings against federal employees, provisions in federal laws, such as income tax laws, unemployment insurance, or the Canada Pension Plan, that secure the confidentiality of records will prevail over tracing provisions of any provincial garnishment law.

Certain Provinces have passed legislation requiring their government offices to release address particulars or information which could lead to the determination of the whereabouts of those debtors. The federal Government is now canvassing a number of options for development of a tracing mechanism within the federal data bank system. Federal statutes, such as the Income Tax Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act, which prohibit access to federal data banks, are being reviewed with a view to possible amendments. The Government is also interested in exploring with the provincial Governments the possibility of a central agency which might have a national computerized system for tracing such individuals. There is a suggestion that such a tracing system involving release of information raises questions of invasion of privacy. And so they do. The issue, Mr. Speaker, simply stated is; when should the public interest protecting information supplied to the federal Government yield to the public interest in ensuring compliance of maintainance orders?

The current Access to Information Act which has recently passed in Parliament does allow all members of the public access to Government materials requested by them. But it specifically does not permit disclosure of personal information. Address and employment particulars are, of course, of this nature. In addition, the Privacy Act prohibits the disclosure and use of all personal information, including address particulars, under the control of a Government institution, without the consent of the individual to whom it relates. The policy of the Privacy Act is to protect the confidentiality of information given by individuals. This policy is implemented by prohibiting release of information concerning an individual, except where it is specifically authorized as an exception to the general rule.

In this context, the Government is now proceeding to consult human rights and other interest groups across Canada regarding ways to balance enforcement of maintenance and custody orders with protection of privacy. The results of these consultations will contribute largely to the establishment of a federal position on the release of information.

The concerns covered in this particular Bill, Mr. Speaker, are concerns which have been the concerns of several jurisdictions in Canada for many years. In 1981, a federal-provincial committee was established on the enforcement of maintenance and custody orders. That committee had a twofold mandate. Its first mandate was to canvas the existing range of enforcement remedies across the country. Flowing from that, it was to identify and suggest to Government means of improvement of enforcement. That committee did a fair amount of work under the aegis of the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Attorneys General of the ten Provinces. It submitted a report which identified three areas for action. These were areas within provincial jurisdiction, federal jurisdiction and areas that have some joint federal and provincial jurisdictional connotations. The committee was asked to look at the third category again. The attorneys general themselves have also looked at it. I understand that the results of the work of that committee are now at the point where the various jurisdictions are contemplating what can be done in a regulatory and legislative way at the provincial levels, the federal level and jointly, as the case may be, to effect something nearer a resolution to the problem that we are talking about this afternoon.

I believe everybody in this House, Mr. Speaker, is very sympathetic to the concerns which are embodied in this Bill. At the same time, if the proposals contained in this Bill are legislated they would have certain implications. It is for that reason that I would support the fullest possible discussion and airing of the concerns that are involved. At the same time, I would not want to see this Bill come to a vote this afternoon. The many matters relating to enforcement of maintenance and custody orders are under active review by the federal-provincial committee to which I previously made reference. It is only fair that we not in any way short circuit the very good work which is being done by the Attorneys General and their respective staffs across this country.

The problem is one that begs solution. The gentleman for Cariboo-Chilcotin used words like "delaying and stonewalling over a 10 or 11 year period". It is a good phrase, but I do not think it appllies in this situation. I do not think anyone in this country, barring the few people who are keeping their whereabouts secret to avoid the enforcement of those maintenance orders, wants to stonewall this particular issue. I find that many people in every jurisdiction would like to find a solution to the problem. I find that many people would like the legislators and those who write the regulations to find an effective way to ensure more complete enforcement of those maintenance and custody orders. I do not believe it is a fair suggestion that anyone has been stonewalling. As soon as we talk about stonewalling we must say why we think they are stonewalling and what purpose, what motive, can be served.

Mr. Greenaway: Indifference.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin says "indifference".

Mr. Huntington: And apathy.

Mr. Simmons: These are possible motives. I do not believe they are realistic under the circumstances because so many of us, as legislators and as individuals, are affected by the inadequacies of the present system. I believe that there is indifference and apathy about many things in this country. I do not believe this is an issue about which there is indifference. There is a concern by Attorneys General to find a solution, not a half solution which will create more problems than it solves.

Mr. Huntington: Tell us about those problems.

Mr. Simmons: I will tell the Hon. Member for Capilano about the problems. I mentioned a moment ago the problem of squaring the requirements of privacy considerations with the requirements for information to better enforce those maintenance orders. That is one of the problems. If the Hon. Member has a short answer to that problem, he ought to give it to the House. There are concerns on both sides and somewhere we have to strike a balance.

I have given an undertaking this afternoon on behalf of the Government that once the issue has been fully canvassed—and it is being canvassed pretty actively right now—this Government will indicate to the House its position on that particular issue. If the Hon. Member is asking if all the problems are solved, the answer is, clearly, no. If he is asking, do we support the spirit of what he is proposing, the answer is an unqualified

yes. If he is asking if there is apathy, the answer is no. If he is asking if there is indifference, the answer is, categorically, no. It has nothing to do with indifference or with apathy. I know it is easy to characterize it in that particular way, but it serves no useful purpose. This is not an issue which ought to have any partisan connotations. It is an issue which affects many of us as legislators and many of us and our friends as individuals. I believe there is a willingness to get on with the job, but let us get on with the job in the right direction. Let us not create more problems than we solve by a half-baked solution. I am not suggesting that the gentleman—

Mr. Huntington: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think I would like to caution the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons). When he says it is a half-baked solution, I would like him to know that two lawyers in the Parliamentary Counsel's office worked for over three weeks, night and day, and a Family Court lawyer in Vancouver worked for some six months, putting this issue into a form which would allow—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair has heard the Hon. Member for Capilano. However, this is hardly a point of order. It is a contribution to debate. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's has one minute left.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, had my good friend from Capilano listened, not only to my second to last sentence but to my last one as well, he would have heard in my last sentence, when he was drafting his point of order, that I am not suggesting this Bill is a half-baked solution. I do not for a moment suggest that. In my opening remarks I commended him for allowing the House to air this particular issue again. I know the Hon. Member is very committed to this issue. I am very committed to this issue as well. The Hon. Member does not have the waterfront fenced off on this particular issue. It is an issue we are all concerned about, and the sooner we express our concern in a non-partisan fashion, the better we will serve the victims of the present inadequacies of the system.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased this afternoon to take part in this debate on maintenance. It is an extremely important matter and one which the women's movement of Canada has been concerned about for years, and on which it has been making proposals.

Bill C-250 which is before us today is one solution to the problem, but it is a solution which shows the constraints on a private Member's Bill. This is a matter in which we need more than a Private Member's Bill, clearly, but it certainly lays before us the problem and does give us an opportunity to address it, so I welcome that opportunity and I commend the Hon. Member for giving us at least one reasonable solution to the problem.

The object is the automatic enforcement of maintenance orders, fast and efficient enforcement without costly and prolonged effort on the part of the dependent spouse who needs the money. Overwhelmingly, that is a woman with dependent children who is in desperate need. The facts are only too well known. Back in 1971-1972, an Ontario study showed that only 58 per cent of maintenance orders were paid. Since then, the figures have become even worse. A Calgary study more recently showed that 85 per cent of maintenance orders were in default to some degree or other. Of these orders, 50 per cent were in substantial default. Current estimates over-all show that 75 per cent of maintenance orders are in default to some degree or other. Overwhelmingly, maintenance orders are not being respected. We know that this means large numbers of mainly women and children living below the poverty line.

At the same time, we know that improved methods of enforcement do work. Manitoba has instituted a system of automatic enforcement with a computer as back-up. In the first ten months of operation, the enforcement of maintenance orders was improved by 70 per cent. I believe this is an extremely interesting figure which shows this kind of improvement. That was in 1980. And we can expect further improvement as the system has more time to evolve. Quebec has improved its system of enforcement of maintenance orders as well.

I believe this puts a different face on the contention in previous debates on the subject that the reason that so many maintenance orders were not respected was a lack of money on the part of the person against whom the order was issued. The then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice on the last day this Bill was debated actually said that in 50 per cent of the cases there simply was not any money to collect. Clearly this is false. A 70 per cent improvement shows there is a lot of money out there which is not being collected because there has not been the will to do it and the mechanisms have not been put in place. When the Parliamentary Secretary made that remark, he had no evidence. It was just an excuse for complacency, and we have had more examples of that complacency this afternoon on the part of the previous speaker.

We know that on average, women earn 60 per cent of what men do for full-time work. A woman raising children is more likely to be working only part-time and earning even less than 60 per cent. Therefore, if maintenance orders are not paid, this puts an enormous burden on people who have much less opportunity to bring home the income to pay for the family. The male breadwinner in the situation has a far better opportunity and certainly has the obligation to pay that maintenance money.

Let me comment specifically on what is wrong with the Bill before us this afternoon. Bill C-250 would keep the enforcement of maintenance orders at the level of superior courts. Unfortunately, the superior courts of the Provinces are the worst courts to have this responsibility because their procedures are cumbersome, there is a long waiting list and the costs are higher. It is faster and much less costly for maintenance orders to be dealt with at the provincial Family Court level.

● (1600)

This Bill at least puts the impetus where it should be, that it is up to the court to act, not the individual. The Law Reform Commission in its paper on enforcement of maintenance orders back in 1976 said that the courts must in future assume the leading role in the enforcement of maintenance orders in Canada. Nothing is more obvious than that the traditional methods of enforcing judgment debts are singularly ineffective when it comes to maintenance orders. That was a number of years ago and we have not had adequate action since.

We have to ask the question: is going the Superior Court route the best way? I suggest not. We must have consultation with the Provinces and agreement on how to handle enforcement of maintenance orders. This is not something to be imposed by Parliament on the Provinces. Unilateral action by the federal Parliament is not good federalism. Further, there would be confusion in areas, such as Saskatchewan and Hamilton, where there are unified Family Courts. There divorces are handled not by a Superior Court but by a unified Family Court and it makes sense to continue those provisions. I suggest that better provisions for handling this matter have been proposed by the federal-provincial Committee on the Enforcement of Maintenance and Custody Orders in Canada. Just last summer this committee made a large number of recommendations for federal and provincial, and in some cases joint, action. I want to go over some of those which are relevant to our subject this afternoon.

One recommendation is to amend Section 15 of the Divorce Act to enable ancillary maintenance and custody orders to be registered in any court designated by the Provinces in addition to or instead of the Superior Court. This would give much greater flexibility, lower costs and much greater access. It would permit direct, one step registration of federal orders in Family Courts without the need to register in a Superior Court or use the reciprocal provincial legislation. Once registered, the order would have the same effect as if it had been issued by that court originally. That is a very practical solution and one I certainly commend.

This same committee made a number of other recommendations which are worth citing here. The introduction of a computerized system for monitoring maintenance payments as opposed to a manual system was suggested. A lot of our problem here is simply technological. We have the technology to solve much of the problem, which Manitoba and Quebec have shown. This means state-initiated enforcement, not individual initiated. We also need prompt enforcement without requiring the person to return to court to re-litigate. It should be understood that once the order is issued, it can be treated and enforced as any other court order without the requirement of the person returning to seek further enforcement measures.

Other recommendations would require provincial and federal bodies to release information required to locate persons defaulting on maintenance payments or, for that matter, in custody matters. Clearly, this is a very important matter and it should be pursued.

The previous speaker gave the excuse that there are issues of privacy at stake and he mused as to what the answer was. Is there a short answer? I suggest there is. Privacy is important but not more important than the sustenance of a family. Privacy is not more important than having an adequate amount of food on the table and the ability to pay the rent. We have too often taken the view that the person who earns the income in a family somehow has the right to spend it himself. This is clearly inappropriate. When a couple start a family there is, if not a written contract, an implied contract that the person who does not go into the labour force but looks after the children has a claim on maintenance. We simply cannot allow the breadwinner to stand on his high-horse and say, "Privacy about my financial affairs is more important that your having food on the table". There is an implied responsibility for maintenance, and that should be respected.

Another measure we need is to abolish the one-year time limit on maintenance orders. There should not be any limit. Sometimes defaults go on for a very long time and the courts have not allowed people to collect for maintenance which is more than one year overdue. There may be some instances when full recovery would be unfair and these could be looked after, but there is no reason to have an arbitrary limit on maintenance defaults.

There should be the opportunity for changes in orders to be made by a court other than the court which issued the order. This could be done in cases of mutual consent. If one party leaves the Province, there may be very good reasons for allowing another court to alter the arrangement. Legislation is also required to permit lump sum maintenance payments. This has been thrown into some ambiguity as a result of a recent court case, and we need to make it clear that in some cases this would be a very effective solution to a family's problem and we should be able to facilitate this. We need greater flexibility and we need the legislation to facilitate it.

We need legislation to provide access to other moneys of the defaulter, for example, income tax refunds, unemployment insurance and pension benefits. These are all part of the regular wage or salary, either a deferred wage or a payment in the case of unemployment insurance which is like a wage. Clearly the same principle holds, that the people dependent on the breadwinner have a real, legitimate claim on that money. Right now our laws forbid access.

Together the federal and provincial Governments must develop uniform divorce rules under the Divorce Act for the enforcement of maintenance and custody orders. We need federal-provincial co-operation to work out a flexible and efficient system.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has indicated he will be bringing in a new divorce Act. We have some indication as to what will be in it from a report released this summer regarding no-fault divorce. This is relevant to the issue of maintenance because it is partly as a result of the adversial system which couples must go through in getting a divorce that maintenance payments are not made. One spouse must sue the other for divorce, lay blame, and this means the other spouse has to reply and find blame on the other side. In other words, our current laws on divorce create a climate of hostility and acrimony, and clearly this does not facilitate practical measures for the ongoing support of the children. The parents need to be able to work together to bring about a settlement which will be good for the entire family. Thus divorce reform in the direction of no-fault divorce would be a considerable step toward getting maintenance payments actually paid on time.

I do not want to say that I am in agreement with all aspects of the proposals the Minister indicated in the case of divorce reform, but the general lines are certainly very good and healthy ones and would certainly be relevant to the subject before us this afternoon.

Before closing I would like to mention another loophole, that is the garnishment of wages of federal Public Servants. This was passed recently but, as we found out all too sadly, there were a number of loopholes. Members of Parliament, Senators and staff on the Hill were exempted, and it is not clear as to the coverage of judges. Thus I welcome the introduction of a Bill by the Minister of Justice today to close those loopholes. I will certainly support the amendments that he is proposing.

I wish to make a few comments on the remarks made by the previous speaker. They do reflect some complacency. This matter has been before us for a very long time and the Hon. Member said there was no instance of stonewalling. He wondered why this issue was raised, and we heard some remarks to the effect that there was a lack of purpose in aggressively pursuing constructive proposals to improve the enforcement of maintenance orders.

I suggest that if the Hon. Member is correct and it has simply taken some time to address this, and that the provincial Attorneys General and federal authorities are working on it, the test of the sincerity of the federal Government will be if it brings in its own legislation promptly which better meets the needs of families. It should be doing this very promptly.

A Government Bill on this issue is needed since a Private Member's Bill cannot address all of the matters that come before us. However, we cannot wait year after year for this is not the solution and many of the problems could be regulated very quickly. It is not necessary, for instance, to make a false issue of the problem of privacy. Therefore, the test of sincerity is new legislation. While the Divorce Act must be part of it, we must see follow-up measures to the proposals of the federal-provincial Committee on Maintenance and Custody. We must have the Government's response to these very concrete proposals which were made and we need legislation along those lines. Federal-provincial agreements are necessary, including dates and times, so that we can proceed with this promptly.

In closing I say that I certainly support the intent of this Bill. If the Government is going to talk it out, I would challenge it to be very clear in its indication as to what better legislation it will bring in in its place, and when.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. I believe that the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. MacDonald) very clearly stated the reasons for this Bill. Its intent is laudable and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is again to be congratulated for giving us an opportunity to debate this Bill. However, I suggest that a Government Bill which gives strong legislation and achieves what everyone this afternoon has suggested should be the intent of such legislation will eventually be part of the Government's Bill.

Enforcement of maintenance and custody orders both prior to and upon divorce has traditionally been perceived as falling within the general rubric of property and civil rights; subjects which, as a matter of constitutional law, are determined by provincial Governments and legislatures. While Parliament, under constitutional authority for marriage and divorce, has passed laws governing the award of support and custody orders, both pending the divorce hearing and upon the granting of a decree, these orders once awarded are enforced by the courts within each Province. Section 15 of the Divorce Act is authority for this proposition and states as follows:

> An order made under Section 10 or 11 by any court may be registered in any other superior court in Canada and may be enforced in like manner as an order of that superior court or in such other manner as is provided for by any rules of court or regulations made under Section 19.

As there have been no such regulations enacted by the Governor in Council pursuant to Section 19, the rules of court in each Province provide for the registration and enforcement of orders made under the Divorce Act. The role of the federal Government, as a result, remains largely a facilitative one, assisting in the enforcement of orders as far as it is able to do so with respect to matters within federal jurisdiction.

It has been estimated that approximately 75 per cent of maintenance orders in Canada are not enforced. This poses a considerable problem for financially dependent family members and creates disrespect for the administration of justice. In addition, because separated and divorced spouses are extremely mobile, difficulties arise with respect to enforcement of these orders across interprovincial boundaries. The federal Government has undertaken a review of a number of initiatives designed to improve the enforcement of maintenance orders in Canada.

One proposal which has been advanced is to amend the Divorce Act by adding a provision that specifically provides for garnishment orders. This proposal is rather akin to that set out in the Private Members' Bill. The Bill of the Hon. Member for Capilano suggests that the wages and salaries of Public Servants should be subject to garnishment. This is a proposition with which the Government has agreed for some time and it introduced legislation in Parliament in May, 1978 to meet the problem. On March 11 of this year, Part I of the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act came into force. This Act permits, under provincial law, the garnishment or attachment of wages of federal employees for the purpose of enforcing civil orders and judgments including maintenance orders. Part II of the Act, when in force, will permit the diversion of superannuation benefits of retired federal employees for the purpose of enforcing family support orders although not to satisfy ordinary debts.

The justification under law for the old immunity was founded on the ancient concept of the Royal Prerogative which holds that since a court cannot make a binding order against Her Majesty's moneys and properties, a garnishment order may not be made in respect of a debt due by the Crown to a third person. As a consequence of this immunity of the Crown's purse, the salaries of civil servants and others who receive payment from the Crown have traditionally been exempt from garnishment or attachment. One of the most serious effects of this has been in the enforcement of maintenance orders where it has been very difficult until now to require a federal public servant to pay family support in cases of desertion, separation or divorce.

Most of the Provinces have now enacted legislation enabling the salaries of civil servants to be garnisheed. These legislative initiatives have received wide support and will assist in the enforcement of maintenance orders against those who receive their pay or benefits from the federal or provincial Crown.

The procedure under the federal law is designed to generate effective results as quickly as possible. If a person is owed family support payments and has a valid and enforceable family support order from a Canadian court, there are two possible ways in which the Act can assist. If the spouse or a former spouse owing the payment is a federal employee, the Act allows his or her salary to be garnisheed. To effect a garnishee, the person must have obtained a valid court order to judgment ordering the employee to pay money for family support or another type of debt. The person must ensure that the court order or judgment can be enforced under provincial laws. The next step is to send a notice of intent to the Department of Justice or one of its agents, as set out in the regulations. The notice includes the employee's name, employing department, place of work and other information that will locate him. There is then only a 30-day waiting period after which an application may be made to the court to have a garnishee summons issued, presuming, of course, the person is employed. The garnishment order is served by registered mail for personal service at the same place as the original notice of intent. The federal Government pays the money into court and the court will then make the appropriate payments. If the spouse or former spouse receives a pension from the federal Government, the Act may allow a portion of that pension to be taken. However, the Act does not apply to all federal pensions. For example, it does not affect veterans' pensions, old age security, Canada Pension Plan benefits or disability allowances. It also does not apply to unemployment insurance benefits or income tax refunds. To get a pension diversion the person must also have obtained a valid family support order from a Canadian court and ensure that it is enforceable under provincial law.

● (1620)

Another proposal which has recently been studied by the Government is of especial interest in the context of the Hon. Member for Capilano's Bill relating to variations of a divorce maintenance order.

Alimony and Maintenance

Currently, Section 11(2) of the Divorce Act reads as follows:

An order made pursuant to this Section may be varied from time to time or rescinded by the court that made the order if it thinks it is fit and just to do so having regard tro the conduct of the parties since the making of the order or any change in the condition, means or other circumstances of either of them.

Section 11(2) has been interpreted so as to prevent variation of a maintenance order by any court other than the originating court. Due to the mobility of the Canadian population, particularly after divorce, this interpretation has caused considerable difficulty for the applicant seeking a variation. It requires returning to the previous Province of residence, often entailing lengthy trips with attendant cost and delay. If the section could be amended or at least clarified, considerable savings in terms of time and money for both the applicant and the family members could be realized.

I hope I have added something to the debate which indicates there is need for further study before this Bill is enacted.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I like the basic thrust of the amendments. One of the propositions that I put forward is that what we are talking about here is money. It struck me that what we should be looking to and asking the Ministers of Justice for the federal and provincial Governments to do is to establish a federal-provincial revolving fund. All payments made under Family Court decisions, whether they are made in British Columbia or Ontario, should be paid into a revolving fund. Where an individual is delinquent in making payments—in most cases it is his payments rather than hers—then it would be the court that would go after the individual who was delinquent. But the woman looking after herself and her children would not have to be waiting and wondering about filing judgment summonses, show cause summonses, getting a new court order or getting an amendment of an order. She would have the assurance that the money would be coming in on a regular monthly or weekly basis, according to whatever the terms of the particular divorce decree were.

In dealing with this matter as I did in my own law practice, I found that the vast majority of individuals required to pay do, in fact, pay. It is those few who abscond or leave a particular jurisdiction who do not make their payments. In order to get those payments you have to get another Province to recognize your court order. Then you have to get a judgment summons issued. The court makes an order that the person shall pay. Then, if they do not pay, the individual comes up on a show cause summons. All of this sounds very simple but it can take months to get this kind of an operation rolling.

It strikes me that what we are looking at here is to assure a person who already has a court order, who is entitled to rely on that court order, that he or she will be receiving funds on a regular scheduled basis. They cannot do that at the present time. Why should Ministers of Justice, federal and provincial, not get together, set up this fund and have the people know they are going to have regular payments coming in to them? If there is an application made to vary a court order, that can be done. If an individual is laid off and cannot keep up the payments, an application can be made to the court to vary the order as it is done at the present time. But the person who is suffering will not be suffering if we have a federal-provincial fund that will say to the deserted wife or the deserted wife and children, or the person who has not been economically deserted until there is a missed payment, that the individual can now rely on the court order, that a cheque will be issued on a regular basis.

This procedure would also give the opportunity to have people hired by the court or hired by whatever Crown corporation to follow an individual and make certain that individual does keep up his payments.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS ACT, 1980

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 2(2)(F)

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending Section 2.(2)(f) of the Municipal Grants Act, 1980, in order to include paragraphs 3 and 4 of Schedule II dealing with docks, wharves, piers, piles, dolphins, floats, breakwaters, retaining walls, jetties and drydocks which should be taken into account in the determination of grants to be paid to municipalities in lieu of taxes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you just indicated, I have tabled a motion for the purpose of amending Bill C-4 which was passed by the House on July 15, 1980. The purpose of this motion is to amend, and this may seem somewhat complicated, Section 2(2)(f) in order to include paragraphs 3 and 4 of Schedule II, and so forth. The House will recall that at the beginning of this session, on July 15, 1980, as I said earlier, a Bill was passed, with the unanimous consent of all Parties of this House, and I think that is very important, a Bill known as the Municipal Grants Act, the official title being: An Act respecting grants to municipalities, provinces and other bodies exercising functions of local government that levy real property taxes.

This Bill, of course, dealt with the problem of relations that exist or ought to exist between the Government of Canada and Quebec municipalities. The issue has been raised several times in recent months by PQ politicians who touched on various questions which, I feel, should be analyzed in the light of the motion I have tabled which concerns more specifically the inclusion, in the determination of grants in lieu of taxes for instance, in the riding of Lévis, of dry docks that belong to the federal Government, and in Lauzon, of dry docks located within the area occupied by Davie Shipbuilding, a company that is well-known in the Quebec City area.

In adopting Bill C-4, the Government of Canada saw itself as a taxpayer with the same obligations as all citizens of this country. The Bill is an important piece of legislation for the Government because it sets the conditions under which the Government determines the grants to be paid to municipalities in return for the benefits it enjoys at the local level. Through this legislation, the Canadian Government has agreed to act as a responsible citizen who understands that the services he receives must be paid for by all residents of a municipality, since otherwise municipal costs are not shared equitably.

It is in the interests of senior levels of Government to ensure that municipal and urban structures are sufficiently sound for municipalities to fulfil their role adequately. Our Constitution recognizes the exclusive authority of the Provinces to legislate with respect to municipal institutions and on other matters of a local and private nature. A municipality owes its existence to the province, it has no inherent jurisdiction and it can only exercise such functions and powers as may have been delegated by the province. The Canadian Government acknowledges those characteristics of the Canadian Constitution.

Section 125 of that Constitution prescribes that Crown property is not liable to taxation. That section notwithstanding, over the years the higher levels of both federal and provincial Governments grew to the extent that they account for a sizeable share of landed property. At the municipal level, taxation geared to benefits received improves the quality of local democratic life and the efficiency of services, in short it makes the local Governments more stable and more responsible. One must admit that, with respect to most municipal services, it is difficult, if not impossible, to put an exact cost on services rendered to a given citizen. In Lauzon, for instance, it is difficult to identify the cost of services rendered by the city to the Canadian Government with respect to drydocks, for example.

A tax load sharing mechanism based on a fair index of benefits received in the form of unspecified collective services must be used. Traditionally, it has been considered that the real value of taxable landed property is indeed a fair index of benefits received. The recording of the real value is done on the basis of the same concept, the concept of market value which is the basic value used for many decades in real estate assessment and which has often been generally accepted in the field of jurisprudence in Quebec and in the other Canadian provinces. Tax equity calls for the integrity of the tax basis and each owner of landed property belongs to a local community and benefits from available services. It is only fair therefore that he should pay his share of the costs calculated on the basis of the sharing index which has been accepted.

In that context, any exception to the rule under which the real value of landed property is assessed distorts cost sharing and is unfair to the other ratepayers. Understandably, many exceptions have already been accepted, either because of tradition or jurisprudence. For instance, exceptions are made with respect to mines, oil fields and, in certain cases, highway corridors.

Such particular situations result in changes to the distribution of real costs and in the preferential treatment of certain ratepayers at the expense of others. For constitutional considerations, the higher levels of Governments do not look upon themselves as being ordinary ratepayers, but that should not be an excuse to disregard the general rules under which the costs of municipal services is shared among landed property owners.

When I say higher levels of Governments, I do include both the Government of Quebec—I happen to represent a Quebec riding—and the Government of Canada. I think that neither level of Government can teach us a lesson in that respect. They too have to consider themselves as being full-fledged ratepayers, but they have not always done so, although in recent years particularly, as a result of Bill C-4, they have shown good will.

Schedule II of Bill C-4 includes drydocks, among other things, which means that the value of that real property cannot be a factor when assessing the value to determine the grant to be paid to the municipality involved. According to generally accepted real estate assessment principles, it seems that such structures or facilities should be included in the books of the municipality which expects to collect money from owners of landed property. In the case of the City of Lauzon, the inclusion of Lorne and Champlain drydocks changes the calculations altogether. For instance, in the City of Lauzon, on the basis of the data provided and of the 1982 rates, the properties belonging to the Government of Canada should be assessed at some $22 million. According to the 1982 rates, the assessment in this one city should be $22 million.

But, if the drydocks are excluded, the assessment of these properties would be ten times smaller. The fact is that drydocks are of great value and also that there are not many drydocks which belong to the Government of Canada. I agree that this is a local and specific case, but following representations by officials of the City of Lauzon, we felt it was quite proper for us to move this motion, so that the government understand that although this legislation was adopted by all the parties in the House, there might be cases where exemptions would prove detrimental to the people of a city in particular.

I hope that the leaders and members of all parties will take note of the exemption which I referred to as far as drydocks are concerned.

When raising the problem of grants paid in lieu of taxes to municipalities, I think that it is difficult for us not to point out the position of the Quebec government. It cannot be overlooked since we want to assess the attitude of the Government of Canada compared with that of the Quebec government towards the municipalities. It would be advisable for the purposes of this debate to show for example what the intervention of the Quebec and Ottawa governments means in the case of the City of Lauzon. We have heard lately the star performers of the PQ government systematically spread rumours among the Canadian people saying that the government of Canada does not always act like a good taxpayer. I admit that, in this case, there may be minor difficulties but when you want to accuse a neighbour, you have to be faultless. The Quebec government is often like the pot calling the kettle black.

Let me give an example. In the same City of Lauzon, the municipal taxation system put into effect by the Quebec government meant a loss of revenue of $235,132. And this is due to the assessment of buildings and properties belonging to the Quebec government such as the schools, the CEGEP and the social affairs buildings. According to the figures provided to us, an amount of $235,132 which would normally have been paid to the taxpayers of the City of Lauzon in the past years was not paid because of the Quebec legislation.

Recently, another bill was tabled in the National Assembly. I refer to Bill 38, also dealing with grants paid to municipalities and more particularly grants coming from the federal government. The ostensible purpose of Bill 38 as restated by Mr. Lévesque during the weekend, is to prevent municipalities from accepting any federal grant. But, strangely enough, the first lines of the bill make it quite clear that federal grants in lieu of taxes are not covered by this bill.

There are two ways for the federal Government to help municipalities. In the case of taxes, the Quebec Government says that Ottawa can make grants in lieu of taxes. In the case of other subsidies, for instance to create jobs, the Quebec Government says: "No, you cannot accept subsidies; if you do, there will be certain penalties, such as reductions in the amounts that we owe you under the Quebec taxation system." This would mean for instance that, in the case of the City of Lauzon—and I shall come back to that later as I have a very good example in this regard—if this city had directly or indirectly, at the discretion of the Quebec Government, accepted any amount, such as $100,000, from the federal Government for a job-creation program, next year, the Quebec Government might decide that these $100,000 would be subtracted from the amount of taxes payable to the municipality of Lauzon, because the province does not want the Government of Canada to be in contact with the municipalities.

As a matter of fact, I learned a few days ago that the Canadian Government had granted to the Lauzon Skiing Centre the amount of $100,000 to provide ski lifts, snow-making machines and lights so that the skiers of the Lauzon region could practice their sport over a longer period, in the evenings, and also in somewhat better conditions. However, officials of the Quebec Department of Municipal Affairs, and Mr. Léonard, as well as the officials of the Lévis region very likely got in touch with the Quebec Government, an investigation was launched and we shall probably never be able to give to the Lauzon Skiing Centre the $100,000 we had announced. In fact, we shall probably have to get this money back because it has been decided that Bill 38, which has not yet been passed, still applies. Because of this, yesterday, or rather Monday, Mr. Léonard told the owners of the skiing centre that they would have to look somewhere else and could not count on these $100,000. Under the circumstances, I can understand why the mayor, the councillors and the officials of the City of Lauzon have said no, because this would disrupt their budget for next year as they were given a very clear warning: "If you receive one cent from the federal Government, it will be taken away or there will be an attempt to take it away some other way". I do not think that anyone administering a budget at a local level such as a municipality, can hold on if someone tells him that, in six months, X dollars may be deducted from the amount that municipality would have otherwise received under the taxation system.

We have to look at the whole context. What I am asking today is that Bill C-4 be amended so that we may include dry docks when calculating the amount of grants in lieu of taxes in the future. I know that this would meet a very local need, but I believe that it would show that the Canadian Government is an even better citizen than the Quebec Government, which can only complain even though it is much more often at fault than the Canadian Government, and I am sure that, in this case, this amendment would be useful to the officials of the City of lauzon, who are extremely important officials in our democracy and if they have all the money they need to administer their municipality, they can certainly be more independent towards the present Quebec Government and resist its efforts to take away their autonomy. In view of the circumstances, I therefore ask this House to support my motion.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to make a few comments on the motion tabled by the Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde). We are of course well aware of the fact that the federal Government ought to behave like a good citizen and pay taxes according to the properties it owns in various areas in our country, not only in Lauzon but across Canada. I quite agree with the principle of the recommendation made by the Member for Lévis today. I shall comment later on some remarks which had no connection with his actual recommendation. The fact remains that facilities similar or identical to those in Lauzon also exist, for instance, in Selkirk, Manitoba and Esquimalt, British Columbia. I think the Member for Lévis will agree that his proposal should have extended beyond his riding and included all facilities similar to the ones he wishes to protect, and the municipalities, and I think that if the Government is going to do something for a municipality to correct a situation where the federal presence is not paying a reasonable amount of taxes, I think it should do the same for any municipality with similar facilities across Canada. I think that logic and the law oblige us to speak for all municipalities that might be concerned by this recommendation, namely, the federal Government should pay a normal amount of taxes.

The House is aware that since 1980, Bill C-4 has been providing such protection and ensures that municipalities receive grants in lieu of taxes. The federal Government uses the word grants, and I must object very strenuously when the Member for Lévis makes a comparison between the Government of Quebec and the federal Government in connection with the grants the federal Government is prepared to pay in the riding of Lévis or other municipalities, and I am still referring to certain facilities, and when he makes a comparison between grants and draws or infers certain conclusions with respect to Quebec Bill 38 which has not yet been adopted. Just the same, where the Canadian Government is concerned, there is no need for Quebec to say that the Canadian Government pays its taxes, that it behaves like a good citizen and that it subsidizes the people of Quebec. The grant we are discussing here is nothing but a property tax paid by the Canadian Government. Then this is not the kind of grant often referred to by Quebec, namely for employment programs, programs that can generate work for community services. At this stage, I have serious reservations with respect to the Hon. Member for Lévis, namely that on both sides there is a lack of adjustments with regard to the agreements and a lack of co-operation, and I understand that Quebec is once again in the process of negotiating possible agreements with the Canadian government, and I would appreciate it if the Canadian government were to respond as quickly as possible, and if Quebec were to do its share also in seeking solutions that would of course be acceptable to the Quebecers, who are Canadians as much as you and I, Mr. Speaker.

In the circumstances, I feel that the Hon. Member for Lévis has very poorly substantiated his point when he simply suggested that his proposal could be held as evidence that the Canadian government is a better citizen than Quebec. I do not think this could impress many of us here, Mr. Speaker. That is not the issue. The Hon. Member for Lévis is making a suggestion. He is advising the Government, his own Government in the first place, to pay its taxes to the City of Lévis. Nothing could be more legitimate. Although I have nothing to do with the constituency of Lévis, I agree that of course the Canadian Government should pay its taxes to the City of Lévis. The legislation excluded the dry docks two years ago, nearly three years ago. The Hon. Member for Lévis is a Government Member, so let it be known to the people of the constituency of Lévis that we of the Progressive Conservative Party, are not preventing the City of Lévis from receiving increased taxes. Therefore, I say right now, on behalf of my party, that we are not going to prevent the City of Lauzon from collecting extra taxes in respect of federal facilities that seem to have been ignored or excluded in good faith.

An Hon. Member: This was agreed upon unanimously.

Mr. La Salle: It was agreed upon unanimously, but the dry docks are not included in the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has the floor. He should not be interrupted.

Mr. La Salle: You are absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. I did listen religiously and respectfully when the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) was speaking. Yes, I listened to him. He is asking his Government, which means—and it is important that the voters in Lévis should know about it—that for the past three years, he has been, I would assume, making representations to this Minister, the Ministers involved, the Cabinet, but to no avail, so today he has to resort to this procedure which enables us to put forward motions and proposals under the heading of Private Bills. Has the Hon. Member for Lévis failed to influence his own Government into supporting such a change? If his Minister were to come in this House and introduce such a measure, we would say yes, the same way we are saying yes today to the Hon. Member for Lévis. But the Hon. Member for Lévis knows one thing, and this is important and rather sly in this case, as I say, the Hon. Member for Lévis knows one thing: he is going to make his point, he is going to take this opportunity to blame the Quebec Government for not being as good a citizen as the Canadian Government. This is not very relevant to the principle he his advocating today. One thing he knows, there is a good chance that his own colleagues will kill his motion today by talking it out in the House of Commons. You know the system.

So the Hon. Member for Lévis would very much like to tell his constituents: I asked very strongly for extra taxes for the City of Lévis, but the House of Commons said no. It will not be the House of Commons, it will be his own Government who will block that, his colleagues with whom he has been working for some years now. And that is important, for the House should not mislead the people of the Lévis riding, or of any riding for that matter. We know the system. Indeed we do share the concerns of the Hon. Member for Lévis, and we want the city of Lauzon as well as other municipalities with similar or identical facilities to receive additional taxes, I mean, grants. However, we are quite aware that this is not the best way to raise this issue. We, the opposition have no other choice when the government is adamant than introducing private bills to let the public know that we really want the government to heed our proposals. Although he would not admit it, the Hon. Member for Lévis knows that he will have to confess to his constituents his miserable failure at his own caucus and before the Cabinet. He is moving this motion in the House today to convince his constituents that he strongly and honestly defends their position, knowing as well as I do—dare I be presumptuous too—that his own colleagues will kill his motion. I should like his Lévis constituents to know that the Progressive Conservative Party supports the principle he has put forward. The Liberal Party alone will have to assume the responsibility for denying the request of the Hon. Member who knew what was coming the very moment he stood up in the House today, Mr. Speaker.

So, we support his motion. We understand his strategy, and hope that the Government will be in favour of grants in lieu of the taxes which the Government of Canada is paying on its properties in various municipalities throughout Canada. Once again, I want to speak for those municipalities which are in the same situation as Lauzon, and I would be most pleased if the Government's answer was positive, but I have grave doubts on that score. I want to say at the outset that we on this side, Mr. Speaker—and I will not go any further, but I could not sit down without upbraiding the Hon. Member for Lévis for playing petty politics at the expense of the Quebec provincial Government about a matter which is essentially a federal one and for neglecting to make a distinction between grants which are a kind of federal tax payable to municipalities and grants which may be paid to municipalities under programs established by the federal Government in the area of job creation, industrial incentives or development. There is quite a difference! One should not mix up apples and oranges, Mr. Speaker, either in this Parliament or elsewhere.

The question under consideration today concerns the federal Government. The Quebec Government has nothing whatsoever to do with it. It is not involved. However, has the federal Government carried out its duty? Does the federal Government meet the qualification of good citizen mentioned a moment ago by the Hon. Member for Lévis? If that is not the case, if the federal Government is considered a bad citizen by the Hon. Member for Lévis, then the Hon. Member should do his duty by bringing pressure to bear on his colleagues who are in office for the time being. As for us, hopefully, Mr. Speaker, in a few months down the road we will be able to prove that the federal Government behaves as a good citizen towards every municipality in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. The Private Member's motion which is before us today is a good motion even though it is very limited in its impact other than within the riding of the Hon. Member who proposed the motion. However, it does have merit.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the motion basically proposes that the federal Government be required to pay taxes as they affect certain docks, wharves, piers, piles, dolphins—I am not sure why dolphins are on the list but they are there—floats, breakwaters, retaining walls, jetties and drydocks. This motion is an attempt to point out a limitation contained within the Municipal Grants Act which was passed by the House on July 15, 1980.

In effect, the motion indicates that there are certain federal works and federal Government properties within local municipalities for which the federal Government does not have to pay taxes. Presumably, if the land upon which these works were situated were to be occupied by other works not owned by the federal Government, then the owners of those works would have to pay taxes. This is only one very small limitation but a very real limitation contained within the Municipal Grants Act and there are other limitations within that Act.

The most fundamental limitation within the Municipal Grants Act is that the Act operates on the basis of the principles of a grant system. In other words, when the federal Government pays taxes to a municipality, it is not really paying taxes but is making a grant to the local municipality.

When this legislation was passed by the House in 1980, the Canadian Federation of Municipalities criticized it on the basis of the need of municipalities across the country for a taxation system rather than a grant system. In other words, the Federation felt that when the federal Government finds itself situated within a municipality, it would have to pay local taxes and be subject to the local authority without being above that authority and paying for its presence there by way of a grant system.

While I welcome this Private Member's motion which attempts to make some positive changes to this legislation, what is needed is a complete overhaul of the Municipal Grants Act. We need to have a Municipal Grants Act, Mr. Speaker, that recognizes that when the federal Government is within a municipality, it is a taxpayer like any one else and should not have special privileges or be able to exempt itself from the taxes which would have to be paid by any other citizen.

● (1700)

Another weakness of the Municipal Grants Act which needs to be pointed out is that the federal Government exempts itself from commercial taxes within a local riding. If a private entrepreneur were to locate within a municipality, he would have to pay commercial taxes. The federal Government has exempted itself from the local taxation, when it locates within a municipality. In 1980 the dollars involved were something like $75 million across Canada. It is a significant amount of money.

Mr. Evans: We pay grants in lieu of taxes.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Member across the way says that the federal Government pays grants in lieu of taxes. Certainly it does, but it continues to exempt itself from certain aspects of taxation. One of the aspects that it exempts itself from is the commercial tax. Prince Edward Island is the only Province in the country in which they pay that commercial tax. That is because they have a special regime there which does not apply to other Provinces. That situation continues.

Mr. Evans: Whoever heard of one Government taxing another?

Mr. Keeper: The Member across the way, Mr. Speaker, raises the question whether one Government should tax another Government. We should look at it from the point of view of the local municipalities. The local municipalities cannot afford to give up a part of their tax base just because the federal Government occupies that land.

Mr. Fisher: You are just using a lot of semantics here.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I hear a lot of noise from across the way, which is fair ball. I wish hon. Members would listen for a while; perhaps they would then bring about some improvements in the legislation which they have before this House.

It is time for the federal Government to recognize that it is subject to the local municipal authority and to the taxes that are passed by the local authority, and that it cannot arbitrarily continue to exempt itself from those taxes. This continues to this day in terms of commercial taxes, in spite of the noise across the way.

With regard to the Municipal Grants Act in total, I would like to make the point that when this Act came before this House in 1980, there were a few witnesses who came to Ottawa to testify with regard to the shortcomings of the Act. There is quite a contrast between the way this legislation was treated in this House and the way similar legislation was treated in the Quebec House. In the Quebec legislature the "députés" took the time to do extensive consultations with municipalities and all those affected by the legislation. That just did not happen in this House to the same extent. It is really important, if we are going to have legislation which is going to be meaningful to people who are affected by the legislation, that people be involved fully in the development of that legislation. One of the major shortcomings of this legislation, which continues on the books of the federal House, is that it was developed with very little participation from the citizens who are affected by it.

The Private Member's motion which is before us today is a good motion. It will bring about some improvement in the Municipal Grants Act and, therefore, is worthy of support. I wonder why it is a Private Member's motion rather than a Government motion. The Member who brought the motion forward is a member for the Government caucus and we would hope that he would get the support of his colleagues in order to bring about changes that would make a positive financial contribution to his riding.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am surprised that a Member of the Government cannot get the support of his colleagues for such a good amendment. Why are the Liberal Members not supporting these measures? The people in Lévis want to know.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a very short and positive report on the uses in my own city of the program that we are discussing today. In 1983, the City of Mississauga and the region of Peel will receive over $5 million in grants in lieu of taxes from the federal Government. I am very pleased with that participation by the federal Government in my municipality. It represents great co-operation between the two levels of Government. The city and the federal Government in my area have co-operated on a broad range of different activities. The funding represents the close binding and the intelligent use of taxpayers' money which my citizens expect from all of us.

The $5 million will be split between the City of Mississauga, the regional government of Peel, and the Peel region Board of Education. The money is calculated and comes from both the industrial and residential levies that are normally applied across the municipality. It represents a payment in lieu of property taxes and it will go to both the municipality and the educational system. The federal properties in my city are extensive. I draw the Member's attention to the Toronto International Airport which is the largest aviation facility in Canada. We also have the Gateway postal station which is the largest postal facility in Canada. As the Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) pointed out, we have a small harbours branch in Mississauga, in Port Credit, where the small harbours officials act as both—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it is not usual to hear this outline of the number of credits when we are talking about Schedule A of the Municipal Grants Act which definitely excludes certain things. Airports are not excluded. It is Schedule A we are talking about. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member is talking beyond the meaning of this particular motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not believe the Hon. Member has a point of order. If the Hon. Member chooses to enter into the debate and reply to the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), it is perfectly in order for him to do so, but I hardly believe it is a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your guidance on this matter. I think the Hon. Member's intervention was quite rude. He has a hard time drawing a straight line let alone a straight line of thought. I do not think he is one to tell me what is relevant.

I was mentioning that the federal Government has acted in our city to provide parks through the small harbours branch of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and has helped the yacht club to set up its facilities on some of our lands at the mouth of the Credit River.

I think it is appropriate at this time for me to thank the City of Mississauga and the region of Peel on behalf of the federal civil servants and the people of Canada. Our city provides outstanding services to these federal facilities and we are grateful for the help that the municipality provides. It is also appropriate for me to say at this time that the city and the region have indeed given us good service for the money through the work of their outstanding staff. The social services, engineering services and the other services in those two Governments are regularly providing our officials with close liaison and close advice. As a result, we are able to avoid friction between the two Governments. We are able to combine the facilities and give an extra impact for our tax dollars. The regional and city councils send along representations and advice to me on a regular basis, which I appreciate. I receive specific advice about taxpayers' specific problems from municipal departments.

• (1710)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the $5 million which the people of Canada are investing in Mississauga annually is money well spent. My local government is certainly helping us to maintain high levels of service, helping out by giving us good advice for the improvement of our activities in that city.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the intervention I made was merely to keep the Hon. Member from Mississauga north, south, east or west within the ambit of this particular motion. This motion is specifically directed toward, I would say, an amendment to Schedule II of what was known in this particular Parliament as Bill C-4.

I am in favour of this motion which has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) and I want him to know it. I feel he should have spoken to the hon. gentleman from Mississauga and put him straight. That Hon. Member was just taking the occasion to praise the Government for having contributed largely to his constituency, and that is what I was objecting to, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Lévis was worried that the Government is not contributing because of the provisions of this law. I agree with him. I believe it would be useful just to remind ourselves what is in the law with which the Hon. Member disagrees. It was passed by the House of Commons on July 15, 1980. In its definition it talks about federal property, because federal property comes up in that section where the Minister may make a grant in respect of federal property.

In the definitions section there is a list of things which it does not include, and these are the exceptions with which the Hon. Member for Lévis was taking issue, and I agree with him. "Federal property" does not include any structure, work, machinery or equipment included in Schedule II. Schedule II is very important. It applies directly to my riding as well because, as the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) mentioned, Esquimalt does have drydocks and a naval installation. There are other parts of my constituency, however, whose municipality does not receive grants in lieu of taxes.

The exclusions under Schedule II are worth putting on the record. First, canal structures. What about Smiths Falls? Right in the middle of Smiths Falls there is a canal. Does the municipality derive any grant for that? It does not, because canal structures—falls and locks—are excluded. Second, conveyor belts, conveyance systems and so on; third, docks, wharves, piers, piles, dolphins, floats and so on, which are specifically mentioned in this motion, along with drydocks, gasoline pumps and gun butts; there is a range in my riding for practising. I am sure the municipality covering that area, which has been blocked off by the federal Government for that particular practice range, does not receive a grant in lieu of taxes.

The list goes on. It goes on to include monuments, penitentiary walls and fencing, pole lines, transmission lines, light standards and so on, reservoirs, storage tanks, roads, sidewalks, aircraft runways, snowsheds, tunnels, bridges, water mains and sewer mains. These are matters over which the municipality has some jurisdiction. The municipality cannot derive taxes from those works as if there were private houses built on them, for example. This is federal property. It has a purpose certainly, and there is provision in the law for grants to reach the municipalities in lieu of the taxes they might otherwise gather for these areas.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I question, as did my friend, the Hon. Member for Joliette, the Hon. Member raising this issue in the House when he could just as easily have raised it in caucus with even more success. He obviously had some television time in view. Therefore, I question the motives of the Hon. Member, although I do not question the substance of his motion. I believe we will not know, until just at the last moment before this debate runs out, whether this has been a planted motion—and it could be—or perhaps it is just an expression of frustration on the part of the Hon. Member who really wants to have this matter resolved for his own community. We will see if it is talked out.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on the motion introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde). First of all, I believe that everyone will agree that he should be congratulated for his excellent job in defending the interests of his constituents. In spite of what the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said, I believe that without the support, effective work and devotion of the Hon. Member for Lévis, a contract of $120 million for the CN Marine ferry would perhaps not have been granted as quickly as it was.

In addition, I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Joliette about the opinions expressed by my colleague for Lévis on Quebec Bill 38 because, just like the Hon. Member for Joliette, my colleague for Lévis is a Quebecer, and as the representative of his constituents, he is entitled to oppose a motion or a Bill introduced by the Quebec Government which robs of job opportunities men and women in his constituency. Indeed, the City of Lévis is losing a grant of $100,000 to create jobs in Lauzon. I therefore believe that my colleague must be congratulated. He was elected to protect the interests of his constituents and I think that he is doing a great job.

I also want to say that I do not understand the attitude of the NDP Members when they ask the Canadian Government to be a good citizen, which it already is,—and I know that for a fact—and when they say that Ottawa should pay property taxes like any other citizen. As for the Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, I do not understand them either. They formed the Government and did not introduce legislation in this regard, and in all the provinces with a Conservative of NDP Government, there are no policies as generous as those of the federal Government towards municipalities.

As for Quebec, having been a Member of the National Assembly in that province, I believe that it is important to recall that the Parti Québécois has exchanged one tax, namely property taxes, for the sales tax which used to belong to the municipalities. This means that the Quebec Government did not have to use supplementary funds to give to the municipalities. It simply took back the sales taxes paid to municipalities, and in exchange, it paid them what are call property taxes. On the other hand, the Quebec Government also makes exceptions to its own laws. I understand that the City of Montreal does not receive property taxes on the Olympic Stadium. Heaven knows that Montrealers have paid a lot of money for that stadium and not only Montrealers, but all Quebecers benefit from it. I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Joliette, who is losing control, was wrong to blame my colleague for doing his job.

Mr. La Salle: Do your own!

Mr. Malépart: Do not worry, I do my work. If my colleague who was minister during the short period when his party was in power had looked after the matter, it could perhaps have been implemented.

Mr. Speaker, more specifically about the motion, some of our colleagues have mentioned that the motion of the Hon. Member for Lévis deals only with one area or location. It should be pointed out that the exemption provided in the bill does not apply, as stated earlier, solely to the Lévis or Lauzon shipyard. It also refers to monuments, wharves, breakwaters, locks, drydocks, storage tanks, bridges, dams, walls, penitentiary gates, paving and production equipment since the provinces do not pay property taxes any more than the federal government does. It effectively restricts grants to lands and buildings.

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, exemptions for such works were maintained in the 1980 legislation which was unanimously passed by the House because they generate a very low demand for local services and because they do not provide shelter. We know that local services are related to individuals and are provided for workers. However, a structure such as a breakwater hardly needs local services, if any. It should be mentioned that grants for some kinds of structures such as locks, landing strips, basins and breakwaters, would be very costly and I do not think that my colleagues as well as the members of the parties opposite would like the government of Canada to increase taxes in order to pay grants to municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is advisable to consider amendments as a whole instead of dealing only with part of a legislation providing grants in lieu of taxes. I think it is important to remind the House that the Government of Canada has paid $400 million to municipalities elsewhere in Canada and $80 million to Quebec municipalities in lieu of taxes.

Following the consultations—there were indeed consultations concerning this bill, contrary to what one of our colleagues claimed earlier—the matter was examined by a Parliamentary Committee. Various municipalities, as well as provincial governments and organizations, came and expressed their views, and the Minister of Public Works finally announced that at the request of a number of municipalities, a committee chaired by Mr. Jacques Roy would look into grants to municipalities. This committee would act as an appeal board if a problem arose between a municipality and the Government of Canada in connection with a particular project.

I think it is important to remind the House of the reason which prompted the Government of Canada to introduce this bill in 1980. It was simply to behave as a good and responsible government. If we figure out the amount of taxes paid by the Government—I gave some figures earlier, $400 million in Canada and $80 million in the Province of Quebec—if we include the cost of indirect taxes paid by the Government for the floor space it leases in privately owned buildings throughout the country, and if we take into account the economic fallout in a municipality, a province or a region when the Government builds an airport or introduces a new service, I think it is important to keep all those benefits in mind. I was a member of the parliamentary committee on the Bill, and I recall that none of the people of the region where Dorval or Mirabel airport is located said: If you do not pay real estate taxes like everybody else, you can have your airport. They knew, of course, that all Canadian Government investments would have significant economic fallout in the municipality. And when the Government pays—with the provincial Government when it comes to education—50 per cent of health costs, it includes as well the real estate taxes which the Government of Quebec gives to the municipalities, but we know that the Government of Quebec did not pay 100 per cent of the real estate taxes on behalf of school commissions and hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to repeat my opening remarks and congratulate the Hon. Member for Lévis for defending the interests of his constituents. In my opinion, it is quite normal that each Member should seek to get more money for the taxpayers of his riding. I referred earlier to only one case, the CN Marine ferry, which brought in additional funds and made it possible to create jobs. I repeat, even though the Hon. Member for Joliette was not happy with Bill 38 in Quebec, that I share his view that both levels of government should find solutions to allow for job creation. However, I think it was really the duty of the Hon. Member for Lévis to further as he seemed fit the interests of his constituents, to the same extent that we let the Hon. Member for Joliette defend his own constituents the way he deems appropriate.

It is also important to remember that the setting up of a committee to examine grants to municipalities as announced yesterday by the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) was indeed the result of a decision. That decision was made further to the recommendations submitted by a task force chaired by Mr. Pollack and it will be remembered that the Pollack Committee was established as a result of representations made by various groups, including the municipalities, the Provinces and the federal Government, requesting that a panel be set up to reconsider decisions that will be made as to the assessed value of specific buildings in specific areas or municipalities, where a municipality would decide on a certain assessment value and where the Government would come up with a different one. Before the decision was made by the Minister, municipalities had no recourse. As a good citizen, the Government has assumed its responsibilities in that area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 25(2), it is my duty to interrupt proceedings.

EXCISE TAX

REMISSION OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS IN DISASTER AREAS

The House resumed from Monday, January 19, 1981, consideration of the motion of Mr. Halliday:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of remitting the excise tax levied on building materials used in the course of repairing and/or replacing building and other losses as a result of major natural disasters so deemed by provincial authorities.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to resume debate on the motion tabled by my colleague and neighbour, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). In doing so, I support the fundamental principle in the motion, that of the collective response of our communities to human need, and, in specific cases, to emergency situations.

As Members of the House and the public will recall, the motion arises out of the situation of August 7, 1979, when disaster struck southwestern Ontario in the form of two tornadoes. The result was a loss of some $13.5 million, of which only $5.7 was covered by insurance, leaving a shortfall for the community to cover of some $7.8 million.

The federal riding of Waterloo adjoins Oxford and I know a great number of the citizens, particularly out of Wilmot Township, Wellesley and other areas, gave of their time voluntarily, led by the example of the Mennonite tradition of self-help and community input, in the repair and restoration of the communities affected by this particular disaster.

The motion before the House is not binding but calls upon the Government to give consideration to the fact that it will be seen to be identifying with the best aspirations of our communities—to assist one another and to rebuild. One would have thought that the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Bossy) would have wished to have been here because that kind of initiative, even if the Government feels there is another alternative, not only affects this area but other areas as well. I believe the Member for Kent would agree that this has caused a community trauma.

The motion before us focuses on the excise tax of 5 per cent on building materials. However, since this motion deals with the ethics or morality of taking tax from people who have fallen victim to natural disasters, I suggest that the motion is not locked into considering that as the best vehicle. If there are other suggestions, as has been suggested by Members opposite during informal discussions and in previous debate, this would be a signal to those caught in this sort of circumstance.

I am pleased to encourage positive consideration of this motion by the House and I support my colleague for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). The root question in this motion is the role of the Government in protecting people from those things from which they cannot protect themselves, particularly when there is not adequate protection to encourage the best instincts for sharing and self-help across the communities.

Members of the House will be aware that the Government of Canada does have a disaster relief program in place but in most cases it is insufficient and attains a low level of recognition among most Canadians. I believe it is apparent that the rebate as proposed in the motion would not pose a technical problem vis-à-vis federal and provincial jurisdiction. The federal Government already gives rebates in relation to schools and hospitals, so that technically this could be done.

If this is not the particular way to give the signal, I think the subject could be opened up for discussion. As I understand the remarks made in the debate earlier, the Government's position is that the administrative problems for this proposal would be considerable and it would therefore not wish—as we would not wish—more paperwork or burden of this kind to be put on the taxpayers.

The problem is that the tax as proposed would be assessed on the value of goods shipped by the manufacturer of the building materials. By the time these goods pass through the hands of wholesalers and retailers for their ultimate use, the tax would have long since been paid and become imbedded in the price of the materials. For this reason, the Government maintains that it is difficult to ascertain how the refund can be made or to determine the amount that should be refunded.

Instead of a tax refund, it suggests that expenditure programs are preferable. Again, we could debate this in terms of philosophy but it could be noted that many expenditure programs are more costly and administratively complex than tax rebates.

The philosophical question to be raised and addressed is what is wiser in terms of community help than leaving resources in the hands of the people, that they finally understand what their priority needs are and be in the best position to address their time and energy in that area. If these needs are not appropriately addressed, there is a sharing of the responsibility with the people so that all the blame does not fall on the Government's shoulders if remedies do not fully meet their expectations.

Therefore, I view the motion in front of us as one which involves providing incentives by the best motivation in our community, which is caring and accepting responsibility for our community and its life. I see it as a motion which seeks to undergird citizenship and the best sense of citizenship by using the resources that are available, giving oneself to others who are in need and having a sense of pride.

I also compare this motion to others which have been before the House in terms of being an affirmation of voluntary action. Some weeks ago, a Bill which I presented to the House, C-233 in support of the voluntary sector, called upon the Government to give signals to those who were prepared to give of themselves in and through voluntary groups. This is another illustration of the importance and the signal of that motivation.

With this in mind, and since there is a division of opinion within the Government as to how best to do this, I would like to move, and I encourage Members of the House to consider, the following motion in order that the substance and purpose of the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Oxford could be considered in the context of the Government's discussion paper on charitable activity. This is in relation to the discussions about the give and take tax proposals which are an incentive. It may be that there is another incentive method that could be applied in certain circumstances like this.

Therefore I would move:

That the motion be withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I believe the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is prepared to second this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Such a motion at this stage would need the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I presume it would need unanimous consent to be debated, or would it need unanimous consent to be passed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would need unanimous consent to be presented to the House at this time for debate.

Mr. Fisher: Then I would certainly agree with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Unanimous consent usually requires the courtesy of asking the third Party in the House for unanimous consent. This was not done. Under those circumstances I am very loth to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. Certainly it is the understanding of the Chair that such a motion could not be put without unanimous consent. Is the Hon. Member for Prince Albert standing his ground and refusing unanimous consent or has he had second thoughts?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on this motion and I was quite willing to speak in favour of it. I just required the courtesy of being asked for unanimous consent in a case like this. That consent was not asked for and I was just making that point. I will give the unanimous consent provided I am given the opportunity to speak to the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is asking for unanimous consent. The Chair obviously cannot be responsible for private negotiations that might or might not have taken place. But in this case there is unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. MacLean), seconded by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), to move that the motion be withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) for bringing forward this motion. In doing so he has opened up the whole area of the treatment of disasters in the country as well as another area which may be more important, namely the whole issue of tax concessions.

From reading the Member's motion and listening to the debate so far, I recognize that he did not intend to be too confining in his motion. The Hon. Member made the suggestion that it related to buildings and would only extend to repair and replacement of buildings. He did so by having the relief attached only to the excise tax levied on building materials. That makes it a very narrow approach and, as are many taxes and remission of taxes, it would also be regressive in that often the person most able to pay would benefit the most from this remission—the individual who may not have needed the help. Granted, most natural disasters will do the greatest damage to the most expensive houses, if you wish, but that does not mean the owner should get the most help.

Possibly to overcome that criticism the remission should be taxable, but Members earlier in this debate, particularly on the Government side, indicated that such a process of even having a remission of taxes would be bureaucratically very difficult. Of course, if you were to have it taxable as well you would increase the bureaucracy. It might then be easier and more worth while to give a straight grant to people affected by a disaster.

Therefore, I would give general support to the principle of giving relief to disaster victims, particularly victims not covered in some other way. I would wish to have the Government study the methods—and the motion before us right at the moment does exactly that—to attempt to make them as progressive as possible.

We could spend a lot of time looking at disaster procedures in the country. They are fairly well documented. The processes of EMP and EMR and so on have been well covered. I imagine most Members who have been involved in community emergency treatment of disasters know well what goes on. Those procedures seem fairly adequate after an agreement is reached between a Province and the federal Government.

It is also possible that the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), which is remission of taxes, would help the quality and even the extent of the replacement that was necessary under this kind of disaster requirement.

However, if you look at the history of disaster relief in Canada, there are some amazing incongruities when the Government makes an attempt to provide an over-all answer to a requirement. I could give you a number of examples, Mr. Speaker. We only have a few more minutes and I am sure there are other Members who wish to speak. I believe the Hon. Member for Oxford is able to speak under these circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Hovdebo: Therefore I will go through this as quickly as possible. Right now in our present estimates we are talking about giving $6.9 million of relief to farmers who had apple trees frozen in Ontario and Quebec in the last year. The requirement is very heavy but worth while, the $6.9 million being used to restore orchards. Those same farmers could have frost damage every year for ten years which kills the fruit and yet never get any disaster relief unless their incomes fall below a certain level. Two years ago we had a very heavy drought in Saskatchewan which affected the quantity of feed for farmers' cattle. Many farmers were paid disaster relief. In my particular area one farmer living on one side of the road got $5,000 worth of help but the fellow living across the road who experienced exactly the same kind of disaster got no help.

There are a variety of things that can happen to so-called disaster funds. Those are things that should be looked at.

As I said earlier, the Hon. Member has opened up a very large can of worms in talking about the remission of taxes, tax credits or deferral of taxes. This whole area has traditionally been used for corporate welfare for which the Government does not have to account. It has been used through the years as a way in which the Government has been able to give a reward to its friends without having to account for that reward. For example, the CPR, a great friend of both the Liberals and the Conservatives, now owes Canada $1.4 billion in deferred taxes which the CPR never expects to have to pay, nor do Governments expect to collect. Maybe the type of remission considered here would spread this largesse a little more broadly and fairly. Do we really want to get into this kind of practice that is very repressive and has not worked particularly well in the past?

We support the relief in principle. We also support referring the motion to committee. However, we would be very cautious about the method used to give relief, particularly the method suggested in this motion.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, first of all I thank the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) for giving us unanimous consent to allow me to discuss briefly again this particular motion of mine that was raised almost four years ago. I should say for the Hon. Member's benefit that I assume he would want to give unanimous support because his colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell), who I am pleased to say is here today, spoke in favour of this motion in 1980. I thought he would naturally be in support of her.

I want also to express my appreciation to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), who as he said is a neighbour of mine. I am particularly pleased he was able to approach this Bill today with his usual empathy, sympathy and understanding for the human aspects of government and the need for us to concentrate more on that aspect of government. The people in Oxford, as well as the people in Waterloo, will recognize the fact that he is very much in support of this motion. We hope the Government will come around to accepting the motion this afternoon as far as referring it to the committee is concerned.

● (1750)

On January 19, 1981, this matter was first before the House. I am disappointed that the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Bossy) is unable to be present this afternoon. His area suffered a tornado last spring at Reese's Corners, a very small community which was virtually destroyed. I am sure the people of that area would have the same concern for this kind of motion as the people of Oxford. The community of Oxford Centre was badly demolished as well in that tornado. This past summer it raised several thousands of dollars locally which were sent over to the riding of the Hon. Member for Kent to help the people in Reese's Corners. If the Hon. Member had been present, I am sure he would have acknowledged that support from fellow tornado victims.

In addition, I emphasize my concerns for the moral and ethical issues involved. Governments are somewhat slow to appreciate these issues. They take the expedient way of dealing with such matters and find excuses for not doing something which should be more properly done for a moral and ethical point of view.

As the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) said a few moments ago, there is the issue of Governments seeking revenues from people who, through no fault of their own, suffer severely from natural disasters. I find it to be a very distasteful situation for the Government to find itself in and should not allow itself to be guilty of accepting tax revenues from such persons.

Also the Hon. Member for Waterloo said that over $3 million was raised in my constituency from private individuals as well as from individuals outside the constituency. People came from far and wide to give money quite freely. In particular, people from the Mennonite communities in Wilmot and Wellesley Townships came by the hundreds into Oxford to work without pay to help the victims. For them to see the Government reap profits from that disaster, especially when they gave freely of their own labour, bothers me somewhat. I wish it would bother the Government more so that it would take some action in support of my motion.

I would like to leave some time this afternoon for the motion to be referred to committee, if at all possible. However, I would like to refer to some of the comments made in the previous debate by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). I am very pleased to see the Hon. Member for the riding in which I live in Ottawa present today. I was very pleased with his comments as reported on page 6333 of Hansard where he said:

> —but it certainly goes without saying that the Hon. Member has our whole support in his concern for disaster assistance.

Of course, he was referring to myself. Then, as reported on page 6334 of Hansard, he went on to say:

> As a result, it would certainly seem to me that we should be looking at much more generous and larger funds to be paid to the disaster victims, and whether there should be included in that particular package of funds which goes to an individual something that could be called a refund of the tax.

I was pleased to hear that, but he concluded his speech by suggesting that the Government could not support it. Given the present political climate and his desire to have the support of all his constituents, hopefully he has changed his mind somewhat. Obviously he was philosophically in support of the motion, yet for some purely technical reasons he could not support it. I appreciate the fact that there are some technical problems. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) with whom I spoke earlier today also appreciates the fact that there are some technical problems which can be overcome, one way or another, if indeed we are in philosophical agreement on this.

Finally, the last reference I want to make is to the comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Unfortunately he is not present in the Chamber at the moment, but his Parliamentary Secretary, in the person of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, is here. As reported on page 10494 of Hansard for June 11, 1981, I asked the President of the Privy Council some questions regarding disaster aid. In reply to my question concerning whether or not there should be some involvement from the private sector, he agreed and said:

> Should the individual and the private sector become more involved? I fully agree with his suggestion—

He went on to say:

> —we are quite willing to consult the private sector—

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary who will speak next whether any Government action has been taken. To the best of my knowledge, no such action has been taken along those lines. It is disappointing that we have not had the benefit of input from the private sector, especially from people such as those in Oxford who have had first-hand experience at overcoming disaster problems.

I would like to close my remarks with a one and a half line quotation which I used in my original presentation of this motion on January 19, 1981, when I quoted Edmund Burke. When he was giving his second speech respecting conciliation with America, Edmund Burke said:

> It is not what a lawyer tells me I may do; but what humanity, reason and justice tell me I ought to do.

The Government philosophically agrees with us; it knows what ought to be done. I challenge the Government to allow the motion to be referred to committee where it can be discussed further and possibly result in putting some humanity into the affairs of Government.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my speech, I would like to pay tribute to the previous speakers who have obviously worked hard on this matter. I also want to compliment the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). Last spring his riding experienced a tornado. I believe three townships in that area were very seriously affected. He told me that local people made outstanding contributions as volunteers. They contributed to the rebuilding of their neighbours' homes, farms and facilities. He has asked me to refer specifically to the outstanding work that was done by the Mennonite relief organizations. People came by the busload from all over southern Ontario to his riding and worked very hard to improve and restore the local economy. I pay tribute to the Hon. Member and all those dedicated volunteers in his riding who helped to restore the local situation.

This is a familiar topic and one which has been discussed widely in the House; it is an approach which has been discussed widely. The previous speaker referred to a stirring quotation from Edmund Burke. It is a handy quotation, a very emotional one which makes it difficult for the next speaker to rise and say that he has serious reservations. Unfortunately I do have serious reservations.

We have a system now that rebates people in disaster areas for the costs they incur. There is a formula for that. We make payments to rebate people who have experienced disasters. The formula recognizes the primary responsibility of the Province, but as soon as costs rise above a certain level—I think it is $1 per capita of the provincial population—we become involved. As the costs increase beyond that level, our involvement becomes deeper.

It is important to note that under these rebates we also rebate the cost of the federal sales tax. To answer his concern about the morality, we are not keeping federal sales tax; we are rebating it when we become involved in disaster relief. Hopefully that will settle the issue in the Hon. Member's mind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, November 19, 1982 consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would just like to mention that there is an agreement among the House Leaders to deal with all stages of this Bill today. Therefore, the motion should be amended and the reference be to send the Bill to the Committee of the Whole, not to the Standing Committee. I want to put on record that all the necessary consent should be sought in due time, but it will be given to allow this Bill to get through all stages today.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the House Leader for some clarification in connection with the procedure that he is now proposing. Is he suggesting that, as a result of a meeting between himself and two Party House Leaders, the procedure can now be changed without putting the matter before the House for unanimous consent? Or are we proceeding as the Orders of the Day state so that I might have a chance to speak on the Bill if I wish to do so? I would like to have the House Leader clarify these points I have put before the House.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the consent is only to allow the Bill to be dealt with through all stages today. There is no doubt that if the Hon. Member seeks the floor and the Speaker wants to recognize him, he will be allowed to speak during the next few hours available for debate. Debate is not limited to one speaker per Party.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to put the Bill through all stages today. If we are to do so, I think the Bill should be in Committee of the Whole before one o'clock. I would think we could have something like two speeches, if the Hon. Member for Edmonton East wants to take his 20 minutes. I would certainly appreciate a few minutes at second reading before we go to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the agreement we made was not specific as to how long debate would last at second reading and in Committee of the Whole. I think we should let debate go on and we shall see what happens later. There was no firm deal as to the number of speakers at second reading, for example.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat troubled in getting ready for the debate today. There are a substantial number of amendments to this Bill that we have to get through in Committee of the Whole. Was there a breakdown in the proceedings? Why were the amendments not published in the Order Paper? How are we going to handle this? Are they going to be read into the record? Are they going to be handled one at a time as we proceed in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, while debate is going on at second reading, we might consider a reasonable approach to dealing with the numerous amendments when we reach Committee of the Whole stage. I will speak with the President of the Treasury Board. I have a meeting with the House Leaders in 15 minutes. If we can be useful, fine. The agreement was that we dispose of the Bill today in the House of Commons. If we have the time to deal with all the amendments, fine. If we do not have the time, they will have to be voted on very quickly.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader sets forth with accuracy the fact that there has been agreement to pass the Bill through all three stages today which, of course, does not prevent the Hon. Member for Edmonton East from speaking. I was unaware of any Government amendments with respect to the legislation and presumably there are such amendments. It might facilitate the matter and would certainly be a courtesy to all Members of the House if we could have copies of those amendments distributed to all Hon. Members. This has caught me somewhat by surprise.

• (1115)

Another thing I should say is that I agree with the Hon. Member for Capilano. We should try to move on to Committee of the Whole to deal with these amendments as quickly as possible and I think that that could be accomplished if we were to hold the number of speakers down to a minimum on second reading.

If I might have the attention of the Government House Leader so that he can concur, the third thing I would like to remind him of is that we agreed to deal with this Bill today. If it happens to conclude before six o'clock today, we will see the clock as being six o'clock with no intervening business after the conclusion of this business and before the six o'clock closing of business.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am not sure that I have full clarification in my mind as to what is going on in the House at this particular moment. The Government House Leader indicated that an agreement has been reached to make certain that the Bill passes today. I recognize that I sit as an independent and can only speak once on second reading and once on third reading, I hope.

Mr. Nielsen: But you are unlimited in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Yurko: I know that. I can speak during Committee of the Whole in terms of the number of amendments that are made, and indeed they are quite substantive. If a person were to get really interested in asking questions about these amendments, I imagine he could hold the Bill up for several hours and indeed for several days.

My point of view again, Mr. Speaker, is not that I am particularly interested in the Bill. I am interested in the procedure which goes on in the House with respect to independents who may be here in the future. There may be 20 of us in the future, I do not know. I am concerned that an agreement has been reached between the three Parties indicating that the Bill should be passed today without putting the matter by way of a vote of unanimous consent in the House. If the matter were to be put and indeed unanimous consent were to be requested, I would be prepared to give that unanimous consent without too much difficulty. However, the point I make is, how can an agreement be made in such a way that it impinges upon my rights in the House without my being party to that agreement?

As I said, if I wished to become miserable, I could certainly delay this Bill beyond the course of the day, particularly in Committee of the Whole. I simply ask again for clarification from the Government House Leader as to whether a request for unanimous consent to this agreement should be put in the House or whether he is simply prepared to go ahead, hoping that it will indeed pass in the course of the day if I do not become too mouthy, if you wish, in terms of asking questions in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nielsen: He was asking for consent.

Mr. Yurko: If he is asking for consent, then I expect the Speaker will put the request for unanimous consent to deal with the Bill in its entirety this day to the House. If the Speaker does so, then I would certainly be prepared to give my consent.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if you seek that consent, we are prepared to give that consent as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. In that case, the House has heard the proposal put forward by the Hon. President of the Privy Council to the effect that the House will deal today with all three stages of Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed and so ordered.

When debate adjourned on Bill C-96 at a previous sitting of the House, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) had the floor. It is my understanding that there has been, shall I say, changes in responsibilities on the part of certain Hon. Members.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre not being available at this time, the Chair would normally recognize a Member of the New Democratic Party. However, the House may wish to give its consent to hear out the Hon. Member for Capilano who, I understand, wishes to contribute to the debate at this time.

● (1120)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before we do that I think, for the sake of order and our records, the Chair should put the motion once again as amended by the Government House Leader, that rather than the Bill going to the Standing Committee, it be referred at the termination of second reading to a Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Mr. Gray, seconded by Mr. Pepin, moves:

That Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just going back to the point you were making before you asked for consent to change the procedure, I would be quite delighted to hear the Hon. Member for Capilano. I know that he has a lot to offer. I think it would be appropriate to recognize him in lieu of the Member for Calgary Centre, who is not here now.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am a little confused. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre is the Official Opposition critic for defence and I believe he is in the estimates committee. I am a little confused at your wording. You said "heard out". Are you giving me the balance of his time? Otherwise, I would just as soon go to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East and then I would like ten or 15 minutes at least.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair is prepared to recognize any Member who wishes to speak at this time.

I think I should explain to the House the conundrum that we are in at this stage. I understand that changes have been made in certain responsibilities. I understand the Hon. Member for Capilano is now the official spokesman for his Party. I am attempting to accommodate everyone. If the Hon. Member for Capilano wishes me to recognize another Hon. Member, I am prepared to do that as well. I will recognize whoever rises. The Hon. Member for Capilano.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we have got through the initial procedural problem. It will not be an easy day. Just as we came into the House we were given this package of amendments which we will have to deal with through the Committee of the Whole stage. Since they are not printed in our Order Paper, I understand we will have to read them into the record.

In this Bill we are dealing with amendments to the Financial Administration Act. The call and demand for these amendments has come out of a long series of meetings and many hours of deliberation between the Auditor General and his staff, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and the Treasury Board. These are housekeeping amendments which are probably meant to bring us out of the quill pen age, as the Comptroller General says, and up to the computer age. They are highly technical.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) was good enough to meet with me as the Official Opposition critic of the Treasury Board and we spent some hours on these. I have been assured by the Comptroller General that each of these amendments is necessary. I just want to explain that the reason for all of these amendments is to take care of objections that the Office of the Auditor General has had to Bill C-96 in its printed form. These amendments have come a long way toward doing that.

At the outset, I must say that one of the matters that was not agreeable to us during the negotiation stage was Clause 3. We had problems dealing with that clause. The wording was submitted to me by the Comptroller General. I would assume that the wording as submitted to me by him, amending Clause 3 to fit with anxieties that we had, is what is in this package. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) nods yes. So that concern is covered.

• (1125)

Over the years, I suppose since Auditor General Macdonell flew the signal in March of 1976 that spending was out of control, a hard working group, including the Deputy Speaker, has worked on procedures and attitudes to try and bring the matter back under control. I stand here as a person who is very concerned at what has happened to our Government and what is going to happen to our country if somehow or other Hon. Members in this House cannot deliver themselves to a new direction and to a new attitude—and it is going to have to be an apolitical attitude—in order to bring the runaway, out of control spending of the Government of Canada under control. It is not necessarily totally the fault of the incumbent Government, but it has to accept the responsibility for what has happened to the country in the last 14 years. The matter is of crisis proportion today.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on August 13, 1969, recognized that the behaviour of governments in Canada and in the western world was going to cause serious deprivation and problems for the poor, the sick and the elderly. I stand here to make a plea to all Members of this House of Commons, my own Party, the New Democratic Party, the Government Party and the independent, that if we are going to bring the system under control, we are going to have to change our attitudes. We in this House, as individual Members, are to blame. We are the politicians. We go to the electorate and make promises and we are proud of what we deliver back into our constituencies. There are Hon. Members who are proud of what they can gather here and deliver back. That seems to be how the people of Canada relate to politicians. They seem to accept half-truths.

I am suggesting to you, Sir, that we are at the end of that road. What we are dealing with in this Bill is just the beginning. All we are doing is dealing with the technical aspects of the Financial Administration Act, to allow for some of the new value for money concepts which we passed in our Auditor General Act and in the amendments to the Financial Administration Act which gave us the Comptroller General and will allow the central agency of the Treasury Board and the office of the Comptroller General to function and overcome the handicaps, abuses and voids which the Auditor General has been pointing out for some years now.

I do not have trouble in agreeing to the Bill. Our Party is going to support the Bill in order to get it through the House all in one day. However, I would want each element of it to be talked about and understood. It is good for Members of this House to have an understanding of what we are doing.

I rise to take time on second reading to make an appeal. We, as a western world nation, are in a catch-22 situation. I have just come from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, which was questioning the Secretary of the Treasury Board. I can appreciate that the President of the Treasury Board has been busy getting ready for this day in the House, but it is unfortunate that he was not in that Committee this morning because the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates is a Committee of the House dealing with policy. We examine senior Deputy Ministers, like the Secretary of the Treasury Board in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts; and in that standing committee we are apolitical and do not touch policy. However, with the nation in the dilemma in which it is today, in spite of the Prime Minister's warning back in 1969, the whole system is out of control. In spite of the Auditor General's warning in March of 1976, we are in 1983 even further out of control and something has to be done. We have to cross Party lines and cross the bridge between the politicians and the professionals who manage the federal Government system.

• (1130)

In my opinion and that of many others, if we continue this way the system will go into total collapse. Those social policies we are so proud of in Canada are going to collapse with it. Our pensions are going to collapse. We cannot get this country back on its feet creating wealth if we have a fat, careless, slothful overburden in the form of government. We can trim the federal Government, make it lean and effective, as our value for money legislation calls for. But I really fear for the people of Canada if we continue the way we are because we are harming those who cannot look after themselves, those who are about to rely on their pensions for a modest standard of living in the twilight years of their life. It is not just Canada, Mr. Speaker. Other nations have tried, too—deliberately and too energetically, to redistribute wealth. I suggest we have gone so far in that direction that we have smothered the creation of wealth.

What we are dealing with today is a technical move which should remove a lot of the excuses the central agency gives for not being able to control the system. Guideline after guideline and regulation after regulation in the central agency are so permissive you can drive trucks through them. I plead for this House to accept responsibility for financial management and make sure tax dollars are used wisely, efficiently and effectively. But it 'aint going to happen, Sir, unless we as individual Members in this House do it.

I have to compliment most of the people in the federal bureaucracy, Mr. Speaker. The Comptroller General has put in place all the things we asked him to do. He asked for five years and that is coming forward. The new form of the Estimates is coming down and the President of the Treasury Board has requested Members to comment on the new Part IIs. All of this reorganization and proper disclosure of information we hope will allow us to overcome the extravagance we see within Government today. I put a lot of faith in the new form of Estimates and proper disclosure of honest information to hold the system to better account. But none of that is going to happen, none of the work of the federal bureaucracy will come to fruition—and I guess we have spent close to $200 million on this since I was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts—unless the individual Member who sits in this House representing the Canadian taxpayer changes his attitude and starts to conserve the tax resources of Canada.

The taxes paid by working people represent blood, sweat and tears. They spend the best part of their day earning their wages from which taxes are deducted. Corporations in Canada add to the value of goods. If they do not do it efficiently and effectively, they are not around for very long in this competitive world.

The energy, skill, the thought and the engineering, the professionalism which goes into creating the profits from which we draw taxes, are held in disrepute and disrespect here. Some 65 per cent of Canadians say this place is no longer relevant and they are right. This is taxation without representation. We have a Department of National Revenue which can walk right into an individual's bank account without even asking the person concerned and take money through some kind of power they have developed with the banks. There is fear among the people of this nation that the arbitrary powers of Government are out of control.

It is up to us, Mr. Speaker. If we want to continue to conduct ourselves in the historical pattern of politicians, then I suggest to every Member sitting in this Chamber that democracy is threatened and will die. It is that serious. Let me just read the concern of the Prime Minister back on August 13, 1969. He said:

> This year the debate about inflation and the search for ways to combat it have reached a new intensity. Most Canadians—whether in government, business or labour—realize that if inflation continues unchecked they will suffer personally. But some people suffer more than others. Even a modest increase in general price levels causes anguish for pensioners, wage earners with weak bargaining powers, the unemployed, persons on welfare and other who are unable to increase their incomes. Because these persons are often our lowest income earners inflation has serious implications for our goal of achieving an equitable distribution of incomes.
> We have chosen an approach to combat inflation which we believe can produce better long-term results for the country and for Canadians. For success, it requires your support, and this is why I am speaking to you tonight.
>
> Our fiscal and monetary policies are the first line of attack. During the past year we have taken necessary steps to place our budget in a surplus position in the 1969-70 fiscal year . . . the first actual surplus in thirteen years. This swing from a deficit of $575 million last fiscal year to a surplus this year is of great help in fighting inflation in our economy.
> Another important step in holding down costs of all governments in Canada was our refusal to turn over larger amounts of money to the provinces. The Federal stand, and the fruitful discussions held with the provinces before they brought in their budgets, has resulted in most provinces making successful efforts to improve or maintain budgetary balance. I hope they keep up the effort.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and myself were in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates this morning. One of the problems we were asking about was the increase in the transfer payments to the Provinces, out of control spending and the inability of the central agency, the Treasury Board, to show any semblance of control. I happen to know that the Secretary of the Treasury Board is concerned with the looseness which exists within the system, but we politicians—and I am going to disregard political boundaries—of all stripes are the guilty ones. We do not represent our constituents in matters of supply.

Parliament came about because the King bled the people dry through taxes. That is what the Government is doing in this country and I stand here and say: Enough! Let Bill C-96 be the beginning today of a tightening up of our spending and a representation once again of the taxpayer by Members sitting in this House. If we do not do it I do not know how we are going to survive because we have smothered out the wealth-creating abilities of our land. We cannot see a way to compete with the industries that we have been generous enough to complete in the Third World.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am going to sit down so that we have maximum time in Committee of the Whole to get through all the amendments we have to deal with.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it was only one hour ago that I became aware that we were going to debate second reading of Bill C-96. I must admit to the House that I have not had the opportunity to prepare a speech. However, I would like to indicate that almost five years ago when I was elected to this Parliament there were three major problems on my mind that, in my view, had a crisis element to them. The first was the patriation of the Constitution and an amending procedure. The second was the reform of Parliamentary institutions. The third was coming to grips with the growth of Governments in Canada, not only provincial and municipal Governments, but the federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I spent many hours preparing the first speech that I made in this House on October 11, 1979. I would like to quote a couple of paragraphs from it because I dealt with this very matter. I said then:

> A recent analysis shows the growth of governments in the free nations of the world in the 20-year period from 1955 to 1975. I will not run through all of them, but I should like to refer to a few examples. In the Netherlands the government's share of the gross national product in 20 years grew from 31.5 per cent to 54 per cent; in Sweden from 16.5 per cent to 52 per cent in 20 years; in Ireland from 28 per cent to 50 per cent; in the United Kingdom from 32.5 per cent to 45 per cent; in Germany from 30 per cent to 44 per cent; in Italy form 28 per cent to 43 per cent; in France from 33 per cent to 42 per cent;—

Over the 20-year period the Government of Canada's share grew from 25 per cent of the GNP to 40 per cent of the GNP. In 1979 the best figures I had indicated that Governments redistributed 42 per cent of the GNP of the nation. At that time I was asked what it was for the United States. I indicated that in the United States it grew from 26 per cent to 36 per cent. I also gave figures for some other nations.

That 42 per cent five years ago has now grown, in my view, Mr. Speaker, to 50 per cent of the GNP in Canada. The figures that I have before me are estimates, but the indication is that this year the three levels of Government in Canada will be taking, by way of taxation, 50 per cent of the GNP of this nation for redistribution. In this nation we now have a process where Government redistribution through the taxation system is crushing the ability of the nation to create new wealth.

If there is a problem that has to be faced in every way by every level of Government in Canada, it is to come to grips with this single most important matter in the nation. Creation of wealth must be stimulated again and can only be stimulated by reducing the take from the entrepreneurial and wealth-creating sector of the economy. If there is a point to be made in this House, it is this very point.

I am not going to dwell upon the amendments in this Bill and the additional technical amendments to it in terms of control, but they are hardly enough. I suggest very strongly that at the earliest opportunity the Government of the day should put forth a joint committee of this place and the Senate to examine this area in detail and to come forth with some concrete directions in terms of the control of the growth of Governments in Canada. The federal Government does control, to a large degree, the growth of the provincial Governments through its transfer arrangements, so there is some degree of control from here over the provincial Governments and even over the municipal Governments.

I appeared before the Joint Committee on Senate Reform and I tried to present a very strong case that the Senate should have the power to review the expenditures of Crown corporations and to limit some of the appropriations to the Crown corporations across this land. That way there would be a check, not only on this place but on the self-perpetuation and growth of Crown corporations themselves. I know how busy Ministers are. They cannot possibly review what goes on within some of these Crown corporations on a daily basis. If commitments are made in these Crown corporations, Ministers then have to accord with them. Therefore, they have to be stopped in advance rather than after the fact.

I have a Bill on the Order Paper to provide that an Act should be structured to grant Parliament the authority to place Members of parliament and Senators on the board of directors of federal Crown corporations. I received information suggesting that this is not possible because of conflicts of interest and many other reasons. As a Minister in Alberta I put elected members on Crown corporation boards and they were the watchdogs of those Crown corporations. Those elected members functioned extremely well. They put a lot of pressure on the Minister responsible to limit allocations to those Crown corporations and to see that they functioned properly. There was a second line of elected defence by putting an elected member, or in this case a Senator, on some of those Crown corporations at the board level to take note of the decisions that are made at the policy level in these Crown corporations which commit expenditures which can hardly be decreased in this House.

Speaking briefly in a general way to this Bill which deals with the regulation and control of the growth of Governments and expenditures, I am attempting to say that I do not believe for one minute that the mechanism has been found in this Bill to control the growth of government in general and to control the expenditure of the vast complexity of the federal Government. A new system must be found. I hope that the House will either set up joint committee of the House and the Senate to examine all aspects over a period of a year or two of this area of concern for the Parliament of Canada, or devise some better method than I can think of to deal with this most complex and difficult problem within the nation. Because of the very nature of the growth of technology today, expenditures and governments grow irrespective of the dictates of the political process itself.

Mr. Speaker, I want to close by thanking you for the opportunity to make a few remarks on this most important matter. I hope Members of this House will put some points forward regarding a new process for control of the growth and expenditures of government.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments based on some of the things that have been said in the last little while by the Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko). No Member of Parliament could disagree with their statements that governments, federal, provincial and municipal, are large organizations and that they have grown larger in recent years. Nobody would disagree with them when they call for efficiency in government.

● (1150)

In the last few years this country, in fact every country in the western industrialized world, has experienced economic recession. It has been obvious that many large organizations, not just public organizations but private organizations, some of them the biggest companies, in the easy years of economic growth and profitability were not as efficient as they could have been. We have seen examples of that. We have examples given to us by the Auditor General and the Comptroller General of mistakes and inefficiencies in government operations. We have seen some very glaring examples in some of our Crown corporations which have obviously not operated very efficiently. I refer for example to Canadair. Some problems were not caused by inefficiency but by mistakes in planning because of inability by the corporation concerned and the inability of others to foresee the recession. But it must be pretty obvious to Members of Parliament in the case of Canadair that if one cannot say it was inefficient, it is pretty obvious that it was slow to report its difficulties to the Government; and if Canadair did report its difficulties to the Government and asked for advice, it certainly did not report those difficulties to Parliament.

I join with Members who have spoken, the Hon. Member for Capilano and the Member from Calgary, in supporting the idea that we have to have greater efficiency and that the Government's organization needs to be changed and tightened up so that we get greater efficiency. Where I have some difficulty in following the arguments put forward by the Hon. Member for Capilano and the Member from Calgary is in their sweeping statements about government programs, that we are doing too much, that government is taking too much of the Gross National Product, that we should reduce the percentage of the Gross National Product which goes to government. Governments tax and collect revenue in the way they do, not just for the sake of taxing or for the sake of collecting revenue. Governments spend money to provide services for people, the services which people as individuals, or companies which are in business, cannot provide for themselves.

It was suggested by both Members that we should somehow reduce the transfer payments which are made to the Provinces. I think it is incumbent upon those Members of Parliament or anybody else who believes that government expenditures should be reduced, who believe that the transfer payments made by the federal Government to the provinces should be reduced, to say so. I suggest it is incumbent upon them, if they are serious and believe what they are saying and are going to be honest with other Members of Parliament and with the people of Canada, to indicate much more clearly and much more specifically than they have done today or at any other time just how transfer payments can and should be reduced.

Let us look at some of the reasons the federal Government makes transfer payments. The federal Government has paid over the years approximately 50 per cent of the cost of medicare. Are there Members here who believe we should reduce our expenditures on medicare? If so, they should say so. We have paid approximately 50 per cent of the cost of hospital services. In fact, for some of the poor Provinces like those in Atlantic Canada we have paid more than 50 per cent. Are there Members of Parliament who believe that the federal Government should reduce its share of hospital payments? If so, they should say so. Although we have changed the formula in the legislation and we have changed how we pay for it, over the years we have paid about 50 per cent of the cost of post-secondary education, the cost of providing university education for those Canadians who want to attend universities and those who want to attend community colleges. Are we doing too much? Are we training too many people in our universities and community colleges? Is it costing us too much? Can we afford it? If Members of Parliament feel that way, I believe it is incumbent upon them to say so and to tell the people.

The federal Government pays for more than 50 per cent of the cost of scientific research in this country. Canada is spending a smaller percentage of its Gross National Product on scientific research than any other country in the industrialized world. The stated objective of this Government to increase expenditure on scientific research to 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product is several years down the road. In fact, many of the other western industrialized countries, Japan included, are already spending 2.5 per cent of their Gross National Product on scientific research. Is there any Member here who really believes we are spending too much tax money for scientific research? If we are, are we going to leave it to the private sector, which has failed up to now for reasons which I do not have time to discuss today, to attain 1.5 per cent of GNP expenditures for scientific research? If they will, how will we get our expenditures up to 2.5 per cent GNP?

We have had report after report after report about the bad state of our forests. There is a recent one from the Science Council. We had a debate on Tuesday on the whole question of our forest industry. The Science Council made a report a few months ago, the last of many reports made by various research institutes saying we are cutting down our forest at twice the rate they are being replaced. Twenty-five years down the road, unless we take some pretty drastic steps at the federal and provincial Government levels, the forest industries on which several hundred thousand people in Canada depend for a living will no longer be with us. Should we be cutting down on reforestation expenditures?

What about our fisheries? We just had the federal Liberal Government reach agreement with two provincial Conservative Governments, the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Newfoundland. They reached a major agreement for the restructuring of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada which will mean a major expenditure on the part of the federal Government and the Provinces. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the fishing industry in its free enterprise form simply could not operate on a sound financial basis, for reasons which I do not have the time to discuss, nor am I expert enough to go into detail in any case.

Why did the federal Liberal Government and the two provincial Conservative Governments go into this? Because there are 60,000 or 70,000 people in Atlantic Canada who are totally dependent for a living on the fishing industry. Here you have another example of Government expenditures at the federal and provincial level.

Let us take agriculture as another example. Our agricultural industry is in competition with the agricultural production of many countries. If we have been able to develop new products, it has been because Government expenditures for agricultural research have resulted in the development of new products, such as earlier maturing grains and so on. Is there a suggestion on the part of the Hon. Member for Capilano that we have been doing too much? I challenge Hon. Members who think that governments are spending too much money or are taking too much out of the Gross National Product—and many of them apparently believe that—to be honest and to indicate how governments can spend less.

I agree with those people who say that government at every level is not always as efficient as it could or should be. Also I agree with them that, with care and effort, inefficiencies can be eliminated or reduced. However, there is no evidence that savings made in those ways will have a very substantial effect upon the expenditures of governments. As the Hon. Member for Alberta East said a few moments ago, increased government expenditures are not just happening in Canada; they are happening in every country of the western world.

I would like to deal very briefly with another point mentioned by the Hon. Member for Capilano. I believe he said that he felt we had gone too far in government programs which were conceived and directed toward achieving a redistribution of wealth. The statistics do not bear out that argument at all. According to the ones prepared by Statistics Canada, the percentage of the GNP which goes to the bottom 20 per cent of Canadians—that is the 20 per cent of Canadians who have the lowest incomes—has been 4 per cent for 30 years or more. Sometimes it has been 3.9 per cent or 4.1 per cent, but it has been 4 per cent for at least 30 years. The percentage of the GNP which goes to the top 20 per cent—in other words, to the top fifth, high income earners—has been 40 per cent for the last 30 years. Sometimes it is 41 per cent or 39.5 per cent, but it has been around 40 per cent.

I hope the Hon. Member for Capilano will deal with the point I have made. How can he say that we have gone too far in our programs of redistribution when in fact increases in pension, medicare, hospital care and other good programs which have been implemented, programs supported by all Hon. Members of Parliament, have not changed income distribution in Canada?

In closing, let me indicate that I look forward to the future day when the Hon. Member for Capilano and others who believe, as he does, that governments are doing too much will tell us and the people of Canada just how they expect governments to do less, to spend less or to take a smaller percentage of the GNP than they have taken in recent years.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House unduly, but I have been asked some very interesting questions which I think challenge the appeal I have made to all of us in the House to recognize that things are out of control. First, I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that in this fiscal year the country is facing a $31.3 billion deficit. We are spending $31.3 billion more than we are taking in in revenue. The tragedy is that 22 cents or 23 cents out of every dollar of tax by Canadians into the federal system goes into interest payments on the accumulated debt, which is now approximately $140 billion. I believe it was $134 billion and now it is around $140 billion. If we add the debt the Crown corporation sector is accumulating in borrowings from the private sector, which does not show as a national debt, I think it totals around $165 billion. The 22 cents out of the tax dollar is not on the Crown corporation debt; it is on the debt of the federal Government.

I acknowledge the correctness of what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North said in that the transfer payments among governments have increased and escalated very severely and that they are delivering transfer payments, in terms of indexing costs, to cover programs such as medicare and all the others of which we are so proud. My point is that the nation will lose all those programs if we do not address some fundamentals.

In terms of addressing transfer payments which take up about two-thirds of our budget, I think we have to conduct a complete analysis of the competing services which the two levels of Government are delivering to the people. I was told by the late Auditor General, James Macdonell, that if we did an inventory of the competition between the federal and provincial Governments, probably in the first year we could address $5 billion of that transfer payment and, over the next three or four years, address another $5 billion. That study has not been done. It is a study that we should conduct because the survival of our system and quality of life depends on it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make two short points. First, I suggest to the Hon. Member for Capilano that we have a very large deficit, not because we are inefficient but because we are in a recession. If instead of 11 per cent to 12 per cent unemployment we had unemployment of 5 per cent to 6 per cent, or if we had another 500,000 or 600,000 people working, they would be earning money and paying income taxes instead of drawing unemployment insurance and would be purchasing goods and services on which companies would be paying corporation taxes and sales taxes. Then our deficit would be much smaller than it is.

My second point is one I made before. I had the greatest respect for the former Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell; I sat on that committee for a while. I had great respect for his ability. Many of his suggestions and proposals to the committee and to Parliament were worth while. Some have been implemented, but he was not an expert on the services Canadians need; he was an expert accountant. He was not an expert on medicare, hospital care, unemployment insurance or welfare.

I am doubtful about this $5 billion figure which the Hon. Member for Capilano pulled out of the hat. If the polls are correct, and if in a year or two down the road we have a Conservative Government, he will have an opportunity to show us whether in fact his arguments are correct.

Let me close by saying that of course we are concerned about the deficit. The deficit would not be the problem it is if we were not in a recession and did not have 1.5 to 1.75 million people unemployed, if these people were working rather than drawing unemployment insurance or welfare.

An item in today's newspaper reported the opening of a restaurant in either Calgary of Edmonton. The restaurant advertised that it would be hiring 30 to 40 people. Over 3,000 people have applied. That is proof of what some of us have been saying, that 99 per cent of the unemployed would be working if jobs were available to them.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I just want to follow up on the exchange that we have heard from the two extremes on the other side of the House. I listened to the comments of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and was struck by the fact that we always have this blinkered focus on money rather than its use. I would like to put some of his comments into prospective.

First, the deficit we are currently facing is indeed a problem for the federal Government. However, the alternative would be to put an enormous damper on our economy by shrinking that deficit. Second, the deficit represents an investment in the safety net and for the recovery projects that are helping Canadians during a slow economic period and coming out of that period. Third, he should take into account that there are some small or negligible over-all provincial deficits. Our transfers paid their bills. Therefore, we are assuming many of the provincial debts at the federal level. Finally, I would like to point out that this terrible interest burden that he sees is in fact money paid by Canadians to Canadians in the form of interest on that debt, such things as interest on Canada Savings Bonds.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, as the NDP Treasury Board critic, I want to put a few comments on the record concerning Bill C-96, an Act to make certain amendments, as the Minister said in his speech on November 19, to enable Treasury Board further to improve financial control and accountability in departments and governments by the Government of Canada. That is a very admirable task. However, I maintain that the improved financial control and accountability being put forward in these amendments, which I just received this morning and have not had an opportunity to consider in depth, is not good enough. I would like to talk about the principle of what is going on.

When looking at improved control and financial accountability, very often those who draft the amendments look only at the efficiency with which government operates. I do not think that is good enough. Many speakers this morning have mentioned J. J. Macdonell, the former Auditor General. I was associated with him through the Public Accounts Committee. I had many very interesting learning experiences through the contributions Mr. Macdonell made to the Public Accounts Committee and, as Auditor General, to the people of Canada.

Mr. Macdonell often stressed that there is a need to look at more than just the efficiency by which government operates. He referred to the three "E's". You have to look at economy, whether Government is getting the best bang for the buck. Quite often it does not do that. Second, you have to look at efficiency, of course, which the drafters of these amendments so often only look at. Third, you have to look at the effectiveness of what is actually happening to the people if this country through programs being delivered by the Government, Crown corporations and agencies.

The responsibility of the Government and Crown corporations is to deal in terms of our national priorities and responsibilities. If the Government has an over-all responsibility to the people of Canada, there should be some fairness to those at the top end of the economic ladder and those at the bottom. There should be some sense of fairness and equality in the distribution of wealth in this country. That does not now exist as the major responsibility for this Government, many provincial Governments, or possibly anyone who has the control of power in the federal Government today.

I can think of some real abuses of our system and the reason why there is such a need for financial control and accountability. Looking at the three "E's", economy, efficiency and effectiveness, I again go back to my experience in the Public Accounts Committee when I arrived here as a new Member of Parliament. The Committee was dealing with Atomic Energy of Canada and the heavy water plant that had been built at La Prade and never used. It was mothballed at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars to the taxpayers of this country.

It was also considering the heavy water plants at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. AECL had come to the Public Accounts Committee and the Government of Canada asking for forgiveness of loans of, if memory serves me correctly, $186 million. The Government subsequently forgave these loans to AECL. Beyond that it provided AECL with future budgets to continue the production of heavy water. That was well because it provides jobs for people in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. It is an industry that is complementary to the production of Candu reactors. When you look at that example closely, Mr. Speaker, you find there was not good regard for economy, effectiveness or efficiency. Although heavy water is still being produced at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury, we cannot sell any Candu reactors. If we do not sell reactors, we cannot sell the heavy water. Heavy water sales are contingent on the sale of Candu reactors except for a few minuscule gallons used for a topping off process.

Many countries which have purchased reactors from Canada have their own heavy water plants. When we sell a reactor to Romania or some other country, they want to create jobs there. Even if we were successful in selling more Candu reactors, we would still have a problem selling heavy water. Those countries interested in reactors to produce hydroelectric power are interested in having their own heavy water plants.

What is happening is that we are stockpiling heavy water. I again stress the importance of having these jobs for Canadians. However, if you took the budgets of this now useless industry in Canada year after year, plus the $186 million forgiven by the federal Government to AECL, you would find that you could give to each of those employed in that industry $50,000, $100,000 or $200,000 and also retrain them or let them go into a business of their own in some other area.

● (1220)

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that there is not very much regard for the three E's—economy, efficiency and effectiveness. I do not say this in a partisan way, but so often the amendments made by the Government to the Financial Administration Act look only at the efficiency aspect. That is not good enough. We must look at the fairness that exists within the country. We must look at the national debt, and I personally think the national debt is a very serious problem in the country.

The national debt has been built up over a number of years. I do not know when the federal Government last had a balanced budget.

Mr. Lang: Early 1970s, just before OPEC came in.

Mr. Anguish: The Hon. Member across the floor says that it was in the early 1970s. That was almost a decade ago, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: Does that shock you? What do you want us to do, cut back? You and Capilano should get together.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Anguish: Liberal Members are asking that we cut back. I think it is very unwise that the Hon. Member opposite with the laughing mouth would call for something like that. There is room for cutbacks within the federal Government and I have just referred to one such area as being Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Had the Hon. Member been listening, he would know that in total there is in excess of over $1 billion wasted through that Crown corporation.

Mr. Fisher: That's your opinion.

Mr. Anguish: It is not my opinion, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, it is a fact, and if he paid attention to the public accounts of Canada, he would know that it is a fact. Anyone can look through the public accounts of Canada to substantiate what I have said here today.

Another example of what I have been speaking of is Eldorado Nuclear, a Crown corporation. That Crown corporation is one of those that wants no interference from the Government of Canada or from the Auditor General. One would think that Eldorado Nuclear belonged to the private sector. I maintain that as long as that company is a Crown corporation or a Government department or agency, it has a responsibility to the people of the country to keep in line with the national priorities and objectives of the Government. It must fit into some kind of strategy. The bottom line on the balance sheet cannot be its only motivating factor. If it were, it should go to the private sector.

Eldorado Nuclear does not belong to the private sector, Mr. Speaker, and I would not want to see it belong to the private sector because of the nature of the industry in which it is involved and the touchy situation that exists over exports of uranium. However, that is an entirely different topic and I will not go into it here today.

There could be another savings for the people of Canada through Eldorado Nuclear, Mr. Speaker. That Crown corporation once ran a uranium mine in the riding I represent at a place called Beaverlodge or, as it is better known to many people, Uranium City. In the year prior to the closing down of Uranium City and the mine at Beaverlodge, Eldorado Nuclear spent in excess of $100 billion. All of a sudden one morning, the people of Uranium City woke up and the news was that Uranium City and the Beaverlodge mine had closed down. When I was first elected to represent that area, that community consisted of over 3,000 people. It declined to a population today of about 250 people because of the "sound planning" of a Crown corporation.

I know that my time is running, short, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say that in addition to Bill C-96, I would very much urge the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to bring forward Crown corporation legislation which would make Crown corporations accountable to the people of Canada through Parliament, because today those Crown corporations are seemingly not responsible to anyone. When the Public Accounts Committee would like the Auditor General to do a comprehensive audit on, for instance, Eldorado Nuclear, officials of Eldorado Nuclear say: "No, we do not want to work with you". I maintain that Crown corporations have a responsibility to work with us because we do represent the people of the country. Crown corporations do have a responsibility in carrying out national priorities, objectives and strategies. I think Crown corporation legislation would go a long way toward making those agencies outside of Government departments more accountable to the people of Canada.

Before I was interrupted a few moments ago, I was about to say a few words about the national debt. I believe the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was correct when he mentioned the figure of about $165 billion as being the amount owed by the Government of Canada. That in effect is our national debt and does take into consideration the money owed by some of the Crown corporations. The figure I have been using is not $165 billion but $166 billion, for which in some way the people of Canada are financially and ultimately responsible.

Mr. Gauthier: What about the other side of the ledger? What are the assets?

Mr. Anguish: The assets of the Government of Canada can never be determined. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would pay attention to some of his own committee work, he would know that the Government cannot determine what Canada's assets are because it does not know. One of the reasons it does not know that, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government follows different accounting procedures from anyone else in the country. I have maintained in the House before, Mr. Speaker, that if any farmer, businessman or individual kept their records and submitted their income tax returns on the basis of that kind of information, they would be sued for income tax evasion.

Mr. Huntington: They would be in jail.

Mr. Anguish: They would be in jail, Mr. Speaker, because no one else in the country can get away with the things with which the federal Government can get away. I think that that is shameful. Hon. Members across the way smile and laugh about the financial state of the country.

The late J. J. Macdonell had said on many occasions, as have others in the House, that we have lost control of the public purse. We have lost control of the public purse because we have perpetual deficit financing year after year. Among other things, the NDP has always been accused of being a Party of big spenders. However, I maintain as an individual that it would not matter who came into power. No one could do any worse than the current administration. It is trying to come to grips with the situation through some of the amendments we are dealing with today, and I admire that. However, we in the New Democratic Party believe that we can only use deficit financing when it is an investment in our future for which there will be a return either in terms of financial return or programs for the people of Canada. However, we cannot continually use deficit financing simply for the sake of deficit financing in an attempt to keep all of the voters happy and try to buy people throughout the country with their own money.

That method seems to be working, but it is getting to the point where I do not believe the Government of Canada can continue to use deficit financing to the extent it is today. I do not think we need to sacrifice many of the social programs and responsibilities which the Government has a mandate to carry out in order to achieve or at least begin to work toward balanced budgets within the country. The tax base is already there, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to point out that I was somewhat dismayed by the last budget that came down because of the share the large corporate sector paid in terms of the revenue that is derived by the Government of Canada. Back in the 1950s, the breakdown of the revenue that came to the federal Government was about 50 per cent from corporations and 50 per cent from individuals. That has decreased for the corporate sector over the years. The corporate sector now pays about 13 cents on every dollar, as opposed to 50 cents at one time, to the Government of Canada. There is some imbalance there which I believe needs to be corrected.

• (1230)

The Government of Canada will have to come to a day of reckoning with the people of Canada very soon. I do not think it will find it quite so humorous when the credit rating of this country dwindles in terms of our respect throughout the global community. The only reason we have been able to succeed and to deficit finance for so long, as far as I am personally concerned, is due to the vast resources that we have in this country. If we were like some countries in the world, the bankers would have stepped in and stopped us a long time ago. The only way there could have been success in this country without the rich resources which we have within our people and our natural resources is by revolution instead of democratically speaking out within the House of Commons and the institutions which this country has to protect democracy.

As I have said, I believe the Government must come to a day of reckoning. I think it would be much better for the Government, whether a Liberal Government or some other Government, to come to the sensible conclusion that it must do something with the financial administration of the country before the people of Canada decide for it through a general election.

I believe Canadians generally and the Government particularly, through this institution, would be much better off to entrench some power back in Parliament itself. Members of Parliament feel frustrated in the role they must play in dealing with the financial accountability of the Government of Canada. For instance, looking back on the Public Accounts Committee when it forgave the $186 million that the AECL owed the Government of Canada, I know that individual Members of Parliament or even all Members of Parliament in Opposition could not have done anything to stop that from happening if the Government wanted it to go through.

I think we must look at the role of Members of Parliament so that they can play a meaningful role on behalf of their constituents in examining the public purse, ensuring the maintenance of social programs and the over-all responsibility of providing a better distribution of wealth within the country. I hope that happens very soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Minister rising to reply?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): First, I will inquire if there are any questions or comments. There being none, we will proceed with debate. Before recognizing the Hon. Minister, it is my duty to inform the House at this time that if the Minister rises to speak, he will close debate on second reading, according to Standing Order 41(3).

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of very interesting comments made during this debate. It is tempting to respond to them at some length. Certainly there should be greater attention given, and perhaps this will be the case, to the very strong espousal by the spokesman for the NDP of an early move to balanced budgets. However, I hope that, perhaps on another occasion, we can explore this very interesting joining of forces with the Official Opposition.

Rather than doing so at this time, I would like to assist the House, since we are going into Committee of the Whole, by presenting to it some comments not only on the Bill itself but on the amendments which have been the subject of intensive discussion on the part of my Parliamentary Secretary and the Opposition spokesmen. In this connection, I want to express my thanks for the courtesy and consideration given by official spokesmen for the Opposition Parties to the amendments which we have indicated we want to present.

I also want to express my thanks for the willingness of the Opposition Parties to facilitate the consideration and passage of this Bill today. Finally, I want to thank my distinguished Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), for his very effective work with the Opposition spokesmen which has led us to the point where we can confirm that we have had a motion indicating an agreement by all Parties to dispose of this Bill today.

As I said when I spoke to open second reading on November 19, 1982, as a result of comments and suggestions received by the Government, I would be proposing a number of changes at the committee stage. These changes would include the deletion of Sections 20.1, dealing with net voting; Section 101, dealing with interdepartmental charging; and Section 102, dealing with the charging and paying of interest. As well, there are a number of technical amendments to the wording.

As I have said, in order to facilitate study of this Bill during Committee of the Whole, I would like to take the opportunity during this stage of debate to summarize some of the provisions of the Bill since it has been a year since this debate opened and I presented its basic themes to the House. The principal objective of this Bill is to improve financial controls, accountability and disclosure to Parliament while at the same time streamlining and modernizing certain administrative procedures that have become outdated.

In particular, the Bill establishes in law the fact that only Parliament may forgive a debt recorded on the balance sheet of Canada. It provides a mechanism for the disclosure and approval of loan guarantees by Parliament. It improves accountability for and reporting on the use of appropriations by requiring disclosure in the public accounts of debts incurred but not paid year end. It strengthens controls over the respending of refunds of expenditures by restricting the types of receipts that qualify to be credited through an appropriation and subsequently respent. It provides improved authorities for the recovery of accountable advances and strengthens accountability and liability for losses of public money and public property.

The Bill also contains several changes to the borrowing sections of the Act which were recommended by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). These changes are designed to enable the Minister of Finance and the Department of Finance to approve the administrative process associated with Government borrowing and to respond to changes in market conditions.

In addition, and of particular significance to myself as President of the Treasury Board, are the amendments to Part IV of the Act which formally recognize the role of the President of the Treasury Board with regard to the public accounts and in dealing constructively with any recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee for improving the accounting and reporting practices of the Government.

By way of illustration, I want to take a few moments to elaborate briefly on each of these objectives. Subsection 18(1) currently authorizes the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of Treasury Board, to make regulations authorizing deletion from the accounts of debts due to Her Majesty which do not exceed $5,000. Under the deletion of debt regulations, authority to delete debts from the accounts is delegated to the Minister of each department for debts that do not exceed $2,000, and to the Treasury Board on recommendation of the Minister concerned for debts between $2,000 and $5,000.

At present there is no provision for the deletion of debts over $5,000, nor is there uniform criteria for determining when a debt should be considered uncollectable and written off. In addition, action taken to collect debts varies from department to department and there are inconsistencies in the collection of various overpayments as a result of differing authorities in individual Acts.

The proposed changes to Section 18 will provide the Treasury Board with the authority to deal with debts over $5,000 and to prescribe the procedures to be followed and the criteria to be applied when writing off a debt. There will continue to be a requirement in law that debts written off during a fiscal year be reported in the public accounts for that year and, as specified in the proposed Section 18(2), parliamentary authority would be required to write off such debts as loans and investments that are recorded on the balance sheet of Canada.

Section 22 of the Act currently provides the authority to honour loan guarantees but does not provide a mechanism for parliamentary review and approval. We believe that Members of Parliament should have an opportunity to examine and approve each request for a loan guarantee. The proposed amendment to Section 22 will provide a simple mechanism for parliamentary review and approval, and should certainly deal with the concern of Hon. Members of Parliament with regard to the use of letters of comfort.

Several of the proposed amendments are directed at improving disclosure and accountability to Parliament for the use of appropriations. Changes to Section 30 will require that debts owing at the end of a fiscal year under a contractual arrangement, or for work performed, goods received or services rendered, be recorded in the accounts of Canada as a charge against the applicable appropriation, even though payment might not actually be made until the following year. This provision will ensure full disclosure on the public accounts of the complete use of parliamentary appropriations by requiring the recording at year end of both amounts actually paid and amounts owing.

As mentioned earlier, changes to Part IV of the Act, Sections 54, 55 and 56, will make the President of the Treasury Board responsible for tabling the public accounts and will involve the Comptroller General, through the President of the Treasury Board, in establishing in consultation with the Minister of Finance the form and content of the public accounts. These amendments will also provide the Receiver General—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister but it seems to the Chair that the Minister is anticipating the work which the Committee of the Whole should be doing possibly in a few minutes' time, or within the next hour or so. The purpose of recognizing the Minister at this stage was to give him the right to reply to comments which were made in the course of debate. The Chair has serious reservations about the propriety of the Minister's remarks in the sense that he is anticipating the amendments which would be presented at the committee stage.

In any case, the Chair will hear the Minister out. However, I would advise him to stick to the spirit of his right to reply.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. What I am attempting to do is to reply to comments made by various speakers about the amendments and their desire to learn more about them. I want to say that it is not my intention to open committee stage with another speech. I hope I can have the indulgence of the House in concluding my remarks, which I have almost completed. It is my intention, in speaking at this time, to respond to what I understood to be a basic concern of Hon. Members, and that is that they would want to be aware of what shape the Bill will be in at the time it proceeds to Committee of the Whole.

If I can have the indulgence of the House I will complete my remarks in just a minute or so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair appreciates the Minister's attempt to be useful to the House. However, the Chair must be concerned with procedure, and the proper procedure. The Minister would have, in the normal course of events in Committee of the Whole, an opportunity to make those very statements, presumably in a few minutes' time. The spirit of the Standing Orders, in granting the Minister the right to reply, is not to go into detail, as he is now doing with his anticipated amendments. He should reserve those comments, in my opinion, for the Committee of the Whole stage. However, with the indulgence of the House, I suppose anything is possible around here.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to the point raised by the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps normally all Hon. Members would welcome and understand your intervention. I believe there are some extraordinary parameters to the process and procedure at this stage, inasmuch as the very detailed and technical amendments were not available to us for study prior to today. I believe the House might perhaps be inclined to allow the Minister to complete his remarks, having noted the concern of the Chair with respect to the proper procedure at this stage of the discussion.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I want to extend our courtesy to the Minister, if he feels it is necessary to continue, in wrapping up second reading debate. However, he is going to have to explain each clause, and the amendments thereto, as we get into Committee of the Whole, and much of what he is saying right now is going to have to be repeated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That was precisely the concern raised by the Chair. However, there seems to be agreement. Let me state very plainly that this in no sense should be taken as a precedent, because the Standing Order is very clear as to the scope of the remarks of the Minister at this stage. I recognize the President of the Privy Council by agreement.

Mr. Gray: Unless, Mr. Speaker, there has been some change at Government House today, of which I am not aware, I have not yet become President of the Privy Council, but I assume you are recognizing me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I apologise. The Hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: To advance debate, not being able to anticipate to what extent explanations will be required with respect to each clause, I will simply say that the principal objective of the Bill is to provide better control over revenues and expenditures, and greater efficiency in the methods by which we achieve that control. I hope I would have the consent of the House to refer this Bill to Committee of the Whole for clause by clause study.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, could the President of the Treasury Board give us a brief explanation? We were involved in adjusting to the new Auditor General Act and I believe Hon. Members in the House would appreciate some comment.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I wad distracted by the work of the staff to instal the table at which officials will sit. I apologise to the Hon. Member and would ask him to restate his question.

Mr. Huntington: I am asking for the usual explanation from the President of the Treasury Board on Clause 1. I believe it has some importance. It indicates that Part VII was removed when the new Auditor General Act was proclaimed. I believe it would be good for the record of the committee if we had the explanation from the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the amendment to Clause 1 is to change the long title of the Financial Administration Act. The purpose is to make the long title better reflect the several purposes of the Act. That is basically the reason for this particular amendment.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, we are really concerned with restating that Treasury Board is very much concerned with the establishment and maintenance of the accounts of Canada and the financial control of Crown corporations. Is that what this does?

Mr. Gray: This would be the effect of it, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—"Auditor General of Canada"

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I understand that Clause 2 is subject to an amendment, and I would ask the President of the Treasury Board to tell us why Bill C-96 is worded as it is in Clause 2. Would he be good enough to explain why it is being amended? Is he going to move the amendment, because I cannot agree that Clause 2 as it is presently worded should carry.

● (1250)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, our deliberations in the Committee of the Whole will prove that, compared to the information I am now going to provide, I was certainly not providing detailed technical explanations of the Bill when I spoke on second reading. They were very general comments compared to the comments I am going to provide in answer to my hon. friend.

First of all, the proposed amendment in the form originally tabled is for the following purpose. Chapter 34 of the Statutes of Canada, 1976-77, the Auditor General Act, provides for the revocation of Part VII of the Financial Administration Act dealing with the Auditor General of Canada, and thus it becomes necessary to define "Auditor General" as referred to in other parts of the Financial Administration Act. The definition included in Clause 2 is to indicate that "Auditor General" means the Auditor General of Canada.

There is a proposed amendment to Clause 2(2), the purpose of which is to change the definition of money paid to Canada for a special purpose. The following wording is substituted:

"money received by Canada for a special purpose" includes all money that is paid to, received or collected by a public officer under or pursuant to a statute, trust, treaty, undertaking or contract, and is to be disbursed for a purpose specified in or pursuant to such statute, trust, treaty, undertaking or contract;

I want to propose an amendment as follows:

That subclause 2(2) of the English version of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out line 26 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"to, or received or collected by a public"

I do not know if you want me to cease speaking now, Mr. Chairman, while you put the amendment, or whether you will permit me to go on and state the object of the amendment. I want to be very scrupulous with respect to procedure. Perhaps I can say that the object of the amendment is to extend the definition of money paid to Canada for a special purpose to include money received or collected by a public officer. The object is to have a technical improvement in wording.

There are other amendments to the Act.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair would like first of all to dispose of the first amendment proposed by the Minister.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister give a few examples of how the addition of the word "or" extends the definition?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the purpose of the amendment is to indicate that moneys may be received by or paid to a public officer even though he does not formally collect it. For example, a prisoner entering an institution has to place any funds with which he enters the institution into the hands of a public officer who holds it for him during the period of his incarceration. This is an example of the kind of situation this change in wording is intended to address.

Mr. Huntington: I do not want to belabour this, Mr. Chairman. There has to be a reason for it. Clause 2(2) reads:

"money received by Canada for a special purpose" includes all money that is paid to, received or collected by a public officer under or pursuant to a statute—

The amendment adds the word "or" Does that mean moneys received by prison officials from people who are incarcerated can be put into a special account so that it can be paid without interfering with the accounts of Canada? Is that all the word "or" does?

Mr. Gray: As I understand it, funds received by public officers in those circumstances are held in trust by the public officers until the term of imprisonment is over. To repeat what I said before, the amendment is designed to recognize the fact that moneys come into the hands of public officers which are not formally paid to them. They take possession of the money in ways which do not indicate or suggest formal payment. With respect to prisoners, the moneys they bring into prison are shown as liabilities on Canada's balance sheet.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I have to ask again how does the amendment make such a significant difference? The original wording said "paid to, received or collected". My problem is with the language.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the distinguished Opposition spokesman and I share a similar difficulty. I am told the word "or" was added on the advice of legal draftsmen. Advisers to the Department of Justice said it was necessary in order to cover the kinds of situations I outlined. Perhaps had he and I been dealing with this on our own we would not have done this, but we are acting on the advice of counsel in the Department of Justice with respect to the drafting of this Bill.

Mr. Huntington: I am still having difficulty, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to hold the Bill up, but it is just that I am really trying to understand the significance of the change. I do not trust draftsmen of legislation because they can mangle the language I was educated in quicker than anyone else. I get very worried when I see an amendment adding the word "or". I have read this five or six or seven times and tried to understand the significance. Does it make the accounting easier? Does it make it easier to return the goods received from, say, a prisoner by a public officer? Does it avoid an intensive amount of detail in the accounts of Canada? Why has it been amended?

Mr. Gray: As I understand it, this amendment is not being made for accounting reasons but for legal reasons. That is to say, and I am venturing my own view on the matter, technically it could be argued that if this word "or" was not placed in the Act, moneys which public officers took control of in circumstances of the kind I outlined, that is to say a prisoner coming into a penal institution and having funds in their possession taken over by public officers, whould not be handled in the same way as moneys paid voluntarily to a public officer. This may be a rather fine point but this is my understanding of the distinction which was not covered in the Act as originally presented and which we are now advised should be dealt with by the addition of the word "or". We are dealing with two sets of circumstances which are definitely different although it may not appear to be that different on the surface.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock p.m. it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill later this day.

Progress reported.

INVITATION TO CONTRIBUTE TO PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S FINANCING CAMPAIGN—REGRETS OF MR. GOURD IN DECLINING TO PARTICIPATE

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in the House today to repeat, in the same terms, what the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said upon receiving a letter from Senator Davey inviting him to attend a dinner on December 13 in honour of our Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Now imagine, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party is in need of funds, and I have the privilege of being asked to take part in its fund-raising campaign.

I am enraged, furious, indignant, fuming, incensed, boiling, maddened, irritated, galled, defiled, annoyed, smeared, chafed, rasped, triturated, abrased, furcated, defiled, stained, soiled, blemished, stunned, bewildered, puzzled, befuddled, confounded, mystified, perplexed, baffled, baited, devilled, lured, decoyed, vulgarized, debased, and insulted.

Mr. Speaker, this letter made me disconsolate, inconsolable, unconsolable, comfortless, forlorn, heartsick, soul sick, heartsore, heartbroken and dejected, and I coughed and wheezed, and so forth. Mr. Speaker, as a Liberal in more ways than one, I make donations to charitable organizations, but the Progressive Conservative Party will not get a cent from me.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

CALL FOR EXTENSION OF CANADIAN JURISDICTION TO CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the then Minister of State for Finance, on the 29th of June, 1983, tabled a notice of a Ways and Means Motion to apply the customs and excise jurisdiction of Canada to the Continental Shelf of Canada. He went on to indicate that amendments to legislation affected would be introduced accordingly. This and many other similar motions are even yet left on the table.

Shipbuilding and repair represents a major industry in both the national and the provincial contexts. The federal Government's initiative, after much encouragement by the shipbuilding and repair industry, is consistent with its policy of extending Canada's offshore jurisdiction beyond the current 12 mile territorial limit. The increase in resource exploration and the development on Canada's Continental Shelf beyond that 12 mile limit, a more uniform application of existing rates of duty on shops under the Customs Tariff, and the necessity to introduce a greater degree of equity and fairness into the shipbuilding industry, make the introduction of these amendments an early necessity. As this industry has been held in check by so many other measures, will the Minister of Finance respond in this instance by introducing the necessary legislation before the end of this session?

EDUCATION

CONSEQUENCES OF PROVINCE OF QUEBEC'S INTENTION TO PUBLISH HISTORY BOOK ELIMINATING WORD "CANADA"

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, the distinguished French newspaper Le Monde published an article which said that the Quebec Department of Education was planning to publish a textbook on the history of Quebec from which the word Canada would practically be eliminated. After failing to convince Quebecers in the May 1980 referendum that its option was the right one, and after giving up on Quebec's senior citizens who, according to Mr. Lévesque, are an obstacle to Quebec's independence, the Quebec Government now wants to take advantage of the minds of young Quebecers in their formative years. This promises to be the most systematic destruction of Canadian history this country has ever known within its own borders. The Quebec Department of Education is becoming an instrument of political propaganda through which intolerance, ignorance and obscurantism will be fed to young Quebecers during their history classes. The history of Canada is an affirmation of the harmonious co-existence of two founding peoples and affords living proof that cultural minorities can develop free of any restraint on Canadian soil. In a world where interdependence is increasing every day, understanding and respect for the past is a sign of a country's high degree of civilization. Mr. Speaker, the PQ Government is about to plunge Quebec youth into the abyss of ignorance.

POLITICAL PARTIES

WORK OF LIBERAL PARTY REFORM COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our Party I want to indicate grave concern that the Reform Committee of the Liberal Party has once again delayed its report. A party described by its hard working, party splitting, leadership hunting President as "still in the Mackenzie King era", must move more quickly. The report describes the Liberal Party as "tired, arrogant, self serving, self satisfied, and irrelevant in some parts of the country." Mr. Speaker, that is not new. Canadians have known that for years. What is new is the revelation that there are some parts of the country where they are not that way. There could be as many as six ridings.

Fortunately there is a saviour on the horizon. It is not the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien), who is behind one of the curtains looking for delegates. It is not the white knight from Bay Street who quit in 1975. It is not the hapless ex-Minister of Finance whose 1981 budget destroyed the Canadian economy. No, it is the Liberal party President, the shy and retiring Iona, who says:

> I've done a great deal of work on my economics knowledge. I can hold my own with all of them.

Who could not hold their own with all of them, in a Party that created 12 per cent unemployment, 13 per cent inflation, and 22 per cent interest rates?

In closing, we want to urge the Reform Committee to move quickly so they can continue the dissension in the Liberal Party.

MEDICAL CARE

CONTRACT TO PROVIDE INFORMATION SERVICE FOR PROPOSED CANADA HEALTH ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): In the Ottawa Citizen this morning it is reported that a Supply and Services bulletin on recent contracts carries a $100,000 item for a company called Nunavut Communications Inc., a contract to provide advisory information and creative services related to the development of a communications plan covering the Canada Health Act.

I want to tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that if she really wants to get a Canada Health Act through this House, what she should really do is bring a Bill before this House which will strengthen and enforce the five basic principles of medicare, that will address the problems of extra billing and user fees. She should not, before we even see a Bill in this House, be contracting out presumably for the kind of advertising campaign we were treated to during the constitutional debate. Are we going to see Canada geese flying to Liberal tunes once again, or are we going to see a decent piece of legislation that Members of Parliament will feel good enough about to sell in this country? That is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be doing, not spending money on Liberal patronage to a company owned by someone who used to be in the Prime Minister's Office. She should be bringing forth a decent Bill.

AIRPORTS

CHATHAM CITY AIRPORT, ONT.

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) once again the urgent need for a solution to a dangerous situation that exists at the City of Chatham Airport, located within my constituency of Kent.

Three years ago Chatham City Council attempted to purchase or expropriate land adjoining the airport to allow for an extension of the runway. A dispute regarding the legality of zoning bylaws erupted with one land owner who, unable to reach a satisfactory agreement with City Council, constructed a grain silo and hog barn on his property, but directly within the flight path of any approaching or departing aircraft. These obstructions have limited the use of the airport to small aircraft, effectively cancelling the only air passenger service there operated by Pem-Air. The presence of these buildings has therefore created a very serious safety problem.

● (1410)

Though the Department of Transport has been involved from the beginning of the situation, it remains far from being rectified. I urge the Minister to speed up the process of reaching a conclusion to this matter, and to consider seriously introducing pertinent zoning legislation. The provincial Government of Ontario has placed a direct responsibility on the federal Government for this action. We should not wait until a tragic accident occurs before taking action to prevent situations similar to the one at Chatham airport from occurring across the country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply troubled by an article which appeared in The Citizen concerning the environmental assessment and review process. I was astonished to find out that, as a result of eight internal evaluations of Government Ministries, the Government's plan has been starved for funds and knowingly deprived of effective leadership—in sum, dealt a body blow to its effectiveness.

The plan is supposed to ensure that every federal activity, from $25,000 annual maintenance operations to multi-billion dollar megaprojects, is checked for potential ecological harm. Under two cabinet directives this was to be carried out. We have just discovered that this is not the case. How can the Government, and especially the Ministry of the Environment, go about touting ecological concerns when the Government does not even enforce its own program assessments?

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF FARMERS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, with my experience in agriculture I know the danger of loose hobby farm laws, but surely there is a greater danger in going to the other extreme and beating into the dirt the poorest farmers who are struggling to survive.

Farmers across Canada, especially those who are trying to save their farms by working at other jobs, and those who are trying to build farms by the same method, are being subjected to continued harassment through vicious interpretations of outdated Section 31 of the Income Tax Act by Revenue Canada. I have seen blueberry farmers, livestock producers, cattle ranchers, and every type of farmer across Canada being subjected to persecution.

Many of those who are being audited and having their taxes increased are farmers pure and simple; their entire life is farming. Valiantly they take other employment to get through a hard time, getting up at three o'clock or four o'clock in the morning to do their farm work, and then going to outside jobs, only to return to finish their farming duties. Is it fair that people who cannot afford to fight back be overtaxed to pay the country's deficit brought about through the incompetence of the Government opposite?

The over zealous interpretation of Section 31 virtually destroys the opportunity of many Canadians to start farms. Farming is a tough, unforgiving business. The country needs farmers and the food they produce. The position of Revenue Canada in this matter ignores not only equity but contravenes the rights of all Canadians.

MINES AND MINING

LAY-OFFS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL MINES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on February 10, 1981, Senator Bud Olson, Minister of State for Economic Development, confirmed the federal Government's commitment to participate in the development of the Northeast British Columbia coal block. The federal and provincial Government of British Columbia have poured billions of dollars into this new venture in northeastern British Columbia, which is supplying export coal to the same markets that are presently supplied by the coal mines in southeastern British Columbia. At present, 300 workers have been laid off at Westar Mines in Sparwood, British Columbia, and 1,100 workers have just received notice from Fording Coal of a three-week lay-off prior to Christmas, and a further one-month lay-off in July.

The federal Government has a responsibility to investigate immediately the program which was outlined by the New Democratic Party in September, when we requested that western coal producing Provinces be given the opportunity to supply central Canada's coal requirements. It is imperative that the Canadian Government take immediate steps to meet with producers and consumers to work out an agreement which would ensure not only employment for thousands of workers but also make a major contribution in cleaning up our environment. Western Canadian coal has a sulphur content well below that of American coal which is being used at the present time in central Canada.

If immediate steps are not taken to secure these Canadian markets as they become available, coal mines in southeastern British Columbia will have no one to blame but the federal Government for causing their economic disaster. The Government has promoted—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Statistics Canada has just released its latest index of leading economic indicators. That index supports the growing concern of reputable economists across the country that the current economic recovery is stalling and that it will almost certainly falter in the new year. I would like to ask the Minister this question. Given that employment dropped by 25,000 in October, that the housing construction sector remains appallingly weak, and that retail sales have been falling in real terms since June, is the Government considering very seriously indeed the desirability of an early budget to deal with these growing signs of weakness in the economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, I am considering bringing down a budget some time between February and June of 1984. I have not as yet decided on a particular time to do so. I am watching the evolution of the economic recovery and will advise in due time as to the advisability of an early budget or a later budget.

So that my hon. friend will not be unduly concerned, I would like to draw his attention to another statement made by Statistics Canada which came out, not yesterday but this morning. That statement does not refer to the leading economic indicators in August but to industrial production in September. It indicated that seasonally adjusted industrial production increased by a very strong 1.8 per cent in September following an upward revised figure of a 1.1 per cent increase in industrial production in August. While Statistics Canada had come up with only a 0.4 per cent increase in August, it revised its figures and arrived at a 1.1 per cent increase, almost a 300 per cent increase in the figure first issued by Statistics Canada.

I might also point out to the Hon. Member a review of the ten major forecasters which was published very recently in the latest issue of The Financial Post. That review indicates that growth for 1983 was 3 per cent, and growth for 1984 is forecast to be 4.5 per cent by ten major forecasters.

CANADIAN UNEMPLOYMENT COMPARED WITH UNITED STATES FIGURES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He can derive whatever satisfaction he wishes out of the statistics to which he has referred. But is he also aware of the fact that there are one-quarter of a million fewer Canadians working today than when the recession began? Is he aware of the fact that, by contrast, there are a million more Americans working today than when the United States entered its recession? Do not these facts, rather than his own, clearly indicate to the Government that our economic recovery has a long way to go to match the Minister's expectations and the performance of the American economy? I would therefore ask the Minister again if these facts do not demonstrate the need for an early budget to deal with the faltering economy and, in particular, with the weakness in the economic recovery.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend could also refer to the fact that Canada created 350,000 jobs in the last year, a proportionately larger number than any other industrial country. I might also refer my hon. friend to the most recent issue of the British publication, Euromoney, which has studied 93 countries around the world. Euromoney indicates that the country with the largest economic turnaround of any single country of those 93 is Canada.

REQUEST FOR NEW JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can lull himself into a false sense of satisfaction by reading statistics that may have been prepared by Euromoney. The fact is that the Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank, and Dominion Securities, to name just three institutions, are all quoted in today's press as saying that the economy is drifting, without enough strength to sustain the current recovery into 1984. Since virtually all the economic indicators prove them right, does the Minister not agree with those economists right here in Canada, not those from outside the country, that the economy is "at a major decision point for policy makers"?

• (1420)

In light of that, will he assure the House that the Throne Speech coming up in a week or two will contain real job-creation measures and not band-aid approaches, so that the million or so unemployed can get off welfare, unemployment insurance, and Government make-work programs, and find real jobs in the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to wait for the next Throne Speech. I may remind the hon. gentleman that in the last budget brought down in April of this year, the main focus was on job creation in the private sector, and that the majority of the jobs created this year as a result of the Government's economic and fiscal policies were created in the private sector. I am referring to permanent, steady jobs and not just temporary employment. In addition, the private sector has been instrumental in helping to make the direct job creation programs for which my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is responsible, increasingly successful.

We therefore have a situation in which the private sector has been able to create a large number of jobs this year and will continue to do so next year.

As far as the Throne Speech is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have to be patient, and I hope we shall be able to start the debate on the Throne Speech a few weeks from now.

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that the major part of the growth in this country this year took place in the first two quarters. Since then, the economy has been stalled. His budget was on April 19 and it accomplished nothing to make this country grow, improve its economy, or to get us out of a recession.

The fact is that the recovery is stalled. What new initiative does the Minister have in mind that would turn the country around and get it growing again? Or is the fact of the matter as set out by Alfred Apps, reported in Maclean's this week, that the Government's advisers say that no amount of new government initiative will do anything. If that is the case, when will he suggest to the Prime Minister that he call an election?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the person who is probably the most stalled in this House is the Hon. Member. He is reported as having said that it would take 15 years for the Conservatives to bring some recovery to the economy. We will do that in less time and a lot faster than he would. I suspect he was referring to the time it would take them to get back into office.

If the Hon. Member wants to talk about figures, again I would like to refer him to Statistics Canada figures, not for the first two quarters but for September. The figures for the month of September, which is the third quarter of this year, indicate that industrial production went up by 1.8 per cent. That is in a single month, September. The month of August has also been revised upwards by Statistics Canada, to 1.1 per cent from 0.4 per cent. Therefore, the economic recovery, far from faltering, is proceeding very well indeed. All the forecasters foresee that for this year Canada will have a rate of growth that compares very favourably with the rate of growth in the United States, which is the fastest growing economy in the world, along with Canada.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, let us talk about some statistics of today. Interest rates today have gone up for the fourth straight week in a row. Let us talk about the cost of money. Every forecaster and economist is saying that we have to get interest rates down. What is happening is that interest rates continue to rise as Governments borrow 75 per cent of the money available in the marketplace. What action does the Government intend to take to get interest rates down and start the economy growing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that the prime rate in Canada is at the same level as that in the United States at the present time. The rates for bonds, after 15 years, are lower than they are in the United States. Consumer loans can be obtained presently at a rate equivalent to the rates that were prevalent over the last 25 years. Mortgage rates for consumers, at 10.25 per cent, are as low as they have been for several years. Therefore I would like my hon. friend to look at the facts on the interest rate side and realize that Canadian monetary policy has been the right one.

We have depressed interest rates as much as we could, and in effect the average Canadian is now getting rates, whether on the mortgage side or on the consumer loans side, which compare with rates which have not been in existence for years and years.

FINANCE

REPORTED CONSIDERATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP SCHEME

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Well placed government sources today, as indicated in The Globe and Mail, are reporting that the Minister of Finance and his Department are preparing a scheme which would see new tax breaks for corporations in an effort to encourage them to implement employee stock ownership programs. Are the Minister and his Department considering such a scheme? Will he confirm that this scheme is being developed now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. There will be, I am sure, a number of speculative stories written about the contents of an eventual budget. I can tell my hon. friend that I have not even decided on the broad framework of the next budget, let alone decided on particular proposals. I remind the Hon. Member, however, that in my Department, and in many other Departments of Government, as the budget is being considered several months down the line, every year those Departments are called upon to carry out a review of their plans, and a lot of studies on many subjects are carried out. I would suggest to my hon. friend that there will be 30 or 40 different questions which will be examined. I might retain one, two, or three suggestions in the end, when the budget time comes. My hon. friend, again, will have to wait until the budget is released to know exactly which suggestions I have kept.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a follow-up question to the Minister of Finance. I believe he has admitted he is considering this proposal, and while we in the New Democratic Party are in full agreement with a policy which would see meaningful worker participation in management decision-making, and worker ownership, we certainly are very hesitant about the scheme which has been presented, which really does not appear to be much more than a back door for wage controls and a threat to free collective bargaining. Will the Minister indicate, if he is not considering this scheme, if he is saying this will not be something which he introduces in the budget in the springtime?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying any such thing. What I am saying is that I will not comment on press speculation about any particular items in the budget. This is not the last opportunity which my hon. friend will have to ask me to comment on speculative stories. There will be a number of them.

As to what will or will not be in the budget, my friend will have to wait. If he checks the speeches I have made over the last several months, he will see I have indicated how important it is to improve labour-management relations in this country, and that the burden in that regard is not only on labour but that management has a big role to play in this regard also. Labour, management, and government should be ready to look at new initiatives and examine ways, many ways, whereby the general state of labour-management relations could be improved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on a supplementary question. The Hon. Member could avoid long preambles.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will avoid a long preamble by asking the Minister of Finance a simple question.

PARTICIPATION OF WORKERS IN MANAGEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): In the Minister's consideration of ways and means of improving the labour-management atmosphere, would he agree that simply providing an opportunity for employees to hold a handful of shares in a company would really do very little in terms of any real participation of workers in their work place?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I have invited business and labour to examine ways of improving labour relations in this country. I made it clear that both employers and employees had a responsibility in this respect. I am personally looking at a number of ways in which we could facilitate and improve labour relations in this country, and I shall probably have a chance to discuss this matter with my provincial counterparts as well. As far as the Hon. Member's specific comment is concerned, I shall take it as a comment based on a proposal that is still hypothetical.

SHIPBUILDING

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MARINE ENGINEERING TECHNICIANS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for employment and immigration I will address my question to his seatmate, the Minister of Defence. The Minister must be aware that in the Department of Employment and Immigration there is a program called the Critical Skills Training Program, the purpose of which is to identify those sectors in industry which are going to require specially trained personnel in the future, such as the shipbuilding program which now finds itself short of 250 marine engineering technicians. Did the Minister's Department inform the Department of Employment and Immigration that it would require at least 250 marine engineering technicians? After all, the program has been in the works for at least three years.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question was raised this morning in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Commodore Healey, the project manager, said the story was inaccurate. There is no shortage of 250 marine engineers. Active recruitment is going ahead. Saint John is meeting with some difficulties, and hopefully they will be short term. He also indicated it is hoped that all of the marine engineers required for the Canadian patrol frigate program will be found in Canada, except for certain specialized marine engineers.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, that is a preposterous response but not surprising coming from this Government, particularly this Minister. The fact is there is a shortage and it was obviously not identified by the Department of National Defence which had responsibility for ensuring those people were available.

POSSIBLE DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF PATROL FRIGATES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister how long it is anticipated that this project will be held up. The workers concerned are going to go without jobs because of the incompetence of the Government which will find foreign workers to come in and take those jobs which should be designated for Canadians.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would rather the hon. gentleman had been at the committee this morning to address that specific question. We dealt with that question, and assurances were forthcoming to the effect that the marine engineers would be found in Canada. If the hon. gentleman wants to discuss the matter with either the project manager, or Saint John shipbuilding in his own area, he would see that, while there are some temporary difficulties, the problem will be resolved.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that when we selected this process for building six new frigates by identifying a Canadian contractor, we knew there would have to be special efforts in order to build a Canadian team. We accepted that risk and are meeting the expectations. We will have to work a bit more assiduously, and I hope the hon. gentleman will give us his co-operation just as the hon. gentleman from Esquimalt-Saanich offered to do this morning, in order to resolve the issue.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

THE CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—RESPONSIBILITY FOR HELP IN MEETING LEGAL EXPENSES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who has taken a position on behalf of the Government which I can only describe as heartless and mean-spirited with respect to the plight of Donald Marshall, the Mic-Mac Indian from Nova Scotia.

The Minister will know that the Government of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, signed an international covenant on civil and political rights which provides, among other things, that:

> When a person has by a final decision been convicted of a criminal offence and when subsequently his conviction has been reversed or he has been pardoned on the ground that a new or newly discovered fact shows conclusively that there has been a miscarriage of justice, the person who has suffered punishment . . . shall be compensated—

There is a federal responsibility in this matter and the Minister cannot weasel out by attempting to place it on the shoulders of provincial jurisdiction, since he funds provincial legal aid. How can he now deny assistance to Donald Marshall?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is surely aware that international agreements, whatever their validity or application, do not change the constitutional and legal situation in our country. We have many examples where the Provinces have given us authority to agree to certain things internationally and the federal Government takes its international obligations, yet within Canada the obligation rests on the Provinces. I take that to be almost too obvious to state, but in this situation it is worth stating.

The Government of Ontario seems to be assuming its responsibilities in similar matters. It is prosecuting studies in this area with great assiduity and I see no reason why other Provinces cannot also assume their responsibilities.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked deals with a sense of compassion. The Minister demonstrates that neither he nor his Government has one iota of compassion with respect to a very tragic situation where a man spent 11 years incarcerated, under a federal law, with respect to an alleged murder. In view of the fact that the Minister indicated his sympathy, which does not cost him or the Government anything, what steps has he taken to manifest that sympathy? Has he at least called the Attorney General of Nova Scotia and used his good offices to make sure there is compensation? Has he offered any amount of money at all in conjunction with the Province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, indeed I have spoken to the new Attorney General of Nova Scotia on this matter. I tried to use, as the hon. gentleman puts it, my good offices to have the Province assume its responsibilities. The hon. gentleman says this is a federal law, and so it is, as is everything in the criminal law. But as it happens it is enforced by provincial or municipal police, in this case the police of the City of Sydney, Nova Scotia. They fall under the jurisdiction of the Province, and the case was prosecuted by a provincial prosecutor. That should make it clear enough there was no aspect of federal involvement whatsoever in the unfolding of this case.

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

GUIDELINES GOVERNING EXPOSURE OF WOMEN TO IONIZED RADIATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy who will know that the Atomic Energy Control Board is in the process of issuing new guidelines for worker exposure to ionized radiation. Perhaps the most important change is a drastic increase for women workers, from the present level of one REM, to five REM, to current level for men. Would the Minister not agree this form of sexual equality only increases the risk of cancer for women, and deformities in their unborn children?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this problem. I will look into it and report to the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT BOARD HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, at the same time will the Minister look into the fact that the AECB will not hold open hearings to discuss these new levels of exposure but is, instead, holding hearings behind closed doors? Will he not agree that, in an age where we have public hearings on rail line abandonment, and on radio and television licences, new levels of exposure for workers can only be decided after open public hearings?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the Board is operating under the laws of this Parliament. I will check if there is provision for public hearings, but I know it is operating within the laws and the mandate given it by the House of Commons.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

MUTUAL BALANCED FORCE REDUCTION TALKS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Among the many people whom the Prime Minister consulted with in depth before embarking on his peace mission was U.S. General Bernard Rogers, Supreme Commander of NATO. Apparently General Rogers supports the Prime Minister in his efforts. I quote, "He and I agree on the objectives of arms reduction for all forces."

• (1440)

Has the Acting Prime Minister's Department given special study to the Mutual Balanced Force Reduction talks and how those talks can be beefed up? This is one of the areas apparently that General Rogers noted strongly, and the Prime Minister, in one of his four points. Would the Minister give some indication whether the Department has studied this and whether or not new suggestions for these kinds of talks will be forthcoming?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that the MBFR talks be given renewed impetus has become a part of the Prime Minister's peace initiative. General Rogers has frequently made the point that the imbalance which presently exists in conventional arms in Europe has effectively lowered the nuclear threshold. Presumably one deals with this in two ways. One way would be to increase the level of conventional forces on the side of the NATO allies. That would be the last resort. An effort at the MBFR to attempt a mutual reduction of conventional forces would be much better. The Prime Minister has already conveyed to other NATO leaders his hope that an effort would be undertaken in 1984 to give additional impetus to the MBFR talks. These talks have been going on for ten years. There is a little movement recently, but much more movement should be possible. The Prime Minister is attempting to bring that about.

FINANCE

LEVEL OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. For many months, when interest rates and inflation were very high, the Minister of Finance suggested that we should be looking at the real interest rates. Is the Minister of Finance aware that under current conditions, with interest rates at the levels they are at, and inflation at the level it is at, in fact his economic policy has not improved the real interest rates that Canadians face?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I would be pleased to draw to my hon. friend's attention the fact that real interest rates in Canada at the present time, and for the last several months, have been lower than in the United States. I would also like to draw to his attention the fact that consumer loans are as low as they have been for the last 25 years. Mortgages, which are at 10.25 per cent for one year, are as low as they have been for several years. Canadian citizens can now get loans on the market at rates that compare to the best rates they have had in several years.

Real interest rates are still high. I have made comments in that regard, both in the United States and in Canada and at various international conferences. Most industrial countries are pressing the United States to take steps to reduce real interest rates. The fact is that in Canada we have now real interest rates that are lower than those in the United States.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT'S POLICIES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Member for Mississauga mentioned a critical factor in Canadian interest rates as compared to American interest rates. Since the Canadian Government is borrowing 75 per cent of available funds from Canadian banks, will the Minister explain to the House and to the Canadian people what will happen to our interest rates when the demand for capital is high enough and the crunch comes? Will not the economic policy of the Government, and continually high budgetary deficits, put pressures on the Canadian economy which will slow, if not stop, our economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend what is happening at the present time. There is no crunch. As a matter of fact the banks have surplus funds available for lending. This is why citizens can get comparatively low rates on loans from the banks at the present time. There is a concern that eventually down the line there will be a problem of crowding out of private sector borrowing, but this will not happen in 1983 and not likely in 1984. The issue is indeed an issue of concern for subsequent years.

I have already announced steps that we are taking to bring the federal deficit down and to reduce the call on the market by the federal Government, and I hope by provincial Governments also. There is no reason to believe that the problem that my hon. friend is worried about will arise. We can take steps to avoid that problem. No one is considering the problem as a serious one, either this year or next year.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—REPORTED OFFER OF IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. A Canadian, Hugh Hambleton, was tried and convicted a year ago in Britain on charges of spying on behalf of the KGB. Has the Acting Prime Minister any comments to make on the evidence that came out at the British trial to the effect that, in April of 1980, Hambleton was offered immunity from prosecution by the Canadian authorities on the condition that he would co-operate with the Canadians in determining the exact nature of his contact and connections with the KGB?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no further comment to make today on that point.

Oral Questions

EMPLOYMENT WITH CIDA IN PERU AND HAITI

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would like to ask a question more within the domain of the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Earlier in his service in Canada Mr. Hambleton was selected by CIDA to head a team in Peru and later in Haiti. In light of the fact that Mr. Hambleton had no experience whatsoever in Canadian government service, and particularly in CIDA, can the Minister say why he was selected to head the CIDA team in Peru on his first appointment abroad, and later in Haiti?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This question should be placed on the Order Paper.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh no!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Minister cares to, he can comment, but it involves a level of detail that is normally the kind of thing requested on the Order Paper.

The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

NATIONAL RESOURCES

OWNERSHIP OF COAL LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Fifty thousand acres of rich coal lands in southeastern British Columbia have been released from the terms of the Crowsnest agreement. The Province of British Columbia has always maintained it has ownership of this land. Will the Minister agree to arrange a meeting immediately with the Province of British Columbia to resolve the ownership of these rich coal lands?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communication from the Minister of Resources of the Province of British Columbia on this matter. It is a problem that is being reviewed in my own Department. If we have to talk with the Government of British Columbia, we will talk with them. These lands belong to the federal Crown, as has been the case since the time the deal was made with the railway.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, there is exploratory drilling for oil going on in this area at the present time. Will the Minister enter into discussions with the Province of British Columbia which will lead to a plan for the management and development of these coal lands, regarding leasing policy, taxation agreements, and environmental impact management?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In my judgment there is no great urgency with that problem at this time. There are a lot of coal mining operations in Canada at this time. They are all in a surplus position. There is no great urgency to develop new mines at this time. We have a lot of time to resolve these difficulties. I do not think it is a very urgent problem.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PURCHASE OF RUSSIAN TRACTORS—REPORTED ENCOURAGEMENT BY MINISTER AND OFFICIALS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if I can get his attention. Is the Minister aware of the fact that the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Argue in the other place, plus certain officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, are travelling across western Canada making speeches and delivering information encouraging Canadian farmers to purchase Russian tractors and combines? Are they citing government policy? If so, how does this action fit in with the Government's program of "Buy Canadian"?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the Hon. Member's allegation.

ROLE OF RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister, through you, that in fact this is very accurate information. It is reported, and the Senator and the Commissioners have not denied it. Will the Minister clarify the fact that the Minister and the Commissioners of the Canadian Wheat Board say they are doing this at the request of the Russians? Since when did the Canadian Government take its domestic purchasing policy from the U.S.S.R.?

• (1450)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, I am not aware that the Senator was expressing these comments. Obviously, based on the Hon. Member's representation, I will have a discussion with the Senator.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burlington.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but I see she has disappeared. Perhaps I can catch her later.

IMMIGRATION

POLISH IMMIGRANTS' HUNGER STRIKE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It deals with the Polish hunger strikers in Toronto. Can the Minister give any encouragement to these brave people that his efforts in appealing to the Polish authorities are having some effect, because it is getting very cold and very damp on the Toronto waterfront?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the interest of the Hon. Member in this question. It is a question in which I have been quite interested myself. We have made representations to the Polish authorities. They have responded to six of the cases. It is true there are four outstanding cases that have not been dealt with yet. We intend to continue our efforts.

The Hon. Member asks me whether I have any hope. I draw on my knowledge that the Polish authorities have been co-operative in family reunification cases in the past, and I trust they will continue that practice and give relief or clearance to the four outstanding cases. We are continuing our efforts. Just recently I again asked our officials in the Warsaw embassy to make further representation to the Polish authorities.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GRENADA—FAMILIES OF CANADIAN NATIONALS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with a number of Canadians of Grenadian descent who are continuing to be somewhat tormented by the absence of knowledge of their families on the island of Grenada. Can the Minister indicate whether or not any effort is being made to assist these people in determining the present state of their families?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the Hon. Member that there has been a special effort, but if there are residents of Canada of Grenadian descent who wish to be informed about their relatives, we will make an effort to provide, through our consular service, the maximum information possible. I cannot say at the moment whether anything has been done on that point yet, but I will inquire.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

FUNDING SOUGHT FOR ONTARIO READING SERVICE FOR THE BLIND

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, the Ontario Government recently decided to terminate its funding support for a radio reading service for the blind. Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare consider, because this is such an essential service for blind Canadians, continuing to provide that financial support, and discuss this matter with the provincial Government with a view to ensuring this essential service is continued?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must say that we are now flooded with letters from different Provinces of the country about community services or social services which have been cut by a provincial Government. I really regret it. We do share 50 cents on the dollar in these services, but it must be, because of the constitutional division of power, at the initiative of a given Province. We cannot step in when Provinces cut services. I regret it, and I would ask Hon. Members to address their petitions to their provincial MLAs.

Miss MacDonald: Even when you cause the problem.

INCOME TAX ACT

FARMERS' SWIMMING POOLS AND PONDS—DEPARTMENT'S INSTRUCTIONS TO AUDITORS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. After some months I have been able to obtain some pages from the Tax Operational Manual that deals with Project L. It is "Instructions to the auditors". One of the instructions reads: "Does the taxpayer have a swimming pool or a pond, and provide details?" What difference does it make whether a farmer has a swimming pool or a pond?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that particular instruction, but I shall make enquiries and I hope I will then be able to give the Hon. Member a more satisfactory answer.

INDUSTRY

WINDSOR STEEL MILL STUDY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have been attempting for two months, with direct questions to the Minister in committees and through questions to his Department, to find out about what the Minister is doing with the study being done for a steel bar mill in Windsor in light of the fact that the balance of the industry is operating at 40 per cent of capacity?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): We are studying it, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a case that the Minister knows how to pick winners and losers. Stelco is now planning to shut down its Hilton works in Hamilton and move everything to its new plant. Does the Minister consider that Canada needs another steel bar mill in Windsor, or is it the Liberal Party that needs it?

Mr. Nielsen: Study that one.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I thought it was the Conservative Party that was against picking winners and losers. Obviously, if the Hon. Member is recommending this particular project, or recommending against a particular project, I will have a look and take his representation into consideration.

MINES AND MINING

TAXATION STUDY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is temporarily responsible for mines. As he knows, the mining sector is the victim of the most uncongenial economic circumstances in the world and is literally on the rocks. Fifty per cent of the mines are idle, affecting 50 per cent of the jobs. One of the problems which will severely affect the recovery of that sector is the excessive tax burden which the Government has placed on the shoulders of the resource sector, and particularly the heavy increase in so-called non-profit taxes. The Minister has ordered a study of comparisons with other jurisdictions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. Oberle: I will, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister tell the House what is the state of the study? Will it be made public? Is the study near completion? What initiatives is the Government planning to ease that burden on the industry, to permit it to breathe and to regain its former health?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the question of taxes for every sector of the economy is regularly reviewed by the Minister of Finance when budget time comes. As far as the mining sector is concerned, different representations have been made to the Minister of Finance on this score. Basically, as the Hon. Member has stated, the problem of the mining industry is based on the low demand for products across the land and in the world market. With all of the nations entering economic recovery, normally the demand for Canadian mining products should increase.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ALLOCATION OF GRAIN QUOTAS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport in his capacity as Minister responsible in this House to answer questions for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. My question follows up on questions asked yesterday. I would like to know whether or not the Government is waiting until after January 1, 1984, to increase grain quotas on the Prairies so that as much grain as possible can be moved under the new freight shipping rate set down and scheduled to go into effect on January 1, 1984?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, fortunately at the same time that we were exchanging views in the House yesterday in Question Period, the Minister of State for the Wheat Board was appearing before the Saskatchewan Pool presenting a number of very imaginative and creative ideas on how we might go about changing the quota system.

Mr. Nielsen: What else?

Mr. Axworthy: I will be very pleased to send the remarks of the distinguished Senator in the other place concerning those changes in quotas to the Hon. Member, so that he might determine whether his Party would concur in such changes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Which one are you talking about? Name names.

PUBLIC WORKS

RENEWAL OF SIGNS ON FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The Government has launched an extravagant signage renewal program for federal government buildings across Canada. The Government is going to be changing decals on cars, existing directory boards, and installing back lit signs. Why is this a priority in times of supposed restraint? The cost must be in the hundreds of millions of dollars. I might add that the former Minister of Public Works, the Hon. Member for Yukon, stopped the program because it was not necessary.

• (1500)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member's Party had been left in office longer, I suspect it would have stopped the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: You have succeeded in that.

Mr. LeBlanc: If the Hon. Member does not accept that the Government of Canada should be clearly identified in the buildings it occupies across the country, I wish he would let me know. Certainly, in terms of job creation, I receive representations from companies involved in putting up signs, billboards, et cetera. They ask for more work, and I am certainly looking at trying to help them.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was not rising on the usual point of order. I wanted to ask a question, which I will not ask now, arising out of the answers given to me by the Minister of indian affairs and no northern development yesterday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Government House Leader to outline the business for tomorrow, assuming we conclude the debate on Bill C-96 today, and the business for next week? He might indicate, if he can do so now, the date for prorogation if it is in his mind, and I imagine that it is very much so. At the same time, perhaps he could indicate his planning with respect to a new Speech from the Throne should Parliament prorogue in the near future.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-72 and Bill C-71. Monday will be the last allotted day. On Tuesday we will be dealing with Bill C-170 and next Wednesday will be Private Members' Business.

There has been consultation earlier today among the House Leaders. Mr. Speaker, if you were to seek unanimous consent for the following two motions, I think you would obtain it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council have unanimous consent to introduce the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Therefore I move, seconded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan):

That, if a division is required on any motion relating to the business of supply on Monday, November 28, 1983, the said division shall be postponed until 5.45 p.m. on Tuesday, November 29, 1983 whereupon all questions necessary for the disposal of the business of supply in the period ending December 10, 1983, shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: As I indicated earlier, I have a second motion to move:

That a prorogation of this session shall have no effect on resuming consideration of all of the objections to the Electoral Boundaries Commission's reports; and,

That the objections printed in the Notice Paper on the last day of this session be printed in their same form in the first Notice Paper of the second session of this Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleausre of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: I think the Hon. Member for Yukon wanted to know when we would prorogue and when a Speech from the Throne would take place. If the Bills I have indicated previously are passed by the Senate before Wednesday at three o'clock, I think we would be in a position to prorogue in the middle of the afternoon next Wednesday. In so far as the date for the Speech from the Throne is concerned, I am not in a position to be specific today but I can give a general idea that the Speech from the Throne will be held in the week of December 5, somewhere between December 6 and December 8.

Mr. Nielsen: That is close enough, Mr. Speaker. I think we can safely predict, knowing the propensities of the Government, that it will probably be right in the middle, on December 7.

I was listening in French to the President of the Privy Council who was speaking in English, and I thought I heard him say that the business for tomorrow would be Bill C-72 rather than Bill C-172 and Bill C-71 rather than Bill C-171.

An Hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Nielsen: But because I sometimes have difficulty in following the rapidity of the Minister's English, maybe the French was a little slow in coming to me.

Point of Order—Mr. Blenkarn

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—QUESTIONS CONCERNING MR. HAMBLETON

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of Question Period. On Friday of last week, I was foreclosed on asking questions about the Canadian spy, Mr. Hambleton. Today in a ruling from the Chair, it was suggested that I put the questions on the Order Paper because they were too specific. There are already 60 questions on the Order Paper from 1980 and this man will be out of jail in a year's time. Are there that many spies in CIDA that you will have to determine which one I am talking about?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, am I too late to put a question to the Government House Leader?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent of the House, is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question will be very brief. There has been some talk in the House on all sides about the possibility of a free vote on the testing of the Cruise missile. I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether or not he would undertake to consult with Opposition House Leaders, the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, about the possibility of such a free vote. I am only asking him to consult; I am not asking him to agree at this time. I am also asking him whether or not he would report back to the House before the end of this session.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member reads the answer given yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister to one of his colleagues, he will have the answer to his question.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLENKARN—SUGGESTED IRREGULARITY IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am seeking the floor at this time to respond to a point of order raised on November 17 by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) with respect to Vote 6b of the 1983-84 Supplementary Estimates (B). I am making these comments to assist in the ruling Mr. Speaker will be making on the matter in due course.

I understand that my hon. friend's point of order was based on two contentions. The first was that the Canada Post Corporation Act contains no legislative authority for the Corporation to do the kind of things listed in Vote 6b. Therefore, he argued that Vote 6b would provide authority not present under existing legislation. Second, he argued that activities listed under Vote 6b would not result in or contribute to the losses of the Canada Post Corporation.

The Canada Post Corporation Act is not exhaustive in citing the things the Corporation may do. Section 5 of the Act authorizes the Corporation to provide products or services which are necessary or incidental to operating a postal service. All the things listed in Vote 6b are necessary or incidental to the activities which are the objects of the corporation. Section 29 of the Canada Post Corporations Act provides for a deficit appropriation item when the Corporation's income is insufficient to meet its expense. Since its inception the Corporation has invoked this provision and is expected to do so in 1983-84. Therefore, any expenditure will contribute to the deficit.

The Corporation could have proceeded with these projects and the costs would have been included in a lump sum appropriation under Section 29. However, the projects reflect Government initiatives in the fields of decentralization, employment and energy conservation and Vote 6b presents a disclosure of the Corporation's contribution toward these goals. Finally, I am told that there have been past instances when Crown corporations have received appropriations for activities under circumstances similar or identical to the present one.

Canada Post Corporation Vote 6c, 1982-83 Supplementary Estimates (C), had the identical vote title as that for the present Vote 6b. It also listed three of the five projects now listed under the present vote. Also Supply and Services Vote 2^c, 1981-82 Supplementary Estimates (E), provided funds to Canadian Arsenals Limited for the federal building retrofit and conversion initiative (energy conservation). Secretary of State Vote 70, 1978-79 Main Estimates provided funds to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the specific purpose of a host country broadcasting service for the 1978 Commonwealth Games.

On the basis of these arguments, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the item is in fact in order.

PETITION

MR. FLIS—HUNGER STRIKE OF POLISH CANADIANS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the ten Polish Canadian strikers in front of the Polish Consulate in Etobicoke was raised in Question Period again today. These ten Canadians, who are fathers and husbands, want nothing more than to see their wives and children join them in Canada. Although I am in daily contact with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and with the Polish Embassy in Ottawa making representations on their behalf, it is still my duty to present the following petition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is doing a little more than presenting a petition. The usual format is merely a brief explanation and presentation.

Mr. Flis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The petition merely reads: "We, the undersigned, support the hunger strikers for the release of their families from Poland". These petitions are in addition to the 1,000 signatures that I have already tabled in this House.

3. For how many years and in what specific capacity did Mr. Juneau draw (a) a salary (b) benefits (c) other forms of recompense from the taxpayers and, in each case, what was the precise amount of the salary, benefits or other forms of recompense?

4. What experience in the private sector qualified Mr. Juneau for his appointment as President of the CBC?

5. As President of the CBC, on what date and under what circumstances did Mr. Juneau first meet the Prime Minister?

6. On what date and under what circumstances did Mr. Juneau first (a) work with (b) work for the Prime Minister?

POST OFFICE AT PIERREFONDS, QUEBEC

Question No. 5,233—Mr. Herbert:

1. Was a post office constructed in Pierrefonds, Quebec and, if so, what was the cost of the (a) land (b) surveying (c) design (d) construction (e) site improvement?

2. What is the estimated value for the purpose of the assessment of a grant in lieu of municipal taxes?

3. Was any amount paid out in lieu of school commission taxes and, if so (a) on what date (b) to whom (c) what was the amount?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. A Post Office was constructed in Pierrefonds, Québec in 1982. The cost of:

(a) land was $111,150, including legal fees of $1,150.

(b) surveying—nil (carried out by the department).

(c) design—$122,659

(d) construction—$1,266,700.

(e) site improvement—$208,000. This amount is included in the total construction cost.

2. The estimated value of land and building for the purposes of the 1983 grant in lieu of taxes is:

Land—$205,000

Building—$1,017,440

Total—$1,222,440

3. (a), (b) and (c) School commission grants related to this Post Office are collected by the Municipality of Pierrefonds. Total payments to Pierrefonds are expected to be finalized in early November at approximately $40,000 for 1983.

Of this amount, $11,400 was paid to Pierrefonds on 4 April and $18,600 was approved for payment on 4 October.

The school portion of Pierrefonds' grant relates to the Île de Montréal school commission whose total share of this grant would be estimated to be $1,758 with $501.03 relating to the 4 April payment, $817.47 relating to the amount approved for payment 4 October and approximately $440 relating to a final payment to be made in early November.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act—Mr. Gray—Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: The House again in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act. My understanding is that when the House rose at one o'clock, Members were considering Clause 2. I will put the question and recognize any Members who seek the floor. Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—"Auditor General of Canada"

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I was worrying about the amendment which really involves the word "or". I was seeking to find out what that did in a legal sense to the meaning of Clause 2(2). The reason I was getting from the President of the Treasury Board was that it involved the receipt of moneys and/or other properties that would go into trust from prisoners, which was used as an example.

The trouble I was having was that in the briefings that I received from Treasury Board on Bill C-96, particularly this area, Subclause (4) was the paragraph that applied to the reason given in reply to my question on the amendment proposed that would add the word "or" to Subclause (2). Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board would like to give me an explanation of the word "or", that it does to change the intent or the legal language. Is not the matter of trust for people who are incarcerated and their personal property covered in Subclause (4)?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the word "or" is to differentiate between money paid to Canada, on the one hand, and money received or collected by Canada, on the other. The Government's obligations with respect to money paid to it are sometimes different from those with respect to money received or collected. For example, the Government may merely be holding money collected in trust, but may be obligated to perform some service for money paid for a special purpose. I am also advised that this will make the English version of the Bill exactly the same as the French. I hope this will be of assistance to my hon. friend.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I thank the President of the Treasury Board very much for that explanation.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I have to ask you to excuse my voice today. I am wondering whether putting "or" in will facilitate or make it easier for the Department of National Revenue to take out of the bank accounts of Canadians money that it thinks belongs to the Government. This practice is, in my view, a terrible practice and is being carried out more and more frequently. There is one case which I would like to mention later today where the Department of National Revenue took $1,000 out of a man's bank account and that man did not even find out about it until several days later when the manager of the bank happened to mention it to him. The Department of National Revenue did not even have the courtesy to tell the man what had happened.

• (1520)

If this amendment will make that practice any easier, I would like to raise strenuous objections to it. As a matter of fact, I would like to raise strenuous objections to the practice of going to a bank account and taking money out without notifying the Canadian to whom the money belongs.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I understand by hon. friend's concern but his concern is related to the Income Tax Act. We are dealing here with the Financial Administration Act. The amendment for which we are seeking approval would not facilitate the kinds of activities about which my hon. friend is concerned.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, on that point, we are dealing with a definition that refers to money received by Canada for a special purpose. The President of the Treasury Board is assuring us that the extending of this definition in no way, shape or form legitimizes the practice in which Revenue Canada is now involved of automatically going to people's bank accounts without their knowledge and taking money from them. I would just like to make absolutely sure that the President of the Treasury Board is assuring us right now that the extension of this definition in no way, shape or form legitimizes that most reprehensible practice that is going on in Canada today.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to give that assurance.

I have no further comments to make on this amendment. If the committee is so disposed, I would be happy to ask it to carry this amendment and then go on to other amendments. Either fortunately or unfortunately, there are quite a few amendments before us.

The Deputy Chairman: I will put the question then. Shall Clause 2 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 2, subclause (2), agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Mr. Huntington: I understant that it was recommended by the Auditor General of Canada that Clause 3 be omitted—

Mr. Forrestall: It is not Clause 3 or anywhere near it.

Mr. Huntington: It is Subclause (3). Do I undersand that the President of the Treasury Board will be deleting it, or will he be proceeding with an amendment?

Mr. Gray: Yes, I have an amendment with respect to Clause 3. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if, in order to facilitate the business of the committee, I could confirm that the amendments to Clause 2 which have been circulated to Members of the committee and are available to the Table with respect to Subclause 2(3) and Subclauses 2(4), 2(5) and 2(6) have in fact been adopted by the committee. The reason I ask this question is that we had been discussing an amendment to Subclause 2(2), the amendment containing the contentious word "or", and I would like to make sure that there is no doubt on the part of the committee that I had intended to bring before the committee amendments to Subclause 2(3) and Subclauses 2(4), 2(5) and 2(6). These were amendments regarding which there had been consultation prior to today's session, the text of the amendments having been distributed to members of the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: I am a little baffled. I have in front of me a proposed amendment. I do not know whether it has been moved or not. It is entitled Subclaue 2(3). If we are all talking about the same one, the Chair would appreciate being instructed as to whether it is the intention of the Minister to move this amendment or whether in fact he is arguing, as I think he may be, that it has somehow already been moved and passed. I do not know.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, you asked if Clause 2 carried and the committee indicated that it should carry. Just so that there is no confusion later on, I would like to make sure that all of the amendments which I intend to move before the committee have been dealt with by the committee or if I have formally to move the remaining two amendments which I have just mentioned. I am sorry that this is so technical, but I would like to make sure that the discussions my hon. friend and I and others carried out before today's sitting will be reflected in the proceedings of the committee and eventually of the House.

The Deputy Chairman: I would like to be of some assistance.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering about one thing. When you asked if Clause 2 shall carry, I, not being a lawyer, made a mistake. Clause 2 does not carry but Subclause (2) as amended of Clause 2 does carry. I think there will still be amendments to Subclause (3) and Subclause (4) of Clause 2.

The Deputy Chairman: Now I understand what has happened. I think it will require the unanimous consent of the House to undo something which has been done, and obviously there was simply an error made in the proceedings. I would request of Hon. Members that the reply to my question whether or not Clause 2 as amended shall carry be undone and that further amendments will now be debated in terms of Clause 2. I shall put the question again on Clause 2 and look for those Hon. Members who wish to enter debate. Shall Clause 2 carry?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, not being a lawyer myself, I would appreciate it very much if Clause 2(2) as amended would be called and we could then proceed to Clause 2(3).

The Deputy Chairman: Would the Hon. Member be so kind as to repeat himself? He would like to have which clause or amendment called now?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with Clause 2(2) and we have agreed to the amendment as moved by the President of the Treasury Board which would amend that clause to read:

—to, or received or collected by a public officer.

Could we clear that amendment as agreed before proceeding to Clause 2(3)?

The Deputy Chairman: I will put the question on Subclause 2(2).

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I think it is a question of whether or not this is the process the Chair would like to follow. It is a process which we thought would be useful in putting behind us that with which we have dealt without having to return to those points at any time. Perhaps that would be agreeable for now and throughout the entire process.

The Deputy Chairman: That is fine. I will call the subclauses as Hon. Members have indicated they want them to be debated and I can either ask if each subclause is carried after the end of each debate or I can put the question on all subclauses at the same time, whichever practice Hon. Members choose.

We are now dealing with Subclause 2(3). Shall Subclause 2(2) carry?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the Auditor General recommended the omission of Subclause (3) of Clause 2 and I would ask the President of the Treasury Board to advise if that subclause is to be omitted or if it is to be amended.

● (1530)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I propose the following amendment to Subclause 2(3). I move:

That Bill C-96 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 3 to 13 on page 2;

(b) by renumbering Subclause (4) as Subclause (3).

I want to give a word of explanation. The proposed amendment would extend the definition of "public money", to include any money held by Canada. Circumstances can arise where money is paid to Canada in error and such money was not public money under the old definition and so could be repaid pursuant to Section 14(3) of the Financial Administration Act.

The proposed change would make Section 14(3) inoperative and there would be no authority to repay amounts received in error.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I agree with that. We are omitting paragraph 3 and I agree with the amendment as read by the President of the Treasury Board. This means that Subclause(4) in Bill C-96 is then renumbered as Subclause(3).

Could I ask the President of the Treasury Board if the new Subclause(3), which is Subclause(4) in Bill C-96, is not the phrase reading "money received by Canada for a special purpose" in the clause that deals with funds received from prisoners, turned over in trust? I would like to clear up that misunderstanding because that was the nature of the briefing I had before today.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that we have to amend both the definition of "public money" and the definition of "money received by Canada for a special purpose". I am sorry that this is all so technical. I know that my hon. friend would want to be very careful, and I agree with that.

What we are dealing with here is an amendment to Paragraph (d) of the definition of "public money" so that it would read, "money received by Canada for a special purpose."

I gather that we are trying to make the two parts of the definition consistent. We were originally talking about part of the section for which there is an explanatory note which says "money paid to Canada for a special purpose" and we are making the words later on consistent with that.

Mr. Huntington: I do not want to belabour this point but before one o'clock the President of the Treasury Board was advising me that the amendment to paragraph 2 of Clause 2, the addition of the word "or", was to make it possible to receive funds from people, for instance, who were incarcerated in prisons. I was very confused with that explanation because in the briefings I received from Treasury Board on this part of Bill C-96, I was told that money received by Canada for a special purpose was the clause that would allow moneys received from prisoners to be put in trust, and that that whole area of confusion was cleared up with Subclause(4) of Bill C-96 amended to become Subclause(3). I just want to clear my notes and make sure that I am still continuing with an understanding of the details of the Bill.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I understand my hon. friend's concern. I am advised that what we are talking about now covers the situation we were discussing before one o'clock. Apparently more than one clause of the Bill has to be changed in order to cover the same general area.

Mr. Huntington: I understand that.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Subclause 2(3) carry as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Subclause 2(3) agreed to as amended.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We will now be looking at a further amendment for which I ask leave for the President of the Treasury Board to put before the House.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I want to propose an amendment to Bill C-96 with respect to Clause 2. It is quite lengthy and I am wondering if there could be consent on the part of Opposition Party spokesmen for me not to read it all out. I would be quite happy to do that.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it acceptable that the amendment will be deemed to have been read by the Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The amendment referred to above is as follows:]

That clause 2 of Bill C-96 be amended by adding, immediately after line 19 on page 2, the following:

"(4) The definition "valeurs" ou "titres" in section 2 of the French version of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

«valeurs» ou «titres» "securities"	"«valeurs» ou «titres» signifie les titres du Canada et comprend les obligations, billets, certificats de dépôt, certificats non productifs d'intérêt, débentures, bons du Trésor, billets du Trésor et toute autre valeur représentant une partie de la dette publique du Canada.»

(5) Section 2 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after the definition "securities", the following definition:

"treasury bill" «billet du Trésor»	" "treasury bill" means a bill issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty for the payment of a principal sum specified in the bill to a named recipient or to a bearer at a date not later than twelve months from the date of issue of the bill;"

(6) Section 2 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after the definition "treasury bill", the following definition:

"treasury note" «bon du Trésor»	" "treasury note" means a note issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty for the payment of a principal sum specified in the note to a named recipient or to a bearer at a date not later than twelve months from the date of issue of the note."

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I really do have empathy and feel sorry for the President of the Treasury Board. I know that he has had some surgery in his mouth and is not completely comfortable this afternoon.

I really do not want to edge him but I would like to know the intent of this amendment.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the intent of this motion is to define certain terms that will be used later on in an amended Section 37. I would be delighted to read out all of these terms but that is the purpose. It is in order to prepare the way for amending Section 37.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is an amendment to Clause 2 immediately after line 19 on page 2. Could I ask the President of the Treasury Board to clarify this and give me its intent? I have notes here that leave me without a complete understanding of what this is.

Mr. Gray: I am happy to assist my hon. friend. I gather we are creating new Subclauses 2(4), 2(5) and 2(6). They will provide, with respect to Subclause (4), a definition in French for the term "valeurs" ou "titres".

Second, there will be a definition of "treasury bill" in the English part of the Act as well as, finally, a definition of the term "treasury note".

They would not otherwise be there in the amendment. They are necessary in order to have a properly amended Section 37.

Mr. Huntington: As I understand it, what we are doing is allowing some immediacy to the Minister of Finance who has to adjust quickly to certain market and monetary conditions and that through the process of Governor in Council orders it is very time consuming. This is to bring us up into the computer age so that the speed of decisions can be enhanced. Is that what we are trying to do with these definitions?

Mr. Gray: That will be the effect of the definitions, together with the later clause to which they apply. I thank my hon. friend for stating it in quite a succinct form for us.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 as amended agreed to.

On Clause 3—Idem

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: With respect to Clause 3, I understand there may be an amendment.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, with respect to Clause 3 and Section 5 in it, I want to propose an amendment. The amendment has been discussed with the spokesman for the Official Opposition. Clause 3 in Bill C-96 reads:

● (1540)

3. Section 5 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(7) The Treasury Board may require any public officer or agent of Her Majesty to provide a department with any account, return, statement, document, report or information for the purpose of locating any person in order to collect a debt due to Her Majesty."

I am proposing an amendment which reads:

That Clause 3 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 24 to 28 on page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"to provide a department with such information from any account, return, record, statement, document or report as may be required

(a) to locate any person in order to collect a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada by that person; or

(b) to set-off a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province against any sum of money that may be due or payable by Her Majesty in right of Canada."

The object of the amendment as originally submitted is to authorize the disclosure of information to Departments for the purpose of collecting or recovering amounts due to Her Majesty. The object of the amending motion I have just proposed is to clarify the intent of the provision and limit the possible wide-sweeping application of the original amendment.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Capilano for his counsel in this matter. The amendment which I am proposing arises out of discussions we have had with him with respect to the kinds of concerns I have mentioned and is intended to lessen if not to eliminate them.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, as I understand Clause 3, as amended—and I thank the President of the Treasury Board for co-operating with the concerns expressed by this side—any information gleaned by way of this clause, after it is amended, would still be in accordance with the Privacy Act which was passed in June, 1982 and which has been proclaimed. I understand that that safety net on the use of the information would still apply. This information would be restricted strictly to the need—as we are stating in the amendment—such as a student loan contract which has failed to be completed. It is the responsibility of the Treasury Board to make sure that the proper collection procedures have been followed. And in the case of someone who has disappeared, we are allowing it to get an address. However, all matters in terms of the Privacy Act will apply, even with this clause as amended. I would just like that assurance.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to give that assurance. The provision is intended to be in conformity with the Privacy Act and, as I understand it, the Privacy Act would prevail, in any event.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 3, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

On Clause 4—Establishment of accounts

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, it is our intention to ask that Subclause 4(11) be deleted. I suppose it is not required because it is actually covered in another Bill, Bill C-126, which was passed on August 4, 1982, so it is superfluous.

The Deputy Chairman: Which line was that, may I ask for the record?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we are talking about the entire Clause 4 in Bill C-96.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Treasury Board is deleting Clause 4 of Bill C-96 for the reason that Bill C-126 was passed through the House of Commons on August 4, 1982 and that Bill C-126 allows the Government to perform with the powers which this clause sought. Therefore, we agree that it can be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 be deleted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 4 deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 5 carry?

On Clause 5—Report

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, Clause 5 deals with remissions. I would like to receive a little information on remissions. How does one go about getting money back from the Government? I will just briefly cite a case where one of my constituents—a new Canadian, incidentally—filed installment payments of $1,000 in each of the quarters in 1975. One of these $1,000 installments was put on his account and then someone in the Department took it off his account and claimed they sent it back to the Mercantile Bank in Calgary. That bank claimed it never had any such letter and the Department apparently cannot find any letter sending the money back to the Mercantile Bank in Calgary.

When the Department took the $1,000 out of this person's account it left him owing just about $1,000 on his income tax. So the Department went to his account and took out $1,000. I mentioned this earlier today. As soon as my constituent found out about this, he made representations to the Calgary office, which told him it was just a computer mistake and that it would be corrected any time now. But every week he would go down and be told it was just about corrected. Then the Government removed the Department from Calgary to Winnipeg, and the first thing my constituent was told then was that it was destroying its records and closing the case.

It is terrible and inhuman to close the case when that Department knew that $1,000 was missing. All the Department can say now is that its files are destroyed. Why would a Department destroy files when a case is still in difficulties? Would the Minister advise me just how one could go about getting remission in a case like this? Because this is a very inhuman thing to do to new Canadians who came to this country, trusted the Government and now are finding—as one of their neighbours said—that this Government is almost as bad as the government of the country from which they came.

I know that the Government does not want to steal this money. However, whether someone in the Department mislaid it, whether someone took it, or whether it was returned to the Mercantile Bank in Calgary, what I am saying is that the money was received by the Department of National Revenue, and the Department of National Revenue is therefore responsible for that $1,000, which should either be credited to this person's account or returned to him.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the amendment before us is for the purpose of authorizing the Treasury Board to prescribe the form in which remissions will be reported. It is intended to reduce the administrative burden associated with compiling many pages of details of remissions, thereby increasing the usefulness of the public accounts, since it is intended that each Department will report the total value of remissions in their total value, rather than reporting each transaction in excess of $1,000.

My hon. friend asks how a remission is made. I can tell him that it is done by Order in Council. It is done on the recommendation to Treasury Board of the responsible Minister. Therefore, in the kind of case my hon. friend is talking about, the Minister of National Revenue would have to make a submission to Treasury Board asking for an Order in Council authorizing the remission. I would be happy to make inquiries of the Minister of National Revenue, if you would like, in regard to the particular case and to assist in having the matter clarified.

• (1550)

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister explain just what is going to happen? There are a lot of remissions from ports and wharves. Are all of these remissions going to be held on record? Are they going to be in the public accounts or be available on the basis of access to information? Could he outline for us the mechanics involved here?

Mr. Gray: All the remission orders will be published in The Canada Gazette which will come out weekly. This is really to simplify what is required with respect to what is reported to the House of Commons in the Public Accounts. One can inspect The Canada Gazette each week and get the details of each remission order.

What will happen as a result of this amendment is that because the Treasury Board will have authority to prescribe the form in which remissions are reported, then with respect to the public accounts themselves as distinct from The Canada Gazette it is itended that we ask each Department to report the total number of remissions and their total value rather than each transaction in excess of $1,000. I am talking here about the public accounts.

What we are trying to do is to have the public accounts deal with this subject in a more select and meaningful way. Of course, details can be obtained under the access to information legislation and, in any event, I am told they will be published weekly in The Canada Gazette.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Financial Administration Act

On Clause 6—Debt write-off regulations

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this is a clause on which I wish to present some amendments. These are rather lengthy and I will try and make my comments in the briefest and, hopefully, simplest form possible.

The object of Subclause 6(18) is to expand the regulation-making powers concerning the writing off of debts and to remove the monetary limit. The amendment would also transfer the authority to make such regulations from the Governor in Council to the Treasury Board. The amendments I want to offer would improve the regulation-making authority and require that all write-offs of debts be recorded in the Public Accounts. The amendment as originally drafted would have given the Treasury Board authority to determine what write-offs would be reported and we have come to agree that instead of that, all write-offs should be reported in the public accounts.

As I set forth in my speech on second reading, we are clarifying procedures with respect to the resolution of debts and so on. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the following amendment to subclause 6(18) which I have just described:

That Clause 6 of Bill C-96 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 14 to 19 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"18. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the Treasury Board may make regulations respecting the writing off, in whole or in part, of any debt or obligation due to Her Majesty or any claim by Her Majesty, and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations"

(b) by relettering paragraphs 18(1)(b) to (d) as paragraphs 18(1) to (c).

I also move:

That Clause 6 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 39 to 41 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"(3) Debts, obligations and claims written off under this section"

The Deputy Chairman: We should take one amendment at a time for the purposes of putting the question. Therefore, shall the first amendment to Clause 6 carry?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, what is the source of the debt we are writing off? Are we dealing with income tax payments?

Mr. Gray: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that the regulatory authority for debt deletion relates only to unrealized revenue. That is to say, relatively small amounts, 90 per cent of which relate to income taxes uncollectable through debt, bankruptcy, the person moving out of Canada, and so on. All debts recorded by the Government on the balance sheet of Canada can only be written off under this amendment with the authority of Parliament. Other uses of this provision will be where someone receives a social assistance overpayment and it would cause undue hardship if the Government were to recover the overpayment.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the amendment removes Treasury Board discretion and makes it clear that all write-offs will be reported?

Mr. Gray: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, this mentions regulations. The Minister was good enough to make available draft regulations prior to the Bill coming into the House. I compliment him on his generosity because it is a breakthrough for the Opposition function in dealing with legislation. He might note that this very technical Bill is going rather smoothly because of the courtesies extended.

I have a draft of the regulations and I am wondering how we might get those regulations into the proceedings here. Can I ask the Minister to table the regulations?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my hon. friend's comment and I would like to assist in having this information made generally available. I should say they have not been formally approved as yet. These are the regulations I intend to submit for formal approval, and I have no reason to believe they will not be accepted in that form. If there is some way perhaps they could be printed as an appendix to Hansard, recognizing that they have not yet received full and formal approval, I would have no objection. But I have to seek the assistance of the Chairman as to what procedures we can rely on at this point.

The Deputy Chairman: If the Hon. President of the Treasury Board wishes to table these regulations, he need only seek the consent of the house to do so.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact they are in draft form. I was wondering if they had been brought up from draft to final form.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I gather we are inhibited from bringing them into final form until the Act is approved by Parliament. But I want to assure my hon. friend that it is my intention to submit them for formal approval in the form in which he has received them. Again I would be happy to table them formally for the information of all Hon. Members or take such other steps as are consistent with the rules of the House to make them available to members of the committee of the House.

● (1600)

The Deputy Chairman: From a procedural standpoint I cannot comment on the desirability or non-desirability of the Minister tabling regulations which are still in draft form. Procedurally he can table a draft or final copy, whatever it is he may choose, and need only seek the consent of the House to do so.

Mr. Gray: I would like to make one point which has just been brought to my attention. The draft regulations have not yet been reviewed by Justice to see if they conform to the statutory instruments legislation. I think my friend and I want to make sure that our colleagues on that committee will not have some complaint later on. Perhaps it would be better not to table them. I would have no objection to my hon. friend making them available to Members of his caucus. I would do the same for Members of my caucus.

Mr. Huntington: The point that I am raising, and not belabouring, is that as we came through these amendments and the explanations being given to me, because it is a technical subject, the draft regulations were made available to me. It is on the basis of the information that I have been given and the form in which it was presented, respecting the fact that it is in draft form only, that we are able to move through this type of legislation rather quickly. What happens if the regulations that I was given to consider are changed dramatically? I do not know. That is a point which I think I am entitled to be covered on. I would accept the regulations being gazetted or something so that they do become public and we do know what applies here.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I want to assure my hon. friend that the purpose will not be changed except that, as I have said—and I had not realized this when I first commented in response to my hon. friend's question—they have not yet been examined for the purpose of seeing if they comply with the statutory instruments law. Of course, they will be formally gazetted in order to be finally approved. I wonder if he will accept my assurance that, subject to meeting the requirements of the statutory instruments law, it is my intention to ensure that the intent and the purpose as set out in the draft will be maintained and continued?

Mr. Huntington: Of course I would be pleased to, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the first amendment proposed by the Minister to Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Financial Administration Act

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the second amendment as proposed by the Minister to Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 as twice amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 6, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 7—Vote can authorize spending

Mr. Gray: If you are calling Clause 7, Mr. Chairman, here again we are requesting that it be deleted. The reason is that the proposed amendment was intended to make it specific that Parliament could authorize the respending of revenue, something known as net voting, through the wording of the Appropriation Act. The Auditor General has recommended that this clause be dropped because of his view that in principle the practice of net voting should not be carried out. We are happy to accept the views of the Auditor General at this time and delete the provision in question.

Mr. Huntington: I will support the deletion of it although I think we should recognize that the Comptroller General thinks that it is a good management tool but that the control regime is poor. I would agreed that the clause be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: It is moved by the Minister, and seconded by the Hon. Member for Capilano, that Clause 7 be deleted. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 7 deleted.

On Clause 8—Authority for guarantee

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, a word of explanation about Clause 8. The change in question is being made as a result of the Speaker's ruling on legislating through the Estimates. Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act makes reference to the authority of Parliament to authorize loan guarantees. It has been suggested that such authority must be obtained by an "Act of Parliament" other than the appropriation procedure, which should be used only to obtain funds for programs otherwise approved. Because such guarantees are financial in nature and closely relate to the process whereby funds are provided, the appropriation procedure is in fact an appropriate vehicle for obtaining the necessary parliamentary authority. It is proposed, therefore, that language be added to Section 22, which makes it explicit that such authority can be obtained through an Appropriation Act as well as other legislation. There is no further amendment here, Mr. Chairman. I am just offering an explanation for the clause which you have just called. If there are no other comments by Hon. Members I would respectfully request that the clause be carried.

Mr. Huntington: I think we are making giant steps forward here in overcoming concerns that we have debated many times in the House in what some of us in the Opposition consider improper use of Estimates. I notice that the language is permissive. Clause 8 reads:

8. (1) Section 22 of the said Act is renumbered as subsection 22(1).

(2) Section 22 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(2) An authority referred to in subsection (1) may be contained in an Appropriation Act."

So the permissiveness there is that it can be obtained through an Appropriation Act as well as other legislation. I guess the permissiveness that I was concerned about, as a result of the Ministers' explaining it, gives them either one of two routes in which to go. I have no further objection.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 8 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I recognize the Hon. the President of the Treasury Board I have to advise Hon. Members about the proceedings on adjournment motion which may, due to a House order made earlier, in fact come up earlier than six o'clock. I want to give Hon. Members time to know they are on the list. To do that I have to move back.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Public Works—National Arts Centre—Responsibility for structural defects. (b) Request that Minister launch inquiry; The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Customs and Excise—Establishment of duty-free shops in Ontario; The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz)—Customs and Excise—Establishment of duty-free stores in Ontario.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-96, to amend the Financial Administration Act—Mr. Gray—Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

On Clause 9—Control of commitments

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 9 carry. I see that there is possibly an amendment.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the amendment as printed in the Bill before us would authorize the Treasury Board to prescribe the manner in which every Department shall control its financial commitments. The motion I intend to move would make it clear that there is to be no weakening of the legislative requirements for commitment control. Rather, the change is to permit flexibility in the choice and methodology used to achieve the objective of controlling appropriation authorities. The text is available to the Chair and Hon. Members, and if they would permit, I would not read it all out, but I would be happy to do so.

That clause 9 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 30 to 32 on page 4 and substituting the following:

Control of commitments — "25. (1) No contract or other arrangement providing for a payment shall be entered into with respect to any program for which there is an appropriation by Parliament or an item included in estimates then before the House of Commons to which the payment will be charged unless there is a sufficient unencumbered balance available out of the appropriation or item to discharge any debt that, under the contract or other arrangement, will be incurred during the fiscal year in which the contract or other arrangement is entered into.

Record of commitments — (2) The deputy head or other person charged with the administration of a program for which there is an appropriation by Parliament or an item included in estimates then before the House of Commons shall, as the Treasury Board may prescribe, establish procedures and maintain records respecting the control of financial commitments chargeable to each such appropriation or item."

Mr. Gray: Then I agree.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the amendment to Clause 9 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 9 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Clause 9, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 10—Lapsing of appropriation

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 10 carry?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this clause also requires an amendment. First of all the clause as called by you would provide for the charging of debts that remain unpaid at the end of the fiscal year and would authorize the discharge of any such debt that is not in excess of the appropriation. The amending motion I want to present to the committee would make it clear that this provision is only to require that all debts incurred be recorded and does not permit payments to be made in excess of appropriation authority.

• (1610)

[Editor's Note: The amendment referred to above is as follows:]

That clause 10 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 35 to 46 on page 4 and lines 1 to 30 on page 5 and substituting the following:

Lapsing of appropriation

"30. The balance of an appropriation granted for a fiscal year that remains unexpended at the end of the fiscal year shall lapse, except that,

(a) a debt incurred for work performed, goods received or services rendered prior to the end of the fiscal year or incurred under any other contractual arrangement prior to the end of the fiscal year that remains unpaid at the end of the fiscal year shall be recorded as an expenditure against the appropriation; and

(b) at any time during the following fiscal year, or during such shorter period as the Treasury Board may direct, a payment may be made for the purpose of discharging any debt referred to in paragraph (a) that is not in excess of the appropriation."

Mr. Gray: Perhaps my hon. friend would care to comment and respond, if necessary.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very good amendment to the original draft. What we are dealing with, Mr. Chairman and colleagues, is an item that has been of concern to the Auditor General for some time. We are really addressing item 15.14 in the 1982 Auditor General's Report. It is very encouraging for some of us who have been working on that committee over the years finally to see results of reports from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to the House being acted upon. I think you can see by the technical nature of the Bill that it does take some time to get this in place, and we are making very good progress. There must be smiles on some of the faces over in the Auditor General's office.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to Clause 10 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 10, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 11—Accountable advances

Mr. Gray: A brief word of explanation, Mr. Chairman. This amendment would expand the Treasury Board regulation-making powers concerning accountable advances and would permit recoveries to be made for moneys payable to the estate of persons to whom advances are made.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but ask the President of the Treasury Board, when he talks about advances—I just have to, it is the devil in me—whether this does not cover those $25 million advances to operations like CN Marine?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that these cover such things as travel and relocation advances to officials required because of their work and not the kinds of advances my hon. friend is talking about.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he intends to bring forward some more amendments that might tighten up the type of abuse in the type of advance that CNR made to CN Marine?

Mr. Gray: I am always ready to study and consider suggestions made by my hon. friend as well as those of the Public Accounts Committee and the Auditor General, Mr. Chairman. I would be so delighted with my hon. friend's help to have this series of amendments on the books that while I would be happy to begin another set of preparations for further changes, I would have to work on that once we have this out of the way. I would be happy to consider other amendments.

Mr. Huntington: What you are watching here, Mr. Chairman, is the type of a political environment that operates in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Again, I have to compliment the President of the Treasury Board on providing me with a draft of proposed new regulations for this section. As a Member of the Opposition carrying on tasks that do not bring much in the way of political marks, it certainly helps one to understand and get an in-depth understanding and knowledge of how things are going to operate. I am assuming that once the legislation is through and the proposed new regulations are finalized by the Department of Justice they will be gazetted in the normal process and there is no variance really from the intent of the draft.

Mr. Gray: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 11 agreed to.

On Clause 12—Refunds and repayments

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, here too we have to offer an amendment to the Bill before us. First, the amendment to the Bill before us would confine the applicability of Section 32 to such classes of refunds and repayments as the Treasury Board may designate. The object of the motion that I want to move is to specify in law rather than through Treasury Board directive the classes of refunds and repayments that may be credited to the vote.

That clause 12 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 10 to 17 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"32. Subject to such directions as the Treasury Board may make, any amount received as a refund or repayment of an expenditure or advance or as an overpayment or a price adjustment on a payment shall be credited to the appropriation against which the expenditure or advance, or the payment, as the case may be, was charged."

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Treasury Board and I understand it, but I am not too sure how many others in the House do. But in bringing it down to a few words, if it is owed it must be recorded. Is that what we are doing?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am advised it is actually the reverse to my hon. friend's statement. If the Government buys a typewriter and sends it back and there is a credit for it, we have to be able to record that appropriately.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to Clause 12 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 12, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 13—The raising of loans

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, again I want to propose an amendment. First, to explain the object of the amendment in the Bill before us, it would enable the Minister of Finance, on the authorization of the Governor in Council, to determine the effective rate of interest of securities and to reduce the amount should circumstances warrant. The amendment would also authorize the Minister to increase the rate of interest or the yield to maturity of securities.

The purpose of the motion I am going to move is to provide more flexibility in connection with the raising of money by way of loans for the issue of securities. Authorization for the Governor in Council to delegate certain matters to the Minister or his officials is provided. The changes are intended to permit the Government to tailor security issues to meet up to the moment changes in market conditions.

[Editor's Note: The amendment referred to is as follows:]

That clause 13 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 20 to 41 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"37. Where by this or any other Act of Parliament authority is given to raise money, by or on behalf of Her Majesty, by way of loan or by the issue and sale of securities, the Governor in Council may, subject to the Act authorizing the raising of such money,

(a) authorize the raising of all or part of that money by the issue and sale of treasury bills or treasury notes and authorize the Minister or such officer of the Department of Finance as may be designated by the Minister,

(i) to determine the date of the issue and the date of maturity thereof, the rate of interest thereon, if any, and the dates of payment of interest, if any,

(ii) to sell any of such bills or notes for such price or prices and on such terms and conditions as the Minister from time to time considers necessary, and

(iii) subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may specify, to enter into such contracts or agreements relating to the issue and sale of those bills or notes on such terms and conditions as the Minister or such officer of the Department of Finance designated by the Minister considers necessary; or

(b) authorize the Minister, or such officer of the Department of Finance as may be designated by the Minister,

(i) subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may specify, to enter into such contracts or agreements relating to the raising of the money on such terms and conditions as the Minister or such officer of the Department of Finance designated by the Minister considers necessary,

(ii) to raise all or part of that money by the issue and sale of securities other than treasury bills or treasury notes,

(iii) to issue and sell such securities in a principal amount not exceeding an amount authorized by the Governor in Council,

(iv) to determine the rate or rates of interest, not exceeding the maximum rate or rates of interest authorized by the Governor in Council, payable in respect of such securities,

(v) to determine the date, not later than the date authorized by the Governor in Council, on which the principal amount specified in such securities is payable, and

(vi) to sell such securities

(A) for such price or prices, not less than the minimum price or prices authorized by the Governor in Council, and

(B) on such other terms and conditions as the Minister or such officer of the Department of Finance designated by the Minister considers necessary."

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, in accepting this method of expediting technical language in a long amendment, I understand that we are giving the Minister of Finance more flexibility to act on foreign market transactions and that it is going to lead to a better, more efficient management. I have to ask through you, Mr. Chairman, if the President of the Treasury Board, who is the watchdog of the federal system for the taxpayer, has any concerns about abuses that might occur as a result of the wording in this? I have to rely totally on the very able technicians in Treasury Board. I am prepared to give the nod to this on behalf of my Party, if it is mechanics to make possible better management, but I would not want to think that I was just giving a careless nod to something which would open loopholes and be open to abuse.

● (1620)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I do not think even the most partisan opponents of my hon. friend would try to argue that he was doing anything carelessly, especially not in this committee.

I am happy to assure him that I have not received any information, nor have I reached any conclusions, which would lead me to believe that this could lead to any abuses. In fact, it is my view that this would lead to better management of the Government's borrowing process, enabling the Government to get perhaps better terms and conditions by being able to respond quickly to market changes. Frankly, therefore it might be of some savings to taxpayers. To have this result, we have to be able to speed up the process somewhat, and this is the purpose. I think it is very much in line with the over-all objectives of my hon. friend of getting better value for taxpayers' dollars.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause, 13 as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 14—Temporary Loans

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, again I have to say that I will present an amendment. First of all, the amendment as originally printed would authorize the Minister of Finance to determine the effective rate of borrowings under Section 39. The motion in question, which I will move, involves changes consequential to changes to Clause 13 covering Section 37. The amendment would make Section 39 consistent with Section 37 and would permit foreign debt operations, such as the sale by auction of securities where the effective price is set after the Governor in Council has approved the other terms and conditions.

Therefore I move:

That Clause 14 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 3 to 7 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"may authorize the Minister to borrow, for a period not exceeding six"

As I said, that is to be inserted in the spot indicated.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, we agree to that amendment to Section 39. As an aside, may I just say that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, who usually sits in front of me, fears being shown on camera and is totally embarrassed at my behaviour in dealing so amicably with the President of the Treasury Board on a piece of legislation of this simplicity.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I have a second amendment with respect to Clause 14 to move at the request of the Department of Finance. I have already indicated that the proposed new Section 39.1 would enable money to be borrowed and repaid in a currency other than that of Canada. Also it would authorize the repayment of amounts exceeding amounts authorized where they are to be repaid in foreign currencies. The amendment I want to present would clarify and improve the original wording. Therefore, I move:

That clause 14 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 13 to 27 on page 7 and substituting the following:

"39.1 (1) Any amounts raised by way of loan under the authority of this or any other Act of Parliament in the currency or currencies of any country or countries may be repaid in the currency or currencies of any country or countries and securities issued under the authority of this or any other Act of Parliament in the currency or currencies of any country or countries may be made payable in the currency or currencies of any country or countries.

(2) Every Act of Parliament heretofore or hereafter passed that authorizes the borrowing or the raising of money by way of

(a) the loan of a specific or maximum number of dollars,

(b) the issue of securities for a specific or maximum number of dollars in principal amount, or

(c) the guaranteeing of the payment of a liability or obligation for a specific or maximum number of dollars, shall be deemed to authorize the borrowing, in whole or in part, of an equivalent amount, the issue of securities, in whole or in part, of an equivalent principal amount or the guaranteeing, in whole or in part, of an equivalent amount in the currency of any country other than Canada, calculated in each case using the value thereof and the rate of exchange between the Canadian dollar and the currency concerned as quoted by the Bank of Canada at the opening of business on the day immediately preceding the day the money is borrowed, the proceeds from the issue of securities are received or the guarantee is given, as the case may be.

(3) For the purpose of any limitation in respect of an amount

(a) that may be borrowed.

(b) for which securities may be issued, or

(c) the payment of which may be guaranteed under this or any other Act of Parliament,

the principal amount borrowed or authorized to be borrowed, the principal amount of any securities previously issued or authorized to be issued or the amount guaranteed or authorized to be guaranteed, as the case may be, payable in a currency of any country other than Canada, shall be deemed to be the Canadian dollar equivalent of the value thereof, as calculated under subsection (2), regardless of any premium or discount at which the securities were sold and regardless of any premium that may be payable on early redemption."

Mr. Huntington: I understand that what we are doing is empowering the Minister of Finance to use an exchange rate at the time a loan is made or at the time it is paid. Could the President of the Treasury Board help me with that and give some clarity as to what the amendment does? Also, does it extend to the guarantee authorities of Crown corporations?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we are talking about the period when the loan is made. I hope that that is the information my hon. friend is seeking.

Mr. Huntington: What we have amended it to cover is cases when the loan is made.

Mr. Gray: Yes.

Mr. Huntington: Does it apply to guarantees of loans made from Crown corporations?

Mr. Gray: I am advised that it covers the matter of guarantees of loans by Crown corporations.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 14 as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 15—

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this clause would deem money paid to an authorization agent or deducted from salary to be money held in trust for Her Majesty for all purposes. At present, such money is deemed to be held in trust by Her Majesty for the purposes of the Bankruptcy Act and the winding up Act.

Mr. Huntington: Are we involved here with Canada Savings Bonds deductions as a first claim in trust?

Mr. Gray: Yes, that is a case which this clause would cover.

Mr. Huntington: In other words, if a corporation which has been taking payroll deductions from employees for the purchase of Canada Savings Bonds went into receivership, the Crown would have a first claim on those funds to protect the employees purchasing that Crown instrument?

Mr. Gray: That is correct.

Mr. Huntington: What has been the experience of the Government in this area? Have employees in the past either lost substantial sums of money, or has the Crown in its benevolence seen fit to make such a tragic event good?

Mr. Gray: I am unable to give an exact quantification, but I am told there have been cases in the past where the Government has had to accept liability because such funds had not been accounted for. Although I am unable to give an exact figure or an exact number of cases, we feel this has happened often enough to require this kind of amendment.

Mr. Huntington: Was there an involvement of this in the pension plan of White Motor Company?

Mr. Gray: I do not have that information, but I would be happy to seek it and provide it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Huntington: I do not think I will ask the President of the Treasury Board to do that, but I might say that what we are giving here is a protection to employees in organizations which are making payments into instruments such as Canada Savings Bonds. It is my understanding that the pension payments which the employees of white Motor Company made in the United States were lost to those employees in the collapse of that company. Therefore, it is a serious issue that we are addressing.

• (1630)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we are not talking about items that do not qualify as Government securities. I will be happy to join my hon. friend in seeking further clarification of the interesting point he has raised.

Clause 15 agreed to.

On Clause 16—Form of register

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, very briefly, the object of the amendment as printed in the Bill before us, and it is one requested by the Department of Finance, is something that is consequential on proposed Subclause (2). Proposed subclause (2) is to expand the meaning of the word "register".

Perhaps I can give a further word of explanation. I may have been a little too brief. This is a minor change. It is one that recognizes that we have gone from the quill pen to the computer age and that the register of Government securities may be in a photograph film form or maintained by any system, mechanical, electronic or computerized data processing.

This is what we are trying to recognize here. I gather that without this amendment the Act would not encompass the need to maintain a register of Government securities through the up to date forms of record keeping, including computer.

Clause 16 agreed to.

On Clause 17—

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, again I have to offer the following amendment:

That Clause 17 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out line 27 on page 8 and substituting the following:

"required to present fairly the".

Let me explain the purpose of the clause as it appears in the Bill before us. The motion would add certain underlined words. The motion would provide wording consistent with the Auditor General's Act, substituting the words "required to present fairly the" for the words "required to give a true and fair view".

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I understand that this brings the Bill into conformity with generally accepted audit standards, and we agree.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 17, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that an Hon. Member may seek the floor for permission to revert to Clause 10 for a moment for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have unanimous consent of the House to revert to Clause 10 for a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 10—Lapsing of appropriation

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, I was rather startled when the Minister spoke on Clause 10, the sixth paragraph of which refers to:

—in whole or in part, of an equivalent amount . . . in the currency of any country other than Canada, calculated in each case using the value thereof and the rate of exchange between the Canadian dollar and the currency concerned as quoted by the Bank of Canada at the opening of business on the day immediately preceding the day the money is borrowed, the proceeds from the issue of securities are received or the guarantee is given, as the case may be—

It goes on, in Subclause (c):

The principal amount borrowed or authorized to be borrowed, the principal amount of any securities previously issued or authorized to be issued or the amount guaranteed or authorized to be guaranteed, as the case may be, payable in a currency of any country other than Canada, shall be deemed to be the Canadian dollar equivalent of the value thereof as calculated under subsection (2), regardless of any premium or discount at which the securities were sold and regardless of any premium that may be payable on early redemption—

My question to the Minister is based on an experience in the Canadian Wheat Board. I apologize for being late in asking the question. In the answer to my colleague from Capilano, the Minister mentioned that this refers to Crown corporations. The experience in the Canadian Wheat Board was that the Government of Canada guaranteed a loan for the sale of grain to a foreign country. The deal was made in sterling. As a result of the devaluation of sterling at that time, the western grain producer lost millions of dollars. The cost was underwritten by the grain producer. Could the same thing happen in this case, or would the Government of Canada be responsible for any loss as a result of a devaluation in currency?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this would not cause us as a Government to underwrite foreign exchange losses of corporations of the kind my hon. friend has mentioned. The clause would come into play only where we have to make a calculation to determine whether the limit that Parliament has authorized to guarantee has been reached. In other words, there are occasions, as we know, when Parliament legislates a limit on the amount the federal Government can guarantee with respect to borrowings of a Crown corporation. We must have a way of making calculations as to when that limit has been reached. This is where the clause would come into play. It would not create any general obligation to underwrite exchange losses.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, if an agreement was entered into by the Canadian Wheat Board or any other Crown corporation on the basis of Canadian currency, if payment was to be made in the currency of another country and if there was a devaluation of that currency, somebody would take a loss. If the Government enters into an agreement with a Crown corporation, somebody will have to take the loss. Another illustration was the Candu sale by AECL to Argentina. At that time there was a tremendous loss because of devaluation of the Argentine currency. Therefore, could I have some clarification of that?

● (1640)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a situation in which the Government may be called upon to honour a guarantee it has made to a Crown corporation of a loan denominated in a foreign currency. I am informed, and I do not claim any deep expertise in these matters, that if the Government is called upon to honour its guarantee and the loan is one denominated in a foreign currency, then the Government must pay that amount in that foreign currency as of the date the loan is entered into. That is my understanding of the situation and I hope I have grasped it in response to my hon. friend's question.

On Clause 18—Submission of Public Accounts to Parliament

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 18 carry?

Mr. Gray: Clause 18 deals with the submission of public accounts to Parliament. The amendment to Section 55(1) would substitute the President of the Treasury Board for the Minister of Finance and the amendment to Section 55(2) would have the Minister of Finance share his responsibilities for the form and content of the Public Accounts with the President of the Treasury Board.

The amendment would also take into account that fact that the Auditor General of Canada no longer certifies statements. The amendment I wish to offer would bring about a technical improvement to wording and provide a regulatory authority within which the Receiver General of Canada can issue demands for information. Therefore, I move:

That Clause 18 of Bill C-96 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 3 and 4 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"(iii) such of the assets and liabilities of Canada as, in the opinion of the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister, are required to show the financial position of Canada as at the termination of the"

(b) by striking out lines 10 to 12 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"(d) such other accounts and information relating to the fiscal year as are deemed necessary by the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister to present fairly the financial transactions and the financial position of Canada or as"

(c) by striking out line 19 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"General may, from time to time, subject to such regulations as the Treasury Board may make, send a"

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the President of the Treasury Board if this clause as amended gives greater precision to the financial statements of Canada and if the assets and liabilities are stated accurately? Does it remove the games that we have been playing whereby we have carried as assets loans we know we will not collect? Does it clean up those types of concerns of the Auditor General? Perhaps I could help the President of the Treasury Board by asking him if we could expect from the system a more accurate reporting within the financial statements of Canada as a result of the amended Clause 18.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the amended Clause 18 gives the President of the Treasury Board a greater role to play in the compilation and submission of the public accounts than is the case at present, and it also gives him a greater role to play with respect to the form of the public accounts.

I understand that this clause is one which the Auditor General would like to see incorporated into the Act. It does not of itself eliminate the areas of difference of opinion between the Auditor General and the Government as to the form of the public accounts, but it does give us a more ready vehicle for dealing with these issues once such things as the multiyear study of the comptroller General, which is being undertaken at the request of the Public Accounts Committee, into the issues raised by the Auditor General about the form of the accounts are completed.

I must say that I found it a bit odd that at the present time, the role of the Secretary of the Treasury Board with respect to the compilation and submission of public accounts is, at least technically, not particularly formal. This amendment helps to remedy that omission and gives the President of the Treasury Board a role to play when dealing with the kinds of issues which my hon. friend has raised and which he at present technically or formally does not have.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, we on this side are very pleased to see that these powers will be granted to the President of the Treasury Board because it cleans up a whole area of no-man's land. Could I ask the incumbent President of the Treasury Board if, with his new powers, he will clean up the condition of the balance sheet of Canada? Will he address the concerns of the Public Accounts Committee and the Auditor General of Canada by removing those assets which we cannot collect from the financial statements? Will he tidy up that condition which continues to be a concern? I hope that he will be able to commit himself to that action in front of the committee now that he will have these powers.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be prudent for me to act on this matter until the studies requested by the Public Accounts Committee which are being carried out by the Comptroller General have been completed. One of these studies involves co-operative action with the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

As I see it, one of the problems is that, unlike for the private sector, there are no generally accepted accounting standards with respect to statements of governments. The public accounts of Canada so far have been prepared for the purpose of complying with the legislative authority conveyed by Parliament.

There are other issues to which my hon. friend is alluding. One issue to which he has not alluded is that not only would one have to consider whether certain things should not be recorded as assets but whether certain assets that are not recorded at all should now begin to be recorded in the public accounts. An example of that would be the gold reserves of the federal Government which have a value in the area of $10 billion.

This is an issue to which I am addressing myself. I hope to use that authority to help find some mutually satisfactory solutions to the issues raised by the Auditor General. However, I think it would be prudent for me to await further progress with respect to the studies which the Public Accounts Committee has requested the Comptroller General to undertake in this matter.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 18 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 18, as amended agreed to.

On Clause 19—Auditor General of Canada eligible

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 19 carry?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment here which is consequential to the amendment proposed in Clause 2(1). I wish to offer an amendment which provides a technical change in wording. I move:

That Clause 19 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out lines 32 and 33 on page 9 and substituting the following:

Auditor General of Canada eligible — "(2) Notwithstanding any other Act, the Auditor General of"

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, I am again wondering if the President of the Treasury Board could explain this consequential amendment. Just what are we doing? Could he explain that for me because I do not quite understand it?

• (1650)

Mr. Gray: I gather we are removing the words "of Canada" after the words "Auditor General" and we are removing the words "of Parliament" after the words "Act". I presume that the removal of the words "of Parliament" is being done because we are only in this Chamber talking about Acts of Parliament.

Second, with respect to the deletion of the words "of Canada", I gather that is meant to reflect a more accurate statement of the Auditor General's title.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 19 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 19, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 20—Bank accounts

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I will ask the committee to agree to delete this clause. The reason is that this clause was included in Bill C-126, which was passed on August 4, 1982, regarding which there has already been some reference made.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 20 be deleted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 20 deleted.

On Clause 21—Proceedings where notice not complied with

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this clause would replace the 5 per cent interest rate in question by a rate fixed by the Minister and would clarify the provision. In Section 89, the Receiver General is able to charge interest at a rate of 5 per cent per annum on all accounts when, in the opinion of the Receiver General, public money has been withheld. This rate is not appropriate in current circumstances and could lead to a debtor deciding to let a debt stand and pay 5 per cent interest rather than to liquidate the debt to the Crown.

We are proposing to amend the section to make it more flexible so that the interest rate would be set from time to time by the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Governor in Council, and would not be fixed by the Act.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 21 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 21 agreed to.

On Clause 22—Liability for loss

Mr. Gray: The purpose of this clause would be to reduce the degree of care involved here from gross negligence to negligence. Section 91 provides for the situation where, through malfeasance, wilful neglect of duty or gross negligence, public money that should have been collected has not been collected, and holds the person responsible to be accountable for the money in just the same manner as he would have been accountable had he actually collected and received it.

The responsible person can then be required to compensate Her Majesty under the terms of Section 89. In some cases where it has been necessary to consider taking such recovery action, lawyers of the Department of Justice handling the matter have had difficulty with the expression "negligence". This phrase, referring as it does to a high degree of carelessness, thus enables any claim of gross negligence to be disputed as to whether it was in fact gross or simple negligence.

This virtually leaves the Crown importent in negligence cases. It is proposed, on the advice of the Department of Justice, that the word "gross" be removed from the expression "gross negligence" in this section.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Huntington: Someone else may wish to ask a question but I just have to understand this. Were we not amending Section 91.1(b), changing the word "authorizing" to "respecting"? Are we dealing with Clause 22?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, there is another part to Clause 22 with respect to Section 91.1. I have not come to that. I was only dealing with Section 91 itself. What we are doing with respect to the Act is repealing the current Section 91 and substituting a whole new Section 91 for it. The main purpose of that, I am told, is to change the degree of negligence which would create the obligation in question from gross negligence to simple negligence.

If members of the committee would like, there is also an amendment to Section 91.1, which I intend to amend further. Perhaps I could deal with that right now.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, you probably sense that I am rather surprised. However, none of my working papers, nor the briefing that I had, had shown that Clause 91 was going to be amended. Therefore, I have no knowledge of what the President of the Treasury Board is doing to Section 91.

I am aware of an amendment to Section 91.1. However, I am lost.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I have inadvertently caused some misunderstanding. What I am doing as we proceed to each clause of the Bill before us is to say a few words of explanation. I am not waiting to see if Members of the committee would like an explanation.

I am not dealing with Section 91.1 yet. Perhaps I should have just kept quiet.

Mr. Huntington: You are not amending Section 91?

Mr. Gray: No, I am not.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has a problem, however, I am on Clause 22. My understanding is that the Minister wishes to propose an amendment with relation to Clause 22 of Bill C-96 at line 8 on page 11.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the amendment I wish to propose is to Section 91.1, found on page 11 of the Bill. Perhaps I caused some difficulty by making some comments on the part of the Bill that was not being changed. I thought it would be helpful to the committee if I said a few words about it.

Section 91.1 is there in order to authorize the Treasury Board to make regulations respecting losses of money and public property suffered by Her Majesty. I move:

That Clause 22 of Bill C-96 be amended by striking out line 8 on page 11 and substituting the following:

"(b) respecting the charging of losses"

The object of the motion is to make technical changes to wording on legal advice. I would be prepared to go into all of that in further detail. Perhaps I should sit down and see whether further information is desired by the committee.

Mr. Huntington: I always appreciate knowing what is in the minds of people that give legal advice. I would appreciate an explanation.

Mr. Gray: The original clause had the word "authorizing". We are being advised to change "authorizing" to "respecting".

As I said earlier in the afternoon, perhaps if my hon. friend and I were left to our own devices we would not be dealing with this. However, we have been advised to make this change.

If I may give further comments, and my hon. friend may smile at this, I am told that the philosophy of the drafting today is not to make regulations authorizing something but respecting something, because the basic law under which the regulations are made does the authorizing. If he is smiling and shaking his head, I join with him in that.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to Clause 22 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 22 as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 22, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 23—

• (1700)

Mr. Gray: I am not offering a further amendment to this clause. However, if the committee likes, I can say a brief word about its purpose.

Mr. Huntington: It would be appreciated.

Mr. Gray: The purpose is to widen the scope of Paragraph 92(e) to cover offences under this Act, and the regulations as well as offences under revenue laws. It would permit the report in question to be given to any superior officer. The amendment to that portion of section 92 following Paragraph (f) would increase the maximum fine from $500 to $5,000. Paragraph 92(e) requires any person having knowledge of a fraud against any revenue law to report the information to a superior officer, but there is no requirement for reporting beyond that superior. Since the immediate superior could be the person concerned in a fraud, it is proposed that this be amended to read "any superior officer" and adds words to require further reporting in accordance with the regulations to be made under the proposed Clause 91(1).

It is also proposed that the scope of this subsection presently confined to offences under the revenue laws, be widened to include offences under the Financial Administration Act so as to cover frauds in the management and attainment of all public money as well as in the revenue collection process. Section 92 deals with offences by officers or other persons employed in the collection, management or disbursement of public money. The penalty has not been changed since the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act was passed in 1931, so we are simply updating the penalty to make it more relevant in current conditions.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, the Minister said "more relevant". I guess ten times since 1931 is close to being relevant.

The thing that worries me about the trend we are getting into is the size of fines. I can understand $5,000 if it is a pretax situation. There is no deductibility in the system. I certainly do not want my remarks to be taken as defending or being sympathetic to those people who play games with the law and the tax collector. But there is a grey area on the fringe where arbitrary decisions are now being made by officers of Revenue Canada. I understand they are not going to Justice for legal interpretation any more. They will charge a person, put him in court, take him through the process and use the excuse of, well, when we do that we elicit more information. The legal process in this country today is terribly expensive. When we start rubber stamping fines of $5,000, for an awful lot of people that is $10,000 of income. I assume we are dealing with after-tax dollars and I think we have to be careful about the escalation in the size of fines which I have seen pass through this House in this last Parliament.

The people with the power in the federal Government are moving in an extremely arbitrary fashion in their interpretations. Again, I am not defending those who are guilty, but I think too many innocent people are being touched by the threat of the big stick in the hands of public servants. I sense power is being abused because there is great fear among the people given the fact that officers of Revenue Canada can enter bank accounts and remove money without the person who owns the bank account even knowing about it.

I just have to put those comments on record. I would rather see this at $2,500, which would be, on average for a person in this league, $5,000 in income. I think we are getting excessive here.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I understand my hon. friend's concerns. However, this clause does not deal with the type of situation my hon. friend has been discussing. We are dealing with a fine imposed by a court. We are dealing with a maximum figure, a fine not exceeding $5,000, so the court can impose a fine of any amount up to that figure. Most important, the provision relates only to offences carried out by employees or agents of Her Majesty, officers or other persons employed in the collection, management or disbursement of public money. We are not talking about citizens who are called to account by the Department of National Revenue. That involves another statute and another enforcement procedure. We are talking about public officials responsible for the collection, management or disbursement of public money who are not acting in a lawful manner.

My hon. friend may want to reflect on the views he has stated and he may then want to agree with me that while his comments are very important and relevant with respect to private individuals, the argument for a maximum possible $5,000 fine in the circumstances to which the clause applies may have a salutary effect in making sure people carry out their duties as public employees.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, on reflection, I will do as the Minister suggests. I have to admit that I was bootlegging in a concern I have with regards to the increasing use of arbitrary powers on the part of public servants.

Clause 23 agreed to.

On Clause 24—Deduction and set-off

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 24 carry?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this amendment would merge Subsections 95(1) and (3) into the proposed Clause 95(1). It would also eliminate the need for an opinion by the Minister of Justice as to whether a person is indebted to Her Majesty, and would authorize the appropriate Minister to make deductions and set-offs. Subsection 95(2) would appear as the proposed Subclause 95(3) and Subsection 95(4) would appear as the proposed Subclause 95(2), and the proposed Subclause 95(4) is a new one.

I can give further detail but I will pause at this point to see what the wishes of my colleagues are in this regard.

Mr. Huntington: We would appreciate further detail, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, Subsection 95(1) of the Financial Administration Act authorizes the deduction or set-off of debts due the Crown against any sum of money due or payable by Her Majesty to such persons. It requires, however, that prior to exercising the set-off procedure the Department obtain an opinion from the Department of Justice that the person is indebted to Her Majesty in the specific sum and the authority of the Treasury Board to make set-off by submission to the Board.

Prior to April, 1979, an opinion concerning the amount of indebtedness of a person to Her Majesty was always provided by the legal services of the Treasury Board itself, but because of the volume, over 200 submissions per year, this responsibility was centralized with legal officers in the Department. Experience has shown that the majority of set-offs are related to the collection of money pursuant to statutes such as the Income Tax Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Student Loans Act. Because of the statutory nature of such debts the amount of such debts to the Crown, whether caused by default or as the result of overpayments, are not in question and legal opinions concerning them have been based on figures provided by officers of the Department. Consequently, the Department of Justice considers that in the case of statutory debts a legal opinion concerning the amount due is not necessary.

● (1710)

Subsection 95(1) has been in effect since the Financial Administration Act came into existence in 1951. During the period the section has been in effect, a number of court cases challenging the Government's right to set off have resulted in judgments which have upheld that the Government has a common right to make set-offs. Therefore, the Department of Justice considers that the approval of the Treasury Board is superfluous and can be eliminated without detriment. This opinion is based on the judgment in the Federal Court of Appeal which stated that the only purpose of the Treasury Board approval is to provide a mechanism for the set-off of moneys.

As a result, we propose that Section 95(1) be amended to eliminate the necessity of a legal opinion concerning the amount of statutory debts. I would like to note that a legal opinion will continue to be required to establish the amount of a debt relating to non-statutory obligations, for example, contractual obligations to pay the Crown. Also, the amendment would discontinue the requirement to obtain approval of the Treasury Board prior to set-off. Under this proposal, the appropriate Minister will have the authority to require a set-off in the same manner as was recently proposed in the Income Tax Act.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 24 carry?

Mr. Huntington: Agreed.

Clause 24 agreed to.

On Clause 25—Proof of Treasury Board records

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this clause is simply to add the title underlined in the amendment. That is not a new amendment I am offering now but rather the amendment printed in the Bill. The titles underlined are Deputy Secretary, Comptroller General of Canada, Deputy Comptroller General of Canada and Assistant Comptroller General of Canada. I suppose it reflects changes in organization since the Act was last amended, including the creation of the office of Comptroller General.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 25 carry?

Mr. Huntington: Agreed.

Clause 25 agreed to.

On Clause 26—Repeal

Mr. Huntington: I would like an explanation of this clause. I am having a little trouble with it.

Mr. Gray: I could say simply that it is consequential on the amendment proposed in Clause 22, but I will go on at greater length. Part XI, Civil Liability and Offences, contains several sections concerning action to be taken when money has not been collected or properly accounted for and offences result in losses to the Crown. Part XII, Miscellaneous, Section 96 in the Act, deals with the public officers' guarantee account which was established as an indemnity fund to compensate for losses arising from any defalcations of public officers. In recent years the wording of the various sections has led to uncertainty as to the action which should be taken and losses incurred. Furthermore, there are precise requirements for taking action and reporting losses where public officers are concerned and while no equivalent requirement exists applying to losses where other persons are concerned. This leads to the latter class of losses being largely ignored in the reporting process. A study into the subject of losses of public money and property has led to the proposal that there should be one comprehensive policy for action to be taken to cover all types of losses, whether caused by public officers or by others, and whether arising for a defalcation or otherwise.

When the Act first became effective in 1952, Section 98 created the public officers' guarantee account and authorized the transfer thereto of the balance remaining in the former Government employees' guarantee fund, which has been in place since 1936, as a means of self-insurance against losses caused by defalcation by public officers. It was funded by premiums levied on and paid from appropriation moneys in respect of all employees handling or managing public moneys. Prior to 1936, it was the practice for Departments to pay premiums on bonds of indemnity which bonded Government employees, the requirement for bonding having been established August 20, 1869. I do not think there is anybody in the House who would recall that. The sums transferred from the former fund to the public officers' guarantee account in 1952 was $657,000.

Section 98 enables the Treasury Board by regulation to levy premiums on Departments to be paid into the account. No such levies have been made during the life of the account. The amount deposited originally plus repayments and restitution made by defalcating officers have been sufficient to meet all claims authorized by the Treasury Board. The lack of any need to levy premiums on Departments over the last 25 years has removed all sense of the account as a bonding mechanism. It has had the effect of reducing the self-insurance aspect virtually to the same self-insurance situation as applies in the case of other losses such as fire losses.

We therefore submit the use of the public officers' guarantee account can be dispensed with. Consequent upon the proposal to abolish the use of the public officers' guarantee account it becomes necessary to make provisions for the disposal of any such balance as may remain in the account on the day on which the proposed amendments to the Act become effective. It is proposed that the clause be included in the Bill for a transitional provision to provide for such balance as remains in the public officers' guarantee account on the coming into force of the amended Act and such sums as may be recovered subsequently against payments made previously from the account to be credited to revenue.

I hope this will assist my hon. friend. In essence, the old Clause 98 has been replaced with the new expanded Clause 91(1) which was agreed to under Clause 22.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, if we had had that last note first we would have avoided putting the Minister through that long reading. I have an understanding of that now.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 26 carry?

Mr. Huntington: Agreed.

Clause 26 agreed to.

On Clause 27—Interdepartmental charges

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the committee to delete this clause. We have received legal advice that the proposed amendment is unecessary. The legal advice is that the Treasury Board already has the authority to issue policy on charging for services between government Departments.

We also want to delete the second part of Clause 27. It was intended to enable the payment of interest to suppliers on overdue accounts. It was later considered preferable to include the specific terms and conditions in the applicable contracts rather than to seek a general legislative provision. You may recall that I announced on behalf of the Government a policy to pay interest on overdue accounts some months ago. It is now in operation. It arises out of the insertion of the appropriate conditions in the contracts in question, therefore making a legislative change unnecessary.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister moves to delete Clause 27.

Mr. Huntington: Agreed.

Clause 27 deleted.

On Clause 28—Transitions

Mr. Gray: Finally, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-96 be amended by adding, immediately after line 40 on page 14, the following:

"Consequential Amendments

1976-77, c. 34 25. Section 6 of the Auditor General Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Idem "6. The Auditor General shall examine the several financial statements required by section 55 of the Financial Administration Act to be included in the Public Accounts, and any other statement that the President of the Treasury Board or the Minister of Finance may present for audit and shall express his opinion as to whether they present fairly information in accordance with stated accounting policies of the federal government and on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year together with any reservations he may have." "

This is consequential in changes to Sections 54 and 55 found in Clauses 17 and 18.

The Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment proposed by the Minister.

Mr. Huntington: I am wondering if we could just have a few words as to what this amendment does. Does it close out the Public Officers Guarantee Act, or have we done that? Is this closing it out, as you previously said?

• (1720)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, yes, the first part of Clause 28 closes out the Public Officers Guarantee Act in the way I outlined perhaps at too great a length.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment moved by the Minister be accepted?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 28, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 28, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The Table officers are in possession of an amendment which has not been referred to. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Minister to pursue it. The amendment relates to the Auditor General Act.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, that was the amendment to which I just referred.

The Deputy Chairman: I had not realized the Minister was putting the amendment which I have in hand which is referred to as a new clause or that he was dealing with it in Clause 28. The reason I asked whether he wanted to move that is that the Table Officers tell me the proposed amendment which deals with the Auditor General Act is not before the House and, therefore, it is out of order. However, I understand that can be cured by unanimous consent. I propose to do that. Is there unanimous consent that this amendment be placed before the House?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Chairman, could you elaborate? The Auditor General Act is not before the House. Therefore, it cannot be amended. While we have been amending the Financial Administration Act all day, what is the difference? Could I have an explanation?

The Deputy Chairman: I would think the original Bill, the Bill before the House, did not contain a reference to the Auditor General Act. Consequently, to bring it in now by way of an amendment could be procedurally questionable. The matter could be cured if the House gives unanimous consent.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, what I am asking the committee to do is to add a clause to Bill C-96 which will have the affect of amending, as a consequence, the Auditor General Act. The purpose is to make it consistent with the Financial Administration Act to the extent that in both cases there would be reference to statements presented by the President of the Treasury Board. You will recall that earlier in the afternoon I asked that the Financial Administration Act be amended in order to confirm the role of the President of the Treasury Board in presenting and compiling the public accounts. This consequential amendment just inserts in the appropriate clause in the Auditor General Act the phrase "President of the Treasury Board" to make clear that the Auditor General's examination will cover the public accounts and any other statement that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance shall present for audit, etc.

The Deputy Chairman: We still need the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent to bring in this amendment?

Mr. Huntington: Could I have an explanation, Mr. Chairman, before giving unanimous consent? The short title of the Act is "An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act." If that were strictly correct, do I understand it properly that it is also an Act to amend the Auditor General Act, and that would cover it?

The Deputy Chairman: A change in title will not make a difference. It is a procedural problem related to the fact that the Auditor General Act was not referred to at second reading of the first draft of the Bill. The Bill in its present shape does not refer to it. However, is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 28 as amended has been agreed to previously.

Title agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair may have a problem, or Hon. Members may have a problem. I am not sure whether the Hon. Members who are proposing to present matters in the adjournment hour are all present in the Chamber at this moment nor whether the Parliamentary Secretaries are present in order to answer. I do not have the list before me. However, under a House order made earlier we are now to call it six o'clock. My only concern is that I would not like to see Members who are on the list for the "Late Show" lose their positions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the two Members from our Party who are appearing in the adjournment debate tonight are present and ready to proceed. If the appropriate representatives on the part of the Government are ready, I do not think there should be any problem. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), who has the first order of business, is here. The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), who has the third item of business, is also here. The third participant, to my recollection, is the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who is a Member of the Government Party. It may be in order for us to start with the first participant, and if the Hon. Member for Algoma comes he can be placed as the third participant and bring up the rear, as it were.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is entirely up to Hon. Members if they wish to proceed. The difficulty I am concerned is about whether or not there is a Parliamentary Secretary prepared to answer. I gather that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) is perhaps examining that problem now. Maybe we could give him a moment or two to see how things are going. However, I will, of course, recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine. It is his right to address the House whether or not there is someone here to give a reply.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC WORKS—NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—RESPONSIBILITY FOR STRUCTURAL DEFECTS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER LAUNCH INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, with the type of responses we get on the Adjournment Debate it would not be of great consequence whether or not the Parliamentary Secretary is here. It is a departmental answer which is mainly a cover-up.

On October 17, 1983, I questioned the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) on the structural problems of the National Arts Centre. He gave me a very incomplete answer in the House and forwarded me a letter which contained other partial information. Therefore I have a series of questions which I should like to direct to the Government or to the Parliamentary Secretary tonight with the hope of receiving some answers concerning what is happening at the National Arts Centre.

There are structural problems in the National Arts Centre. Water is leaking into the garage and maintenance shops. The source of the leakage has been found to be through the sidewalk abutting the west side of the Mackenzie King bridge, which in turn forms the roof over the mechanical room. It is leaking because of failure of the waterproofing in the expansion joint in the garage roof. Apparently responsibility for this is that of the City of Ottawa, as well as for the leaky sidewalks. The joint, which is supposed to provide give when the concrete slabs of the garage expand and contract, has been worn by vibration from OC Transpo buses running along Confederation Square. The costs are estimated to be between $285,000 and $300,000 for correction. The bridge and sidewalks are within the jurisdiction of the City of Ottawa, the National Capital Commission and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton.

● (1730)

The Minister stated in a letter dated October 26 that it was his intention to consult with the City of Ottawa, the NCC and the Regional Municipality since the problem is in their jurisdiction. However, in an article which appeared in The Citizen in Ottawa on October 18, a Public Works spokesmen, Mr. Tormi Heinmaa, pointed out that the Department of Public Works wanted the Ottawa-Carleton region to pay part of the repair costs but that they were were not very responsive. He went on to indicate:

> It's between ourselves and the National Arts Centre to fund the bill.

There seems to be a little confusion here.

The Minister also stated in his letter of October 26 that he planned to consult with the City regarding these necessary repairs. However, according to The Citizen article of October 18, it would seem that some consultation has already taken place and that the City does not seem agreeable to funding part of these costs, as was stated. I am most interested in knowing what part of the costs is being referred to, and if the Minister was aware of the consultation which seems to have already taken place.

Has it been determined as yet who will pay for these repairs? Has the Minister made any formal request to the NCC, City of Ottawa or the Regional Municipality for payment? It was made clear by architect Alexander Topolski in a memo dated Setptember 21, 1983 to the Chief Property Manager of Public Works that if prompt action was not taken, the water penetration would cause further damage. Of course this would mean most extensive repair work and in turn would cost more money. It was further recommended that the repairs should be completed before the onset of freezing temperatures. Has the Minister seen to it that immediate remedial action be taken to ensure the cost of repairs does not expand?

The Public Works spokesman, Tormi Heinmaa, stated as well:

> Really, the workmanship in many places around the Arts Centre is not up to very good standard.

I would like the Minister or his Parliamentary Secretary to tell me why the workmanship is not up to standard. Was the building originally constructed poorly, or has it over the years been allowed to deteriorate? If the latter is the case, why has there not been regular inspections to ensure everything was maintained up to par? If the construction was poor to begin with, I believe there should be an investigation into why the workmanship was below an acceptable level. Further, it should be ascertained as to who will receive the bill for all the necessary repairs.

These are legitimate questions. I hope to receive an answer from the Government tonight as to who allowed all this sloppy workmanship at the National Arts Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few details to what the Hon. Member said in his question on October 17 of this year. First of all, after a period of heavy rain last September, it was found that water was running from the ceiling of the NAC garage into the central stores and the air vents near the mechanical room.

At the request of the NAC, departmental experts immediately proceeded to investigate what caused the leak. They found that water was leaking through the sidewalk abutting the west side of the Mackenzie King bridge, which forms the roof over the NAC mechanical room.

Our Department immediately started with emergency repairs to the waterproofing of the expansion joints of the garage roof located under the sidewalk. I should point out that the entire sidewalk abutting the NAC was built fourteen years ago as part of the Mackenzie King bridge and the west side of the traffic way. Actually, the road was entirely rebuilt over the NAC garage, stores and mechanical room. Over the years, it has been very difficult to find and correct the defects, leaks and damages caused by water penetration. These problems were mainly attributed to causes such as breaks in drain pipes or the road's defective or deteriorating expansion joints and catch basins.

However, during the last two years, bus traffic has increased considerably, and it is suspected that this too has speeded up deterioration of the waterproofing membrane between the road bed and the garage roof, especially near the expansion joints in the ceiling. The sidewalk has also deteriorated as a result of normal exposure to the elements and the fact that it is constantly exposed to potential damage by increasing vehicle traffic. Furthermore, sidewalk blocks are often damaged by snow removal equipment. Together, these factors have helped create the need for maintenance and repairs. To correct the water penetration problems, our Department is now carrying out the emergency repairs I referred to earlier, at an estimated cost of about $80,000. The repairs are part of a more ambitious project now under consideration, to correct problems arising from the condition of the sidewalk along the entire south side of the NAC and the western access route towards Elgin Street, and to the north along the west side of the building as far as the ramp at the northwest corner. Work on this project will start at the point where present repairwork is supposed to finish, which will reduce the total estimated cost by $285,000.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should point out that the NAC is responsible for maintenance and operations in the entire complex, according to the twenty-year lease currently in effect, which expires in May 1989. As the landlord, our Department provides, on demand, any professional and technical services that may be necessary. I can assure the Hon. Member that it would be useless to carry out an independent investigation of the problems at the NAC, since our professional staff, with the help of NAC personnel, is quite capable of resolving any problems that may arise.

Discussions are now taking place with the various authorities involved, namely, the National Art Centre, the National Capital Commission and the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality, regarding the feasibility of sharing responsibility for and costs of these repairs.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—ESTABLISHMENT OF DUTY-FREE SHOPS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, on October 24 of this year I raised a question about the establishment of duty-free stores in Ontario, page 28260 of Hansard. The Minister's answer was unacceptable. Therefore, I would like to speak to the issue of duty-free shops and the policy of the federal Government toward them.

As the Member for Erie, I represent the Town of Fort Erie, which is one of Canada's largest vehicular points of entry. Despite this fact, I have not received the slightest indication from the Minister that there might sometime be a duty-free shop opened in that town. Indeed, the pilot programs or projects have been located in some rather remote western towns. How they propose to gather data from these out of the way border crossings and make it appear relevant to crossings in Ontario such as Cornwall and Fort Erie, I simply do not know.

Ironically, Ontario seems to offer the most potential for the development of profitable duty-free shops yet, according to the Minister, the Province of Ontario has "chosen to protect its state monopoly and thus thwart private enterprise which the Canadian Government wants to promote through its duty-free shops national program."

I applaud the Minister's reference to encouragement of private enterprise. Believe me, it is a real surprise to hear that from a Liberal-socialist Cabinet which has nationalized everything from soup to nuts. I refer to its expensive parasitical Crown corporations, from Petro-Canada, with the free seat cushions for Blue Jay fans, to the Canadair fiasco where executives lease aircraft from other companies to Canadair for their own travel, thus lining their own pocketbooks at the taxpayers' expense.

Be that as it may, the Minister and I seem to differ on the role of the Province in the duty-free shop situation. He insists that it is the fault of the Government of Ontario, that the situation seems to be at a stalemate. He is correct in stating that the LCBO is insisting on the right to brand selection, choosing of candidates to manage the outlets, etcetera.

However, the curt nature of his answers to me in the House, at any rate, seem to tell me that he is rather impatient with the whole issue. Perhaps if he sat down with the Ontario Cabinet and worked the thing out reasonably, with a view to achieving some kind of middle ground, more progress could be made.

The Minister's attitude seems to be, to me at any rate, one of stating what he wishes and obtaining carte blanche to proceed directly in that direction. When things do not work out as planned, he turns to us and tells us to go after the provincial Government.

We have been after the provincial Government. The same day the Minister announced to the House that he had not received a favourable answer from the provincial Ministers I received a letter from the Treasurer of Ontario which reads in part as follows:

● (1740)

> I can now confirm that Cabinet has agreed, in principle, to allow the duty-free stores at border crossings, and I trust, upon completion of a mutually satisfactory arrangement with the federal Government, the first of these stores will be opening in the very near future—

The news then is not all bad despite doom and gloom from the Minister.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to an article published in The Ottawa Citizen of October 25, 1983:

> A compromise appears near that would allow duty-free shops at some Ontario-United States border crossings, including Cornwall, Prescott, and Lansdowne, about 15 kilometers East of Gananoque.

Consumer Minister Robert Elgie said that he is confident that the debate between Queen's Park and the federal Government can be settled within the next few months.

I am fully aware of the problems involved in obtaining agreement between the federal and provincial Governments on this highly sensitive matter. However, as I have mentioned before, I am optimistic that a compromise can be reached as well. I wish to emphasize that there must be attention given to those towns with the best potential for success. Fort Erie is one of those towns.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the employment offered by a duty-free shop would be of benefit to the Town of Fort Erie which has one of the highest unemployment rates in the country. Partisan and political considerations must be laid aside in the selection of candidates for these new projects. If they are, all Canadians can benefit from the job creation potential offered by the duty-free shops.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, from the inception of the land border duty-free shop program, it has been recognized by the federal Government that close co-operation with provincial liquor licensing authorities would be required. The problem between the federal Government and the Province of Ontario has centered around the Province's desire to protect its monopoly on the distribution and sale of liquor products in the Province. While the program is designed to provide opportunities to the private sector in general and to small business in particular, the position of the Ontario Government so far is that it wishes to operate the liquor sales outlet itself, a situation similar to that in existence at the Toronto International Airport.

Liquor sales form an integral part of a duty-free shop operation. Experience and research to date indicate that up to 60 per cent of total sales may be attributed to these products. The nature of a land border duty-free shop is somewhat different from an airport duty-free shop. In particular, the nature of the land shops has dictated that Customs and Excise take the position that a private-sector operator would need liquor sales to ensure a viable operation, either from the actual sale of liquor or from the spinoff effect of customers who come into the store to purchase liquor products.

Therefore, there is no intention of proceeding with the establishment of land border duty-free shops without provision for liquor sales. Furthermore, the Department remains committed to its original premise that such shops be operated by the private sector.

The Minister has discussed this issue with Dr. Elgie, the Ontario Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Dr. Elgie agreed to study the issue further. There were subsequent meetings between officials which have led to the belief that an agreement can be worked out through further negotiations. The Minister is anxious that the matter be resolved as soon as possible so that the Department can proceed with the program at Ontario borders, including Erie, hopefully around the middle of 1984.

We are encouraged that the Ontario Cabinet has indicated, to certain Hon. Members of this House, agreement in principle with our views. While the Minister has not yet received a formal communiqué from Dr. Elgie in this regard, our respective officials will work on the numerous small details which are associated with any federal-provincial agreement. We expect an agreement will be prepared early next year in time for national implementation of the duty-free shop program. Translating principles into practice is not always a simple task, but every effort is being made to resolve this issue at as early a date as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 5.44 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF FARMERS IN OKANAGAN-SIMILKAMEEN, B.C.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, farmers in Okanagan-Similkameen have reason to feel unjustly put upon. Economically many who may not survive the winter can only wonder at the Government's failure to act in their defence. Now farmers find that the very structure of their industry is under attack, perhaps being destroyed by federal government action under the Combines Investigation Act.

One industry official told the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), "We have been operating this system for nearly 50 years. If we have been doing something wrong, tell us and we will correct it, but don't take action which will cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars to defend. We are in deep financial trouble without that."

To discourage farmers in the area further, the CBC reported in a most inflammatory manner alleging racial bias, intolerance, and harassment of orchard workers, in generalized statements which are condemned and challenged by the industry.

A further series of unworthy statements made to the Special Committee on Visible Minorities on behalf of transient workers from Quebec is so overstated as to cause despair on the part of the vast majority of Okanagan farmers who are decent and fair in their relationships with their labour.

It is a sad day when a farmer, receiving five cents for a product which costs him 13 cents to produce, and who is paying the highest farm wages in all of Canada, should be subjected to the kind of abuse which seems to be thrown at him by Government, CBC and individuals with an axe to grind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF HAMILTON STEEL PLANT

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), in the course of a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) on November 24, 1983, in a very cursory manner commented that "Stelco is now planning to shut down its Hilton works in Hamilton and move everything to its new plant". I have contacted the executive director of Stelco in Hamilton, Mr. Peter Gordon, and he categorically denied planning such a move, indicating that the statement is just not true.

I am very concerned that a Member of Parliament would make such an irresponsible comment concerning the Hilton works in Hamilton, a plant which currently employs 10,000 workers. Surely there are enough anxieties and worries in the life of many of the employees these days without the aggravation of such comments that have no foundation in truth.

EXCISE TAX

APPLICATION OF INDEXING TO TOBACCO PRODUCTS—ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has announced a task force to examine the current method of indexing the excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco products, chaired by Dr. Douglas Peters. He states that the task force is being established in response to industry's concerns about the technical operation of the indexing system. Surely the word "industry" includes the tobacco-growing industry. This is the industry the Government is systematically setting out to destroy, and that destruction must stop.

The recent 15.8 per cent increase in federal tax on cigarettes is totally unacceptable, and the provincial ad valorem tax in Ontario on top of that is unbearable. The federal Government alone took in $1.14 billion in tax on tobacco last year when the market value to growers was only some $285 million, a four to one ratio. The task force, indeed, has a serious task, that is, to reverse this government rip-off of the agricultural sector.

I note that individuals and associations are asked to make submissions to the task force and to send them to Dr. Peters at the Department of Finance. I would call on any one in this country who is concerned about the Government's abuse of agriculture to make such a submission to Dr. Peters.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF RESEARCH STATION ON COLONY FARM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Colony Farm is the last large farm left on the north shore of the Fraser River, in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, near metro Vancouver. This 800 acre farm is owned by the British Columbia Government. That Government now wishes to privatize it and sell it to developers so that it can be blacktopped.

Action has been taken at the community level to save this farm. The reason I raise this issue in the House of Commons is that representation has also been made to the federal Minister of Agriculture, asking him to set up an agricultural research station on the farm.

In light of the quickly disappearing farmland in the country, and particularly in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, and in light of the fact that today the livestock from that farm is going up for sale, and that we do need agricultural research facilities in the area, I urge the Minister of Agriculture to enter into negotiations with the Province either to purchase the land itself, or to buy the land in conjunction with the University of British Columbia.

The matter is urgent, and the Minister will be pressed next week by the former Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody and by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). I urge the Minister of Agriculture to act on this right away if he does not want to lose his green hat.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—EMPLOYMENT WITH CIDA—REQUESTS FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions to ask. Why is the Government blocking questions regarding Hugh Hambleton, the Canadian spy who worked in the NATO Secretariat in Paris, in Peru and Haiti ostensibly for CIDA, but in reality on behalf of the KGB? Who is being protected? Why is the Government attempting to prevent all of the truth from coming out?

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) tells me that the case is closed as far as he is concerned. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) tells me that he is in no position to comment on the matter. How can the case be closed when we do not yet know who in the Government granted Hambleton immunity although he was known to be a spy? We do not know who warned him not to go to Britain where, as he was told, he was certain to be tried on charges of espionage. Who tipped him off in Britain before he went through the immigration line by suggesting that it would be in his interest to return to Canada? Who is covering up these traces of espionage?

Who recommended Mr. Hambleton for a ranking position in CIDA as soon as he had joined that organization and had been sent off to Peru? Perhaps most important of all, given all of the things that were known by early 1982 about his work on behalf of the KGB, why was he not brought to trial in Canada? Was he delivered up to the British authorities because a trial in Canada would have brought out some unpleasant home truths?

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON FARM FUELS AND FERTILIZERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government cannot begin to make up for all of the damage it has caused Canadian farmers through its ridiculous policies. However, it has a responsibility at the very least to remove the federal tax on farm fuels and fertilizers.

Let us look at the Government's record on agriculture. It has refused to provide the Farm Credit Corporation with enough money to keep Canadian farmers afloat. It has forced the Western Grain Transportation Act through without regard for those who must bear the financial burden, namely, the western Canadian farmers. The Government agreed to consider changes in the Western Grain Stabilization Act only after many farmers had gone bankrupt waiting for long overdue changes to be implemented. Those changes have not even occurred as yet.

New statistics show that 390 Canadian farmers went bankrupt between January and October 31 of this year. In my home Province of Manitoba, nearly twice as many farmers have gone bankrupt so far this year as compared to the same period last year. That is absolutely unacceptable.

It should be reasonable to expect the Government at least to aid farmers by dropping the federal tax on farm fuels and fertilizers. This gesture could be the first step toward loosening the financial stranglehold in which the Liberal Government has placed thousands of Canadian farmers.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PROVISION OF WHEEL CHAIRS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the handicapped in Canada. As the Government knows, corporate profits in the third quarter of this year have gone up over 90 per cent as compared to the same period last year. Yet at the same time, unemployment has increased, especially for the handicapped. It is estimated that the unemployment rate for the handicapped is in excess of 50 per cent.

In the 1981 Report to the House of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, entitled "Obstacles", it was recommended that the Canadian Government take a number of steps to increase employment opportunities for the handicapped in Canada. Among the steps recommended was that wheelchairs be provided for the handicapped right across the nation. At this time it is possible in the Province of Manitoba to have wheelchairs paid for by the Government of that Province. However, the same thing is not possible in the Province of Nova Scotia.

• (1115)

In addition, it is important that the Government give a high profile to the concerns and problems faced by the handicapped. I would urge the Government, in the Speech from the Throne which we expect in two weeks time, to set up a senior secretariat for the handicapped. I would encourage the Government to get all-Party agreement and have a special committee of this House as an ongoing pressure group to work on behalf of the handicapped and to make certain their concerns are expressed to the Government and to the House.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ADVICE GIVEN BY MINISTER OF STATE TO BUY SOVIET-MADE CARS AND COMBINES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is also Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. This is a follow-up to the questions posed yesterday by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Elgin. At that time the Minister was not familiar with the pronouncements being made by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Last night on television we were able to see Senator Hazen Argue, in the flesh so to speak, addressing the Alberta Wheat Pool. At that time he was advising Canadians to buy Soviet bloc automobiles and farm equipment, specifically Lada automobiles and Belarus farm equipment. Was the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board stating government policy?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen the specific statement made by my colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I think he was speaking in his capacity as Minister responsible for selling Canadian grain products abroad, and it is not Government policy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Minister therefore is repudiating the statement of the Senator.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He must be the one Cabinet Minister referred to in the television broadcast as saying that Senator Argue is going to get his knuckles rapped when he gets back. I see the knuckle rapper is sitting in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA-U.S.S.R. TRADE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in light of this apparent conflict between Cabinet Ministers on a very important matter, and particularly in light of the fact that substantial moneys are being spent on the bail-out of Massey-Ferguson, and moneys have been extended by way of assistance to Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, can the Minister advise the House, as Minister of Trade, whether or not statements made by the Senator were a part of any deal made with a Soviet bloc country, a condition precedent as it were, with respect to the sale of Canadian agricultural products?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who comes from western Canada and from a Province which produces most of the wheat sold abroad, will appreciate that 30 per cent of the gross national product in this country is generated by exports. Consequently any trading nation must do a substantial amount of two-way trade. What Senator Argue is basically saying is that we have to be knowledgeable of this and that we must import as well as export. As I indicated to the Hon. Member earlier, the specific statements attributed to Senator Argue are not the policy of the Government.

IMPACT OF MINISTER'S ADVICE ON CANADIAN FARM IMPLEMENT MANUFACTURING COMPANIES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, one of the concerns is that Senator Argue has taken upon himself to flog specific products coming from the Soviet Union, in other words, Lada automobiles. How can the Minister reconcile his position? What is he going to say to Senator Argue when he has been the proponent of support for the Canadian auto industry? What is he going to say to Senator Argue with respect to the position of many, many thousands of Canadians who are farm dealers for various domestic farm implement companies especially in light of the very tenuous condition of the farm implement manufacturing sector? What is the Minister going to say to Senator Argue when he gets back to Ottawa?

Mr. Stevens: Straighten him out.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to tell my hon. colleague what I will say to Senator Argue, if he would be willing to tell me what he tells his Leader about every single policy put forward by his Party. I want to remind the Hon. Member that Senator Argue has been one of the strongest proponents of the Government of Canada assisting Massey Ferguson as well as White

Farm, on behalf of the farmers of Canada. He has been fairly consistent in his comments.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER STATE VIEWS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is not satisfactory for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to try to give these cute little retorts. It is not good enough, at a time when Massey Ferguson and International Harvester and virtually thousands and thousands of Canadians are unemployed. The Minister is responsible for international trade and for getting our products into world markets. What is his view of the comments made by the Minister of State for the Wheat Board?

● (1120)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, rather than be like the Opposition, it is our actions which really count rather than words. It is the Government of Canada which saved Massey-Ferguson, and it is the Government of Canada which has twice saved White farm, in the interest of farmers, labourers and dealers across this country.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, any Minister who tries to coerce Canadian farmers into buying inferior products, which will lead to delays in spring planting, which is very serious in the West, is not fit for public office.

KNUCKLE RAPPING REPORT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my second question relates to a news report that the Minister of State would have his knuckles rapped. Would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us when these knuckles will be rapped, where, who will do it, and can I come over and have a punch, too?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to take responsibility for anything written or said by the media in this country.

THE ECONOMY

CORPORATIONS' PROFIT MARGINS—LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment who knows from figures released by Statistics Canada yesterday that corporations are doing quite well. Profits for Canadian corporations are up by more than 92 per cent. Clearly the Government's corporate tax give-aways of hundreds of millions of dollars are at least producing a recovery for corporate profit margins. My question concerns the nature of a true recovery for Canadians. Will he tell us why profits are up more than 92 per cent but unemployment levels, year over year in percentage terms, remain virtually unchanged?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I disagree, certainly to some extent, with the concluding part of the Hon. Member's question. There has been a continuous drop in the unemployment rate over the last seven months. Indeed, it has dropped by almost one percentage point over the period to which he refers, so there has been a considerable improvement on the employment side. If he looks at the employment figures rather than the unemployment figures, he knows there has been an increase in permanent jobs in the Canadian economy of well over 300,000 since last autumn. I do not think the picture is as bleak as his citation of the figures would show. Clearly there is great room for improvement on the unemployment side, and that is the focus of the policies of this Government.

In reply to the first part of his question, I would say the increase in profits reflects the extraordinary low level they were at before and I would have thought he would be rejoicing at the existence of those profits, since those profits and their reinvestment in the economy are the source of the creation of jobs in the economy. It is something we should be pleased about and not something which the Hon. Member appears to regret.

LEVEL OF BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, unemployment levels remain virtually unchanged. A year ago we had about 1.5 million unemployed, and today we have 1.5 million unemployed in real numbers. As to the Government's theory on the way to get a recovery, if increased profits are supposed to lead to new investment and produce jobs, why have two different agencies, one government, and one private, said it is not working? The Conference Board of Canada said that for 1983 investment is going to be down by more than 10 per cent, while profits have gone up by 92 per cent. Statistics Canada, a Government agency, said investment for 1983 is going to be down by more than 7 per cent, while profits are up by 92 per cent. Why are corporations with very high profits not investing to create the jobs the Minister says they ought to be creating?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are so many points one could make, but perhaps we could start with the most important one, that the Hon. Member has semantically shifted his terms. He was talking originally about the rate of increase being high, and is now arguing that profits are very high. Well, the original question was concerning the rate of increase. Now he is talking about the level of profits. I think he would not receive general agreement to his argument that profits are too high. The rate of increase has been high because they were so low, but the level of profits themselves is not necessarily extraordinarily high.

It is clear that the approach we are taking to the creation of employment is based on the belief that the private sector is the motor force in creating jobs in the economy. I do not think that the Hon. Member agrees with that approach. That is the approach that we are following.

Of course, in the whole range of commentary about the effectiveness of the Government's economic proposals, and in the forecasts of what will happen in the future, one finds those who are more optimistic and those who are more pessimistic. The hon. gentleman, with that pessimism which characterizes his questions, seizes on some of the worst estimates. I believe, and it is clear that the Minister of Finance, in expressing his view to the House on past occasions, believes that in fact the Canadian economy is strengthening and the private sector is increasing in jobs. The statistics seem to be showing that the Canadian economy is generating more jobs. It has generated 350,000 since last November.

I would not say that the recovery of the economy is galloping, but there are more and more signs of increasing strength in it, and that increasing strength will lead to increasing employment. The profits about which the hon. gentleman has been commenting so negatively are an essential part of that job creation process.

FORECASTS OF 1984 PROFIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker I say to the Minister in all seriousness that businessmen are not stupid. If they are operating at only 70 per cent capacity now, they are unlikely to take the great corporate tax giveaways that the Government has given them, and reinvest them. I repeat, they are not stupid. They have got excess capacity and they are not going to create more excess capacity.

To go back to the nub of the issue, considering that profits have almost reached the pre-recession levels, of 1981, and in the coming year will exceed those levels, could the Minister tell us where the justice is if, in 1984, profit levels are going to be right back to where they were in 1981 but, according to the Government's own forecast, unemployment is going to remain at a much higher level than in 1981, in fact around 11 per cent? Does the Minister not believe that the people of Canada really would see justice in the return of profit levels to old levels only if employment levels are returned to the same pre-recession level?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the hon. gentleman is right in his characterization of the figures in comparison to 1981, to what has happened in the past, and he may not be right in his forecast what is going to happen in the future. His forecasts about the future rarely have been right.

Mr. Broadbent: Check the figures.

Mr. Roberts: In terms of the unemployment figures on which he is concentrating, he has to remember, and I hope Hon. Members will remember, that as the economy improves there will be encouragement to those who have been discouraged and left the labour force to re-enter it. So in some way, paradoxically, as the economy recovers, unemployment figures will not show the full impact of that recovery. The full impact of that recovery will be shown more clearly in the job creation figures.

The Hon. Member, for reasons of pessimism which I mentioned earlier, wants to keep going back to the unemployment figures. If he would instead look at the other side, job creation, he would have to put a much more optimistic face on the remarks he is making. He clearly does not want to do that.

TRUST COMPANIES

PROHIBITION ON PREPAYMENT OF MORTGAGES—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO FEDERAL COURT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the Parliamentary Secretary, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

The Minister is aware that some trust companies are requiring mortgagors to waive their right of prepayment of a mortgage under Section 10 of the Interest Act and similiar provincial legislation, as a condition of their granting a mortgage. Inasmuch as many learned legal practitioners have expressed doubts as to whether the waiving of rights would stand the test in a court of law, will the Minister make a reference of this subject to the Federal Court so that the matter may be adjudicated at a level higher than the office of the loan institution?

• (1130)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can say on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs that she is actively pursuing this matter. Indeed, I will refer the worth-while suggestion of the Hon. Member to her. I am sure that she will act upon it.

REAL ESTATE SELLING TACTICS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I am told that more than 30 per cent of the homes on the real estate market today in many parts of Canada are as a result of foreclosures due to high interest rates. The Minister has had a report on this matter. She has had a report that contains information on bait and switch tactics, misleading advertising, and so forth. The report is complete, yet she is keeping it secret.

Why is the Minister keeping this report under wraps? Why is she hiding it? Why is she waffling while Canadians are losing their homes?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient. I am sure the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be making an important announcement in this regard pretty soon.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PRESERVATION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMUNITY

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister who, I carelessly assume, may be conversant with government policy and actions.

In response to the information press clippings which I circulated to all Members of Parliament some weeks ago, indicating the very serious situation facing agriculture in Okanagan-Similkameen, I was pleased to receive a letter from the Deputy Prime Minister which stated, "preserving a strong agriculture community is of great importance to this Government." Considering that this probably indicates a policy discussed in Cabinet, where, in the recent actions of the Government, is this demonstration of government determination to preserve a strong agricultural community?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since all Government measures tend to protect Canadian agriculture, in the circumstances we must maintain a delicate balance between preserving Canada's domestic interests and free exchange policies in international trade. In fact, I am pleased to see that a Member from Western Canada is asking for more protection. As far as farmers are concerned, we often hear complaints from Western Canada that the Government is too protectionist, and I am therefore pleased to see a Member from Western Canada asking for more protection for agriculture in British Columbia. It is always a problem for the Government to determine how much protection certain sectors should be given, while not closing our borders too often so as to preserve our international interests.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DEMONSTRATE COMPASSION

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, considering that the Farm Credit Corporation does not have enough funds to serve agriculture, that the loans it does make are at 16.75 per cent and beyond the ability of most farmers to pay, that Revenue Canada is terrorizing farmers who must seek other employment to feed their families and keep their farms going, and considering the fact that the federal Justice Department is now harassing the B.C. tree fruits industry with questionable action under the Combines Investigation Act, where is the compassion which one would expect from a Government which is intent on preserving agriculture?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that in all circumstances the law of the land has to be followed by every citizen. I am sure that the farmers, like anyone else, want to make their contribution to the national scene. The different governments must apply the law of the land has it applies to all sectors of the Canadian economy.

Some years ago, I believe, farmers had no problem paying their taxes. Like other citizens, when their income is better they pay their taxes. If they do not have any such problem they will not be harassed by any officials of the Government.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF HAMILTON STEEL PLANT

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the course of the question directed to the Minister yesterday by the Hon. Member for Ontario, a comment was made that Stelco is considering a move of its Hilton works to Nanicoke. Could the Minister confirm or deny that such a move is contemplated or, in fact, in progress?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday when the question was asked, I am not aware of any move being contemplated by the company. I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton West was in contact with the Chairman of the Board of the company, and the company is also not aware of any move as alleged by the Opposition yesterday.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Despite increased corporate profits, women workers continue to be condemned to low paying, part time, non union jobs. The Government also discriminates, since only 20 per cent of the former NEED program participants were women. Will the Minister tell us what percentage of the current federal job-creation programs will be targeted to women?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me some indication that she would want to raise this matter in the House. I can say that in our job-creation programs over-all, the percentage of women participants is about one-third. I could break that down for her into the four main programs which we have. Under Canada Works, 31 per cent of the total participation is by women. Under the LEAD Program it is 38 per cent. Under our Career Access Program, 44 per cent of the participants are women. Under the Job Corps Program, 56 per cent of the participants are women.

WOMEN'S EMPLOYMENT IN SERVICE SECTOR

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, an expanded service sector would provide permanent jobs for many women, particularly women who are displaced by the recession and high technology. Therefore, what steps will the Minister take to expand jobs in the community service sector, in services such as universal child care and home care for the elderly, since these kinds of jobs also meet real social needs in communities?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the objective which the Hon. Member has described in her question, the importance of creating jobs in those sectors, and the importance they will have for the employment of women. I hope that when she hears what is said in the Speech from the Throne she will feel that the approach the Government has taken will indicate some sensitivity to the concerns she has expressed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GRENADA—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the Government's continued harping criticism of the accomplishments in the country of Grenada, would he indicate if the Government has at long last taken any positive steps on what has transpired in Grenada? Has it made contact with the interim government officials and with Governor General Scoon to indicate our support for what they are doing? Has it offered any assistance and, if so, what has been the nature of that assistance in particular?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give a precise answer to the Hon. Member, but at least the position of the Government on this situation is quite clear. Our policy on Grenada is not as quoted by the Member for St. John's West in the paper this morning, "to befuddle the reporters and befuddle the public." We have not agreed to the actions of the Americans, but I am sure that our officials in External Affairs who are dealing with this country are doing what is necessary at this time. I am not in a position to report, but at least we have a position and are not like the Tories who speak out of both sides of their mouths on this issue.

GOVERNMENT AID INQUIRY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Acting Prime Minister an opportunity to show that they are not befuddled. Would he indicate what specific aid package has been offered to Grenada? The Americans have offered $15 million to help rebuild the economy, the roads, and other services on the island. Has the Canadian Government made any similar offer to help these people, who feel they have been restored to freedom?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member believes that this present Government has a good policy on aid. He wants to know if this policy on aid applies to Grenada at the moment. A few months ago they were complaining because we were giving too much to Grenada. I do not know what is being done precisely today because I am not the Secretary of State for External Affairs. However, I just want to tell the Hon. Member that on the first day of the invasion his Party was supporting the Americans. When they saw that Prime Minister Thatcher condemned the Americans, they became silent.

Mr. Stevens: That is not true.

Mr. Chrétien: Their policy, in the words of their former critic, is to befuddle the public, and I believe it is well known that they are on both sides of the argument. At least our position is clear on the policy toward Grenada.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SCREENING OF PROSPECTIVE ENTREPRENEUR-CLASS IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I think I am speaking for all Canadians in this concern. As the Minister is aware, there is a federal program intended to lure business entrepreneurs to Canada. However, I note that the Immigration and Passport Branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has indicated:

—there's always the concern that criminals get in, but that's basically Immigration's role in screening these people, and we just sort of have to go along with them. If there's no convictions, then we have nothing to fall back on.

Does the Solicitor General agree with that assessment of the role of the RCMP in terms of this new immigration policy?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not an accurate statement on the responsibility of the RCMP in relation to the screening of immigrants. They have a duty to do that. It is part of the visa vetting process. They do not necessarily stop at the list of criminal convictions of the individual. They are responsible to look into the whole question of the character of a candidate for immigration to Canada under any of the programs. They make their report to the immigration officials, and it is the responsibility of the immigration officials, under the leadership of my colleague, to make decisions in particular cases about whether admission should be granted.

Oral Questions

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, "If there's no convictions, then we have nothing to fall back on", unfortunately, whether the individual is notorious or has a bad general reputation, source of funds is also important. Does the Minister realize the implications of what he has said and what the RCMP is saying? In effect, the implications are that if someone has made $1 million out of loansharking, prostitution, blackmail or extortion, he or she can still qualify to come to this country with that $1 million to set up business again.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks whether I realize what I am doing. Yes, I am contradicting the statement he has just read.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

EMPLOYMENT OF TORONTO FIRM

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Solicitor General. On September 1, 1982, the Minister entered into a contract with Dan Sullivan Associates of Toronto to improve the positive image of the Minister in the eyes of the public. During the following year over $43,000 was spent on this rather formidable task. How can the Minister possibly justify this expenditure of public funds to spruce up the Minister's public image?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that is a good question for the Order Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: That is not what the contract was about. I would be very happy to table information to inform the House exactly what the contract was about.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Given the Minister's performance, he would probably sue for breach of contract.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF CONTRACT DOCUMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in a confidential document of August, 1982, the consultant proposes to "increase the positive share of mind that this Minister" and office "has with key publics" and show that "the Solicitor General of Canada is an active forward-thinking influential leader", will the Minister today make public all documents relating to this incredible contract?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will try to do it today, but I will certainly do it as promptly as I can.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S ENTRY TO TAXPAYERS' BANK ACCOUNTS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. He spoke about the law of the land to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen. Could he tell us what new laws have been passed by the Government which allow the Minister of National Revenue to enter, without warning, the bank accounts of taxpayers of the nation who happen to have temporary cash flow problems, and who ask for some relief in terms of the obligations due him as Minister of National Revenue?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this particular matter. If the Hon. Member has a grievance to express, he can communicate with the Minister of National Revenue. Of course it is always a very difficult task for the people charged with collecting income tax to do their work. If the Hon. Member has some specific complaint, he can write to the Minister of National Revenue, and he will certainly look into the matter.

OFFICIALS' ARBITRARY DECISIONS

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the former Minister of Justice and the Acting Prime Minister what new laws have been passed which now allow the Minister of National Revenue to enter without warning, without any courtesy extended to the owners and holders of bank accounts in Canada, and demand payment of obligations which Revenue Canada says are due. Have we now moved to a point where everybody in the country is guilty until proven innocent? Is the Minister not worried about the arbitrary nature of decisions being imposed upon Canadians, particularly in this time of economic distress?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give a legal opinion. The Hon. Member has been in the House for a long time and knows that Members are not supposed to ask for a legal opinion in the House of Commons.

Mr. Huntington: I am not asking for an opinion. What laws are you using?

Mr. Chrétien: If the Hon. Member has some complaint, he can always raise it with the Minister of National Revenue. On the other hand, the officials in that Department have to administer laws which have been passed by Parliament. Of course, if the bureaucrats are not following the law, there is some recourse, and that is why there are courts in the land.

Mr. Huntington: You do not even know the law.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STATE OF ACCOMMODATION IN QUESNEL, B.C.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the deplorable condition of the Quesnel RCMP office, which I pointed out to him in a statement under Standing Order 21 on October 17. The Minister knows that there are 42 staff members in that office, that there are about 3,000 square feet of space, and that there are six cells in that space. This works out to 29 square feet per person. Also, the wiring has been condemned and the heating system is a failure. The warmest the building can get in winter is 60 degrees Fahrenheit. Would the Minister please tell me what he will do about this situation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have concluded a contract through the RCMP to provide an additional 1,100 square feet of space. Work will begin very shortly, and I suspect it will be concluded long before next summer.

REQUEST THAT NEW HEADQUARTERS BE CONSTRUCTED

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the 1,100 square feet of space is up on the next floor? This will not be the answer because it is inconvenient to get up there. Also there is the matter of the heating, wiring, plumbing and cells, which are all obsolete and old.

This is a DPW building, and I point out to the Minister that, under the DPW Act, government employees are supposed to have a minimum of 100 square feet of space within which to work. There have been grievances by the lay staff, not the RCMP personnel, to their unions. What we need in Quesnel is a new RCMP headquarters. It is a large subdivision, and this extra space will simply not be the answer.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the information I have is that this important improvement will bring the office up to the standards it should have. I remind the Hon. Member that police do not basically work within the office premises; they work within the community. They spend less time in the office than other officials of the Government of Canada. The minimum space requirements for police needs are not the same as those for full-time employees who stay in a particular office all day.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

"OBSTACLES" REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS ON HIRING OF HANDICAPPED—LEVEL OF MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. The problem of finding employment for handicapped workers continues to be very serious, with unemployment ranging between 50 per cent and 90 per cent across the board. Will the Minister move soon to implement, on the one hand, the recommendations of the "Obstacles" report which would require the Government to enter into agreements with employers doing business with the Government to hire handicapped workers and, second, to amend the Canada Labour Code to bring the minimum wage for handicapped workers at least up to the level of the minimum wage for all other workers in the country?

An Hon. Member: Are you awake over there?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I was reading a document. Perhaps the Hon. Member could ask his question again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1150)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the question again in lieu of a supplementary. I was saying to the Minister that employment for the handicapped continues to be a very serious problem right across the country, with between 50 and 90 per cent of the handicapped unable to find employment. Will the Minister take two steps, one recommended in the 1981 "Obstacles" report, which suggested that the Government ought to incorporate into its contracts that it undertakes with private firms a clause which guarantees employment for a reasonable percentage of handicapped people and, second, amend the Canada Labour Code to bring the minimum wage applicable to those who are employed under the category of handicapped up to the level at least of the minimum wage that is applicable to all other persons in the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the Hon. Member's two suggestions. They were indeed worth repeating. I can give him the assurance that my Department is, in fact, considering these two questions and that we hope to be able to find a satisfactory solution very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GRENADA—SUSPENSION OF AID PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked earlier by the Hon. Member for York-Peel with regard to aid to Grenada. The Acting Prime Minister will be aware that, shortly before the difficulties on the island, we suspended the cocoa rehabilitation program because Grenada did not have the cash to meet its part of the obligation. Has this matter been taken under advisement, and is Canada now prepared to go ahead with the program on its own, waiving for the time being the necessity of Grenada coming up with its share of the cost of that program?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give the Hon. Member a yes or no answer. I will certainly pass his question on to the Department of External Affairs and ask them to communicate directly with him.

NATIONAL SECURITY

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—REPORTED OFFER OF PROSECUTION IMMUNITY—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Has he had an opportunity to reconsider the statement he made, to the effect that in the Hambleton case neither he nor any Canadian authority made an offer of immunity from prosecution to Mr. Hugh Hambleton, the KGB spy?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to reconsider that statement. That is a fact. I reviewed the file carefully and no offer of immunity at all was made to the spy, Hugh Hambleton.

EVIDENCE GIVEN IN BRITISH TRIAL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister then suggesting that in the British trial they used either falsified or tainted evidence?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in the course of the trial in Britain it was suggested that the arrangement that existed in Canada amounted to an immunity. That was no material evidence, in the sense that the evidence against Mr. Hambleton would have been affected by that characterization of the Canadian arrangement one way or the other.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL IMPROVEMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Minister knows, the provincial Government of Manitoba has been requesting for some time that improvements be made to the Port of Churchill, the rail line to Churchill, and also that the federal Government provide some help in providing a hydro line to the Port of Churchill. Has the Government made a decision on these projects and, if so, when can we expect announcements on them?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, these projects do not come under my specific area of responsibility. However, I know that the Minister of Transport and I have had several meetings with the Manitoba Government with respect to possible joint co-operation on the projects the Hon. Member raises.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

KING POINT DEVELOPMENT DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As he knows, the North Slope Project Review Group set up by his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, three weeks ago turned down proposals by Gulf for Stokes Point and by Kiewit and Sons for King Point. Kiewit and Sons are still negotiating with the Minister's officials, apparently for a loan of somewhere between $80 million and $170 million. Will the Minister explain to this House and to Yukoners what the process is for the acceptance of the Kiewit and Sons proposal for King Point when the process has been so muddied by his colleague, and that same project was turned down just three weeks ago?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that my officials are carrying on discussions because clearly the decision rests with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

THE CASE OF HUGH HAMBLETON—POSSIBLE ARRANGEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. He now talks about an arrangement which the Government had with Hugh Hambleton. I am wondering how he distinguishes between an arrangement and an offer of immunity. Was one in writing and the other one simply by word of mouth? Was he, or was he not, offered immunity?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that this was the subject of the Question Period for many, many days. I explained fully, in answers to the House, the relationship between the Security Service of the RCMP and Hugh Hambleton. I invite the Hon. Member simply to review that to find exactly what the difference is, if he does not know it, between an offer of immunity and any other arrangement.

PIPELINES

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The British Columbia Government has been holding hearings on a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. I believe the hearings are now completed. Has the Province made any representation to the federal Government for prospective funding for that natural gas pipeline?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with the British Columbia administration about the proposed pipeline. However, they had to hold public hearings and look at both the ecological and economic problems associated with that. We have always said that we have to ensure that it is economically viable. We do not know that as yet. There has been no specific discussion about a financial contribution, but they did indicate that, if they were to proceed, they would come to the federal Government for some help.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I would like to correct something I said yesterday. In reply to a question from the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revolstoke, I said that I had not received any communication from the British Columbia Government on the coal lands. I have, in fact, received a letter, and I have replied. This information escaped my mind yesterday. I apologize to the Hon. Member for not giving the correct answer yesterday. I have already told him privately that it had escaped my memory.

EMPLOYMENT

INCLUSION OF VISIBLE MINORITIES IN AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAMS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As he is aware, there is an affirmative action program which has, as target groups, unemployed women, the physically handicapped, and our native population. What type of consideration has the Minister given to seeing that the visible minorities are also included in any affirmative action employment program brought forward by the Government?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is a very important element, one which we are examining with some care. The Job Corps Program is, I believe, particularly ready to be focused in on that kind of approach. The matter the Hon. Member raises is of great concern to us. We are trying to find ways of responding to the kind of question he has raised.

PIPELINES

NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO VANCOUVER ISLAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the question just asked about the two proposals for a natural gas pipeline from the mainland to Vancouver Island. I listened carefully to the Minister's answer. Is he saying that there is in fact no commitment whatsoever from the federal Government with respect to financial assistance for a gas pipeline to Vancouver Island after the provincial Government decides which route is preferable? Is that the position that the Minister is taking?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have always taken the position that, if it is a viable approach, the Government will consider putting money into the project. The first consideration is to determine whether there is a relationship between the cost of the project and the benefits of it.

• (1200)

Of course, one of the problems at this time is that many of the prospective buyers of natural gas on the Island have used other forms of energy for conservation purposes. I suppose that in every case there must be a relation between the demand and the cost. This is being analysed at this time. If, of course, it is a viable project, we will have to look to the Government to find out if there are any prospects of financial help. I can say that we first must know if the project is viable.

THE LATE GRAHAM SPRY

TRIBUTES TO BROADCASTING PIONEER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that yesterday Graham Spry passed away. He was 83 years old and died peacefully.

The Late Graham Spry

Mr. Spry was a reporter, war correspondent, scholar, lobbyist and Canadian par excellence. His Canadian Radio League in the early 1930s pushed for a public broadcasting network in Canada and Parliament created the CBC in 1936. That is why Mr. Spry was called the father of the CBC. He was also one of the founders of the CCF and was an assistant to Sir Stafford Cripps. Mr. Spry leaves behind his wife Irene, herself a distinguished economist and historian, and a son and a daughter.

Mr. Spry even stood for this House a number of times and in his own words was always defeated by large and enthusiastic majorities! Yet he still offered to Canada his ideas and his visions of a united federal Canada through communications. Those ideas and visions were adopted by all three Parties which are presently in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, he was a journalist and a man of great depth, and we shall miss his vision and his ideas.

[English]

Perhaps I may conclude by saying that I had the honour to meet Mr. Spry when he was 80 years old and it was a great privilege for me. I could see that sparkle in his eyes. He was a humble man yet he had done so much for Canada. He was truly a great Canadian who had given a great deal to my generation. I believe that the generation to come, although they will never know him personally, will be the beneficiaries of his ideas, of the CBC and of some of his other accomplishments in the area of broadcasting in Canada. During his 83 years he contributed immensely to Canada. He was really a great Canadian and we will miss him.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for the excellent idea of taking notice of this sad and important event, an event which is especially sad for the family of Graham Spry. I am one of those who had the privilege to know Mr. Spry, although from somewhat of a distance. As a young man, I knew what he had done because I lived in an isolated rural community in the Province of New Brunswick. I realized very early that the radio broadcasts of which he was very much one of the founding fathers had linked Canadian communities and Canadian people in ways which were not always as visible as this institution but which were no less real.

[Translation]

I think that in the history of our country, we shall have reason to remember people like Graham Spry. I know that his desire to see a greater understanding among Canadians made him choose this form of transmitting the information and knowledge that form the sole basis for understanding and tolerance among people who, historically have differed in origin, language and beliefs.

[English]

I believe this country will survive not only because of its wealth but because of its citizens. Graham Spry sensed a very long time ago that understanding and tolerance would come from knowledge, and that broadcasting could transmit that knowledge. In every sense of the word, Graham Spry was a father of the new Canada.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with those who have already spoken in tribute to the late Graham Spry. I am particularly pleased to be able to speak in tribute to this man as Graham Spry, among his many other accomplishments, was a good and faithful servant of the Province of Saskatchewan for many years. He served as Agent General in the Ofifce of the Province of Saskatchewan in London.

One of the things that I most particularly recall about Graham Spry, not knowing him personally but knowing of him and his family and the distinction with which all of them have served our country, was his love for the Gatineau Hills. He had a residence in the Gatineau Hills where he spent many, many hours of his life. I know he spent those hours with the greatest of enjoyment, as many of us have had the privilege and pleasure of doing the same.

As has been pointed out, he was a distinguished citizen of the country and a Companion of the Order of Canada. He was a recipient of the John Drainie Award in 1972 for his distinguished contribution to broadcasting. He will be sorely missed by all Canadians because of his contributions and I know that I speak on behalf of all Members of the House when I extend to his widow and his children our sincere and heartfelt condolences.

MR. PARKER—TAXATION OF TIPS AND GRATUITIES

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour today to present a petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned constituents of the Riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke in the Province of British Columbia and other concerned citizens, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that waiters and waitresses are being unfairly taxed on gifts in the form of tips and gratuities.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to change the regulations so that tips and gratuities would be like political contributions and not be taxed as income to the recipients. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have noticed a practice creeping in to the business of replying to questions. I find it a rather ominous one. There are two questions answered each day. I am sure more than two questions are put on the Order Paper each day. There was a third question today, the answer to which was to be deposited because it was rather long. I think the Government ought to be a little more assiduous in pushing ministries to reply more generously to questions on the Order Paper.

I had cause yesterday, for example, to look at questions which were put on the Order Paper in 1980. I did not actually count them, because I did not have the time. I was hoping though that more than two questions would be answered today, but I find only two questions are being answered today. However, I would say there must be about 60 questions left over from 1980, probably even more from 1981, even more from 1982, and certainly more from 1983.

To reply to these questions two at a time is, to my way of thinking and I think the House will agree with me, really not serving the purpose for which questions are placed on the Order Paper. I was told yesterday that I ought to put some questions on the Order Paper, but to put them on the Order Paper is to bury them, virtually for all time.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure exactly what the Hon. Member is trying to imply. If he is implying that the Government is holding back answers to questions, he is totally wrong. We have answered 85 per cent of all the questions which have been placed on the Order Paper in this session. Three were answered today because three answers were ready. When there are more than three answers ready, I bring them to the House immediately. When replies to questions come back from the Department and have been signed by the Minister or by the respective Parliamentary Secretary, they are tabled in this House immediately. There is no intention or attempt by this Government to refuse to answer questions or to hold back answers to questions which are prepared to be tabled. Exactly the contrary is true, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Eighty-five per cent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his observations. Nothing has been said today that has not been said on a number of occasions in this House, including the references.

LABOUR ADJUSTMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-172, an Act to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act and to authorize certain payments in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think the motion should be amended to refer the matter to the Committee of the Whole.

We have an agreement that this Bill and the following be dealt with through all stages today, with one speaker per Party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm the understanding of the Government House Leader that we intend to deal expeditiously and with dispatch with these two items.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Ouellet, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved:

That Bill C-172, an Act to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act and to authorize certain payments in relation thereto, be read the second time and, with unanimous consent, referred to a committee of the whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-172 proposes certain amendments to the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act. This legislation, which was passed by Parliament many months ago, provided, as a last resort, financial aid to older workers affected by permanent lay-offs in designated industrial sectors or communities in Canada. The sectors in question could be designated either nationally, regionally or locally. Industries designated at the national level include textiles, clothing, footwear and leather. As the House is aware, these sectors are experiencing major economic problems as result of competition from imports and industrial restructuring. At the end of September, we had 2,080 active files under this program. Sixteen more communities and a number of other industries were also designated under the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program. At the present time, 321 people are receiving assistance under the program which comes under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act.

The amendments to Bill C-78 as proposed in Bill C-172 are the results of presentations made by Members on both sides of the House, by union representatives, especially the CSD, and by employers and private citizens.

I am happy today to be able to act on the representations I received. First of all, the proposed amendments will prevent involuntary deductions from survivor's pensions when benefits are calculated. Many widows and widowers were being treated unfairly under the present legislation, which was clearly not the intention of the legislator.

Second, the amendments proposed in Bill C-172 will also provide greater flexibility in eligibility criteria for workers less than fifty-four years of age, with many years of service, who will now be able to take advantage of their combined years of service in designated sectors. It was pointed out to us, more specifically, that it was unfair that someone who had worked for thirty years in the textile industry could be eligible for benefits while a neighbour with twenty years of experience in the textile industry and twenty years in the clothing industry, would not be eligible because he did not have thirty years of employment in the same sector. We are therefore introducing a remedy that will allow workers to combine their years of service in sectors designated for the purposes of this legislation.

Third, the amendments will resolve a problem of interpretation, owing to the different definitions of "lay off" in English and in French, by eliminating the word "involuntary" from the English version.

Fourth, the bill will provide for payment of benefits to qualified workers whose applications for certification to the Labour Adjustment Review Board were delayed for reasons beyond their control. There is always a possibility of administrative delay, and I think it would be unfair to blame such delays on the person who is supposed to receive these benefits. Therefore an anormaly in the Act will be corrected in order to deal fairly with potential, qualified recipients.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind Hon. Members just how important it is to adopt these amendments without delay. I thank all my colleagues on this side of the House as well as the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party for agreeing to adopt this Bill today because, as many of us know, Quebec's National Assembly amended its pension plan last June, making it possible for workers, among other things, to retire at age 60 with appropriate actuarial adjustments. This amendment will come into force on January 1, 1984. It will have dire consequences for current and future recipients of the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, should the legislation not be amended by that date, Quebec recipients between the ages of 60 and 65 would no longer be eligible for benefits as of January 1, 1984. That is why we have to take immediate action, and the problem stems from the wording of the existing legislation which provides, and I quote:

Benefits are not payable to a recipient, whether or not he has applied for a retirement pension under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

The legislation will therefore be amended to remedy that situation.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to understand why I am seeking the support of all Members of the House to ensure quick passage of the amendments to the Labour Adjustments Benefits Act. I am convinced that once these amendments are implemented, they will give us more leeway and widen eligibility for benefits provided under the legislation. The purpose of the Bill is to clarify and, in certain cases, strengthen the raison d'être of the Act which aims at easing the adjustment of older workers who have been laid off in some industries in designated communities.

In conclusion, I would like to thank a group of Quebec colleagues whose advice was a great help in drafting these amendments, particularly the Hon. Members for Saint-Hyacinthe, Lotbinière, Richmond, Shefford, Manicouagan, Richelieu, Portneuf, Frontenac and Montmagny-L'islet. I also want to thank the union representatives who made representations and submitted a well-researched brief to my Department. It enabled us to draft the amendments which we are introducing today and which will certainly be a definite advantage to Canadian workers eligible for those adjustment benefits.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The ten-minute question and answer period does not apply to a Minister moving a Bill. However, the Hon. Member can certainly seek unanimous consent to put a question if he wishes.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the question is very brief. I think the Minister knows what is coming. We want something on the record. I ask for unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, on page 7 of Bill C-172, Clause 12, there is reference to certain amounts. The last sentence reads:

—shall be paid to him out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Can the Minister confirm that that does not mean those funds will not turn up in the estimates? Those funds have to be the subject of estimates each year and we are concerned about not getting into a situation where they are not under the control of Parliament.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question. I understand it is indeed important to clarify this situation.

These funds have to be allocated through the estimates of the Department of Labour and they are. There is an item every year which covers these payments. The reason the Bill reads the way it does is to establish that indeed it is the Government of Canada which has paid for it.

One of the problems we are faced with every year is to predict the amount paid, because it depends on the number of workers who are eligible. Therefore we are putting in a general amount subject to debate during the estimates once a year, but this amount could be more or less, depending on the number of workers. This clause allows for payment where the prediction is not correct. Obviously it would be reported in the years following and Members of Parliament would have the chance once a year to discuss this matter and these expenditures during debate on the estimates.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise for a brief moment on behalf of the Conservative Party to say to the Minister and all those who brought the recommendations for these amendments to the Minister, as did those of us in the Official Opposition concerned about labour matters, that this is an example of co-operation between the Government and both Opposition Parties. It is an example of co-operation between the Government, Members of Parliament and those members of the trade union movement who on a constant basis are watching matters as they proceed and are continually bringing to us suggestions for amendments and improvements. I think all Members of Parliament greatly appreciate the work done within the trade union movement to keep us abreast of the required changes, the necessary adjustments in the various laws which are so important to the working people of our country.

Therefore, I say through you, Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that we support this Bill. We thank the Minister for having listened and having brought these amendments forward and trust they will indeed be helpful, as I think they will be. Again, we appreciate very much the work done by those members of the trade union movement who put their briefs together, spoke with us and brought these matters to our attention.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will be equally brief. The content of the Bill is supportable and welcome. We are particularly pleased that the Government has in fact taken these steps now and not delayed. We recognize the problems confronting many workers across the country, particularly in Quebec, as a result of changing of occupations and their being unable to qualify for the benefit periods.

It is good that if workers were laid-off during this period when the designation order is in effect, they would remain eligible for benefits if and after the designation order is lifted. The question of accumulation of time was causing people a great deal of difficulty.

● (1230)

There are times when people question whether or not we ever get along; I do not mean the Minister and I, but just generally in the House of Commons. I am forever trying to convince people that in fact in the House of Commons there is more done by co-operation and consent than they might realize. All that seems to be put forward in what they might see, hear or read is the conflict. On this occasion it is therefore good to be able to say that we want to support what the Government is doing.

[Translation]

In particular, I am thinking about the amendments for the benefit of Quebec workers through an adjustment to the Canada Pension Plan for survivors. Perhaps Quebec workers are faced with situations due to the changes made to the Quebec Pension Plan. There are numerous possibilities that workers would not get the pensions after a year.

[English]

We are pleased to have that occur and to get that adjustment made. It makes a great deal of sense. Without delaying the passage of the Bill, it has our complete and full support.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 5—

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. I have a few comments to make so as to reassure myself and some of my constituents who have been through those difficulties. Clause 5 provides for a new qualification rule, that is an aggregate of 30 years, plus 50 years of age. I would like the Minister to reassure me and tell me whether this provision will be retroactive for all applicants who were turned down in the past and who would now be eligible under the new provision, whenever the appropriate company has been designated as being eligible.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, I can confirm to the Hon. Member that indeed the clause concerning the 80 rule provides that applicants who could have been eligible when the legislation was adopted, and if the 80 rule had been in force, will be covered, and now that the Act is in force, they will henceforth eligible for benefits.

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, will they have to submit a new application?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, I think they would be well advised to do so, unless their application is pending, but to avoid any problem I would suggest to those workers that they submit an application as soon as possible.

Clause 5 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GARNISHMENT, ATTACHMENT AND PENSION DIVERSION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Pinard: We require the same consent as I required for the previous Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the House to proceed to all stages today in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is the arrangement entered into and it is agreed by our Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion will be as follows: Mr. MacGuigan, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moves:

That Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the purport of this Bill and has given his consent, as far as Her Majesty's prerogatives are affected, to the consideration by Parliament of the Bill, that Parliament may do therein as it thinks fit.

Most Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, will be aware of the controversy which has arisen over whether or not the wording of the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act includes Members of Parliament as well as the staff of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

[Translation]

Last September, the Seventh Small Claims Court of Ottawa-Carleton considered a case involving a member of the staff of the House of Commons. In its decision rendered in mid-October, the Court stated that the Act in question applies to the staff of the House of Commons. The amount due was determined last Monday and the employee concerned has appealed the decision of the Small Claims Court.

[English]

While I am satisfied that the appellate courts would uphold the lower court decision, the appeal process would likely be a lengthy one. Such a delay would not, in my view, be fair to spouses seeking to enforce family support orders, not to other types of creditors. For this reason I am proposing amendments which make it abundantly clear that Members of Parliament, from both the upper and lower Houses, and the staff of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament, are subject to garnishment under the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act. This will be achieved by creating a separate division to apply to the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

Once the Act has passed, the necessary regulations will go forward to the Governor in Council as soon as the Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate have indicated their approval of the regulations to me. This will clear the way for the regulations for the pension diversion portions of the Act which have been delayed pending clarification of Part I. It will clear the way for them to proceed and be proclaimed into force early in January, 1984.

I would just say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this is not, as is quite evident from the consent here this morning, a partisan matter. It is equally important, I think, to all of us in the House of Commons that we be seen not to be obstructing in any way legislation which was passed last year and in which we believed we had already yielded this ancient privilege. As a result of the delays which have occurred, litigants are in danger of being put to great expense in achieving what we thought had already been guaranteed by the law.

This is, therefore, a clarificatory piece of legislation. It may not be strictly necessary in terms of law. In fact, I do not believe it is; but certainly it is necessary in terms of fact so that Parliament will not be seen to be holding on in an unseemly way to privileges which it has already assured the public it has abandoned.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak very briefly to this Bill. I just wanted to say a couple of things with respect to the amendments which Members of our Party will, of course, support. As the Minister himself pointed out in September of this year, it has been an unedifying spectacle that the very important Parts II, III and IV of the Bill have not as yet been proclaimed.

The intention was at the time the Bill originally came before the House that the matter be put into effect immediately. Indeed, Members of our Party have been calling for this legislation for some considerable period of time. I recall in 1980 a former colleague from Leeds-Grenville, Mr. Tom Cossitt, was very active in asking for this legislation to be brought forward. It continued to be the case on the part of my colleague from Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who in fact raised this matter with the Minister in September of this year. He should be given some credit for really bringing this matter to the point where the Minister has, to his credit, brought forward the amending legislation. I am sure there will be no question as to the right to effect garnishee and other action of attachment with respect to Members and staff of the House of Commons, the Senate, and the Library of Parliament.

I will pose a specific question now and ask the Ministr during Committee of the Whole to comment on this aspect of the Bill. There is a unique provision, as I pointed out to the Minister earlier, on which he may wish to comment. Under clause 16(2) it is specifically provided that there shall be no execution against the House of Commons and the Senate in respect of a garnishment served on a Member of the House of Commons, a staff member of whomever, or the Senate. I would appreciate hearing the legal rationale for that particular provision.

The effect, as I would understand it, would be that if the House of Commons, for example, did not obey the garnishment order, it would not be possible for litigants to proceed to execution against the House of Commons and to receive the money that they would be entitled to under the judgment. I am sure the Minister has had an opportunity to obtain a legal opinion or advice with respect to that provision. I would be obliged, accordingly, if he would answer that point during the course of the Committee of the Whole.

In conclusion, all I can say is that we are in support of these amendments. We are very anxious that the rights apply, particularly in cases of those maintenance orders and orders for single parents that are very often difficult to enforce for a variety of reasons in our federal state. When these orders are extant and in fact involve public employees, or indeed Members of the House of Commons or the Senate, our Party believes that the same rights apply in the enforcement of such debts against all citizens of Canada. Hence, we have no difficulty with the relinquishment of what have been traditional rights or exemption from garnishment.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to this Bill on behalf of the New Democratic Party. As I understand Bill C-171, it is essentially a housekeeping measure. The amendments are proposed to tighten up the poor drafting of the original Bill, Bill C-38, which was passed on June 18, 1982. Although it has taken a year and a half to correct the vagueness of Bill C-38, we must commend the Government for recognizing this and acting upon it. We will support Bill C-171.

As the Minister said, some of the ambiguities in the present Bill were revealed in a recent court case. For the record, the case was Texaco Canada Limited versus Dagenais. It was a decision of the Small Claims Court in Ontario on October 12, 1983. This subsequent scrutiny of the Bill indicated that there was some doubt as to whether MPs and Senators would have been included in the original Bill as well as Parliament Hill employees. Clearly, the principle is that we should all be equal under the law. That is the motto of the Supreme Court of the United States and I believe it applies equally in Canada. Therefore, the lawmakers and employees on the Hill should not be above the law either.

There are three principles in the original Bill C-38 on which I would like to comment. The first principle is that Bill C-38 eliminated a form of privilege which is that the wages of the employees of the Crown were exempt from garnishment based on the historic concept of royal prerogative, which holds that since a court cannot move binding orders against the moneys and properties of Her Majesty, a garnishment order cannot be made against money paid by the Crown to an employee of the Crown. There was no just reason for these categories of people to be afforded special treatment. Personally, I had a case with one of my constituents in Vancouver who was trying to collect money from her former husband on a maintenance order. She could not garnishee his wages because he was an employee of the Crown. This was cleared up in the old Bill.

I suggest that we should acknowledge the support of the Public Service Alliance of Canada of Bill C-38. They acknowledged that federal employees should not be able to hide behind their debts.

I think we should also give credit to Parliament Hill employees who appreciate the clarifying aspects of Bill C-171. While they recognize that they should not have special status, I want to point out to the Minister that, on the other hand, they should not be subject to special handicaps or exemptions. While we do not want to give them the special privileges which are eliminated in this Bill, they do not have the equal privilege of collective bargaining and organizing. In other words, we do not treat the employees of Parliament Hill equally. If we are to apply the principle of having their wages subject to garnishment like the rest of the population, the principle equally applies that they should be allowed to collectively organize, receive decent salaries and be able to bargain for their working conditions. Let us be fair and apply the principles right across the board. I am sure the Minister would agree that the same principle of equality must apply.

The second principle in the original Bill corrected the unfairness to creditors. People should not be able to abdicate their financial responsibilities simply because they are Crown employees. I believe we all agree with that.

Third, the original Bill allowed the Government to divert pension benefits to comply with financial support orders. This provision is contained in Part II of Bill C-38 and has yet to come into effect. We urge the Government to fix a date of proclamation for the remaining elements of Bill C-38, Parts II to IV. I believe the Conservative Party spokesman, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), made reference to this. What is the Minister waiting for? Why does he not proclaim those particular sections?

We in the NDP are in full agreement with the exemption of Old Age Security and veteran war disability pensions from those diversion provisions as covered by Bill C-38.

In summary, we are glad to see the original legislation improved upon and the intent clarified before the end of the session. On a personal note, I just lost a rather large legal case which I have fought for three years all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. It took eight days in the trial division in British Columbia. I do not know whether the Minister will garnish my wages to collect his legal costs. Perhaps I might in fact be one of the first people to which this Bill applies. Perhaps I will have to appeal it, win against him in the appeal court and then garnishee his wages!

• (1250)

In conclusion, we on this side of the House support the speedy passage of this legislation. However, I remind the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) that if he is going to rely on the principle of equality, not only must Parliament Hill employees suffer the consequences of having their wages garnisheed and so on like anyone else, but they should be equally treated to some of the benefits of the general population, to wit, the right to collectively bargain.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blaker in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.

Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act

On Clause 1—Minister

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I have another point which I omitted to include in my concise remarks on second reading. The Minister will recall that I made reference to the proclamation of Parts II, III and IV of the original legislation. The Minister has had correspondence with the Hon. Member for Victoria, and with his permission I would like to read into the record the Minister's response, which in part reads as follows:

Parts II-IV of the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act have not been proclaimed because of the difficulty in designating "Ministers" to be responsible for pension or retiring allowances for Members of Parliament. This difficulty stemmed from the dispute over whether or not Part I of the Act applied to the Staff and Members of Parliament. With passage of the amendments to Part I, the appropriate "Ministers", acceptable to the House of Commons and the Senate, could then be designated for Parts II-IV.

As the regulations, designation of Ministers and coming-into-force order must be approved by the Governor-in- Council, then registered in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and gazetted, the process may take some six weeks, without taking into account the Christmas holiday period. I have instructed my officials to aim for January 1, 1984 as a proclamation date, which would then be the effective date for the amendments and Parts II-IV together.

I would appreciate having the confirmation of the Minister that it is his intention and the Government's intention to move with the proclamation on the remaining parts of the original Bill as soon as possible, conceivably on January 1, 1984.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, indeed I can confirm what I stated in that letter to the Hon. Member's colleague. We want to proceed as rapidly as possible with this implementing legislation. We will proclaim all the parts at the same time. If we can manage the January 1 date, we will do that; certainly it will be as soon as possible after that time.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, we slipped by Clause 5 when I think both the Hon. Member and I were trying to find out to which clause his earlier question pertained.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, it pertains to Clause 5.

Mr. MacGuigan: If we could revert to Clause 5, I would be pleased to answer his question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to revert to Clause 5?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 5—

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member raised a question about why there was provision that execution should not issue on a judgment given against the Senate, the House of Commons or Library of Parliament in garnishment proceedings permitted by this Act. As Hon. Members will appreciate, the debts which are owing here to members that might be attached are being paid by one of those bodies, either the House of Commons, the Senate or the Library of Parliament. I think it would involve us all in a great deal of difficulty if the House of Commons, because of some bureaucratic delay, were a day late in sending out the required payment under the garnishment order.

For example, if someone had a sheriff's order to start seizing the buses on which Hon. Members travel or something of that kind because of a private litigant's dispute, we can be assured that in this form the legislation will be taken at face value and implemented bona fides, in good faith, by all the elements of Parliament. It will not be necessary for execution to issue in order to make sure that that happens. This clause was also contained in the original Bill which we passed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, that is a point on which I was not clear. In his last sentence the Minister said that this was contained in the previous provisions of the Bill. It may have escaped my notice, but my impression, on looking at the legislation before, was that this provision was unique and that the same provision did not apply with respect to other departments of Government or other employees of Government. If I am not mistaken—and I stand to be corrected because I am anxious to be co-operative today—the provision only extends to the House of Commons and the Senate. I know the dangers of having buses seized; it would cause serious problems for some Hon. Members! I walk to my office, so it would not bother me. There should be some better explanation. If there is some reason at law, some technical reason or tradition as to why the House of Commons should be exempt, I would be interested in that information. If he could point out what clause in the original Bill contained a similar provision, at least there would be unanimity with respect to dealing with all Government departments. He may have that information in his possession at the moment.

Mr. MacGuigan: I can tell the Hon. Member that it is Section 18 of the legislation we passed last year which contains the same provision.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there was an agreement among House Leaders that if we were to reach the stage of adopting the two Bills we have just adopted through all stages, we would call it five o'clock. However, I understand that my hon. colleague, who is unusually co-operative today, would like that to be done without prejudice to the right of the Official Opposition to give notice of the motion to be debated on Monday before it is really five o'clock. Certainly we do not object to that. Also we understand that it is without prejudice to their right to give notice of any objection to any item in the Supplementary Estimates before it is really five o'clock.

I do not know whether I have covered all the concerns of the Hon. Member but certainly, Mr. Speaker, if you call it five o'clock now, we will agree without prejudice to what I have just said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am the Hon. Member from co-operative Saskatoon West, as usual.

Mr. Evans: At least we know the riding is co-operative.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I did not want some technicality to prevent us from filing notices of objections with respect to the Estimates which will be voted on next week. Accordingly, I appreciate that clarification. I understand that there may be a reasonable number of objections which are now in the process of scrutiny and preparation, and that we will retain the ability to file not only the content of our Opposition motion but, indeed, the notices of objections before five o'clock Eastern Standard Time, Canada.

Mr. Waddell: On behalf of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to co-operate in calling it five o'clock for many reasons. One, of course, is that we do have many Members from British Columbia who are busily preparing for the impending B.C. Lions victory by two touchdowns over the Toronto Argonauts!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Subject to the conditions mentioned by the Hon. Member, the President of the Privy Council and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, is it the pleasure of the House that I call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Accordingly, I extend best wishes for a pleasant weekend. It being five o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eleven o'clock Monday morning.

At 1.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BLENKARN—SUGGESTED IRREGULARITY IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)—RULING BY MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could deal with a point of order which was raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on November 17. The Hon. Member raised a point of order with regard to procedural acceptability of Vote 6b under Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984. I was unable to deal with this matter earlier because, as Hon. Members will recall, Supplementary Estimates (B) were referred to committees on November 3, 1983 and were not before the House.

As has been noted before, however, it is helpful to the Chair that there be adequate time to study points of order on the Estimates and the Chair appreciated the courtesy of the Hon. Member in raising the matter when he did. The House will also recall that the Chair wished to extend an opportunity to Hon. Members to rebut or add to the procedural argument. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), on November 24, did make a further contribution. I wish to express my thanks to both Hon. Members who were most helpful to the Chair when considering this important matter.

In presenting his case, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South referred to Section 29 of the Canada Post Corporation Act. He submitted that no authority is given to the Government to seek an appropriation other than "an appropriation to pay losses" and that therefore no legislative authority exists for the appropriation expressed in Vote 6b.

• (1110)

In support of this submission the Hon. Member quotes from the Chair's decision of June 12, 1981, at page 10546 of Debates, stating, in part:

—the Government may not, by the use of an Appropriation Act, obtain authority which it does not already have under existing legislation.

I have examined both the Supplementary Estimates (B) and the relevant legislation with respect to the Hon. Member's point of order. The Canada Post Corporation Act states, in part, in Subsection 29(1):

Where at any time the available revenues of the Corporation are insufficient to pay all the operating and income charges of the Corporation as and when due . . . The Minister of Finance may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, place at the disposal of the Corporation such amounts as may be required . . . to meet all such charges.

Subsection 29(2) provides a mechanism for reimbursement of the Treasury for such sums and Subsection 29(3) provides as follows:

Where the annual revenues . . . are insufficient for the purposes of Subsection (2) the Minister shall cause the amount of the insufficiency to be included, in the form of a deficit appropriation item, in the next Appropriation Act laid before Parliament thereafter.

Hon. Members will note that the Act refers to "operating and income charges" which the annual revenues are not adequate to cover.

I would now invite the attention of Hon. Members to Vote 6b at pages 32 and 33 of the Supplementary Estimates (B) in which the "Objects of Expenditure" is described as being for "operating" the Corporation. Such a payment was specifically envisaged under Section 29 of the Act.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South suggested in his submission that the Act did not give the Government the authority to make such a payment because it refers to "activities that have nothing to do with losses". However, the relevant section of the enabling legislation makes no mention of losses but deals only with the insufficiency of revenues to cover operating and income charges. Furthermore, Hon. Members will find that a payment to cover similar operating expenditures was made to the Canada Post Corporation under Consumer and Corporate Affairs Vote 6c in the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1982-83.

In the opinion of the Chair, the Government is seeking to make a payment which is specifically provided for in the Act, and in presenting such an appropriation the Government is not seeking to enlarge its legislative authority. I therefore find that the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is not well taken and that Consumer and Corporate Affairs Vote 6b is procedurally in order.

In closing, I again wish to express my gratitude to both Members for their valuable assistance.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the Supply Bill. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the Supply Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano) moved:

That this House agrees without reservation with the prediction of the Prime Minister made on August 13, 1969, in a nationally televised press conference when he said, "We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control" and calls upon the Government to initiate policies which would avoid the Prime Minister's prediction.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is an extremely serious one. It is really at the heart of our well being and that of our children tomorrow. It has to do with the last 14 years of extravagant and wasteful spending after the warnings given to the nation back in 1968-69 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Before I belonged to a political party, I was most impressed with the words of the Prime Minister at that time. The words that really got to me are these, and I quote as follows:

This process of making choices among the myriad of claims and demands on our resources in the context of business enterprise and Government is often referred to as planning and priorities. It is not really very different than the process that each of us in our own lives, whether as individuals or as family units, have to go through. If an individual fails to plan in a coherent way he will soon find that he has run out of resources and has left many urgent things undone. He may find that his children's education is neglected or the medical bills are left unpaid because he has taken an expensive holiday or purchased a red convertible.

● (1115)

Governments are really no different than individuals in this respect and they too must engage in solid planning and to ensure that their scarce resources are being applied to the most urgent and useful purposes.

He went on to say, Mr. Speaker:

Perhaps the most startling fact to emerge from this review is that almost without exception this decade has been characterized by yearly budgetary deficits exceeding $4 billion in total and requiring upwards of $300 million per annum to service.

And he is speaking of the decade of the 1960s. It is easy to see from the sincerity and wisdom of those remarks back on August 13, 1969 that the Prime Minister was as aware then as some of us in this House are today of the seriousness of the behaviour of the Liberal Government over the last 14 years. Back in 1968-69, in the budget address, Mr. Edgar Benson said on October 22, 1968:

We intend to continue severe restraint upon those direct expenditure programs under the Government's control, eliminating what is obsolete, and permitting only the degree of growth that is essential.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, spending on a national accounts basis was $12.6 billion. The annual deficit was $491 million and net debt at the start of that fiscal year was $17.7 billion. On August 13, 1969 the Prime Minister said to the nation on a television broadcast, Mr. Speaker—which is the object of our motion today—and I quote:

We'd be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control.

That year our spending on a national accounts basis was $13.8 billion, and the Prime Minister bragged about that surplus of $493 million. The net debt was at $18 billion. That is the starting point of our debate today.

In 1970-71, at the Liberal policy convention on November 20, 1970, the same Prime Minister said:

You know, anyone can say, "why don't you do more?" The answer is the same answer as always, there are competing claims on the economy.

In the meantime our spending had gone up $2 billion in that one year. There was no longer a surplus but a deficit of $372 million, and the net debt had slightly tapered down from $18 billion to $17.6 billion. Following that was the Benson budget speech of 1971-72, in which Mr. Benson said:

We have continuously appealed to Canadian governments, business and the labour movement to be modest in their demands and not demand more from the economy than is coming to them in increased productivity.

Every year I have been in this House, for the past nine and one half years, Sir, we have heard that the only way out of the spending and inflation dilemma is through improved national productivity. We were then still spending $18 billion. We then had doubled our annual deficit to $700 million and our net debt was up to $18 billion.

The year 1971-72, was the year of "a buck is a buck is a buck", that great promise of equity and distribution and equality for all. The Hon. John Turner in his budget address of 1972-73, said:

The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply don't have the resources. There are limits to the scope of fiscal policy. There are limits to stimulus and readjustment.

We have now gone up $2.8 billion in spending. We have now moved from a $700 million to almost a $1 billion annual deficit, and our net debt has moved up $800 million.

● (1120)

Then we jump to 1973-74. We had the same Mr. Turner as Minister of Finance, and in his budget address of November 18, 1974, he said:

we must do all that we can in these circumstances to restrain the growth of governmental expenditures

We have sought and shall continued to seek to cut out waste, to place limits on the growth of the public service and to approve only the most essential new programs.

We have now moved from $20.8 billion Government spending to $30.8 billion in two years. We moved from a $1 billion deficit to a $1.7 billion deficit and our net debt had moved from $18.8 billion to $21.2 billion. The rhetoric was there, Mr. Speaker. They knew exactly what was needed if this nation was to remain healthy and inflation did not reach excessive amounts which would harm the well-being of the elderly, the sick and the youth emerging from our educational system. I can remember Mr. Turner standing in the House and saying that the thing he was proudest of was the million jobs he created as Minister of Finance. Where are those jobs, Mr. Speaker? As we stand here today we have two million unemployed. Where are those jobs from "old blue eyes" which started us on this spending spiral?

Then we move into Mr. Macdonald's period of budgetary extravagances; he moved our annual deficit from $6 billion to $10.8 billion. Then we got that gem of them all, Mr. MacEachen. He moved us from a deficit of $11.5 billion to $13.6 billion, and by the time we got to 1982-83 we had gone to a $24.6 billion deficit. Throughout this period of time we heard the rhetoric of these Ministers of Finance and the Prime Minister. They knew exactly what had to be done to manage the country's economy for the wellbeing of the people. But nowhere were they able to deliver what they said they would deliver. Instead we have the situation where today this institution is no longer relevant to two-thirds of the people in Canada because they can no longer trust us as politicians. They can no longer accept the political lies delivered over the past 14 years by this Government.

We come now to 1978-79. We had another Minister of Finance, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, who followed the Hon. Donald Macdonald. In his budget address of November 16, 1978, he said:

> There can be no weakening in our determination to keep expenditures under tight control.

By that time, Mr. Speaker, spending on a national accounts basis was at $43.9 billion, the deficit was $12.2 billion and the net debt was $44.9 billion. Again we see the evolution of political rhetoric in a direction exactly opposite to that of the reality of extravagance and irresponsible management of the public tax resource.

• (1125)

On January 12, 1980, the Prime Minister said: "We will hold the line of Government expenditure growth to under the rate of the Gross National Product". That was the first time we heard about this extravagant spending being now related to Gross National Product. He told the nation: "The deficit will be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion. Any new expenditure programs to meet evolving needs and requirements of Canadians will be financed by reallocating existing expenditures or by increases in revenues. We will not add to the deficit by adding new programs." At that time spending on a national accounts basis was at $54.4 billion, the annual deficit was $11.48 billion, going down slightly through the year of Mr. Chrétien, and the net debt was $57 billion.

In Mr. MacEachen's period, spending rose to $89.5 billion when he was finally tossed out. The annual debt doubled from $12.6 billion to $25.25 billion and the net debt rose from $68.5 billion to $95 billion. Mr. MacEachen was the man who belittled the previous Minister of Finance in the Clark Government, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He belittled him time after time in the House by saying he would never bring down a budget that would put 18 cents a gallon tax on gasoline. In this period of time there was the other massive mistruth or lie and 18 cents a gallon soon became 18 cents a litre under the next Government. Eighteen cents a gallon became 77 cents a gallon after belittling 18 cents.

It comes down to 15 years of rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, all of it misleading. The Liberal Government has known all through the last decade and a half the consequences of profligate spending and management of the federal tax resource. One can legitimately conclude that its attack on the free enterprise market economy has been deliberate. It has said one thing in support of it, it has espoused the rules of management which you need to espouse to remain healthy as a nation, and it has done exactly the opposite. The Government knew that if the nation continued to pay ourselves more than the value of what we produced we would create the high unemployment that we have today. Any thinking, average educated person knew that that was coming.

Did this so-called Liberal Government spend money advocating the need to reduce our anticipation levels? No, sir, they did not. That was probably the one thing we had to do above all others. We had to reduce the anticipation level of the nation as we came out of a period of affluence. Did the Government spend money advocating the need to improve our productivity? I do not remember seeing any advertisements in that regard. I heard a lot of talk in the House about the fact that if we did not improve our productivity we would not be able to reduce inflation. The Prime Minister used to tell us that time and time again. Instead of doing just those two things with the information through the advertising dollars that it had the power to spend, what did it do? The Government launched into an extravaganza of telling us the virtues of nationalization and the virtues of VIA Rail, that Crown corporation which has to draw $50 from the Consolidated Revenue Fund for every ticket it sells. There is no bottom line management there at all. They have put full and half page ads in the paper extolling the virtues of Canadair. Canadair is the Crown corporation which just had to write off $1.4 billion.

Mr. Nielsen: But it is ours.

Mr. Huntington: They advertise it is ours. They advertise the virtues of our Petrocan. The national energy policy stopped, dead in the water, all of the small businesses, the steel fabricators and all of the feeder industries that go into what was a vibrant exploration industry for energy in western Canada. Look at the advertising and the millions of dollars that the Liberal Government can find to tell us that Petro-Canada is ours. We can see what has happened to well drilling in the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. While the Government will tell us about PIP grants and other programs, it has delivered a degree of intervention over the economy such that only those things which the bureaucrats and politicians in Ottawa want to go ahead will proceed. The innovation, exploration and risk-taking ability of the country has gone.

• (1130)

Just recently the Government spent $220,000 on a beautiful book extolling the virtues of our Constitution. But that legislation has moved us from the rule of law into some kind of a Napoleonic code whereby the rights we now have are the rights that are stated and not those unstated rights which we had under the former Constitution.

Let us examine the Supplementary Estimates (B) during this last supply period to see the increase in spending on information, advertising and advocacy by the Liberal Government throughout the period of six and five which was imposed on Crown employees and other sectors of the nation. During that period when everyone else was to hunker down in order to reduce the effects of inflation on our lives and our country, the Government went ahead with the most lavish and outlandish expenditure on advertising, advocacy and information that one could imagine.

During the six and five period in the last two years, according to information taken directly from the Supplementary Estimates (B), the Economic Development Department moved its advertising expenditure from $2,000 through to $575,000. That is a 28,000 per cent increase. The budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for advertising and advocacy went from $1.5 million to $4 million. That is a 161 per cent increase. The information expenditure for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had a 27 per cent increase while advertising had an 11 per cent increase. Where is the six and five program for this kind of expenditure? The Department of Labour saw an increase of 75 per cent in its expenditures for advertising and information.

There was a 35 per cent increase in this area for the Department of National Revenue. Why does that Department not tell the people of Canada that it now goes straight into their bank accounts without giving them the courtesy of a notice? Why has it not spent money on advertising that or advertising changes in interpretation bulletins and other matters? Instead, it does so by stealth. It will go into bank accounts before it tells owners.

For Science and Technology, the increase was 558 per cent. That sounds like a large increase, but the budget only moved from $73,000 to $481,000 although this is the most important area of our lives in Canada today. But Science and Technology has absolutely no priority at all.

The advertising and information budget for the Department of the Environment increased by 50 per cent. The increase for Communications was 126 per cent and Justice had an increase of 666 per cent. This all occurred during the six and five era. So much for saying one thing and doing another.

When one considers the Main Estimates and the Supplementary Estimates, there has been an increase in spending of 14 per cent through this six and five period. On August 13, 1969 the Prime Minister said:

> We could not tolerate a 14 per cent increase in federal expenditures. If allowed to grow unchecked, eventually our spending would become so scattered that the real needs of our society would be missed.

That is what he said. He continued:

> And to spend vast sums on welfare, education and other programs while allowing inflation to continue would merely place hundreds of thousands of Canadians on a treadmill from which they could not escape.

We are on that treadmill today. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is in the House. She is in a struggle with some Provinces that are on this treadmill and do not know how to budget their affairs. That is what the Government has delivered as a result of saying one thing and doing exactly the opposite.

In March, 1976 the Auditor General's Report warned that if the Government continued to spend at its current rate, the nation would be out of control. He told us that it was out of control and spoke of the critically serious situation we faced in this country. But nothing has happened since that warning. The Government has continued its reckless spending and slothful, wasteful habits. We have not addressed old programs as the Prime Minister said we should. The old programs have just become a base upon which incremental increases are added.

It is obvious that between the bureaucracy and those elected to govern nothing will happen in this area unless it takes place in the House. The House has put a group of 20 of its Members to work in the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure and the reorganization of rules in the House. Those of us on that Committee saw a need to move the influence of the House back into a stronger position over the habits of the bureaucracy and Governments in power. This problem will not be addressed until the House addresses it and until elected Members within it undertake the responsibility and recognize the seriousness of the extravaganza of the last 14 years to begin to bring it back under control.

We are dealing with human nature and the House is full of that emotion. However, I say that if we do not begin now to apply ourselves to a corrective pattern over the slothful extravagance of expenditure, we are doing a total disservice to our children and those who follow. We are threatening the survival of this democratic system and we are putting their freedom on the platter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Huntington: I appreciate the courtesy of the House very much. I will not take too long.

Sixty-five per cent of the people in this country now consider this institution to be irrelevant. Today we were handed the Votes and Proceedings for Friday, November 25, with Ways and Means motions and amendments to the Income Tax Act. It comprises some 226 pages. It could be that this is just a compilation of all the Ways and Means motions that have been on the Order Paper, but nobody in the House today knows or comprehends what is in that volume. I use this as an example of taxation without representation. We, as Members of the House from all Parties and all stripes—it does not matter from where—somehow fail the people who elected us when we allow this rate of expenditure to continue.

If we had had a gold standard form of monetary system back in 1969, our spending today in terms of constant dollars would have moved from $15 billion to $26 billion. This treadmill which the Prime Minister warned us about in August of 1969 would not exist today. It would not have been half as complicated for Canadians to understand the fundamentals of what we are talking about here today. Political rhetoric is meaningless to the people of Canada as a result of the past 14 years of hearing the Government saying one thing and allowing something else to happen.

My plea to the House today is that rather than continuing to continue to reject the ten reports of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, it should somehow force the Government to allow those reports to come in for full debate and inquiry in order to move more influence and strength into the House so that we as elected Members can say we did our part; that the House of Commons did its part in trying to bring a system that is truly out of control back under control. I suppose the blame for this is at the root of human nature but somehow the irresponsibility of the Government over the past 14 years is a root cause for the two million unemployed today.

Before they stand and say this is worldwide—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: Let me say that no country in the world had a better opportunity than Canada. We had the chance to be energy self-sufficient within five years. We had the chance to build pipelines. We had the chance to build a pipeline from Prudhoe Bay across our land to deliver energy into the mid-western United States, but that opportunity was wasted absolutely. No, Sir, the socialists would not allow that to happen. We had the opportunity to put infrastructures in place and phase them in so that in becoming energy self-sufficient we could deliver ourselves to a condition of health and wealth and improve the sharing of that health and wealth with others in the world. But no, Sir, that was denied to us. We have been mismanaged and our opportunities have been blown by this Liberal Government.

My plea to Members in all Parties is to do something about this condition. I think the opportunity to do something will be found in report No. 7 which is lying buried and smothered by this Liberal Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any comments or questions?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the motion before us presented by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is quoted a remark made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1969. Contrary to what is implied in the motion, this Government has in fact since that date implemented a whole range of policies to improve the management and control of its expenditures.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I want to give some concrete examples of this. For that purpose, I want to discuss first the Government's policy on its spending. The Government's white paper of October 14, 1975, contained the following statement of policy:

> The federal Government shares the view that the trend of total spending by all Governments should not rise more quickly than the trend of the Gross National Product.

Ceilings on total outlays in the ensuing years have been established in general accordance with this statement. The record of expenditures itself reflects the general success of the Government in holding the growth rate of total outlays below the rate of growth of the Gross National Product. Although the recession has understandably resulted in expenditure growth in excess of Gross National Product growth for the last two years, this principle outlined in 1975 continues to govern the determination of our over-all, multi-year expenditure plan. Of course, as I have said, the Government's expenditures in the past two years have gone up to offset the effects of the recent recession by providing further resources for direct job-creation, supporting investment by the private sector, the Government's own Special Recovery Projects, and more support for housing, all to create more jobs as well as protecting the unemployed through more expenditures on programs like unemployment insurance.

Last April the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) confirmed the commitment of the Government to the principle that the growth rate of total outlays should be in line with the rate of growth of the Gross National Product. He said:

> This commitment was met until the recession last year. I am reaffirming this commitment tonight. The fiscal plan I will be tabling with this budget shows that total outlays as a share of GNP will fall steadily from this year to 1986-1987. By that year, federal spending will be virtually the same size relative to the economy as in 1981-1982, before the worst of the recession. To achieve this outcome will demand continuing diligence in restraining expenditure growth.

One year after the announcement in 1975 of its policy on over-all expenditures, the Government further made manifest its intent to improve the management and control of its expenditures, and of Government more broadly, for that matter, by establishing the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, the Lambert Commission.

The terms of reference by the Commission as set out by the Government clearly reflect its concerns. These terms referred to unprecedented demands placed on government by the growth requested by the public in its responsibilities and programs, a desire to ensure efficiency and probity in the Public Service of Canada, a serious concern about the adequacy of financial administration in government for establishing effective control over, and accountability for, public funds, and the need to use resources effectively, avoid waste and increase productivity in Government.

Even before the Commission began its deliberations and up until the present, the Government has been taking a range of steps to respond to these concerns and thereby strengthen management and accountability throughout Government. I would like at this time to touch briefly on some of the major initiatives in the last six or seven years.

In conjunction with, and in support of, the general policy to hold spending generally in line with the rate of growth of the GNP, the growth in the size of the Public Service has been tightly constrained. Growth in person-years under Treasury Board control has been explicitly limited as a matter of policy to no more than 1 per cent annually in the last several years and, despite heavy pressures on government programs, the size of the Public Service under Treasury Board control is almost the same today as it was in 1976-1977.

There has been the introduction of the Policy and Expenditure Management System, the envelope system. This was another major step forward. It provides an expenditure management framework that sets multi-year levels for both total outlays and for various envelopes or policy sectors. It establishes policy committees within cabinet to undertake policy development and decision making within the discipline of the envelope system. While the previous Conservative Government introduced key portions of this system, the current Government has provided its consolidation and final implementation. I would also remind Hon. Members that the key developmental work on the envelope system was undertaken before the previous Conservative Government was in office.

A key elaboration of PEMS, another way of describing the envelope system, has been the introduction by the Treasury Board of the Multi-year Operational Planning System. This system is aimed at fostering more integrated resource planning, budgeting and management throughout the Government. Two key concepts, budgeting to results and budgeting for management, underlie the Multi-Year Operational Plans submitted to the Treasury Board. The first concept is designed to facilitate practical but systematic budgetary analysis based on concrete program outputs and inputs. The second is aimed at providing a clear understanding throughout the Government of the responsibilities of Public Service managers and how these responsibilities translate into budgetary requirements.

The office of the Comptroller General, created in 1978 in response to a central recommendation of the Lambert Commission, assists in the establishment of sound management practices in the federal Government by developing policies and standards and by promoting and monitoring improvements in financial and operational management. Over the last four years 30 or so key departments have participated in one of the Comptroller General's key initiatives called Improvement in Management Practices and Controls, or IMPAC, which is directed at the internal management process of individual departments. IMPAC has resulted in the establishment of action plans for over 100 major projects to improve organization, planning, internal and external reporting, automation, program delivery procedures, audit and program evaluation. Almost 80 per cent of the work on these projects has now been completed, and there is clear evidence of the ongoing yields that are the result. The IMPAC program has identified a total of more than $250 million in annual recurring benefits, of which more than $122 million in annual recurring savings have already been realized.

Substantial progress has been made in implementing the revised form of the Estimates, extending significantly the information made available to Parliament. The Government now presents in the form of Part I a summary of its spending plans in straightforward language and numbers. I am sure the Hon. Member for Capilano will recall his own role with respect to the creation of this document. In the Part III volumes detailed information is being made available on the individual programs in each Department and agency with the express intention of improving the accountability to Parliament by the Government. All of these major initiatives, along with numerous others, have been in the spirit of the recommendations of the Lambert Commission and have contributed to a new framework for management in the Public Service, one which is comprehensive and coherent, yet is also flexible and adaptable and which facilitates accountability.

I would now like to say something about the nature of the Government's current expenditure plan, using it to illustrate the key forces at play in trying to maintain over-all expenditures roughly constant in relation to GNP over the longer term, while responding as effectively and as efficiently as possible to the very real needs of the people of this country.

First, I would like to review briefly the important role in total spending played by statutory expenditure items and other programs providing automatic stabilizers designed to offer Canadians some measure of social and economic shelter in turbulent economic times. Second, I want to comment on that relatively small portion of total spending attributable to the operating costs of all Government Departments.

As the Minister of Finance has indicated, the worst of the very difficult economic climate is behind us. Canadians are regaining their confidence, growth is resuming, inflation is down dramatically, as are interest rates. Unemployment has also decreased but remains distressingly high. Job creation, therefore, continues to be a major Government priority.

The 1983-84 expenditure plan calls for total spending of $90.7 billion, an increase of 12.7 per cent or $10.2 billion over 1982-83. Of this increase, a little over $1 billion is attributable to the rise in public debt charges, almost $1 billion to increased defence costs and over $1.5 billion is directly due to new spending initiatives announced in the budget, including over $500 million for the Special Recovery Capital Projects which are aimed at encouraging and facilitating economic recovery in Canada.

Of the remaining spending increase of about $6.8 billion spread over hundreds of Government activities, fully one-half is entirely due to increases in only four major programs—Government contributions to unemployment insurance, the Old Age Security, the guaranteed income supplement and spouse's allowances programs, and payments to the Provinces under the Established Programs Financing, that is to say, post-secondary education, medicare and the Canada Assistance Plan.

These programs are, of course, the core of our social and economic security system. They provide enhanced and extended benefits to the unemployed throughout Canada, particularly in the regions hardest hit by the recession. They offer basic income support to the aged, particularly those with lower incomes. They support the financing of at least 50 per cent of the cost of hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care, post-secondary education and social assistance payments, welfare services, child support services such as foster care and daycare, and a broad range of other family and social support services.

I have highlighted these large elements in our expenditure plan because of the special importance such programs take on the tough economic times as automatic stabilizers against some of the worst effects of a recession and the gradual, fragile recovery period we have just entered.

I do not think we should overestimate the scope for changing some of our most basic programs since what Government does reflects society's views of its goals and how Government can assist in achieving them. We must, after all, face some fairly definite facts. For example, there are historic costs associated with the attainment of interprovincial and inter-regional equity in Canada. There are also the costs of achieving a standard of interpersonal equity in Canada.

Successive generations have shared a view of social equity and have succeeded in having it reflected in laws which for many people are tantamount to being the social as well as the legal definition of what it means to be Canadian. While we may consider changing some of those laws, I doubt that Canadians would want us to put at risk fundamental values and goals in pursuit of arbitrary approaches to limiting Government spending.

Of course, in what I have said I have not intended to imply that there is no room at all for streamlining and repriorizing federal activities, and consequently spending, while still effectively meeting the demands on Government posed in a changing environment. I believe we have demonstrated the ability, through processes like the envelope system, to make increasingly tough decisions about programs and policy trade-offs. For example, in his economic statement in the House of Commons last fall, the Minister of Finance cited the reallocation of $1.1 billion from existing programs to new ones, primarily to stimulate job creation at a time of unacceptably high levels of unemployment. However, I must add that this reallocation did not reflect a judgment that this money was being wasted in its previous application, but rather a judgment of priorities.

In the crucible of difficult economic times, it is a transfer of Government support from some very worthy purposes to others which are currently more urgent. However, as I have pointed out, and as I will illustrate further in a few minutes, the room we have to do this, without making fundamental changes in the transfer programs for which the largest portion of federal expenditures are made, is much more limited than most people realize.

One of the major challenges to all Canadians is the need to improve the productivity and competitiveness of our economy. Of course, achieving productivity gains across all sectors of the national economy is beyond the single-handed ability of the federal Government. It requires a co-operative and joint effort by business, labour and Government—in short, by all Canadians.

However, there are ways in which the Government can act and is acting concurrently and supportively. One way is to demonstrate that we intend to and can enhance the productivity of the Government's own operations. As I indicated when I tabled the current year's Main Estimates, as President of the Treasury Board I have set as a major priority continuing this Government's policy of improving the federal Government's management and the efficiency and effectiveness of its programs.

Perhaps I should clarify my definitions of efficiency and effectiveness in Government. Efficiency refers to the way we manage our resources in order to minimize the cost of delivery of Government programs. Effectiveness, on the other hand, refers to the range and the quality of the services that Government delivers to the Canadian people, as well as the extent to which these services meet the objectives expected of them.

As we seek to improve the efficiency of Government as I have defined this concept, it is important to understand the scale of the Government costs involved, since one frequently has the impression of a misinformed, exaggerated view on the part of some that somehow the bulk of the $90 billion federal budget is being squandered on Public Service salaries and perks. The truth of the matter is, of course, that about three-quarters, or about $68 billion of the $90 billion, consists of payments we make to Provinces, businesses, groups and individuals in Canada, as well as for external aid purposes, and from which the recipients benefit directly. The actual cost of developing, administering and delivering these programs is of the order of $12 billion for all Departments and agencies, leaving aside the $8 billion for national defence and the $2 billion for capital projects. Of this $12 billion, about $8 billion is for wages, salaries and employee benefits.

Therefore, while I am confident the federal Government can demonstrate commitment to obtaining efficiencies in administration, I must stress that any such administrative savings obviously will not produce any drastic reductions in the deficit, nor in the size and role of government.

When every Canadian shares a role with every other Canadian in making our national economy more competitively productive, it becomes important for government administration to establish and maintain a high standard of efficient and effective operations. The Government has in the recent past taken a number of steps further to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of its operations, initiatives such as IMPAC and the multi-year operational planning process that I have already mentioned.

These kinds of initiatives seek to compensate for the multiple goals often found in the public sector and the lack of an automatic, profit-based bottom line as is available in the private sector, by emphasizing the need for a formal and clear definition and articulation of the results which each program of the Government is expected to achieve. They also involve the development of systems and procedures to allow for measurement of the extent to which the results promised are in fact realized.

● (1200)

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I think the two aspects of our current expenditure plan which I have touched upon illustrate clearly the forces and the constraints within which expenditure and its management must proceed. However, there is no doubt in my mind that a strong framework for controlling expenditures and managing within these constraints has been put into place.

The Auditor General, who is often critical of aspects of government management, has, I think, recognized improvement in the Government's management of its expenditures, because in his last report he said:

I identify the gradual but unmistakable emergence of a new determination in Government and in Parliament toward improved management and more stringent accountability.

He went on to say:

—the political will is now present, and a number of senior managers in the Public Service are responding with a degree of firmness and courage that has not been seen for some time.

Finally, he said:

—I sense a new attitude with respect to improved financial control and a renewed interest in accountability.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the words of the Auditor General help to confirm why the House should reject the motion which is before it. Contrary to the suggestion made by the Hon. Member who presented the motion, we have been working toward progress in the Government's management of its expenditures. We have been making progress and we will continue to do so in the interests of the Canadian people and in the interests of the sound management of our economy. Again, for that reason I urge the rejection of this motion.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) a question. At the beginning of his speech, he spoke quite correctly about the tremendous amount of work that has been done within the bureaucracy and within the Treasury Board in terms of the Comptroller General's progress toward putting in place internal audit and evaluation systems. He spoke quite correctly in terms of the new form of the Estimates as being a reorganization of information for better disclosure. He is aware, however, of the 1976 warning by the Auditor General. At that time spending was $40 billion; today it is $100 billion. The deficit and spending as a percentage of the GNP has risen from 21 per cent to 25.7 per cent in 1983-84. Something is basically wrong.

The missing equation can be found within report No. 7 of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. Why does the Government continue to sit on that report? Why does it not approve it and restructure the committee system so that the work being done by the Comptroller General can finally get to the House and its proper disclosure and exposure can take place? Why does the Government continue to refuse to allow parliamentary participation in the whole matter of accountability to come to pass?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and I share a similar desire to improve the process. I was pleased to recognize the work of my hon. friend on the new form of the Estimates. I think we have made progress with the interim rules as well as with the new form of the Estimates. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) is present in the Chamber and I would ask him to bring my hon. friend's comments regarding this report to the attention of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) so that, in consultation with House Leaders, this item can be raised with a view to seeing when it might be brought forward for discussion.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The President of the Treasury Board has spoken glowingly of the Government's efforts in terms of productivity. Why, then, has he refused to acknowledge or do anything about the reports of the Auditor General from 1979, 1980, 1981 and 1982 which dealt with the lack of, and want for, productivity within the Public Service?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I disagree with my hon. friend's contention that we have ignored the Auditor General's Reports. Evidence of this is contained within the Auditor General's last Report to the House in which he spoke of his identification of the gradual but unmistakable emergence of a new determination in government and in Parliament toward improved management. He spoke as well of sensing a new attitude with respect to improved financial control and so on. I do not think we have been ignoring the Auditor General's Reports. In fact, one of the main jobs of the Comptroller General, through programs Like IMPAC, is to develop definitions for improved productivity within the Public Service and to develop programs to carry out these definitions.

I repeat what I said in my remarks to the House a few months ago. Unlike the private sector, there is no simple and automatic bottom line definition of productivity or of the results we are seeking within the Government. The Government has a multiplicity of goals, often goals which the private sector could not and would not work toward when applying a strictly profit-based bottom line. This is one of the challenges faced by the Government in terms of over-all improvement of its productivity. That does not mean we should not try to improve productivity.

We are moving in the direction of improved productivity and are making progress through programs like the IMPAC program of the Auditor General. This can be confirmed by the fact that the programs put in place through IMPAC have already demonstrated annual savings of $122 million. These savings are not simply one-time savings but annual savings, with more savings expected as other programs are in place. This shows that we are taking seriously the recommendations of people like the Auditor General.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise the issue of the social costs of the government programs with the Minister. I would point out to the Minister that, as a direct consequence of a particular government program called the National Energy Program, apartment vacancy rates in the City of Calgary are at about 14 per cent. I am told by realtors that there are over 7,000 homes on the market as a result of foreclosures and over 20 per cent of the office space in the City of Calgary is currently vacant. There has been an enormous increase in the unemployment rate. In fact, the unemployment rate in the City of Calgary is higher than the national average, in spite of the fact that a great many people in the labour force have chosen to leave the City of Calgary and return to other parts of Canada.

I wonder what the Government has been doing in terms of obtaining good projective data about the social costs of a planned government program. Specifically, now that the projections which we as a Party made to the Government some two years ago about the NEP have come true, what steps is the Government taking to lessen the impact of those social costs by replacing its programs with ones that makes sense for the nation? What sense of responsibility does the Government have and what systems will it implement to change programs that are extremely costly to Canadians, even though those costs do not show up directly on a government balance sheet?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to challenge my hon. friend's premise that the unfortunate unemployment rate and economic difficulty that exists in Calgary today was created by the National Energy Program. My hon. friend would seem to have us believe that there has been no decline in world energy prices and no worldwide recession, causing an economic slowdown and therefore a sharp drop in the demand for energy. Those are the factors that have led to the unemployment rate and economic decline in Calgary.

We must remember that there is no national energy program in the United States. Its Government has gone to world oil prices and the cities in its oil producing regions have experienced unemployment and economic decline. I challenge the accuracy of my hon. friend's premise because he seems to be totally ignorant, as he should not be, of what has been happening in the world in terms of decline in world oil prices and decline in demand created by the worldwide petroleum recession. That is what has caused the unfortunate economic situation to which he refers.

We have shown that we are able to work co-operatively with the industry and with the provincial Governments in order to deal with changing circumstances while remaining true to the basic principles of the National Energy Program. This is exemplified by agreements the federal Government has worked out recently with the Province of Alberta and with oil companies that would see major tar sands projects at Wolf Lake and Cold Lake involving investments of hundreds of millions of dollars go ahead in that Province. My hon. friend is confirming what seems to be a hidden agenda of his Party to destroy the National Energy Program. If that is the case, obviously it will do great damage to Provinces like Nova Scotia and, in fact, to all Canada, because it will be impossible to achieve the objectives of energy security, fairness, and stronger industry objectives which all Canadians support.

• (1210)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister who will remember that on March 7, speaking to his estimates for this year in reply to a question from the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), he said, as reported at page 23508 of Hansard:

—as I said in my statement in the House on February 22, there will be, as in the past, Supplementary Estimates, but it is our intention to accommodate them within the envelope reserves which I made public at the time of making my statement.

We have Supplementary Estimates to vote on now, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) could explain to the House why the PIP grants increase of $484 million is accommodated in the envelope reserves and how $60 million for Petro-Canada is accommodated in the envelope reserves? Indeed, where in the envelope reserve for energy is the money available for the Supplementary Estimates now before the House?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to provide my hon. friend with a detailed written answer but I want to reiterate the point I made in speaking to my estimates and when I tabled the Main Estimates. I said that in addition to the budgetary Main Estimates printed in the blue book and in the Part III's, the total outlays set out in the Government's expenditure plan include several billions of dollars in reserves to accommodate decisions on expenditure which will have to be brought to the House for approval through supplementary estimates. As far as I am aware, we have remained consistent with what I said. I will be happy to provide my hon. friend with the necessary information in writing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers have expired and can only be continued with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to state at the outset, lest there be any attempt to misunderstand on the part of the Conservatives, that we will support the motion. We will, perhaps, support it for somewhat different reasons and I want to deal, in part, with some of our reasons.

This is an inadequate way of dealing with a very complex topic. An Opposition day does not lend itself to actually coming to grips with the problems of the way the Government determines its expenditures, the way it establishes its tax system and the cost—to the public of Canada in this case, but it could also be to one of the Provinces—that has to be borne by those who pay the taxes. Unfortunately, on an Opposition day one has to engage in a discussion that is all-encompassing rather than zeroing in on the areas of greatest concern.

I would be more impressed with the logic of the Conservative argument if I could look around the country and see Conservative administrations applying the kinds of principles in a reasonable and humane way that the spokesmen for the Conservative Party put forward today. I would be more impressed if I could look at a Province like Ontario and find within its operations the kind of care and discipline that the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) indicates ought to be in place at the federal level.

I agree wholeheartedly that in many instances the Government does not spend taxpayers' money wisely. As I look at the expenditures, I sometimes wonder why it is that those who earn so little must bear so much of the burden. I frequently look at individuals in my constituency and in others across the country and wonder why people on a marginal level of subsistence are required to contribute so significantly to the over-all tax burden of the Government and the country.

I might be more impressed with the proposals advanced by the Conservative Party if I did not see, even within that group, a tendency developing toward extravagance. The recent expenditures undertaken by the Government on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), both in the upgrading of Kingsmere for his temporary residence and the rather extravagant expenditures on Stornoway as a semi-permanent residence, are examples. I cannot help but wonder if these are advisable expenditures, given that the person who preceded him there was one of his own Members who undoubtedly took good care of Stornoway. The Government is required to spend something in the order of $100,000—and that does not include the vestibule. When the Leader of the Opposition and his Party suggest that the Government ought to make cuts, yet they require that this money be spent in order to make a residence more comfortable that was in fact very comfortable to begin with, and at no cost to the Leader of the Official Opposition; then we cannot help but wonder whether that Party speaks with a forked tongue.

Having said that, I want to say that I agree that the Government spends its money in part—and I emphasize in part—in ways that I find unacceptable. Over the course of the last eight or ten years I have developed the impression that both at the federal level and at the Conservative provincial levels in Canada, a system is developing which is dangerous and probably harmful to the participants themselves. The major corporate sector, upon which both the Conservatives and Liberals rely almost entirely as the engine of society and the engine of the economy, is unable adequately to manage its own affairs. It is running into considerable financial difficulty, is unable to borrow at the banks, and is unable to find the capital necessary to cover its costs from normal investors. That sector comes to the Government on a regular basis and asks for further handouts, either by way of direct Government subsidy with no pay-back, or it asks the Government to underwrite its borrowing. This means that the strength of the people of Canada will be used to assure it of the capital it requires to keep free enterprise operating. I find it difficult to stomach that at times when, on the other hand, I see a veteran walking around with a colostomy bag who is getting only an old age pension and a veteran's pension of $58 per month and has to survive on that.

I believe the Government has begun to lose sight of its primary purpose of trying to ensure that there is some reasonableness in the way it operates on behalf of the people of Canada. I ask my colleagues in the Conservative Party, the managers of the private enterprise system which they tout all across this land, is it reasonable that the people of Canada who punch a clock, work in an office or are now retired should be required to pay more and more into the coffers of the federal and provincial Governments in order to subsidize, underwrite or in one way or another cover the bad management practices of those who would want, if given the chance, to run the country?

The practices which are being promoted by either the Liberals or the Conservatives—both of whom represent, or at least claim to represent, this major private corporate sector touted by both as being the only salvation for the future—are the same practices which have been followed by the major corporations which have failed repeatedly adequately to manage the resources which they hold in trust for their shareholders. I find it passing strange that I should be hearing of the need to cut and I cannot somehow or other pick up on exactly where those kinds of cuts are going to take place.

I can only assume from looking through the various supplementary estimates and taking into account the objections filed by my colleagues to the right, that perhaps there is some evidence contained in their choice of cuts which would allow me to make judgments about where they believe the cuts should take place. I note, for example, that they want to cut out of the budget the funds for the establishment of a transportation of the handicapped program. I wonder if that is indicative of where the cuts might be made in the future. If that is the kind of cut which the Conservatives are promoting, then I want nothing to do with it. I want to make it clear to the Conservative Party that I will not support that kind of reasoning.

Miss MacDonald: That is not in there.

Mr. Deans: That is in there.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where? I do not find it there.

Mr. Deans: If you cannot find it, then take a look through the book. I have just finished analysing it.

In looking through the cuts—time will not permit me to go through them all—I cannot help but feel that if that is the approach to be taken and the method to be used, I want nothing to do with it. If, however, the Conservative Party is talking about cuts in areas where the Government is handing out money willy-nilly to its friends and former colleagues in order to support their failing businesses in the fond hope that perhaps there might be one or two jobs created—without any guarantees or prerequisites—then I agree wholeheartedly.

That is the difference. If the Conservatives are suggesting that we ought to make the tax system more fair, that perhaps we should bear down on those 200 or more citizens of Canada who earn $60,000 and up and pay absolutely no tax, then I agree with them. If, however, they are suggesting that their entrepreneurial friends should be given further access to the trough in the process, then I reject that.

Mr. Blenkarn: No way.

Mr. Deans: Yet I do not hear them speaking about the problem—

Mr. Blenkarn: You stick around.

Mr. Deans: —of their Liberal friends being up to their necks in the public trough. I do not often hear the Conservative Party discussing that in or around the House of Commons, although it can find umpteen reasons to discuss those at the opposite end of the scale, those on inadequate pensions or those who are working for $10,000 or $12,000 a year and struggling desperately to make ends meet, when it talks about perhaps having a more fair distribution of the wealth of the country. If the Conservatives want to ensure that the people who go out and struggle daily to meet their financial commitments are able to share more equitably in the wealth, I feel I might be in a position to say that we would like to hear the specific proposals so we can deal with them.

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, something I know you are probably aware of, having been involved in politics and being a student of politics all of your life, that the only government in this country which operated on the basis of efficiency and careful expenditure of public funds for years, which ran its government at the lowest per capita level of civil servant to taxpayer, which ran its government without a deficit, which made sure there was in fact excess money left for investment, was the New Democratic Government of Saskatchewan. I know the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will bear me out. The Government of Saskatchewan, up until the time it became a Conservative government, when the New Democratic Party was in office ran the tightest fiscal ship in the land. When Bill Davis' Tories were running a deficit, Allan Blakeney's New Democrats were operating in the black. When Bill Bennett's Tories were running a deficit, Allan Blakeney's New Democrats were running in the black. When Peter Lougheed's Tories were running a deficit, Allan Blakeney's New Democrats were operating within their means.

Mr. Huntington: How did they build the Heritage Fund?

Mr. Deans: When I listen to the Conservative Party talking about management, I can only judge them on the basis of those who are of like ilk and who have been given the opportunity to put into practice the management skills which the Conservatives are proposing should be put into practice by their blood brothers, the Liberal Party. I think to myself that almost without exception in similar economic circumstances the Tories managed as badly as the Liberals.

• (1230)

The cost of government to the individual taxpayer in Conservative Provinces, as at the federal level, was more than could reasonably be borne with the exception of the time Allan Blakeney was Premier of Saskatchewan. Therefore, I wonder what the Government could do to satisfy the Conservatives. I doubt very much it could do so in a way that we would find acceptable; but we have a right to hear from the Conservatives exactly where the Government should make its minor adjustments in order to satisfy the Tory approach to fiscal management.

Is it a Conservative desire to redesign the tax structure to both simplify and make it fair? In doing so, are we going to ask those who use the loopholes put in place by Conservative and Liberal administrations to pay their fair share? We agree that should be done. If, as and when the need arises to provide public funds to private corporations, is it the position of the Conservatives that private corporations have to put up equity to protect the public funds? Will they have to enter into agreement to guarantee that the public dollars do not simply go down the drain following the misspent dollars of the corporate boardrooms in the years previous? If so, then we say yes, that kind of program might meet some success.

Is the Government to undertake the elimination of patronage moneys spent by both Liberal and Conservative administrations? Will they eliminate this patting your friend on the back and giving them a little job just to keep them going, the hiring of the Allan Greggs? You know the kind of thing I mean, Mr. Speaker. If that is to be done and public funds are not used for crass political purposes, then, by God, we will support that. If that is the kind of thing the Official Opposition is requesting from the Government, then they have our full support.

The best and most recent example of what I am talking about is where the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) spent some tens of thousands of dollars in an effort to improve his image.

Mr. Blenkarn: Hard to do.

Mr. Deans: It may be hard to improve his image. If that kind of expenditure is to be cut out, we agree 100 per cent that it should be. But if it is to be in the social services area where people who have nothing to protect themselves with are to be further damaged by the measures of a Tory administration, then, thank you but no thank you.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spent 20 minutes asking a lot of questions and I would like the opportunity to answer a few. He speaks of the Alberta Government being in deficit. True, in maintaining their social programs they are in deficit. But at the same time they put $5 billion aside in the Heritage Fund. I think that shows frugality in the sense that you put aside money in good times so that it is there when it is needed in hard times. That does not happen in socialist governments, as we have seen in the behaviour of the Liberal Government here.

I would also like to point out that the restraint programs of the Government of British Columbia have the support of at least two-thirds of the people of that Province. The faces in opposition are the same socialist faces which are seen at NDP meetings out there.

The Hon. Member refers to cutting expenditures. What about the $1.1 billion in cost overruns in ongoing projects this past year by the incumbent Government? There was $290 million paid to persons not legally entitled to benefits from the UIC. That is the kind of waste which proper management and disclosure will control.

One-third of all taxes paid by Canadians, Mr. Speaker, one dollar out of every three, is used to pay interest on our national debt. What about managing the debt and reducing it, as the Conservative budget in 1979-80 started to do? That was the first budget to project spending increases which matched only the expected inflation rate. It was the first budget to show fiscal responsibility and the Hon. Member's Party stood and defeated it in this House. The first time in 15 years that a government projected fiscal management, his Party stood and defeated it. For those reasons I cannot give too much credence to the questions and statements of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was not sure whether there was a question there but I was looking for it. However, I want to answer one thing that was said. As the Hon. Member knows, when Tommy Douglas took over as Premier of Saskatchewan it took years to get rid of the debt he had to take on as a result of the previous administration. From the day he got rid of that debt until the day Allan Blakeney lost, they ran in the black consistently. Within one year the current Government of Saskatchewan, a Conservative Government, was $500 million in debt.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) seems to address the issue of social costs with a somewhat—and I can well understand it—defensive manner. No wonder. That Hon. Member and those he sits with are the ones who put this Government into office and precipitated the unemployment of two million people in this country and all the fiscal costs and human tragedy which go along with it.

Why does the Hon. Member not complain about the disastrous economic policies of this Government which have precipitated the human suffering in this country? Why did he stand in his place last week and refuse to allow the social costs of unemployment to be debated in this House?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was waiting for that. To begin with, the first point made by the Hon. Member is wrong. It was not the NDP who defeated the Conservatives, it was the people of Canada. The people of Canada went to the polls and voted you out. Do you know why? Because you were incompetent. That is why, incompetent. So don't keep blaming other people for your incompetence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will remember that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Deans: Oh absolutely, and you, Sir, are not incompetent. I am talking through you, Sir, to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

With regard to the matter of last week, everyone knows that out of the five days allotted to the Opposition, the Conservatives, in their usual way, were trying to get them all for themselves. They were not prepared to give us one day out of the five allotted. We asked for a day and we were told No. I therefore filed a motion on another important question in order that that could be debated as a priority matter. I did not know which one they were going to call. If the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands really wanted a debate on the question of those who need help most in the country, they could have called her motion today.

● (1240)

Miss MacDonald: I notice the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain and I notice that in them he implied that this Government's economic policies are competent. The Government may take some satisfaction from that, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you the people of Canada do not take much satisfaction from it, and neither should the Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Deans: One final comment I hope. I can only assume that the Member subscribes to the policies as enunciated by her finance critic when he says that they will not tell the people of Canada what they stand for, because if they knew they would never vote for them.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) made an accusation that a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party filed an objection to the supplementary estimates that in some way dealt with the handicapped. Would he either point out the opposed items in the supplementary estimates as set out in the Order Paper of November 28, or stand in this House and withdraw the remarks?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker I will point it out. It is No. 15, standing in the name of Mr. Huntington:

That Vote 1b, in the amount of $1 under the Department of Transport-Departmental Administration Program.

The explanation of the requirement is the establishment of a transportation of the handicapped program. Just so that the Member can find the page, it is page 195 of Supplementary Estimates (B) booklet A, Departmental Administration Program, Vote No. 1b; and if he reads down just a little below he will find that that is in fact dealing with transportation of the handicapped.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has a problem at this point. It has recognized the Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) previously on an exchange and the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has been on his feet. The Hon. Member for Capilano.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, that 1b Vote, and the objection to it, is that it is the use of moneys voted for capital to build a search and rescue training school that has been transferred over to be used for general expenditure. That is reason that objection is in there. It is not as the Member for Hamilton Mountain just said at all; so withdraw.

Mr. Blenkarn: Withdraw, withdraw.

Miss MacDonald: It doesn't bother him to misstate.

Mr. Deans: How would you be able to tell? To begin with, you are not here often enough to be able to tell?

Mr. Blenkarn: Cheap shot.

Mr. Deans: That is not cheap, that is true. I only deal with the truth. Let me read it again. If I made a mistake I will certainly withdraw it.

Mr. Huntington: You made a mistake. Withdraw.

Mr. Deans: If I made a mistake I will withdraw it. Let me read No. 15 again:

November 25, 1983—That Vote 1b, in the amount of $1 under the Department of Transport—Departmental Administration Program, in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, be concurred in.

November 25, 1983—Notice is hereby given of opposition to Vote 1b, in the amount of $1 under the Department of Transport—Departmental Administration Program, in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984.

I now turn to the departmental estimates, Transport, Departmental Administration Program and Vote 1b. Vote 1b goes on to explain what the purpose of the expenditure is. Under the explanation of requirement it says: "Establishment of a Transportation of the Handicapped program".

There may be more, and I am prepared to concede the Conservatives' reasoning may be somewhat different, but in looking at the program and reading what they have said and what is said in the supplementary estimates booklet, I can only conclude that if one votes against that money and therefore has it removed from the budget of the Government, then the program for the establishment of a transportation of the handicapped program cannot then proceed. I think that is reasonable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has a problem at this point. The Chair has ignored the clock for a minute or two. It appears that there will be a supply Bill for supplementary estimates before the House and there will be an opportunity, I believe, at that point for an exchange which hopefully will clear up the differences.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for allowing me to correct an injustice which has been laid on my back. The objection to the $1 vote in question is transferring $1,598,999 from departmental capital budget to operating expenditures. They are transferring $1.6 million from money that we in the House voted for the building of a search and rescue training school over to operating expenditures. It is that principle that is being objected to in this objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair again, in the interests of allowing Hon. Members an opportunity to clarify the record, has not seen the clock. Are further interventions to this point or to another point?

Mr. Hawkes: No, it is a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Mississauga South, is it on the same point?

Mr. Blenkarn: No, debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Kingston and the Islands, is it the same point?

Miss MacDonald: My point is a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is directed to remarks by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain who implied that I had not been here. I say that to you, Sir, as somebody who has been here regularly working on the pension reform committee on which the NDP Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has also been working. I would challenge what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has said about any of us who have been working day in and day out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member has made her point but it is not a point of order. Reflections on the presence or absence of Members in the House are generally considered to be bad taste in the procedures of the House. There is a citation to the effect that the Chair discourages references to the presence or absence of Members.

Mr. Deans: You have got to be able to take it to give it out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this stage the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Mississauga South for debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you very much for recognizing me at this point. The debate before us concerns the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a televised press conference, and I want to read his quotation into the record again: "We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control". We are on the road to financial disaster because nothing was done to bring spending under control. That is exactly the point of this debate. It disturbs me that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), who was here earlier, is not here to follow the debate further through the day.

We have a tremendous country. In our country we have relatively young, educated people. The possibility of resources in our soils and water are unparalleled anywhere in the world. There is really no reason we should be in the difficulty we are in. For every dollar the Government spends this year, over 30 cents will have to be either borrowed or printed. That certainly puts us well down the road to disaster.

Until 1975 we had deficits but they were not of the order, magnitude or percentage of Gross National Product of the deficits we have had since that time. Mr. John Turner, the then Minister of Finance, started the program of spending much more than was conceivably taken in taxes. Every year since he was Minister of Finance our deficit position has become worse and worse. It is on that particular problem that I would like to address the House today.

• (1250)

In the past year, despite what the President of the Treasury Board said earlier, the percentage of the Gross National Product used directly by the Government rose to 47.3 per cent in 1982. That did not take into account the tremendous amounts of money controlled and spent by Crown corporations in supplying services and engaging in activities, some of which are profitable and some of which are very unprofitable. Therefore, the amount of the Gross National Product that is controlled by the Government has now reached the point where over half of what is created and developed in this country is done by the Government. That has led to the mess we are in.

Let me refer to some of the facts and figures that were set out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 19. Even if we take into account the exceeding optimism expressed by the Minister in his budget statement, I point out that we have now arrived at a position where our deficits will not allow the country to break even. Even under the most optimistic conditions, such as having virtually 100 per cent employment and the country proceeding at full speed, we would still have a deficit of approximately 3.5 per cent of the Gross National Product.

I say this with regard to the Government's statement which was filed on April 19 and Members are at liberty to look at that documentation. Members will recall that there was a special presentation on the effect of deficits contained within the budget papers. The evidence, as clearly stated by the Department of Finance in its presentation to the House, was that we have that kind of a structural deficit.

The House will recall that the Government's projections in its fiscal plan indicated that we would have a very good year next year when there would be an increase in the Gross National Product of the country of 5.2 per cent. That would be followed in 1985-86 with an increase of 4.4 per cent and the same thing the following year, 1986-87. However, if we follow this deficit position of the Government during those years, even with this enormous growth rate which I point out is far in excess of what we experienced in the 1970s, the Government deficit would still be in excess of $25 billion. Its borrowing requirements would be in excess of $19 billion. The result is that even with projected good times, boom times, if you like, the Government will not come close to balancing the books of the country. This must change.

This country, no more than any individual who runs a household, cannot use credit year after year to pay the grocery bill. We must eventually have a balance. It has never been required that government should be able to balance its books every year. During tough times such as we have experienced in the last two years, perhaps governments should be allowed to go into a deficit position. That is what is called a cyclical deficit. In good times the Government should show a surplus. But I would point out that the Government's present actions make it impossible ever to show a surplus. Indeed, a deficit is built right into the system and, according to the Estimates filed in the House by the Minister of Finance on April 19, the deficit is close to 3.5 per cent of the GNP.

This means that at the present time the Government would either have to increase taxes by approximately $14 billion or $15 billion, reduce its expenditures by the same amount, or perhaps a combination of both.

Let us look at the question of increasing taxes. I think we are all aware that there are precious little opportunities available for large tax increases in the country. Canadians are already paying a level of tax that is in excess of the tax level paid by our trading partner, the United States.

As a practical matter, it is impossible for one nation to have a tax impost that is higher than that of its competitor and trading partner. While there could be different taxes within each country, the over-all effect of taxation must be approximately the same or the country with the higher taxation level will suffer dramatically. Indeed, that is what is happening in Canada today.

Generally speaking, taxes in the United States are considerably lower than those in Canada. That is one of the major reasons the United States did not go as deeply into the recession as Canada and is coming out of it much more rapidly and dramatically than we are. That is why over-all employment in the United States is one million more than it was before the recession, and why over-all employment in Canada is 250,000 less than it was when we went into the recession. Therefore I see no way that we can dramatically increase taxes to cover that structural deficit.

Let us look at the other alternative, that is, to cut our suit to meet the amount of cloth available. This requires some priorizing of Government expenditures. We must consider what the country should do to get itself back on a sound footing. First, I believe we should begin with the concept of zero-based budgeting. I do not believe that Government Departments such as the Department of Agriculture for example, can continue to have its budget automatically increased to meet inflation. This should apply to all Government Departments. With respect to programs, I believe we must get down to the brass tacks of coldly and calculatingly deciding which programs we must keep and which ones we must discard. Interestingly enough, I was reading to Prime Minister's statement which was referred to in the motion and that is what he said in 1968. That is not what he did but what he said.

Next, we should consider carrying out the recommendations suggested by what is commonly referred to as the Huntington-Lachance report. Specifically, this deals with the question of priorizing expenditures and involving the House in that process. In other words, we should create an estimates committee of the House that will work with the Treasury Board in priorizing and determining the expenditures of the Government and where that money should be allocated. It is my view, and I believe that of my Party, that the first obligation of government is to ensure that the social service network which is in place is maintained.

I notice it is one o'clock. Perhaps I could proceed after three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SOCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, we have seen the writing on the wall for a while now. In a report to be submitted to the Macdonald Royal Commission on the Economy, the Canadian Mental Health Association says that child abuse, suicide, alcoholism, disease, divorce and crime are soaring as a result of unemployment. Deep in everyone's gut most of us believe this to be true.

"Unemployment is more than a problem of economics", the report says. "Regardless of the theory that one uses to explain the existence of unemployment, it is obvious that it takes its toll in ways that go beyond the loss of a pay cheque".

It is also a political problem. The Government has continuously failed in its objective to create permanent jobs to address the real human tragedy that is taking place. This Government has only barely scratched the surface of the problem. It is a national disgrace, and should be our first and utmost concern. As Progressive Conservatives our first priority is the creation of jobs.

HUMAN RIGHTS

BANGLADESH—HUNGER STRIKE BY POLITICAL REFUGEES IN MONTREAL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, since November 17 approximately 40 political refugees from Bangladesh have been carrying out a hunger strike at the Montreal Refugee Centre. The purpose of this hunger strike is to alert Canadians and the Canadian Government to the shocking situation in Bangladesh, and to their situation as refugees here in Canada. They have told us that there are now 800 refugees from Bangladesh in Canada who have fled that country because of its harsh anti-democratic regime. Any criticism of its Government can result in 7 to 14 years' imprisonment. The national constitution has been suspended, and hundreds of students have disappeared or have been killed. It is estimated that, in the period from 1972 to 1983, 25,000 persons have been killed for political reasons.

Considering this grave situation and the fact that Canada provides substantial foreign aid to Bangladesh, the refugees ask the Canadian Government to make strong protests to the Bangladesh Government. In addition, they ask the Canadian Government to speed up the process for their official recognition as refugees, awaiting status with more humane, economic, social, and medical assistance.

I beg this House and the Government to give this matter serious attention.

GREY CUP GAME, 1983

TORONTO ARGONAUTS' SHIP COMES HOME

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in all modesty and humility. It is not necessary to remind Canadians of what happened yesterday. The City of Toronto today is basking in the joy of reversing a 31-year drought. The Argos won the Grey Cup with an overwhelming victory, one that was never in doubt.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: Members today must be somewhat apprehensive. For years we have been aided in our quest for national unity by Toronto's continuing successful role as the doormat of the Canadian Football League. Everybody loved to beat Toronto, and did so with regularity, and, in later years, with some affection. We from Toronto held this country together by giving all regions a common cause. They loved to beat Toronto, and we let them. But now, no more.

However, there is a new glimmer of hope on the horizon, Mr. Speaker. We need not view yesterday's result with apprehension. I refer to some recent remarks by Jim Coutts, that perennial candidate in the riding of Spadina.

Mr. Coutts has taken to making election predictions. He has likened election contests to sporting contests. Mr. Coutts, when asked about recent standings in the Gallup Poll, compared the Conservative Party with the Argonauts. Today I know that all Canadians, not just Argo supporters, will embrace that conclusion, for not only did the Argos win the Grey Cup but they won it having shut out their opponents in the second half. One final comment, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: This House owes a great debt to Mr. Coutts. He has demonstrated how something as potentially divisive as a hard fought Grey Cup final can be transformed into a strong unifying force for all Canadians.

S.O. 21

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last week on Private Members' day the Government talked out a Private Member's Bill on maintenance. This was a Bill directed to simplifying maintenance orders. It had the defects of a Private Member's Bill, and it is not the solution to the problem we need. Nevertheless, it is time to ask the Government what it is doing to bring in legislation on the matter.

The appalling rates of non-payment of maintenance orders have been known for years. The Law Reform Commission back in 1969 made recommendations for a more effective system. These were endorsed, and other recommendations were made by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada in 1970. Yet in 1976 another Law Reform Commission study reported that most maintenance payments were in arrears to some extent. The Government is on very poor grounds now in November, 1983, to be saying that more time is needed to study the complexities of the matter.

Thousands of Canadian women and children live in poverty as a result of nonpayment of maintenance orders. Last June the federal-provincial Committee on Enforcement of Maintenance and Custody Orders reported, with a number of specific and concrete recommendations for reform. Some require federal action, or joint federal-provincial action. Federal legislation is needed to facilitate the location of the defaulters and to make maintenance orders binding on pension benefits, estates, unemployment insurance benefits, and income tax refunds. The object is prompt, automatic enforcement.

A unified family court system is needed to permit one-step access to maintenance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

SHIPBUILDING

LACK OF ORDERS AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, measures were introduced by the Government to strengthen the Canadian shipbuilding industry on January 6, 1983, and confirmed in a Ways and Means Motion tabled on June 29, 1983. These measures are crucial for the survival of the industry, and it is essential that the Ways and Means Motion be passed as soon as possible. We on this side have been willing to support these measures with little or no debate if the Government would bring them forward.

Commercial orders in Canada have virtually dried up, and employment in Canadian yards has dropped from above 14,000 in March, 1982, to under 7,000 in September, 1983. Foreign built vessels are entering Canadian waters in record numbers. The industry needs the suppport it was promised in the January announcements because its very survival does hang in the balance. We are ready. We simply wonder when the Government will be ready to bring these measures forward.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government has repeatedly stated that it will bring government spending under control. But since the Liberals have been in power they have turned a budget surplus of $493 million into a $31.3 billion record deficit for this year. The interest on the national debt alone will cost taxpayers $17.6 billion dollars this year.

In private industry an enterprise with revenue that only equalled 65 per cent of expenditures and with gross debt that was four times the value of its net assets, would be forced into receivership.

● (1410)

It is time for the Government to stop the Canadairs and to review the Devcos, as the Canadian taxpayers cannot afford any more of these ridiculous handouts. The people of Canada want action, instead of words and promises. They want the Government to show some responsibility and require the recipients of these handouts at least to be held accountable.

The Government is very good at preaching restraint, yet at the same time it had no qualms about spending $15.7 million on food and entertainment in 1982-83. With that kind of restraint policy, the prediction by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1969 that Canada would be on the road to financial disaster if nothing was done to control Government spending will become a reality.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—INTERVENTIONS BY UNITED STATES BACKED FORCES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, two years before his assassination Prime Minister Maurice Bishop of Grenada said that there must be a great outcry of international public opinion not only when the marines land in somebody else's territory but also when there is evidence of a systematic and concerted plan of destabilization. For Grenada, that outcry came too late. It is not yet too late for Nicaragua. We must cry out against the growing United States threat against that country.

The United States has revived the Condeca group of front-line states to give a pretext of regional concern about security. In the United States the Council of Hemispheric Relations has learned that "Operation Pegasus" plans a buildup of contra activities from Honduras, trying to provoke a counter attack from Nicaragua. The United States continues war games and simulated invasions in Honduras. It finances violence within Nicaragua, where thousands of people have died, and it has just appropriated another $24 million for that purpose. In the meantime Canada has no embassy in Nicaragua and must get all of its information second or third hand, mostly from the United States.

Canada could help to stabilize the situation by opening its own embassy, and by providing aid on a priority basis. We must act—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROSPECTIVE LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CANDIDATES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, despite the discouraging Liberal results in the latest Gallup Poll, the media seem to think that John Turner is not horsing around anymore. The more he denies his interest in running for Liberal leader, presumably after "the Last Supper" coming up in December, the more we suspect that he intends to run. After all, how unexciting the life of a senior law partner must be as compared to the plush life of a future Opposition Leader.

While the cat is away the mice will play. While Mr. Trudeau is away—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fretz: —in a last-ditch effort (a) to solve the world's problems, and (b) polish his own image, the Liberal pawns, seeing the possible future checkmate under King Trudeau, are seeking discreet ways to advance up the board and grab the crown. Even the beauteous and illustrious Iona Campagnolo may yet make the move out on the Liberal limb, that is if Jean or Eugene don't break it off first, but it is Mr. Turner who sits on the back burner—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is a real question about the use of Standing Order 21 for attacks on individual Members of the House. The Chair has brought this to the attention of other Members previously.

Mr. Fretz: This wasn't an attack, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton West.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT ON STEEL INDUSTRY OF PROPOSED ALUMINUM SOFT DRINK CANS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has taken some recent initiatives to boost Canada's steel industries. The changes to the Crow rate and the expansion of the rail networks in western Canada will give Canadian steel companies a chance to bid competitively for millions of dollars in contracts. As well, the Anti-Dumping Tribunal is currently looking into several claims put forth by Canadian steel companies about unfair pricing on some steel imports. However, it is a very serious concern to me that the Government of the Province of Ontario is presently considering ending the steel industry's monopoly on soft drink can production.

Stelco and Dofasco have carried out a department by department analysis of the impact on employment of the loss of the soft drink can market. Their analysis has shown that such a ruling would result in a loss of 607 jobs, with 560 of those lost jobs being in Hamilton and Nanticoke. Although these job figures are for the soft drink can market for all of Canada, a loss of the Ontario market would make production for the rest of Canada uneconomic.

The current regulations state that 85 per cent of each soft drink can must be made of steel. In light of the hardships that the steel industry has recently endured, a decision to end its monopoly in soft drink can production would be extremely burdensome. I therefore sincerely recommend that the Ontario Cabinet protect the steel industry's jobs in these difficult times.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CANADIAN MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION REPORT—SOCIAL COSTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. For the second time within a week a major report has shown the tragic human costs of unemployment. Over the weekend the Canadian Mental Health Association said that child abuse, suicide, alcoholism, disease, divorce and crime are soaring as a result of unemployment. Last week when I raised this issue with the Deputy Prime Minister because of a similar report by the Family Service Association, the Deputy Prime Minister tried to slought it off.

Today I would like to ask him, seeing that it was his Government's policies, and his 1981 budget in particular, that caused the hardships that so many people are suffering, will he tell us when the Government will realize the magnitude of the social costs it has created and begin to take steps to redress that cost?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think all Members of this House and all Canadians are very concerned about the social costs of unemployment just mentioned by the Hon. Member, particularly because in nearly all Canadian families there are young people who are entering the labour market for the first time and are unable to find employment. That is why, contrary to what the Hon. Member claimed, the Government has made every effort not only to increase substantially the amount of funding for job creation in this country but also to direct such funding more specifically towards training and jobs for our young people, and that is the kind of policy we intend to pursue in the future.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR WARNING GOVERNMENT OF POLICY CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, not only does the Deputy Prime Minister try to slough off these questions, he passes them over to someone else who will not answer for the costs that he created.

The Canadian Mental Health Association says that the real unemployment rate is much higher than that which is given by Statistics Canada, and that the downstream social costs are going to run into the billions of dollars because of prolonged unemployment. When the Government took the decision to introduce measures which would bring about higher unemployment, which Cabinet Ministers were responsible for warning the Government of the long-term social costs that would be created, and why did the Cabinet pay so little attention to them?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a Member with the Hon. Member's experience should get upset because the Acting Prime Minister did not answer her question. We have a system in Parliament which also existed when the Hon. Member was a Minister, under which there are Acting Ministers when a Minister cannot be in the House. Today, I happen to be acting for my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and I shall certainly try to answer the Hon. Member's questions. I must say I totally disagree with the Hon. Member's argument that by introducing certain policies, the Government has created unemployment. In fact, the opposite is true, because as I said before in my first answer, everything is being done to focus employment policies on specific target groups, including young people and those groups where unemployment rate is very high, and I think the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance have demonstrated in the past that we have created more jobs in this country than has been the case in any other OECD country in recent years.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO CREATE JOBS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Deputy Prime Minister does not want to own up to the mistakes he has made and that is why he sits in his seat. I would like to point out to him, or to the Minister he has named to speak in his place, that both of these reports in the last week stress the really long-term—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please ask her question?

Miss MacDonald: Because of the long-term problems that are going to be created for children of the unemployed, and these are stressed in both reports, when will the Government see that there will be enough jobs created to turn this situation around? When will the Government stop the escalating destruction of family life and of children's lives because of the policies it has already introduced? When will the Government turn that situation around? When will it see that jobs are created so that that kind of situation no longer exists in our country?

● (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would do well to stop the rhetoric and start looking at the evidence. She would then realize that every day, jobs are being created all over Canada, through programs such as Canada Works, the Local Employment Assistance Program and the Career Access Program. Perhaps the Hon. Member would realize the extent to which Canadians in the private sector are making use of the Industrial Regional Development Program, the IRDP, under which eight industrial incentives programs were consolidated to accelerate the job creation process.

SKILLS TRAINING FOR RECIPIENTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Those of us on this side of the House are concerned about social costs, including wife beating, suicide, and alcoholism. The antidote to those problems, Mr. Speaker, is clearly for a person to have something productive and useful to do.

I wonder if the Minister could respond to this concrete suggestion. Current statistics indicate that one in 100 people who receive unemployment insurance are allowed to take training and receive benefits. Could the Government accept a target of one in ten Canadians who collect unemployment insurance being eligible to take training this winter? Could those people be trained for a job rather than sit idle and collect unemployment insurance? Would the Government accept that suggestion?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an interesting suggestion, and I may say that over the last twelve months, we have been trying through the Skills Growth Fund to achieve this objective, in other words, to increase the number of people receiving benefits so that more people will be eligible for training, to ensure that these people will be able to find more permanent employment in the future.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, had the Minister looked at the data, he would have seen that the numbers are going backward rather than forward, according to the latest statistics.

REQUEST THAT ENERGY EXPLORATION FUNDING BE DIRECTED TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, may I offer the Minister another concrete suggestion? Under the National Energy Program, funding for exploration in western Canada has been cut by one-third and funding for frontier exploration has been increased, not by an equal amount but by somewhat less than that, being about 40 per cent to 45 per cent. Frontier exploration creates less than half as many jobs as would be created through the same expenditure on exploration in western Canada. My concrete suggestion is to take the funding from frontier exploration and use it in western Canada to create more jobs and produce more oil faster during this crisis. This would mean that less money would have to be sent to Saudi Arabia and Mexico and that jobs would be created in Canada. Would the Minister consider taking that kind of a major initiative?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to consider all kinds of suggestions, but I may remind the Hon. Member, although I am not the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that as far as energy is concerned, both the Province of Alberta and the Government of Canada provide grants for industry and for exploration, and we are responding to requests from the private sector in this area. However, I think the Hon. Member's suggestion is worth looking into.

[English]

PROFITS OF CORPORATIONS—RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and refers to the Canadian Mental Health Association report. As the Minister knows, that report documents the suffering experienced by unemployed Canadians, including depression, anxiety, and mental illness.

The Minister is well aware that corporate profits have reached pre-recession levels while the unemployment rate remains well above the pre-recession level of 7 per cent. Does the Minister think that it is fair that corporations should benefit from the recovery while people continue to suffer from depression and mental illness? How long will it take him to lower the unemployment rate to pre-recession levels?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that, indeed, corporate profits have recovered but they have not recovered to the levels experienced in the 1970s before the recession. In addition I remind him that, if we wish to create jobs, those jobs will have to be created mainly by the private sector and the private sector must have high enough profits to allow it to create those jobs. The private sector will be the engine of growth in that regard.

I would also remind my hon. friend that most of the jobs created in the last six months have been created by the private sector. Canada has created relatively more jobs than any other industrial country in the world. Canada has been a world leader in job creation in 1983 and we hope to continue that trend into 1984 and reduce unemployment as fast as possible.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, we would like to see the Minister reduce unemployment as fast as he increases profits.

RECOMMENDATIONS MADE BY CANADIAN MENTAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, the same Canadian Mental Health Association report indicated that we cannot continue to develop strategies that barely scratch the surface of this deep and dangerous issue. The report made several recommendations. It recommended that massive lay-offs be justified, that workers facing lay-offs be allowed time off with pay to look for another job, and that the Government improve and expand its job-creation and training measures. I would like to know if the Minister is prepared to take action with regard to these specific proposals or if he intends to stand by and watch Canadians suffer while their mental and physical health deteriorates.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member kept himself abreast of the actions of the Government he would know, for instance, that the Government has been constantly adjusting its job-training and creation programs to answer the needs of the labour force as those needs are changing. We are continuing to do this in order to make sure that we get the most effective results for the large expenditures of money that are being incurred to alleviate the serious problem of unemployment.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN TRANSPORT LTD. BANKRUPTCY—ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENT'S OFFICIALS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and refers to the Maislin bankruptcy which will cost Canadian taxpayers some $34 million. I am sure the Minister is aware of a recent article in The Toronto Star which reports that his officials prepared a detailed report to Cabinet expressing grave doubts about the possibility of saving the Maislin situation. However, at that very same time the Government was indicating that there was a reasonable possibility that Maislin would survive. Clearly the House has been misled by the Government. Why did the Minister proceed with the bailout in the face of the clear and contrary advice of his officials?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first I think the Hon. Member is making an assumption by saying that it would cost the taxpayers of Canada $34 million. As the Hon. Member should know because of his business experience, that is yet to be determined. Second, with regard to any report that may have been made by officials, I am sure the Hon. Member does not accept verbatim every single word in every report made by government officials no matter how distinguished or competent those officials may be.

NATURE OF GOVERNMENT'S DECISION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has neglected to tell us why the report was ignored. I said at the time that it was a dumb business decision and a dumb economic decision. This report reinforces that conclusion. It also reinforces the conclusion drawn by Hon. Members on this side of the House that the decision was not based upon business or economics but was a pure political payoff. Can the Minister give any specific information today which would give Canadians a shred of confidence needed to believe that that conclusion is not warranted?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member continues to discuss the Maislin situation. If I recall correctly, Members of the Conservative Party were also against helping out Chrysler and yet that has been one of the greatest success stories in the history of the world.

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION-MAKING POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, we must determine whether this is just a $34 million mistake or whether there is a pattern of the Government ignoring early warnings given by its officials. Did the Government receive early warnings from officials against its actions in the cases of Canadair, Dome, and Massey-Ferguson?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, based upon his position when he was Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. gentleman should know that it is not the habit of Ministers to comment in the House upon discussions they have had with their officials. However, I wish to remind the Right Hon. Member that Massey-Ferguson is still operating and thousands of jobs have been saved across the country. White Farm Equipment has been bailed out twice by the Government, with some consideration given to representations made by members of his own Party. There are at least 11,000 people in the country working for the Chrysler Corporation who owe their jobs to the initiatives taken by the Government to assist this company in the last two years.

● (1430)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Canadians deserve some guarantee that their money is not just being thrown away by the Government. From documents revealed over the weekend we know that the Government deliberately ignored the most serious warnings of its own officials that there would be a loss in the neighbourhood of $34 million.

REJECTION OF ADVICE

Righ Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the advice against this spending came in May 1982, and the decision to spend came in July, 1982. We want to know if there is a pattern of the Government receiving advice warning against waste of money and ignoring that advice, or is this case an accident? Is Maislin the only case in which the Government acted against the advice of its officials when its officials warned that public money would be wasted?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is rather amusing to see the former Prime Minister of the country make a statement like the one he just made.

On every decision that the Government takes, it receives all kinds of advice. I am sure we could go back and look at the Chrysler situation, for example, and see that a number of representations were made by Members on that side of the House when the Right Hon. Member was Leader of the Opposition, against the Chrysler situation.

Sometimes Governments do make mistakes; sometimes things do not turn out exactly as planned. That is as disturbing to the Government as it is to the taxpayers of Canada. However, I think that the over-all track record of the Government in the so-called bailouts that the right hon. gentleman refers to, has been pretty good.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REPORTED THREAT OF WITHDRAWAL FROM CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. At the weekend the President of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicated that the Government was not getting a big enough bang for its buck in social housing, that it might withdraw from the co-op sector of public housing, and instead, institute some kind of direct shelter allowance for low-income renters. Whether that report is accurate or not, I want to ask the Minister what his views are on the possibility of the Government withdrawing from social housing and public co-op housing and introducing a direct shelter allowance.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is no question at all of moving away or withdrawing from social housing. I hope the Hon. Member will take the time to read the report which is an evaluation of the co-operative and non-profit housing program and which has just been released. That report indicates what we have felt for some time, that is, that the program might not be targeted as well as we want and that we should look for ways of doing a better job. If the Hon. Member takes that positive attitude, then we are in complete agreement. There is no question of withdrawing from social housing programs.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question specifically on co-op public housing and on shelter allowance, both of which were mentioned by the President of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, at a time when thousands of Canadians are out on the streets. It is true that over the last five years the federal Government has reduced social public housing investment by $700 million.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I want a direct answer to my question on whether the Government is getting out of social housing and whether it is going into direct shelter allowance and away from co-op housing. Yes or no.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should really not confuse co-op housing, which is a form of social housing, with the other programs of social housing, particularly those intended for senior citizens, which is the group most in need. There is no question of moving away from encouragement to social housing for those who are most in need. The difficulty I have is that the queue of those waiting is getting longer, and the program is not adequately targeted for those who have the most pressing need for improved housing. Shelter allowance is one possibility, but it is one among a number of possibilities. That is why—

Mr. Blackburn: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: If the Hon. Member would allow me to answer, instead of shouting, perhaps I could transmit some information. Shelter allowance is one proposal, but it is one which we have not adopted. We are examining it with the others recommended in the report.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENMARK—DRUG RAID ON AMBASSADOR'S RESIDENCE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, Canada made rather unfortunate headlines last weekend in Denmark as a result of a drug raid on the Canadian ambassador's residence in Copenhagen. Would the Minister indicate how long the Government knew that an international drug ring was using the Canadian ambassador's residence as a meeting place and drug depot for its activities?

Mr. Speyer: A bunch of dopes!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is building up the case rather beyond what it deserves. The situation was drawn to my attention very recently that the local police were investigating an employee of the ambassador's residence on the suspicion that she had been involved in the drug business. We did co-operate with an investigation undertaken by the Danish police and they did uncover, I believe in the room of the employee at the ambassador's residence, a considerable quantity of hashish.

Mr. Stevens: One hundred kilograms.

Mr. MacEachen: A considerable quantity. We co-operated with the Danish police, and I think it is a good thing that the situation has been uncovered. It is not the normal situation.

Mr. Nielsen: It was too big to hide under the bed anyway.

EMPLOYEE'S CONNECTION WITH FUGITIVE FROM CANADIAN JUSTICE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Would he indicate if the Government was aware that the maid to whom he has referred, and who was employed by the Canadian Government, for six years was working with one Bjaern Hinesberg, who skipped bail in Montreal in 1975 after being charged with six others for conspiracy to import drugs into Canada? Did the Government know that the residence was being used as a meeting place for the drug ring? In fact, when the investigation was under way and the maid was being arrested, the doorbell rang and two Britishers were arrested, were picked up right on the door step of the Canadian government residence, they being implicated in the drug ring themselves.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that information was made public. It is a fact that while the police were apprehending the employee and finding the drug loot, a couple of accomplices walked in and accommodated the police at that very moment. Not both of them were British; one was an Irishman.

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

DECENTRALIZATION OF INCOME SECURITY PROGRAM OFFICES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in her absence I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to respond. I have in my hand a news release and a letter from the Minister stating that four offices will be decentralized, three from Toronto to places like Peterborough, Chatham and Timmins, and one from Halifax to Sydney, in the relocation of offices dealing with income security programs. I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if there is any meaning in the fact that three of these four offices represent Liberal ridings, Chatham, Timmins, and Sydney, and the moves are all taking place during the period of the release, 1982-84. Why is the Minister not having the one in Peterborough take effect until 1986?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think if you look at the operations of the Government you will find that in the designation of offices under the decentralization we have been very fair.

CREATION OF JOBS IN PETERBOROUGH, ONT.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, in trying to be fair, as the Minister no doubt is, in the letter to me she refers to the 165 new jobs that will be created in Peterborough. I am sure her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is happy to hear about that. If she is really fair to Peterborough, why is she creating the 165 jobs in 1986?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think this is further evidence of the fact that we are being fair. I do not think the people in Peterborough would be very happy about the fact of us not having those jobs.

ESTABLISHMENT OF HELICOPTER PLANT IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC—SIZE OF PROJECT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few weeks ago the Minister announced that Bell-Textron was building a large helicopter facility in the Mirabel area of the Province of Quebec. Could the Minister confirm that in fact Bell Helicopter Textron first proposed a $37 million project rather than a $514 million project, which would create 22 jobs?

• (1440)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact I believe the first project it raised with us was something like a quarter of a billion dollar project, and through good negotiation we were able to up that into a half a billion dollar project.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, of course we note that the federal Government is participating to the tune of $165.2 million. There were a number of other localities, in New Brunswick, Ontario and elsewhere, which were being considered. Could the Minister indicate whether or not localities in the Province of Ontario were offered the same federal financial assistance?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): If I recall, Mr. Speaker, the level of assistance for a substantial portion of that project was dependent upon the area in which the plant was located, using, for example, the tier 1, tier 2, tier 3, and tier 4 criteria laid down under the IRDP program.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT BUY COLONY FARM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have just one question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. As the Secretary knows, there have been numerous requests from authorities in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, inlcuding the President of UBC, for the federal Government to purchase Colony Farm from the Government of British Columbia before the farm gets blacktopped, especially with the Smithers research facility now unavailable to the Department of Agriculture. Would the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House whether the federal Government is actively considering this urgent request from the people in that area that the federal Government consider buying Colony Farm?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I must say first of all that Agriculture Canada is at present operating a research station at Agassiz in southern British Columbia. In fact, Agriculture Canada does not need other farms for research in British Columbia. The Department does, however, deplore the fact that the Government of British Columbia is getting rid of this 640-acre farm which is being used exclusively for agriculture, and it is to be hoped that other private interests will be able to acquire this property.

FINANCE

REGULATION OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that we now have a situation where the banks are involved in security trading, where we have the insurance companies wishing to be involved more openly as trustees of pensions plans and holders of securities for others, we have very unhappy trust companies, and the Minister is contemplating increasing their commercial lending. We have the credit unions again unhappy about their status. I was wondering if the Minister of Finance has any plans to introduce any legislation to clean up this mess in the regulation of financial intermediaries.

Are we going to leave the various branches of financial intermediaries to continue to compete with each other, break the existing statutes and, find a way around various regulatory controls? What plans has the ministry in terms of straightening out and ending the confusion between financial intermediaries and their individual responsibilities?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that, if he knows of any statute being broken, he should bring it to the attention of his provincial Attorney General so that action can be taken. I suggest to him that he will not be able to point out any such instances.

As to the other aspect of the Hon. Member's question, I am surprised that the Conservative Party is now for more regulation and less competition. If that is the new policy of the Conservative Party I am going to take note of it until it is changed by the critic for that Party, who said that the public should never know what its policies are before the election.

Finally, I would like to say that if any legislation is to be introduced, it will be announced in due time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South for a short supplementary question.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that there is a great deal of confusion taking place in the marketplace. The Minister knows that the Province of Ontario produced a White Paper—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member ask his question?

Mr. Blenkarn: I was in the process, Mr. Speaker, of trying to get the question out as quickly as possible. When will the Minister advise this House as to where the Government stands with respect to the regulation of the various financial intermediaries, or is it just going to be a question of doing nothing and letting all heck break loose, as it did with Greymac, Seaway, Caledonia, and Strathcona? When is the Government going to do something to get that house in order?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that most of the cases referred to by the Hon. Member come under provincial jurisdiction, not federal jurisdiction. Second, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the position of the Government is spelled out in the statutes and the regulations which are in effect at the present time. When I have changes to announce, they will be announced in due course.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSTING OF FEMALE EMPLOYEES BY DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that approximately 20 of the young men and women recruited by his Department in 1982 are now being posted. Will the Minister tell us why all of the women are being cross-streamed to Immigration and, evidently, none of the men?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, I cannot tell the Hon. Member about that. I will make inquiries and give him all the information I can get.

IRISH EMBASSY POSTING

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Again, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the 8,000 career personnel in the Minister's Department, will the Minister tell us why so many of the top positions are filled by people who are not promoted from within on the basis of merit? Will he also tell us why the ambassador to Ireland is no longer a career diplomat and is now one of the Minister's political friends?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the post in Ireland has been held by the same person for some months now. It has been the practice for the Government to appoint to a number of posts persons who are not members of the diplomatic service. I believe that is a defensible thing to do. I do not see any reason for being defensive about the present incumbent in Ireland.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

MAISLIN TRANSPORT LTD. BANKRUPTCY—GOVERNMENT'S CONTINGENT LIABILITY

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is supplementary to earlier questions put by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre regarding the Maislin bailout. If I understood the Minister, in reply to a question he indicated that the taxpayers had not lost $34 million, I presume because the Government has not written the cheque yet. Is it true, first, that the Government is carrying on its books a contingent liability for $34 million with respect to Maislin? Second, and more important, what is the Minister's estimate of the taxpayers' loss? I presume his Department must have that estimate. If it is not an estimated loss of $34 million, by what lesser amount does the Minister estimate the taxpayers will lose over the Maislin bailout?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, being a member of the legal profession, will know that there is almost no way to determine amounts until such time as the receiver makes his report regarding the disposal of the assets and how much money can be raised as a result of the disposition of those assets. The amount of $34 million, as of this point in time, is incorrect, and we will not know the amount until such time as the receiver makes his final report.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

THE CASE OF DONALD MARSHALL—COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR WRONGFUL IMPRISONMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. There is a growing sense of outrage at the lack of justice which is being accorded to Donald Marshall, who spent 11 years in penitentiary for a crime he did not commit. If, in a civilized and healthy system of justice, we try to right the wrongs which have been accorded to an individual, what leadership has the Minister of Justice shown in rectifying the injustice done to Mr. Marshall in terms of compensation for the legal fees and for the 11 years which he unjustifiably served in a penitentiary?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): As I believe the Hon. Member may know, those precise questions were asked and answered in this House last week. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Marshall was prosecuted by a Crown prosecutor in the Province of Nova Scotia under the direction of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, after the investigation of his crime by police of the City of Sydney, Nova Scotia, which, of course, falls under the jurisdiction of the Province of Nova Scotia. Therefore, there is no federal involvement of the Department of Justice in the investigation or trial of Mr. Marshall.

Although we certainly have no responsibility to do anything, because I am so concerned that the Province of Nova Scotia has not yet assumed any responsibility in this important case, I have discussed the matter with the Attorney General of Nova Scotia and asked him to consider very seriously the responsibilities I believe the Province should undertake.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, if the Province of Nova Scotia takes no action to correct this injustice, in those circumstances will the Minister of Justice act?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was elected in the Province of Ontario and knows, I am sure, that that Province, which has analogous problems in the field of justice, appears to be prepared to assume its responsibilities. Is he suggesting that, when a provincial Government does not fulfil its responsibilities in matters within its jurisdiction, the proper course for the federal Government is to play "Big Brother" and take over the whole of provincial jurisdiction? If that is the position of the Opposition on this, I would like to hear about it.

Some Hon. Members: You hypocrite.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk.

USE OF IRON ORE SLAG IN HARBOUR PROJECT AT PORT DOVER, ONT.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment who will know that the Department of Public Works has approved the use of iron ore slag for break-wall fill in the harbour project at Port Dover, Ontario. Can the Minister advise us whether his Department has carried out studies on the effects of the slag on fish species found in Lake Erie?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I know that to give an adequate reply to that question I will have to review the report if it is with us at the present time.

MEDICAL CARE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF NEW CANADA HEALTH ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. For a year and a half the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been bemoaning the problems of Medicare associated with the question of extra billing and user fees. Once again she spoke on this issue in Toronto and pointed out the problems of delaying action. She said, "Each week we wait, each month we wait, there are Canadians who have to pay extra who can't afford it". Considering that the Government has scheduled another week's holiday to start this Wednesday, will the Government practise what it preaches, recognize there is a crisis in Medicare and, instead of recessing for that week, bring in a Canada Health Act now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it seems reasonable to me that the House should have a short break between the end of the longest session in Canadian history and the new session. I understand that break has been agreed to by all Parties in the House. I ask the Hon. Member not to be terribly disappointed because it will be possible to deal with the matter he has raised at an early date in the new session of Parliament.

EXTRA BILLING COSTS—REQUEST FOR EARLY ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot say this is a crisis seriously affecting Canadians and, at the same time, say we need another week's break, just when we had a break two weeks ago. We are prepared to stay for that week, all day, every day, if it is necessary to pass the Act. We will do that.

Mr. Huntington: Rubber stamp it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Just because the Conservative Party has not made up its mind on this issue does not mean we have not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed out that it is costing Canadians more than $1 million a week in extra billing costs alone. We have a crisis in Medicare and we could deal with that measure within a week. Therefore, why will the Government not bring the Bill before this House within 24 or 48 hours?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is sort of a regular pattern to this performance we are seeing today. It is known as the pre-Christmas NDP grandstanding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Since I have been in this House, every time the House is ready to break for a well established reason the NDP always says, "Why don't we stay another day, another week and get this urgent piece of legislation done?" In the meantime they are filibustering most of the legislation, holding it up when it comes before the House.

REQUEST THAT SCHEDULED WEEK'S RECESS BE CANCELLED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister that Christmas is on December 25, not today. I also remind him that the Government of Canada has been talking about action for a year and a half, the Liberal Party has been playing politics with the sick of this country, and we are tired of it. If the Government is so concerned about the whittling away of the basic principles of Medicare, which the Minister of Health goes on about week after week, and given the fact we had a week's holidays just two weeks ago, what would be wrong with coming back to deal with the matter within that week and restore to Medicare the basic principles which Canadians used to accept?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is doing a tremendous job in supporting the principles of Medicare. She will be regarded as the person in this country who has taken the lead in that matter. I can understand why the Hon. Member wants to get a piece of the action rather late in the day. She is carrying the ball, and she will do it very well.

ENERGY

ADMINISTRATION OF PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Because of the drain on the Government Treasury caused by the PIP grants, and because of the many accusations that exploration companies are abusing PIP grants, has the Minister launched an inquiry from his Department into the administration and uses or abuses of PIP grants?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if such an investigation were to be made, it would not be done by my Department but by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If the Hon. Member has any specific charges to make, perhaps he could make these known privately to my colleague, or publicly if he prefers, but we shall investigate if he is able to provide evidence that some abuse may have occurred.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is fully aware that the cost of exploration drilling in the so-called Canada Lands has increased three-fold since PIP grants were introduced. As he is responsible for the federal treasury, and this is clearly a treasury responsibility, has he or his Department launched an investigation into the uses or abuses of the PIP grants program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I already answered the Hon. Member's question. He is repeating the same question so he will get the same answer.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ECONOMIC BENEFITS OF F-18 PROGRAM FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

When he visited Valcourt about a month ago, the Minister said, in referring to the F-18 economic benefits, that to him it was obvious that Quebec would not be getting the promised 50 per cent of those benefits. Can the Minister confirm to the House what he said at the time?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I said in Valcourt that... First of all, I can inform my hon. friend from Joliette that we never promised 50 per cent. What I said in Valcourt was that it seemed obvious, since many contracts had already been allocated, that we would not achieve the desired percentage, but we were certain that over the duration of the contract that is, over fifteen years, we would get $1.5 billion in economic benefits, as we informed our fellow Quebecers when we gave the contract to McDonnell-Douglas Canada Ltd.

INQUIRY WHETHER ECONOMIC BENEFITS FOR PROVINCE OF QUEBEC WILL BE AS PREVIOUSLY ANNOUNCED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I just want to remind the Minister that the former Minister of National Defence had spoken in terms of 50 per cent, according to the initial forecasts, which would give Quebec $1.5 billion. Now, as far as the percentage is concerned, I have the clear impression that the Minister is prepared to confirm that the commitment made by the former Minister of National Defence will not be respected. My question is quite straightforward: With respect to the percentage of economic benefits, could the Minister confirm that the 50 per cent commitment will not be respected?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to inform the Hon. Member that Quebecers will get $1.5 billion in economic benefits in Quebec, as a result of the F-18 contract. I may remind the Hon. Member, although some of his colleagues may not be as pleased as he is, that the Bell Helicopter contract and the Pratt and Whitney contract for research in the aerospace field will keep more than 50 per cent of the aerospace industry in Quebec, and that is what Members from Quebec on this side of the House want to see.

NUCLEAR-WEAPON-FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-699, an Act to declare Canada a nuclear-weapon-free zone.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take a moment to introduce this Private Member's Bill. I should point out it is very similar to Bill C-678 introduced by my friend, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), with two notable differences. The first difference is that when I drafted this Bill I was anxious to ensure that the conditions of Canada's nuclear weapons free status be made to apply to the Government of Canada both within Canadian territory and those regions of the world where Canadian forces may be stationed, in particular with reference to NATO. The second difference is to include in my Bill provisions for the Government to negotiate treaties and/or agreements with a verification in respect of Canada's nuclear weapons free status. I would point out that it seems to be especially timely to table this Bill at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions. Should we go through the usual procedure at this point? The Hon. Member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, why do you not simply ask the Members in whose names the motions are put down if any of them wish to proceed today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If any Hon. Members in whose name a motion stands recorded in the Order Paper wish to proceed at this point, would they please rise and so indicate? If not, we will proceed to Questions on the Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT SPENDING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Huntington:

That this House agrees without reservation with the prediction of the Prime Minister made on August 13, 1969, in a nationally televised press conference when he said, "We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control" and calls upon the Government to initiate policies which would avoid the Prime Minister's prediction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) still has seven minutes remaining in his remarks.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when we broke at lunch I was going over some of the priorities that I felt a House of Commons committee might look at in determining the priorizing of government expenditures. I was speaking about social services.

From this Party's point of view, we would expect that the first priority of any government expenditure would be to make sure that those less fortunate in our society had some of the opportunities, protections and safeguards in terms of education and health that those more fortunate have. Unfortunately, in some of our social service expenditures there is a tendency to look after the greedy more than the needy. In looking at those expenditures one might want to do some screening to determine whether those expenditures are really for those who need the service as opposed to those who happen to want to get to the trough. Basically, our view would be that the social net, the ability to look after our neighbours, is a thing that we look to government for first. Expenditures on social services would be our first priority.

Our second priority would go to the question of defending our nation. We think it is terrible that we do not spend sufficient money to protect our nation but rather depend, to some extent, on the nuclear arm of the United States for our protection. If we are going to have a place in the world and be respected in the world, and if we are going to protect our heritage, then surely we must spend more of our country's wealth in looking after that heritage.

The third point is that people in Canada demand that we use our funds to look after the sense of justice that is required; that the criminal law be enforced, that we have police protection to protect us from those in our society who might want to take advantage of us and that there be a fairness in the administration of justice. That that would be a priority.

Next, there would be a priority in terms of communication and transportation. After all, we are a great, diverse nation and we must keep our nation together. Therefore, expenditures in terms of communication and transportation are important expenditures which deserve some priority.

After you go beyond those you look at the other things that government does and you find that to a large extent what government does is spend money, but not very well. I have not been in this House that long, but I have heard Minister after Minister stand in the House and tell us how many jobs his Department or his program was creating. Indeed, if the Government has created all the jobs it has created, everyone in Canada would be working at least three shifts a day, seven days a week, trying to fulfil those jobs. The fact is that the Government is not very efficient at creating jobs. It is the private sector which creates jobs, the people with ideas and entrepreurial ability who create jobs. It is a waste of Government funds for the Government to try to do something which it does not do well.

We should consider what the Government can do. I have suggested some of those possibilities. The Government cannot entertain us well. The Government, through CBC and other activities which it tries to encourage in the name of culture, spends a lot of money trying to entertain us. The basic question is whether it is doing it very well. I suggest that any committee which would look into that would see those expenditures with a somewhat jaundiced eye.

The third point is that governments are in competition with each other. As a result, we see provincial Governments in this country with trade embassies in London, Paris and Rome. As well federal Governments have trade embassies in the same places. That duplication, and triplication in some instances with respect to health services, must be eliminated. Surely we could have a mechanism to determine which government may be best suited to do a job that is required. There would be no need for the involvement of other governments.

For instance, with respect to the health and medicare proposals made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), perhaps we should bear in mind where the responsibilities lie. If it is a provincial responsibility, perhaps the provincial Governments should deal with that responsibility and relieve the federal Government of the responsibility so it will not spend money from the federal treasury on those activities.

That is not to say that there should not be transfers of tax money from one jurisdiction to another. It does not mean that there should not be transfers to make sure there is equal opportunity in Canada. But the federal Government should not be involved in activities that clearly fall within provincial responsibility. It is a waste of money and effort. It is something which significantly increases our deficit.

Having determined what envelopes are available and how they are established, we should get down to the basic matter of how much money can properly be taken out of the system in terms of taxation. When that is determined, we ought to limit the spending of the Government to that amount while maintaining a healthy economy.

I appreciate that changes cannot be made instantly. We already have a system which has saddled us with what amounts to a deficit of some $30 billion. The Government's priorities cannot be changed overnight in order to get us back into a position where government will balance on a cyclical basis. That must be our objective and one which a new government must attempt over a five or six year period. It may even take longer than that since the present Government has put us into a horrendously difficult financial position. We cannot easily wean ourselves from that difficulty. To some extent, we are almost like heroin addicts. We have been given a shot of more money in government services every year than we can afford to pay for and it will take us some time to withdraw from that level of government spending to which we have unfortunately become accustomed. It certainly is a level that we cannot afford. It will take a new government a number of years to get our country back into the position in which it should have been had the present Government followed its own leader's advice.

In order to reach that goal I believe it is necessary to follow the recommendation of the report by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure to create a special committee of the House to priorize government expenditures and act as a supervisory committee over how parliamentarians authorize the expenditures of taxpayers' money. In that regard may I move the following motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end of the last line and by adding the following thereto:

"including, but not limited to, the adoption forthwith of the Seventh Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure."

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Does this mean that the Conservative Party is amending its own motion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As far as the Chair is concerned, any Hon. Member of the House has the right and privilege of putting an amendment forward and this is what has taken place. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is in order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I make this motion to the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the rules of the House, Hon. Members have the right to ask questions of the Hon. Member or to make a short commentary if they wish. Are any Members seeking to be recognized for that purpose?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he would provide Members of the House with a brief explanation of the purpose of his amendment.

Mr. Blenkarn: I thank the House Leader of the Official Opposition, who seconded the motion, for giving me an opportunity to explain it. Members of the House are appointed to standing committees to review estimates. Usually, Members who are interested in a particular field of government activity sit on standing committees related to those areas. For instance, if a Member is particularly interested in environmental issues, he or she would sit on the standing committee which deals with the environment. Similarly, Members who are seriously interested in health and welfare sit on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

What happens is that those Members sitting on a standing committee are interested in seeing money spent in the area with which that standing committee deals. Therefore, they would like to see government expenditures given priority in their particular area of interest. We see that there is no over-all control on these expenditures and when we stand in the House to deplore government spending it is always in an area of interest to someone else.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Hon. Opposition House Leader is the Member who asked the Hon. Member to explain the intent of his motion. He has now left the House. Since he is the only Member who wanted to hear, he should—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South may complete his answer to the question.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

• (1520)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is an experienced parliamentarian. He realizes that Parliament has a certain dignity that is important, but I recognize him on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it is on the record now that what the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) said is totally without foundation. That is all I wanted to have on the record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South can complete his remarks.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the reason for the motion is that the existing parliamentary committee system does nothing to scrutinize, reduce, or control spending within an envelope, an envelope system or a departmental system, for that matter. Generally speaking, those people scrutinizing the estimates are Members of Parliament who are very interested in that class and kind of spending. Therefore, they would like to see, if anything, that spending increase. Invariably Members who are interested in environmental issues will ask that more spending be undertaken on environmental issues. Last week we had a concern with respect to forestry. Members who are interested in forestry spoke in favour of more spending on forestry. Perhaps there should be spending there, but that is not to say there should not be.

If we are ever to come to grips with spending, what must have an over-all budget committee of this House of Commons that deals with spending in totality, that somehow priorizes that spending, that insures the estimates sent to standing committees have a priorization in terms of the total amount going to those committees. Unless we do that, we will never come to grips with control because we have nobody trying to control it. The present system leaves the foxes in charge of trying to control the hen house. They control it all right. They keep on eating the chickens and the eggs and they are eating us out of house and home. Very soon the country will have to borrow more money than the total savings of the country.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who sits right in front of me. Why is the Hon. Member proposing an amendment to his own motion? I do not understand why the Conservative Party does not have its act together enough that its two Members could not talk to each other and move a proper motion. I know this way not be unusual; they seem to have differences in policy every day. I just read a book on the Conservative leadership race and I am beginning to be struck by the kind of incompetence in the Conservative Party that claims to have a sort of business competence. Why could the two Members not get together and present a united resolution? Why do we have to have two resolutions? Is it because, like most things these days, we have two policies from the Conservative Party?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am most impressed with the Hon. Member's ability to read. The reason the motion is separate is so there are two votes. First, we are voting on whether this House agrees with the Prime Minister who in 1969 suggested that there be serious limits on expenditure. Second, as a result of the amendment we can vote separately on whether we should support the seventh report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. What could be clearer than that? If the Hon. Member can undertand the procedures of this House he would understand why there are two votes. First, he will now be entitled to vote separately on whether there should be a committee of this House to deal with the priorizing and controlling of the expenditures of the nation. And, second, he will be entitled to vote on whether he should support the Prime Minsiter of Canada when he made that statement in 1969 that forms the critical part of this motion.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) on a very reasoned, logical and sensible presentation this afternoon. I was rather struck with his very good idea that what we should be doing instead of adding up each departmental estimate and then presenting the House of Commons with a bill for all these things we would like to spend is that we should be finding a maximum that we should impose on the Canadian public by way of taxes—presumably a percentage of the Gross National Product. Ideally, what would he suggest should be taken away from Canadians in the form of taxation? What percentage of the Gross National Product?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the Hon. Member has given me an opportunity to answer that question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should answer that question in about a minute and a half.

Mr. Blenkarn: I will not take long, Mr. Speaker. In 1968 all governments in this country spent 33.7 per cent of the Gross National Product governing us. At that time the Prime Minister said that if we did not control spending we would be in trouble. We were spending 33.7 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1968. In 1982 we are spending 47.3 per cent of the Gross National Product. The answer is clearly that what the Prime Minister said in 1968 is what we should be spending. Our trading partners spend about 35 per cent of their GNPs governing themselves. We are trying to spend well in excess, if you add in the Crown corporations, of 50 per cent of our GNP governing ourselves. No wonder we have horrendous unemployment. No wonder we have distress and economic problems.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to join in this debate. First, I presume the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will rise and ask me a question at the end of my speech as he usually does, but I was interested in his amendment. From the way he described his amendment, he does not know what he did. The seventh report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure does not in any way set up a committee which would establish spending priorities for this Government. Committees of this House do not do that. Parliament does not do that. The Government sets priorities. Committees hold the Government accountable.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South was talking about this committee setting the priorities for government spending. Clearly the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. That is the beginning of a long litany of sins committed in his speech. It seems to me that when one puts forward an amendment, one should understand what the amendment is supposed to do with regard to the main motion.

We heard today from the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South a litany of comments from history to the effect that great problems have occurred in this country as a result of deficits, as though there was some insidious plot to nationalize the entire economy, and so on and so forth.

Mr. Blenkarn: Isn't there?

Mr. Evans: We should take this whole question of deficits into perspective. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South did speak about what he called a structural deficit and a cyclical deficit. I think we have to understand, and the people certainly understand, that we have just gone through the most massive recession worldwide that has occurred in the past 50 years. This Government did not want to impose or see imposed upon its people the kind of suffering that occurred in the 1930s. In talking to my senior citizens, I asked them what happened in the 1930s and whether they could compare the current recession with the 1930s. They told me there is no comparison. There is no comparison because we put in place a highly sophisticated, highly effective social safety net that has protected Canadians in a way that was simply unknown and unhoped for in the 1930s. There is no doubt about that, Mr. Speaker. We have protected Canadians who were struck by unemployment. We have protected Canadians who were unable to work because they were senior citizens and because they were infirm. That social safety net is there. It is strong. It is doing the job it is supposed to do. However, it costs money. I am asking the Opposition Members during this debate to stand in their place and say that the deficit is more important than the social and financial security of Canadians. If I hear that, I will know where the Conservatives stand. I do not know where they stand now.

• (1530)

We hear the great rail about the terrible deficit, "Oh my God, the deficit has to be brought down immediately." In another part of my speech I will bring forward statements by Members opposite, Members who out of one side of their mouth cry for a reduction in the deficit and out of the other side cry for increased expenditures in their own riding. You cannot have it both ways. Either you believe in reducing the deficit at all costs, or you do not. You cannot stand up one day and say the deficit is too high, that it has to be reduced and there has to be greater fiscal responsibility in this country and the next day stand up in the House and say that the Government must spend billions more on job creation, billions more on research and development, billions more on national defence, billions more on forestry and billions more for fisheries. You have to come down on the issue. Either you believe in it or you do not.

The clear, unequivocal answer to that question is that the Tories do not really believe it. They are putting up the deficit and pulling scare tactics on the Canadian people. However, when it comes right down to the bottom line, the Tories will not be dealing with that deficit. To do so, they would have to attack programs that Canadians have come to hold dearly, programs that have supported Canadians well during the worst recession the world has known in 50 years. That is the bottom line. It is a bottom line to which these Tories will not respond.

We have heard that Canadian Governments in general, but the federal Government in particular, have allowed the deficit to run away, almost as though it had accelerated continuously during the 1970s. The facts are here. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was talking about the total government sector. With regard to the total Government sector, the deficit in Canada as a percentage of GNP peaked in 1978. It declined steadily until 1981. In 1982-83, we went into a recession. If the automatic stabilizers have any meaning at all, it would imply that when you go into a recession and the revenues of the government fall, people are thrown out of work, social expenditures rise, the deficit as a percentage of GNP is going to rise. Precisely that effect is what is intended. When the economy is crumbling, the social safety net takes up the slack, substitutes income to people so that they are not thrown out on the street in destitution. That is what the safety social net is all about.

Yes, the deficit as a percentage of GNP rose during the recession. Thank God it did. If it had not, people would have been thrown out on the street. They would have lost their homes by the thousands. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is going to rise in great indignation, but the point is that the deficit peaked in 1978, declined steadily until 1981 and then rose again.

Let us look at some comparisons. We heard a lot about comparisons, how Canadian Governments had run-away deficits unknown in any other part of the world. Let me quote some figures. In the period 1975-1981, the Canadian deficit averaged 2.1 per cent of GNP. In the United States it was 1.3 per cent, in Britain 3.7 per cent, in Germany 3.4 per cent, in Italy 9.7 per cent and in Japan 4.1 per cent, compared to 2.1 per cent of GNP in the Canadian deficit average.

During that period, the Canadian deficit was declining. We all admit that it rose during the recession, but there is not one Member opposite who has the intestinal fortitude to talk to his or her constituents or any other constituents in this country and say that he does not think the deficit should have risen during the recession and then tell Canadians how he would have stopped it from rising. When the world goes into a recession, being a trading nation, we are going to be affected by that. There is no doubt about it. That is clear, straightforward fact.

How was that rise in the deficit to be avoided? How was the rise in unemployment insurance to be avoided other than cutting it? How was the rise in the payments to the Provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan to be avoided other than by cutting? How were the moneys that went to Canadian industries to help keep those jobs and keep industries alive to be stopped from increasing other than by cutting those payments?

Miss MacDonald: By not creating unemployment in the first place.

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member talks like a Member with a paper head. Not creating unemployment. Has she been outside this country? Does she know what has been going on? Has she seen the three million unemployed in Britain? Has she seen the 30 million people in the western world who are unemployed? It was not just here. It was a world-wide recession. Canadians know this. It is time that the Tories not only knew it but admitted to it and started to take a realistic position.

The way to get the deficit down is not by taking the approach that some on that side of the House would have you believe, namely slashing away at things. It will not happen by increasing taxes. The way to do it is by growth. We can stimulate the kind of growth that is necessary in this country. Members opposite say, "The Liberals cannot do it, nobody trusts the Liberals", but during the last year we have had higher growth than was anticipated by any of the private forecasters and lower rates of unemployment. In other words, unemployment is coming down faster than anybody forecasted. Our inflation rate has come down faster than anyone predicted. Interest rates came down faster than was predicted.

That is a darn good record. We have created jobs faster than any of the other OECD countries. There were 350,000 jobs created in our economy in the last year. That clearly indicates that when the Tories say the people have no confidence in a country run by the Liberals, they are all wet. The facts fly in the face of the Tory statements because Canadians are investing, spending and are buying houses.

Mr. Gamble: Because they expect a new Government.

Mr. Evans: It is not because they expect a new Government because that will not happen.

Some Opposition Members have said that we have to put priorities on our spending, that we have to reduce spending and bring Government expenditure under control. This has been expenditure-related because none of them will talk about possibly increasing taxes. They only talk about expenditure control. Let us look at what some Members opposite have said. When talking about controlling expenditures and bringing down the Government deficit, this is what we have. The Hon. Members for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), Northumberland (Mr. Hees) and Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) have all called for increases in defence spending. In fact, over the weekend, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre said that we should be increasing defence spending from 2 per cent of GNP to 3.5 per cent of GNP, its being the NATO average. That would mean, Mr. Speaker, an increase in defence spending of $4 billion to $5 billion. Where is that $4 billion to $5 billion going to come from?

● (1540)

Why do we not talk to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) about reducing the PIP grants that are supporting oil exploration off Newfoundland? What about cutting back on the East Coast fishery agreement? Perhaps Hon. Members opposite would like to talk to those two gentlemen about those issues.

Are the Hon. Members on that side of the House really concerned about reducing spending? What about the statements made by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) and the Hon. Member for Central Nova regarding maritime freight rates? Perhaps we should talk to them about reducing those freight rates. In the House the other day, the Hon. Member for Central Nova said: "Only 67 million for maritime freight rates? That is a pittance, it needs to be much more." That does not sound like a reduction in spending to me, Mr. Speaker.

While we are hearing the calls for the reduction of the deficit, what is happening? Hon. Members on the other side are saying: "Wait a minute, why do we not increase spending in my area?" This happens day after day as evidenced by the speeches, oral questions and statements under Standing Order 21 that are recorded in Hansard. We hear the litany of cries not for reduced spending but for increased spending. They want increased spending here and increased spending there.

The Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) has called for massive increases in research and development funding. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) speak about West Coast fishing subsidies. That can be found at page 28679 of Hansard. The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), as can be found at page 28891 of Hansard, spoke about a forestry policy that would greatly expand Canada's role in reforestation. All of the things I have mentioned are very good public policies but all of them are totally inconsistent policies for a group that says it has a deficit fetish and will reduce that deficit.

I shall go on. The Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), the Hon. Member for Kingston, the Islands and the Hon. Member for St. John's East have all spoken about new and expanded employment programs which call for more government spending. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), as evidenced on page 28892 of Hansard, and the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River, as evidenced on page 29172 of Hansard, have all spoken of increased support for the mining industry.

We should speak to the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) about the possibilities of a Conservative Government reducing support to the prairie grain farmers. Where did those Hon. Members stand on the Crow issue when we were attempting to free up moneys in order to improve the western rail system? They were voting against us. What would happen if all of the money needed for the western rail improvements came out of the federal Treasury? I ask the ladies and gentlemen on the other side of the House, what that would mean for the deficit? Where were they during that debate? No, they do not want us to talk to them about that.

How would the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) feel about eliminating the $200 million for the Winter Olympics in Calgary? That is one way of reducing the deficit. Would he like to hear about that, Mr. Speaker? Oh, no, he would not. What about the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) who, as reported on page 28677 of Hansard, has called for increased support for small business? What about the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who, as reported on page 29081, of Hansard, has called for the introduction of shelter allowances? What about the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) whose riding is benefiting from the program of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) designed to build helicopters? It seems that Pratt & Whitney, the company that builds engines for those helicopters, is located in the riding of Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: Show me the place where.

Mr. Evans: Would he say that he would give that up in the interest of reducing the deficit?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mind being criticized, Mr. Speaker, but I ask that the Hon. Member refer to the time when or the place where I made any suggestion for increased expenditure.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I did not do that. I was referring to a situation which had occurred in committee. He was asked to stand up and say that he was opposed to spending money on the helicopter plant and he very kindly declined to do so. He was quite embarrassed by one of his colleagues who was decrying this situation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Read your committee report.

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member can stand up after I have spoken and say that he would not like to see that money spent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Sure, will do.

Mr. Evans: He will do that. We have all heard him say that he will do that and, of course, we will send a copy of Hansard to Pratt & Whitney.

The fact is that day after day, we hear in the House about how terrible the deficit is and how a Tory Government would tackle that deficit with vigour. However, Mr. Speaker, day after day the truth comes out. A Tory Government might spend that money in a different manner but it would spend it nonetheless. That is the fact, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated a litany of comments to prove that and I only read through Hansard for the month of November to find that proof. If I were to go back over the 30,000 pages of Hansard, there would be a stack of 8½" by 11" pieces of paper standing taller than I do containing suggestions for new spending and additional spending and condemning the Government for not spending more.

We must face the facts. The fact is that a government with a philosophical bent similar to that of the Party opposite took power in the United States. In 1978, there was no deficit in the United States. By 1982, the deficit had grown to 3.8 per cent of Gross National Product. That occurred under a government that was going to put things back on track.

As I have said before, Mr. Speaker, from 1975 to 1981, the Government of Canada has a deficit which was, on average, 2.1 per cent. Japan's deficit was 4.1 per cent, Germany's was 3.4 per cent and Britain's was 3.7 per cent. That does not indicate to me that this Government has been out of line with reality in terms of government expenditure and macro-economic policy.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not have the best social safety net, we certainly do have one of the best social safety nets of any country in the world. During the recent recession, that system was tested and tested hard and it stood the test. That system was put in place by a Liberal Government. It is being maintained by a Liberal Government and a Liberal Government will fight like hell to make sure that that group on the other side does not get into power and rip that system apart, because that would rip the social conscience out of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) made one excellent point and then failed to expand upon it. He indicated that the salvation of the nation did not lie in increased taxes, and with that I am sure he will find agreement from all Members of the House. He did say, however, that that salvation lay in growth and then significantly failed to mention how that growth was to be developed.

The Hon. Member did say that the actions taken by Members on this side of the House were all directed toward increasing expenditures and then proceeded to refer one after another to certain Hon. Members who may have spoken, as he indicated, in favour of expenditures for a specific purpose. Let me ask him how significantly the incurring the obligations by the Government to the extent of $1,700,000,000 earlier this year for the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank and how significantly the incurring of obligations to the extent of $900 million earlier this month for the same organization under an amendment to the Bretton Woods Agreement will benefit the taxpayers of the nation and the people from whom he has spoken when in fact none of those funds are tied conclusively to the purchase of any goods or services in Canada.

While he is answering that question, he might explain whether he believes that the massive deficits we currently suffer from have had any effect on the value of the Canadian dollar. If they have, is that effect, as explained by the Minister of Finance, the need to keep interest rates in Canada equal to the interest rates in the United States? If that is the case, could the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council indicate to the House whether, in his view, that unfortunate following in terms of interest rates had a beneficial effect upon the business community, home owners and ordinary consumers of the country who for too long have suffered the blight of excessive interest rates?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. This is not an opportunity for another 20 minute speech; it is basically an opportunity for roughly a 90 second question or comment period. May I take it that the Hon. Member is asking a question? I think he has asked several so I will recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked so many questions that I cannot remember them. One question was whether the deficit was the main cause of the decline in the value of the dollar. No. That is straightforward. Many other factors were involved such as productivity or wages and salaries, which got out of line. That is not a function of the deficits. There were many factors that caused the value of our currency to drop vis-à-vis that of the United States. I might add that our currency, relative to other currencies in the world, has gone up, not down. There was a very strong U.S. dollar relative to ours and that caused ours not to rise as fast as the U.S. dollar relative to other world currencies. So relative to the U.S., our currency is down a bit. If you look at relative deficits—

Mr. Gamble: Deal with interest rates.

Mr. Evans: The fact is that the United States is the biggest capital market in the world. Money moves in and out of the United States, in and out of Europe and in and out of Canada. When interest rates in the United States are forced up by policies followed in the United States, they are going to rise in Canada as well. That is a long-established fact. If you have an open market, if you are a trading nation, you are going to be subject to the whims of the monetary policy of a massive nation that you do business with. That is what happened to interest rates.

The Hon. Member asked the first question and I would have liked to respond; I had the answer but I cannot remember the question.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that he felt that Government handouts to business were a good thing. I suggest to him that we do not necessarily agree with that. If somebody is going to hand out money, then I suppose every businessman in the country is going to line up to collect. If the Government is establishing a reputation for giving handouts, then I suppose my constituents will be there, with others, with their bushel baskets, ready to collect. The question is whether that is a priority for Government spending in the first place.

Does the Hon. Member agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who said on August 13 that we would soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control. Does he believe spending is under control? If so, how would he rationalize the structural deficit described in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) filed in the House on April 19 last?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, in 1968 I would have agreed with the Prime Minister. I would ask the Hon. Member if in 1983, specifically a few days ago, he would have agreed with his Party's finance critic who said that the Finance Minister had little choice this year except to plan for a deficit in the $30 billion range, and who added that the large deficit this year is necessary to encourage economic recovery.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he does not consider it pretty serious that Government borrowing to cover the annual deficit now stands at 51 per cent of all net new security issues placed in Canada? Does he realize that the interest being paid on the debt of the federal Government now takes all of the income tax paid by taxpayers earning $50,000 and less in Canada; that it is now $1,600 per taxpayer or some $700 per capita in Canada? Does he not consider that a calamity and an impending disaster? Does that interest charge against our revenues not interfere with the delivery of good social services?

The Hon. Member talks about expanding the Armed Forces to play our part in defending freedom and the tensions in the world. Could that money not be moved from some of the $8.5 billion spent on UIC and so put people into meaningful work and training programs?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about a near doubling on defence, which would go from 2 per cent of Gross National Product to 3.5 per cent of Gross National Product, that is not primarily an increase in manpower although one Hon. Member spoke about an increase in our NATO equipment back to 10,000.

I am sure that an increase in defence spending would in some way increase employment but I suggest that there are more effective ways of doing that than by spending on defence.

The Hon. Member has raised other issues. According to what he has said in the past, I believe he is seriously concerned about the size of the deficit. I am concerned about it and I am concerned about the size of the interest payments because that is money that is not being spent to provide good social services and other goods to Canadians.

We have gone through a period of very high interest rates but we have been able to bring down the world economy and we have contributed to bringing interest rates down substantially. As those bonds are refinanced, the interest cost of the debt is going to be reduced. If we can keep inflation down, and I think we can, interest rates will come down further and the interest cost of the debt will be reduced.

If we can get growth going and the deficit is reduced as a percentage of the Gross National Product, then we will be in a position where the interest expense and the size of the deficit will be manageable. The nub of the issue today is whether, during a period of serious recession, the Government should be condemned for doing what a Government with a strong social conscience should do, and that is, protect the people who need protection the most. That is precisely what we did during the recession that we are coming out of now.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened with utter amazement and some despair to the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). I do not know where he has been this last while. Perhaps, being isolated in Ottawa, he does not understand the suffering and the problems that have been created in the country for the millions of people who are unemployed. He passed that off as if there really were no problem for them. If he had seen the reports in the weekend newspapers, he would know what one organization after the other is saying is the terrible social cost borne by millions of Canadians as a result of the policies of the Government. Canadians are being thrown into despair, anxiety and anguish because of steps which his colleagues took which he backed up. I do not know where he has been when he stands up and makes statements like he does.

• (1600)

Mr. Evans: What policies?

Miss MacDonald: He should take a look at headlines in the papers which say what the Government has been doing over this last few years. "Lives of millions in jeopardy" reads the weekend edition of the Kingston Whig-Standard. From the Ottawa Citizen we have "Unemployment destroying lives".

Mr. Evans: Tell us how the Government caused that.

Miss MacDonald: From the Saturday Toronto Star we have "Jobless rate spells ruin, group warns." The Canadian Mental Health Association, the Family Services Association, both say it was the unemployment policies of this Government which have thrown those people into the despair they are in today. They are afraid to listen to the truth; that is what is wrong with Members opposite. Every time Canadians try to bring home the difficulties they are in, those Members get up and run.

The motion before us today, Mr. Speaker, addresses the financial disaster precipitated by Members of this Government—

Mr. Evans: Name them.

Miss MacDonald: These policies have led not only to financial disaster, Sir, but also to human suffering and misery for millions of Canadians. The policies of this Government have led to widespread lay-offs, falling incomes, a decline in productivity and sharply reduced employment opportunities for many hundreds of young people. The failure of the Government to recognize the impact of its sterile economic policies has, in turn, generated massive social costs which could have been averted if proper economic policies had been adopted.

There are a number of direct ways by which we can calculate the tremendous and escalating costs of the double-digit unemployment which, over the past two years, unfortunately, has become the norm for Canada. We can look at the cost of unemployment insurance benefits, which will total $11 billion this year. Two years ago that cost was $5 billion. We can look at the revenues of the federal Government, which are down 3 per cent so far this fiscal year from two years ago. We can look at the 1.4 million Canadians officially counted as unemployed and looking for work. We can look at the 100,000 Canadians who have given up looking for work, and the 400,000 trying to make it with part-time jobs when they want to get full-time jobs. These are the direct costs, Mr. Speaker, and they are staggering. They come out of the 1981 budget of the former Minister of Finance, the National Energy Program and a whole host of other programs which this Government foisted on this country.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense. Where have you been?

Miss MacDonald: Those are the direct costs. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that while you can put more or less realistic dollar figures on them, there are other more frightening costs which are all too often ignored.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the social suffering resulting from the unemployment, the despair of people who have lost their jobs and their homes, young people who have never been able to find regular employment. Add to this the state of hopelessness and utter despair that leads to family break-up, violence, increases in crime, and mental and physical sickness. These costs are rarely calculated. In fact, it is probably impossible to do so, but they are there just the same. Who can put a figure on the cost to a family, to a son, daughter, husband and wife who have been looking for employment for weeks or even months without success and where the situation has become almost intolerable? Last week, the press reported that according to a Gallup poll, three out of ten Canadians, which means 30 per cent of the people of this country, are still suffering from the pain associated with unemployment.

[English]

In case there is any doubt, Mr. Speaker, as to the connection between unemployment and the agony and cost to a family, let me refer to two major reports which were released in the past week. The first is by the Association of Family Service Agencies and it was released in both Canada and the United States. That Association said that unemployment has become the greatest threat to family stability in Canada and the United States in the past two years. It goes on to cite the tremendous social costs which will have to be borne as a result.

The Canadian Mental Health Association over the past weekend cited the direct links between unemployment and the disastrous consequences to Canadian family life. It said that family life in Canada is becoming filled with anger and despair, and child abuse, suicide, alcoholism, disease, divorce and crime are soaring as a result of unemployment. That unemployment was triggered by this Government.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Miss MacDonald: Earlier this year, Sir, the officials of the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development had the courage to own up to what was taking place. They knew where the responsibility lay for this. They produced a paper which showed this. They frankly conceded that policy-induced high interest rates were one of the major causes of the recession here in Canada and explained why it has been deeper in this country than in any other industrialized country. Policy-induced high interest rates, the Minister's own advisers have said, have led us to the depths of this depression. Yet the Government abdicates responsibility for the recession, while at the same time, if there is any hint of recovery, it goes out and says, "Look, we are responsible for that." That is the double standard which Government continually foists on both the economy and the people of Canada.

Hon. Members opposite, Mr. Speaker, want Canadians to develop amnesia, to accept the current situation as normal, to forget that three and one half short years ago, when that Government returned to power, the prospect of a million or a million and a half unemployed Canadians would have sent shudders down the national spine. They would like Canadians to forget it was normal, just a few short years ago, for high school and college graduates to find work within weeks, not months, after graduating; that it was reasonable for a young couple to expect to own their own home and for the poor to be able to count on a growing economy to produce sufficient revenues to improve their lot. However, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are not prone to self-induced amnesia, they cannot and will not easily forget the losses they have suffered and are still suffering, losses of income, of jobs, of homes, of hope, of opportunity.

This Government has failed, Sir. It has failed in its policies and in its commitments to the people of Canada, and the failure of the Government in the first place was in not having avoided the recession which it created. In the second place, its failure was in not having diminished the calamity of a world recession, and its third failure was in not having found a way out of the mess into which it has plunged us all, but especially the poor of this country.

We have before us, Sir, in the Supplementary Estimates, an item of $291 million under the Canada Assistance Plan. That item is in addition to the forecast of just six months ago. It is statutory, not discretionary, because of federal-provincial arrangements. It is needed because the welfare costs incurred by the Provinces at this time are $291 million higher than forecast by the Minister just six months ago. Since inflation has not risen in that period, that means there are about 10 per cent more people on welfare than the Minister forecast. They are on welfare because they have no jobs and their unemployment insurance benefits have terminated.

Let us be under no illusion about this amount, Sir. This is not a magnanimous gesture by a generous and compassionate Government to make life a little easier for the present recipients of social assistance. The money is going to new recipients. But, Sir, there is a cost far greater than this dollar figure would indicate, the human cost. It is the cost represented by the tens of thousands of our fellow Canadians who are just not making it. It is the economic cost to all Canadians of rehabilitation programs, of psychiatric care, of privation, of police services, courts and prisons, costs we will not truly come to know until the lives of the children deprived through the recession unfold before us. The Canadian Mental Health Association and the Family Services Association say that we are foisting costs on the children of the unemployed which we will simply not know for years to come. These children are deprived by and penalized through the policies of this Government.

There is a further cost we may never be able to calculate, that of the thousands of Canadians led into ways of survival beyond the system, outside the pale of what we call civilized society. They are outside the welfare system, outside unemployment insurance benefits, outside of social assistance or insurance, and into crime and the underground economy. Every Member of this House knows from his or her correspondence and from constituents what it means to be broke, out of work and out of luck in this great country of ours as we approach the winter of 1983. That is what is so tragic, Mr. Speaker. We know the social consequences of hopelessness and poverty. If we have any compassion at all, we can understand the despair and the cries for help which have been triggered.

What concerns me is that when we raise questions with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the Deputy Prime Minister or the person they put up to answer these questions today, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Lapointe), we seem to get no comprehension at all of the tremendous social costs being created. The Social Planning Council of Toronto has outlined it very clearly in its recent paper "The Poor Get Poorer". They say that poor people generally have less access to adequate nutrition, clothing and housing. They tend to experience more serious health problems and stresses relating to discouraging personal circumstances. The National Council of Welfare directs its attention to the effects of poverty on children. They say inadequate family incomes not only results in material deprivation for children, but increases the likelihod that they would suffer from poor health, malnutrition and family conflicts. Poverty was also linked to poor school attendance, low educational and career aspirations and conflicts with the law.

These people are paying the price, because the people managing the economy, the Government of Canada, have failed consistently and continuously. Most of all, the Government is failing to respond to the indicators which point to a social crisis of enormous magnitude in the future. Currently the income of those on social assistance falls anywhere from 20 per cent to more than 50 per cent below the poverty line. We know that while the poor are getting poorer, they are also getting more numerous. Last year another 550,000 Canadians fell below the poverty line. We know that those hardest hit by the loss of jobs, the reduction of hours, wage cuts and wage freezes, were young families and families headed by women, people who would be the last to benefit from any recovery. The recession has been cruel to all Canadians but cruelest of all to those least able to bear its hardships. How can we hope to face the new challenges ahead of us, the challenges of technology, if we cannot meet the problems before us now?

This Government stands condemned, Mr. Speaker, because it cannot deal with the problems of today. It certainly cannot cope with the problems of tomorrow. It cannot deal with the problems of today because of a lack of foresight which brought us into this recession and which created the widespread human suffering and despair seen on every side. The human suffering and despair which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre simply does not seem to comprehend. The symbol and evidence of that lack of foresight, Mr. Speaker, is with us here today in that increased estimate for the Canada Assistance payments. The Government did not see that once again its policies were going to escalate that payment. How much better if that kind of money could be put into jobs, to create meaningful occupations for these people. It would give them some dignity, allow them to feel they are not living as second-class citizens in their own country and that they are contributing to the betterment of this country.

It is true, Sir, that we will pay that additional sum, because of course we must. Our fellow Canadians need it. But much more than the basic survival which this gives them, they need a Government committed to the economic recovery and prosperity not just of the lucky few in this country, but of all Canadians. It is well past time that they got that kind of Government, and it is not to be found over there on the Government benches today.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's message is one that many in this House would not disagree with. We cannot tolerate poverty, we cannot tolerate high unemployment, we have to do things to resolve that situation. The problem I have is that today's motion condemns the Government for running deficits. It has nothing to do with expanding programs but has to do with a Tory policy of contracting deficits which means cutting spending. How does the Hon. Member square the circle of being in favour of enhanced spending on new programs, which she and many in this House are for, with the intent of the motion to condemn the Government for doing precisely that during a period in which we face a world-wide recession of enormous proportions and to which this Government responded by allowing the deficit to rise? How can she stand there and condemn this Government for doing something and still say that she supports the motion which the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) put forward?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, what the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council does not seem to understand it that there is a way to bring about increased revenues into the federal coffers, that is to have more people at work; not on unemployment insurance, not on welfare, not on assistance payments, but at work contributing to the country and paying into federal revenues. If the Member would only look at it he would see that the revenues of the federal Government are down this fiscal year by 3 per cent. That is the problem that we have facing us. Naturally, when revenues fall you are going to have greater deficits. We are saying that a Progressive Conservative Government would bring in programs which will create jobs and not ensure, as this Government does, that people remain unemployed and out of the labour force.

● (1620)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, let us get down to brass tacks. Does the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands agree with the defence critic of her Party who says that we should be moving toward and increase in our defence expenditures from 2 per cent of GNP to 3.5 per cent of GNP at a time when she is saying that we need to put more money where the need is greatest, and that is with the people who have the greatest need in this society? Does she agree with the policy of the critic?

Mr. Crosbie: Naturally.

Miss MacDonald: As Minister in the former Government I can say that I certainly agreed with the strengthening of our Armed Forces. It is this Government that would not follow through on what we had decided. Apart from that, let me mention the $1.4 billion which that Government spent on Petrofina, money it sent out of the country. What about that $1.4 billion which could have gone to provide jobs for Canadians in Canada? Think about those expenditures once in a while.

Mr. Evans: It was an investment in the future.

An Hon. Member: Exporting our money.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to elaborate on her answer to the question from my colleague. She said that if she were in government they would have concrete programs to create jobs. What would those programs be?

Miss MacDonald: With regard to job creation I would ask the Hon. Member to take a look at where we should be in the next five years. I will give you an example of my own riding, Kingston and The Islands, which has the basis to provide jobs in new technologies. They are not being created there because the training programs for people have not been started by this Government. In this country we are not equipped at all to take advantage of the technological age. That is another example of failure on the part of this Government. We are being surpassed by Japan, France and Singapore in the technological age. That is where jobs would be created. However, before they can be created we need trained human resources.

Mr. Peterson: I think we are getting somewhere. Now we have a concrete expenditure program that the Hon. Member wants. She wants the federal Government to get directly involved in a much higher level of training in terms of the new technologies. Have you put a cost estimate on it? Have you realized that training and education is basically a provincial domain and that your condemnation in this area is aimed directly at your provincial Premier?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, now I know why this country, under this Government, will never be able to compete with any other industrialized country as we enter the technological age. If it does not realize that leadership has to come from Government in co-operation with industry, unions and the educational system, he is not talking about the same world that most other countries are living in today. That is going to require a kind of commitment that the present Liberal Government is certainly not prepared to make, and which, properly handled, is going to bring the kinds of revenues into this country and create the kinds of jobs of which unfortunately they, over on that side, do not seem to have any grasp.

Mr. Evans: You were singing a different tune during the constitutional debate.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the Government of Canada should introduce policies similar to those of a number of other countries, such as France, Japan and Singapore.

Miss MacDonald: That's right.

Mr. Kelly: What are the deficits of those countries? How relevant are those deficits to the debate that we have this afternoon? We are not debating job creation; we are debating deficits and the way in which they impact on the economy. If we are to emulate those countries, does that mean we have to spend more money? If you have followed the policies of those countries closely, you should be able to tell me what those deficits are.

Miss MacDonald: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am far more interested in providing jobs for Canadians. I know that in those countries, where the unemployment rate is so very low, they do not have to pay out billions and billions of dollars in unemployment insurance to add to the deficits. In Japan, France and Singapore that cost is just not there. We have to pay it here because we are not prepared to do the same kind of training. That is the unfortunate aspect of our country today. The Government believes that it can run the country on deficits. We happen to believe that you run it by putting people to work. You put people to work when they are properly trained and when they are able to take part in the new technology.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, that means that Governments spend money. Since we are talking about deficits this afternoon, I asked the Hon. Member what the deficit of those states are. I think her answer says very clearly that she frankly does not know. A leading Member of the front benches of the Conservative Party does not know what she is talking about. I think that is regrettable.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, mea culpa. I do not know the deficit of Luxembourg, Liechtenstein, Uruguay and a number of other countries. I have got to state that. I do know that there are a 1.5 million Canadians out of work. I do know that as long as they are out of work our deficit will keep soaring because they are not productive members of our economy and able to contribute to the growth and development of Canada. That I do understand, and that is something which, unfortunately, the Hon. Member does not.

An Hon. Member: Oh dear, oh dear, that really hurts me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate. The Hon. Member for Willowdale.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that makes me sick as a politician it is the fact that Members on the other side will stand up and bleed in public to the extent that blood runs over the green rug in this Chamber, and yet will not come up with specific solutions.

An Hon. Member: What have you done?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, we on this side care as much, if not more, about the unemployed, the poor, the senior citizens, the people who suffer the ravages of inflation, and the people who have lost homes, property and income during this recession. The difference is that we are prepared to do something about it. We have seen from the opposite side today motions proposed by the Tories condemning the amount of Government expenditures. That is a condemnation of this Government. Yet we hear the Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) proposing one concrete program involving training in the new technologies, one program that is going to require additional federal expenditures. She did not say that that would immediately reduce the deficit, because she knows it will not. Training is a long-term investment which we make in our young. It is a necessary investment. It is a very valid one. It is one that we are making. I will go on to give you some figures on that. You might disagree and say we are not doing enough. Then I would applaud you for coming forward and saying it is a good program, we should do more of it. That would be an honest approach to dealing with the problem of people out there, rather than trying to make cheap policics on the back of the people who suffered from this recession.

● (1630)

Let us get on to what this resolution really calls for. The resolution states that the lack of the Government's ability to deal with expenditures has caused our financial situation today. According to the Opposition, it is a situation which should be condemned.

I want to establish the basis for the policies that we have adopted and have had in effect for some time and that we see taking us a long time into the future. They are policies which, I feel, represent a responsible way to meet the current economic realities.

Our White Paper, which was published on October 14, 1975, said:

> The federal government shares the view that the trend of total spending by all governments should not rise more quickly than the trend of the gross national product.

The basis for this policy was then, as it is now, a wise one. It is the philosophy and approach of this Government to adhere to it and to emphasize the primary role that the private sector must play in our country in terms of generating wealth.

Let me go forward eight years from that statement in 1975 to the budget of April, 1983. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said, "This commitment", which we made in 1975, "was met until the recession last year." Since there was a recession, a world-wide recession of which we were a part and in which we suffered severely as Canadians, we broke that policy for a brief period of time. However, our commitment to maintain that trend still remains and we are still within the trend. Let me quote from the budget:

> By 1986-87, federal spending will be virtuallly the same size relative to the economy as in 1981-82 before the worst of the recession.

We have taken a very serious approach to dealing with Government expenditures, making sure that Canadians receive value for the money for which we are the custodian and trustee of the public to spend on their behalf.

I go back to the Glassco Commission on Government Organization in 1962 wherein the primary principle adopted was that we have to let our public servants who are the managers get on with the job of managing. We appointed the Lambert Commission on Financial Management and Accountability. It reported in 1979 and urged that managers be required to manage. It is not only their job but we should be sure that they do it. They should be obliged to pay attention to their respective assigned and acceptable responsibility and to understand that it matters.

We have followed up on what Lambert recommended. I refer Hon. Members and all Canadians to the report issued by the then President of the Treasury Board in 1981 entitled "Accountable Management". Briefly, the conclusion of this report was that the Government has taken the steps necessary to reaffirm control of the public purse. The Government has generated a momentum for continuing reform in financial and human resource management. As well, managers will be required to manage and attention will be paid to results. The Government will be better able to give Canadians value for their money.

We are doing this through a seven point program. First, it involves fiscal plans. We have introduced long-term fiscal plans which are contained in our budgets. They project the results of our initiatives and policies over a five-year period so that Canadians can see where we are going and so that we are not just focusing on the moment but looking for the long-term effects.

Second, we have introduced discipline in the resource allocation process related to the fiscal plan. In other words, we have introduced an envelope program so that various committees of Cabinet are required to have their expenditures kept within an envelope. If we want to introduce new plans within an envelope system in one particular Cabinet committee, the funding must come from the existing programs in that area. In this way we continually renew and get rid of the deadwood. It is a very sound system of financial control within which a Minister, in order to introduce a new program, must go to his fellow Ministers to request funds from their programs in the belief that his program is better for the people of Canada.

The third point concerns a new sense of accountability of the Government to Parliament. We are seeing this through the revised committee system and in the progress of the report on the regulatory reform. We have consultation with the private sector in which it is asked to get involved.

We have a new system of accountability within the Government itself, not only within the envelope program but in internal controls that we have brought into play, including the office of the Comptroller General, which is our creation, and an enhanced role for the Auditor General. Again, it is a Liberal Government that is bringing these tools for fiscal responsibility to bear, to make sure that Canadians are getting value for their tax dollars. We have also introduced accountability and effectiveness in the administration of our financial systems. As well, we have brought in accountability and efficiency in our human resource management and a continuing strategy for reform.

Let me give an example. Opposition Members are continually citing the size of the Public Service. They condemn it and are the ones who are on record as wanting to slash it. They think that the way to achieve efficiency is to chop off large numbers. They would do it by percentages and by eliminating 60,000 public servants.

I believe we have acted more constructively. In spite of the recession and the need to have programs in place to help those who need the social net during these difficult times, we limited the growth in the public sector, through sound management, to a maximum of about one per cent per year. The size of the Public Service under Treasury Board control today is the same in 1983 as it was in 1976-77. That is not a bad record considering that the expenditures of the federal Public Service have had to increase during that period. I do not know of any other Public Service, provincial or federal throughout the world, that has had this type of record.

Of course, a very important aspect of this debate concerns the size of our total economy that is occupied by governments in Canada. Is government becoming too pervasive? Is it taking over functions which the public sector should not be doing and should be leaving to the private sector? Are we decreasing opportunities for Canadians because of our role as a federal Government? That must be the issue to be addressed by the convoluted resolution of the Opposition today.

Let us look at the size of the involvement of all governments in the Canadian economy. In 1969 in Canada, governments occupied 35 per cent of our gross domestic product. This figure was up to 41 per cent in 1980, which is an increase of 6 per cent. During that period of time our increase was among the smallest of the western industrialized countries. Countries such as Italy, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, the Netherlands and Sweden have their governments play a much more pervasive role. We are not talking strictly about the federal Government's role but about governments at all levels. With regard to federal Government outlays, as I said earlier, the federal Government has respected that trend line in terms of growth of our expenditures. In 1981-1982 the federal Government's share of the GNP amounted to 20.8 per cent. In 1982-1983, because of the recession, counter cyclical measures to help Canadians during those tough periods, measures which I strongly support, rose to 23.1 per cent.

● (1640)

Mr. Blenkarn: To 25.8 per cent.

Mr. Peterson: In 1983-1984 they will rise a little bit again to 23.6 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: To 25.8 per cent, according to your own figures.

Mr. Peterson: We will then see a decline, according to our fiscal projections, according to the plans which we responsibly laid before Parliament, to 22.7 per cent.

Mr. Crosbie: Try honesty for a change.

Mr. Blenkarn: Use the national account figures.

Mr. Peterson: Going on to the next year, they will be 22 per cent, and in 1986-1987 that figure will go down to 21.3 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Use the national account figures.

Mr. Peterson: I am here to say that I am glad we have made the federal intervention at this time to help Canadians who need help most.

In our last budget we devoted $2.4 billion in new expenditures to the Special Recovery Capital Project to help Canadians bring on the infrastructure, accelerate implementation of capital projects that will benefit all of us over the long term but would not have been brought on because of the recession or would not have been brought on as quickly. These were brought on to create that type of economic wealth building system which we need in Canada. The amount of $2.4 billion was allocated to create employment immediately. What I think is even more important, and what I am even more proud of, is that we have brought on another $2.4 billion in tax expenditures, tax incentives to the private sector, tax incentives to business to go about doing the job which it does best and which it can do better than any other body in Canada, namely that of creating jobs. That $2.4 billion in tax incentives is being expended in a variety of ways.

I want to go through some of them because I want Canadians to know where their tax dollars are going. I am proud of where they are going. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was talking about having to bring Canadians up to scratch in terms of the new technologies. We projected R and D expenditures of 1.5 per cent of GNP in 1979, and we will meet that commitment probably one year ahead of schedule. Many of us might have the feeling that we should have set a higher target. I would not disagree with those who argue for a higher target, but what have we done in terms of R and D expenditures?

In 1980 our tax incentives for research and development, scientific research, amounted to about $181 million. These benefits were enjoyed by about 343 firms in Canada. They cost us in lost taxes about $120 million. In our 1983 budget we took R and D tax incentives to the private sector, ones which were the most generous of any industrialized nation in the world, and we enhanced them even further in such a way that small business can use them and attract new capital investment. We made a tax shelter available so investors in new enterprises involved in high-tech can attract the equity capital necessary. Those firms that want to go out and increase their expenditures and increase their physical plant and equipment can do it now and get accelerated write-offs.

What have we done in scientific activities alone? We increased our expenditures last year as a federal Government from $2.9 billion to $3.2 billion, a ten per cent increase. That is a very constructive way of meeting some of the problems which the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands was talking about. But did she give us credit for that? No, she just stood up and bled all over the floor without coming up with anything concrete or constructive.

Mr. Jarvis: I think I have heard you say that already. That was on page 1 of your speech, Jim; you forgot to turn the page.

Mr. Peterson: Let us look at the deficit. We have a problem, and we all agree with it. All of us wish we did not need to have a deficit.

Mr. Blenkarn: We don't have to either. You are spending more than you take in.

Mr. Peterson: What caused that deficit? It was caused essentially by a decline in tax revenues during the recession. For the 15 year period prior to 1981—

Mr. Blenkarn: Prior to 1975.

Mr. Peterson: —business profits contributed about 11.2 per cent of our Gross National Product. In 1981 that figure declined to 10 per cent. In 1982, the worst year of the recession, we reached a post-war low of 6.2 per cent. In other words, during the recession businesses did not have the profits and, therefore, did not have the income to pay their taxes. This recession was marked by very high inflation, high interest, falling demand and dwindling profits. What have we done about it? I have talked about the $2.4 billion in Special Capital Recovery Projects. I have talked about the $2.4 billion to the private sector through tax incentives to get it going. We have also done some other things. We have the Indexed Securities Investment Plan. We have tax treatment of business losses for business. We have increased the loss carry forward from three years back to seven years forward. We now have an 11-year period over which losses can be absorbed instead of a seven-year period. We have cut back on some of the energy taxes, including the IORT and the PGRT taxes. We made mining depletion allowances available. You could write them off against other income. That is an incentive to increase investment in that sector.

Let me come to small business. Here we have the special recovery refundable investment tax crecit, a 40 per cent credit for small business.

Farmers get a 14-year period during which their losses can be absorbed—three years back and ten years forward. The Farm Credit Corporation has its resources expanded to $150 million. This was a $100 million increase in its time of difficulty and it means that farmers will be able to bet loans at 4 per cent below the going rate.

What did we do in the housing area? I am very proud of the initiatives of this Government. They were worked out in consultation with the Toronto Home Builders Assciation, HUDAC Ontario and the Canadian housing industry. This is the way programs should be worked out. They were worked out to meet the needs of that industry. It was demonstrated to us that for every new house going up, a very desirable social objective, we create 2.1 person years of work. How was this done? We did it through a series of $3,000 grants. For each $3,000 grant, not only did we get 2.1 person years of direct employment and a home but we generated $10,600 of new tax revenue in the first year of construction of that house. That is a creative use of public money in order to create jobs and achieve the socially desirable results. I am very proud of the housing programs we have undertaken. I thing that in the future if we want to be constructive we will look to creating even more social housing for Canadians. This is a very pressing need. I am very proud of the programs we have introduced that give Canadians who cannot otherwise afford good housing the types of things we have demonstrated we are capable of doing in the past and that we are going to devote even more resources to in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kelly): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time lapsed some time ago. I had assumed he was concluding his remarks and that is why I let him continue. Are there any questions, comments, answers?

Mr. Blenkarn: We must congratulate the Hon. Member as Chairman of the House Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Would he agree with the Prime Minister's statement in his press conference on August 13, 1969 when he said:

> We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control.

● (1650)

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, of course I agree with that. This is the whole gist of why this debate has been so unfounded. We have been doing things since that comment in 1969 to bring Government spending under control. We have a whole new system of fiscal management; the five-year plans we have been projecting, the six-year plans in our budgets. We have brought into effect the office of the Comptroller-General. The Auditor General has an enhanced role to play. Parliamentary committees, through the revised estimates, have better access to every type of expenditure being made so there is accountability of the Government to Parliament. We have the enveloped system, which is one of the most effective ways of ensuring that we do not bring in new programs just to be filed on top of old ones. We have a way of eliminating poor programs and replacing them with better ones.

The size of the federal Government's role in our economy, as demonstrated by the figures, has held pretty well firm throughout the period 1969 to now, hovering around 21 per cent of our GNP. Barring a recession, we had hoped to have it down to about 19 per cent by now. Because of that recession, we have undertaken to create social nets to protect people. Without them, it would have been a travesty in human terms and many people would have suffered. If you came to me and said, "Peterson, the Liberal Government has not created enough social nets, it should be spending more to protect people during this difficult period", you might have received a little sympathy from this side with that type of resolution.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Willowdale is totally misleading when he says that the Government is not building on old programs. One of the tragedies we face today is that there is no zero base budgeting going on. The A base in the estimates is the old program. If you go to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), he will tell you there is no zero base budgeting going on in old programs. That is why we are out of control. This House and our committee system is not doing the work it should be doing, examining and forcing zero-based budgeting. The only zero base budgeting is in the Department of National Defence. The rest of it is incremental additions of indexing CPI on top of old programs. That is what the debate is all about. When the Hon. Member for Willowdale tries to imply that we are going back and examining old programs, he is totally wrong. That is not true to fact.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I hate to inform the Hon. Member for Capilano that under the envelope system, if we are going to add a new program, we have to get it out of the same envelope. If you have an envelope with X number of programs and you want to add X plus one, you have to take it out of an existing program. That is the discipline that is imposed.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have not done that.

Mr. Peterson: The Hon. Member says we are not doing that. If Members opposite want to see a big cut in the federal role being played, I challenge them to come forward to us with concrete programs that we can cut out. I have heard nothing about programs that they want to add. I suggest they come to us with programs they want to cut out. If they feel they are wasteful, they may find a very receptive audience on this side, but stop coming forward to us with increased expenditures such as the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands did, saying we have not spent enough to help those who have suffered.

Let me respond to what we have done in this period in terms of job creation. I will never tell any person that it is acceptable that we have an unemployment level that exceeds 11 per cent in Canada. This is our greatest challenge. Instead of just bleeding about it, we have been doing something.

Miss MacDonald: You created it.

Mr. Peterson: The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands says we created that position. The fact is that we have created the best record of job creation in this country of any western industrialized nation since 1970. In the last 12 months alone we have created 350,000 new jobs. Since 1970 we have created 50 per cent more jobs in Canada than we had 13 years ago, this during a period when West Germany has suffered a 2 per cent decline in the number of jobs.

If you are comparing us to our neighbours, bring in those facts and recognize the fact that all the private analysts are now saying that Canada is better poised to come out of this recession better than any other western country, that our record has been very good. Those are the facts. Interest rates are down. Our six and five program has done something about inflation. We are creating jobs, even though they are not being created fast enough. Tell us how to create more jobs more quickly without increasing the deficit. Tell us how to do it by increasing the deficit reasonably so that we get value for our dollar. That is the type of constructive debate Canadians deserve in this House rather than the petty politics I have heard here today.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have to correct another very misleading statement made by the Hon. Member for Willowdale.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Perth.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) correctly, he said that the Government has taken steps to assume control of Government expenditure. I think that is what he said, amidst the rhetoric. I am about to receive my twelfth or thirteenth Auditor General's Report since coming to this House. Unhappily, every one of them has been a litany of horror stories with respect to the non-control of Government over expenditure. If the Hon. Member has inside knowledge, am I to expect that this next Auditor General's Report will finally concur with his proposition that the Government has assumed control and accountability over expenditures? The last 12 that I read said exactly the opposite to what the Hon. Member for Willowdale alleges.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): A brief reply by the Hon. Member for Willowdale.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have two points to make. Yes, the Auditor General will be doing a job that we asked him to do by pointing out where we have mismanaged funds. If anyone in this country thinks that we are not going to make mistakes, they are absolutely wrong. The question is, what are we doing to try to avoid making mistakes. That is why we appointed an Auditor General and a Comptroller General. This is why we are prepared to make these mistakes public. This is why we have enhanced the role of Parliament in making us accountable. This is why we have introduced the expenditure control system involving the envelope system.

Mr. Jarvis: We did that.

Mr. Peterson: Before you were elected in 1979, we had virtually developed to completion the envelope system. You are the ones who brought it in and we are the ones who are using it. If you are against the envelope system that you brought in, based on the work we have done prior to 1979, then tell us. We are very much in favour of the envelope system. It is a good system.

We are pleased to have the constructive input of Members of Parliament as to where they feel we can cut back expenditures. I heard one suggestion today from the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He said that Pratt & Whitney should not have received a grant under one of our programs to start building engines in his riding. I hope more Members will come forward with examples of what they think is blatant Government waste. We can then take steps and act constructively to deal with the type of situation that we all want to eliminate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I did indicate that the Hon. Member for Willowdale ought to be brief. The time allotted for questions and answers has now expired. Debate. I notice the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is standing. I think the proper order of speakers ought to be the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), followed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway and then followed, if there is one, by a Member to my right.

ALLOTTED DAY—S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT SPENDING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Huntington:

That this House agrees without reservation with the prediction of the Prime Minister made on August 13, 1969, in a nationally televised press conference when he said, "We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control" and calls upon the government to initiate policies which would avoid the Prime Minister's prediction.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I can always tell that we have had an effective Opposition Day when we hear a lot of noise, a lot of defensive statements and a lot of poor points from the other side. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) who just spoke that I have a great deal of respect for him in committee. He runs a good show as chairman of a committee. He does the job well and with leniency. However, I would like to ask him if he knows who set up the new form of the estimates. If he does not know, I will tell him. It was the person who was the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee before the 1979 election.

Mr. Evans: That's nonsense.

Mr. Fennell: It was done during that term of office and he was responsible. I would also like to point out to the Hon. Member that most of the ideas for estimates, public accounts and Government expenditure have come from this side of the House and most particularly from the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

Mr. Peterson: We respect them.

Mr. Fennell: But why does he not follow them? I would like to follow up on some of the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) and particularly to the questions he asked the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). The Hon. Member is missing the point that the Government has failed to address the change that is occurring at this time and the structural unemployment that has resulted from this change. It has done absolutely nothing in that regard.

The Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) held a great three-day conference to advertise to the public that he has done something worthwhile. Everyone I have spoken to from the private sector who attended that conference said it was a waste of time but it gave them an opportunity to get together at Government expense and chat with their friends outside of the conference hall. I feel that that is only one example of how the Government has missed the point.

I have recently had the opportunity to review the 1983 report of the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry. If someone from our Government were to take the time to find out about the tax incentives and the methods followed in Japan which put Japan so far ahead of us, he would learn something that would perhaps help the country out of its dilemma.

We are arguing that welfare and social programs are not enough. We must develop policies and programs that create jobs in order to eliminate the unemployment that draws on society and that, according to the Canadian Mental Health Association, will take $50 billion out of the Canadian economy. The unemployment rate is not 11 per cent as was stated but is 19 per cent when those people who have lost hope are included.

The Government has done just about everything to destroy the country, discourage the investment sector and remove the incentive that will get the country moving. The Government should have listened to the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on August 13, 1969, when he said of programs:

> Do they now serve their purpose? Should they be curtailed? How do we cut the pie to make room for today's new priorities? These are questions whose answers will affect the nature of our expenditures. These are questions whose answers will determine the distribution of expenditures in years to come.

The Prime Minister did not listen to his own speech.

This morning, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) made a number of statements that were rather interesting. He mentioned the recommendations of the Lambert Commission. The Government has really sidetracted the excellent Lambert Commission study. If the Government had followed the recommendations contained within that study, we would not find ourselves in the dilemma we are in today. That is only one example.

This morning, the President of the Treasury Board went on to state that the costs of handling the programs and the operating expenditures were minimal. The operating costs for expenditure programs amounts to $12 billion. That means that close to 15 per cent of the cost is spent on the programs themselves. That amount is spent so that civil servants may dilly-dally away their time creating bureaucracies without performing their functions. If the cost of raising money were included, it would be different. That expenditure is minimal because it is mandatory. We are not a volunteer organization like the United Way or the Red Cross, organizations which spend so much money raising money. This is money that the Government has spent trying to decide how to give it away. Most of the good ideas the Government has heard have been bypassed.

Hon. Members have spoken about the envelope system. We had good intent when we implemented that system. The Government has abused the envelope system. I think that the envelope sprung a leak, so the Government took a small envelope and put it into a bigger envelope and then into a bigger envelope. We have original Estimates (A), (B), (C) and (D) and there is a bigger envelope for each one. That was not the intent of the envelope system. It was intended to be used as a budget, and as the Hon. Member for Capilano mentioned, it was to begin as a zero-based budget. The Government does not do that. Whenever it has a new idea, it brings up another Supplementary Estimate. The Government has used the envelope system and it has abused it.

The President of the Treasury Board spoke about increased productivity in the national economy. I have spent quite a bit of time investigating what has been done in other countries. We could learn some lessons about productivity from the Government of Japan. Japan was defeated after World War II and does not have any natural resources. As a result, the Japanese had to use their brains. This Government opposite has not used its brains to increase the productivity of our country.

Mr. Evans: What about the Americans?

Mr. Fennell: I hear Hon. Members opposite asking about the Americans. We are not Americans and we are not Japanese. We have much greater advantages than either of those nations and we should be far ahead of them right now.

The President of the Treasury Board went on to mention the productivity of Government programs. When we look at the large increases, we can see that the Government's own programs have not increased productivity.

I am happy to see that the Minister of State for Economic Development has entered the House because there are a number of questions which I would like to ask him. I hope he is the next one to speak on this subject.

The President of the Treasury Board went on to speak about efficiency and effectiveness. We have not seen any effectiveness in the Government since 1980. Its budget and costs are out of control and it has not implemented efficiency and effectiveness. Government Members give us only dialogue and do not give us the facts.

The President of the Treasury Board mentioned how much the Government has reduced the cost of delivery of programs. No matter how effective it is, the cost of a program always seems to go up. He states there is a strong framework for controlling expenditures. Perhaps the framework cost more than the expenditures. The Government is not keeping an eye on things and has no hesitation in bringing forward Supplementary Estimates that make the original Estimates look ridiculous. We pointed this out to the Minister of State for Economic Development at a committee meeting last week. We asked him why so many items in Supplementary Estimates (B) were over 100 per cent greater than in the original Estimates. The Government has lost control.

I wish the President of the Treasury Board were in the House. When he had the portfolio of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he authorized a study of the steel bar mill in the Windsor area, which I understand cost about $750,000. That is an example of waste. At the time he requested the study, Stelco and Co-Steel the other major producers of steel bar in Canada were operating at 40 per cent capacity; today they are operating at between 40 and 60 per cent capacity, but that will slide back to 40 per cent during the winter months. How can the present Minister say that the government is still studying that problem when he knows that the industry is in a surplus position at the moment?

Let us deal now with the aerospace industry which the Government thinks is a winner, although it has been incredibly bad at picking winners and losers. Last year it blew $2 billion on Canadair and de Havilland. It produced a toy jet for corporate executives at Canadair and a small airliner at de Havilland. The two airlines that were the largest purchasers of the Dash 7 aircraft have gone into bankruptcy. That speaks well for a small number of passenger airplanes.

We have seen the Government pick the wrong things, and now it has decided to pick on helicopters. Why does it think it can be successful in this after the losses it has shown? Not only did it pick helicopters but it put the original one up at Mirabel in an effort to justify, for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), that the expropriation in that area was a good idea in the first place. Imagine building Mirabel in order to land helicopters there! Imagine having that much runway for a helicopter! The Government spent hundreds of millions of dollars building a great industrial park that no one in the private sector will go near, even at a subsidized cost.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the Hon. Member should give us a few explanations about the Arrow program that was turned down by the Conservative Party. He should give us an explanation for that.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what year that was. I know that when the Hon. C. D. Howe was a Cabinet Minister in the House he indicated that the program would be scrapped. Imagine how many billions of dollars the Government would have blown on the Arrow program by now. Our deficit could be 10 per cent higher than it is today.

Mr. Tousignant: Don't rewrite history.

Mr. Fennell: The Government is always trying to justify its past expenditures, but it has not made any sound expenditures as yet. It put the Bell helicopter at Mirabel, surrounded by farmers. There is no technical expertise in that area and the people do not want any industry there. They just want to run their farms in an area which contains 1 per cent of Quebec's class one arable land. The Government wants to put the helicopters there so that it can justify the $1 billion that was spent to build a surplus airport. These must be dandy helicopters if they need that much runway.

I support the point made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) in relation to the $500 million that is going to Pratt & Whitney. It is amazing how well that company has done in East Hartford, Connecticut, United States. I happen to have gone to school there. That company was very successful post-war and it still is. It is amazing how much it has done without Government subsidies. I admit it has had National Defence contracts to develop new technology. That is why the Americans are so much further ahead than we are. Our Government does not even contemplate that.

The Japanese leave it to the private sector to decide who should win and who should lose. I wish the Minister of State for Economic Development would read papers such as the Japan Robot News and that published by the Yano Research Institute. They would give him some lead information about where to go. I do not believe he knows how to get out of this dilemma.

We have to create jobs and we have to create wealth. The redistribution of wealth has not worked because there is none left to redistribute. We have to create wealth for jobs and new industries, and we have to stop these give-away programs wherever the Government sees fit.

Since 1968, manufacturing productivity in Canada has increased at the second slowest pace of any industrialized nation. There are no incentives. Since 1979, $16.5 billion of investment capital has left the country because the Government is hostile to the private sector which has not been provided with incentives. From 1977 to 1982 productivity stood still and since 1982 it has been reduced by 2.8 per cent, the worst rate of any country in the world.

I should like to remind Hon. Members opposite of what some Members of the Government have said. In 1980-81, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), in his former capacity, said that in order to achieve the essential reduction in the deficit great restraint over expenditures had been required. Hon. Members opposite speak words but they do not mean anything. In 1981-82, the same Minister said that "we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially". You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was the National Energy Program that brought this country to a standstill. In 1982-83, the same Minister said that interest rates would rise even more and that Canada would price itself out of world markets.

Our export sales of manufactured goods have decreased so dramatically that we are no longer competitive, Mr. Speaker. We are not highly productive and we have lost our sense of innovation and of private enterprise.

In April, 1983, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that he was presenting a fiscally responsible budget. Mr. Speaker, no budget that has increased our expenditures by up to $100 billion where the deficit is $31 billion, is a responsible budget. In 1968-69 our national debt was $18 billion; today it is $150 billion, and next year it will be ten times that or 1,000 per cent of what it was.

In 1968 Canada had 5.744 per cent of world trade, but in 1981 it had 3.8 per cent. In 1968 we exported more than Japan did; today we export half of what Japan exports. That is because Japan put plans and policies in place. It did it with thought. It did it with policy. Particularly, Mr. Speaker, it gave initiatives to the private sector which this Government has failed to do and, as a result, we do not have the jobs. We have this tremendous deficit because we do not have the industry. We have two million people unemployed who are drawing on society. Their costs, according to the Canadian Mental Health Association, could amount to $50 billion.

• (1720)

I believe this debate today is very important in order to make the people aware that this Government is misguided and misdirected. Its priorities are not where they should be. It is our responsibility, as the Opposition, before we form the next government, to let the people know what damage this Government has done to Canadians and the debt it has built up for every man, woman and child in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, comments. Debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this debate. The Conservative motion is that the House agree without reservation with a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1969 about the country being on the road to financial disaster if nothing is done to bring spending under control. The motion goes on to call on the Government to initiate policies to avoid that prediction. In other words, it calls for tight fiscal restraint. I have a question I would like to put to Hon. Members of the House, especially to my Conservative colleagues on my right. I see the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) looking up. I will put the question to her. Who said, "In spite of the very substantial deficit with which we are confronted, programs in very important areas necessary for the development of the country are being cut"? That speaker gave five examples, medicare, post-secondary education, scientific research, funding for the arts and international aid. Who was it who stood in this House and said that? I will give you a further hint, Mr. Speaker. The speech was made within a year of that quote from the Prime Minister. I will ask the last Hon. Member who spoke. Who said that?

Mr. Fennell: I bet I did not say it.

Mr. Waddell: I will tell you who said it. It was the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield who was the Leader of the Conservative Party and Leader of the Opposition. Is it not incredible that the Conservative Party offers a motion today which relates back to 1969? That was the era when "Wacky Bennett" had just won an election in British Columbia, Jean Lesage had just resigned in Quebec. There was a federal-provincial finance conference in Quebec which was supposed to be a watershed that year. The motion goes back to 1969 and quotes the Prime Minister, who was supposed to be against further federal spending, suggesting the Prime Minister should live by that today, when around the same period Robert L. Stanfield stood up in the Commons and said, "You really cannot cut federal spending because if you do, you are going to cut back medicare, post-secondary education, scientific research, funding to the arts and international aid." Is that not incredible? Why does the Conservative Party not get its act together?

The previous speaker said that the Government is misguided and misdirected. I cannot think of a Party which is more misguided and more misdirected than the Conservative Party when it has speaking for it, supposedly, a Red Tory, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, who would agree, I believe, with what Robert Stanfield said, and the ultra-blue Tory, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), and the ultra rightwing Tory, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). That Party cannot have it both ways if it is going to govern Canada. Which is it going to be?

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the spending of this Government is not under control. The question surely is, where is that spending going? The motion is simply designed to embarrass the Liberal Government—and that is pretty easy to do—and it has backfired and embarrassed the Tories. If one looks at Robert Stanfield's speech, one will see that it really makes the Official Opposition look silly in introducing this kind of text today, when there was so much more it could have put in a motion. I suggest that that Party look at the previous motion which the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands brought forward. She talked about unemployment and the new kind of economy we have to face in Canada.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are incompetent in managing the economy, but that does not have to be said in the House of Commons. One can ask a cab driver down the street, he will say the same thing. The method of the Liberal Government is really, "If it moves, throw money at it. If if has votes, throw more money at it. If it is one of your friends in an industry which is in trouble, give it more money". We give $2 billion in petroleum grants in this country. For what? For companies to have 105 per cent write-offs. We give money for unemployment insurance in this country, and the reason we do that is because of Government policy. That is how it tackled inflation, by slowing down the economy completely and by creating unemployment.

We are really dealing with a Government which has run out of ideas. Modern North American Liberalism is finished. It does not stand for anything. It zigs and it zags and it tries to build on the old programs. The Throne Speech which is coming up will tag a few things on to the Unemployment Insurance Program, move a little bit here, have a commission on medicare. But it is failing. And I say this to the Liberals who are listening: watch what the Conservatives are saying in North America. I disagree with them, but they are getting some support because of those Hon. Members have been saying what they believe in strongly, and they are not zigging and zagging. It falls to us on the left, as a Social Democratic Party, also to say what we believe in strongly. If that happens, you will find that there will be two major political Parties in Canada come the next election, the Conservatives and the New Democrats.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Could the Hon. Member give us some explanations regarding the Arrow the Progressive Conservative Government dismantled?

Mr. Waddell: Absolutely! It is the same in Quebec.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Waddell: Yes . . . wait and see!

[English]

I would just like to say one more thing to the Conservatives and let them consider whether they are for Mr. Stanfield or for the Hon. Member for Capilano. Perhaps as a little forerunner of what we may see from a Conservative government, I will quote from a book called, "The Contenders—A Tory quest for power". On page 86 of the book, I notice the new Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) says, in terms of what his government is going to be like, the spending of his government and the political appointments of his government, and I quote:

> I am going to dance with the ones who brung me.
> That means Tories that's what this is all about.
> Ya dance with the lady what brung ya.

That means, of course, that he is going to continue the same patronage-infested system in Canada. The harbours will be built in a different riding in the Maritimes. It is the same kind of old system which we have to get away from. There may be a few changes, less money on social service, more money for armaments.

Mr. Epp: Tell us about Manitoba!

Mr. Waddell: I can see the new Leader of the Opposition now, who really is just a poodle for Conrad Black and the boys in Toronto. Is that not who is really calling the shots? When Conrad wants to take Brian for a walk and tell him what the new policy will be of the government, that is what the policy will be. He is simply the poodle. It is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Robert Stanfield is not back in this House, because there is a man who understood what a deficit meant. There was a man who understood that you did not focus on a deficit. You focused on the programs. What does it matter, really, what the public debt is, although we should be concerned about that. If people are working and if the economy is prosperous, will people lose sleep over whether the deficit is $10 billion or $11 billion? No, Mr. Speaker.

We are faced with a high technological society, with rapid technological change. The previous speaker might want to listen for a minute. If he hopes to get into Government he will have to deal with the fact that we have a society which is rapidly replacing people with machines, not just blue collar workers but white collar workers, middle management, secretaries and so on, especially women. We are going to get more of this.

• (1730)

The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) said "we have created jobs". But what kind of jobs? "We have spent money", he said, but what have we spent that money on? The jobs being created are low-paying service jobs. We are losing the middle rung jobs. In five years we are going to have a society in which a few people at the top make big money and the great mass of the people are down at the bottom. We are going to lose the middle class. It is not just a question of bleeding for the unemployed or special groups who have problems. We are in real danger of losing our middle class, and I would think Members of Parliament would be very interested in that.

What can be done, Mr. Speaker? I do not think we should focus on cutting the deficit. We should focus on an industrial policy for Canada. We need economic democracy. It seems to me the Conservatives and Liberals have adopted the philosophy of "leave it to the magic of the marketplace". As I say that, I am looking over at the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston). Let me suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that will not happen. First of all, Canada is a mixed economy. When you have problems at the public level, the civil service or Crown corporations, you do not throw them out like the baby with the bath water, you reform them. You do not stand up and attack Government per se. We saw in British Columbia that people were very politicized as the general strike approached. Like the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble), people attack the whole notion of the Public Service. They say it is not a job if you are a public servant. It is not a job if you are a garbage man, police officer, fireman, a clerk sending out cheques or a nurse looking after old people. Somehow that is not a job. Well, it is and we should talk about that. You cannot say these are not jobs.

Getting back to my theme, Mr. Speaker, you have to have an industrial policy. We have to get labour, government and industry together. Not at that conference that the Minister had, the Canada Tomorrow Conference, although it was well intentioned. But if you want to get labour into it, you have to assure the working people of this country that they are going to be protected in some way from change. They are not stupid, they know they are going to suffer from change and there will be job lay-offs. But they have to be protected. The Government should look at some of the work of Robert Reich, a Harvard economist. He said:

> Unless members of a democratic society are persuaded the benefits and burdens of change are being allocated more or less evenly, they will resist change, and their resistence will prove extremely powerful.

I saw that in British Columbia where the Government tried to come in with draconian restraint measures and the people resisted. They were pushed to a point at which they resisted. Why should the worker not have a say in technological change or safety in the work place? Why should the worker not have some say? Why should he not be put into a training program which will take him to a new level? Why should the safety net not be expanded? That is what the Canadian middle class is worried about. They are prepared to accept change, they know it is coming. They do not want to sit here and debate deficits or debate 1969 quotes, especially one which goes one way and to which Robert Stanfield takes exactly the opposite viewpoint. That is silly. They want us to make it easier for them to leave their homes and go where the jobs are. They want us to look for policies where the human virtues of participation, equality and security can be brought forward. That is the direction of the future economy of Canada. But let us not go back to look at what Trudeau said in August, 1969. Let us look ahead. Let us look to policies which will deal with this high-tech revolution which is coming fast. Let us make sure that it is not just Conrad Black and the boys who benefit from change. Let us make sure there is a recovery for everyone.

I suggest the Government look at some of the ideas I put forward today. I hope that in their next motion the Conservatives will give these people something to shoot at rather than these silly motions which really do not have very much substance to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I remind Hon. Members that debate will terminate, according to a House order made earlier, at 5.45 p.m. The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, saving the best for last, as it were.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has not been apprised of a point of order, but I will gladly accept one. My understanding is that debate ends at 5.45 p.m. If there is some indication to the contrary, would an Hon. Member please stand and indicate why?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there was agreement among the House Leaders that the vote, which would ordinarily take place at 5.45 today, will be deferred until 5.45 tomorrow and debate will carry through until six o'clock, the normal hour of adjournment. That is my understanding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is not informed of any agreement that the question might be put at 5.45 and the debate might continue until six o'clock. The information I have is that the Chair is obligated to put the question at 5.45. If some Hon. Member wants to seek unanimous consent of the House to permit debate to continue until six and the question put then, that is at variance from what I understand to be the existing order of the House. Everyone is clear that the vote is deferred until tomorrow, but normally a vote to be deferred is taken at 5.45 and then we move on to other business.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments you made, could there be agreement that debate end today at six o'clock? There are a number of Members who want to speak and we might be able to divide the time, as we have done in the past, through unanimous agreement.

• (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am not going to attend too much to the essential formalities. The Hon. Member has risen on a point of order and cannot put a motion in that regard. I think he seeks unanimous consent, and that issue ought to be cleared up. I will repeat. The situation is that the Chair would, under House order made earlier, put the question at 5.45, which would then be deferred until tomorrow, unless of course the question is negatived. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has sought unanimous consent of the House to change that House order and to have debate continue until six o'clock. Is there unanimous consent to have the debate continue until six o'clock?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, we agree to that, assuming that at 5.45 you would call it six o'clock. In other words, you would put the yeas and nays at six o'clock rather than at 5.45. I think we could agree to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I seek unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to see the clock at six o'clock for purposes of putting the question, the yeas and nays?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered. The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I have been handling the debate unofficially on this side of the House, and my understanding is the same as yours, that the vote was to have been called at 5.45. I have no trouble accommodating the hon. gentleman for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I will speak for ten minutes and then relinquish the floor to whoever may want it on the opposite side of the House.

The Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) mentioned in his address that the esteem of this House in the eyes of the public has fallen to an all-time low. Most Canadians find that this House is irrelevant, not only to the life of Canadians in general, but to their lives specifically. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the reason for that does not lie with the spiralling deficit, which he attacked so vigorously this afternoon, but can be found in the type of motion which has absorbed the valuable time of this House all day. The deficit is an archaic political issue. It was raised about four or five years ago. It tended to shape political behaviour or attitudes in the 1979 election. Since 1980 not very many people are paying attention to it. The reason they are not paying attention to it, quite frankly, is that they know that in a recessionary period you cannot eliminate the deficit or roll it back to any significant degree.

The Opposition, nonetheless, has decided in its wisdom to resurrect this issue and parade it once again before the House and, hopefully, before the media and the Canadian public, in an effort to try to recapture some of the lost political ground that will be revealed in the next Gallup poll.

Mr. Waddell: We are hoping.

Mr. Kelly: If this argument worked once, four or five years ago, then, by golly, it just might work again. If we can revive it, if we can renovate it, if we can still address it as forcefully today as we did originally, then maybe we can hold on to those voters that we feel slipping from our grasp because we really do not have any specific, concrete policies in this Party or in this leadership. Mr. Speaker, I think the ploy is that transparent. They are desperately looking for the old winning issues that brought them victory in the old glory days of 1977, 1978 and 1979, when it felt good to bash Grits and finally win an election. It just might win again. Why, we even have more facts and figures this time. We have different and better speakers. Who knows, we may be able to ride this again into another electoral victory.

I wish the Opposition could see themselves as others see them when they try to make political points with this archaic, rusty old rhetorical issue. For heaven's sake, they cannot even agree on the nature of the debate in this House. One person gets up and says, "Cut." The other person gets up and says, "Well, perhaps cut but, by golly, we should be thinking of spending too." So you have got cutters and spenders in the same Party.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Kelly: Not only are they inconsistent in where they are coming from and where they want to go, Mr. Speaker, but they do not even know their facts in this issue. The Hon. Member gets up and asks why this Government does not act more like the Governments of Japan, France, Singapore and Governments like that. Why do they not? When you point out to her that those are high deficit Governments, she did not know that. Someone else gets up and asks if we realize that Government spending has gone from 33.7 per cent to 47.3 per cent of disposable income. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, he fails to inform the House, and presumably the Canadian public, that that increase in expenditures did not result exclusively, or even primarily, from the expenditures of the Government of Canada. If he had read the fine report produced by the Simon Fraser Institute, he would have found out that those increases have emanated from provincial Governments, most of whom are Conservative.

As the Tories develop the argument, Mr. Speaker, after making their first point that this Government is spending tons of money, they then go on to say that not only are we spending a lot of money, but we are spending a lot of it wastefully. They ask the Canadian public, through the media that reports the deliberations of this House, what they have as a result of those expenditures. What have you received? Nothing. All is decay around you. We live in a wasteland. You have got nothing. You have been robbed. Mr. Speaker, they say it with such passion, with such conviction, with such vigour in their voices that most Canadians say, "By God, they must be right. No one could speak like that. No one could speak with that authority if that were not the case. By golly, we must not have got very much from them. They are right."

I invite you and others, Mr. Speaker, to look at the society around us to see what is out there. You do not have to be a brilliant academician to test the validity of that argument. Just open the door and walk around your neighbourhood and see what it is like and how it has changed in the last 10 or 15 years while the Liberals were in power. What do you find? You find beautiful senior citizens' residences everywhere paid for by, in large measure, the Government of Canada. You find one of the best educational systems anywhere in the world funded primarily, at the post secondary school level, by the Government of Canada. Walk further and you will find the finest hospital system in the world funded again, through provincial authorities, by the Government of Canada. Everywhere you look, Mr. Speaker, no matter what part of Canada or what community you live in, you will find tangible, concrete evidence of what that deficit has given Canadians. It has given Canadians the finest social system in the western world. That is something that all of us in this House can be proud of.

After they talk about the wastefulness, Mr. Speaker, they then say, "We have solutions. We are not negative carpers or shrill harbingers of doom and gloom. We have solutions." The first solution proposed this afternoon was to have this House adopt the report of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. If somehow you can have special committees of this House with special obligations to review, monitor, curb and cut Government spending, then this House will bring to Government spending the rigour that has been hitherto missing. Mr. Speaker, I point out to you that there is a political system which already has that type of committee. That is the United States. But the deficit down there is far larger than it is here. I would argue that committees of that sort, however well intentioned, are quite frankly not the issue.

Another solution is to elect a Tory government. The Tories say to elect them because they know the value of a dollar. But every Conservative leadership candidate went into debt during his or her leadership campaign.

Mr. Gamble: I beg your pardon? That is a Liberal lie.

Mr. Kelly: I take that back, Mr. Speaker. I stand corrected. Everyone of them but one. But all the major candidates, the serious ones, were in debt. They went hopelessly and shamefully into debt.

The only time the Tories have elected a Government recently was in 1979. What did they do with the deficit? They called it a stimulative deficit. But it did not matter how one called it, it was a deficit nonetheless. If Canadians entrust the Government of this fair land in the hands of the Party that now forms the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, they will be making the gravest and most irresponsible mistake they could ever make, if they think that electing them would solve the economic problems of the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair heard earlier that the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) wanted to leave time for Opposition Members, but there is no House order to that effect. I must put the question as to whether there are questions, comments or answers. If there are not, of course I will recognize the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, there are no questions with which we have to bother the Hon. Member because we heard nothing that would cause us to ask questions. What we heard, we wondered at. We have heard the same kind of Liberal serene talk as the people of Canada have heard since 1965.

The quotation which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave us on August 13, 1969, was: "We would soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control." That is one of the few accurate statements the Prime Minister has made in the last 14 years.

I have just two other statements which he also made. This statement was made in January of 1980 when he made a solemn commitment. I quote from the Prime Minister in Toronto—the fountain of financial rectitude is Toronto, of course—when he promised to, "manage more rigorously the nation's finances in order to make more effective use of the taxpayers' money."

A final quotation of the Prime Minister is from the Toronto Star, the Liberal Bible, on February 10, 1980. The Prime Minister said, "I want to manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down because the economy would be administered in a sounder way ." Well, interest rates after that went from 11 per cent to 23 per cent before they started to come down again.

Those are three of the economic statements of the world's elder statesman who is now going about the world making statements in another field. If his statements on this other interest of his, the peace interest, are as accurate and as full of fruition as his statements have been with respect to the Government's finances in Canada, the Canadian economy and interest rates in Canada, all I can tell you is, God help the world.

The worst advice I could give the Hon. Member who just concluded is to be himself or to continue to be himself. This country has been operating in the red for so long under the Government that the public accounts resemble a slaughter house. Not only is its deficit this year $31.3 billion, three times what it was in 1979-80, when we were in office and having to deal with the results of Liberal deficits for that year and the previous year, the Auditor General finds that there is a $5.3 billion hidden deficit. I am not making it up. It is in a quote from the Ottawa Citizen. We have to add to the $31.3 billion another hidden deficit of $5.3 million.

I point this out to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader, although I am not sure whether he reads or not. The article in the Citizen states that if appropriate accounting procedures were taken, the Government's final deficit figure for last year of almost $24.7 billion was understated by $5.3 billion, one reason being that it did not properly report unemployment insurance transactions and so on.

Is the Government spending money wisely? I hold up another clipping of just several days ago entitled "Kaplan accused of spending $43,000 to spruce up image." The unthinkable sprucing the unspruceable. There is $43,000 being spent by a Cabinet Minister to spruce up his image. We multiply that by the total number of Cabinet Ministers, because they are all sprucing up their images as well. They are trying to spruce up the unspruceable. They are trying to goose the ungooseable, not only spruce the unspruceable. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) is shocked by the ungooseable or the unspruceable. I do not blame her.

I want to refer now to the Government's greatest growth. The greatest growth it has had in the 18 or 19 years it has been in power is shown in the fiscal plan that was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on April 19. I refer you to page 3 where it states:

> Debt grew 26.6 per cent in 1982-83 and it is projected to grow a further 26 per cent this year.

That is the Government's record in growth, not the economy. The economy has not grown in the last three or four years. We are now in a worse position than we were three years ago but the debt has grown 26.2 per cent in 1982-83 and is supposed to grow at least 26 per cent this year.

The Minister of Finance goes on to say:

> Declining deficits thereafter imply somewhat slower debt growth, but total net federal debt is projected to rise progressively as a percentage of GNP, from 34.4 per cent in 1982-83 to 46.0 per cent by 1986-87.

The financial requirements, which is the borrowing the Government makes to meet these deficits, will be approximately 6.9 per cent of the GNP this year. That is the record of the Government. Everything else declined except the public debt. The total amount of goods and services produced by the country's economy declined over the last two or three years. The total number of people working declined savagely over the last two or three years. But the debt continues to grow. For what purpose? It has not achieved either growth in the economy or growth in employment.

This is a 7D government. There are seven Ds comprised of equal parts; debt, deception, duplicity, deviousness, desperation, despotism and finally decrepitude. When one looks across the Chamber at the end of an Opposition day, one sees, in all its splendour, decrepitude unfolding before one. The Government is decrepit. Its policies are decrepit. Its debt is decrepit.

It is now engaging only in duplicity and deviousness in the desperate attempt to prevent someone else from forming a government to try to make this country one of growth, promise and hope. Again, it does not have the decency or good will even now to get out of office and call an election. It is clinging by its fingernails, toenails and its hangnails, afraid to go to the Governor General and ask him to dissolve the House, while half the crowd is out travelling around the world in the hope they will be forgotten before they return home so that people will forget what they have and have not done.

I just have enough time to remind the House of one area of growth, which is loans and loan guarantees. We now have 19.1 billion in loans to the private sector by this Government and provincial Governments, 74 per cent of which is federal. There is $29.4 million in guarantees and loans to private bodies around this country by all 11 Governments, 97 per cent of which is federal. They include such fantastic companies as the Maislin Corporation—amazing Maislin. The friends of the Minister of Finance are among the latest to receive guarantees. One can only marvel that the Canadian public is not in here today ignoring the rules of this House and applauding us, making the Chamber rock with applause, as we attempt to point out how this Government has broken its promises in public spending, in public debt incurment, in every area we care to look at. The disastrous, decrepitudinous collection of twits that only an election can give the Canadian public—have I unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —that only a dissolution of the House can give us the chance to rectify this wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House agreed by unanimous consent a few moments ago that at six o'clock I ought to see the clock as 5.45 p.m. Accordingly, I must do so.

Adjournment Debate

It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 62(10) to interrupt the proceedings and to put forth with every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply. Accordingly, the question is on the motion of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to the Order made Thursday, November 24, 1983 the division stands deferred until Tuesday, November 29, 1983 at 5.45 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—PROVISIONS DEALING WITH HATE LITERATURE

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of participating in this debate tonight as a result of the question I posed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) on November 22, 1983 as recorded on page 29079 of Hansard. The question arose from The Globe and Mail news story that morning which suggested that Criminal Code omnibus amendments due early this year or early next year would include changes to deal more effectively with hate propaganda in our Criminal Code.

In asking the question of the Minister of Justice whether those reports were true, I also wanted to know whether the need for an Attorney General to give permission for the laying of a charge of hate mongering would also be withdrawn from the Criminal Code. I must say I was rather disappointed in the vagueness of the response from the Minister. I do appreciate the constraints he faces as a member of cabinet, that he cannot at random announce decisions that have been taken, although regretfully the suggestion was there in the newspaper and yet here in Parliament we were not graced with a response. However, I do hope that as he indicated the Government is moving in this direction.

This issue, the way our law can deal with hate in our country, is of great importance to our society, particularly following the establishment of our own Charter of Rights. The sooner these amendments we hear spoken of in the press, that may well be under consideration by cabinet, are acted upon the better.

I should say, and I believe most Members of this House would agree with me, that this is a country of immense tolerance, and yes, there are other countries that have records of tolerance for intolerance far worse than our own but I believe we have no reason at all to be complacent about the current situation in Canada. Certainly our history points out discrimination by the state itself—Government and Parliament—as well as by Canadians. For example, the Chinese people who originally immigrated to this country to assist in the building of the railway were not allowed to have women accompany them, including wives; there was the need for a fee in order to have a man's wife join him in this country, and there is the fact that women of Chinese origin were not allowed to vote in Canada until well after the second World War. We had black slaves in this country in the nineteenth century. Japanese-Canadians, faithful, good citizens who happened to be of Japanese origin, lost all their worldly possessions except what could be carried in a suitcase at a time of crisis during World War II, and were removed to camps. That is just one more example.

Even more important in contemporary terms, there are indications in Canada of a serious problem involving the hate of some Canadians for other Canadians based simply on race. Canada today is a major source of hate literature, distributed around the world as well as here in Canada. That material has been brought to the attention of various Members of Parliament by the Canadian Jewish Congress. In our newspapers, almost daily, there are examples of incidents of racism against Canadians, largely those who are visibly obvious to the larger society which is white. This country can only work if governments take the lead in breaking down barriers in education, in helping people understand each other better in order to get along as Canadians, and also in changing laws that now aid and abet intolerance to the point of creating real anguish for many good Canadians.

As a former journalist, Mr. Speaker, I agree that freedom of speech is fundamental to a healthy democracy but, no more than society would allow the preaching of insurrection of our state itself should it allow the preaching of insurrection to the principles of tolerance in our society and in our new Constitution. Hate that tears at the ability of honest, good Canadians to live in peace and without fear is every bit as damaging and wrong as attacks on our democracy itself.

If free speech is the freedom to tear away the principles of our Charter, then in the name of one freedom we will destroy the others in that Charter. Individuals must remain free to express their views, no matter how unpalatable those views may be to another, so long as that freedom of expression does not in itself lead to pain and real suffering for other Canadians who are innocent of any wrongdoing. That is the essence of my concern. I hope the Government will not be long in responding to a situation that scars the very essence of our new Charter of Rights.

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to reply to the question raised by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Fleming) regarding Criminal Code provisions dealing with hate literature. I think his questions are quite appropriate and timely.

Canada is a multicultural society. This is an undeniable fact which is now formally recognized in our Constitution and one which is welcomed by a vast majority of Canadians. Nevertheless, this reality is one which some individuals and groups find distressful. This attitude may result in overt or covert discrimination, and even acts of vandalism or violence. Many federal and provincial agencies are working to demonstrate the important values which flow from the multicultural nature of our country. They seek to bring about a progressive change in the views of those individuals who are prejudiced against visible minorities and other groups in society. This objective is yet to be attained. Therefore, the law continues to play an important role in the protection of various disadvantaged groups against discrimination.

There are several statutes which provide protection and relief to the members of visible minorities who have been discriminated against. This evening, however, I would like to discuss the provisions of the Criminal Code which deal with hate propaganda. These provisions are found in Part VI, Offences against the Person and Reputation, of the Code. More specifically, 281.1 and 281.2(1) and (2) deal with hate propaganda. The first section makes it an offense to promote or advocate genocide. The second makes it an offence to publicly incite hatred against an identifiable group, and the last section is directed at those who promote hatred by communicating statements in public.

Recently, minority groups have expressed their concerns about the lack of prosecutions under the hate propaganda provisions of the Criminal Code. They point to a growth in the prevalence of hate literature and suggest that the protection offered by the Code be improved in several ways.

● (1810)

Some of these suggestions include removing the element of wilfulness in the offence of promotion of hartred; doing away with certain statutory defences currently available to individuals charged with a hate propaganda offence; allowing prosecutions for promotion of hatred without the prior consent of the provincial Attorney General; and, as has also been suggested by some, that historical misrepresentation or the denial of historical events be made an offence if used to promote hatred. With the exception of the last suggestion, the Minister is currently giving careful consideration to all of these recommendations.

I am inclined to believe that the maintenance of harmonious relationships between the various racial, ethnic and religious components of our society warrants a strengthening of the protection against incitement to hatred found in the Code.

With respect to the last recommendation, the issue of historical denial, we are somewhat hesitant to expressly incorporate this notion into the hate propaganda provisions of the Code. The implications of such a proposal are far-reaching. First, historical facts frequently depend upon the perspective from which one views the past. There are numerous incidents in history which are disputed by individuals and groups. Many of these incidents are not clearly defined or cannot be proven. That is why we believe that the courts are not the appropriate forum in which to resolve questions of this nature. Second, we believe that a prosecution under the existing provision could now be attempted against anyone who promoted hatred against an identifiable group on the basis of historical denial. Last, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression.

As you already know, Mr. Speaker, Cabinet approved the creation of a special parliamentary committee to deal with this matter, and I believe that we should wait until that committee presents its report before making further recommendations.

SHIPBULDING—CRITERIA GOVERNING CONTRACTS—UNEMPLOYMENT AT PORT WELLER. (B) SUBSIDY TO MARINE INDUSTRIES IN SOREL, P.Q.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, on October 31 last, I raised two questions with respect to the awarding of the six Class 1,100 icebreaker contracts. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Lapointe) responded by saying that the lowest bid is the criterion which is always used by the Government in a public call for tenders. However, the Minister was contradicted by a statement which came from his own office that very day.

That release clearly stated that national socio-economic considerations had to be a factor in virtually any contract the Government awarded. Of course, socio-economic considerations have to be factors in order to be consistent with the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in April of this year. He said that earth will be moved, steel will be rigged and concrete will be poured in all parts of the country. The $630 million spent to upgrade and modernize the Canadian Coastguard fleet was to relieve regional disparity. However, nothing was said about the Government's selectivity program.

Adding insult to injury, the Minister's statement concluded by citing the reduction of unemployment as a key objective in the awarding of federal contracts. If unemployment is a factor at all, then St. Catharines-Niagara should be a prime candidate for favourable consideration.

For the past two months, St. Catharines-Niagara has led the country in urban unemployment rates. Last month, 26,000 people were out of work in the Niagara area and that figure is expected to rise over the next few months. Port Weller dry-docks, once the most efficient and competitive yard in the country and once an employer of some 950 ship workers, now employs less than 200. That Port Weller drydocks was not included in the new ship program was the final straw for the area and for an industry which has been neglected and discriminated against far too often by an uncaring Government.

Despite the fact that there are three Liberal Members who represent the Niagara region, that area was overlooked and bypassed by the ILAP program. The response from the Minister remained that the Niagara region was being monitored closely. We are now being tantalized by a program which calls the area a qualifying centre for special Tier 1 designation.

• (1815)

Following on ILAP came the Industrial and Regional Development Program designed to promote industrial renewal and modernization in areas where long-term employment strategies are needed. Unemployment rates are said to account for 50 per cent of the weight when assigning tier designations.

St. Catharines-Niagara was given a tier one rating, the lowest possible. Mr. Speaker, there can hardly be much credibility in an employment program when the area with the highest urban unemployment in Canada fails to qualify for meaningful assistance.

What is more, the Government's own bureaucrats point out in a confidential report to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), that meaningful recovery in St. Catharines, utilizing the existing local economic base, cannot occur. It went on to say that "it is within the urban centres of southwestern Ontario and the Niagara Peninsula that much of the industrial renewal and export development efforts will need to be directed." Those views and conclusions, Mr. Speaker, were submitted to the Minister last February.

How well received was that economic advice? From that time, the Niagara region has essentially been bypassed in the Special Recovery Capital Projects; it has received the lowest possible tier designation for the IRDP; it did not receive any LEAD funding and no shipbuilding contracts.

Consequently, when I hear Minister after Minister talking about bold initiatives to combat unemployment, I am led to ask—where? Why are unemployment needs elsewhere addressed more rapidly than in Niagara?

I am struck by the irony of the Minister's response. After having been granted a contract, a further $2.2 million advance had to be made for yard improvement, but the Minister says that there is no relationship. It all depends upon who is signing the contracts. That money was advanced at least in part for shipyard renovation. Without that renovation, the bid on the icebreaker contract from Marine Industries might well have been higher. Indeed, Marine Industries received two icebreaker contracts. Fair is fair.

I would like to know which to believe as between the Minister's statement in the House that the lowest bid is the only criterion and the news release from his office which gives consideration to socio-economic factors. Which is it?

[Translation]

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern of the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and I will do my best to lay to rest his doubts about the policy on Government contracts.

I would like to point out that between May and September 1983, Port Weller Dry Dock Limited was invited six times to submit tenders for the construction or refitting of ships belonging to the Government of Canada. Unfortunately, the tenders submitted by the company failed to win any of the contracts. I may add that it was mainly on the basis of the principle of the lowest bidder that the Port Weller proposals were not chosen. As the House is aware, this is one of the basic rules of our policy on Government contracts.

I also may remind the House that the concern for regional balance which was maintained in awarding the contracts demonstrates the Government's clear intention to act in the best interests of the country and its various regions.

The point I am trying to make is that Port Weller was not in any way discriminated against, compared to other Canadian shipyards. Moreover, the company was able to benefit from assistance under the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program administered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley).

To get back to the criterion of the lowest bidder, I would like to add the following information. In May 1983, Port Weller Dry Dock submitted the highest of ten tenders received for the construction of a 72-metre patrol boat. In June 1983, we had the same situation for the construction of a 69-metre hydrographic survey ship, and during the same month, Port Weller Dry Dock refused to submit a tender for refitting the HMCS Protecteur, since its technical department could not handle any more work.

In July 1983, Port Weller Dry Dock submitted the fourth highest tender out of six from Eastern Canada—and only from Eastern Canada—for the construction of the type 1100 icebreakers.

In September 1983, Port Weller submitted the ninth highest tender out of ten for replacement of gas turbines and modifications to be made on the ship Norman McLeod Rogers. Finally, Port Weller submitted the highest of six tenders received for the refitting of the Sir Humphrey Gilbert. On Tuesday, November 15, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Lapointe), his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and the Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) met with representatives of the company and the unions to examine the situation. Together they considered various contracts the Government would be letting to shipyards within the foreseeable future, and for which Port Weller would be asked to submit tenders. Mr. Speaker, I hope this answers satisfactorily the question raised by my hon. colleague from St. Catharines, and I hope the Niagara region will continue to benefit from the Government of Canada's recovery program.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CYPRUS—DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE BY TURKISH CYPRIOTS. (B) SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR FROM ANKARA

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the recent declaration of independence on the part of the Turkish Cypriot community is a matter of grave concern to Greek Cypriot Canadians in my riding, Broadview-Greenwood. My predecessor, Bob Rae, took a great interest in the Cyprus issue, raised these as concerns forcefully in the House and defended the continuing Canadian presence of our peacekeeping forces in Cyprus. I intend to carry on in the same way to raise Cyprus issues, new and old, as long as is necessary.

The Cypriot Federation of Canada has made clear what it considers needs to be done. Let me quote:

> We condemn without reservation the Denktash regime for its illegal declaration of independence of the Turkish occupied part of Cyprus. We call upon the Canadian Government to do whatever necessary to nullify this breach of the London-Zurich Agreement including the imposition of sanctions on the Denktash regime and on the Turkish Government, which is responsible first for the invasion in 1974 and now the attempt at illegal partition of the Republic of Cyprus. We further ask the Canadian Government to condemn this illegal declaration of independence in all appropriate international forums of which Canada is a member.

Well, Canada has condemned this action. It has protested diplomatically. The Government has made clear it will not recognize the pseudo state so illegally declared. Canada has spoken strongly at the United Nations; all this is to the good, but it is not enough.

On November 17 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) if he would show the disapproval of our Canadian people of the Turkish government's role in recognizing the new regime, such as by withdrawing our ambassador to Turkey. This has been a request of the Cypriot Federation of Canada, among other organizations.

The Minister's reply was wholly unsatisfactory. He noted that the Turkish government has stated it was not behind the unilateral declaration of independence. So be it. But the Turkish government was the first to recognize the illegal regime, despite its responsibility in guaranteeing an independent Cyprus back in 1960. The Turkish government should not have recognized the new regime. Indeed it should have told the Denktash regime to withdraw that declaration.

It is well known that intercommunal difficulties in Cyprus are of long standing. Nevertheless there has been a considerable time in which the two communities have lived fairly well and peacefully side by side. I believe it can happen again, but not while one community has the Armed Forces of another country to back it up.

The sad fact is that Cyprus was invaded in 1974 by Turkish armed forces. The result is that 18 per cent of the population is occupying 40 per cent of the land mass. Some 6,000 Greek Cypriots were killed in the war of invasion. There are 200,000 Greek Cypriots who are refugees from their homes, and some thousands of Turkish Cypriots had to go in the opposite direction. Turkey now has some 25,000 soldiers on Cyprus. About 2,000 Greek Cypriots are still missing from the war of invasion. There have been sightings of these people. There is enough to suggest that some, if not many, are still alive in camps in Turkey.

On October 3, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to put pressure on the Turkish government to seek release of these people as a humanitarian concern. The Minister replied that he would investigate. He subsequently said he would not take any action on behalf of Canada. He did not consider it appropriate for Canada on grounds of our role as a member of the peacekeeping forces. In my view this answer is inadequate. The people are still missing, we have reason to believe they are in Turkey, and the pressure has to be put on there.

● (1825)

The Minister said in his letter that a solution to the problem of missing persons in Cyprus will only be possible through an ongoing dialogue between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities, and that in view of the sensitive relations between the two sides this issue can be dealt with most effectively through appropriate UN channels or intercommunal talks rather than on a bilateral basis. I do not agree, Mr. Speaker. UN channels have been tried for years. Naturally we should continue but further action is also needed.

This is not just a Greek-Turkish Cypriot problem. The missing persons have been seen in Turkey, another country, not in Turkish occupied Cyprus. They were captured by the Turkish Army. In keeping a strict neutrality on Cyprus affairs, Canada has been too neutral, in my opinion. The missing Greek Cypriots constitute a humanitarian issue on which any country should feel free, indeed duty bound, to speak. Yet Canada abstained on the UN resolution on the grounds of its participation in the peacekeeping forces. Other peacekeeping participants have taken positions on the missing persons issue, including Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland and Sweden, without hampering their effectiveness.

Cyprus is a situation in which there is an aggressor and a victim. No one is suggesting there is an equal number of Turkish Cypriots missing in Greece. The Cypriots are being held in camps on Turkish territory. Turkey is a much larger and more powerful country with a massive standing army. When it comes to an issue like missing persons, a human rights issue, we must not let some arbitrary principle rule. We must stand up and speak forcefully on a matter of injustice.

On the issue of Canadian peacekeeping forces, I was pleased to see the reassurance on the part of the Canadian Government to keep our forces in Cyprus. We need them there as long as foreign troops are on the island. At the same time I must express considerable concern with the statement made by the Conservative critic on external affairs. That spokesperson has used the latest crisis to raise the possibility of Canada withdrawing our peacekeeping contribution. In my view this is the worst time we should be raising this issue. Certainly we want to get our troops home, but only when the need no longer exists.

I am sorry to have to note the Conservative hypocrisy on this matter. On Sunday, November 20, I spoke at a rally organized by the Cypriot Federation of Canada in Toronto to protest the illegal declaration of independence. The Conservative representative at that rally said the Conservative Party was with the Greek Cypriot community, but where is it when we have to talk about peacekeeping forces? They have either been silent or on the wrong side.

To conclude, I just want to express the concern of all Canadians to the families of people who have members missing or refugees. We will continue to work to see that these people are returned to their homes. I will certainly, and I can speak for my Party, continue to work for justice in Cyprus.

● (1830)

[Translation]

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I really did not intend to monopolize the adjournment debate today. Nevertheless, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), I shall be glad to answer the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mrs. McDonald).

The position of the Government of Canada on recent events in Cyprus was made very clear in statements made in the House by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, and more recently by Canada's intervention in the UN Security Council. The Government of Canada deplores the unilateral declaration of independence of the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, made on November 15, 1983. Canada recognizes only one Cypriot state, the Republic of Cyprus, and it has no intention of recognizing the new state that was proclaimed unilaterally. We firmly support action being taken by the Secretary General of the UN with a view to reconciling the Greek and Turkish communities in Cyprus. The unilateral declaration of independence by Turkish Cypriots can only obstruct such action and compromise any chances of arriving at a fair and durable settlement.

When we intervened in the debate on Cyprus on November 15, in the UN Security Council, we reiterated our firm support for the efforts of the Secretary General to arrive at a negotiated settlement and urged other countries to do the same. The resolution adopted by the Security Council clearly reflects international reaction to recent events in Cyprus. In addition to its intervention in the UN, Canada has made its position known to the parties directly concerned by the Turkish Cypriot proclamation, including the Governments of Turkey, Greece and Cyprus. Turkish Ministers stated that the unilateral declaration of independence had taken place without the consent or knowledge of their Government. Nevertheless, Canada expressed its concern about the recognition by Turkey of the new Cypriot state and asked the Turkish Government to use its influence on Turkish Cypriot leaders in order to promote a settlement of this dispute.

The Government of Cyprus has, in fact, expressed its satisfaction with Canada's attitude. Canada, which for nearly twenty years has taken part in the United Nations peacekeeping forces in Cyprus, is very anxious to see a negotiated settlement. The Government of Canada believes it is essential that there should again be a dialogue between the two communities, and we shall do our best to make this happen. However, we do think a measure of the kind suggested by the Hon. Member would bring about a reconciliation between the two parties.

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Hon. Members will note that there are 13 motions on the Notice Paper at report stage of Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises.

The Chair is prepared to rule on the procedural acceptability of these motions. However, if need be, the Chair would give an opportunity to Hon. Members who wish to comment at this stage. Perhaps the Chair could be useful to Hon. Members by indicating in a preliminary way the direction in which the ruling will be made.

There are two motions standing in the name of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) which the Chair is prepared to accept; all other motions the Chair is prepared to reject. However, the Chair will hear any Hon. Member who wishes to contribute to the procedure at this time.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to put the case for the particular amendment which I placed on the Order Paper. It will amend the Bill in order to change the mandate of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to allow it to become the instrument for the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation.

• (1110)

I would simply put to you, Sir, and to the House that this Bill before the House now flows from the Kirby report. Indeed, a recommendation in the Kirby report was the setting up of a Northern Fisheries Development Corporation to administer those plants in the area north of 50 degrees, in northern Newfoundland, on the coast of Labrador and in Quebec.

Kirby examined various options, Mr. Speaker, rejected some and made the recommendation. The Kirby report, which included that recommendation, was approved by the Government of Canada. Indeed, the Government of Canada approved that particular recommendation and, I understand, wants to proceed with that course of action. My point is that this Bill which is before us now gives effect to the recommendations coming out of the Kirby report and, I submit, could very well, and should, give effect to that recommendation of the Kirby task force to create the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation. I submit the relevance of the amendment on those grounds, Mr. Speaker.

I would further point out that the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation was accepted by both Governments in the restructuring agreement. Both Governments agreed to a Northern Fisheries Development Corporation. Indeed, that was contained in the memorandum of understanding. Therefore, both Governments want to put this into effect.

I would further submit to you, Sir, that if the Governments agree that the Canadian Saltfish Corporation is the vehicle, there will be no other time, I believe, when we can give legislative authority for that in the House of Commons other than now. The reason I submit this amendment now, Mr. Speaker, is that if the Governments want to use the Canadian Saltfish Corporation as a vehicle hereafter, it may be very difficult to permit us to do that in the House of Commons, bearing in mind the legislative timetable after Christmas.

I would further point out to you, Sir, and I would like to put on the record, the concern in the north over this particular vehicle. I have telegrams which I shall not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. I have been listening to the Hon. Member very carefully and so far he has failed to indicate in what way, procedurally, the Chair could accept the Hon. Member's amendments. The Hon. Member may, as is his privilege, in normal circumstances make a case for the acceptability of the amendments. However, he has not so far enlightened the Chair as to whether or not those amendments should be procedurally acceptable. Those are the arguments the Chair would like to hear.

At this moment I would caution the Hon. Member about reading telegrams which I am sure have nothing at all to do with procedure. I will hear the Hon. Member out for a while yet; however, I would seriously invite him to come to the matter of procedure. This is what the Chair is concerned with at this moment.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, when the Hon. Member rises to speak to his amendments, he would deal with all of them. There are 11 amendments standing in his name. From what I have been hearing, he is addressing himself to "an amendment"; he is using the singular. I suppose it is a purpose which he is speaking about, but I would like to know where his amendments fit into the purpose so I can comment intelligently at the end of his submissions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Chair should perhaps have indicated further, during its initial statement, that it proposes to deal with the Hon. Member's amendments in a group. I will rule on the acceptability of Motion No. 12. All other amendments presented by the Hon. Member are consequential to Motion No. 12; therefore there is really no value—if I may be allowed to say so—in the Hon. Member indicating to the Chair how each other motion individually may be acceptable. I ask the Hon. Member to discuss procedure but in a general way as it pertains to Motion No. 12, all other motions being consequential to it.

• (1115)

Mr. Rompkey: I appreciate the question of the Official Opposition House Leader, Mr. Speaker. I simply reiterate what you said, that indeed the motions leading up to the last and substantial motion are really technicalities in order to change parts of the Act to make the substantive motion read properly, which is Clause 7.1(1), which would allow the corporation to own or operate plants north of 50, basically St. Anthony and the Labrador coast, and to harvest fish for processing at those facilities; to own and operate vessels for the harvesting of such fish; to market fish processed in the area; and to carry on, for any purpose in respect of any fish processed at a facility, the activities it has the power to carry on under Section 7 or Section 8. Otherwise we change the definition of fish in the Act to mean not only groundfish but indeed shellfish, crustaceans and other forms of marine life.

I appreciate your position, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the technicalities of this amendment, but as a Member of Parliament I want to use this time and this vehicle to lay on the floor of the House the concerns of the people I represent. I say to both Governments that it is not good enough to say, and we must not say, to the people of the north that we will deal with their case at some later point. The people in the south, if I may describe it that way, have been looked after by this Act.

I will not read them into the record, Mr. Speaker, but the town council from St. Anthony—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I have an obligation to cut off the Hon. Member at this time because he is obviously not contributing to the procedural debate in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Crouse: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I share the concern of the Hon. Member for the problem he faces in his riding. We have been made aware of his request for an extension of the powers of the corporation and I know from personal experience that in this area of Canada it is practically impossible for private enterprise to function in a viable, profitable manner. We viewed with some concern the establishment of the corporation in its initial stages and the fact that it was given the right to control all of the saltfishing industry in Atlantic Canada—which is in effect what it ended up to be, the control of the saltfishing industry in Newfoundland. But when it was established it had the effect of putting two of the largest and oldest saltfish companies in my Province of Nova Scotia out of business. This was simply because these companies were in the habit of going to Newfoundland to purchase what we call Labrador slob, bring it back and dry it in the large driers owned by A.M. Smith and Company in Halifax and by Zwicker and Company in my home town of Lunenburg.

The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member seemed to extend the powers of this company. I wonder if he has given any thought to impressing upon the Government the necessity of bringing in a separate Bill. The Member stated this was the only opportunity he would have to bring forth changes which would empower the Government to purchase not only salt-fish north of 50, but all other species caught and landed in that area. This would imply that there is not going to be any future time at which this measure could be brought forward.

• (1120)

The concern that we have here is that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member is, in effect, one that should deal with the Saltfish Marketing Corporation, while Bill C-170, presently before the House, deals with the restructuring of the fishing industry, basically in Atlantic Canada and Quebec. I see here a conflict of interest between these two Bills. While we are not intending to oppose the amendment, if it were acceptable to the Chair, I would like the Member, if he may, Mr. Speaker, through you, to explain to the House why he stated that this would be the only opportunity available to him to seek an amendment of this type.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before hearing another Hon. Member, I should point out to the House that in the Chair's opinion what is going on now is debate on the substance of the Bill. I have not yet heard comments which would help the Chair procedurally.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a brief comment which might appeal to Members, Mr. Speaker. I can see by virtue of the last paragraph of the amendment that the Chair would have some concern about it since, by our practices normally, that part of the amendment at any rate would have to be accompanied by a message from His Excellency. I can see that there may well be some serious defects in it. Might I suggest though, in order to provide a vehicle for the Hon. Member to speak to the subject, that the Chair may wish to delay ruling on the amendment until the Member is heard, and perhaps one on this side is heard, with respect to the principle being expressed in it. In other words, I am suggesting that, notwithstanding any rule of relevance, the Member be free to discuss his amendment, to address the concerns that he has, and perhaps after that the Chair might be disposed to rule on it.

Miss Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee, I suggest that what the Hon. Member is asking for is certainly contained within the powers of the Bill before us. I am sure that the problem existing at St. Anthony in particular could be incorporated under the powers that are so wide in this Bill, even to the restructuring in Newfoundland. It could have been brought into the agreement with Newfoundland one way or another unless there was a reason. We did not hear that in Committee at the time. Looking at the Bill and the powers within the Bill, it seems to me that what the Hon. Member is looking for could be incorporated under the powers given to the Minister in the Bill.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would simply like to thank the House Leader of the Official Opposition for his intervention and the possibility of an opportunity to debate the substance. I would like to say to you, Sir, that during the second reading debate I laid out before the House my arguments as to why this should take place. I recognize the technical difficulties that you have and the technical difficulties that the House has. As a Member of Parliament I wanted to take advantage of this opportunity, bearing in mind that we do not know when another opportunity will come. How many times have we had fisheries Bills before the House of Commons?

The concern is, Mr. Speaker, that there may be fishermen and plant workers who do not have jobs in the spring. I am concerned about that. I am concerned about plants opening in the spring and about fishermen who are working and are productive in the spring. There is concern in these communities now. Since there is insecurity and uncertainty, people are not investing money and not spending. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Yukon understands that because he represents the north and has lived in the north. He knows what I mean.

● (1125)

I simply want to bring to the attention of the House, governments and the public in general the concern north of 50 for bringing stability, security and certainty to the fishery in that area. If this is not the time—and, of course, I accept your ruling on this amendment—it would at least be a vehicle to bring to the attention of those in the position to do something the necessity to act quickly in order to put those plants in their proper order and to get them working by this spring.

I want to thank Members opposite for their support. I also know there is support on this side of the House, including that of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who I know supports this in principle and wants to do everything he can to help those people. I want to say again, as I said at second reading, that I appreciate the efforts of the Minister in this whole restructuring effort. I accept your ruling on this, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I wish to thank Hon. Members for their contribution to the procedural matter. I have heard the Hon. Member for Yukon as well. I could perhaps remind him that this period for initial comments, before the Chair makes its ruling, should be taken as an opportunity for Members to make the sort of comments that the Hon. Member for Yukon suggests we do at another time. It would hardly be procedurally acceptable for the Chair to allow debate on motions which it feels are very much out of order and then make the ruling after that debate has taken place. In my opinion, that would create an unacceptable precedent in the conduct of the affairs of the House.

Therefore, I am prepared to rule. Motions No. 10 and 11, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), are acceptable and should be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 12 gives the Chair serious misgivings. All of the other motions in amendment offered by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) are consequential to Motion No. 12 and therefore I propose to consider them as a group. Motion No. 12 appears to propose an amendment to the Saltfish Act which is not part of the Bill now before the House. As well, the motion infringes upon the financial initiative of the Crown in that it provides for the expenditure of public funds. In fact, the Hon. Member recognizes this in the last section of Motion No. 12. This section does not alter the fact that the amendment infringes on the financial initiative of the Crown, and there are many rulings which confirm that provisions of this kind are not sufficient to make this kind of amendment acceptable.I refer Hon. Members particularly to a ruling by one of my predecessors in a similar case on May 17, 1972, which can be found on page 307 of the Journals.

May I also refer Hon. Members to Citations 540 and 543 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Citation 540 states in part:

> The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the Royal Recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of the charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications. In relation to the standard thereby fixed, an amendment infringes the financial initiative of the Crown not only if it increases the amount but also if it extends the objects and purposes, or relaxes the conditions and qualifications expressed in the communication by which the Crown has demanded or recommended a charge.

Citation 543(1) states:

> If any motion or bill or proceeding is offered to be moved, whether in the House or in a committee which requires, but fails to receive, the recommendation of the Crown, it is the duty of the Speaker to announce that no question can be proposed upon the motion, or to direct the withdrawal of the bill, or to say that the problem may be rectified by the proposer obtaining a Royal Recommendation.

● (1130)

Finally, the Hon. Member proposes to add an entirely new proposition to the Bill which is foreign to it, as agreed to at the second reading stage. Such an amendment is quite beyond the scope of the Bill. In this regard, I would refer Hon. Members to Citation 437 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

For all these reasons, I must find Motion No. 12 out of order.

As I stated a few moments ago, Hon. Members will realize that Motions Nos. 1 to 9 and Motion No. 13 are consequential to Motion No. 12 and, as such, are, without that motion, irrelevant to the Bill and hence out of order. Accordingly, the question before the House is Motion No. 10.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had consultations and it seems there is unanimous consent to dispose of the Bill today, notwithstanding Standing Order 78(13) which prescribes:

When a Bill has been amended or debate has taken place thereon at the report stage, the same shall be set down for a third reading and passage at the next sitting of the House.

Notwithstanding Standing Order 78(13), I think there is unanimous consent that all questions necessary to dispose of the report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-170 be put today before 5.45 p.m. in order to dispose of this legislation completely.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there is consent. I am perhaps a little confused by the final words of the Government House Leader. I assume he meant not later than 5.45 p.m., because I think we had a House order last Thursday to the effect that all questions will be put at 5.45 o'clock. In other words, I would not want to see the question put before 5.45 p.m.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, our intent would be the contrary, that the necessary questions to dispose of report stage and third reading be put before 5.45 p.m. so that we can dispose of Bill C-170 before proceedings are interrupted to deal with and vote on supply business. If the Hon. Member wants, we could specify 5.45 p.m. in the order. That is why I said "before 5.45 o'clock", it being understood that we would dispose of Bill C-170 completely before 5.45 o'clock.

Mr. Nielsen: I understand, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House has heard the proposal put by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Is there unanimous consent for the proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That Bill C-170 be amended by adding immediately after line 36 at page 4 the following new clause:

"9. The powers and authority authorized by this Act shall be withdrawn on a date five years from the proclamation date of this Act unless they have been re-authorized by Parliament prior to that withdrawal date."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity at report stage to move Motion No. 10 to amend Bill C-170. This amendment is moved in the hope of alleviating the concerns of the representatives of independent companies as well as those put forth by spokesmen of the Governments of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick during hearings at the committee stage with respect to the excessive powers granted to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the federal Government in this Bill.

If there are any doubts about that statement, I could present literally volumes of documentary evidence as presented to the marathon sessions of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry hearings which began on Monday morning, November 21, 1983, and which concluded in the wee small hours of Friday morning at approximately 4.30 a.m.

For example, the representatives of the Seafood Processors Association of Prince Edward Island stated, among other things, that the:

—impact and implications of this Bill will be most detrimental—if not, indeed, totally disastrous—to the development or continuance of a viable Atlantic fishery.

A spokesman for the Government of New Brunswick's Fisheries Department asked for the following specific terms, namely:

We would like a guarantee that our fishery will receive a fair share of resource allocation. We would also like to be assured that the restructuring will not interfere with our markets. We are particularly concerned that we are not subjected to a bureaucratic marketing agency that would interpose its bulk between our processors and their customers.

In addition, we would like to participate with the federal Government in a development agreement so that we can continue the innovative, the progressive programs that have assisted the development of our industry, helping it adjust yet again to changing conditions.

The spokesman for the eastern fisheries federation based in Halifax, Nova Scotia presented an excellent brief to the committee. Among other things, he stated: that the Department of Fisheries and the Government in general must be more accountable. Mr. Billard's words:

This Bill leaves absolutely no provision for discussion, debate or review. Bureaucrats will have discretionary powers heretofore unparalleled—

That is his word, "unparalleled".

—in the fishing industry.

He also stated:

If small investors are unable to take risks in the fish processing sector—without fear of government take overs, then there will be no investment. If there are no investments then there will be far fewer fish plants—and that means less fish sold to plants and less competition.

In his view, our fishermen need strong fish processors as much as they need strong fish stocks. I am not so sure they need a Government this strong in the fishing industry.

This is the collective voice of the inshore fishermen. For anyone who attended the committee hearings last week, there is no doubt about the almost unanimous voice from the industry and the Provinces expressing the fear that government intervention as authorized by this Bill will not just be a minor aberration in the life of the fishing industry, and that it will not find itself privatized within a few years. Their fear, and it is deeply founded, is that the powers given to this Government will be permanent and, of course, they will be detrimental.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I move this amendment in the hope that it will strengthen the Bill and alleviate the fears of the many spokesmen representing literally thousands of plant workers and fishermen who came before our committee throughout the entire period of last week.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments in reply to the amendment of the Hon. Member for South Shore. As he knows, we had a number of days of hearings and in particular very long sessions, one that lasted nearly 20 hours. The Hon. Member is correct when he said many witnesses came before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and indicated a concern that the injection of public capital into the fishing industry did not give rise to a kind of permanent solution to the fishing industry in eastern Canada; that is to say, we would not be taking the first step today toward long-term nationalization.

As the Hon. Member knows, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) had on many occasions publicly as well as on a number of occasions before the committee indicated that that was not our intention. As I said a few days ago, if there are a hundred things the Government could list it wanted to do, injecting capital into the fishing industry would not be one of them. We are there because there really is no alternative.

The Hon. Member will recall that we rejected this amendment in committee because of the idea of saying that on a certain date at a certain time five years hence automatically government authority to be involved in the fishing industry will be dissolved. To suggest that at that particular point in time we would have to sell off our equity would be a very bad business practice, because we would find ourselves advertising to all potential buyers in the marketplace that in approximately three years, on such and such a date, we would be forced by Parliament to sell off the industry and a very good deal by anybody in the market could be had.

I put a question to Mr. Ron Burmer of the Fisheries Council of Canada who appeared before the committee. I said: "From a business point of view, if you were planning on selling an asset, would you predetermine the day and announce it to all potential buyers in the marketplace?" He said: "No". Then I said: "We want to run this on a businesslike basis, so from that point of view would the Government be wise to predetermine a date on which to sell off its assets? Would it not in fact be akin to cherry picking?" Mr. Burner looked at me and said: "Yes, in that circumstance we would all engage in cherry picking"; that is, buying off because we must sell the lucrative pieces that are up for sale, leaving in the hands of the Government those chunks of an industry which do not make money.

I have a great deal of respect—and I say that sincerely—for the concerns of the Hon. Member that when this industry becomes profitable we privatize it again and get Government out. I also agree wholeheartedly with his concern. However, I disagree that the most appropriate and businesslike way to do it is to predetermine five years down the road a particular day, time and place on which these assets will be disbursed. For that reason we do not support this amendment.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Member who just took his seat could address his comments to my amendment. He failed entirely to do that. I just want to point out to the Chair that the amendment does not mention forced sale or privatization of the assets of any restructured company within a five-year period. The amendment seeks—I am sorry the Hon. Member either misread its intent or used this period in order to make a strong pitch of his own—to return to Parliament a measure of control over the restructured companies and over the Government.

I point out that the amendment indicates that the powers and authorities authorized by the Act shall be withdrawn on a date five years from the proclamation date of the Act unless they have been reauthorized by Parliament. That is the wording. There is no mention that they must be sold, which the Hon. Member sought to imply. I think his comments with regard to the point he raised are valid and there should not be a cut-off date, as he so properly stated. That would simply be a signal sent ahead to everyone to sit back and wait because on day X the axe will fall and all this will be sold. That is not the purpose of the amendment. If the Government finds after five years that it cannot privatize or offer it back to the private sector in that five-year time frame, the amendment seeks to ask the Government to return to Parliament for reauthorization.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair is prepared to recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. However, I cannot agree or disagree with the comments of the Hon. Member for South Shore. I gather he was addressing himself to the rule of relevancy, in the sense that the Parliamentary Secretary did not address the specific purpose of the amendment. Certainly the Chair must enforce the rule of relevancy; it is a difficult rule to enforce. The Chair cannot oblige an Hon. Member to relate to certain specific points which in another Hon. Member's mind are of the utmost importance. However, with the indulgence of the House the Chair will recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order, because he has already made his contribution.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I want to acknowledge the fine line of difference which has been drawn by my hon. friend opposite. My comments were made in the vein that the amendment itself arises out of a concern which has been expressed repeatedly that the Government reprivatize the industry.

As to the specific motion, the committee accepted an amendment put by the Hon. Member opposite that the Minister holding the shares of the company be required to report to Parliament once a year on the operations of the new company. It is my contention that that annual report to Parliament meets the concern outlined in the proposed amendment. Again, for that reason we do not support the amendment.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to speak very briefly on this subject because when we debated Bill C-170 at second reading I spoke at some length on the necessity of imposing a time limitation on the awesome powers of the authorities which are to be granted to the Government pursuant to this Bill. I am very pleased the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) was able to formulate such an amendment as this one. I hope it will find favour with the Government.

What we are doing with Bill C-170 is very much the same type of thing we did with the Grand Trunk Railway and other railway companies many years ago when we established Canadian National, something into which Parliament was very much forced. It did not really want to do that, but things got to such a sad and sorry state in the railway business that it became a necessity. Such is the case with the East Coast fishery. If I might paraphrase the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), he said that the so-called solution proposed in Bill C-170 was probably the least bad of many poor options. As was said by the Hon. Member for South Shore, it gives unparalleled power to the Government, awesome and unparalleled power, which we know will be delegated to the bureaucracy because the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), who is present today, is unable to keep day to day control over these matters. Therefore his authority over these matters must be delegated to the people on his staff.

At the hearings of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, every representation indicated distrust of government on the part of people in the fishery business. No one appeared to be more distrustful of government than fishermen themselves, as represented through their unions. Normally we can expect unions to be of a more socialist frame of mind than perhaps the majority of the population, but in this case it appeared that the people who make their livelihood on fishing vessels or in fish plants more than anyone else were distrustful of government and wanted to see a time limit placed on the authorities we were to give to government.

One problem with which we in the House are faced is that whenever we establish a new governmental institution, a new department or branch of government, a Crown corporation or any other entity, the entity always sees its first order of priority as being able to maintain itself. Also, it is very difficult to get rid of such an entity. There is always a problem with dismantling government institutions. If we pass this amendment and it becomes part of the law, there will be an incentive right from its inception for the people concerned with the new institutions, because just a few years down the road the Government will have to set aside its powers and authorities and we will of necessity have to put the fishing business back in private hands where it rightfully belongs.

I disagree with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Tobin) who said that having a set determination date will be a major impediment if assets are to be sold at the end of that period. I do not disagree with him entirely when he says that this will naturally flow from the motion, because surely the idea is to dispose of the assets that will be owned by these new companies and get them into private hands. There might be some difficulty with that, but I do not think it is an overriding difficulty. That it will be necessary for people involved in the new fish companies to begin planning a system of privatization right from the start will, I think, work to the benefit of the East Coast fisheries.

If all else fails, Sir, my colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore, has included in his amendment the concept that the Government can come back to Parliament and ask for an extension of that five-year period. If improvements have not been made and if there is real difficulty disposing of the assets into private hands, that option is always available to the Government. However, it does mean that Parliament will again have to look at the situation and approve any possible extension.

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), but I would have liked to see it provide for a period of less than five years. The purpose of this Bill is simply to restructure the two super companies. The agreement the Government has reached with the Province of Newfoundland, according to the letter submitted by Dr. Kirby to the Bank of Nova Scotia, provides that at the end of a ten-year period the bank may offer the shares to the Government and the Government will have to purchase at par the Class A preferred shares which are then held by the bank in Holding Company "Y".

Once those two super companies are restructured and once the Quebec Pêcheurs Unis is restructured, I do not see that there is a need for the continuation of the Bill. First, the $100 million which has been guaranteed in the Bill must be approved by Parliament in the future. It must be included in the estimates. That could be done under another program or through the Department of Fisheries.

That would happen if the development program designed to aid the small processors we have heard about, which is a part of the agreement to co-operate between Nova Scotia and the federal Government, comes under that part of the Bill? Once that agreement is arranged, only then will we know how that developmental program will help the small independents. I agree with Mr. Crouse when he says that those small independents came before us last week and told us that Newfoundland independents are protected by $12 million worth of guarantees from the Province of Newfoundland. In Quebec, the Pêcheurs Unis is being nationalized. The Government will not touch the rest of the independents but has made an offer of assistance to them for upgrading and modernization in the amount, I am told, of 60 per cent.

Under this Bill or in the arrangement made between the Government and the Province of Newfoundland, there has been nothing given to independent processors from Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. That was a concern we heard from independents like Fishpac and from the exporters group who asked us what would happen to them and who would they have to deal with in order to accomplish the $400 million worth of sales that we were told about.

I agree with Mr. Crouse about the duration of the powers of this Bill. I have concern with the fact that written into the agreements will be the enterprise allocations for fish for these two super companies. The companies that will now be restructured had for the last two years an enterprise allocation. However, in my view what will hurt the inshore fishery even more is the percentages of those enterprise allocations which will be written into the agreements for the next five-year period. Those percentages, even for five years, will hurt the inshore fishery. The inshore fishery has negotiated with AGAC its total allowable groundfish catch and how that catch will be divided between the two sectors, offshore and inshore. I am sorry that the amendment proposed by Mr. Crouse does not curtail the powers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should refer to the other Hon. Member as the Hon. Member for South Shore.

Miss Campbell: I am sorry, I mean the Hon. Member for South Shore. You can tell that I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and would like to support his proposed amendment. However, I am even more concerned about the powers of this Bill. We will only see those powers in the restructuring of the super companies and the only protection that is included in the Bill, in my view, is Clause 4(2). I will read that clause into the record because I think that this is the same concern as the concern of the Hon. Member for South Shore. The clause reads as follows:

The Minister shall dispose of such portion of any interest in a fishery enterprise—

That is something we must bear in mind. Does that clause mean that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) who is in control of resource allocation will now be able to give to these new super companies a certain percentage of that allocation? We have heard the concerns about the redfish. Understandably, the redfish was of prime concern to the Provinces in the Gulf. However, what about the other groundfish? We heard the Deputy Minister of Fisheries for Nova Scotia state that he thought the percentages should be written into the agreement. This does not take into account the ups and downs of groundfishing for the inshore fisheries. This does not allow for further negotiations through AGAC. What is the purpose of this proposal?

Today I spoke with an inshore fisheries representative who had attended AGAC meetings for years and I learned that there will be a meeting tomorrow. Will these percentage allocations be brought up and incorporated because of the powers of this Bill? The Bill will be passed today. Are we passing the Bill today so that tomorrow morning at the groundfish advisory committee meeting percentage allocations under the powers of this Bill can be incorporated without any consideration for the concerns of the inshore fishery?

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that there are concerns about the duration of the powers of this Bill. The Bill should be used only to restructure those companies. However, there is an inconsistency in the words of the Hon. Member for South Shore because, through the agreement with Newfoundland, we are already tied in for ten years. The bank is allowed ten years to get rid of its shares if it in fact wants to get rid of its shares.

There is a contradiction, Mr. Speaker. Under this Bill we are allowing unlimited powers to the Minister of Fisheries without any restrictions other than the one contained in Clause 4(2). I recognize the concerns of the Hon. Member for South Shore, but if we are going to pass an amendment, it should provide for a shorter time limit. I will agree with any time limit, but I am afraid that a time limit of five years will totally destroy the inshore fishery through the allocation of the AGAC quotas on a percentage basis to the new super companies in order to make them economically viable.

In my mind, two of the reasons this Bill cannot be supported is the concerns for the power it gives the Minister and the concerns aobut the groundfish allocations. I also have the ultimate concern that in five years' time, with this injection of $138 million into the super companies—that time is too long—we do not know what effect this will have immediately on the independents in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. This is a one-time injection of capital which I shall have more to say about later because I do not believe it will be a one-time injection. The Minister or a future Minister of Fisheries may find that he will have to go back for more money because under the terms of the arrangements it is now known who will take up the excesses and how they will be dealt with by those responsible. Perhaps five years are needed for that, but in my view, if it is a one-time injection of capital there is no need for the Bill after the restructuring. I agree with the Hon. Member for South Shore and support his contention that there should be a time limit set out in the Bill.

• (1200)

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for South West Nova. I am a little bit puzzled that at this late date the Hon. Member has expressed these views. I have tried to recall the hearings over the last five days and it seems to me that these concerns were not expressed then.

In light of the Hon. Member's comments, we on this side would accept a subamendment to my amendment if she wished to place one on the record at this time. We could be willing to accept that, and if she can get her colleagues to agree, then it may be acceptable to the House. I throw that suggestion out to let you know, sir, that there will be agreement on this side if she wishes to amend my amendment to two or three years. We would accept that subamendment.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I feel that there is conflict in this amendment, just from the point of view of having chaired the committee, if we limit the restructuring of these two super companies to one year. I personally feel that the Bill will be around a lot longer, because in Nova Scotia we do not know what the time frame will be. We are told it will be five years. In Newfoundland, we definitely know that the bank, which would not appear before the committee, is tied in to not receiving any of the 5 per cent for ten years. I guess what I am saying is that I agree with and support the suggestion that there should be a limitation, but on the other side of the question the negotiations and the Bill itself have already set it beyond five years.

As to the other concerns, I certainly questioned the Minister of Fisheries for Nova Scotia as to the enterprise allocation when he was before the committee on Thursday night, and as well I questioned the independents. The Nova Scotia Deputy Minister said that he would be in favour of a percentage of the enterprise allocation being incorporated in the agreement. I am not sure that tomorrow's meeting in Montreal on AGAC will not do that, even though there is opposition from the weaker sector, the inshore fishery.

As for the independents, I certainly mentioned and questioned them on several occasions and specifically questioned the Nova Scotia Minister of Fisheries, who said that the independents in Nova Scotia—and he referred to the Hon. Member for South Shore—were independent and that no one had come to him. I question that because I know of two cases in South West Nova who feel, regardless of this Bill, that there would be nothing for them in guarantees from either the Province of Nova Scotia, as in Newfoundland with regard to the $12 million, or from the federal Government.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the support for the concept of a sunset clause in this Bill. I have to tell the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) that this does not in any way interfere with the ten-year arrangement which may have been made with the banks; or at least, if it does interfere in any way, it is not an insoluble situation. If the Government does what it says it would strive to do, namely dispose of the structure to private enterprise, that undertaking should be incorporated in any agreement with private enterprise. The Government or the purchasers would then become responsible for such residual portion of outstanding debt to the bank as might exist.

I do not see any conflict between that and a five-year term for the Bill, with renewal if necessary. My experience in the House has been that if a logical case can be made that something is to the detriment of the Canadian economy in general and the Atlantic fishery in particular, the House would co-operate in the extension of time. So I do not share the Hon. Member's concern about the ten-year clause in the agreement.

I come from a constituency which the local office of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans in New Brunswick advises me has 3,000 people who are dependent for full-time or part-time employment on the processing industry in the Bay of Fundy area. Probably half that number depend on the industry for full-time employment and the other half depend on it for part-time employment to supplement their other income.

This is, then, a matter of major concern to me and to my constituents. There is not a single plant that is to be operated under the nationalization structure and I am happy about that. What I am really concerned about when I see the agreements that have been made, which include the transfer of part of the scallop fleet from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland, are the constraints that may be imposed on the inshore fishermen. In this, my concerns are parallel with those of the Hon. Member for South West Nova. Fishermen and their employees are concerned about their futures should this occur.

The greatest problem is that there was no consultation in the Fisheries Committee and there was no consultation with Government. As a result of consultation within the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, a conclusion was reached which was the only solution offered to resolve the very serious social problem of unemployment.

The search for a solution to this social problem does not address the long-run consequences which may be suffered from the nationalization of this industry. This emphasizes the necessity for such an industry to operate under a syndicated directorate, under a creditors' management proposition, or any other proposition which would allow it to enter world markets in a relatively independent and free enterprise structure.

As I have said before in debate on this Bill, I doubt very much if there is any capability in the structures of Canada which can equal the marketing capabilities of the fish processing structures in Atlantic Canada. But we are going to lose those marketing capabilities, or if we do not lose them totally we are going to put them under the direction of people who may not be familiar with the process. We cannot allow this to happen any more than we can sell potatoes to 100 countries over a period of time, meet the quality requirements and make the decisions which have to be made over the telephone. That is the question which I raised in committee. I would like to see this Bill have a sunset date. I see no problem of renewing it in the House of Commons if and when an urgency arises which does demand that extension.

I am concerned that there is an opportunity for the Government to have controlling shares in both intergovernmental arrangements for the operation of the fisheries in the two Maritime Provinces of Canada. I believe that there should be an element of balance between the fishery people themselves, the provincial Government and the Government of Canada in the distribution of voting shares in that company. The Government of Canada will find itself in a very serious conflict of interest—no matter who may be the Minister who heads the corporation—when it has at its disposal the allocation of quotas, the enterprise allocation, which has been a proposition and a partial policy of government, and all the other aspects of regulations and licensing over which it has control, while at the same time managing the sale of fisheries. There are the representations which were made to that committee in all sincerity, asking the Government do not put itself in a position of conflict of interest.

There is within this Bill the capability of loaning $100 million to the fishing industry. However, when the Minister and his staff were asked if this money in fact would be available to independents who found themselves in a difficult financial position, it was not positively addressed by either the Minister or his staff. If at this date the Minister wishes to address that question and say "Yes, in small bites when necessary, there will in fact be prompt consideration given to the application of an independent for a loan as guaranteed under this Act", it would put somewhat of a different light on the position the independents would occupy in the presence of the elephantine-sized structure which is being put in place under public control.

By all means, Mr. Speaker, let us give favourable consideration to this amendment which does nothing to the principle of the Bill. It does nothing to contradict the objectives of the Government, as outlined by the Minister and his staff. What it does do, however, is give an element of confidence to the other people in the fishing industry that perhaps somewhere down the line business may return to normal. I think that is important. I believe the independents would then feel they could hang on, perhaps for five years, if there were guaranteed loans from the Government to replace their credit destroyed by virtue of the bank attitude toward this structure.

These things have to be resolved. If we were contradicting the Bill by this amendment, I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it would deserve to be rejected, and so would the independents who asked for a sunset clause. But we are not. We do not have any opportunity really to interfere in the management of the structure for, let us say, four-plus years if there is a five-year sunset clause as this amendment suggests. It does not hamper the Government and I believe it would indicate to fishermen and to this House that the Government has the same spirit of understanding and co-operation which existed throughout the committee hearings. There was no political confrontation in those committee meetings per se. There was, in fact, the presentation of the facts as the witnesses saw them. They were given open consideration by virtually every member of the committee. Only when one tried to offer amendments which would represent the presentations of the witnesses did we seem to break on party lines.

I believe the remarks of the Hon. Member for South West Nova are indicative of the spirit in which that Bill was in fact discussed in committee. I wish it could be discussed in this House in the same spirit and with the same objectives in mind, namely, the wellbeing of the fishing industry as a whole. The objectives should not be the wellbeing of the Crown Corporation, but the wellbeing of the private enterprise structure, which has served us so well and which has remained afloat financially in hard times.

We should consider as well those who had exaggerated expectations which were never realized and, therefore, ended up in a position of bankruptcy. Let us consider them all in the generosity of spirit which I believe is intended in this Bill as it addresses the fishing industry. Let us not be divided on strictly partisan terms, but be together for the greater benefit of the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that this is the first opportunity I have had to address the House on the matter of Bill C-170, an Act to restructure the Atlantic fishery. I recognize that at this point we are dealing with a very narrow issue, in particular the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). At the same time I believe we have to consider that amendment in the context of the total provisions of the Bill and the background against which the Bill was promoted by the Government and introduced in this House by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané).

Let me say, first of all, with respect to the amendment that I feel it is simply an honest attempt by a Member of Parliament, who has had vast experience in the fisheries as well as in the House of Commons, to provide a safety valve to those who are concerned and suspicious about the implementation of the provisions of this Bill. I see no need to view with any degree of suspicion the motives of those who would support this amendment, because their motives are quite obvious. It provides and ensures that at some future point the provisions of this Bill will be reviewed, not at the request of anyone, not at the demand of persons who are injured or adversely affected by the provisions of the Bill, but as of right in the normal course of parliamentary processes.

That is what this sunset provision is all about, Mr. Speaker. It simply allows and ensures that the sun will not set once and for all on the provisions of this Bill, but that the provisions will again, at some future point, be re-examined and reviewed by the Chamber responsible for the enactment of the Bill, the House of Commons. I believe that is an obligation which we ought to impose upon ourselves to satisfy those who are justly concerned about the potential adverse effect of this Bill.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that we must consider this amendment in the context of what has gone on before. I want to review very briefly the background to Bill C-170, an Act to provide for the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery. We were first informed of the actions of the Government with respect to the Atlantic fishery in January of 1982. At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the formation of the Task Force on Atlantic Fisheries and indicated that one, Mr. Michael J. L. Kirby, would act as chairman of the task force. The press release which accompanied that announcement gave a very clear indication of what Mr. Kirby's task was and what he was to do, and underlined the fact that there was an urgency involved in the process. In fact, the release under the hand of the Prime Minister said that the task force was to proceed on an urgent basis to review the Government's policies and regulations which affected the fishery. It was also to consider the social context of the Atlantic fishery, particularly the concern of people in the Maritime Provinces and the Province of Newfoundland over the loss of employment which was being experienced because of disruptions in the fishing industry.

In December of 1982, that same year, we were asking in the House of Commons when we would receive the report of the task force, which was presumably given urgent priority by the Government. My colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore, as well as myself, asked on occasion when we would receive the report. We were receiving a report by what was termed a "trial balloon". Mr. Kirby and the members of his task force on the Atlantic fisheries kept leaking out the things which they were considering doing. They were going to nationalize the fishing industry. Each time one of these trial balloons went up, the people concerned were faced with the prospect of a dramatic and drastic change in the conduct of the fishing industry. They were faced with that possibility for over 12 months.

● (1220)

Finally, in February, 1983, approximately 14 months after the institution of the task force, its report was made public. Since that time the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada has reviewed very carefully the recommendations in the report. Much argument and discussion was generated. But when the Government finally made its decision with respect to the implementation of the report, as represented by Bill C-170, we have something very much different from the original recommendations, something which has caused elements of the Atlantic fishery great concern for their future.

The independent operators in the Atlantic fishery look at the provisions of Bill C-170 and see no assistance for them. On the contrary, there is relatively massive assistance for their major competitors, the large corporations which will be rolled into an even larger corporation in the case of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. So it is not hard to realize that after months of consideration, months of rumours and speculation, they are now faced with a Bill which does not give any real indication of what will transpire in the future.

Therefore we must ask ourselves if the independent operators and others engaged in the Atlantic fishery have a legitimate concern? The answer comes back very quickly that yes, they certainly do. In particular, the independent operators in Nova Scotia have no reason to believe that six months, one, two or three years from now they will be able to operate the businesses they have successfully operated in the past. They have no reason to believe the Government will protect them from events which will be damaging to their fishing operations. All they can do is wait and see what happens, how this Bill is implemented by the Government, and how they are affected.

All they ask us to do, Mr. Speaker, is to assure them of a future review of this legislation, which is the purpose of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore. It is difficult for me to understand how anyone in this House of Commons who has the vaguest familiarity with the Atlantic fisheries could deny them that opportunity. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask all Members of this House on both sides to show some real concern for the future of those now engaged in the fishing industry and provide in the legislation the right to have their situation reviewed at some future point.

In closing, I simply want again to underline that this is a very legitimate concern of those engaged in the Atlantic fishery. Their future is in jeopardy and they want the assurance that at some future point the whole matter will be reviewed. No one can deny them that right, and the only way to implement that right is through the provision which my colleague from South Shore has proposed be added to Bill C-170.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The question is on Motion No. 10. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 10 (Mr. Crouse) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The question is now on Motion No. 11.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore) moved:

That Bill C-170, be amended by adding immediately after line 6 at page 5 the following new Clause:

"10.(1) The Auditor General of Canada shall have unlimited access to financial records, accounts, and other documents pertaining to fishery enterprises in which the Government of Canada has more than 49 per cent controlling interest.

(2) The Auditor General shall report only on the expenditure of public funds by enterprises referred to in subsection (1) of this clause, and shall have due regard for the confidentiality of all other information about such enterprises that does not pertain directly to the expenditure of public funds."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the second amendment, No. 11 on the Order Paper, will give the Auditor General access to the accounts of any fishery enterprise in which the federal Government has more than 49 per cent controlling interest. In order to protect the interest of private investors in such enterprises, the Auditor General would report only on the expenditure of public funds by the companies.

Apart from the general argument for accountability, this provision would also act as a deterrent to fishing firms accepting more federal assistance than they strictly need. We have been aware from time to time, from studying various agreements, that sometimes more is asked for than is required. This is true of Government Departments. We learn at the end of sessions that there is a carryover simply because the Department has asked for more money than it actually needed.

This is my concern with regard to this particular piece of legislation. I realize that no one actually likes to see the Auditor General coming into their office, but he is the appointed watchdog over the treasury. In our view, once the Government of Canada becomes involved beyond the 50 per cent level in any particular company, there should be some safeguard for the taxpayers of Canada.

There is yet another concern embodied in the so-called secret letter of June 24.

• (1230)

Those of us who served on the committee are aware that early in the committee sessions, I believe it was on Tuesday morning, I requested the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to place before the committee the letter of agreement between the Government of Canada and the Bank of Nova Scotia which spelled out, in some considerable detail, the actual commitment which has been made by the federal Government to the Bank of Nova Scotia, a commitment which many independents referred to as a bailout of the bank. There were many independents who said the bank should have taken its own bath. No one forced them to make these loans. They did it with the hope of securing gain from the interest involved.

If you, Sir, make a bad investment, you have to suffer the loss. In this case the Bank of Nova Scotia obviously made what appears to be a bad investment. They overreached. They overreacted to the 200-mile limit and the euphoria that went with it. They thought there would be no end. They thought everything would keep going up and nothing would ever come down. But in this case things did come down. Here we have the Government of Canada coming in and bailing out, not necessarily the companies, but the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: With your support.

Mr. Crouse: One of the Members on the other side, who I will not name because that type of comment is beneath me—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Crouse: It is beneath me.

An Hon. Member: We don't need that.

Mr. Crouse: No, we do not need that, that is right. I thank the Member for that. We do not need that kind of comment from the Member from New Brunswick. I will go that far. We do not need your comment. If you want to speak on the Bill, get on your feet and speak when I finish.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I need your protection from these people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for South Shore was given the floor to contribute to the debate. He should not be interrupted.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that in 26, soon to be 27 years, I never interrupted an Hon. Member who was on the floor. I simply ask for the same courtesy when I am addressing this House. I invite them to come even close to that record to which I refer.

Coming back to what I was saying about the secret letter, the Minister at that time refused to table it. It would have been very helpful. It was only in the late hours of Thursday evening that we were able to obtain the document to which I have referred. I hold it in my hand. It was provided eventually, as I say, by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is part of the cause of the fears of independents, part of the cause of the concerns of those who are still trying to make a living in the fishing industry.

I would point out that there are approximately 700 independents who still run viable fishing industries. They are trying to find a way by which they will be able to compete with this monstrosity that has been put together in Newfoundland and which is pending for my own Province of Nova Scotia. I say pending because no agreement has yet been signed with the Province of Nova Scotia as it relates to restructuring within that Province. We heard some very interesting testimony before the committee about that situation when the Hon. John Leefe, Minister of Fisheries for the Province of Nova Scotia, appeared and gave his views as they applied to the restructuring industry.

I realize my time is limited but one of the concerns is found on page 4 of the letter that was finally provided by the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On that page we read at the very top:

(b) in Holdco Y these shares will carry a 5 per cent cumulative dividend payable at the end of ten years in Class A Preferred Shares.

Listen to this very carefully, Mr. Speaker:

At the end of the ten year period, the Bank may offer, and the Government of Canada will purchase at par, the Class A Preferred Shares then held by the Bank in Holdco Y. At the time of such purchase the Bank will assign to the Government of Canada on a pro rata basis the common shares associated with the purchased Class A Preferred Shares.

It goes on to say:

Subject to negotiations with the other shareholders of Holdco X, it is the intention of the Bank and of the Government of Canada to cause Holdco X to dispose of its assets within five years.

I will not read it all, but just one more short paragraph:

By mutual consent, the Bank and the Government of Canada may cause Holdco X to hold its assets beyond five years. If one party only wishes to cause Holdco X to hold its assets beyond five years, that party shall have the right to purchase the other party's shares in Holdco X for an aggregate amount equal to the amount which the other party would have received had the assets been sold and a distribution made in accordance with clause 8.

There is much more, but this is the very basis of the over-all restructuring agreement. It is all embodied in this letter. This is the point of debate between the Province of Nova Scotia and the federal Government, as I understand it, Sir. It is one of the requirements of the Government of Nova Scotia that no government or combination of governments shall hold more than 49 per cent of the restructured companies. That was initially agreed to by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, as I understand it, when consultations were held at Port Hawkesbury in early September. For some unknown reason, these conditions are now to be withdrawn by the federal Government. They are not being met. One of the conditions put forward by the Government of Nova Scotia is that they must be met. However, it is obvious after we read this letter that the federal Government cannot meet that particular condition because they have stated, and I repeat:

At the end of the ten year period, the Bank may offer, and the Government of Canada will purchase at par,—

They do not say "may" but "will".

There are a number of other reasons which I will quickly put on the record. There are some measures pertaining to accountability and control that should be considered as priority areas. These would include requiring that all funds used under the Act be voted on under the normal appropriation process. It would require an annual report of the operation of the Act, to be tabled no later than, say, two months after the end of the fiscal year. The appropriate parliamentary committee could then review the operations of the restructured companies. A sunset clause should be provided. There should be measures to ensure that nationalized enterprises do not become mini versions of Canadair. There should be some sort of control mechanism with respect to the "public interest" clause. Does the Government of Canada, for example, really need to be exempt from the Combines Investigation Act?

All of these, Mr. Speaker, are concerns of the independent companies and of the fishermen. I put them on the record so that you will realize the basis upon which our motion is moved. I hope it will be acceptable to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) and to the amendment which he has proposed to Bill C-170. To be clear, let me say that we on this side of the House do not support the amendment as proposed for a number of reasons.

The first reason is that this amendment, as it now stands, is ultra vires in the case of the agreement that has been reached with the Government of Newfoundland. That is, under the agreement with the Government of Newfoundland the company which will be set up is going to be set up under the Corporation Act of the Province of Newfoundland. This agreement would therefore be ultra vires. That presents a serious problem in itself.

In addition to that problem of legality, the amendment coming at this stage of the game, after an agreement has been reached with Newfoundland, could possibly, in the view of Newfoundland, abrogate an agreement that has already been reached.

The third point I would make is that this amendment, being imposed at this stage on what I would call a piece of enabling legislation, could in theory—I am not saying it would, but could—intrude upon negotiations not yet completed with the Government of Nova Scotia.

The fourth point, Mr. Speaker, is that this amendment, if accepted, would set a precedent as far as Crown corporations are concerned. According to the Financial Administration Act, Crown corporations are scheduled and the Auditor General does not have access in this way for all Crown corporations scheduled D and below. In fact, this particular quasi-Crown corporation, since the Government of Canada will hold shares in the company, would be a schedule E company. It is the intent of the Government to come before the House with a comprehensive policy under the Financial Administration Act as far as Crown corporations are concerned, in accordance with the suggestion that the Auditor General be given power to examine the books of the company in which the Government holds shares.

Another most important point is that the Government of Canada is not going to own the fishing industry of eastern Canada lock, stock and barrel. As I said earlier, like the Governments of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, since the federal Government really has no other choice it is injecting capital into an industry, through equity, which otherwise would collapse. We know what the ramifications of a collapse would be.

As a result of the Government having 49 per cent of the voting shares, this amendment suggests that the other 51 per cent, or perhaps 60 per cent in the case of Nova Scotia, of the shares held by private entrepreneurs would mean that private entrepreneurs would have their shares and financial statements subject to the scrutiny of the Auditor General of Canada. It would be an incredible precedent to have that private capital subject to scrutiny by the Auditor General. There is no precedent anywhere for that kind of intrusion into the affairs of private business.

I asked Mr. Ron Bulmer, the Fisheries Council of Canada representative who speaks for the processors of Canada, what he thought of this amendment. His response was that it would set a very dangerous precedent if the Government were serious in saying that it was putting in money now through equity capital and wishes to reprivatize when the industry is sound again. If part of the process of reprivatizing the industry is to sell it off in pieces, there are very few people who will want to buy into something which will automatically expose their books and business dealings to the Auditor General of Canada.

For all of those reasons, not the least of which is that it is ultra vires, we cannot accept this amendment.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in my view this amendment is absolutely essential. I do not buy any of the arguments advanced by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Tobin).

If we were to establish a precedent that federal Crown corporations be subject to the scrutiny of the Auditor General, then in my view that would be a good precedent. One of the problems that we have in this country is that Crown corporations are not subject to that scrutiny.

Just let us examine what happened with Canadair. It came back year after year for a period of three or four years and presented figures to the parliamentary committee that was studying it. These figures, presumably from audited statements done by the auditor of their choice, showed that that company was sound. In the third or fourth year we find that it needs an injection of $1.5 billion in taxpayer's money after it had assured us that it was operating soundly. This is what occurs when the Auditor General of Canada, who is responsible to the House, does not have the authority to review the books of Crown corporations.

Pursuant to Bill C-170 there is $138 million of taxpayer's money to be invested in these fishery enterprises. That is not counting the $100 million of guarantees and it is not counting any further moneys that the Government might secure through additional parliamentary appropriations.

For these reasons I reaffirm my initial statement that this is an essential amendment and that the Auditor General of Canada must be given the authority to protect that $138 million and more of public funds.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is not as though our Party has taken a stand against the Bill because we have not done that. We have made a plea for sanity, for a humanitarian application that is so vital to the health of the total industry.

I listened to the Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) who expressed the concerns that were expressed by the witnesses who appeared before the committee. We are trying and will continue to try to get the best deal for the total fishery of Atlantic Canada that can be extracted on their behalf.

Like the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), I attended virtually every moment of the hearings where witnesses appeared before the fisheries committee. I ask the Member for Gloucester, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the Parliamentary Secretary, how many witnesses out of the many we heard did in fact give unqualified support for this Bill?

Mr. Tobin: Sixty per cent.

Mr. McCain: That is a very high estimate. I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that perhaps he should review the recommendations of those witnesses. At best they were qualified and in several instances they gave that qualified support because of the social responsibility they felt on behalf of the unemployed fishermen and unemployed processors. However, there was objection in principle to the modus operandi which was proposed by the Minister in the Bill which we are presently discussing.

I think the Member for Gloucester will remember that the Maritime Fishermen's Union appeared and primarily represented the East Coast of New Brunswick along with other parts of the industry in both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They particularly stated that there should be adjustments made in the Bill. As well, they were one of the groups who specifically said that they recognized the social necessity of action by the Government of Canada. To that degree they supported it, but to that degree only. They recommended that there be adjustments which will protect those who do not work for the large corporations which are to be nationalized under this legislation.

Mr. Tobin: They want us to go even farther.

Mr. McCain: That was not the way I interpreted it. However, that may be the favourable interpretation which was given to it by the Parliamentary Secretary.

We are attempting once again to explain to the public as best we can how this corporation will be operated. We have suggested that the Auditor General study this in depth because the recommendations of the fisheries committee in the House which has examined the salt-cod operation from Newfoundland and the freshwater situation during my term in this Parliament have been roadblocked, deadended and made futile. The discussions which took place in committee had nothing whatsoever to do with any adjustment in management or reconsideration of policies by those companies.

There will be a report submitted to the Parliament of Canada which will, at the pleasure and leisure which may be enjoyed by the Minister, be submitted to a committee. We may find ourselves locked into the block system with a couple of meetings which will be as futile as the historic meetings on the block system when the Government wishes to stall and not give information.

The only way that the people of Canada will have a hope of knowing what takes place in that corporation and whether the fishing industry is being well served is for the Government to accept the authority of the Auditor General to make comments in his Annual Report with respect to the company. That does give the Standing Committee on Public Accounts an opportunity to examine the performance of the company. I think that is absolutely vital to the safeguarding first, of the reputation of the Minister responsible and, second, to the safety of those not directly incorporated under this structure.

It is my understanding, although I was compelled to be at another meeting at an earlier date, that the Government has offered amendments to this Bill and that those amendments have been declared by the Chair as not being admissible. These amendments which were introduced were not admissible. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a rather sorry situation when either the Government or a Member of the Party which is the Government would introduce amendments with the aim of improving the structure and then find that the ruling of the Chair discarded them. I am not reflecting on the ruling, not at all; I am reflecting upon the wisdom and understanding and the capability of Government Members to be influential at the decision-making process. It is a sort of sad reflection upon the status which Members on your right, Mr. Speaker, enjoy when they cannot even get the kind of advice that would help them to introduce legitimate amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments in the terms he was making them. Nevertheless, he is talking to a matter or matters not before the House. In terms of the rule of relevancy, that is hardly acceptable. I appreciate the Hon. Member is not reflecting on the Chair's earlier ruling. By the same token something which the Chair has decided cannot be put to the House should not be bootlegged into the debate, if I can use that expression, by the back door, as the Hon. Member is doing. I feel strongly that he should not be commenting in any way, shape or form upon amendments which are not before the House because they were ruled out of order. Though the Chair may be guided by the rule of relevancy, it is inspired by the principle of leniency. I invite the Hon. Member to return to the amendment now before the House.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I shall not dispute your ruling except to say that I did not discuss the individual amendments. I think I did discuss things that were pertinent to the Bill inasmuch as there was an effort to amend. There was no question about your ruling at that time, Mr. Speaker. I do think the subject matter is pertinent and important to the discussion of the Bill. However, I shall move away from that.

May I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) through you, Mr. Speaker, that when Members opposite sort of get caught in their own trap they become defensive and, on occasion, offensive. He is no exception to occasional offensive interjections and subject matter of which he would know as much as I know—

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is clear that during report stage discussion should be related specifically to the amendments. Third reading will follow report stage and the Hon. Member can then run off at the mouth all he likes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Though I would not put it in those terms, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is quite right and I was tempted to add that to my earlier comments. I invite the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) to continue debate.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I apologize for hurting the feelings of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. It is really too bad that he is so thin-skinned. However, I respect your ruling and, as I mentioned earlier, I have not interjected my comments into other speeches in this debate because it is too serious a debate. Perhaps those Members from Ontario do not recognize what may be the consequence to Atlantic Canada. Of course, there is always the possibility from their behaviour in the debate on this Bill and their impatience that they do not give a damn. I think that is closer to the truth than anything else that I can say.

It was stated by the Minister when earlier discussions took place on this subject matter that it would be impossible to have the Auditor General as a scrutineer of the public's affairs in this Crown corporation because there were other parties to it. This is a matter of negotiation. I submit that if the Government of Canada were to negotiate with the same force and take the same adamant position that was taken in the earlier negotiations leading to the Crown corporation which we now have, the Parties would indeed include in the agreement the right of the House of Commons to write into the Bill that the Auditor General be the auditor of the affairs of the company. It is not objected to, in my opinion, because of the agreement; it is objected to because it is not according to the principles of those who made this proposition to the Provinces, nor are they prepared to consider the representation of all the witnesses who presented themselves before the committee. I regret very much the adamant position of the Government on a Bill that needs amending in the best interests of the fisheries and of Atlantic Canada. I implore the Government to not throw out every suggestion of every witness who appeared before the committee.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on Motion No. 11 which requests that the Auditor General be given unlimited access to the financial records. This is a Canadian way of doing things. We have seen in the past other Crown corporations right across the country where financial records are not available, so that this House can be accountable to the taxpayers in individual ridings. Clearly, there is something wrong when the Government of the day resists a motion so vehemently as it resists Motion No. 11 today.

Basically, all this amendment calls for is accountability to this House of Commons. I, for one, feel this is why the House of Commons is looked upon across the nation as being irrelevant. We are not accountable for Crown corporations like Petro-Canada. Another one is now being created in this Bill and we will not be accountable to the Canadian taxpayer because of it. We see this happening time and time again. We cannot get records showing where the money is being spent or how it is being spent. Every other corporation in the land must put their books forward if it is a public corporation. We owe it to the Canadian voter, the Canadian taxpayer, to be accountable in this House. Therefore, I support the motion. I urge all Members to search their consciences and support this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The question is on Motion No. 11. All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Crouse: On division.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Crouse) negatived.

Mr. De Bané moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): When shall the Bill be read a third time? Pursuant to order made earlier this day, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. De Bané moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

EMPLOYMENT

CONSTITUENCY FUNDS ALLOCATED UNDER JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in response to an Order Paper question from the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), information was released on Friday concerning constituency allocations under the Canada Works and LEAD Programs.

The information shows a disturbing pattern, in that funds under the job-creation programs go disproportionately to constituencies held by Liberal Members of Parliament. While the Liberals hold 52 per cent of the constituencies in the House and those constituencies account for 59 per cent of the unemployed, they receive 78 per cent of the money allocated under these programs. In my constituency the allocation per person receiving unemployment insurance is only 60 per cent as much as in the neighbouring riding of Nickel Belt, which is represented by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola). Where is the equity in this? How can the Government take the position that unemployed people in neighbouring constituencies should have such unequal access to these programs?

INDUSTRY

ITT-RAYONIER QUEBEC—POSSIBILITY OF RESUMED PROSPERITY—NECESSITY TO EVALUATE SITUATION

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I was at a meeting in Port Cartier last week, on Thursday, November 24, to discuss the possibility of reopening ITT-Rayonier Quebec. I have here a speech made by the Mayor, Mr. Tony Détroio, on this subject. A copy of the speech was sent to the Office of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the Office of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley), for assessment. I feel that the Mayor's comments at the meeting were entirely justified, and that it is absolutely essential, not only that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should get in touch with the Quebec Department of Energy and Resources in order to find a solution, but also that a task force should be set up in order to ensure the plant is reopened.

Mr. Speaker, the second point I would like to make is that it is also vital that the Quebec Government should provide the federal Government with all information on various negotiations and meetings that have taken place with Finland, China and other countries regarding the possible acquisition of the ITT-Rayonier Quebec plant in Port Cartier. At the present time, the main problem is that the federal Government does not have all the information since stumpage rights and power rates are not a federal matter. We cannot speak on behalf of the Government of Quebec in these two areas which are essential to any discussion about reopening ITT-Rayonier Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, for all of the reasons I have just mentioned, I would ask the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to accelerate the process for assessing the ITT-Rayonier Quebec file and to ensure that all information is transmitted by Quebec to the federal Government and that Quebec—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! Unfortunately, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF CONSTITUENCY FUNDS TO P.E.I. RIDINGS UNDER JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same subject as that raised by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). The allocation of federal funds under the Canada Works and LEAD programs clearly reveals the extent to which the federal Government is using these programs to try to save the political hides of sitting Liberal Members of Parliament rather than to address the real needs of the unemployed.

In my riding of Hillsborough, for example, the allocation under the programs in question amounts to $225 per person receiving unemployment insurance. By contrast, in the neighbouring riding of Cardigan the allocation amounts to $764 per person receiving unemployment insurance, a discrepancy in excess of three to one, at the expense of the unemployed in my riding. I urge the Minister of unemployment to explain to the taxpayers and to the unemployed in my riding how he can justify such a disparity in their opportunity to benefit from these programs compared with their neighbours in the very next riding where conditions are exactly comparable.

THE MEDIA

BROADCAST NEWS—DISMISSAL OF BROADCASTING REPRESENTATIVES FROM BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House and Hon. Members on all sides a recent development which again demonstrates in the most shocking manner the cavalier and even dangerous attitude of major Canadian news publishing interests. While this event took place several weeks ago, it received little if any press coverage until today. Yet its implications, and the attitude which it demonstrates, would certainly have been front-page news were it involving any other enterprise with a similar impact upon Canadian life.

Late in October at a meeting of the Board of Directors of Broadcast News, the subsidiary of Canadian Press, as a result of a conflict between the broadcasting representatives and the publishing representatives, the publishers used their strength to fire all the broadcasting representatives on the Board. The senior manager of Broadcast News was fired by the publishing interests as well. This means that while Canadian television and radio broadcasting interests contribute the largest portion of the funds which run Canadian Press and Broadcast News, the important Broadcast News division, by far the largest domestic news service to Canadian broadcasting interests, has no broadcasting representatives on its Board. They dared to disagree with the publishers. Surely this arrogance and insensitivity by the publishers' representatives is a further warning that, in the news publishing industry in Canada, with all its immense clout, there is shocking insensitivity to the need for broad and diverse input to assure a free press.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

INABILITY TO COMPENSATE FOR MISCARRIAGES OF JUSTICE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party deplore the fact that Donald Marshall was convicted of a crime he did not commit and that he lost 11 years of his life incarcerated in a federal penitentiary. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) rose in the House on November 15 and November 18, urging the Government to compensate Donald Marshall for the legal expenses he incurred trying to prove his innocence, and also to compensate in some way for the unjust treatment he suffered.

In the last few days we have seen Conservative Members joining in our demand for compensation, and we welcome them. However, let us not forget the numerous statements they have made in the House over the past three years on the necessity for capital punishment. Let us learn from the Marshall incident and recognize the possibility, if not probability, of other similar miscarriages of justice occurring, with horrendous consequences for which no adequate compensation could ever be paid. Let us recognize that the justice system is not infallible and that errors can and will continue to be made.

If we had followed the advice of the Conservative Party and reinstated capital punishment, how would we apologize, let alone compensate, for the errors which would have been made? The victims would have been dead.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF JOB-CREATION FUNDS TO CONSTITUENCIES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my statement also relates to the information released on the Canada Works and LEAD programs as a result of the question placed on the Order Paper by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). In the Atlantic Provinces the allocation per person receiving unemployment insurance is $174 in constituencies represented by Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament. In Liberal constituencies the allocation per unemployed person is $385. Some cases are much worse.

In my constituency of Carleton-Charlotte the allocation per unemployed person is less than one-third of what it is next door in the Liberal constituency of Madawaska-Victoria. How can the Minister justify such discrepancies in these adjoining constituencies with comparable economies and comparable employment opportunities?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

DECISION BY MR. ROCHE NOT TO SEEK RE-ELECTION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, many of us in the House, and all Canadians concerned with the peace movement, were disappointed to read in today's newspaper of the decision of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) not to seek re-election. This Member has been a leader, both in Canada and in international fora, in the causes of global peace and international development. I have had the distinct pleasure of working with him a number of times over the last year and a half, since joining with him and others to release the minority report on security and disarmament.

It is especially of concern that there is no place in the Tory caucus for a thoughtful disarmament campaigner such as the Hon. Member, that his decision to resign is based upon the feeling that he cannot pursue his causes within the Conservative caucus and that, according to The Globe and Mail of today, he has been "unhappy with the rightward drift of his Party's foreign policy position". One shudders to think of the Neanderthal direction Tory foreign policy is bound to take without the reasoned, progressive voice of the Hon. Member for Edmonton South being present to balance those in that caucus who would have the Tories become the "Republican Party North".

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF CONSTITUENCY FUNDS UNDER JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to bring to the attention of the House the strange Liberal Party notion of justice and fair play for the unemployed. Official departmental figures for the 1983-84 Canada Works and Local Employment Assistance and Development Programs reveal that the constituency allocations for these job-creation programs are more related considerations than to the needs of the unemployed. Not only do Liberal constituencies receive 78 per cent of the funds allocated but, on a per-person basis, unemployed people who live in Liberal ridings receive over twice as much as those who live in other ridings.

• (1410)

Why does the Government consider the 350,000 unemployed persons who live in Progressive Conservative ridings to be so much less worthy of government support than the unemployed who live in Liberal ridings? Are the unemployed, wherever they live, being treated fairly and justly? That is the question the House should ask, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, and sadly, the answer is no.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO MEET DEMANDS OF INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in my comments today I would like to make the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) a little more aware of what is going on in the Canadian footwear industry.

As the House is aware, the industry has been very actively lobbying the vast majority of Members of this House—not just one side but both sides of the House. The industry is of course seeking speedy action to extend overall quotas in the footwear industry for the next five years. Considering the industry's present efforts to modernize and to improve productivity; considering the fact that the two-year arrangement approved by the Government is clearly inadequate to guarantee security and stability in the industry; and also considering the thousands of workers that are still in the industry, I would urge the Minister to respond positively, without delay, to a request that is entirely justified and that, for once, would give the Government an opportunity to save existing jobs instead of imagining them through all kinds of programs, which are often aimed at providing only temporary employment. I feel this industry not only deserves the respect of our elected representatives but also their support for the people who work there, and there are still several thousands of them. I also urge the Government to ensure that this industry, which has a great deal going for it—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member's time has expired.

VIA RAIL

LOCATION OF STATION IN SICAMOUS, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, would someone construct a covered stadium yet fail to provide any spectator seating? Would someone build a school and forget to instal student desks? Of course not, yet something of this nature is precisely what VIA Rail has done in Sicamous, British Columbia.

Sicamous depends upon VIA Rail for much of its tourist business, as well as for general transportation purposes. However, when VIA recently constructed a new passenger station in Sicamous it failed to provide any passenger access. An appropriate right-of-way to the station was never obtained, so the station is cut off from public access. As well, the station which is located in the British Columbia snowbelt is open to the harsh winter conditions of the area. It is unheated, unlighted, and has no washroom or toilet facilities. It has no telephones, and there is no way of determining if the arrival of a train is imminent. The station also lacks a parking lot. To call it a station or passenger depot is to use the term very loosely.

The people of Sicamous, British Columbia, hear and read of the Government's commitment to improving western rail transportation, yet are forced to accept a most appalling situation when it comes to VIA Rail service. The people of Sicamous need and support VIA Rail, so I would urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to intervene in this fiasco and provide the people of Sicamous, British Columbia, with the passenger service they need and deserve.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF CONSTITUENCY FUNDS UNDER JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment very briefly on the logic, sense, and reality of the Government's approach to job creation in the country. At some point before this Session ends I would like to hear someone from the other side try to tell me why it is that, with respect to surplus labour, Cardigan constituency gets $764 a job, the constituency of Egmont gets $794 a job, the constituency of Dartmouth-Halifax East gets $27 a job, the constituency of Hillsborough gets $225 a job and the constituency of Malpeque gets $254 a job. Is it because the Government is paying attention to its backbenchers by trying to buy jobs in their constituencies at the expense of the unemployed and those who are in desperate trouble? Is that the only answer they can give us? If so, they should quit, resign, or call an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF CONSTITUENCY FUNDS UNDER JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He will know that on Friday one of the Order Paper questions of the Hon. Member for St. John's East which was answered puts in the public domain some of the required information on constituency allocation of Canada Works and LEAD funds. An analysis of this information reveals that, while Conservative Members represent 31 per cent of the unemployed, their ridings are allocated only 16 per cent of the funds under these programs. At the same time Liberal Members represent 59 per cent of the unemployed but their ridings receive 78 per cent of the funds. Could the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell the House how the Liberal Party of Canada justifies treating the unemployed people in such a manner?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has just revealed the basis upon which the opposition Party would make allocations if it were to be in power, that is to say, it would make those allocations on the basis of the party labels of the Members of Parliament. However, that is not the basis upon which we have allocated these funds.

The allocation of these funds, as has been explained to the Hon. Member many times, is on the basis of the labour surplus rates across the country in the various constituencies. If it is true that more money is flowing to constituencies which happen to be represented by Liberal Members, it is because the labour surplus rates in those constituencies are unfortunately higher than in those constituencies held by Conservative Members.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that the allocations to the constituency held by the Leader of the Opposition have increased very significantly. That hardly reflects a partisan bias on our side. If, for instance, the Hon. Member would care to regard the allocations going to the Province of British Columnbia where, if memory serves me correctly, we do not hold any seats at all, he will find that those allocations have increased considerably. I believe that his insinuation that partisan considerations are at the root of these allocations is clearly false.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would like to read his own data. Not one dime of LEAD funds has gone west of the Ontario border.

FUNDS ALLOCATED TO LIBERAL AND PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE RIDINGS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the unemployed people who live in Liberal ridings are given job-allocation funds at an average rate of $193 per person. People in the same circumstances who are unemployed and have spouses, children, and depression to cope with, who live in Conservative ridings are given $78 on average per person. Is that the Liberal idea of justice and fair play? Are there two kinds of unemployed Canadian citizens, those who live in Liberal ridings and those who live in the other ridings?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should also look at the figures again. He said that no funds were allocated west of Ontario. If he were to look at the figures for British Columbia he would find that there has already been an increase in funding to that Province of something like $2 million over the $11 million from last year, a very considerable increase even by the Hon. Member's extraordinary arithmetic. I would think it is an increase of something like 20 per cent.

The Hon. Member then referred to the LEAD allocations. He should know, but if he does not know he should go back and find out, that the LEAD allocations are based upon persistent rates of high labour surplus over a four-year period. Most of the areas of the country in which there has been a higher than average labour surplus rate are to be found in the eastern part of the country and not west of Ontario.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I used to assign to my classes a textbook called "How to Lie With Statistics".

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS UNDER LOCAL EMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, there are 28 ridings in the Province of British Columbia and not one has received a dime of LEAD money. Can the Minister tell us whether he thinks the problems of alcoholism, suicide, depression, and others that go along with unemployment, are any less severe for those unemployed people who live in Conservative ridings than for those who live in Liberal ridings? If those problems are no less severe, why is there not a fair allocation to each unemployed person in the country?

• (1420)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has been assigning text books on the basis of the quality of his questions, his students have my deepest sympathy. I gave him the answer to this question in my answer to his previous question, and that is that LEAD funds are allocated on the basis of a four-year term of persistent higher than normal labour surplus rates. That is clearly set out in documents which the Hon. Member has had for months, so he has had time to look at them. It is not based on partisan considerations; it is based objectively on the labour surplus rate and it does focus on the eastern part of the country because that is where the highest rates of labour surplus have been.

ALLOCATIONS TO CONSTITUENCIES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In the Atlantic region, under the Canada Works and Local Employment Assistance and Development job-creation programs, $51.6 million is being allocated to Atlantic Province constituencies in 1983-84. Of this amount 82 per cent is going to the 19 Liberal constituencies and 18 per cent is going to the 13 Progressive Conservative constituencies, despite the fact that the Conservative Members represent 35 per cent of the persons receiving unemployment insurance in the region.

Will the Minister tell the House why those 56,000 unemployment insurance recipients in Progressive Conservative ridings are less worthy of assistance under these programs than the 109,000 unemployment insurance recipients represented by Liberal Members?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, once again we see quite clearly the partisan obsession of Ministers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Right on!

Mr. Roberts: —of Hon. Members opposite, and, I would add, of the former Ministers opposite. Not one of them, including the last former Minister who spoke, has had the grace to remember that it was his Government that tried to cancel the whole program when it was in office. They are obsessed with partisan concerns. They would prefer it to go to Conservative constituencies rather than to Liberal constituencies. We want the funds to go where there is the highest level of unemployment, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY RESPECTING ALLOCATIONS PER CAPITA

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, let us try a very simple question. If we break down the allocations on a per unemployed person basis, the average unemployed person in a Progressive Conservative constituency get only 45 per cent as much access to these programs as does the average unemployed person in a similar riding in a Liberal region. Without his political rhetoric, can the Minister get serious and explain why this should be so? Why the unfairness?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the questions are very simple, and they are very partisan and very distorted. I have explained already, in answer to five questions, that the basis of the allocation is on the objectively established labour surplus rates. It is for that reason that the constituency of the Leader of the Opposition has received such a significant increase. It has not received a significant increase because he is the Leader of the Opposition, and it has not received a significant increase because he is a Conservative; it has received a significant increase because there is a much higher increase in the labour surplus in his constituency. That same explanation applies fairly to all constituencies across Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows that the Canadian Mental Health Association has warned that many Canadians will suffer grave personal harm if record unemployment continues. He also knows that the Ontario Minister of Social Services has asked for an extra $100 million this winter for 35,000 new welfare applicants. As well as the 35,000 that Ontario expects, how many exhaustees does the Minister predict for 1984? What steps will he recommend to the federal-provincial conference next week, both to provide more jobs and to provide extended unemployment insurance benefits for the jobless?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I caught a reference to the federal-provincial conference. Perhaps the Hon. Member would clarify what he is referring to, in a supplementary question.

With regard to the part of his question which deals with the level of exhaustees, in our belief it is running at the mid-60,-000 level. We expect that number to decrease over the next six months. I simply do not know and I cannot make a very precise estimate of what that decrease will be, but we expect significant decreases through to the end of 1983 and well into 1984.

LEVEL OF DEPARTMENTAL STAFFING IN TORONTO AREA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Employment and Insurance Division in Toronto District has cut out 48 positions this year, as I have already given notice to the Minister, and the director's memo, which I have in my hand, forecasts more cuts in staff in 1984 and the possible closing of some service points. Will the Minister tell the House how many term and other employees will be laid off in the Toronto district, and in Canada, next year? Which points of service are being considered for closing? Does he justify cutting staff because so many workers will have exhausted their benefits that they will not be making claims?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is partly no, and I will touch upon that in a moment. It is true that we estimate there will be something like 96 term employees, not permanent employees, who will be laid off in the Metropolitan Toronto area. I am looking for the figure for over-all Canada but I do not have that at my fingertips. I will send it to the Hon. Member when I receive it. I do not expect that there will be any points of service closed as a result of the steps we are taking.

The Hon. Member asked for an explanation of why there is a lay-off amongst those casual employees. The answer is that there has been a marked decline in applicants for unemployment insurance. There is a decline of something like close to 20 per cent in applicants in the Toronto area, and a decline over-all in the country of something like 16 per cent. We do not need the same amount of human resources to process those applications as we have had in the past because of that very significant decline in applications, coming to almost a figure of a 20 per cent cutback.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF JOB-CREATION CONSTITUENCY FUNDS TO CARLETON-CHARLOTTE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister will be very happy that he has been a little more generous to Carleton-Charlotte this year than he was last year: otherwise the comparative figures would have been extremely embarrassing. At the moment in Carleton-Charlotte we receive $141 per person receiving unemployement insurance. In the neighbouring Liberal constituency of Madawaska-Victoria they get $461 per person receiving unemployment insurance—over three times as much. Could the Minister explain to the unemployed people of my constituency the fairness of such a discrepancy, even in the face of a little more generous Liberal contribution this year than last?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we see very clearly the new face that the new Leader of the Opposition will put on the new Conservative Party. Not only does he boast that if there are appointments to be made when he becomes Prime Minister, and none of them will go to anyone who has not been a Conservative for 15 years, but we now see his Members rising one after the other in the House of Commons to underline that their concern is that unemployment insurance benefits go to their ridings on a partisan basis. I have explained, and, Mr. Speaker, you must be almost tired of hearing me do it, that the allocations made both under Canada Works and under the LEAD programs are based on objective statistics which relate to labour surplus. That is the explanation in response to the Hon. Member's question, as it has been to all the others presented today.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I have to say to you that the integrity of our Leader is unquestionable, and his fairness in his approach to Canadian problems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: He has not, nor has any member of this Party, had to wear the mask of deceit in order to face the public and try to lie and distort figures in defence of irrational decisions.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in view of the facts cited in my first question, is it the position of the Government that unemployed Canadians in my riding require less than unemployed Canadians 20 miles from my home in a Liberal constituency? Is that rational thought? No.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the integrity of the Hon. Member's Leader is unquestioned as well; that is one of the problems his Leader has.

The answer to the second part of the question is no.

LEVEL OF FUNDING IN TIMISKAMING AND NICKEL BELT RIDINGS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. In my riding of Timiskaming the allocation for Canada Works and LEAD programs is $97 per person receiving UIC. In the neighbouring constituency of Nickel Belt, represented by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the allocation works out to $168 per person.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacDougall: Can the Minister explain to the unemployed people in my constituency the equity in that?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Same question, Mr. Speaker; same answer.

Mr. MacDougall: I am sure the unemployed people in Timiskaming will enjoy hearing that type of answer.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACT TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The fact remains that across the country those people who are fortunate enough to have a Conservative Member of Parliament representing them are in the unfortunate position of having a Liberal Government which is playing politics with the unemployed. Is it the position of the Government that unemployed persons in certain constituencies in Canada should have less access to these programs than others? What is the Minister going to do to create jobs for all ridings equally?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I had some difficulty hearing the final part of the Hon. Member's question. I would suggest to him, in relation to the first part of his question, that the citizens of the Hon. Member's constituency might be interested in why it is that the Conservative Party has not come forward with one constructive suggestion for creating jobs since this session started again in September.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

WESTERN OILSEED INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR MINIMUM COMPENSATORY RATES

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. After the passing of Bill C-155 has the Minister given any consideration to providing minimum compensatory rates to the oilseed crushing industry in western Canada, east of Thunder Bay, and the same MCRs for shipments from Ontario to export, to provide markets for both western canola oil and the Ontario oilseed industry? Has the Minister given any consideration to that proposal?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have been looking very carefully at this issue. The Minister of Agriculture and myself met some weeks ago, I believe, with the representatives of the crushers in eastern Ontario and western Canada to discuss how we might find a proper solution to the problem because there are, as you know, two very different points of view on that issue. We have taken the material they presented to us. I hope to be able to sit down very soon with the Minister of Agriculture and then get back to those two representative groups to see if we can a solution which is workable for both.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LETTER OF COMPLAINT FROM ACCOUNTANTS IN CAMBRIDGE, ONT.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will have at hand a letter which has been signed by every chartered accounting firm in the community of Cambridge. It constitutes a very serious indictment of the attitude and the behaviour of his Department. There are five points in the letter, two of which are as follows: first, Revenue Canada is using quotas whereby assessors are expected to assess a certain amount of tax in a given period; second, Revenue Canada has abandoned all sense of fairness and objectivity in order to maximize tax assessments.

In light of the fact that there is a deficit of $30 billion, and in view of the fact that the Government has a cash flow problem, have there been any directives sent by the Minister, or anyone in his Department, with respect to quotas for assessors? Second, since every accountant signed this letter to the Minister, will he take seriously the allegation that there is unfairness and uneven-handedness in his Department?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, once more, I wish to inform the Members of this House that the main concern of the employees of my Department is to perform their duties while dealing equitably and fairly with all Canadian taxpayers. I may add that the work being done by Departmental auditors concerning taxpayers and their compliance with the laws of this country and our income tax laws has nothing to do with the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, we audit tax returns in order to ensure that all Canadian taxpayers are paying their share of the tax burden and that the failure of one individual to comply with this country's income tax legislation does not put a burden on another taxpayer whose compliance is 100 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, in all corners of this Chamber people believe that Revenue Canada is out of hand and the Minister is shirking his responsibility in not appreciating that fact.

QUOTA SETTING INQUIRY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, the central question I asked, the one to which I did not receive an answer, was: has there been any directive sent, either by senior officials of the Minister's Department, or by the Minister, with respect to quotas for assessors in terms of assessing taxpayers' claims?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, it is our responsibility to ensure that taxpayers who do not comply with the Income Tax Act are called on and, after an audit, asked to do their duty. We do not use methods that are inequitable or unfair, and in fact, we are guided by the principle that all Canadian taxpayers should be treated equitably.

CRIMINAL CODE

SEXUAL ASSAULT PROVISIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who is no doubt aware that a woman is in prison for seven days, a woman who was the victim of a serious crime of violence, because she was afraid to testify against a motorcycle gang. My question has nothing to do with the prosecution for contempt, because that is under provincial responsibility. However, I would like to know what the Minister is going to do about the sexual assault Section, the previous rape Section, in the Criminal Code. Is the Minister aware that evidence as to the past sexual history of this woman was admitted and that she had no chance to refute it? Would the Minister agree that the past sexual history of a victim ought not to be relevant to the determination of guilt or innocence in a particular case? If so, how does the Minister intend to amend the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Criminal Code has already been amended. The substantive case behind the contempt proceedings which have just taken place was a charge of rape and the trial of rape under the old Sections of the Criminal Code which were abolished by this House a year or so ago. The provisions for evidence which were in effect at that time are no longer in effect. However, of course, for cases which began before the Code was changed, procedure under the old law is followed. By Section 246.7 that kind of evidence would no longer be admissible.

CONCERN EXPRESSED BY RAPE CRISIS CENTRES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Minister is aware that Rape Crisis Centres and sexual assault centres are not satisfied that this problem has been dealt with adequately in the new changes in the legislation. Is the Minister aware that Rape Crisis Centres feel that, as a result of the current case, they cannot encourage women who are victims of sexual assault to come forward? We may have a situation in which there have been some improvement in the law, but they do not go far enough. We are going to have victims of crime who are going to be afraid to complain because these reforms have not gone far enough. The evidence can still be admitted by another witness, for example, if not the woman herself. This is a loophole which remains in the law.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there may well be remaining loopholes in the law. If there are, experience will uncover them. As I have said several times in the last year, we have ongoing a study of the effect of the new law. However, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to draw a conclusion as to the effect of the new law from a prosecution which has taken place under the old law. Therefore I would hope my hon. friend will help me in conveying to women's groups and women's centres across the country that we hope they will join us in giving the new law a fair chance. If it is not working, we shall certainly be open to changes. However, let us make sure that people across the country do not mislead women's groups with respect to the effect of the new law by prosecutions which still occasionally take place under the old law.

NATIONAL REVENUE

AUDIT AND COLLECTION PRACTICES OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue as well. It has to do with the unfortunate and what many people believe is the tyrannical way in which his Department is behaving. There are specific cases in the farming community and business community where people have been reassessed, forced to pay, they have then appealed and won their case, and yet it takes six to 12 months for their money to be refunded. Is the Minister prepared to see that the audit and collection sections of his Department act with some consistency so they do not place undue hardship on people and tie up their funds for six to 12 months, which in many cases is putting people out of business?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, obviously, it is important that a Department like the Department of National Revenue should provide excellent service to the public. I can assure the Hon. Member that when decisions in favour of the taxpayer take time, we do everything we can to help expedite such cases and provide a better service to the taxpayer.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would not say six to 12 months is expediting the situation. I certainly am prepared to give the Minister some examples.

PLIGHT OF FARMERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, the Graham case refers specifically to Section 31, and I want to ask the Minister if he is prepared to instruct his Department to treat this as a test case, and stop harassing individual farmers? I have on my desk cases from coast to coast where farmers are being put out of business. If the Minister is not prepared to do that, he is saying that people are guilty until they prove themselves innocent. I would hope he would be willing to listen to the Minister of Agriculture who sits in front of him, because he has apparently made those representations to the Minister, or is the Minister of Revenue going to be another Minister who does not listen to representations made by the Minister of Agriculture?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is confusing two things. First of all, the changes in the Income Tax Act, including, for instance, changes in the tenor of Section 31 which are the responsibility of the Minister of Finance, and I think that in this case, the Minister of Finance has a good understanding of what these representations are about, and if the Minister should decide to make any changes in Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, he will do so at the appropriate time. Second, it is wrong to believe that a decision in one specific case will necessarily lead to a different interpretation in all other cases covered by Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, and I would invite the Hon. Member to compare any cases he may know about that involve infringements of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, with the case to which he is referring. He will realize that he cannot generalize to that extent.

PRINCIPLE OF SELF ASSESSMENT BY TAXPAYERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister, who by now has to be aware that there is widespread alarm, bitterness and, yes, even fear at the Liberal Government's escalating use of third party demands on banks and others in its attempt to grab taxpayers' funds where taxes are deemed to be owed. Is the Liberal Government abandoning the principle of self assessment? As my colleague said, is the Liberal Government abandoning the principle of "innocent until proven guilty"? Has the citizen lost all protection from arbitrary measures being taken by assessors and collectors?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the present Government did not make a single change in the Income Tax Act until such changes were adopted by Parliament. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member's ignorance of the Income Tax Act is leading him to ask such questions and to insinuate publicly certain facts that are totally false. If the Hon. Member refers to Section 224 and following of the Income Tax Act and considers current practice and the time that elapses before we put a garnishee on wages or accounts, he will realize that this practice has not changed from what it was in the past. It is just his own ignorance that is looking for ways to prove itself!

[English]

OFFICIAL'S TELEPHONE CALL TO MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, a year ago the manager of a small branch of a bank was unlikely to ever see or hear of a third party demand. A bank manager who saw two in the previous two years has had 18 in his branch alone this year.

On November 24 last, as reported at page 29152 of Hansard, between 1130 and 1140 hours I drew attention to the escalating use of arbitrary power by Revenue Canada officials. At 1235 hours, one hour later, my Ottawa office received a call from a Revenue Canada investigator in Vancouver on a personal tax matter. Can the Minister assure me that this call was only coincidence, that I was not being harassed and my right and duty to speak out on behalf of constituents was not being interfered with?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was just a coincidence.

DIRECTIONS GIVEN TO TAX ASSESSORS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I have a simple question for the same Minister. It allows for a yes or no answer. Are Revenue Canada assessors in Cambridge, Ontario, or anywhere else in Canada, directed to meet a quota of tax assessed?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that we are trying to ensure that National Revenue auditors do their work as equitably as possible, and that Canadian taxpayers who fail to pay their taxes are called on and invited to complete their tax returns on a voluntary basis. If they fail to do so voluntarily, we assess them according to the tax they must pay.

[English]

QUOTA SYSTEM INQUIRY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am then assuming that the answer is yes, there is a quota system in place. Is that correct?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can draw all the conclusions he likes. What he should do is look at the answers and draw conclusions that are consistent with the premises given in those answers.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who is assigning these assessors—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has conceded a question and supplementary to the Right Hon. Member. A final supplementary—the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO ASSESSORS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Will the Minister of National Revenue tell this House who is assigning these quotas to assessors? Is it the Minister, or is it people in the field? Who is assigning those quotas?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member needs very clear answers to his questions. I can inform him that we do not operate under a quota system, that the people who are responsible for auditing and making assessments do so, when necessary according to the need existing in their regions and not according to a specific quota system, as the Hon. Member seems to be saying.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL REVIEW USE OF PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM GRANTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, pertaining to what appears to be building up as a very serious concern over the abuse of $8 billion in PIP grants over the last few years. Is the Minister prepared to request the Auditor General to examine these PIP grants to determine whether or not they have been applied to meet the legal objectives of the National Energy Program? Also, is he currently conducting an internal examination of his Department's use of those funds, and, if so, will he be making that investigation public through this House?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I checked into the problem some weeks ago and the information I have so far is that no one has been able to point to any abuse of this system. The expenditures under the PIP program are made according to the law voted by this Parliament. If the Hon. Member has some specific cases of abuse he should let me know, and I will certainly investigate the allegations with pleasure.

As to the Auditor General, I think the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is the object of a review by the Auditor General. In his report he has not pointed out any abuses in that system.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF USE OF GRANTS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would point out just one very small concern of many expressed, that is, that the diversion of $50 million from CHIP, the Conservation Program, into petroleum incentives is one of many, many abuses.

• (1450)

If the Minister is not prepared at least to ask the Auditor General to inquire specifically into the appropriate use of PIP grants, would he be prepared to put before this House a motion of reference to allow the committee on national resources to examine the entire question, to bring it out into the public eye and let the people have a look at what may amount to one of the largest scandals this country has even seen?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am always available to appear before the Committee and to answer questions on this subject. However, I have not been invited to do so. I think it would be irresponsible of me to assume there are abuses after making my own enquiries and having no reason to believe that was the case. Now, the Hon. Member is making a specific reference, namely that there allegedly was a transfer of funds from one program to another. I am not aware of that. I shall make enquiries, but I think that if there had been a transfer of funds, I should have been informed, and I assume there was none, but if there was, I shall inform the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO TAX ASSESSORS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Revenue. Could the Minister explain to the House how the term, "The needs that exist in a particular region", differs from a quota system?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I said before there was no quota system and that if any failure to comply with the Act in a specific area became evident at the auditing stage, areas where such occurrences were most frequent would require more auditing.

[English]

QUOTA SYSTEM INQUIRY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is the quota system that is in effect in the Minister's Department based upon regional representation of political Parties, or is it ad hoc?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think you yourself will agree that the Hon. Member's question is not relevant since there are no such quota systems.

FINANCE

DEPARTMENT'S METHODS OF MAKING ECONOMIC AND FISCAL FORECASTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the Minister taken any steps to improve, correct, or change the methods of economic forecasting and fiscal forecasting in his Department which have been found to be inaccurate, or misleading, or inappropriate, by the Auditor General? If so; what steps has he taken? Can he guarantee the House that forecasts in the future have a better chance of being more accurate than those in the past?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, forecasts in the private sector, as in the public sector, and as in a number of international institutions, have proved amazingly inaccurate in the last number of years, including forecasts made by my predecessor, the current Minister for St. John's West. The Hon. Member knows that forecasts have been very difficult to make on a very accurate basis in the last few years. Technical studies are being carried out in all kinds of organizations to see whether steps can be taken to improve forecasts.

My officials certainly did a pretty good job of their forecasts in my last budget. Up to now the forecasts as far as deficits are concerned, for instance, are pretty well on target. I cannot guarantee the Hon. Member that they will remain exact and that there will not be discrepancies between forecasts and realities. Forecasts are only that—projections and speculations about what the situation might be during a specific period of time. As we know, the world changes all the time.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S FINDINGS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance is only marginally better than his predecessor, and far worse than his predecessor before his predecessor. I put it to the Minister that the Auditor General has found that the forecasting methods of his Department, both with respect to the economic forecasts and fiscal forecasts, the fiscal framework, are inadequate and incorrect in many respects. Is that correct? What steps is the Minister taking to change the forecasting methods? The whole fiscal framework of Government depends upon the methods used and, as the Minister knows, they have had deplorable results in the last few years. What steps has the Minister taken to correct what the Auditor General has apparently found? Let us have some specificity please, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the most deplorable results occurred in December, 1979. It has been improving ever since.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF NEW RADIO TRANSMITTER IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. About a week ago it was announced that CBC would proceed with a $350 million construction program in Toronto to replace its antiquated facilities. At the same time as CBC is doing that, Mr. Speaker, in Winnipeg CBC Radio is broadcasting on a transmitter which is so antiquated that very frequently there are outages. There is just no program coming on the air for anywhere from 30 seconds to four or five minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: Prime time.

Mr. Orlikow: CBC in Winnipeg has the weakest signal of any radio station in Manitoba. Would the Minister urge the CBC to put the replacement of its radio transmitter in Winnipeg on the same priority list as that very expensive change in Toronto?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are going to build the Toronto facilities basically by using the money paid by the CBC for leasing space in 22 different buildings in downtown Toronto and going into a consortium with the private sector on a lease-purchase agreement, with virtually no capital funding on the part of the CBC or the federal Government. The CBC and the federal Government are concerned with the situation in Winnipeg. We have asked the CBC to examine the present situation of its capital equipment in Winnipeg with a view to try to improve that capital equipment as soon as possible.

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF JAPANESE FIRM ESTABLISHED IN CANADA

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Revenue, and I believe he is back there somewhere.

An Hon. Member: Terrorized.

Mr. Fennell: I do not know whether he is terrorized or not, but I will start with my question, Mr. Speaker. The minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is wrestling with the auto task force report. While this is going on he has indicated that he is encouraging Canadian content. What right does the Minister of Revenue have continually to harass Japanese manufacturers who established an industry in this country? I am giving him the example of Makita Tool.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): I missed part of the Hon. Member's question, and I apologize. I did get the name of the company to which he referred at the end of his question. The Hon. Member will recall that we examined this particular case very carefully and that on certain points we agreed with the company's stand and made it possible for them to increase their investments. If I remember correctly, there was another problem which we were unfortunately unable to resolve because of the consequences it might have, but I am willing to review the matter at the Hon. Member's request.

[English]

CANADIAN CONTENT ENCOURAGEMENT FOR AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Revenue made a mistake in the first case and allowed them $200,000 back. He then found a second case which he attacked them on. Now he has found a third case, on a third product coming in from Japan before they started manufacturing in Canada. He is trying to recover the $200,000 which he lost in the one he gave up in the first place. Mr. Speaker, I request this Minister to lay off Japanese manufacturers whom we are trying to encourage to come into Canada to increase the Canadian content of automobiles in this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tolerate the way the Hon. Member is confusing the issue. I remember looking at this case very carefully. The Hon. Member may choose to think our decisions are arbitrary, but I would ask him to look at the facts. People who make investments must do so according to the laws of our country. We are trying to see to it that those laws are making it possible for investments to be made in this country as advantageously as possible.

METRIC CONVERSION

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF MERCHANTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has the responsibility for forcing merchants to convert to the metric system. Now that it has been ruled that the imperial system can again be used, will the Minister reimburse those who were forced, at their own expense, to convert?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Hon. Member's question. There has been no enforcement. In fact in areas where traders have been encouraged to buy scales there has been a government incentive program that has been extremely generous.

• (1500)

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In light of the fact that the Government has been advised to pay the court costs in the case of the two gentlemen involved in the metric conversion in Toronto, does the Government not feel some responsibility to reimburse those whom they have forced to spend thousands of dollars for nothing?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the Hon. Member is aware that this Government has launched an appeal.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF ITEMS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in anticipation of the completion of today's business and the likelihood of prorogation of the House tomorrow. My question is directed to the Government House Leader and concerns some of the outstanding matters that remain on the Order Paper of this session, in the hope that the Government will carry them over and place them on the Order Paper in the upcoming session in the same position that they now enjoy on the Order Paper.

Of course, my first concern has to be with the seven outstanding reports of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. We would not like to see those reports die. We would like to see them resume their position on the Order Paper in the same place they are now.

The same would apply to Bill C-12, the Bill with respect to bankruptcies which has been hanging around now for some eight years and has gone through a substantial portion of the parliamentary machinery this session. We would like to see that Bill restored to the Order Paper in the same position in the forthcoming session as it now enjoys.

The same also applies to Bill C-653 with respect to the Government's intentions, as I understand them, to incorporate the sentiments expressed in Bill C-653 in Bill C-12.

The Committee on Pension Reform has been sitting and has done considerable work. It would be a shame to see that die with the death of this session. We would like to see an order of the House which would ensure that all of the evidence taken by that Committee would find a place on the Order Paper in the same position in the next session as it enjoys now.

The same sentiments apply to the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration since that Committee has done a good deal of work which should not die.

Likewise, the Joint Committee on Senate Reform has done a good deal of work and collected a lot of evidence which should carry on in the next session in the same position it is in now so that the work of the Committee is not lost.

The same sentiments apply to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. There are several reports on the Order Paper now awaiting motions to concur. We believe that those motions should also find their way on to the Order Paper immediately upon the commencement of the new session so that that work is not lost.

The work and the several reports of the Public Accounts Committee should not die. As the Government House Leader knows, those reports indeed go back to 1978. Surely they should be restored and hopefully dealt with in whatever time remains in the next full session of the House.

There may be others that I have not mentioned and which the Government wants to see take their place on the Order Paper in the same position as they enjoy now. Likewise, there may be some work of the House now on the Order Paper that the New Democratic Party might wish to see on the Order Paper in the next session. I would suggest, in order that we might come to some agreement before prorogation tomorrow, that perhaps a House Leaders' meeting be held some time today to reach some common ground on these matters. That might appeal to the Government House Leader and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

While the Government House Leader is answering that question, would he also indicate to the House whether we will be having a Question Period tomorrow or what time frame he has in mind with respect to the time of prorogation.

I am just informed by my colleague, the critic of the Minister of State for Finance, that the Finance Committee has recomended that the subject matter of Bill C-233 be carried on into the next session so that that work is not lost.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to indicate that I am not in a position at the moment to agree on the continuation of Bill C-12 at its present stage. I am working feverishly to get some understanding on that. I hope to be able to report on that some time in the late afternoon.

With respect to Bill C-653, I agree entirely with the Opposition House Leader in asking, as I have many times in the past, that the Bill or one reflecting the substance of that Bill should be proceeded with in the next session, because we have been trying to have it addressed for the last six months.

On the question of the other matters, I am quite prepared to see those matters carried over. I would like to suggest, in addition to those items raised by my colleague for Yukon, that the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped be allowed to continue until such time as a determination is made as to whether or not there will be a subcommittee set up to carry on the work of that Committee. As well, I would suggest that the Subcommittee on Acid Rain be given status now in order to carry their work forward into the next session of Parliament, because it has already established its winter agenda.

The Committee on Visible Minorities should—

Mr. Pinard: That was settled last week.

Mr. Deans: I am informed that that has been settled, but I would appreciate having those others dealt with and I will get back to the House Leaders as soon as I can with respect to Bill C-12.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we have discussed most of these items in a House Leaders' meeting which we held last week. I will take these items one by one and if there is anything else left to be discussed we will have a House Leaders' meeting at four o'clock this afternoon.

[Translation]

First, with respect to the reports on parliamentary reform, two things must be kept in mind. The first is that it is not true that the reports will die on the Order Paper. The reports are there to stay. They are part of the public domain. They are known. They can be used at any time in the future, including during the next session.

Second thing, no, we do not agree that they should appear on the Order Paper at the stage where they are now because the Opposition wants to use them as a means to filibuster, whereas we consider that parliamentary reform is too important and that, as can be seen on today's Order Paper, there should not be 200 notices of motions to use as dilatory tactics. On the other hand, I have offered—and the offer stands—to my colleagues of the Opposition to reinstate those reports on the Order Paper under Government Business. If that is not necessary, if they agree to that, good! If they do not agree, too bad!

Second, Bill C-12 is a good suggestion. We will wait for the answer of the New Democratic Party, but that can be settled early in the new session and there is no need to move a motion in this session.

Third, if Bill C-153 is not necessary in this session, we will consider it in the new session.

Fourth, the Committee on Pension Reform is a special Committee, and I understand that a report will be tabled in a few minutes.

Fifth, we do not have to be concerned about the report of the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in this session because it originates from a standing committee. We can very well consider it at the beginning of the new session.

Sixth, concerning the Joint Committee on Senate Reform, I have been advised that a report will be tabled in a few minutes.

Seventh, about the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, the answer is no.

Eighth, with respect to the reports of the Committee on Public Accounts, the answer is no. And in the last two cases, the answer is no because, considering their position on the Order Paper, the Opposition could use them as dilatory tactics to prevent the House from proceeding normally to the Orders of the Day, particularly Government Orders.

Ninth, concerning the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs as well as Bill C-233, the answer is no, but that can be the subject of discussions early in the new session. Should a meeting of House leaders be necessary, it would take place at 4 o'clock. All my colleagues need do is to let me know.

As to a Question Period tomorrow, maybe there will be one, maybe there will not. As soon as the Senate is ready to give Royal Assent to all the Bills referred to it between now and the end of the day, we will have prorogation. If it is 2.05 p.m., we will go to the Senate at 2.05 p.m.; if it is 3.30 p.m., we will go to the Senate at 3.30 p.m. However, out of respect for the Senate, the other House, it would be presumptuous on our part in the House of Commons to predict the exact time of prorogation. But I think my colleagues of the Opposition are concerned or interested to know whether there is a possibility that we might not have a Question Period tomorrow. Theoretically, the answer is yes. And if the Senate is prepared to have Royal Assent at 2.15 p.m., we will go there at 2.15 p.m. We will then have prorogation.

On the subject of finance, since my colleague has asked me a question—

● (1510)

[English]

The Hon. Member raised the question of finance. He knows that we tabled a notice of Ways and Means motion last Friday, the purpose of this not being to deal with the Income Tax Act, which will follow in this next session, but to give fair warning to the Opposition to have a look at the Ways and Means motion. If the Opposition agrees with the Bill we can, with the consent of the Opposition, introduce the Bill today and its Members can look at the legislation and be in a position to debate it early after we commence debate on the Speech from the Throne in December. I am hereby giving the Opposition notice that our intent will be, unless we give another kind of notice, to try to deal with and complete debate on the Income Tax Act as early as possible this year. That is why we gave notice of the Ways and Means motion last Friday. By consent we could table the Bill today. If we do not have that consent, we will seek it at the beginning of the new session. Our purpose is to inform and to give sufficient advance notice to the Opposition in order to prepare. I am sure the Opposition will not complain about that.

Concerning the Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Subcommittee on Acid Rain, I am informed that these matters can be dealt with at the beginning of a new session.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the matter of the Bill to implement the Ways and Means resolution now on the Order Paper, the income tax Bill, I thank the Government House Leader for his courtesy. Since the Ways and Means motion itself sets forth verbatim exactly what the Bill will contain, his courtesy in giving us that Ways and Means motion is ample notice to us and we will expect the Bill itself immediately the new session comes along. With respect to any consent necessary to dispense with Standing Orders, we can meet that problem when it arises.

I really deeply regret the decision of the Government House Leader not to restore on the Order Paper the several motions to concur in the reports of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, just as I deeply regret the Government's decision not to restore on the Order Paper the reports of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. He and I take a different view with respect to the process that applies to the life of these reports on prorogation. Under our practices here those reports and all of the evidence will die with prorogation. The Government House Leader shakes his head in the negative. He says that the reports are in the public domain. Sure, they are in the public domain. They are on the library shelf, but unless the Government decides to bring them back into the House there is nothing that Members of the House can do about them.

That applies with equal force to the decision of the Government not to allow the reports of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure to resume the same position which they now enjoy on the Order Paper. What the Government is suggesting when it says it is prepared to bring the reports back but only as Government business—only as Government Orders—is that the Opposition will not have any right to exercise the privilege of moving concurrence if that is what they wish to do. The decision will rest entirely with the Government as to whether any of these reports, and there are seven outstanding, will be adopted. That is not the spirit of reform, particularly not when we have seven excellent, outstanding reports produced by a committee with absolute unanimity on the part of all three Parties. Now the Government wants to put those reports under Government Orders, that being the only condition on which the Government will restore them to the Order Paper. That seems to me to destroy the kind of impartial approach which members of that committee took with respect to the question of reform. The reports should be restored and they should be restored as they are now.

All of the motions to concur which are set down were set down, not for the purpose of obstructing, if that is the Government House Leader's idea, but because of an unfavourable ruling of the Chair, which I do not criticize at this time, with respect to the right of a Member of the House who is present to move concurrence in a report standing by way of a motion in the name of another Member who is absent. That is the reason for the duplication and it is the kind of situation we get into when we are confronted with that kind of ruling, which I do not criticize. All of those 74 pages of Members' names would not be on the Order Paper had the ruling been, as I thought it should have been at the time, to follow previous practices of the House as they are followed in other instances.

I welcome a House Leaders' meeting this afternoon to discuss these matters in the hope that we can get the Government House Leader to reconsider these matters, particularly in view of all of the years of work that have gone into all of these reports which will go down the tube with prorogation unless they are restored to the Order Paper immediately upon resumption of a new session.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to see a mechanism worked out whereby we could actually deal with the reports themselves. Having been a member of the Special Committee, having served as one of the vice-chairmen for a period of time, I want to say that the work done by the Committee was done in good faith. I think the good faith was exemplified by Members from all sides of the House. I am hopeful, notwithstanding the decision not to restore the matter as a motion in the name of the Committee but rather as a Government motion, that some commitment might be forthcoming to allow the House to deal with and dispose of the recommendations that were made.

We have taken only one tiny step toward improving the Standing Orders of the House of Commons on the way toward parliamentary reform. Parliamentary reform is a much larger question than simply the day to day operations of the House of Commons. I would commend to the Government House Leader the thought that we should today, hopefully, come to an understanding that we will find a way to deal with those reports in the House of Commons at an early moment. We can then begin yet another series of trials on some new measures that I hope—I am optimistic—and will go as far as to say will improve the quality of the House of Commons, the committees of the House of Commons and will improve methods of dealing with matters pertaining to the House of Commons.

• (1520)

While I am on my feet and on a matter which is related to House business, although only obscurely, I would like to say on behalf of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River that we want to withdraw Motion No. 6, our opposition to vote 55b, which may help to expedite proceedings somewhat later in the day. I just want to inform the House that we will not be calling for a vote on that particular motion later today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement of the House that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River, will have consent to withdraw the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: No, Mr. Speaker. I do not know on what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is attempting to get consent. I have had to notice of this. He takes me completely by surprise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is seeking consent to withdraw a motion of objection to one item in the Estimates, thereby making unnecessary one of the votes scheduled for this evening.

Mr. Nielsen: Let us discuss that and seek consent a little later today. I do not even know the subject matter of the notice of objection, but there is no reason we cannot come to an agreement later in the day, if necessary.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order with respect to concurrence in the seventh report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I just want to point out to the Government House Leader, in case he is not already aware, that five of the seven outstanding reports flow from the third report under which the House is now operating provisionally and in fact are consequential. For example, the agreement whereby committees would be reduced to ten was undertaken with the understanding that we would be moving to legislative committees, 20 in number, and thus providing an opportunity for more Members to participate in the legislative process at committee stage, especially on important Bills.

Also I point out to the Government House Leader as one who participated in the Special Committee from its commencement until the end that many hours were invested in that Committee by many Members of the House. Millions of dollars of taxpayers' money were used to finance that Committee, the calling of witnesses and trips to Washington and London. Is it the view of the Government now that it will not proceed with at least five of the seven reports which are consequential and flow from the third report under which the House is now operating provisionally?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the reports of the parliamentary reform committee do not die. They are in the public domain, they are known, and they may be and will be used in total or in part in the future. That could be in the next session. It is not necessary for them to appear on the Order Paper in the new session. Nevertheless, I have proposed to the Opposition that we allow these reports to be printed on the Order Paper in the new session under Government business, because there is absolutely no way we would allow those reports, on which there are 200 notices of motions, to be put before Government business every day. We went through the sad experience of seeing the Official Opposition using those important reports on parliamentary reform during the Crow debate for the purpose of delay. We will not accept the use of parliamentary reform in the future to delay again.

We want parliamentary reform to take place. We are conducting now a major experiment. We are negotiating some fine tuning of the experiment. My colleagues, the House Leaders, know that very well. We are even using some of the dispositions included in the additional reports for the purpose of fine tuning in the midst of our negotiations. However, there is no way we will allow the Opposition to have the freedom to move concurrence in those reports 200 times before we reach Government business in the new session. It is absolutely unnecessary because the reports will always be useful and will be used in the future. We are suggesting that they be put on the Order Paper under the control of the Government. It is the responsibility of the Government to establish the Order of the Day every day in the House of Commons. I am sure that my colleagues opposite know and understand what I am saying.

To say that we are not interested in those reports is wrong. On the contrary, we think they are most important. We have accepted the ongoing experiment. We want to fine tune this experiment. I see no point in trying to have five, six or seven other reports implemented without previous experimentation, if we saw it necessary to conduct an experiment on the third report before implementing it.

The fact that we are proroguing does not kill any report. There is no need for the reports to appear on any Order Paper. I challenge my hon. colleague to estimate the number of people who read the Order Paper every day. There are no consequences at all. However, to please the Opposition, we would not mind having those motions appear under Government business or under Government Orders in the new session. If they do not want that, fine, but they will not see them in the state they appear now under 200 notices of motions to concur. They are notices of obstruction, and this is totally unacceptable to the Government.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not seem to understand.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, I do.

Mr. McGrath: Without the implementation of and concurrence in the recommendations contained in at least three of those reports—I believe it is the fifth, six and seventh—there is no point in continuing with the provisional rules, because they flow from and are consequential to the rules under which we are now operating. For example, dealing with the starting up of committees or dealing with legislative committees, the Minister knows that unless he deals with it there can be no consideration for extending the rules.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but this is a subjective, personal interpretation by the Hon. Member; it is not the truth. This is not what those additional reports mean. The experiment on the third report is an experiment in itself. The additional reports may be considered in our negotiations to fine tune the experiment, but it is not correct to pretend that we absolutely need to consider the other three reports in order to come to a final conclusion on the experiment we are now making.

May I remind the Hon. Member of what was corroborated by the members of the Special Committee, the Chairman, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton and others. There was an understanding among the members of the Committee not to move concurrence in any of those additional reports. I do not understand why the Hon. Member is now complaining that we will not allow this to occur in the future, if members of the committee had a gentlemen's agreement not to move concurrence in those reports.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the record—and I think it is important—if the Minister examines the last recorded session of the Committee, he will know full well the understanding was that there would not be a motion for concurrence in the House while the Committee was sitting.

Mr. Nielsen: While the Committee was sitting, that is right.

Mr. McGrath: That was the clear understanding—and it is a matter of record—even by his own Members, including the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton and the Hon. Member for Gatineau. It is on the record.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is shaking his head.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, like all Hon. Members of the House, I am quite concerned that, as a result of some bitter debate or misunderstanding, all the advances the Committee was able to make and which the Government and the Opposition agreed to change, amend and make better our rules will be lost if we continue this harangue and bitter debate. In memory of the late Walter Baker who did a tremendous job on this particular Committee, I would like to say that the House Leaders should be allowed to go about their work and negotiate what they can to keep the rules the way they are, to improve them and to fine tune them, if they can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there is another untruth which is now on the record that cannot be allowed to stand. The Government House Leader talked about subjectivity, yet he is guilty of it himself. For him to say that any one of those motions to concur could be moved 200 times is patently false. Once they are moved, they then shift to Government Orders when the debate expires on them. He knows that he has the power to move that motion at any time he pleases after the mover of the motion completes his address. He knows as well as I do that the reason the names of the Members of the Opposition were put down against every one of those seven motions was because of a ruling of the Chair which, for the first time in my experience, prevents a Member present from moving a motion to concur standing in the name of a Member who is absent. That was the reason for it.

Mr. McGrath: Namely, the late Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. Nielsen: There was no intention of obstructing, as the Government House Leader has charged. What is more, the truth of this statement is borne out by the fact that no attempt was made to have those motions moved since the time of the ruling of the Chair in that regard.

I should think that the House Leader would adhere to his own adjurations to the rest of us to be objective and non-political and to move with the spirit of the members of that Special Committee on parliamentary reform and allow the House as a whole to be seized of any question of reform. The reform of our rules and practices, Sir, is not normally the unilateral prerogative of the Government. It involves the co-operation of all Hon. Members of the House because all Hon. Member are affected. If there is any one area in which the Government should not abrogate unto itself the sole discretion, it is in the area of parliamentary reform.

Perhaps it might assist the Government House Leader if I were to say to him that we would be quite happy to have those reports restored to the Order Paper without any motions to concur left on the Order Paper at all. Just bring back the reports.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, those are the words of what we call in French "un bon vieux renard". All the Hon. Member need do is to give 500 notices of motions once he has withdrawn the 200 and we will be faced with the same old problem again.

I am not saying that the Hon. Member is being subjective. In this case, he totally misunderstood my answer. In his reply, he described the way in which he can and might delay proceedings. He said it would be easy for the Government to move the adjournment of the debate on any motion to concur in those reports come the new session and then move to Government Orders. That is exactly what Conservative Members would like us to do. Every time we would move to adjourn debate, they would let the bell ring until six o'clock and would waste as many days as there are reports.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: They are saying oh, but they have done so in the past, Mr. Speaker. They did it three weeks ago when we were debating the Crow.

The Hon. Member has just given notice that he wants to save some ammunition for dilatory purposes in the future. We will not allow that to happen. I am simply telling him that we will not agree to reinstate those reports in a way which will allow the Opposition to unduly delay the work of the House of Commons. On the other hand, our offer still stands to put those reports under Government Orders even if it is not necessary to use those reports in the future, although we do intend to use those reports in the future.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if I may make myself clear for the record, parliamentary reform is most important to the Government. We have proven in the past that we have been able to do something in the field of reform. We have done something in that field, we are now doing something, and we will do something in the future. However, we will not allow this very important subject to be used by the Opposition for the purposes of delaying unduly the business of the House and playing political games.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like to bring to the attention of the President of the Privy Council a Private Member's Bill No. 684 which stands in the name of the late Member for Nepean-Carleton, the Hon. Walter Baker. The President of the Privy Council will know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough, and others have been attempting to have this Bill proceed through the parliamentary process. It is the Bill which would amend the Narcotics Act and specifically allow for the therapeutic use of heroin primarily for terminally ill cancer patients.

I wonder if the President of the Privy Council would take that situation to the House Leaders' meeting today in an attempt to see if we might be able to move at least the subject matter of that Bill forward. I recognize that, as a Member of the House, I could put the same Bill in my name, but I do think it would be fitting if we would be able, with our best intentions, to proceed with that Bill in the name of the late Hon. Member.

I ask the President of the Privy Council to consider that matter. I know that there is a technical problem involved whereby the Bill began as a justice matter and is actually a health matter. I know there is some question as to whether or not it should proceed through that channel, but I am sure that people of good will could work those details through. I ask him to consider that this afternoon.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if my hon. colleague is referring to a Private Member's Bill on which debate has already begun.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, debate did begin on June 1 of this year and was not concluded. There were a number of Hon. Members from all sides of the House who strongly endorsed the position of the late Hon. Member.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will look into that matter. I will inquire about it and will hopefully be in a position to make up my mind today if I get all of the facts. If I do not, I do not know if that matter can be dealt with at the beginning of the new session, but I will see what can be done.

Mr. Lefebvre: Mr. Speaker, as one who chaired the Special Committee to which reference has been made throughout the last half hour's debate, I point out once again how important it is that we did come to an understanding while the committee was holding its proceedings. The only way we can attempt parliamentary reform is to have an understanding and a consensus among all Members. This we were able to do within the committee. We knew that once the matter got into the political arena of the House of Commons, there was a danger that there would be political arguments from both sides of the House, and Hon. Members have that right.

I am already on record as stating that there was such an understanding in the Committee and, furthermore, members of the Committee had understood that they were not to be the watchdogs of their own reports and that it would be up to the House Leaders of the Parties to come to a consensus and bring those reports forward to Parliament for final discussion. I maintain that there was such an understanding and I agree completely with the words of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton. I hope that we can come to discuss the issue in a non-partisan fashion like the example set at Committee and that we will see parliamentary reform. It will not happen, however, the way things have proceeded this afternoon.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

SENATE REFORM—PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—PRESENTATION OF TWENTY-FIFTH AND TWENTY-SIXTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth reports of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the last two Hon. Members who presented reports please indicate whether they intend to move concurrence later this day?

Mr. Pinard: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to move concurrence today. The reports have been made and the evidence is tabled. It is there to be used in a motion at the beginning of the new session. At that time, we will be able to refer to these reports which are being tabled today and to the evidence which they contain. It is not necessary to concur in those reports today. We will not move concurrence but will be in a position, come the new session, to be able to refer to the evidence contained within the reports tabled today.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is true. However, it again depends entirely upon the discretion of the Government. It can only be done if the Government brings forward a motion. We on this side of the House are prepared to give concurrence to these reports that are being presented today without debate so that we can be assured that they will be on the Order Paper in the next session without having to rely on the discretion of the Government.

The Government could well decide not to bring any motion forward and we would never see these reports again. We are now prepared to concur in them today without debate if the Government wishes to proceed in that fashion so it may give all Hon. Members the assurance that we will see those reports again.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has complained because we are acting as a Government. We are acting as a Government and we do govern. We will see what will happen come the new session. I have already told him it was my inclination to agree to that. I do not see why we would not agree to move the proper motion. I take good note of the consent now offered by my colleague to get those motions passed without debate, but we will not move concurrence today. Come the new session we will govern again.

• (1540)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it is about time they started to govern. We are prepared to give consent today on the basis of what we see today. We are not prepared to give blanket consent now for what we may or may not see in a new session.

PENSION REFORM—PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House the second report of the Special Committee on Pension Reform.

PETITIONS

MR. BERGER—SENTENCING OF DR. JOSEPH BEGUN IN THE U.S.S.R.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present a petition to the House this afternoon. This petition, signed by 147 concerned Canadians, calls upon the Government of Canada to protest to the Government of the U.S.S.R. the savage sentence imposed on Dr. Joseph Begun on November 6, 1982. Dr. Begun, a resident of Moscow, was arrested and charged under Article 70 of the criminal code of the U.S.S.R. with disseminating material defamatory to the state. The charges were issued because of Dr. Begun's teaching of the Hebrew language and his desire to live in Israel. The sentencing of Dr. Begun is a flagrant violation of the Helsinki Act and the civilized norms of justice. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. CLARK (BRANDON-SOURIS)—UNIVERSAL AMNESTY FOR PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House today a petition signed by many Manitobans, the majority of whom are from my constituency of Brandon-Souris. They petition the House and are of the opinion that thousands of men and women are in prison throughout the world because of their political and religious beliefs. Others are held because of their colour or ethnic origin. These people are prisoners of conscience as none has used or advocated violence.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to call for universal amnesty for all prisoners of conscience, and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS CONTROL ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-700, an Act to provide for the control of conflicts of interest in Government affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, may I briefly explain the provisions of the Bill which has just been introduced. The question of what personal activity constitutes a conflict of interest for Members of the Government and officers of the Crown is obscure at best. The purpose of this Bill is to establish clear rules to determine what activity will be considered a conflict of interest for Ministers and Government officers. The Bill also directs the Deputy Registrar General to report conflict of interest cases to the Federal Court of Canada so that the court can take appropriate action to protect the public interest.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, these are the motions the Government House Leader was speaking about. May I suggest, as I have been doing ever since the ruling of the Chair, that you simply call upon Members in whose name the motions stand and ask, if they wish to discuss it today, that they rise. I might add that if I had any intention of scuppering prorogation or of obstructing, I could move one of those motions now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members who have motions standing in their name who wish to be recognized at this point? There are none. We will proceed to Questions on the Order Paper.

TELEPHONE FOR HEARING IMPAIRED

Question No. 5,306—Mr. Young:

Is the Department of Supply and Services investigating the possibility of adopting a policy similar to the U.S. General Services Administration with regard to accessible telephones for the hearing impaired?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services does not have any specific contracting policy concerning accessible telephones for the hearing impaired. Supply and Services responds to customer department requests for equipment supplied to the handicapped through the same procurement process as used for other goods and services. For more information on the initiatives taken by the Canadian Government, please refer to the news release of November 7, 1983, issued by the Department of Communications.

"CANADA PLACE"—EDMONTON, ALBERTA

Question No. 5,264—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has the Government decided to proceed with the contruction of "Canada Place" in Edmonton, Alberta, as the new location for centralized federal government offices and, if so, what is the precise location of the site?

2. What was the cost of acquiring the said site including the value of any land or buildings owned by the Government which may have been swapped for Province of Alberta land or buildings and for City of Edmonton land and/or buildings?

3. Are the buildings to be erected on a lease and buy back basis by private developers or contractors, or are they to be built for and by the Government or will they be on a straight lease from private developers?

4. Have the consulting engineers and architects been named and, if so, who are they?

5. What is the projected date of commencement of work on site?

6. What is the estimated complete cost in 1983 dollars?

7. What is the anticipated date of completion with projected date of occupation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Government has decided to proceed with the construction of "Canada Place" in Edmonton, Alberta. The 1.5 hectares Canada Place site fronts on Jasper Avenue and is bounded by the Nova, Sunlife and Cidadel Theatre developments to the west, 102 Avenue to the north and 97th Street to the east.

2. The Canada Place site was acquired by way of a land exchange involving the Government of Canada, the Province of Alberta and the City of Edmonton.

On March 31, 1983 a tripartite agreement was executed whereby Public Works Canada agreed to convey the former Prince of Wales and Ortona Armouries valued at $8,800,000 and $1,500,000 respectively, the former Strathcona Post Office valued at $400,000 and a vacant industrial zoned property at 170 Street and 118 Avenue valued at $2,500,000 to the City of Edmonton along with the proceeds ($20,500,-000) received from the sale of the Federal Building to the Province of Alberta in exchange for the Canada Place site. The total value of the site was $33,700,000.

3. On March 17, 1983, Treasury Board gave approval in principle to proceed with the Canada Place project by means of a lease-purchase arrangement with a private developer. In doing so, the Government will be leasing the site to a developer on a long-term basis, and the developer will contract to design, construct and finance a building to be leased back to the Government. The improvements will revert back to the Crown upon the termination of the ground lease.

4. The developer for the "Canada Place" project has not yet been named. The developer will be responsible for assembling a project team which will include consulting engineers and architects.

5. The preparation of working drawings and the project construction phase is expected to take approximately 30 months, it is anticipated that this phase may commence as early as October, 1984.

6. The estimated cost of constructing the facility (excluding land costs) is $89,500,000 (October, 1983 constant dollars).

7. It is anticipated that the Canada Place project will be completed and occupied by mid-1987. The timing will ultimately depend on when a developer is chosen and contracted to undertake the project.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise in the dying days of this session to lament and regret deeply the Government's attitude with respect to starred questions. I will simply ask the Parliamentary Secretary again if he has any intention of answering my question and if so, could he give me an indication of when that might be.

Mr. Evans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to answer that question. In fact, half of the answer is now in our hands and we are attempting to get the other half. At the present moment the half that is in our hands measures almost one half inch thick. It is going to have to be made an Order for Return, Mr. Speaker; it simply cannot be read in this Chamber as a starred question is supposed to be, because it would take literally hours to read. The Hon. Member has obviously misused the starred question provision.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the misinterpretation placed upon this by the Parliamentary Secretary is somewhat regrettable. The question could have been answered in two different ways, one verbal. The processes of the House are such that all he had to do was to rise in his place and indicate that an Order for Return should be granted. He had three months to do that. The information is in the computer so all he had to do was pull it out. It should not take ten minutes to get the answer.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point. The only purpose of a starred question is to have an oral answer given in the House. If the Hon. Member knew it was going to take computer output to answer a question, then why was it put on as a starred question in the first place?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, this is the third time in six or eight weeks that I have risen to inquire about question No. 1,641 which I asked on November 20, 1981, over three years ago. In each case the Parliamentary Secretary has said that the answer is coming, it will be available forthwith, or that he will attempt to do what he can, but obviously nothing has been done. The question is very simple: it asks whether the directors of the CNR get free passes on Air Canada. A yes or no answer would have been satisfactory. The answer really is that they probably do but they do not want to disclose it. They cannot tell why and they refuse to admit that this is an abuse—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has the answer to his question. The Chair wonders why he had it on the Order Paper. Would the Parliamentary Secretary care to comment?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, again I will indicate that I will try to get an answer for the Hon. Member. If we look at the Standing Orders and at Beauchesne's with regard to Questions on the Order Paper it will be seen that question should not be put on the Order Paper where the answer is available in a public form elsewhere. I suggest that the answers to the questions that Hon. Members are putting on the Order Paper are available elsewhere. Members should not be taking up space on the Order Paper or the time of Parliament to ask questions when they can obtain the answers elsewhere.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the last statement of the Parliamentary Secretary should go unchallenged. The Parliamentary Secretary is only a lackey whose job it is to get the answers to questions that Members of Parliament are entitled to ask. He has no right to make the decision on whether or not the answer is available from another source. If he would do his job rather than passing judgment on whether Members of Parliament are properly fulfilling their function, he would be a lot better off and would do a much better job for his Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ATLANTIC FISHERIES RESTRUCTURING ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. De Bané that Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this Bill for second reading, I ventured the opinion that it was one of the most important in the history of the Canadian fisheries. Since then, I believe it has acquired another distinction. I know of no other Bill affecting the fisheries which has moved through the House so rapidly and with such thorough scrutiny by all interested parties.

A great deal has happened in a very short time. As Hon. Members know, this Bill received second reading on November 18. Since then it has been the subject of intensive hearings before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. The Committee, in a truly marathon effort, Mr. Speaker, held meetings which went far into the night, right through the week. In the case of the sessions, last Thursday we did not finish our work until 4.30 in the morning. Even yesterday at 11 p.m., I was appearing before the Senate Committee which was studying the same Bill. They were very well attended hearings. A cross-section of the industry was present. Inshore and offshore fishermen were both represented. So were the representatives of the similar independent processing companies of the region.

If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, I wished at times that the parliamentary television audience across Canada could have seen these hearings. It would have been a powerful advertisement for the benefits of an open parliamentary system. I can think of no interest which was not represented, no important concern or apprehension which was not expressed, no potential pitfall which was not explored. And all this was done in one week.

The industry, for its part, needs to look Government in the eye and make up its mind about its commitment and its intentions. You cannot legislate this kind of confidence, nor can you build it from a distance. You can, however, develop it through direct dialogue. I will not pretend that we have dispelled every single doubt in committee. However, we have made an impressive start toward improved confidence. One unfounded concern, which had become visible both in this House and outside it, was that the Government was coming into the Atlantic fishery industry to stay on a permanent basis. That concern emerged even after specific formal commitments were made, for instance, in the Newfoundland agreement and in public statements. I believe we have successfully dealt with these concerns. The Bill now contains a clause by which the federal Government commits itself to divestiture if the circumstances are right and as soon as the industry is profitable. On the other hand, and I think rightly so, I could not give an ironclad guarantee because it would be most imprudent to give such a commitment without being able to assess the particular circumstances of the moment. The intention is there, however. It is clear. It is included in the agreement we have reached, both with the Government of Newfoundland and the agreement in principle with the Government of Nova Scotia.

We have also added a clause to the Bill which sets up a systematic process of keeping Canadian taxpayers, who are now temporary shareholders of the industry, informed about the state of their investment. The Bill now calls for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to report to this House on an annual basis. Those reports, incidentally, will cover progress toward divestiture, if the Minister has some relevant information to give in that regard. However, again, while the intention is clear, I believe it would have been most imprudent to have accepted amendments which would have committed the Government, without regard to the circumstances, to follow only one course of action. On the other hand, if circumstances are right, the companies are profitable and suitable buyers are interested to invest, then, of course, the Government would be anxious to get out.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have been careful in these measures to avoid what one might call "institutional role conflict". We did not feel that the Department of Government which is responsible for managing the fisheries and for setting the ground rules, should even be a temporary shareholder in the industry. We were able to clarify this in committee by stipulating that the Government's share will not be held in the name of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The moment he buys shares he will have to transfer them to another Minister, for instance, the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

More generally, Mr. Speaker, these hearings have helped to clarify the broad purpose of these measures. I believe it is now more generally understood, for instance, that this Bill is not simply a mechanism to ratify agreements between the federal Government and the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. I believe that the committee and the fishing industry also understand that it is not an appropriation Bill, that it does not deal in programs. If specific programs need to be set up in the future, that will be done subject to the normal budgetary and other procedures of Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my thanks to all Committee Members from all Parties in this House who, in addition to their co-operation, were also generous with their knowledge of the fishing industry and suggested various amendments that were accepted by the Government. The Committee's sittings were most instructive, but I hasten to add that the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), in addition to taking part in the sittings of the Parliamentary Committee, also sent, early this week, a long brief detailing various items of major importance to the Atlantic fisheries, and more particularly to New Brunswick. I want to take this opportunity to inform my hon. colleague that I read his brief with great interest, and that I intend to meet him as soon as possible to have a thorough discussion of the various points he raised, and I hope that at that time we shall be able to find positive solutions for the very basic concerns he raised and which arise from the need to provide stability for the fisheries and a fair apportioning of the jobs and profits to be generated by this industry in the various Atlantic regions, and especially in New Brunswick. I therefore wish to thank the Hon. Member for his brief.

[English]

I would also like to express our appreciation to the many witnesses who came at short notice, and in some cases, at no small inconvenience, to Ottawa for these hearings, and for giving their time and energy so freely when they were here. I am also, of course, very happy that the Ministers of Fisheries of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Labrador, or their representatives, came before our committee.

[Translation]

If I have one regret, it is that among all the Ministers of Fisheries, the only one who did not come personally or send a representative was the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Fortunately, the board of directors of Pêcheurs-Unis and representatives of employees and unions appeared before the Committee to express their support for this legislation. I think this goes to show that the Canadian Government, not the Government of Quebec, has understood the aspirations of the parties concerned in Quebec's fishing industry. The Quebec Government acknowledged publicly that the ideological issues were more important than the welfare of the fishermen.

● (1600)

[English]

The time has now come to act on this Bill. The industry has been through traumatic times. Fishermen, processors, suppliers, everyone connected with this strategically important Atlantic industry has been in a state of uncertainty and confusion about the future. That in itself is an unhealthy state of affairs. It is important to replace uncertainty with a clear sense of purpose and direction. We must do so quickly. Time is precious and delay is costly. For instance, interest charges of about $1 million a week are accumulating on existing loans which will be rolled into equity once these measures are in place. In some regions, the next fishing season is barely a month away. I urge the House to carry through on the momentum we have achieved and to approve this Bill unanimously.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-170 at third reading. The theme of my speech is "onward through the fog", because Bill C-170 has blanketed Atlantic Canada in a thick fog of confusion, fear and contradictory Liberal promises.

This Government claims to have finally realized that the fishery must be economically viable and privately owned. Yet it intends to achieve these ends by literally nationalizing some 65 per cent of the productive capacity of the industry. Through negotiations with only two Atlantic provincial Governments, this Government intends to force through a program that will have serious impact on the five Provinces around the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This Government has literally guaranteed the jobs of some plant workers and left others to compete against them without any protection whatsoever. While promising that the industry will be denationalized as soon as possible and that the competitive balance of the marketplace will not be upset, this Government is incapable of providing any detail as to how these specific aims are to be achieved. No wonder many independent operators are taking the attitude that the federal Government should buy their businesses now while they are viable, before they are driven into ruin by trying to compete against nationalized, subsidized enterprises.

Of all the foggy Liberal notions, Mr. Speaker, one of the foggiest was that somehow the people of Atlantic Canada would not notice what was being done to them if this Bill was rushed through Parliament. Last week, as we crammed some 33 hours of committee meetings into four days, it was quite apparent to practically everyone that Atlantic Canadians knew only too well what was being planned, and for the most part they wanted no part of it. Among 17 witnesses who appeared before the committee, 12 were solidly opposed to the Liberal assault on the fishing industry. Today in the House we still feel, at least on the Opposition side, that a gun is being held to our heads to pass this Bill and allow the federal Government to get these restructured companies established before 1984.

The Opposition has been criticized for delaying this Bill six days at second reading. Quite frankly, Sir, we strongly resent such criticism. It is none other than the Liberals who delayed this Bill 14 days at first reading and delayed its introduction for a full month after signing a restructuring agreement with Newfoundland and Labrador. Look at the delays this Government took in the restructuring as a whole and you will find that the Government took six months to negotiate the Newfoundland agreement alone. The Nova Scotia agreement, if there ever is to be one, will take even longer because this Liberal Government has unfortunately backed down from verbal assurances it made in September. Meanwhile the proposed restructring in Quebec is being fought at every turn of the wheel by that Province's Government. In short, it is the Liberal Government's own abysmal record in negotiation and consultation that is to blame for the restructuring delays and for much of the crisis in the Atlantic fishery.

During the committee hearings last week one of the most oft repeated criticisms for fishermen, processors and provincial Governments was that they had not been consulted about restructuring althouth they will be profoundly affected by its outcome. This is the real tragedy of the restructuring this Bill will authorize. The Liberal Government has failed to demonstrate respect for the different needs of the fishing industry in different parts of Atlantic Canada. There is no reason to think, no reason whatsoever, that Bill C-170 will in any way change this position. Indeed, this federal Government seems to think that what is good for Newfoundland is good for Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec. This of course reminds me of that old cliché about the lady with ten kids who, when one of them got sick, gave cod liver oil to the whole lot. That is in effect what is happening here. One of our Provinces is economically ill and, instead of recognizing the need of that particular Province, this Bill encompasses the whole of Atlantic Canada as well as Quebec. This Government seems determined to prop up one sector of the industry and kick out the blocks from under the others.

No one could blame the people of Newfoundland and Labrador for seizing the opportunity provided by this restructuring agreement with the federal Government. That Province has been shamefully ignored by federal programs ever since Confederation. DREE expenditures, for example in Newfoundland, have been cut in half in the past three years when, by rights, they should have been increased. Despite its strategic location in the North Atlantic, which I might add was well recognized during World War II, Newfoundland is the only Canadian Province without a permanent Canadian Forces base, and it has the lowest per capita national defence expenditure. For years the Province has been trying to negotiate an agreement on its petroleum resources. Of course, Newfoundland would jump at the chance of seeing increased federal spending on its fishery and an opportunity for a little more control over the management of the industry. Whether these opportunities will be realized remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker, as the detailed negotiations have not yet begun.

The way restructuring has been presented so far makes it acceptable only to Newfoundland. In the maritime Provinces the consensus appears to be that this federal Government should not have controlling interest of any fishery enterprise and that the large Nickerson-National sea corporation should be split up into five corporations rather than being further consolidated.

Tomorrow this Bill will be passed and the ball will once again be in the Liberal court to pursue the course of restructuring. I wonder how this Government will placate the many fishermen and processors it has already antagonized. How will it improve the fishery and create a spirit of co-operation when four out of five Provinces in the region are opposed to the federal manoeuvres? This Government is led by a man who declares that co-operative federalism is dead. In the months ahead, we in the Official Opposition will be watching the implementation of restructuring with great concern. We will not hesitate to criticize the federal Government for unnecessary delays in the process.

While this Bill was in committee our Party was successful in bringing in two major additions to the Bill. One will ensure that Parliament gets an annual report on the administration of this Act. The other provides at least a whisper of acknowledgement that federal equity in fisheries enterprises will be returned to the private sector when the enterprises become economically viable.

Our Party actually introduced 11 amendments to this bill in committee. Six were accepted. At the report stage I again moved two of those, which were voted down by the government side. The fact that these two amendments were defeated as of today clearly establishes the tone in which restructuring will be carried out. It confirms the fears that have already been expressed throughout the Atlantic region that accountability and consultation will be minimized while federal control of the fishery will be maximized for an undetermined period.

Beyond these amendments there is another important change that should be made to the way in which this Bill is enacted. Representatives from the processing industry have given this issue the highest priority for changes to Bill C-170. It requires no amendment, merely the proper exercise of powers under Clause 7 of the Bill. This will allow the Governor in Council to appoint another Minister, other than the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, to administer this Act. It sounds like a small change but it would go a long way to allay the fears of the fishing industry. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), controlling a majority of shares of some 60 or 70 per cent of Atlantic processing capacity, could be in a conflict of interest position with regard to his duties for resource management and licensing. Imagine the CBC, for example, being responsible for all broadcasting licences, or Petro-Canada for all drilling permits, and you have comparable situations. I therefore call upon the present Government to confer the administration of this Act upon some other Minister. After all, the powers of the Bill are purely economic in nature and they should be exercised according to economic and social criteria established by a Department such as the Department of Economic Development or the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Minister, in his comments today, alluded to this particular section in a way. He said it was the intention of the Government that the shares would not be held by him but would be held by the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation. I question whether this will satisfy the fears of the independents who appeared before our committee because of the track record of the Minister to whom he indicates this authority will be transferred.

At this point I would like to read into the record the reasons why the Minister mentioned in Bill C-170 should be some Minister other than the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and other than the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation, as they have been outlined to me by Mr. Ron Bulmer, the spokesman for the Fisheries Council of Canada, which represents not only the processors but also some inshore and offshore fishermen as well. Mr. Bulmer makes the following point:

1. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans now regulates allocations, plant licences, in-plant inspection, and is planning to police grading. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans should not have the pressure toward or the appearance of bias by being responsible for restructuring, and ongoing funding of restructured companies.

2. Key elements of Bill C-170 are financial in nature and are needed for the development of Atlantic Canada. Therefore, the Bill should reside in an economic department where financial analytical and business skills reside.

3. The U.S.A. market would perceive such a management function and stated reprivatization as positive signs, thus minimizing the risk of countervail.

I would interject here and say that the risk of countervail, in light of the programs in motion in the United States, is a very real concern at this time among the 700 independents still surviving in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada and Quebec. He continues:

4. Processors will continue to feel that only those who toe the party line and perhaps accept other government initiatives such as in the marketing area will ever qualify for any of the funds outlined in Bill C-170 while this Bill resides under the powers of the Ministry of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Speaker, our amendments and our speeches have indicated that we share these concerns. We believe that two elements in this Bill that need to be further pursued are moving the powers of the Bill to an economic Ministry and gaining some form of mechanism for establishing the review process. We need a guarantee that the taxpayers' dollars are being well managed and that Parliament and the industry can determine exactly how many of these dollars are involved. Further, there is an obvious need for a direct balance of power between ongoing practices in the fishery and the restructuring process.

Since the conclusion of the committee meetings to which I referred last week, my office as well as the offices of other Members of the Official Opposition have been contacted repeatedly by witnesses who appeared in Ottawa. After thanking us for the efforts we made on their behalf, these witnesses have again expressed their concern that a mechanism for improved consultation with the fishing industry and with provincial Government must be established. Our Party moved an amendment to this effect in committee, but unfortunately it was voted down by the Liberal majority.

Mr. Tobin: And the NDP.

Mr. Crouse: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister says, "And the NDP". He is quite correct and I thank him for that addition. The point at issue here is that while we were trying to amend and improve the Bill, some of the Liberal Members, who indicated in one way or another that they do not like this Bill either, did not take the opportunity to stand up and be counted. They voted with the Government and killed this very worth-while amendment. I regret that action. We moved this amendment and it was voted down.

I am now going to urge the Government to establish a restructuring review council.

Mr. Breau: Which one did I vote down?

Mr. Crouse: The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) asks which one he voted down. I will remind him that he voted this down in committee. I am going to urge that the Government establish a restructuring review council that will consist of representatives from all relevant sectors of the industry as well as provincial Governments. The work of this review council would be to focus its attention on the extent to which restructuring is achieving its stated purpose. That is our major concern at this stage. They should present an annual report to Parliament containing their recommendations. That is what we would like to see. It may well be, after consideration, that the stone which the builders rejected in committee could well become the cornerstone of the restructuring process for the information of Parliament.

These views have been echoed and re-echoed through the brief as presented in committee. They are in the brief that was presented to the committee by the Department of Fisheries of the Province of New Brunswick. I am just going to place this on the record. It reads:

Generally, the New Brunswick fishing industry has weathered the economic recession of the past few years in relatively good shape. Our independent processors, both large and small, and our fishermen, independent owner-operators of their own vessels, have been able to survive economic hardship through their own good efforts, and the support offered to them by the New Brunswick Department of Fisheries and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. A loans program for vessel acquisition and improvement, training programs, technical advice, innovative fisheries and the exploitation of new species—all have assisted the New Brunswick fishery to adapt and survive.

● (1620)

The reports that came from the New Brunswick representatives indicated at least a healthy fishery if not an extremely profitable one. It was gratifying for me to listen to their presentation because it indicated that private enterprise and the force it engenders is still in a healthy state in your own native Province, Mr. Speaker.

The Eastern Fisheries Federation made a number of outstanding points in the presentation that it made before the committee. I wish time permitted me to earmark all of them, but I will refer briefly to one or two. They stated that there was a lack of consultation. They went on to say:

Independent fishermen land well over 50 per cent of the fish in the Maritimes but were never included in the discussions on industry restructuring. Similarly, we were not consulted when this Bill was proposed. How can we rest assured that the federal Government will ever consult with us on the operation of the fishing industry, or the massive companies now to be controlled by the Government.

They went on to say:

Not only was there no consultation with us, but there was none with the smaller companies on whom we depend. They now are seeing the banks reduce their lines of credit by 33 per cent to the small buyers. What will the Government do to restore banking confidence in the 700 independents which are vital to us?

The Minister of Fisheries for Prince Edward Island expressed equal concerns. In his brief to the committee he said:

This brings us to the point of how we should approach the resolution of this difficult situation. We do not adhere to the view that, because some of the private sector is currently experiencing financial difficulty, state ownership is required to bring about resolution to this event. Indeed we may be jumping from the frying pan to the fire. It would be equally wrong to conclude that the small scale private sector companies alone could deliver our future prosperity. Rather we would have been more anxious about determining what are the manageable units within the large concerns and insure that by providing support and loan security, private investment would have been found to acquire those manageable units and run them as viable concerns. Yes, there would have been a period of disruption while the reordering took place but had we undertook this activity when the problem was recognized at least two years ago, I submit the industry would be stabilized at this time and markets supported.

To date, my own Province of Nova Scotia has refused to sign an agreement with the federal Government. There were proposals made at Port Hawkesbury in September but we were informed in committee that they are now in limbo as a result of backtracking by the federal Minister.

Some of the points still to be resolved were laid before the committee in an excellent presentation by the new provincial Minister of Fisheries, Mr. John Leefe. I will not read all of them but simply four to which he referred. He stated that no agreement was yet signed and listed some of the points that are in disagreement between the federal and provincial Governments, for example, a commitment to transfer equity back to private enterprise within five years. Another point is maintenance of existing northern cod quotas together with incremental increases every year. No one level of government will have a majority of control of the new company, and finally, the Nova Scotia-Canada multi-million dollar fisheries development plan is to be renegotiated. These and other problems still remain to be resolved.

A spokesman for the Independent Sea Producers also raised in the committee some very important points. In the interest of time I will only mention one or two. The independents contend that restructuring represents an effective but somewhat subtle nationalization of the Atlantic fishery. The independents have no confidence that the new super companies will be run on a commercial basis and expect that they will need continuous subsidies. Consequently, the independents will have to deal with very unfair competition. For the independents, restructuring will have particularly negative implications in the following areas: fish prices, wages, marketing, resource allocation, policy development and implementation and financing. The underlying concern here is that the new super company will not be permitted to function in a commercially responsible fashion. I could go on, but this shows the fear of the people who are still trying to operate in the industry.

There is even some concern that this Bill is entirely unnecessary since its requirements are, in my view, covered by an Act called the Fisheries Development Act. Two clauses of this Act in particular appear to give the Minister all the power that he needs to help the industry through this period of depression within the industry. I would like to present two of the clauses of that particular Bill to show what I mean. According to the Fisheries Development Act, Section 3(1), the Minister:

—may undertake projects (a) for the more efficient exploitation of fishery resources and for the exploration for and development of new fishery resources and new fisheries;

(b) for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new types of fishing vessels and fishing equipment and of new fishing techniques; and

(c) for the development of new fishery products and for the improvement of the handling, processing and distribution of fishery products.

Section 3(3) states:

The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into an agreement with any province providing for the payment to the province of contributions in respect of the cost of any project that is undertaken by the government of the province or any agency thereof and that the Minister is authorized to undertake under subsection (1).

Section 5 states:

The Minister may make payments to such persons or classes of persons, in such amount and on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council,

(a) for the construction and equipment of

(i) commercial cold storages, or

(ii) commercial bait freezing facilities equipped with mechanical refrigeration, that will be suitable for the preservation of fishery products.

I could go on but it seems to me that the officials of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans should have taken time, upon examination of this over-all problem, to see what vehicle could have been used in order to assist the people in Newfoundland and some in my Province of Nova Scotia who are in dire straits as a result of the cyclical downturn. I say "cyclical" as one who spent some time in the industry. I know that the biblical quotation of "seven fat years and seven lean years" seemingly applies to the fishing industry. We do have our ups and downs, as I am sure you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, coming from New Brunswick. Instead of using this vehicle to which I just referred as a modus operandi in order to resolve these difficulties, these officials have jumped in with a whole new piece of legislation which is, in effect, balkanizing and dividing all the Provinces of Atlantic Canada as well as Quebec.

In conclusion, I simply wish to say that if this is the best that the federal Government can come up with after two years of procrastination and exhaustive study by the Kirby task force, we on this side have decided to let it get on with it because time is running out for the people in Atlantic Canada whose financial resources in some areas are completely depleted. That is the sad side of this entire mess which we face today. This is why we agree to third reading today.

I believe it is significant that with the exception of the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) whose amendment dealt with the Saltfish Marketing Corporation and therefore ruled out of order by you, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party and its Members are the only ones who moved amendments in the House in the hope of strengthening this Bill and in the hope of making it more acceptable to the independents still functioning in the industry. Unfortunately, when these amendments were moved some Liberal Members who obviously do not like the Bill negated these very amendments which would have strengthened it. This is called window dressing in the trade. They are called paper tigers because without that type of support we are stymied and handtied. As I said earlier, we are here with a gun held to our heads by the majority which runs the country in the name of the Liberal Government.

I hope that no one on the Government side would construe our statements on this Bill as an over-all agreement to this socialistic legislation. As I said a moment ago, our position is taken as a result of the dire straits faced by some Atlantic Province Canadians due to the over-all mismanagement of our economy and specifically the over-all mismanagement of our fishing industry by the Government. There appears to be no other alternative for them at the present time. This is really a Bill which provides short-term gain for long-term pain. But hopefully it will get our fishermen in some areas through this winter of discontent and hardship. That is basically what they are facing at the present time. As the fishermen say—and Lord knows I have heard them say it many times, when faced with a broker—let's pray we have better luck next time. In my opinion it would be very unfair to rob them of that hope which in many areas is all they have left.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak on third reading of Bill C-170. I want to reiterate the importance which the New Democratic Party has felt for Bill C-170 and why we have co-operated in seeing that this Bill went to committee and that it receives third reading in the House of Commons. There is no doubt in the minds of anybody in Atlantic Canada, and hopefully nobody in the House of Commons, about the urgency this Bill requires. Basically it is because we have an industry in Atlantic Canada which employs an important component of the work force there. It is an industry that meets the employment requirements for thousands and thousands of people and hundreds of communities.

When we decided we would support this Bill going through the House reasonably rapidly we did so with some reservations, because we did not have all the facts that we would liked to have had in dealing with a major expenditure of money and a restructuring of the entire Atlantic fishery we were cautious. The urgency with which the Bill must be dealt, and the late date on which it has been introduced in the House has still not convinced us that we have had an ample opportunity to look at all the implications of the Bill. We do realize that fishermen, particularly in Newfoundland, and in those major companies in Nova Scotia, are dependent upon settling some collective bargaining negotiations. The new companies will have to settle some marketing strategies to sell the product which the fishermen will be catching in a few months' time. Under those terms we agreed to look at the Bill.

In the meantime quite a bit of information came to light. In the committee we looked at the Newfoundland agreement. We have heard something about the Nova Scotia agreement and some of the reservations which the Nova Scotia Government has had. We have looked at the bail out of a major bank, the Bank of Nova Scotia. We have seen some amendments to the Bill that we in the New Democratic Party do not like.

It has been interesting to see the Progressive Conservative Party attempt to wrap itself around the Bill and divorce itself from the Bill. Not only did the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) do this but his colleagues in provincial Government of Nova Scotia who on the one hand do not want this Bill because they claim it is a nationalization of the industry, a socialist plot to take over the industry, and who on the other hand, are hoping the federal Government will use its majority to see this Bill goes through. If the Bill is not passed, then a major part of the Nova Scotia fishing industry will not be functioning and there will be major unemployment in that already high unemployment area. It is interesting to see how the Progressive Conservatives on the one hand can support the Bill and on the other hand give us all kinds of reasons why they should not, and why they are so anxious to get this Bill through. It is interesting to note that these two new companies are going to put some stability in the East Coast fishing industry.

There is one amendment which the Conservatives and the Liberals support. Once we have injected all this money, the $138 million initially, the $100 million in guarantees and the major bail-out of the Bank of Nova Scotia, it is interesting to note that the amendment moved by the Government would find that when those companies become profitable—not only the companies that become profitable but any portion of a company that becomes profitable—they shall be disposed of by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and returned to the private sector. In other words, once the Government and the public of Canada pumps money into these corporations, once they provide a stable funding mechanism to put some equity into these companies and once they become profitable, we will turn them back to private industry. I do not think the fishermen and the shore workers in the communities in Newfoundland in particular really want that to happen. Privatization of the industry should not be in the Bill that it shall happen. Communities such as Grand Bank, Burin, St. Anthony, St. Lawrence, Ramea and a number of others in Newfoundland, over the last year have seen their community completely without adequate work in terms of the fishing industry. People will question the rationale of supporting a community through public expenditure to salvage jobs, to give some security to those communities, only to turn around when the community and the fishing enterprise becomes profitable, starts to contribute and starts to bring up the wages and incomes of fishermen and shore workers and return it to the private sector. I do not think, nor does the New Democratic Party think, that those communities will want to go back to private sector hands with the uncertainty that generates.

What the Bill will do if the Government follows the letter of the law—and let us not forget there is a possibility sometime in the far future when we might get a Progressive Conservative Government—is that I am sure the Government would not hesitate at any stage to turn those money-earning enterprises back to the private sector. What they would do is to maintain those enterprises which the corporate sector would not want to purchase. The taxpayer would end up supporting those enterprises that are not profitable. Nevertheless they would probably serve a very important social function in communities in Atlantic Canada. That is one of the reasons this Party has serious reservations about the Bill. We had an amendment that was unnecessary. It was an amendment to satisfy the free enterprise spirit of the Liberal Government and the Progressive Conservative Opposition in spite of the failure of free enterprise in those major corporations which has led to this mammoth bail-out of the banks and the fishing industry.

We cannot see the rationale of putting an amendment in a Bill which gives the opportunity in the future if it were feasible, to see some privatization. To put in a Bill the words that the Minister shall dispose of such assets of fishery enterprises or portions of that enterprise really begs the whole concept of public ownership and the support of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada.

The Bill itself is not all that long. Our Party in committee attempted to remove from Clause 3 in the Bill the aspect of private ownership. That was simply in order to give some confidence that the fishing industry could continue to be supported if necessary. We in this Party are hopeful that the economy of the fishing industry will turn around as those markets improve and that as our fishery techniques and marketing skills improve, we will find a viable and profitable fishing industry for the communities of fishermen and the owners of these enterprises.

The other information we received in committee, which again puts a different light on this whole Bill, is the aspect of the refinancing itself. We have all suspected that the fishing industry was in serious financial straits, but this was confirmed when the task force was given a letter of agreement between the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Kirby Task Force on Atlantic Fisheries. We found that the total debt in the industry owing to the Bank of Nova Scotia as of December 31, 1982 was $276.9 million. Of course there were many reasons for the size of the debt owing to that bank, however it pointed out the inability of major fishing enterprises and the banks to manage the fishery adequately. Also it pointed out their inability to predict adequately the ability of the processors or the amount of available stock for the processing plants. As well, it indicated the inability of provincial Governments to control the number of processors and the inability of the Bank of Nova Scotia to conduct an adequate assessment of loans to the corporate sector. However, once again the bank is the one enterprise which will be immune from major losses.

In order to recoup some of that $276.9 million, the Government will have the bank convert $143.8 million of debt into equity. Also, to reduce the debt owing to the bank, the Government will give the company $25 million. Also the bank will receive in holding company X, which is the Nova Scotia company, $70 million in preferred shares. It will also receive class A and B preferred shares in both the Newfoundland and the Nova Scotia companies.

What will occur over the next five years is that the Bank of Nova Scotia will be able to claim those shares. The Government of Canada will pay a 5 per cent dividend on the shares regardless of the viability of the fishing industry. Also it will be paid $14 million per year for five years to reclaim the preferred shares. In other words, it will receive its $70 million back and a 5 per cent dividend in the first five years and will be able to sell off the class A shares. It will receive a great deal of the money owing in that way. Also, $107 million will be left in the industry as loans outstanding. Now that the companies will be supported by federal and provincial funds, as well as provincial agreements, it is almost like guaranteeing a $107 million loan to the companies.

Perhaps this was necessary. We are not denying that. We knew there was a crisis in the industry and that it would take strong medicine to resolve it. However, it would appear that those who get into the most economic difficulty, those with the highest debt, always have Governments to come along and bail them out.

We have some severe reservations about the mechanism by which Parliament and the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry have been used in dealing with this Bill. For many months in committee we asked for some information on the restructuring. We asked what was happening in the negotiations among the federal Government, provincial Governments, banks and major companies. We were always told that it was confidential. We appreciate that some of these negotiations are very sensitive. Certainly in committee we saw how the Province of Nova Scotia did not agree with the federal Government. I am sure it does not agree with the sharing of stock between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Why that should be part of the discussion of this Bill rather than part of the normal negotiations between federal and provincial fisheries officials in terms of establishing quotas, I fail to understand. However, it was a major concern of the Province of Nova Scotia. It is not a red herring; it is the redfish stock in the gulf. In the ongoing negotiations between the federal and provincial Governments, particularly the Government of Nova Scotia, that Province does not want to look as though it wants to enter into this agreement. It wants to scream and kick so that it indicates to the public that it is the free enterpriser in Atlantic Canada and that it wants the federal Government to stay out of it. The federal Government cannot stay out of it and still have a viable industry in Nova Scotia.

There is no private capital available, and again Canadian taxpayers come to the aid of major companies which have gone bankrupt, partly through their own fault and partly through the economic conditions of a world recession. Nevertheless, we do not see the kind of co-operation required to maintain a viable fishery in Atlantic Canada. It is ironic that the super companies, because of greater marketing skills and better management skills, along with the co-operation of the community, fishermen and plant workers who now have a real stake in the companies that have been formed in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Quebec, now have the ability to market products not only in the United States but to expand those markets. They now have the benefit of a provision being incorporated in a Bill of which, if public ownership or a public enterprise becomes successful, we will have to dispose.

This could mean that in super company A or "No FishCan", which is the Nova Scotia aspect, or in "New Fish Can", which is the Newfoundland aspect of this restructuring—

Miss Campbell: That is very good.

Mr. Miller: I have been holding those names for some time. I have heard "FishCan", but that does not sound as good as "New FishCan" and "No FishCan"; I think they are rather catchy.

Mr. Breau: They are better than X, Y and Z.

Mr. Miller: They are better than the terminology in the Kirby task force memorandum. However, public ownership has a role to play in the fishing industry as well as in Canada as a whole. We cannot accept that once the operations of the super companies become profitable, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) can dispose of it to private ownership. That amendment moved by the Government and supported by the Conservatives could mean that if an individual trawler shows a profit over a year or two, the trawler could be sold. I do not think that was the intention of the Government; at least I hope it was not. We have the possibility now of a company which could really meet the needs of communities in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

The possibilities of the super companies in terms of involving more people in the management structure are very important. The possibilities of the super companies, in co-operation with the federal and provincial Governments in establishing marketing courses through marine colleges or marine colleges and developing new technologies or new techniques in processing and establishing new product lines, will be beneficial. We in the NDP share the concerns expressed by independent fishermen and processors before the committee in terms of their profitability and ability to survive in an industry which may be dominated by one, two or three major companies. We do not see the necessity of super companies eroding the viability of independent processors and fishermen. The co-operation between the new companies and the independents in terms of supporting new market research and trade missions through Europe and some of the developing countries in which there may be a possibility of selling fish products is very important.

● (1650)

We are somewhat amused that this debate seems to have evolved only around the ownership and the privatization some time in the future of a publicly owned corporation. Projections from Price Waterhouse for the corporation indicate that over the next five years it will make something like a $50 million profit. I think that is very optimistic. For an industry that is currently losing millions of dollars a year, it is optimistic to think that we will see profits of $50 million over the next five years simply through restructuring. We would certainly like to see that come to pass, but we have a long struggle ahead of us to bring the Atlantic fishery industry back to profitability, to see that fishermen can enjoy collective bargaining and have increased prices for the product delivered to the dock and to the plant and to see that the shore workers have some involvement in the management and production of that fishery.

In this instance, Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to support a Bill which is radically different from the Bill for which we indicated support in the past. We think that it is a necessary Bill, but we are not prepared to support a Bill that sees the privatization of a company which has not been able to prove itself to Atlantic Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in the House on second reading of Bill C-170, I said there was a problem with the Government's general orientation with respect to fisheries. Although the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry held a number of sittings to examine the Bill, there was nothing in the proceedings of this Committee that could convince me the approach taken by the Government at the beginning of the so-called Atlantic fisheries crisis, that is, when the Kirby Commission was set up in January 1982 or perhaps December 1981 . . . Up to now, the result has been, in terms of restructuring, an agreement on restructuring with the Province of Newfoundland, an agreement in principle with the Province of Nova Scotia and finally, Bill C-170 which is not restructuring anything.

Bill C-170, and this is very important, does not restructure anything as such. What it does is allow the Government to acquire in Section 4 of the Bill, on page 3, and I quote:

—the Minister may, on behalf of Her Majesty,

(a) acquire, hold or dispose of or otherwise deal with shares, debentures or other securities of, or any security interest in, any fishery enterprise;

Although the Government is given other powers, in the main Bill C-170 authorizes the Government to purchase equity in companies but does not provide the basis for concluding a restructuring agreement.

I must say that while we were examining the Bill, I at least managed to get one positive item in this legislation, in Section 6, where it says, and I quote:

6. (1) To carry out the purpose of this Act, the Minister—

—the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané)—

—may, with the approval of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, on such terms and conditions as the Minister specifies, guarantee the repayment of any portion of the principal and interest owing on any loan made to a fishery enterprise.

The second paragraph of this section provides, and I quote:

(2) The aggregate amount of guarantees given under this section that are outstanding at any one time shall not exceed one hundred million dollars.

Mr. Speaker, this means that aside from the restructuring agreement with Newfoundland, and with Nova Scotia, if it materializes, aside from the $138 million appropriated under Section 8 for acquiring shares in restructuring projects, the federal Government may set up a program to guarantee loans of $100 million for fishery enterprises. I think that is a positive point and, in fact, the only truly positive aspect, as far as I can see, of Bill C-170.

One of the things that examining the Bill in Committee has done is to provide a forum for various fisheries interests to express their views, not only on this legislation and the restructuring plan, but also on the fisheries policy in general, especially in terms of fish stocks management as it is pursued at the present time, and this was brought up in connection with a paragraph of the agreement in principle concluded with the Province of Nova Scotia which referred to quotas for ocean perch in the Gulf. When people realized that the Government of Nova Scotia, in a bilateral agreement with the federal Government, insisted on privileged access or preferential treatment with respect to fish stock management and ocean perch quotas, they immediately saw two potential problems. There were two concerns.

First of all, there was a link between the government or governments that were owners of large companies, and fish stock management. In other words, the federal Government's role as objective arbitrator in awarding quotas was compromised. That was one concern. The second concern was that a dangerous precedent had been set, in that for the first time, without going through the usual consultation body, which in the case of groundfish happens to be the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee (AGAC), a decision had been made on awarding quotas to a province or a party with interests in the fishing industry. I know that there was considerable unfavourable reaction to this, especially in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and I have the impression that was the case in the other Atlantic provinces as well.

In any event, examining this Bill in committee gave people an opportunity to express their views on various items. For instance, a number of intervenors from New Brunswick appeared before the Committee to submit briefs, and I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate them and thank them for having done so. I am referring to the Government of New Brunswick, a coalition of various fisheries interests in New Brunswick, the New Brunswick Fish Packers' Association and the Prince Edward Island Association, the Association professionnelle des pêcheurs du nord-est du Nouveau-Brunswick, the Maritime Provinces Fishermen's Union. I don't think I left anyone out. These people expressed a number of concerns relating to federal policy as well as to the legislation itself. In fact, I also want to congratulate them because they were positive. They did not come here to fight against something, they did not come to speak out against restructuring and against the legislation. They came to tell the Government: These are our concerns and we would like some reasurrance.

In his speech earlier today the Minister referred to a brief I sent him. Since at four o'clock in the morning I did not think a long speech would be welcome, I told the Minister I would be sending him a brief that would summarize the concerns of the people from New Brunswick who came to testify before the Committee. It was a matter of summarizing and interpreting in my own way what their concerns were and what the Government could do to deal with those concerns, to give them the assurance that what is good for Newfoundland and may be good for Nova Scotia is perhaps not so bad for the rest of the Maritime Provinces or for the fisheries industry in New Brunswick, for that matter.

I will sum up as briefly as possible the five points I raised in the memo I sent to the Minister. The first has to do with groundfish quotas in zone 4 RST or both zones, those which most closely follow the outline of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In my opinion, the Federal Government and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) ought to make a statement very soon to tell the people that groundfish stocks in the Gulf will be reserved for the fleet of boats measuring 100 feet or less based in the Gulf. Besides boats from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec, that fleet includes as well boats from Newfoundland, the western coast of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and especially the Cape Breton area, because they too fish in the Gulf.

Because I come from New Brunswick and others are from Quebec or Prince Edward Island, some people tell us that we do not want any Nova Scotia and Newfoundland boats in the Gulf. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. I have no objection to boats from other provinces plying the Gulf, because the Gulf of St. Lawrence belongs to all Canadians. There has been talk about a dispute among fishing fleets. When talking about a fishing fleet, two things come to mind: the length and power of the boats. What people are saying is that, if boats belonging to fleets are powerful or long enough to go fishing offshore—meaning those boats which are big enough to store the fish caught over a period of one or sometimes two weeks—those boats can go offshore, but that most of the groundfish stocks in the Gulf, the 4 RST zone, should be reserved for boats measuring 100 feet or less based in the Gulf. There are 100-footers or smaller boats operating in the Gulf, and they come from the five eastern provinces, not only from New Brunswick, not only from Prince Edward Island, and not only from Quebec.

The philosophy expressed at the 1980 Memramcook symposium on Gulf groundfish must be maintained. I think that, in the distribution and management of quotas, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans must ensure that the policy of the Federal Government will continue to reflect that philosophy.

My second concern has to do with the agreement with Newfoundland, where reference is made to what is called secondary processing at the Burin plant and perhaps elsewhere. We want the assurance that Federal Government assistance—technical, monetary or whatever—efforts and resources will not be directed exclusively towards the new Newfoundland company when time comes to consider means of going in for secondary processing. Indeed, we have the means to do that in New Brunswick as well, and like the others we should be entitled to the same assistance for private sector plants and businesses in New Brunswick and elsewhere, for people who are not restructured into super-companies. We should be given the same opportunity to go in for secondary processing.

The third point is that groundfish fishing permits were lost in New Brunswick during the 70s when groundfish stocks were radicaly depleted. At that time, 19 groundfish fishing permits were lost in New Brunswick. In addition, four large trawlers financed by the Province of New Brunswick used to fish in the Gulf northeast of New Brunswick, but they have now been leased to Nova Scotia companies. Two are financed by a company called Pearce Fisheries and the other one by National Sea Products. Now that groundfish stocks are plentiful in the Gulf, I think that those four boats should be sent back in the Gulf because they are financed by the New Brunswick taxpayers. The Minister has the authority to do that. There was a moral agreement under which those boats would continue to supply northeastern New Brunswick plants, but they discontinued that practice after a few months. And now we have to share quotas, for cod for instance, offshore within the 200-mile limit. Two New Brunswick boats are now operating there, so they will have to go along with the proposed offshore groundfish quotas. The Department says that it is going to return to past practice and keep fishing records in mind. I think it has been its intention for the past five or six years. What happens is that the record will show the catches of these four New Brunswick boats that fish off Nova Scotia as Nova Scotia landings. I believe that the landings of these four boats should be recorded as New Brunswick landings and that, based on these figures, New Brunswick should be allocated larger quotas for off-shore groundfish landings. I would like to talk about two boats, namely the Caraquet belonging to a Caraquet company, and the Pandalus belonging to the Lanièque Island Fishermen's Cooperative.

Now, for my fourth point. The federal Government should quickly develop a marketing financing and assistance program for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island plants, because there are no restructuring agreements with these two provinces. We cannot expect the Government of New Brunswick, not to mention that of Prince Edward Island since it has not signed a restructuring agreement either, we cannot expect the governments of these provinces, which did not receive any injection of funds as opposed to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, for example towards a reduction of the debts on fishing vessels, to be able on their own to finance independent processors, for instance. The federal Government must therefore implement a program for these two provinces.

Fourth point! One irritant in New Brunswick is that the current policy for herring and mackerel fishing leaves a lot to be desired, for both the inshore and the offshore fisheries. In the case of the inshore fishery, there are no markets or guarantees for the fisherman when he brings in his catch. The result is that he does not get the price he deserves for his fish. Inshore fishermen therefore cannot be expected to cooperate in terms of a balanced policy for herring and mackerel fishing.

As for the offshore fishery, the policy announced by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans last August to reduce the seiner fleet is very ineffective and unfair because the fishermen are told to reduce their fleet, and to do so, they have to buy a lottery ticket. This means that the owner of a fishing vessel who has had good years in the herring fishery and who is now financially sound can purchase the quotas of a younger fisherman or someone who has just gotten into the industry and who is in a more precarious financial situation saddled with a heavy debt on his boat. He can purchase the quota of this fisherman, who will then be left with his boat, but without quota or a licence.

Mr. Speaker, it is very unfair to have a policy that simply says that the big guy will be able to buy out the smaller one. The Government should review its policy without delay because it is another irritant for New Brunswick fishermen, and they cannot be blamed for having lost confidence in the current policy of the Government.

Last point! We must make sure that the restructuring in Quebec will not result in an expansion of the Quebec plants. I do not object to the Government helping the Quebec plants, or to Quebec companies modernizing their plants, but if this restructuring program or another assistance program for Quebec were to increase the capacity of Quebec plants, it would create a very unfair competition for the fishing industry of Northeastern New Brunswick. Historically, some of the companies now having problems in Quebec paid more for fish than New Brunswick companies. As a result, these Quebec companies had financial problems, and now, the Government is bailing them out. This must not happen again, Mr. Speaker. We have to ensure against any unfair competition based on prices and also avoid any unfair competition as a result of Government development assistance to Quebec processing plants.

[English]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the total approach to the problem of restructuring the industry taken by the Government is highly unusual, in my view. I just do not understand how anyone in Government could even think of this kind of agreement with the Bank of Nova Scotia. I am surprised to see that the Opposition is supporting this kind of approach. The hypocrisy of the Official Opposition on this Bill is very obvious. They should not think that people are not seeing through their position. If Hon. Members opposite want to support this Bill, that is fine. That is their right. But they should not keep saying this is nationalization of the industry, or socialization of the industry and, on the other hand, cooperate with the Government to get the Bill through the House in one day. I want the record to show, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition supports this Bill, because its position is very visible. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) said, a few days after this Bill was tabled, that he was going to support this Bill. The Minister of Fisheries from Newfoundland came up here and said privately to anyone who wanted to hear it that he had received the assurance of the Official Opposition that it would not oppose this Bill.

• (1710)

That Party cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. If it supports this Bill, fine. If it does not support this Bill, then it knows what it should have done. They cannot keep saying that the Bill is bad and that it is nationalization of the industry, because they did support it. If they had not supported it, we would have had a better examination of this Bill.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member for Gloucester in committee. I listened to his speech here today on this Bill. I would like to ask him one question. How does the Hon. Member rationalize saying, on the one hand, that it is all right for New Brunswick boats to fish off the Newfoundland coast, but, on the other hand, saying, oh, no, there cannot be Nova Scotia boats and there cannot be Newfoundland boats going down into the Gulf? The Hon. Member has said many times he does not put provincial flags on ships. However, would he not agree that actually what he is doing with the Gulf question is putting provincial flags on fish? Is it not true that the list he just read out, which was given to the Minister, is really a form of blackmail on the part of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member calls the list blackmail. It is no such thing. I put to the Minister in committee, and also in a memo, the list of concerns, as I interpreted them, of the New Brunswick fishing industry. If it has to be called "blackmail", which I say it is not, then so be it. My job here is to represent my constituency, to put forward the views of my constituents, and to defend New Brunswick's fishing interests as they were expressed before the committee.

With regard to the question of putting provincial flags on ships, the Hon. Member presumably did not hear my speech. If he did, he did not understand it. What I said is that we are talking here about conflict between fleets of fishing vessels. When one talks about a fleet, one is really talking about two things, the length of the boat and, therefore, its capacity to hold fish and, second, the horsepower of the boat. That is what we are talking about. I never took the position that Nova Scotia or Newfoundland boats cannot fish in the Gulf. In fact, they do. What we are talking about is to reserve in the Gulf the majority of the groundfish for vessels of 100 feet or less, with less power, who are based in the Gulf—vessels from Newfoundland, from Nova Scotia, from Prince Edward Island, from New Brunswick and from Quebec. There is that kind of vessel, Mr. Speaker, which can only fish in the Gulf. It does not have the power to go outside the Gulf. And these vessels are based in the five Provinces.

There are boats based in New Brunswick of 100 feet or more, with more power, which can go offshore, and we are taking the same position, that those vessels should not be entitled to fish in the Gulf. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about putting provincial flags on fish or on ships. What we are saying is that in the Gulf we should reserve the groundfish stocks for those boats which cannot go outside the Gulf to fish. I think that is fair and reasonable.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I hate to break into this altercation between the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate and the Hon. Member for Gloucester. I perceive that there are very deep divisions among Members of the Liberal Party on this issue, as indeed there are on many other issues. My question to the Hon. Member for Gloucester is this: he has spoken at some length of the concerns of his constituents on this issue—I applaud him for doing so, that is his job—why does he think he has been completely disregarded on this issue by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Government, which, presumably, he supports?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question. I do not believe that my concerns have been totally disregarded by the Government. The Hon. Member, if he is aware of this issue, will know that on the question of restructuring, the agreement in principle with Nova Scotia seemed to link the question of management of Gulf stocks with the restructuring of a super company in Nova Scotia. I would not say that the concerns of the New Brunswick industry and the concerns which I expressed on its behalf, have been disregarded by the Government, because the fact is that that particular paragraph of the agreement with Nova Scotia has not been accepted by the Government as yet. The Minister said in his speech on third reading earlier today that he would organize a meeting with his departmental officials very early next week to discuss all the points which were brought forward by the New Brunswick fishing industry which I summarized in my memo to him. I do not believe that the Minister will disregard that.

The reason we are in this position is that there has been pressure in Newfoundland, expressed by the Government of Newfoundland, and the federal Government to try to solve the problems of the industry in Newfoundland. The same thing has happened in Nova Scotia. There have been discussions by both Governments. My position, and the position of the people from New Brunswick who came here, was not to oppose that. What is good for Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is fine. However, we want to make sure we are going to be protected, without having a restructuring agreement, because our fishing industry does not happen to be bankrupt. Because we are not bankrupt, we do not want to lose what we have.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there are those who suggest that some Hon. Members of this House are unclear in their position. May I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are those of us who tried to improve this Bill but we could get no support from those who have now claimed they have taken a position against the Bill, and who now challenge us, in turn, to take a position against the Bill. I submit to you, Sir, that they have personal constituency issues which are putting them in a position which is important. It is an Atlantic issue. For the first time, it has been indicated that some Hon. Members to your right, Mr. Speaker, are in fact aware that at last there are Atantic issues which supercede their loyalties to the Liberal Party. I think that is very significant. I say to the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) that I wish we had had your votes in favour of some of those amendments. No matter how this Act might be administered, we would at least have had access to information which might have contributed to an opportunity for this House and the fishing industry—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for South West Nova invokes a question of privilege.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who was speaking is referring to the Chairman of the Committee. The Chairman of the Comittee said here in the House that it would be unbiased. At no time was the Chair asked to break any votes in that Committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That is perhaps a point of explanation, but it is hardly a question of privilege in the true sense of the word.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, may I draw to the attention of the House that in the spirit in which the Fisheries Committee has functioned, the Chairman has pretty much reserved the right to participate in that Committee as if she were not chairman but, rather, as a normal member, and she has had—

Mr. Evans: There are clear rules on how chairmen vote.

Mr. McCain: Just a minute. You were not there. Let us get Ottawa Centre out of the fishing business where it does not belong.

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, the Hon. Member should address his remarks to the motion as well as to the Chair, please.

Mr. McCain: My regrets, Mr. Speaker. My respect for the Chair is inalienable, Sir.

We have a question raised through the interjection by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) as he referred to the Hon. Member for Gloucester. We have sought the answer repeatedly. What becomes of the surplus redfish in the Gulf? Nova Scotia says it has it, that is part of the deal. Newfoundland has implied it has part of that surplus as part of the deal.

An Hon. Member: There is no surplus.

Mr. McCain: Well, the biologist says there are another 50,000 tons we ought to be catching. I do not know whether you call that surplus. The TAC is not utilized, put it that way.

New Brunswick has had no assurance because there has been no negotiation. We do not know what is going on between Quebec and the Minister. We know there is some reorganization, apparently scheduled to be in place in Quebec, but we do not know how many redfish they have. Prince Edward Island has no conception of whether or not it will in turn have any redfish. No one will answer because everything is so secret in these negotiations. Here we are with the full knowledge of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, the Hon. Member for South West Nova and the Hon. Member for Gloucester, voting for a pig in a poke because we feel there is a social responsibility which has motivated us to give this Bill quick consideration. This goes against our principles, because we are conscious of the consequences.

This is the only proposition the Government placed before the industry in spite of advice which I would like to read into the record. I am quoting from the Kirby report as follows:

> Improving the climate of co-operation and confidence in the industry will require strong leadership from processors' and fishermen's organizations, as well as changes in attitude among all participants in the fishery, including government. This recommendation will probably be the one that is most difficult to implement.

That is the one on which Mr. Kirby has capitulated under pressure, I suppose, from Government. The primary mandate of the Kirby task force was to recommend:

> How to achieve and maintain a viable Atlantic fishing industry with due consideration for the overall economic and social development of the Atlantic Provinces.

Again I wish to quote from the presentation to the Committee by the New Brunswick Department of Commerce and Development. It said:

> Recommendation number 45 of the Task Force, "do not establish a new general program of financial assistance for either fishermen or processors", appears to conflict with the preamble to this Bill.
>
> The potential damage to the Atlantic fishery, the profitable and independent part of the industry, is incalcuable unless the Bill in its present form is amended.

The presentation continues:

> Certain trends are readily discernible. Comparing the years 1976 (the year before the 200 mile limit was proclaimed) and 1980 (the latest year for which data is available), the number of staff-hours worked in New Brunswick increased by 35 per cent over the period, compared to 41 per cent for Canada. The total wage bill in the same period grew by 107 per cent in New Brunswick and 102 per cent for the Canadian fish processing industry.

In other words, New Brunswick was outpacing the rest of Canada. It continues:

> This growth in employment in New Brunswick is impressive when one considers that New Brunswick has not benefited from the declaration of the 200 mile limit as have other Atlantic Provinces.

On page 4 of this report it says:

> Plants that are owned by larger integrated firms cannot respond as quickly and must often cope with corporate bureaucracies which inhibit such agility. Statistics Canada reports that New Brunswick has more owners working in production than any other province in Canada.

If we look at the value added in New Brunswick versus the rest of Canada it shows that the value added as a ratio of market landed is 4.5 for New Brunswick, 1.9 for Nova Scotia, 2.0 for Prince Edward Island, 1.9 for Quebec and 2.5 for Newfoundland. In other words, the little independent is accomplishing a 4.5 increment in value. That is separate and apart from what is to become the nationalized structure. They have functioned very well. I quote again:

> The New Brunswick industry has been successful because a diverse product mix and more finished production by independent "hands on" management and ownership.

It is highly diversified and has grown rapidly in recent years.
It employs 12,000 persons at peak periods of the year.
It is made up of numerous small processors employing few people and several large plants employing a large number of people.
Despite being limited to Gulf and Bay fishing grounds, the value of production and value added has matched or outstripped the Canadian average since 1976 despite being limited in Bay Fundy and inshore.

These are limitations imposed in a rather harsh fashion by the regulation of the Department of Fisheries which has depleted the fishery in the Bay in the Province of New Brunswick to a very measurable degree. I know because I represent those people. They fear what may happen.

Vertical integration and borrowing, accompanied by distant management of the integrated companies, has contributed to the lack of productivity of the companies we are about to save. Whether you be on Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or in other parts of other Provinces where independent people are doing the work, they are viable, they have been profitable and they are not begging. The report continues:

The independent fish processing companies were faced with the same problems of interest rates, seasonal production, weak markets, and for the exception of being supplied by independent fishermen who own their vessels, were able to not only survive but improve their profitability.

We are bailing out the incompetent and threatening the survival of the competent individual entrepreneur. I quote again:

What is exasperating is that the restructured companies represent an even further vertical integration under government ownership. Under Bill C-170 the Government which controls fish allocations, inspects all processing plants and subsequently is the federal Department charged with fisheries development now expands its mandate into fishing and processing. Verbal pledges to the contrary are not adequate assurances. The industry requires ironclad guarantees.

We are not against restructuring as a means of saving employment. Do not restructure in a manner which will affect the viability of independent industry. Our industry has always said that the Kirby Task Force represented a study of the cod fishery problem in Newfoundland.

● (1730)

I submit to you that that is an accurate assessment of the Kirby report. It did not address the whole industry. I say to you, and I do not think Mr. Kirby would object to my saying this, that he conceded that the terms of his reference at one point in time were not adequate. He did not have time enough to do the job. As he left one of our committees, I had a little discussion with him. The Minister does not shake his head on that subject matter.

I would like to quote once more from this submission by the Province of New Brunswick. I am going to quote from page 10:

Michael Kirby in an address to the Fisheries Council of Canada's Annual Meeting, St. John's, Newfoundland, May 2, 1983 stated:

"The disagreement over marketing organization boils down to whether or not there is a need to build in a 'pro active' buy-and-sell function for government. I have argued previously that the Fisheries Prices Support Board already has all the powers the federal government needs to buy and sell and engage in state-to-state deals. Hence, a new marketing role for the government is not needed."

Mr. Speaker, that is a quote from remarks of Dr. Kirby who is part of the team which represented the Government's case before the Committee. Here we have a contradiction of the report, and now a contradiction of his speech on May 2, 1983 in Newfoundland to the Fisheries Council.

There is so much more, Mr. Speaker, that could be said, but I do understand that, by agreement, this House has imposed certain time constraints upon this debate. I would like to close. If I am imposing upon those time constraints, I hope you will advise me. In closing I would like to say that the New Brunswick processing industry is highly competitive and relatively flexible to changing conditions. This industry has stayed in relatively good shape through innovation, not intervention. I share the concern of the Province of New Brunswick which has a mix which has strengthened its position, as compared with those in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and the other integrated branches of those companies. How can the New Brunswick industry compete against the federal Government which will obviously have vested interests in Newfoundland and Nova Scotian companies? Is the federal Government able to guarantee that the New Brunswick fishing industry will receive a fair share of the resource allocation, and that restructuring will not interfere with their markets? Is the Government of Canada prepared to use the lending authority of this Act to guarantee the loans which may be required? The Bank of Nova Scotia and other banks have said, "You little guys are not going to be competitive with the Government monster. We, therefore, have cut your credit rating by one-third." What is the Minister going to do? We have addressed this subject many times. He has not committed himself to use the lending authority of this Bill. He has not committed himself to use the Small Business Development Bond, or a similar bond for fishing. These people are crying, and they need to be addressed now by commitment, not by evasion, not by saying the negotiations are secret, and not by ignoring them. The little fisherman and the little processor need succour from the Government at this moment in time to remove from them the fear that their life's accumulation of wealth will in fact have been lost as a result of a lack of credit and the conflict of interest which will exist within the Government itself.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are socially-minded. I guess we now have to depend upon the wisdom of Government which, in administration of its private business affairs, has certainly been more than wanting. It is with great regret that I say to this Government and to all those in the fishing industry that we have been absolutely unable to make an impression of any kind, in spite of the fact that of the 17 witnesses whom we heard, the Province of Newfoundland gave unequivalent support to the deal as it is. The Newfoundland labour union people, as they left the table, gave some indication that there was a bit of hesitation, but basically they unequivocally supported it. Of the other 15 who appeared, four or five gave rather strong support, but every one of those four or five demanded that in the best interests of the total fishing industry amendments were necessary. They were ignored. The balance of those representations did recognize the social qualifications of this Bill but said, "In the name of the best interests of the fishing industry, amend, modify, adjust." The Province of Prince Edward Island opposed. The Province of New Brunswick opposed. The Province of Nova Scotia has not yet signed. The Province of Quebec is in limbo. We do not know where it is at.

That is where we leave the fishing industry with this Bill, as a social measure whose inestimable consequence may very well be negative rather than positive without judicious management and without consideration for both the private fishermen and the little processor.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I realize that time is quickly running out on the third reading stage of Bill C-170. I would be remiss if I did not take advantage of the opportunity to make a few very brief comments with respect to the Bill presently under consideration.

I will begin, Mr. Speaker, by asking Members of the House and myself why we are considering such a Bill today. I think the answer is very clear to all of us. The answer is that it became necessary because of the dire straits being faced by the fishing industry of Atlantic Canada that Governments, and I use that in the plural sense deliberately, become involved in providing some form of assistance to enable the survival of our fish processing and fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. I am sure all Members are aware of the significant impact which the fishing industry has in Atlantic Canada. It provides some 90,000 jobs for Canadians living in Atlantic Canada. It is with reluctance that Governments are involved in private sector enterprises. I ask Members of the House what the alternatives are if our fishing industry is to prevail and to succeed.

My Province of Prince Edward Island and specifically my own riding, is made up of independent processors who have provided employment opportunities and a solid backbone to the economy of many of the communities around my riding and around our Province. They have expressed concern and anxiety as to the implications of Bill C-170. Obviously something has to be done. A response had to be made to the potential collapse of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada. That response came in the form of arrangements and agreements between Provinces and the Government of Canada where in Provincial Governments and federal Governments, along with the private sector, would restructure companies to enable them to continue their operations and to bring their operations back on to a profit making basis.

I would like to add my words of accommodation to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has worked very diligently over long hours over many days to communicate, discuss and carry out consultations with various sectors of the industry, going all the way back to the Kirby task force and following through with direct interventions and direct meetings between the federal Minister and his provincial counterparts in Atlantic Canada. We also want to compliment him for his effort in addressing a number of issues which have surfaced since the beginning of the Kirby task force examination of the Atlantic fisheries.

From my own Province's point of view, we are talking about the second largest contributor to the economy of the Province of Prince Edward Island. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that I followed the discussions, beginning with the work of the Kirby task force, having served as a member of the ministerial subcommittee on the Atlantic fisheries. I met with the independent processors in my own riding and in Prince Edward Island. I was successful in being able to secure an opportunity for them to make their presentation before the Fisheries Committee.

• (1740)

I can only express the wish and the desire, which I am sure is shared by all Members, that this restructuring will enable a return to health for the fish processing sector and for the private entrepreneur within Atlantic Canada.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 5.40 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings, pursuant to the provisions of the order made earlier today, and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT SPENDING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Huntington:

That this House agrees without reservation with the prediction of the Prime Minister made on August 13, 1969, in a nationally televised press conference when he said, "We'd soon be on the road to financial disaster if nothing were done to bring spending under control" and calls upon the government to initiate policies which would avoid the Prime Minister's prediction.

And the amendment of Mr. Blenkarn:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and by adding the following words:

"including, but not limited to, the adoption forthwith of the Seventh Report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, November 24, 1983, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of Mr. Blenkarn to the motion of Mr. Huntington under our supply proceedings.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Blenkarn) which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are some 15 opposed items to the Supplementary Estimates (B). We have had consultations and agreed amongst ourselves to dispose of those 15 opposed items by having three recorded divisions as follows: The vote on item 1 will dispose of Item No. 12. The second recorded division, a vote on item No. 2 will dispose of items Nos. 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13 and 15. The third recorded division, a vote on item No. 5, will dispose of items Nos. 6 and 14. In so far as the unopposed items are concerned, you will realize later that they will go through on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Nielsen: That is substantially correct, Mr. Speaker. The votes on all motions will be recorded as though a recorded division had taken place. Earlier this afternoon the Member for Hamilton Mountain asked for consent to delete Motion No. 4. We provide that consent now.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate receiving the consent. It is not necessary. We are prepared to take the votes as they were indicated by the President of the Privy Council. I agree with the comments of the House Leader for the Conservative Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered. The next question is on Motion No. 1. This vote will also apply to Motion No. 12.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, laid upon the Table, Thursday, November 3, 1983, except those items disposed of earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gray thereupon moved that Bill C-173, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1984, be read the first time and be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Nielsen: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

● (1855)

Mr. Gray thereupon moved that Bill C-173, an Act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On dividion.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Mr. Nielsen: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 5 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 6 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the Schedule carry?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that notwithstanding our support for Motion No. 5, there is a serious deficiency in that vote. The vote pertains to non-budgetary item L31b on page six of the Schedule under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It reads:

Loans to New Brunswick Electric Power Commission in connection with the operation of a nuclear generating station at Point Lepreau, New Brunswick.

An agreement reached between New Brunswick and the federal Government provides a series of standby loans to New Brunswick Power in the event that the Point Lepreau nuclear reactor fails to provide an adequate amount of electricity. The agreement provides that New Brunswick Power can receive up to $6 million per year maximum in the event that Point Lepreau's power production is less than 75 per cent of capacity.

When the Supplementary Estimate was drawn up, the Department assumed that the maximum amount for the year would be called upon. In fact, while the reactor missed its October start-up date, and only started producing at full power in March, the reactor has behaved very well since. Thus New Brunswick Power is only able to call upon a total of $3.8 million.

New Brunswick Power has indicated in writing to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that it has no intention of seeking any funds for the current year. It is also worth noting that when called, New Brunswick Power knew nothing of this Supplementary Estimate.

● (1900)

Since the fund has been called upon to the extent I just indicated, we had no choice but to support concurrence in the estimate itself. But it is evidence of a sloppiness in the preparation of the estimate, particularly in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources where they would be calling for substantial moneys over and above those actually needed.

We are therefore supporting the Schedule, but now that these remarks are on the record the Department will likely take note and rectify things in the future.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The President of the Privy Council, on the same point of order.

Mr. Pinard: There is absolutely no point of order. At this stage, the Chair is supposed to put all questions, without debate or amendment, and I think this is abusing the rules of the House. I hope the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will refrain from doing so again.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The point raised by the President of the Privy Council is well taken. I refer Hon. Members to Standing Order 62(10) where the Chairman has no choice but to put all questions forthwith and successively without debate or amendment. I take it that the Hon. Member for Yukon was rising on a point of order. He has made his point and we will proceed.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, to accept the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon to place on the record justification for an absolute irrational act in supporting the nuclear program is unacceptable. The Member was not up on a point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. We are now getting into debate.

Shall the Schedule carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Schedule agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Preamble agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Title agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

I seek unanimous consent. We have undertaken all consultations necessary and it should be possible to get consent for presenting to the House a motion to be accepted without debate by all Parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to reverting to motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE CANADA'S PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL PEACEKEEPING

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): The motion reads:

That the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be empowered to examine all aspects of Canada's participation in international peacekeeping, present and anticipated, and report to the House not later than May 15, 1984.

Mr. Nielsen: We have no problem with that motion, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the purpose for moving it now is so that the machinery can be put in place in anticipation of the work of the Standing Committee to carry out this reference. The Hon. Member for the Government will undoubtedly be putting a similar reference when we come back after prorogation, at which time we will have to consider its form and see how we deal with it at that time.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, that meets with our agreement also. It is in line with the discussion which I understand took place between the three House Leaders.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

It being 7.06 p.m. this House now stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 7.06 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following Bills, without amendment:

Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act;

Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act;

Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises; and also

Bill C-173, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received, which is as follows:

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th day of November, 1983, at 1400 hours, to give Royal Assent to certain Bills and for the purpose of proroguing the First Session of the Thirty-Second Parliament.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

Mr. Domm: I rise on a brief point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder how you could have all of this information. I am sure I heard the bells ringing in the Senate when I came into this Chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA FUNDING OF HOSPITALS—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to launch an immediate investigation into the manner in which the New Democratic Government of Manitoba is mismanaging its funding for health care. Three tragedies have occurred at the Manitoba Health Sciences Centre because of the NDP restraint policy of reducing staff at hospitals, which results in unacceptably low staffing and overcrowding. In one instance a nurse at the Health Sciences Centre had in her care 24 babies in the nursery. It was in this overcrowded nursery that two infants died.

The staff of the Health Sciences Centre are not able to perform their duties effectively under these conditions. In response to the obvious need for increased hospital funding the NDP Government announced a 3 per cent spending limit on hospitals and ordered the obstetrics unit at the Seven Oaks and Concordia hospitals to be shut down, adding an even greater burden to the Health Sciences Centre and a greater risk to the patients.

There is no public confidence in the administration of health services by the New Democratic Government. Clearly this is gross mismanagement on the part of the NDP, and an immediate investigation by the Minister of National Health and Welfare is necessary to make certain that funding for health care facilities in Manitoba is of an amount to ensure a standard level of safety, and that this funding is not misdirected.

THE ADMINISTRATION

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR YORK WEST

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada had their suspicions. We in the Opposition have been saying it for years, and now the truth is out. The Liberal Government and Cabinet are controlled by the bureaucrats and do not listen to the people of Canada.

Let us review the facts presented by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Fleming), and I quote from the Toronto Star of November 30:

S.O. 21

Cabinet Ministers are treated like children. They are afraid of officials in Trudeau's office. Too much power rests with non-elected officials and advisers in Trudeau's office. The Government operates on cynicism, ballyhoo and manipulation.

The six and five program is run by non-elected officials and not by Ministers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that reference to the Prime Minister should be by his title. That is the usual courtesy in this House.

Mr. McDermid: I was quoting from the Toronto Star, Mr. Speaker.

No wonder this Government is in trouble. Ministers get their marching orders from Jim Coutts, Keith Davey, and Tom Axworthy.

The Liberal defence to all these accusations is, "It's just sour grapes; the Hon. Member for York West is just mad because he was dropped from Cabinet". I like to think that it is a Liberal who finally decided to tell the truth. How refreshing, Mr. Speaker. It is fitting that these revelations be made available on the last day of the longest session in Canada's history. I call on the Government to let Canadians have a fresh start, forget the Throne Speech, and call an election. It would be the finest Christmas present—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth.

THE ADMINISTRATION

DESCRIPTION ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR YORK WEST

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are dead if they stay the way they are. People do not look at them as an honest, sincere bunch. Cabinet Ministers are fearful of the Prime Minister's Office. "Ministers are treated like children and are running off and watching their backs at all times." "Too much power rests with non-elected officials and advisers in the Prime Minister's Office". "The Government operates on cynicism and ballyhoo and manipulations." That, Mr. Speaker, was a Liberal Member of Parliament tearing great strips off his own hierarchy.

Today I get the chance, Mr. Speaker, to do something you do not often hear coming from this side. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Fleming) warmly for stating the obvious. Mind you, it has taken 15 years, including 591 sitting days in this current session of Parliament, for the message to sink in, but the Member for York West has publicly confirmed what we on this side have maintained for years; this Liberal Government is run from the Prime Minister's Office, not by its elected representatives. And it has taken a former Liberal Cabinet Minister to declare it. But running off and watching their backs at all times not only applies to his former colleagues in Cabinet. Most Liberals over there will be performing similar retreats at the polls next year. They should thank the Hon. Member for York West for reminding them that, after the next election, we Progressive Conservatives will be operating a true parliamentary democracy—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

• (1410)

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, the Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-172, an Act to amend the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act and to authorize certain payments in relation thereto.—Chapter No. 169

Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act—Chapter 170

Bill C-171, an Act to amend the Garnishment, Attachment and Pension Diversion Act.—Chapter No. 171

Bill C-170, an Act to authorize investment in and the provision of financial assistance to the Atlantic Fisheries for the purpose of restructuring fishery enterprises.—Chapter 172

Bill C-173, Appropriation Act No. 3, 1983-84.—Chapter 173

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

After which the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the first session of the Thirty-Second Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour today of closing the longest and most productive session in the history of the Canadian Parliament. During the three and a half year period in which you have been sitting more than 200 pieces of legislation have been introduced and over 150 of these have been proclaimed into law.

This session has been remarkable not only for the number of bills passed, but for the magnitude of their impact. The Government recognized that those who wait for unanimity never act, and that those who do not act are engulfed by the wave of events of a rapidly changing world. Accordingly, the Government launched a series of bold initiatives, any one of which would have been sufficient to make this session of Parliament an exceptional one. Four in particular have transformed Canada.

Following the Quebec referendum, the Government initiated the process of federal renewal which it promised would ensue from a rejection of sovereignty association, patriating the Canadian Constitution with an amending formula and an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms. A National Energy Program is in force providing a comprehensive set of measures designed to achieve security of supply, greater Canadian ownership and fairness to the consumer. The federal Government's 6&5 program established a framework for the cooperative national effort which has enabled Canada to realize a dramatic reduction in inflation. And the new Western Grain Transportation Act will replace the outdated Crow's Nest Pass freight rate with a more fair and equitable set of rates, thus completing the necessary groundwork for a major expansion of western rail capacity during the balance of the decade.

Meeting the Challenges of World Recession

These four achievements represent the highlights of the Parliamentary session which now is coming to an end; they have been attained in the midst of one of the most turbulent periods which Canada has experienced outside of wartime. The past three and a half years have been marked by global recession, by unstable international petroleum markets, by increased levels of East-West tension, and by the displacement of millions of people around the planet by war, hunger and economic deprivation.

The Canadian response to these troubled times has been, not to retrench, but to meet these greater challenges through a more effective mobilization of our resources. The Government took steps to protect Canadians as much as possible from the ravages of international recession, and to battle domestic inflation. The stage thus was set for the renewed growth and job creation which we are now experiencing.

The centrepiece of the Government's battle against inflation was the 6&5 program, introduced last year to limit increases in incomes and prices regulated by the Federal Government to six percent and five percent respectively over two years. The compulsory restraint measures introduced in the federal public service were reinforced by widespread voluntary adoption of these guidelines by the private sector and the provinces.

The impact of the 6&5 program was enhanced by continuing Government restraint over the discretionary component of its expenditures, and by monetary policy conducted in a way which would not accommodate inflation. The "envelope" system placed pre-set limits on spending in each area of government responsibility, and ensured that policy and funding decisions were taken simultaneously. Improved management practices were implemented generating 122 million dollars in recurring annual savings; opportunities for realizing further annual savings of 139 million dollars have also been identified. Many of the recommendations of the Lambert Commission on Financial Management and Accountability were adopted. As a result of these efforts, the Government's "real", or inflation-adjusted, non-defence operating and capital expenditures are at the same level now that they were six years ago. Total federal government employment, measured in person-years controlled by the Treasury Board, is at the same level in 1983 as it was in 1979.

The inflation rate today is 4.9 percent, the lowest level in eleven years. Other dividends from the Government's anti-inflationary stance are reduced interest rates, a stable dollar and the record trade surplus which we are now experiencing.

Canada was struck as forcefully as its trading partners by the worldwide recession. The Government took concerted action to protect Canadians from its worst effects and to ensure the vigour of the domestic recovery. A work sharing program was introduced to prevent layoffs. New funds were channeled into direct job creation, tax incentives and other measures to stimulate activity in employment-intensive sectors, and new programs to promote economic development. A framework of investment incentives has been announced. Changes to the investment tax credit will make it more readily usable by firms investing in Canada, and will render a portion of the credit refundable. Purchasers of new shares issued by investing firms will also be eligible for the credit. A Special Recovery Investment fund is being created to speed and strengthen private investment during the early stages of the recovery. The maximum personal tax rate has been cut in order to encourage savings and investment. The Indexed Security Investment Plan will provide an additional incentive to invest in common shares of Canadian companies by eliminating taxation on the inflationary part of capital gains.

Particular consideration has been accorded to small business, the most dynamic force in our economy. The Small Business Development Bond increased the funds available to small business by providing a tax exemption on the interest earned by loans to small businesses. Tax measures were introduced to permit the deduction of spouses' salaries from income as a business expense, and review procedures for small business under the provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act were streamlined.

In addition to initiatives aimed at stimulating private sector activity through direct incentives, the Government has undertaken a series of public sector and demand stimulus measures to generate rapid results. More than 2 billion dollars has been targeted to direct job creation alone during the past four fiscal years, providing work for over 700,000 people. A further 2 billion dollars in new funding has been directed to the stimulation of construction in the housing sector, while a major program has been launched, as part of the Crow Rate initiative, to speed the expansion and modernization of rail capacity in the West. The Special Recovery Program announced in the Spring Budget targeted a further 2.4 billion dollars over four years to public investment stimulus through accelerated capital and infrastructure projects.

These programs are now bearing fruit. During the first half of 1983 the Canadian economy grew at an annual rate of 7½ percent. Housing starts, industrial production and capacity utilization are all up significantly. Employment levels have rebounded, and the number of people employed has grown at an average rate of 31,000 per month since last November.

Many groups in our society were cruelly affected by high interest rates during the past three and a half years. The Government took extensive action to provide relief to those groups particularly hard hit.

It responded to the plight of homeowners facing high mortgage costs. Grants of up to $3,000 were made available to homeowners whose mortgage renewals brought their mortgage costs above 30 percent of their gross income. In addition, grants of $3,000 each were extended to first-time home buyers and to purchasers of new houses. The Canadian Home Renovation Plan provided assistance to homeowners undertaking home repairs.

Parallel measures were introduced to help renters. The Canada Rental Support Plan was put forward to ease tight rental housing markets by providing interest-free loans toward the construction of new rental units.

Special measures were enacted to ease the burden of farmers, fishermen and small businessmen. The ceilings for loans under the Small Business Loans Act and Farm Improvement Loans Act were raised to $100,000; for the Fisheries Improvements Loans Act to $150,000; and for the Farm Credit Corporation to $350,000. The total funding available under the Small Business Loans program was almost doubled, to 1.5 billion dollars, and a Small Business Investment Grant program was initiated to reduce costs on borrowing undertaken by small businessmen, farmers and fishermen. The Special Farm Financial Assistance Program provided an interest rebate of four percent on loans extended through the Farm Credit Corporation.

The Government's actions to deal with inflation, unemployment and high interest rates were accompanied by a program to respond to the challenges of the 1980s in a bold and creative manner. That program, outlined in the 1980 Speech from the Throne, had five principal goals:

—to respond to individual needs by promoting greater security for the elderly, expanded opportunities for the young, and equality for women;

—to achieve security of energy supply at a fair price for all Canadians;

—to promote national economic development in a way that would provide jobs, stimulate growth, build upon regional strengths, and increase Canadian ownership and control of our economy;

—to strengthen national institutions, while making them more responsive to provincial and regional goals;

—to ensure that Canada plays a vigorous part in the world beyond our borders.

Helping First Those Who Need Help Most

The first of the goals set out at the opening of the session, enhancing the security of the individual, was designed to help first those who need help most. The Government continues to believe that this must be its first guiding principle and it has given effect to this principle through a wide array of initiatives. In doing so, it has been one of the few western governments not to cut back spending on social services during the last three years.

The elderly came first, with the passage of legislation to raise the Guaranteed Income Supplement to the Old Age Security pension by $35 per month per household, thereby improving the standard of living of 1.3 million pensioners.

In addition, to initiate the complex process of pension reform, a National Pensions Conference was convened as part of the consultative phase of this process and a comprehensive study of the issue, published as a Green Paper, was undertaken.

The Government has addressed the needs and concerns of Canadian women, and taken steps to guarantee their right to full and equal participation in all aspects of our national life.

Within the federal public service, a pilot affirmative action program put in place in 1981 for women, natives and the handicapped is the model for a comprehensive affirmative action program now being implemented in all federal government departments. In addition, a Commission of Inquiry on Equality in Employment has been established to investigate employment practices affecting these groups in certain Crown corporations, and officials within the government have been working with private employers to help them develop their own affirmative action programs.

Female representation in the management and professional categories of the public service has expanded steadily. The principle of equal pay for work of equal value has been adopted within the public service as a guideline applicable to all collective agreements and salary settlements.

This session has been marked by the appointment of the first woman Speaker of the House of Commons and the first woman on the Supreme Court of Canada.

Women have been appointed to positions as Chief Justices in Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan, and a woman has been appointed Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba.

Outside the public sector, the Women's Employment and Women in Non-Traditional Occupations programs have helped break down barriers to entry in non-traditional job fields. The new National Training Act, which has directed resources towards improved job training, provides important support to women wishing to enhance or update their job skills.

The Government has moved to help many women who are working parents. It enriched the child tax credit to $343 per child and doubled the child care expense deduction to $2,000 per child. The Unemployment Insurance Act was amended to provide greater flexibility and equity in the determination of eligibility for maternity benefits, and to extend these benefits to adoptive parents.

For those staying at home to care for their children, pension coverage was improved with the introduction of a child rearing dropout provision to the Canada Pension Plan. It entitles mothers or fathers to remain outside the labour force while their children are under the age of seven without sacrificing future pension benefits.

The Government has addressed the problem of violence against women through major amendments to the parts of the Criminal Code dealing with sexual offences. These amendments replace the offence of rape with various offences of sexual assault, and provide additional protection to women through elimination of spousal immunity and elimination of the need for corroboration of a complainant's testimony.

Amendments to the Human Rights Act also afford increased protection to women, particularly against sexual harassment.

And the most fundamental step of all has been taken by enshrining the principle of equal rights for men and women in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Young people have also been a particular focus for Government action, which dealt with the primary concerns of youth employment and academic prospects.

The young, lacking employment experience, have been a particular casualty of the recession at the very point in their lives at which they should be acquiring job skills and developing sound work habits. To deal with this situation, the Government has launched a series of initiatives directed specifically towards jobs for younger workers.

A Youth Wage Subsidy and Internship Program has been established to help young people obtain work experience and on-the-job training. Katimavik, the Youth Job Corps Program, and the Summer Youth Employment Program have all been expanded. An Extended Youth Training and Employment Program run by the Department of National Defence has been established to provide employment and vocational training.

Young people will be major beneficiaries of the National Training Act. Under this Act, 1.2 billion dollars has been made available during the current fiscal year alone for improved job training opportunities and facilities. The Act also provides for federal assistance to people enrolled in provincial and private educational courses.

Altogether, more than 300,000 young people will have been assisted this year by these and other federal training and employment programs.

Amendments also have been made to the Canada Student Loans Act which almost double the maximum annual amount available to individual students and which broaden the eligibility criteria for loans to include those studying part-time. The program will have benefited 185,000 students this year.

A new Young Offenders Act affords increased protection to young people accused of crimes by giving them explicit rights under the law, raising the age of criminal responsibility from seven to twelve, and providing for destruction of court records when sentences have been served and certain other criteria met.

The Government has given the needs of the handicapped special consideration.

The handicapped are one of the designated groups to which the public service affirmative action program is directed. In addition, a Program for the Employment Disadvantaged has been introduced to develop private sector opportunities for handicapped workers.

Amendments have been made to the Human Rights Act to protect the disabled from discrimination.

A Parliamentary Task Force on the Disabled and Handicapped tabled its report during 1981, the International Year of Disabled Persons, recommending government initiatives to improve job opportunities and living conditions for the handicapped. Significant progress has already been made on more than two thirds of these recommendations, while steps are being taken to address the remaining third. Examples of recommendations being implemented include the allocation of five percent of housing units built under certain Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation programs to specially designed units for the disabled, and significant modifications to airports, train stations, ferries, bus terminals and other federal buildings to improve their accessibility.

The Secretary of State has been named the Minister responsible for issues affecting the disabled, and a status of disabled persons secretariat has been established within his department.

Energy Security at a Fair Price

The second major goal for Parliament set out at the opening of this session was that of achieving energy security at a fair price. The Government introduced the National Energy Program and signed agreements with the oil-producing provinces. A blended, made-in-Canada oil price, fair to producers and consumers, has resulted in average wellhead prices significantly below world levels. Recent amendments to the federal-provincial energy agreements give Canadians additional assurances of price stability over an 18 month period, as well as a guarantee that wholesale natural gas prices in the large eastern Canadian markets will not exceed 65 percent of the price of oil. In western Canada these prices are even lower. The commitment made in 1980 not to impose an 18¢ increase in the excise tax on transportation fuels has been honoured.

You were told three years ago that the Government would take steps to achieve 50 percent Canadian ownership of the petroleum industry by 1990. At that time, 28 percent of our petroleum production was owned by Canadians. Today, in large part because of a strengthened Petro-Canada and an incentive system designed to promote Canadian ownership, that figure is at 38 percent. Furthermore, a majority of all exploration expenditures now are undertaken by Canadian controlled companies, compared to three years ago when only 34 percent were Canadian controlled. As well, a new Canadian petroleum company, Co-Enerco, was established as a result of collaboration between the cooperative movement and the federal Government.

Energy conservation and the shift from oil to other fuels have both accelerated as a result of incentives put in place during the past three years. The Canadian Home Insulation Program has been extended and the eligibility criteria broadened. So far 1.8 million homes have received grants towards improved insulation, meaning average savings of 17 percent on heating bills. Natural gas pricing policy and off-oil conversion grants have helped to reduce the number of households heated by oil from 42 percent to 31 percent in the past three years. Grants have been provided for the conversion of vehicles to propane fuel, and a pilot project has been launched to investigate the feasibility of compressed natural gas as an alternative fuel. An alternate energy corporation, Canertech, has been established to carry out research and development on renewable energy forms.

The Government's vigorous promotion of conservation and oil substitution has helped reduce domestic demand so much that this year Canada achieved oil self-sufficiency. Only a few years ago, 1990 was considered an optimistic target for attaining self-sufficiency and we have hit it seven years early. Today, Canada has a cumulative 1983 crude oil trade surplus of over 300 million dollars and an overall energy trade surplus of 5 billion dollars.

The Government has aided companies willing to undertake major energy development projects. Despite softening world oil prices, several major projects were announced within the last two years—for instance, oil sands developments at Wolf Lake and Cold Lake, expansion at Syncrude in Fort McMurray, a heavy oil upgrader in Regina, and the Norman Wells project.

Since you were told that Petro-Canada would be expanded and its budget increased, it has more than doubled the value of its assets. The corporation's share of retail revenues in the petroleum industry has now risen to eleven percent, from less than two percent in 1979, reflecting an increase both in the number of retail outlets and in consumer support. Petro-Canada has been actively involved in Canadian exploration, particularly in risky frontier areas. Today, Petro-Canada is at work in every part of the country, and Canadians are proud of their national energy corporation.

Promoting Economic Development

The third objective put forth in 1980 was national economic development. In addition to the measures already cited to promote job creation, improved job training and lower inflation, sectoral and regional initiatives were undertaken as part of our economic development policy.

The government has pursued industrial development on a variety of fronts to utilize the strengths inherent in our well-diversified industrial base. It took measures to:

—preserve and rebuild Canada's industrial base;

—provide incentives for increased research and development;

—promote the expansion of export markets;

—upgrade Canada's transportation infrastructure;

—improve the health of Canadian resource industries.

Several major government departments are being reorganized to improve the process of economic policy development and the implementation of regional development concerns.

A 1 billion dollar Industrial and Regional Development Program has been established to help Canadian industry become more competitive internationally and to attract new industries. Under this program a more equitable index of regional disparities is being used to determine levels of assistance, and for the first time all economic development programs will be available throughout the country.

A large number of initiatives were undertaken during this session to stimulate disadvantaged areas, boost promising new projects and industries, spur productivity growth, upgrade infrastructure, and provide assistance to sectors experiencing temporary difficulties. Federal funds for the shipbuilding industry are promoting ship construction and assisting in shipyard improvement, while support has been extended to help Chrysler Canada and Massey-Ferguson weather periods of temporary difficulty. A major federal program of adjustment assistance is facilitating modernization and rationalization of the textile industry, and creation of new employment opportunities for displaced workers. An Office of Industrial and Regional Benefits is promoting Canadian sourcing of equipment and expertise for resource development projects. Government programs were a factor which helped Bombardier secure a major export contract for urban transit vehicles. The Canadian Space Program is providing continued support to leading-edge industries.

In view of the Government's commitment to raise Canadian spending on research and development to 1.5 percent of Gross National Product by 1985, a policy planning framework was announced. More recently, as part of a comprehensive technology policy, the Government has announced construction of fifteen new research facilities, additional funding allocations for high technology procurement and proposals to simplify and enhance tax incentives. Funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and for the Industrial Research Assistance Program was increased. Stimulated in part by these and other government measures, research and development spending as a percentage of Canadian Gross National Product has risen from 1.03 percent in 1979 to a forecast level of 1.4 percent for 1983.

Effective export promotion was the goal of several Government initiatives. The Department of External Affairs was restructured to help ensure that trade considerations receive priority in the development of our foreign policy. Funding was increased to help small and medium-sized businesses fulfill their export potential, and a new financing facility introduced to better assist Canadian companies to compete abroad. Overall funding for the Export Development Corporation was raised.

Since 1979 Canada's trade surplus has quadrupled, to a record high level of 17 billion dollars for 1983 to date. This rise contributed to the 7 billion dollar improvement in the overall balance of payments which occurred over the same period, resulting in the first current account surplus in nine years.

In transportation, a central part of the Government's approach to industrial development, the greatest single achievement has been resolution of the Crow's Nest Pass Rate issue. The legislation directs 3.5 billion dollars over four years towards implementation of a fairer freight rate structure and expansion of western rail capacity, and will lever up to 16.5 billion dollars more to these objectives. The decision to change the Crow Rate will mean a permanent subsidy to western Canada of 651 million dollars per year. Much of the Canadian National line between Winnipeg and Vancouver will be double-tracked. Altogether, 375,000 person-years of employment will thus be generated.

Steps have been taken to match increased rail capacity with enhanced port facilities. At Prince Rupert, construction is nearing completion of a new port which will include coal and grain terminals; the coal terminal will provide the facilities required for the northeast British Columbia coal development project. The Canada Ports Corporation has been established to increase local port autonomy and to improve overall efficiency of the national ports system. These improvements to our transportation system will become particularly vital when world market demand recovers.

In another major Canadian industry, the Government has already acted on many recommendations of comprehensive studies of the east and west coast fisheries, in order to improve their productivity and enhance the livelihoods of fishermen and plant workers. A federal-provincial agreement was signed to revitalize the Newfoundland deep-sea fishing industry, creating a new fishing company from the assets of several which are financially troubled, and agreement in principle was negotiated with Nova Scotia for a comparable initiative in that province. Enabling legislation was passed to authorize federal involvement in the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery. The Government has also taken action to help fishermen benefit more fully from the 200 mile zone by increasing the severity of penalties for foreign fishermen who break Canada's coastal fishing laws.

In forestry, one of the country's largest employers, Government support has been extended in the form of enhanced federal forestry facilities in St. John's, Fredericton, Ste. Foy, Sault Ste. Marie and Victoria; Unemployment Insurance funds to subsidize forestry jobs when world demand for forest products softened; assistance to forestry schools; and purchases of new water bombers.

Support has been provided to assist research and development in the mining sector. The industry has been given access to facilities of the Canadian Centre for Energy and Mineral Technology, whose work has led to important breakthroughs in occupational health and safety.

In recognition of the growing number of countries which prefer to make food purchases on a state-to-state basis, a new Crown corporation, Canagrex, has been established that will help agricultural producers expand their export markets. Other new legislation affecting farmers includes the Meat Import Act, which protects both producers and consumers, and an Act which enables the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow on financial markets.

Strengthening National Institutions

The fourth government goal set forth three years ago was the strengthening of national institutions and our country's unity.

In 1980, residents of the province of Quebec voted "no" to sovereignty-association in the Quebec referendum and the federal Government promised a process of federal renewal.

Clearly, the greatest achievements in this area have been the patriation of our Constitution with an amending formula, and the entrenchment of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These actions completed the final steps towards Canadian sovereignty and formally guaranteed every citizen certain basic rights and freedoms.

The task of strengthening the rights of Canadians will proceed. To this end, Parliament recently adopted a resolution urging the Manitoba Government to take early action to ensure that treatment of the province's official language minority conforms with constitutional requirements.

An important part of the process of renewal is to ensure that Canada's native peoples are able to realize their rightful aspirations within Canadian society. The First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Constitutional Matters last spring produced agreement on an amending resolution guaranteeing aboriginal and treaty rights equally to native men and women, and including land claims settlements under treaty rights. That amendment has now been ratified by Parliament and the required number of provincial legislatures, and will be incorporated into our Constitution next year.

Various native claims settlements have been reached within the last three and a half years. A Native Economic Development Fund was created to assist native peoples in the pursuit of their own economic development objectives. Funding for native housing programs and friendship centres has been increased. A new northern broadcasting policy is being implemented to increase native involvement in broadcasting in northern areas.

Other achievements of the past three years have contributed to the strengthening of our national institutions.

Amendments to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act have provided a new equalization formula and authorized transfers to the provinces of nearly 100 billion dollars over five years for equalization purposes and to help fund post-secondary education and Medicare. The federal government last year paid more than half the total cost of post-secondary education and of insured services under Medicare.

The House of Commons adopted a new experimental set of rules designed to enhance the role of the Member of Parliament and to improve the speed and efficiency of the institution.

A Joint Parliamentary Committee was established to consider options for Senate reform, and a Green Paper examining this issue was published.

Access to Information legislation was adopted to give the public wider access to government documents, and a new Privacy Act was passed with stricter controls on the transmittal of personal information.

The Post Office has been turned into a Crown corporation, and the process of streamlining its operations is well underway.

The Canada Elections Act was amended to shorten to 50 days the period required to hold elections, and to ensure a more equitable financial basis for all candidates.

"O Canada" was officially adopted as our national anthem, and July 1st officially designated as Canada Day.

Pursuing a Vigorous Foreign Policy

The last of the five major commitments made three years ago by the Government was to pursue a vigorous and active foreign policy.

The Government has pledged to fulfill its responsibilities as a member of the North Altantic Treaty Organization by increasing real defence expenditures by at least three percent annually. For the last three fiscal years the real growth of defence expenditures has exceeded that target. The Government has taken steps to acquire new F-18 fighter aircraft, Aurora patrol aircraft, military trucks, tanks, and patrol frigates. An agreement for defence systems testing has been signed with our American allies.

While honouring our international defence commitments, we have continued both publicly and privately to work towards mutual arms limitations and to advance the nuclear suffocation approach first proposed by the Prime Minister in 1978. An Ambassador for Disarmament was appointed. At the 1983 Williamsburg Summit, Canada played a key role in the process leading to the adoption of a declaration on security and arms control by the participating countries. Recently, the Prime Minister launched a new peace initiative intended to improve communication, and hence the prospects for progress on arms control and disarmament.

Canada has undertaken a number of actions to help developing nations. During the 1981 North-South Summit, which the Prime Minister co-chaired, Canada demonstrated leadership in helping to keep North-South lines of communication open in the face of international forces pressing for a retreat into isolationism and protectionism. On a per capita basis, Canada has resettled one of the largest numbers of foreign refugees of any country in the world; more than half of these refugees were government-sponsored. We have progressed towards raising official development assistance to 0.5 percent of Canadian Gross National Product by 1985.

Recently this Parliament approved amendments to the Bretton Woods Act to increase our contribution to the International Monetary Fund.

Canada played an active role with other major industrialized countries in seeking solutions for fundamental economic and political problems, and was pleased in 1981 to be host for the annual Economic Summit.

In particular, we have sought to resolve bilateral issues with our American neighbours. Many efforts were successful—for instance, in the transborder trucking and softwood lumber issues. Amendments to the Clean Air Act were passed which provide automatic Canadian matching of U.S. measures which afford environmental protection to Canada, and a bilateral agreement recently was concluded for a joint study of acid rain.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and current fiscal years.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the first session of the Thirty-Second Parliament.
