CHAPTER XIX.

CASTLES IN SPAIN.
"Here are Mr. More and Capt. Morton," said Edna, as the captain, bare-headed and with the sweet smile of devotion and respect, came forward with Edward More on his arm.

"What a charming place it is!" he said, after the usual salutations. "It is a complete paradise, Miss Weston, without the serpent."—That is not so certain, Capt. Morton.—"It is so delightful, so refreshing to one's senses after the dried-up, used-up continental places, to see a fine old English spot like this."
"You have seen so very little of it at present, Capt. Morton," said Aunt Martha. "We were just saying how much we hoped that you would be able to prolong your visit. You will, will you not?"

The captain looked at Edna as he murmured what was evidently only a polite refusal, and Edna, with a faint blush, said in her simple way:
"I hope you will be able to stay, Capt. Morton."
"You are very kind," he said in a low voice, and with a gratified expression. "I was on my way to a friend's in Hampshire, but I am sure he will not blame me for stopping halfway, when he hears what temptations there were to breaking faith with him."

It was just enough to give his acceptance some value, and like a true diplomat he passed lightly on.
"I have been admiring the birds. They are as thick as in the Luxembourg Gardens. You have seen them, of course? No! The workmen who stroll about in the breakfast hour feed the sparrows and blackbirds with pieces of bread; and the birds get so tame that they will fly downward and catch the crumbs as the men throw them in the air. There is a peculiar cry which will draw the birds—"
"Now, really, Capt. Morton!" remonstrated Mrs. Edward, playfully.
"Indeed it is so," said the captain. "Let me prove it to you. May I have some bread?"

A servant brought him a slice from the table, and talking all the while in his frank, pleasant way, the captain collected a handful of crumbs, and smilingly enjoining silence, stepped out on to the lawn, and throwing some of the crumbs into the air, commenced whistling in a peculiar fashion.
The little group watched at the window, all interested, but none more so than Edna—as the captain intended she should be. Presently he stepped softly back, and in a few minutes some sparrows and a robin redbreast came fluttering down from the trees, and having secured a crumb or piece, fled back again; the captain changed his note into one still more persuasive, and presently, to the astonishment of all and the delight of Edna, the sparrows returned, and apparently perfectly assured and fearless, hopped about the captain's very feet.
Then he ceased whistling, flung the few last remaining crumbs into the air, and as the birds, apparently released from their spell, took to their wings, he turned with a smile.
"You may applaud now," he said.
"It is wonderful," said Edna, with girlish delight. "I have often thrown crumbs out to them, but they would never attempt to come down until I had gone in and closed the window. I should like to learn the secret of that piece of sorcery."

"It is very simple," said the captain, modestly. "I learned the trick—it is nothing more—from an old Swiss bird fancier in Basle."
Edna started; they had taken their seats at the breakfast table, and she was sitting with her face to the light, which lit up every feature distinctly. The captain's quick eyes and quick ears caught the little, sharp uplifting of her eyes, and the startled intonation of her low exclamation, but not a muscle of his face moved.

"Yes, in Basle," he repeated, apparently busy with his toast, but really eyeing her closely. "You know it, of course?"
"I—I have been there, yes," said Edna, looking down at her plate.
"Basle, my dear Edna," murmured Aunt Martha, looking over the coffee urn. "Not at Basle! We only passed through it on the train. Don't you remember how often we said that we would go, but that something always prevented us? Mr. Payne planned a kind of excursion one day, but it rained, or something happened to prevent our going. No, you haven't been to Basle, Edna."
Edna sat silent, and the captain took up the thread, looking over his coffee cup as he leaned back in his chair.
"You did not lose much, my dear madam; I was trying to think what your friend—Mr. Payne, didn't you say?—could find to interest him in the place, unless he was an antiquarian, by the way."
Aunt Martha laughed, and appealed to Edna with mild enjoyment.
"No, he certainly was not an antiquarian; but he was an extremely well-bred and agreeable young gentleman, was he not, Edna? So very attentive and good-natured. One of those light-hearted young fellows," she continued, looking over her spectacles at Mrs. Edward with placid good nature, "who seem to carry an atmosphere of cheerfulness and gaiety wherever they go. I remember he used to make me smile to hear him laugh. He was very fond of children, and there was an infant's school near the pension—what was the name—dear me, you remember, Edna."
"I—I have quite forgotten," said Edna, and in so constrained a voice that all eyes—excepting the captain's —were fixed on her.

"The kindergarten school, for quite young children, you know, Capt. Morton. Well, he and Edna used to spend most of their time talking and petting those children—pretty little things they were, and so well-behaved. Why, Edna, I think the first time you saw him he was sitting on the wall playing with the children."
"What an extraordinary man!" laughed Mrs. Edward. "Why, Edna, my dear girl, you have never told us anything about your eccentric acquaintance."
"Have I not?" said Edna, lifting her face with a little wan smile.
"Edna seems to have forgotten him," said Aunt Martha, wadding on, unconsciously stabbing the throbbing heart beside her with each word—ay, and providing the handsome man beside her with a weapon to stab it and overcome it later on? "Quite forgotten him! and really I think it is quite ungrateful of you, my dear, considering how very attentive and thoughtful he was."
"And what became of him?" asked Mrs. Edward.
"Oh!" said Aunt Martha, "let me see. Why, he left us quite suddenly, without saying good-by even. I remember that we all thought it so strange, for he was always so well-bred and considerate and—"
"This room is very hot, aunt," said Edna, looking up, pale and heavy-eyed.
"Do you think so, dear? Perhaps it is—Johnson is so fond of making a great fire. Thank you, Capt. Morton!" for the captain had risen with noiseless alacrity and opened the window.
"Miss Weston is quite right," he said, emphatically, "the room is hot—even I feel it—and I have been used to heat. It is like summer out here, and seems to woo one to bask in it. May I put a chair for you just here, Miss Weston?"
And without waiting for an answer, he carried a light easy-chair outside the window. Edna rose and passed out; he held the door open for her, drew a small table close to her elbow, and unobtrusively placed her coffee upon it.
It was all done with such womanly sympathy, so adroitly shielding her from the observation of the rest, that she felt as if he had stepped before her like a shield; and as she sank into the chair, she could not help raising her eyes gratefully to his.

CHAPTER XX.
MILITARY TACTICS.
CAPT. MORTON had opened his campaign, and the first skirmish was his; it was, so to speak, merely an affair of outpost, but it was important, inasmuch as it established a kind of understanding between Edna and himself. He had, with quick perception and admirable taste, stepped in and shielded her from prying eyes at a moment when weakness threatened to betray her.
I think a woman is more grateful for a delicate service of that sort than if the man who had rendered it had saved her life instead.
Edna was weak that morning, after a restless night, and here was a man who stepped in and saved her from torture, perhaps discovery. Yes, she was grateful, and, after the manner of women—especially of such pure, innocent, unsuspecting women—she relied upon him, unconsciously, to do it again for her. Great and noble creature as Lord Mersey was, he could not thus gain her confidence and reliance; he would not have observed her embarrassment, and if he had, he would not have had the ready wit to protect her. Tact is a great power, and Capt. Morton possessed it in a very large degree.
He went in, finished his breakfast, talking in his lightest and most amusing vein, until he had made the rest almost forget Edna outside, and then he gradually led the conversation to where it had been broken off, and learned of all the particulars of Edna's stay at Lucerne, without Aunt Martha even suspecting that he was curious or anxious to be informed; in fact, she would up with an apology for wearing him with such uninteresting gossip.
Then, when Edward said he would go for a walk to the preserves, and Mrs. Edward murmured something about opening a case that had arrived from her French milliner, the captain begged permission to write a letter, and was conducted by an obsequious footman to the library. This apartment was on a par with the rest of the mansion, lined with books, and elegantly furnished; there were writing materials and tables of the most luxurious kind, and the captain, selecting the most comfortable, sat down and wrote a very short letter.
It was addressed to a certain waiter at the Cafe de l'Europe at Lucerne, who was not only a waiter, but an ex-French spy; and the letter ran thus:
"My Dear Alphonse: A certain young English lady, accompanied by an aunt of the true English type, sojourning at the Pension Petre during the months of July and August last. Their names were Weston. Any information anent them, and a gentleman named Harold Payne, will be gratefully received by the old friend who rescued a certain Alphonse Calvay from the rude hands of a Parisian mob. Send to me here in cipher."
The captain inclosed this in an envelope and secreted it in a small inner pocket against his heart. He took the precaution of removing the sheet of blotting paper which he had used from the pad, and having burned it at a small taper, left the room humming gayly.
Half an hour afterward, Edna, who was still seated in the sunny corner reading, or trying to read, saw the captain approach from the shrubbery. She looked up with a smile, and a slight flush, that rather deepened as he came up beside her.

The latest addition to afternoon toilettes in the velour of broadened "tabris"—a sleeveless garment held together by self ties, long enough to reach below the knee and weighted by fringe.

"Thank you," she murmured; "that is so much nicer."
He said not a word—that would have spoiled it—but with an inclination of the head, which was neither a bow nor a nod, but suggested the deepest gratitude and delight at having pleased her, returned to the room, and immediately turned off all notice from her by gliding into his irresistible flow of talk. But while he talked with an easy and careless grace, he was storing up in his memory the fact that the town of Basle and the name of Payne were distasteful to Edna Weston, and resolving to learn the reason why.

MISSING PRISONERS.
LONDON, Feb. 26. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Capt. Guest said that the number of officers and other ranks officially accepted as war prisoners who had not yet been accounted for by the Germans, is approximately 3,000, including the Imperial and Colonial troops and the navy, but excluding Indians. It was not expected that many were alive. As a result of a recent search in Germany sixteen sick and wounded prisoners were reported, and remained because it was not advisable to move them.

Three medical orderlies were left to attend to them, while their quarters were comfortable and in charge of the Anglo-French medical authorities, American Y.M.C.A., and the Danish Red Cross. There was also a small number of men desirous of remaining in Germany for various reasons.

OVERSEAS BANK.
LONDON, Feb. 26. (Via Reuter's.)—The Times announces that the new overseas bank's capital will amount to about $10,000,000 and be divided into ordinary and preference shares, the former being subscribed by the banks participating in the venture and the latter by the general public. The preference shares, besides ranking preferably with regard to capital and dividend of six per cent, will participate in the scheme, the "Times" points out, represents an entirely new development of British banking enterprises. It will aim at providing additional facilities for the British import and export trade and developing closer working arrangements between the constituent banks, each of which covers a different territory. NOTHING BUT A COLD.

By RUTH CAMERON.

One of the members of our family felt a cold coming on the other day. She didn't feel sick, just a sort of wretched, especially of her nose. Without an hour's delay she went around to the doctor's, who gave her some medicine which so choked off the cold that she had only a day or two left from it.

The German Attitude.

These Britishers are terrible fellows—or so says a German paper, the Breslau Volkswacht. "U-boat heroes" who are eager to go to sea to sink ships and murder sailors and women and children were compelled to stay in port because of the "super-human, almost devilish, machinations" of the British. What a monstrous thing—to a Hun—that anyone should prevent a patriotic German from murdering innocent people for the sake of the "Fatherland." The Breslau Volkswacht is quite overcome at thought of this British interference with the pleasant Hun policy of murder and, especially at remembrance of three submarines which set out to slay and were themselves caught together in a British net and their crews killed.

The Hun mentality is a strange thing. The Breslau Volkswacht makes understanding of it still more difficult. To the German it was a noble thing to set out deliberately upon a policy of outrage and slaughter, but "devilish" to offer opposition to the agents of that policy, a noble thing to be a murderer of the innocent but a dastardly thing to attack and kill the murderer. It is such an attitude that the Breslau paper takes to-day, and it may be taken for granted that the Volkswacht is not altogether out of tune with the German people. The Hun will evidently bear watching for many a day to come. The old spirit remains but Germany will never be decent and worthy of any trust until a new spirit reveals itself in German deeds.—Sydney Record.

Jury Has Case.

MURDER TRIAL CONCLUDED. SYDNEY, Feb. 26.—The case of Francis Andrea, charged with the murder of Guy MacDonald, went to the jury this afternoon. The evidence was all in at noon, and when court adjourned D. D. McKenzie, K. C., was addressing the jury on behalf of the defence. The summary for the prosecution will be heard when court re-assembles this afternoon. The feature of the morning session was the appearance on the stand of Francis Andrea, the accused, who testified on his own behalf denying all guilt and contradicting flimsy features of Crown testimony.

THE SILVER STRIPES.

When we've honored the heroes returning from France And we've mourned for the heroes who fell. When we've done all we can for the home-coming man Who stood to the shot and the shell. Let us all keep in mind those who lingered behind— The thousands who waited to go— The brave and the true, who did all they could do. Yet have only the silver to show. They went from their homes at the summons for men. They drilled in the heat of the sun. They fell into line with a pluck that was fine. Each cheerfully shouldered a gun; They were ready to die, for Old Glory on high. They were eager to meet with the foe; They were just like the rest of our bravest and best. Though they've only the silver to show. Their bodies stayed here, but their spirits were there; And the boys who looked death in the face, had no fear—for they knew, waiting here, There were many to fill up each place. Oh, the ships came and went, till the battle was spent And the tyrant went down with the blow! But he still might have reigned but for those who remained And have only the silver to show. So here's to the soldiers who never saw France, And here's to the boys unafraid! Let us give them their due; they were glorious, too, And it isn't their fault that they stayed. They were eager to share in the sacrifice there; Let them share in the peace that we know. For we know they were brave, by the service they gave, Though they've only the silver to show.

LOOK OUT FOR SUNBURN.

Time was when it was considered fashionable to exert every effort to acquire a leathery coat of tan. This I am glad to note is no longer the ambition of the summer girl. The desire to have a skin glowing with health, but she protects it from sunburn and applies lotions and creams to preserve its velvety softness and transparency. The sunshade is an invaluable protection to a tender skin, and I advise you to carry one of green silk whenever you are exposed to the sun. Never go for a stroll after your swim without your parasol. As an extra precaution, mask the face with cold cream and powder before braving the burning light. This is not as conspicuous as it sounds. Simply rub the face well with cold cream and remove all the superfluous grease with a soft towel. Then dust the face with a harmless face powder, allowing as much to remain on the skin as you can without its being noticeable. Thus protected, the sunlight can do little harm to the skin.

When you go sailing or fishing wear a broadbrimmed hat to protect the face and neck from sunburn, for with the light reflected by the water it is next to impossible to keep from sunburning. In case your skin is burned, immediately apply this cream, whose healing qualities make it indispensable: Paraffin wax, one-fourth ounce; white petroleum, two and a half ounces; lanolin, one ounce; boiled water, one and a half ounces; oil of rose, three drops; alcohol, one-half dram. Apply this freely to the burned skin, and allow it to remain on as long as you can.

Played Leading Part.

In Nurse Cavell Tragedy. Paris, Feb. 14.—French military authorities now hold, on a charge of dealing with the enemy, a man named Krein, who is alleged to have played a leading role in the tragedy in which Miss Edith Cavell, the English nurse, lost her life. A report made on Krein for Judge Advocate Grebaut by police inspector Cholet states that the man was in jail at St. Quentin at the beginning of the war. He was released by the Germans and went to the mansion of Prince and Princess Croy, in Belgium, where he denounced the Prince and Princess as having aided French prisoners of war to escape. As a result the Princess was condemned to ten years imprisonment at hard labor. Krein is said to have then gone to Brussels, where he went into Miss Cavell's hospital service and helped to "work up" the case against her.

Fortunes for Fishermen.

Record Catches and Record Prices.

Fishermen are making up for lost time, and have not only secured some amazing catches, but have beaten all records for earnings. From September up to December 17th last, 500 millions of herrings were landed at Yarmouth. The record for earnings is held by the drifter Elsie, which has taken over £9,000 worth of fish during the season. Lowestoft has done equally well. The record held by her best boat consists of herrings to the value of £10 240. Another boat made £9,800 while three others had about £8,000 apiece. Several fishermen have earned at the rate of over a hundred a month during the three months season, and even the boys have a hundred pounds or more to their credit for this brief period. Pre-War Catches. To give some idea of the present profits of sea fishing, a drifter was bought at Great Yarmouth a few weeks ago for £1,800. She was fitted as a trawler, and during her first voyage of ten days only, brought her new owner the nice little sum of £500. Cod are fetching splendid prices, and are already very plentiful. One day in December last a trawler landed fish—namely, cod—at Aberdeen, which fetched the record price of £3,400. The previous best price was £3,500. It is interesting to compare these catches and prices with those in pre-war days. In 1900 a Moray Firth boat earned £1,000 during the herring season, while a Grimsby trawler took £100 a week for seventeen weeks on end. In August 1911 a Banff vessel, the Wheatheaf, took 130,000 herrings in a night, which sold for £182. A month later, the Hearty, of Lowestoft, beat this record. She struck such a shoal that she had to leave some of her nets to be hauled by another drifter. She brought in 320,000 herrings, which realised £232. This works out at about six fish for a penny.

Household Notes.

See that all the bluing is rinsed out of clothes before putting them in soapy water. There are certain salts in milk which make it indispensable as a body-builder. A few marshmallows stirred into fudge when beating will make it richer and creamier. Put the food for a convalescent child into the oddest and prettiest containers you can find. Sandwiches filled with mince-meat, onions, celery and pimentos have a salad leaf added. Milk and leafy vegetables are more necessary for health than even a perfectly varied diet.

Toast, "Lieut. Pieper, U. S. Navy," proposed by the Chairman.

The speech of the evening was that of Hon. Dr. Robinson in proposing the toast of "Our Heroes," and it will be a loss to the literary archives of the Masonic Club if a copy of the address is not preserved therein.

It was regretted by all that the guest of the evening, Sergt. Ricketts, was suffering from a bad cold, and was practically forbidden by his medical adviser to speak.

On leaving the hall, however, the hero of the hour, in a few well chosen words expressed his thanks for the hospitality and entertainment extended, and was vociferously cheered and applauded.

Following the conclusion of the regular programme, votes of thanks were passed in favor of the performers and also to Mr. F. J. King, who had arranged the musical programme and was the accompanist of the evening.

The gathering broke up at 11 o'clock, with the singing of the National Anthem.

For Merchants & Clerks.

At the illustrated business men's lecture to be given in the Casino next Monday night, Hon. J. Anderson will preside.

Tickets for the lecture can be secured at the Renouf Building, and quite a number of invitations have already been sent out.

By arrangements between Mr. C. F. Bond and the Supts. of Education a lecture will be given in the Casino at 4 o'clock Monday evening, for the benefit of the older pupils in the city.

All should attend.

Albert Edward Branch Entertainment.

The annual tea and entertainment of the Albert Edward Branch of the N. B. S. took place last night, and was one of the most successful in many years.

Tea was served at 8 o'clock, and after full justice had been done the good things provided, the gathering was called to order and addressed by President Carberry, of the Adult Society.

The installation of officers, who were congratulated by Pres. Carberry, then took place as follows:

President—W. R. Boone.

Vice-President—Ron. Noseworthy.

Secretary—Weston Dicks.

Treasurer—John Adey.

Marshal—W. Oakley.

Deputy Marshal—R. Lehr.

Addresses were also delivered by Past President J. M. Lawrence and Secretary R. Dowden.

After the very enjoyable concert, which was held, the programme consisting of songs and recitations by W. Dicks, Chas. Saunders, C. Collymore, S. Martin, G. Newport, W. Boone, W. Hammond, John Noseworthy, J. Parsons and an accordion solo by W. Boone.

Secretary Dicks showed himself a versatile entertainer by giving recitations, readings, songs, and comic debating.

After the programme concluded came a speech by President Boone, and the passing of a vote of thanks to those who provided the refreshments and assisted in any way in making the affair successful.

Mr. J. M. Lawrence paid a tribute to the returned heroes present, namely Pte. C. Daniels, W. Norris and A. Heale, and his remarks were endorsed by Mr. R. Dowden.

During the evening the music was furnished by W. Boone. The affair concluded with the National Anthem.

St. Thomas's Sale.

The sale held by St. Thomas's Women's Association, at Canon Wood Hall, last evening, proved very successful.

There was a large attendance, among those present being Rev. Dr. Jones, Capt. Clayton and Rev. D. Ashford of the Congregational Church.

Very little difficulty was experienced in getting clear of the articles, at the ladies' stalls, and everything had been sold by 6 o'clock.

Teas were served in both the afternoon and night, and afterwards a concert was held, the contributors being Rev. Mr. Moulton, Mrs. Churchhill, Miss Jones, Miss Jean MacDonald and R. G. MacDonald, Miss Ellis and Mr. H. W. Stirling acted as accompanists.

Movie Ship for Icefields.

We are informed that the two-hundred-ton ship which has been advertised here for an ice-pilot to take her to the icefields, is owned and chartered by a well-known moving picture company.

She has been fitted up specially and will photograph a long series of pictures at the icefields this coming voyage.

Capt. Nathan Kean has decided to accept the position of ice-pilot on her.

Some years ago, it will be remembered, a moving photo was taken of the sealing operations, but this never received the publicity it warranted and should have received.

This year, we hope, the pictures taken will be exhibited all the world over, as it needs but some favourable advertising of this nature to attract greater and profitable attention to our country and her unrivalled resources at the icefronts.

The S. S. Thetis.

We had the pleasure this morning to be shown through the engine room of the S. S. Thetis, owned, operated, by one of the officers.

The engine room has been newly painted and presents a very clean, wholesome and up-to-date appearance.

The ship has had a new centrifugal circulating pump and jet injection installed, which will very greatly aid the engines.

With two exceptions the Thetis is the only local ship containing her own electricity generating machine, while in addition she is heated throughout, in crew and officers' quarters by steam.

She has an evaporator capable of making 14 tons of fresh water in 24 hours.

This water is for drinking purposes. A modern Marconi apparatus adds greatly to the value of the Thetis.

Captain W. C. Winsor will command her at the sealing voyage this trip, and that she will return with a bumper load is our hope.

Chief engineer Forbes and his associates are to be complimented on the clean appearance and condition of their department, for rarely do we see the engine rooms of ships so good.

Fishery Reports.

Latest reports from Rose Blanche say fishery prospects are very good in that vicinity.

Last week was a very stormy one, and consequently the fishery was not as good as that of the previous week.

However on Saturday the boats fared well. The fish is most plentiful near the shore, and is filled with small fish something resembling sardines.

None of the schooners have done anything worth while on the banks. About 60 dorps and skiffs are engaged in the shore fishery.

The bait used is frozen herring recently carried there by the S. S. Thetis.

Portia also adds that several whales have been seen about there lately and also states that the price of codliver has dropped to 30 cents per gallon.

Schooner Abandoned.

News was received this morning that the Danish schooner "Abba," Capt. Hansen, from Reykjavik, consigned to T. H. Carter & Co., which was reported off Ferryland some days ago, has been abandoned, and the crew taken off by the S. S. Eagle, and will be brought to St. John's.

The "Abba" left Reykjavik about the 8th January for this port in ballast.

Shipping Notes.

The Gigantic has sailed from Hr. Buffett with 3,540 qts. fish for Lisbon.

The General Smuts has cleared from Marytown with 4,865 qts. of codfish for Lisbon.

The W. T. White has sailed for Lisbon with 3,265 qts. of codfish from St. Jacques.

The Majestic Theatre.

The Telegram reporter was shown through the new Majestic Theatre this morning by Mr. Coady.

We regret greatly our lack of space in today's issue, but to-morrow will publish a full description of this architectural credit to the city.

Bowings' Boats.

S. S. Portia is still harbored at Trepassey.

S. S. Terra Nova, which left here early Wednesday morning, got jammed in the ice just outside the Narrows and is still there, being unable to go ahead or return.

The captain and mate were ashore yesterday coming over the ice which is quite heavy.

S. S. Eagle which picked off the crew of the barge, reported as being caught in the ice, is unreported. We hear that the abandoned vessel was so badly damaged that she had to be fired and sunk.

Reids' Boats.

Ethie leaving Placentia for west on arrival of train to-day.

Glencoe leaving for west on arrival to-day's train.

Kyle left Placentia 3 p.m. Eagle still at Trepassey.

Golden Jubilee.

"Leeming" Lodge, Loyal Orange Association, will celebrate its Golden Jubilee this evening when a banquet with presentation of Jewels, and Honor Roll will take place.

The guests of honour will be Sergt. Ricketts, V. C., and all the soldier and sailor members of the Lodge recently returned from overseas.

An enjoyable time is looked forward to, the Committee having spared no efforts in making the arrangements.

Llewellyn Club Conference.

His Excellency the Governor will lecture to the Llewellyn Club Conference to-night, his subject being, "David the famous Chorister, and some choirs that kill congregations."

Mr. J. W. Withers will also speak. All men are invited.

Damaged Considerably.

The schr. Aviator, which was reported a few days ago as being ashore at St. Lawrence, is still stuck fast but in an upright position while the water ebbs and flows in the ship, thus showing that the bottom of same is considerably damaged.

Parties are engaged in unloading the cargo.

C. C. C. "At Home."

The C. C. C. held a very enjoyable "At Home" in their hall at the King's Beach last evening.

A squad from the Brigade was present as a guard of honor, and during the night a fine entertainment, and dancing was given indulged in by all, the band rendering spirited music.

Men With a Fondness for Good-looking Footwear

Laurier: The Prophetic Imperialist.

(Eighth Premier of Canada, 1896-1911.)

PATRIOT Empire-Building foresaw The wide expanses of our opulent land Grown populous, and forthwith nobly planned A Canada imperial—No law Says that which only lofty minds obey Controlled thy deeds and kept thee unafraid Before thine enemies till thou had'st laid The sane foundations of our crowned way.

What palms from us can do thee honor now. Since Time exalts thy golden prophecy Of our great nationhood that is to be! Lo, Sir, upon thy pure, high vatic brow— Even though they Life's Sun, westerling, declines— The Star of Statesmanship refugent shines! Dr. J. D. Logan, in "Songs of the Makers of Canada."

An Empire Leader.

The warmth of the tributes which have been paid to Sir Wilfred Laurier by the Press of Great Britain and the United States testifies to the place he held as a great world figure. The great newspapers of London and New York unite in signaling the constructive qualities of his statesmanship and his deep-seated loyalty to British ideals. Sir Wilfred Laurier's fame as a Canadian statesman is unchallenged. His renown as an Empire statesman and an international figure is equally secure.

Sir Wilfred Laurier was an Imperialist, in the truest sense of the term. When he first laid down the formula, at a meeting of the Imperial Conference, that the true basis of the British Commonwealth of nations was "local autonomy and Imperial unity," a chorus of protests arose from certain quarters in the Old Country and in Canada, which were seeking to thrust upon the British Commonwealth a system of centralized Imperialist government. But there never was any question in the minds of thoughtful students of constitutional development, that the principle laid down by Sir Wilfred Laurier was not only sound Canadianism but sane Imperialism. His vision on this question, as on many others, has been amply vindicated by time. It has stood the test of a great world-shaking war, and has become a cardinal principle of the British Commonwealth. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the stand which Sir Wilfred Laurier took at the several Imperial Conferences was importantly influential in guiding our Imperial development along the British pathway of ordered freedom, broadened down from precedent to precedent.

At the Imperial Conference he came in contact with General Louis Botha, when the Boer Premier of South Africa first took his seat in the Councils of Imperial statesmen after the consummation of the Union, and it is well known that Botha was greatly influenced by Sir Wilfred's speeches and counsel. The splendid success of self-government in South Africa, where Boer and Briton were brought together in a happy union, is one of the glories of British history. Not a little of that success is to be attributed to the association of Botha with Laurier, who, out of his own rich experience in Canada, was able to give counsel and advice which were particularly helpful to South Africa at the beginning of its self-governing career. — Morning Chronicle.

Women Are Alarm Clocks.

Are women less punctual than men? If we are to believe the jokes constantly being printed about husbands waiting impatiently for their wives to dress for the theater, then of course they are.

But is there, any real truth in this view of the case? Despite all jokes to the contrary, women are ready for the theatre before their husbands, or sweethearts, or brothers in nine cases out of ten.

Most women are keen on getting to the theatre early, before the curtain rises. They like to see and be seen before the lights are turned down.

It is the same as regards the ordinary everyday affairs of life. Who is it gets the husband up in the morning and off to business? Who is it wakes the children, sees to their breakfasts, and gets them off to school punctually to time, morning after morning, winter and summer alike? Who but the woman. She is a regular human alarm clock to her household.

In business, too, it is the women who are at the office on time, and frequently ahead of time, while the men, especially after they have been having what they call a "good time" the night previous frequently turn up late, with no heart in them for real work.

In short, it is the men, not the women, who are the unpunctual sex, notwithstanding all assertions to the contrary.
