A REFLECTION.

HAST thou e'er mark'd within the verdant dale,
The lowly flow'ret's humble drooping head?
Which bows, obsequious, to each passing gale,
And far, unheeded, doth its fragrance shed?

Whose simple beauties doth resplendent shine,
But too concealed from the eye of day;
It blooms unnotic'd by all passing eyes,
Is chok'd by weeds, and quickly feels decay.

Thus 'tis with merit—when a cold disdain
Surrounds the heart—with ev'ry prospect dire,
The smile approving—is the only pain,
Which leaves the man unfriended to expire.

A young lady in England was, a short time past completely recovered from a consumption by drinking tea made of camomile flowers gathered in the morning when the dew was on. The hint was taken from observing a sick dog proceed to the camomile bed each morning and suck the dew.

Is, when evening crowns my talk,
 And my limbs are gaily thrown
 On the hay that's newly mown,
 Or the bank, with flow'rets dress'd,
 Gives me soft delightful rest,
 That upon some neighb'ring spray
 Thou wilt tune a grateful lay,
 To shew thou hast not quite forgot
 Thy guardian, and his humble cot.

APPROACH OF SUMMER.

WITH unskill'd hand of late and feeble string
 I fung the daisy, harbinger of spring ;
 Whole head inclining to the solar ray,
 Greet's the lone traveller on his weary way.
 Then silence reign'd o'er all the wat'ry plain ;

Winter still check'd each little warbler's strain :
 Mute was the grove, and mute the shelter'd vale ;
 No mingled concert floated in the gale.
 But now another scene arrests the sight ;
 The fields look gay, the woods are all delight :
 From every hedge the self-taught songsters cheer,
 With hymns of gratitude the coming year,
 The linnet carols o'er the furze-clad hill ;

The Blackbird's notes the neighbouring valleys fill ;
 Penfive and slow, among the tuneful throng,
 At intervals is heard the wood-doves song ;
 And far above, deep buried in the sky,
 The lark's clear notes come softened from on high :
 While Echo, to her favorite rocks retir'd,
 Repeats the strains by love and joy inspired.—

But when all Nature's sons unite their praise,
 And to the all bounteous God glad pœans raise;
 Shall Man alone neglect his grateful lay?
 O, blest the most, lest ready homage pay?
 Alas! this season of delight and joy,

IX. SEPTEMBER, hath XXX Days, 1807.

The balmy breeze, the music of the grove,
 To them speak death, not scenes of peace and love !
 For now, when Sol reviving nature warms,
 Again all Europe sounds with wars alarms ;
 Again the fields with gleaming armour shine ;
 Again the swains domestic sweets resign :
 Restrain'd alone by winter's stern command,
 Sheath'd was the sword, and stopp'd the murd'rous hand !

Alas! what hapless thousands more may fall,
 At mad Ambition's loud imperious call.
 Once more Britannia's sons o'erspread the plain?
 Once more I see her navy on the main.
 But Heaven avert the war! and grant this Isle
 May yet again with Peace and Plenty smile.

CHEERFULNESS—BY DR. AKINSIDE.

FAIR guardian of domestic life,
 Best banisher of home-bred strife,
 Nor swollen lip, nor taunting eye
 Deform the scene when thou art by:
 No sickening husband damns the hour
 That bound his joys to female power:

No pining Mother weeps the cares
 That parents waste on hopeles heirs :
 Th' officious daughters pleas'd attend ;
 The brother rises to the friend :
 By thee their board with flowers is crown'd,
 By thee with songs their walks resound,
 By thee their sprightly mornings shine,
 And evening-hours in peace decline.
