I have said enough to start drawing conclusions, the main one being that the federal government cannot give up direct taxation, and income tax in particular, without giving up its whole national defence and social security program. It is inconceivable that the provinces should take over national defence; not only would this be ultra vires, but it would cause chaos and anarchy. Neither is it conceivable that the dominion should give up nor that the provinces should take over the entire responsibility for social security, a responsibility which the federal government assumed at their request; a responsibility which, as I said, cost $1 billion and which would double every provincial budget. Except for Quebec and Ontario, such an arrangement would in no time bring ruin and bankruptcy to all the provinces, even if the income tax were returned to them.

What, then, is the solution? For the moment there can be no other than the status quo, with the compensation provided for under temporary tax rental agreements.

Do the tax rental agreements really infringe upon provincial autonomy? Ever since confederation grants have been paid under the constitution. At first these grants were proportionately higher than they are today, accounting for more than half the provincial revenues. But no one ever complained, nobody ever asked that they be withdrawn; on the contrary, every one of the provinces without exception constantly endeavoured to have them increased. They are hardly justified today in saying, "Stop handing out federal grants and let us levy more taxes". So we may safely say that federal grants do not infringe upon provincial autonomy.

Federal tax rental agreements are voluntary and temporary. No province is under any obligation to sign an agreement, and when it does so it is only for a fixed period of time. Proof that the agreements are beneficial to the provinces may be found in the fact that several of them, when the agreements expired, felt the need to renew them and actually did so. Far from encroaching upon the provincial field, the agreements guarantee and safeguard provincial autonomy.

The fact that the federal parliament levies income tax does not deprive the provinces of their right to do so. But it is easily seen where this would lead. What would happen if 11 governments resorted to the same taxation? Is it not more reasonable, fair and economical to have but one collecting body, which then passes on to the provinces their rightful share on a per capita basis?

From the point of view of distributive justice, Canada's wealth being mainly centred in Ontario and Quebec where the more important corporations have their headquarters, and considering the fact that the other provinces contribute their share to the development of such corporations, that our first allegiance is to Canada and the fact that the prosperity or poverty of one part affects the country as a whole, is it not fair and just to have our income tax centralized and then distributed, as I said, on a per capita basis?

I sincerely believe that the federal-provincial tax agreements can but strengthen our federal system. Such agreements guarantee each provincial government a sound financial basis and full freedom of action, as well as complete autonomy in relation to all matters which, by virtue of our constitution, come within its jurisdiction.

Mr. B. R. Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, in speaking for a few moments concerning Bill No. 442, which is generally referred to as the federal taxation agreement bill, I would like to preface my remarks by quoting from the words of the Minister of Finance as found at page 5990 of Hansard. I would like to read this into the record at this point because I intend to refer to some of the comments that have been made here by the minister. The first quotation is as follows:

> During the past 15 years, with the consent and often at the urging of the provincial governments, the federal government has taken on heavy expenditures, for objectives which have not been considered, traditionally or constitutionally, federal responsibilities. I think particularly of those in the field of social welfare where payments for unemployment insurance, family allowances, old age pensions and assistance and like measures now cost us close to $900 million a year, and this is constantly rising. In addition, we have commitments to the provinces in health, trans-Canada highway, university and vocational grants, among others, that add substantially to our costs.

Further on in the minister's speech he mentioned a program of hospital insurance and said:

> We have further agreed in principle to assume costs in connection with a national health insurance program that could easily total over $180 million in a year. Both these are constitutionally the direct responsibilities of the provinces.

Further on in his address the minister said:

> I think it becomes quite clear that there is a very practical limit to our ability to dispose of our revenue sources and it is our view that this limit has been reached under present circumstances with these proposals at this time.

What I have in mind, Mr. Speaker, is that I think we have lost sight of the point that the federal government in its taxation policy has taken to itself a large portion of taxes, and has not returned sufficient of the moneys collected to the provinces for the particular items the minister has cited as being constitutionally the responsibility of the provinces. One way in which that matter could be settled very easily would be to turn the money back to the provinces and let them deal with it.

I agree in principle that there should be some legislation which would provide fiscal arrangements to equalize payments as between those provinces which have a great deal of natural resources and those provinces which have fewer natural resources. I think that is right in principle and, as a matter of fact, as I recall it the premier of the province of British Columbia reiterated that statement in his presentation to the government on December 14, 1952.

I think it is unfair to deplore the fact that the provinces are making demands on the federal government. The only reason for the provinces making demands on the federal government is because the federal government has already taken the money from the provinces, and they want back more money than they are presently receiving. To put forth the argument that there are provinces asking for help and therefore we have to go out and increase taxation is simply putting the cart before the horse. What we have to face up to is that the federal government collects the money and it is the duty of the provinces, as it were, to try to get back their fair share.

I go along with those who say that we should avoid as much as possible duplication of taxation. I think that is only common sense; but I must say again that I do not agree with the idea that when the federal government collect money they alone have the sovereign right to spend that money. I agree that there have been compensatory payments to the provincial governments, but those governments feel that those payments have not been enough. I think the minister pointed out in his statement that this is true. He said that the federal government have found themselves paying out money and instituting things which are constitutionally the responsibility of the provinces. That being the case then the federal government, rightly or wrongly—I am not arguing the point—have certainly found themselves in the position of holding the purse strings while the provinces find themselves in the position that they must come to ask for assistance because the money has been taken from them.

Some reference was made by the minister to the responsibility of the federal government as a unifying force. Referring to the federal and provincial governments the minister said, as reported at page 5987 of Hansard of July 16:

> Each has its own assigned responsibilities, but it is the federal government that must provide the unifying force that makes a nation out of what would otherwise be a confederacy of the loosest sort.

The question which arises in my mind is how good a job has this government been doing, when we find across Canada echoes of discontent in the matter of provincial-federal relations. If this government is going to provide that unifying force there must certainly be ultimate co-operation on the part of the federal authority. Every means must be taken to get the provinces to come and work out something which will be mutually satisfactory to all concerned. I do not for a moment consider that Bill No. 442 is going to help in creating that unifying force in Canada. The reason I say that is that Bill No. 442 seems to be a mould into which this government expects the provincial governments to fit. If that sort of thing is considered by this government to be a unifying force, then I cannot agree with it.

Where is the financial policy of this government going to lead us in the field of social services? As I said before, I am not arguing the point as to whether the federal government should or should not be in that field. The thing that is important is the fact that the federal government's financial policy has led to a 47 per cent loss in the purchasing power of recipients of social assistance, and this is also true of pensioners and those who invested money years ago in annuities. It is my opinion that the present thinking in Canada is that it is the responsibility of the federal government to bring those who have been thus adversely affected by federal financial policy to a position where they will have the same purchasing power they had ten years ago. That would mean that all recipients of social assistance, all pensioners and those living on annuities would have their particular funds brought up by 47 per cent.

Of course the first thing we will hear echoing across the country is that that would be inflation. I do not agree that that is necessarily so. In the first place, such an increase of purchasing power could be distributed to those people by the creation of money by the Bank of Canada, just as the ordinary banks create money needed for lending to industry or for other purposes. If this money were created by the Bank of Canada for the government it should be spent into circulation by increased payments to recipients of social assistance and those who are on pensions and annuities.

The money so created and issued to the government and sent into circulation in that manner would find its way as cash payments to the retailer, which would be reflected into the business of the wholesaler and the manufacturer. In many cases the manufacturer would then be able to pay off a certain percentage of his bank loan and having done so, the money would go out of existence at that point. Any time a person pays off a bank loan that amount of money goes out of existence and reduces the over-all money supply of the nation by that amount, just as borrowing money from the bank increases the money supply.

I submit that there is no reasonable ground to believe that this is going to cause inflation. What it does mean is that these people who to my mind are the responsibility of the national government in this respect, because it is the national government that has control of monetary and financial policies in this country, would have their purchasing power brought up to where it was ten years ago. If the financial policies of this government have robbed our people of 47 per cent of their purchasing power it should be the duty of the government to bring back the purchasing power of those people to where it was ten years ago. Not only is it a moral obligation, it is the duty of the government so to do.

Let us suppose it is fair to say that higher prices are caused by the demands of people in the lower income brackets and are not caused by there being a greater demand than supply. As I have looked over the picture in Canada and studied it I am convinced, whether or not any other hon. member is or is not convinced, that it is not the matter of supply and demand that regulates the prices of commodities today, it is the cost of the article that is produced which regulates the price and therefore affects the purchasing power of the people and the taxation which will follow in its wake.

If that is true, then placing increased purchasing power in the hands of the wage earner, which is the only way they can increase their purchasing power, is bound to push up prices. If it does push up prices then we are going to find ourselves faced with increased credit buying. Credit buying in this country—or consumer credit, as it is called—has reached an all-time high. If I might quote a prominent banker, I would say it is a dangerous situation in the nation today. That being so, our job must be to supply the purchasing power to these recipients of social assistance and bring them up to a reasonable standard of living. I pointed out how this could be done, and I feel that it is our responsibility to look at the situation realistically. I mentioned a few moments ago that this purchasing power in the business cycle would tend to reduce the amount of credit buying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member because this debate has, I know, covered a very wide field over federal-provincial fiscal matters, but I am sorry that I am one who is finding it a little difficult to connect the hon. member's line of thought with the federal-provincial tax agreements which are the subject of the bill. I am going to ask him if he will please make that connection so that I and the rest of the house may follow it.

Mr. Leboe: I shall do the best I can, Mr. Speaker. Though not an expert, I certainly will do all I can to co-operate with you in that regard. If I could be allowed a moment to explain what I was trying to do, it was to show where the government could get some money without getting it out of the taxation field at this time, by monetization which would reduce taxation and cause benefits to both federal and provincial governments, thereby making the agreements between the federal government and provincial government much easier to reach.

If I have associated my remarks with the agreement in that respect I shall give you the idea at least of what I was trying to get at.

It follows also that such a policy would mean that the people would be able to participate to a greater degree in the development of their own country. When we speak about the development of our own country we are certainly talking about the tax field.

If I may be permitted, I suggest that a courageous provincial government that is stepping out in the development of its natural resources is certainly going to make a more favourable tax field in which the federal government is going to participate. Such a government that is stepping out and creating a favourable tax field would certainly cause a financial vacuum to appear in that field, and a financial vacuum appearing in the field would have to be filled.

If our tax structure, either at the provincial or federal level, is such that there are no Canadian savings brought about, we are going to find that far more foreign capital from the United States, France, Great Britain and other places is going to come into the provinces to fill that vacuum. One of the things that stands behind the anxiety of the provincial government over the development of its natural resources is the fact that salaries and wages will not release enough money to buy back the thing that is produced. That being so, extra dollars that are added to the money supply of Canada from outside investment certainly supplement the purchasing power of individuals within that province enabling the people to consume 100 per cent of its production and thereby be in a better position as well to pay the taxes, municipal, provincial or federal, that are levied upon those individuals.

On the matter of development, the Monetary Times for the month of July, 1956, has a special report on British Columbia, and I should like to quote very briefly from this magazine:

> British Columbia smashed business and industrial records right and left in 1955—and will do it again in 1956.
> That's the economic picture in the province that claims the fastest growth in Canada; the forward-striding giant of the west which looks on today's record expansion as a mere stepping stone to future greatness . . .
> Production records tumbled like ninepins in 1955; capital flowed into B.C. from the rest of Canada, from the United States and Europe.

This certainly creates a more favourable tax field for both the provincial government and the federal government, but with this development come many responsibilities. Some of them have been mentioned here today, and I shall run over them briefly:

education, roads, highways, bridges, social services, municipal aid and debt reduction. Those are the responsibilities, and it is not my purpose here to go into them in great detail and quote vast amounts of figures and statistics. All our departments, whether provincial or federal, have access to reams and reams of statistics which have been used in judging what is best to be done in their particular fields.

I just want to mention one reference, in closing, to the statement that has been kicked around in this house for some time with regard to a strong central government. To my mind the emphasis on the word "strong" has been put in the wrong place. The emphasis by the statesmen in the past regarding a strong central government has not been, as I see it, on their ability to collect taxes, their ability to give orders and their ability to do other things of that nature, but I think that their meaning of a strong central government is one that is strong in character and strong in justice.

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): We in the official opposition are not in favour of the present proposal to return to the provinces something in the neighbourhood of $653 million. It just is not enough. We feel that the federal government is approaching the whole question of federal-provincial agreements in an improper frame of mind. It is obvious that the Minister of Finance feels that anything returned to the provinces is a cost to the federal purse. That is not so, as the provinces have as much right in the field of direct taxation as has the central power.

In actual fact the federal treasury should have been returning more funds to the provinces over the past several years. It then would have been possible for the provinces to undertake more of those projects which are their responsibility and expand greatly such things as highway construction, educational facilities, and hospitalization. Whilst provincial aid to municipalities has multiplied over the past 10 years or so, such aid could have been greater, and municipalities need not have become as financially hard-pressed as they are today.

Earlier today the hon. member for Eglinton dealt with the over-all picture in Canada as related to these proposed agreements. The hon. member for Quebec West dealt with how they would affect his province. I propose to get down to the very grass roots level of these agreements and how they will affect such level. I propose to support my argument by reference to some startling statistics concerning my home city of Stratford. What has happened in Stratford has happened in varying degrees in practically every other municipality in Canada.

In 1945 the school tax rate was 11·6 mills. In 1955 it was 26·2 mills, an increase of 14·6 mills in the 10-year period or approximately 126 per cent. In 1945 all other taxes were at a rate of 27 mills. In 1955 they were at a rate of 44·5 mills, an increase of 17·5 mills or almost 65 per cent. There has been an over-all tax rate increase in that 10-year period of 32·1 mills, to a rate for 1955 of 70·7 mills. This represents an increase of something over 83 per cent. May I also point out that there is a further increase of 4 mills in 1956, bringing the current year's total rate to 74·7 mills.

I should like to illustrate just what this means in dollars. In 1945 the total tax levy was $563,000. In 1955 it was $1,335,000, an increase of $771,900. In other words the citizens of Stratford paid over 137 per cent more actual taxes in 1955 than they did in 1945.

Let me say a word concerning the actual financial assistance received by the city of Stratford from the province of Ontario during this period. In 1945 the amount was $85,554 and it was earmarked for educational purposes only. I do not have the figures at hand for 1955 but the total to be received in 1956 is $288,832. As the amount received for welfare from the province is not at the moment available for the year 1945, I am going to deduct the amount to be received in 1956 from the above mentioned figure of $288,000 odd so it will be comparable, and by so doing I arrive at a provincial rebate this year of $273,232. This is an increase in eleven years of $187,678. In that period the provincial payments to Stratford have more than trebled. It is an increase of more than 210 per cent.

A moment ago I mentioned that the 1956 over-all tax levy is 74·7 mills. To meet the same commitments the city would of necessity have to have a rate of practically 90 mills this year if it were not for the provincial help I have mentioned. At this point I should like to congratulate the mayor, the members of the city council, the industrial commission and the chamber of commerce, who have all worked together so co-operatively in an endeavour to bring industry to Stratford, and how this affects Stratford is also of importance. It has assisted in increasing the over-all assessment of the municipality by something in the neighbourhood of 33 per cent during the last ten years. In that 10-year period the population has increased by slightly over 14 per cent. There have, however, been the costs involved in providing facilities for these new industries and citizens. Let me stress the fact that an increase of population of about 14 per cent must mean the raising of more dollars to the extent of more than 137 per cent, despite help being received from the province of Ontario which is greater by 210 per cent than ten years ago.

The net debenture debt of my home city has increased from $479,152 at the end of 1944 to $1,866,547 at the end of 1955. In other words, more money is owing on debentures by well over 200 per cent than was owing 11 years ago. On top of all this Stratford is faced with the immediate consideration of capital expenditures totalling something in the neighbourhood of $1¾ million for a collegiate institute addition, sewer farm extension, storm sewers and local improvements not yet financed. Stratford has grown. There are more industries and there is a larger population, but who reaps the tax benefits? The federal treasury. Who pays the costs of that growth? The city of Stratford.

My home town, Mr. Speaker, is no different from hundreds of municipalities across Canada. These municipalities are the responsibility of the provinces, to which they must look for assistance. If the provinces in turn are going to do their part in the distribution of the tax dollar, they must receive a more practical share of the total taxes received by the federal authority.

Let us take a quick look at what has happened to our taxing picture over the last several years. In 1930 the federal taxing authority took 40·5 per cent of our tax dollar. In 1951 they took 70·9 per cent. That is an increase of 30·4 per cent of each tax dollar. The provincial take in 1951 was 17·2 per cent compared with 20·2 per cent in 1930, and the municipalities received 11·9 per cent in 1951 compared with 39·3 per cent in 1930.

Let us face facts. The municipalities are receiving less than one-third of the portion of the tax dollar that they received in 1930, but their obligations have increased tremendously in proportion. They, the municipalities, must receive more assistance from the provinces. The provinces must be in a position to fulfil their obligations, and to make this possible the federal government must make a more equitable deal with the provinces in these present agreements.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we heard some quotations from the past, in fact quotations which go back into an era very different from that in which we are living today. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Sinclair) found some satisfaction in statements made in 1935 and 1938, which laid a certain amount of emphasis on centralization, the policy which was adopted and which has been practised by this government since 1942 at the latest. In fact it was this government which instituted the Rowell-Sirois commission from which the ideas which are now prevalent in our federal system had their main source.

I do not think we should accept statements of a vintage which preceded the report of that commission as expressing the present views of the people who made them at that time. There are many more current observations on this problem which is before the house. I should like to bring the house up to date at least to post-war comments on what has been happening in our federal system.

The earliest and most extensive conference after the war, when an effort was made to sort out the problems which had arisen as a result of the centralization of the war, was the conference of 1945-46. That was quite an extensive and extended conference, at which there was ample opportunity for the statesmen of this country to express their views on the fiscal relationship between the provinces and the central government and to try to point the direction which should be taken in the years that lay ahead.

It was clear that the country was moving out of a wartime era into one of peace. The conference was named by Mr. King a conference on reconstruction, and it was a conference on reconstruction. Its purpose was to try to chart a course by which some of the effects of the concentration of authority in Ottawa during the war could be sorted out effectively and to the satisfaction of the different governments of Canada.

I should like to remind the house of the view that was expressed on that occasion by one of the maritime premiers, namely Hon. Mr. MacMillan who represented the province of Nova Scotia. On August 7, 1945, as found at page 127 of the report of that conference, he read a report which was presented to the federal authorities as expressing the view of the province of Nova Scotia. It was a report compiled by Dr. Dawson, and was in these terms:

> The province along with all other provinces had been manoeuvred by war exigencies into a position where it will be extremely difficult to resist future dominion demands for extensions of power. The relinguishment of a large part of the provincial taxing power through the dominion-provincial agreements of 1942 and constitutionally valid but temporary wartime powers assumed by the dominion have given the federal government a whip hand which it apparently does not intend to give up readily. It is, however, the dominion's power to levy unlimited taxes in all fields that is the big club that can be held over provincial heads. If, for example, the dominion should persist in imposing an initial 30 per cent income tax, should increase its existing rate of succession duties and should retain a heavy corporation tax, it could render almost completely nugatory the provincial power to impose those direct taxes which are essential to solvency. For any provincial tax imposed in addition to these onerous dominion levies would impose an intolerable burden on the taxpayers of the province. The province in short has lost its bargaining power. It might, it is true, have lost it without the war, but in ordinary times no dominion government would have had the temerity to dictate the proposals contained in the agreement of 1942 without giving more in return and without a long period of negotiation and bargaining.

That is a fairly forthright statement by one of the Atlantic provinces presented in 1945, when the pattern was being set.

Mr. Harris: Do you agree with that?

Mr. Michener: I think there is a good deal of substance in it.

Mr. Harris: Yes; but you do not agree with it.

Mr. Michener: In my earlier remarks at the resolution stage I advised the minister of my views, namely that I felt this process of centralization for the purpose of maintaining a high level of employment, as he himself puts it, had been carried too far in justification of the retention by this government of the authority which developed during the war. I do not believe anyone today would suggest that we go back to the conditions of 1935, 1937, 1938 and 1939 and the pre-war operation of our fiscal system. But that is a very different thing from saying that one disagrees with the complaints of those provinces who feel that they have been improperly held out of rights which are theirs constitutionally, without a corresponding relief from obligation.

Mr. Speaker, the crux of the matter is the relief of the provincies from obligation. The Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Finance have made a great point of the provincial responsibilities which have been assumed; and we must recognize the fact that the federal authority now pays for many things which were formerly at least responsibilities of the provincial authorities, whether or not they had ever gone very far in dealing with those responsibilities. The family allowance is an early example of that. On its own initiative, without the concurrence of the provinces, the federal government undertook to distribute throughout the country revenues which it raised under the powers it got during the war. Obviously that procedure has had some effect on the responsibilities of the provinces. Then you come along—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. It being six o'clock I do leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Michener: When we rose, Mr. Speaker, I was speaking about the federal government's expenditures in the field of provincial jurisdiction. I had been reminding the house that the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Finance make a considerable point of the amount of money the federal government is spending annually for the benefit of the people in the provinces, and to some extent in the discharge of provincial responsibilities. A figure of $900 million was mentioned as the sum total of a variety of social welfare expenditures which are said to come in this category.

I think it is well to place beside this statement the figures for tax collections by the federal government in the three fields of direct taxation, that is the personal income tax, corporation income tax and succession duties. Those are the three fields of taxation which the federal government has enjoyed almost exclusively and which have become a great source of the additional revenues which are now focused in Ottawa, as contrasted with the period before the war when there was little money raised in these tax fields.

I have the figures for 1954. They are not the latest, but will illustrate the amounts which these three taxes bring into the federal coffers. In 1954 the personal income tax brought in $1,284 million. The corporation income tax was very little short of that; it was over $1 billion. The succession duties, the third of these direct taxes, brought in over $73 million; at least that was the federal tax, I think, before the allowance for the provinces that have concurrent taxes in the estate duties field. The total of these three taxes was $2,418 million or about five times the total revenues and expenditures of the federal government in 1939. It is at least over four times the total amount that was received in Ottawa and spent by the federal government in that year. This $2·4 billion from these three fields of taxation shows the expansive power of these taxes in a growing economy. It is these taxes which are the subject of this bill.

It is the problem of sharing these taxes with the provinces which we are debating, and the method of doing it. I am not going to discuss the formula which has been devised, but I would accept the proposition which the Minister of Fisheries gave, I think in error, that the provinces should have a 20 per cent abatement in the income tax field.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said 20 per cent of the tax.

Mr. Michener: A 20 per cent abatement.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, he said 20 per cent of the tax.

Mr. Michener: I understand the formula.

Mr. Pickersgill: The formula is 9 percentage points which is equal to 20 per cent of the tax.

Mr. Michener: If all of them are stated on the same basis it is not as confusing as it was this afternoon. That is the amount of money that is involved, approximately $2·5 billion. I daresay it will be more than that this year. If one accepts the proposition, which is a legal one, that these fields are really the joint property of the two levels of government, then one can only say that in the absence of agreement, equality is the rule. If both levels of government were today taxing at the rate which brings in this return to the federal government, there is something over $1,200 million which represents the provincial 50 per cent of that tax yield. That is a very substantial sum of money, and one which I think shocks the Minister of Finance when it is called the provincial share of the yield because what the provinces get is substantially less than that.

Mr. Harris: Because they never shared the tax.

Mr. Michener: Neither did the federal government; neither government occupied this field. I am trying to show that this is entirely new revenue that has been developed during and since the war as a result of our expanding economy, and the provinces have been excluded from this field except to the extent of the tax rental agreements or to the extent they choose to tax on their own.

If you add up the amount of money which is being paid to the provinces under the tax rental agreements, which is a total of $350 million for the current year, and the amount which is being paid out by the federal government and for which it is taking great credit in those fields of provincial jurisdiction, some $900 million, you arrive at $1,200 million, which is still only 50 per cent of the amount of money the federal government is receiving from these taxes which, as I say, are properly, on any legal basis of construction of the constitution, the joint preserves of the provincial and federal governments. That is the result, even crediting the dominion with the payment of this $900 million for the benefit of the provinces, and crediting them with that full payment even though it has been a unilateral transaction in many cases because the federal government has decided that these payments shall be made and the provinces have been the beneficiaries without, in some cases, having been consulted.

The items making up the $900 million are well known. They are family allowances, $383 million; old age assistance, $91·4 million; blind persons pensions and allowances, $3 million; general health grants, $33·7 million; other grants, $29 million, making a total of $540·7 million. Then on top of that you have the old age security payments which are not shown on the balance sheet because they are supposed to be financed out of separate taxation. This will amount to $367 million in the current fiscal year, making a total of $908 million.

I think in order to maintain any sense of proportion in considering the position of the provinces, one has to set off those figures of tax collection against the claims of the federal government that by this $900 million they are lightening the load of the province. Looking at the problem from that point of view, if the provinces are content to credit the federal government with $900 million paid on their account; if they feel that is the best way that tax money could be expended in the meeting of their responsibilities, then all right. But that is not the proposition with which we are confronted. The provinces have had these payments made by the federal government and have, it is true, received advantage from them, but these have not been made under any comprehensive scheme of adjustment of responsibilities and of revenues.

The minister himself has laid down as one of the three principles by which he is activated in trying to arrive at a fair disposition of this matter, the proposition that the provincial revenues should be commensurate with their responsibilities. There are two sides to the equation. There are responsibilities and there are revenues. It is a question of whether the provinces would prefer to have these revenues or to have the dominion government collect and spend them in the interests of the provinces in the discharge of their duties.

I recall that the other day I said that one of the provincial premiers of the same political persuasion as the Minister of Finance, Mr. Hicks, in dealing with this problem in a speech in Toronto before the Canadian Club, said that these fields of provincial responsibility, which are being dealt with in a way by these large payments made from the federal treasury, have been transferred to Ottawa unwittingly and without the decision of the governments concerned or the decision of the people, and this did not seem to be a fair way of modifying our federal constitution.

Those figures might be supplemented, I think, with some other reflections on the sources of federal revenues. I have a table here which shows the amount of money collected in the year 1955 from each of these three direct taxes from the various provinces of Canada, and as I am speaking to this matter largely as the representative of an Ontario constituency, I think it is proper to put on the record the amount of tax that comes from that province in these three fields.

In 1955 the individual income tax paid by people in Ontario was $633 million out of a total collection of $1,284 million, roughly 50 per cent of the total income tax collection in the whole of Canada. The same thing is true in the corporation profit tax field. The collection from corporations was $512 million from the province of Ontario out of a total of $1,060 million, again just short of half. In the succession duty tax field the collection in Ontario was $34,366,000 out of a total of $73,944,000.

I do not propose to pursue that except to show, as I will presently, that the federal government is enjoying great revenues because of the industrial expansion and activity which this country has experienced in the post-war years, and that generated by those activities there is a corresponding need on the part of the provinces to provide the services.

If all these direct taxes collected in Ontario were added together they would be in excess of $1,100 million and if one placed against that total the amount of the federal payment to Ontario under the 1952 tax agreements one would find it is a small and pitiable amount in comparison. The minister will know the amount, but I think the current year's payment to Ontario is in the neighbourhood of $163 million. That is about 14 per cent of the yield of those three taxes in that one province.

There is one other set of figures which I ask the house to permit me to give, though figures are not usually very interesting, and that is a comparison of the federal grants, or payments as I prefer to call them, under the tax agreement to the province of Ontario, with the payments the province has had to make to its municipalities to maintain their solvency without excessive taxation of the citizens of those municipalities.

I will give you first the federal payment to Ontario under the 1952 agreement. They begin in the fiscal year 1952-53 at a sum of $123 million. For the current year 1956-57 there is shown a payment of $151 million. I believe I said it was $163 million but actually $151,700,000 is the estimated payment to Ontario this year. That is an increase of 23 per cent over the period of five years which the agreement covers. I tried to give figures on this when I spoke on the resolution, but I have them documented a little more carefully now. The grants of all kinds which the province of Ontario made to its municipalities in 1952-53 represented a total of $97,665,000. I call the attention of one of the hon. members from the province of Alberta to this figure, because he challenged any other province to match the grants which the province of Alberta has been making to its municipalities. In 1952-53 the sum of $97,665,000 was paid by the province of Ontario to the municipalities.

I would like to recall to the house that that is very largely the result of the foresight of the present Leader of the Opposition, who instituted grants of that kind for educational purposes in 1943. The necessity for them has been substantiated throughout the years, and these educational grants comprise a very large part of these payments from the provincial treasury to the municipalities of Ontario.

In the course of the five-year period the $97,665,000 rose to $184,700,000 for this current year, 1956-57. That is almost double—in fact it is 97 per cent more—as compared to the 23 per cent increase in the same period which the province received under its arrangements with the federal government.

I was referring, Mr. Speaker, to some quotations which are more recent than those which the Minister of Fisheries was able to find. Apparently he has not received any books in his library since 1939 or 1940, but there are the proceedings of the conference held in 1945-46 at which a good deal was said about this principle of grants as a solution to the relationship between the central government and the provincial governments. I presented Mr. MacMillan's statements on the subject, and I would like now to refer to a statement or two made by the present Leader of the Opposition who attended that conference as the premier of Ontario. Mr. Drew at page 14 of the proceedings of April 29, 1946, said this:

> There is no question of generosity on the part of the dominion government or lack of generosity. There is no question of selfishness on the part of the provinces or of lack of selfishness. What we are discussing here is the allocation of taxes paid by the same taxpayers across Canada. What we are seeking is a procedure by which these combined taxes may be channelled into the most effective courses to the advantage of all the people who live in the nine provinces.

That is still the problem today. It is not a question of centralization or not; it is a question of allocation for the benefit of the people of Canada in their two capacities as taxpayers and recipients of the services of the federal and provincial governments.

At page 21 Mr. Drew said:

> The whole system of subsidies is wrong and should be brought to an end just as soon as a complete and exhaustive analysis of our tax structure can be carried out for the purpose of establishing a new tax structure in Canada.

He went on to quote a learned authority on public finance, Professor Jensen, who said:

> Subsidies here defined as transfers from the central to the intermediate or local governments merely as devices for balancing intermediate and local budgets in normal times should not be tolerated and as devices for aiding the latter in emergencies they should be scrutinized with the utmost care. They tend to weaken the responsibility of the receiving governments by making them clamorous beggars at the door of the federal government.

Then follows quotations which have been heard in this house at least once, from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, on the same subject. Mr. Drew at page 22 said:

> All Canadians must face the very dangerous theory inherent in all this and now affecting huge sums of taxpayers' money, namely, that one government in Ottawa should collect money without any definite limit and hand it over to governments which can spend it without the responsibility of collecting it, without answering directly to the taxpayers who provide it.

In case some hon. members may say this is an indication that the Leader of the Opposition or this party is against subsidies in any form, I will say now we do not take that position. We recognize the principle of the equalization grants which have appeared under various names such as fiscal need grants and national adjustment grants, as they were called in the proposal which the Ontario government made in 1945. The Leader of the Opposition made it clear that he recognized that this was an essential factor of our federal system, due to geographical and other conditions of inequality, when he said:

> Before closing these remarks it perhaps should be said again in this open conference that the Ontario government has at all times expressed its belief in the principle of fiscal aid to those provinces which from time to time require special financial assistance and that Ontario which proposed the setting up of a national adjustment fund for that purpose keeps that proposal before this conference.

That position was made abundantly clear when the Leader of the Opposition spoke here a week ago Monday during the resolution stage.

I should like now to refer to the background of Ontario's need for revenue of its own in these fields. I am using some figures which when I saw them struck me as being most forceful, and which were prepared by the deputy minister of economics for Ontario. These were used in an address to the Empire club in Toronto in April of this year. Dealing with the growth of the population in Ontario he said:

> While our population has increased 43 per cent since 1939, our output of primary iron and steel, motor vehicles, electric power and dwelling units has trebled.

Referring to agriculture he said:

> Agriculture, with a fifth fewer farmers and a fourth smaller labour force, has increased its manpower productivity by 75 per cent and output by 28 per cent.

That is a very remarkable achievement in production.

Then speaking of population he gave what to me were striking figures, although I knew that the bulk of immigration had settled in the industrial provinces. Referring to the growth of population in Ontario he said:

> In recent years it has been increasing at an annual rate of nearly 150,000. This growth of nearly 3 per cent annually, which is nearly double the annual rate of increase in the United States and exceeds that of the rest of Canada, stems, of course, from two main forces—our natural increase and immigration. The immigration to this province from foreign countries has been at an extraordinarily high level since the end of world war II. In the past decade, 636,000 immigrants, 52 per cent of all those coming to Canada, have settled in Ontario, bringing new trades and skills, their capital and their savings.

That created the responsibilities which have been mentioned here and which devolved upon the municipalities. The natural rate of increase in the province was 94,000, that is the excess of births over deaths, which is a very remarkable figure. The birth rate which has increased substantially has apparently reached a plateau and is continuing at that high level. The normal family although it is not what it used to be in the days of my youth, seven, eight or nine children, but is now three, four or five children, is larger than it was immediately before world war II.

On this basis Ontario in the next five years will have 700,000 more people, and it is expected that the population of the province will be 6 million by 1961 and 8·2 million by 1975. That is really a remarkable figure when one realizes that no one would have dared to predict a population of 5 million for Ontario by 1965 just a few short years ago. All this of course brings responsibilities. The rise in number of births means that there is a larger proportion of younger people in the population. Today there are one million people in the elementary schools of Ontario, and it is estimated that in 10 years three-quarters of a million more will have to be provided for. That is an increase equal to three-quarters as many as there are now, in the short space of 10 years.

Then there is the problem created by the need for skilled and technical workers in all fields. The serious shortage of engineers and technicians has received considerable attention, but there is also a shortage of physicians, physicists, chemists, accountants and virtually all professional classes, even economics. There is a desperate shortage of dentists. This is a condition for which there appears to be no immediate remedy. I think the people of this province and of this country must be prepared for a shortage of highly skilled workers during the next quarter of a century.

I see my time is running out, but I should like to say a word about capital investment in the province. In the last 16 years nearly $19 billion has been invested in the province of Ontario, and very little of that was due to the efforts of the government in Ottawa. There are only two items in the list of factories, machinery and equipment, commercial buildings, housing, utilities, schools, highways, roads, hospitals, waterworks, sewage and similar undertakings to which the federal government has made any contribution. I refer to housing, where loans have been made, and to highways, where there has been some contribution to the trans-Canada highway. In the case of hospitals there have been some grants in aid made jointly with the province.

I have here the figures of the expenditures in some of these major fields such as education, the provision of highways, the provision of sewage systems and other services for the industrial parts of the country during the next 10 years. These will run to a total of something like $8 billion. That is a lot of money for a province which has no great tax field, which has only a certain amount of leeway, which is living in a sense within the confines of a strait-jacket or in a suit which is too small for its present size. That is a problem which this house has to deal with in considering what kind of agreement should be made between the federal government and the provinces, none of which are satisfied at this stage.

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I believe it will be a matter of general regret in this house and perhaps elsewhere that this bill is brought before the house when we are coming close to the end of the session. The great importance of this matter has been emphasized by various hon. members. We are now discussing the question of dominion-provincial relations generally and tax agreements in particular, which have to do with the whole national economy and the survival of the nation as a whole. Had the bill been brought in earlier and submitted to a standing committee after second reading it is quite possible that we might have had the advantage of the experience and knowledge of experts in the field of dominion-provincial relations, who could have offered some sound advice. However, now that we are faced with the question I should like to draw attention to one or two principles which have not been emphasized too strongly up to this point.

Before doing so I should like to refer to something said this afternoon by the Minister of Fisheries when he made his contribution to this debate. The main theme of his contribution seemed to be the claim that this measure should be considered as satisfactory because it was rather generous, because it represented an increase of approximately $115 million over the previous arrangement on the part of the federal treasury, or about a 20 per cent increase. It was on that theme that the minister built up his argument.

Those of us who regard this problem as serious, as a nation-wide problem and certainly not one that should be used as a political hot potato to be chased around, rather deplore that sort of approach by one of the ministers of the government. Had it come from one of the private members supporting the government one could put it down as a member arguing the case for the party he supports; but coming from a cabinet minister, placing it on the level that the government is being very generous and that the opposition members really have nothing to complain about because what is being offered now represents $115 million more than what was offered under previous arrangements, is putting it on a very narrow basis.

In my view the real question is not whether this offer represents a larger amount, either in dollars or in percentages, as compared with what was offered in previous years. The real question is whether this bill is going to be effective in bringing about a solution of the problem that has been before this parliament and this nation for over 25 years, the problem of finding a means of sharing the available revenues in the most equitable, efficient and sensible manner among various levels of government. It is not a question of whether this represents an increase of $115 million or 20 per cent; it is a question of whether the revenues that are available, whatever the figure may be, can be so arranged as between the provincial governments and the federal government—and, of course, including the municipalities—so that the people of Canada, who are after all citizens of the same nation whether they live in one province or another, will feel that their tax dollar is being as efficiently and sensibly used as possible in the various fields.

I think we would be further ahead if we approached it from the point of view of each one placing himself in the position of the taxpayer of this country, not as a Manitoban or an Albertan or a Torontonian but as a citizen of Canada, and asking ourselves this question: "When I part with my tax dollar, how do I want it spent, and how do I think is the most efficient and productive way in which that money can be spent?" If we can answer that question to the satisfaction of the taxpayer of this country, regardless of whether he lives in one part of the country or another, I am sure he will feel that we are approaching this matter from a national point of view.

Of course the Minister of Fisheries, in making his speech, used part of it to welcome a newcomer to his party. I could not pass that up, because it was a rather unusual situation that I have not previously witnessed in this house, as a good many have not. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre made his speech this afternoon, which certainly cannot be characterized as a maiden speech—he made that some time ago—but, considering that we were witnessing the first speech of a new Liberal, we shall have to call it a maternity speech. I hope he is successful in convincing his constituents—

An hon. Member: Don't worry about him. Start worrying about yourself.

Mr. Zaplitny: —that the party on the basis of opposition to which he was elected three times has suddenly changed so much that he has been put into the position of having to defend that party and the government. However, I leave that to him.

The problem that is before the country today, and has been before it for about 25 years, is the inadequacy of tax bases for the provinces upon which to raise the necessary revenue to fulfil their responsibilities under our constitution. Secondly, it is the problem of the inequality of standards of living and standards of services offered in the various provinces across Canada and the desire of the Canadian people to set up some sort of minimum standard, at least, which should be enjoyed by every Canadian in order that he may have a feeling of national pride that as a Canadian he has certain inalienable minimum rights and privileges. Third, it is the problem of the inefficiency and inconvenience of what is called double taxation.

I do not like to use the term "double taxation", because I think it leaves the wrong impression. When people hear the term "double taxation" the inference is created that because the federal parliament imposes certain taxes and the provincial legislatures impose certain taxes, that means the taxes are going to be twice as much or that necessarily they will be higher than if they were left to one jurisdiction alone. Of course that is not so. The term "double taxation" really means that you have taxes imposed by two different jurisdictions upon the same taxpayer, perhaps using two different methods and standards of collection. I think it is the desire of Canadian people generally that there should be a minimum of duplication in the raising of revenues, not because of the taxation involved but because it is an inefficient and inconvenient way in which to raise the necessary revenues.

Those seem to be the three central problems. I think we have to go behind them and ask ourselves also, how did those problems arise? Quite evidently this is something that has not arisen during the past few years but has been a sort of accumulation over a long period of years. How did we get into that condition? First of all the British North America Act, which is accepted as Canada's constitution, is now 89 years old. When the fathers of confederation met and conceived this nation and made the request to the parliament of Great Britain for an enactment to set up confederation, no one at that time could have conceived some of the developments that have taken place.

I should like to draw attention to one or two of those developments that I do not believe have been mentioned up to now. One is the mass concentration not only of wealth but of financial power in certain parts of this country. When Canada became a nation there was a sort of equality. Perhaps it was an equality of relatively low standards of living at that time, but at least there was a sort of equality within the various components of this nation. We had not felt the effects then of the tariff structure, because that had not yet come into play. We had not yet started feeling the effects of the building up of huge corporations which has had the effect of concentrating wealth and power in certain areas of the country. But as time went on we began to feel those effects, and in my view we are now in a position where I think in the next two years, probably, or in the next five or ten years, we are going to feel those effects at an accelerated rate. It is my view that the concentration of financial power is increasing at a greater rate today than it was 10 years ago, and cerainly at a much greater rate than 20 years ago. As we go into the field of specialization, automation and the high speed business methods of the new era, we are going to find that the concentration of financial power is going to accelerate and the problem is going to become greater and greater and more acute in a short time.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

Then, of course, there have been the effects of the two world wars. It is not necessary for me to review what those effects were; they are well known to the members of this house and to the people of this nation. We know that under the stress of the first and second world wars certain things were done which had the effect of disrupting the normal occupations and methods in this country, and had the effect of further accelerating this accumulation of financial power.

I should like to mention here that apart altogether from the kind of legislation we are now considering, and the dominion-provincial conferences which we have once in a while, there are some things that are basic to this problem of the concentration of financial power, which will have to be faced.

I believe there are two things that can prevent that concentration from becoming far more serious than it is. One of those has been advocated by this group on many occasions; finding fields of public ownership, particularly of public utilities, in which the public themselves can participate in the management of their own affairs and therefore, of course, in the management of their own revenues. We can tax as we like, but we must recognize what has been pointed out by many economists, not the least of whom, if I may call him such, is the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), who in many of his speeches when he was premier of Manitoba made this kind of argument which I think was very sound. I doubt if he would make it now, but I believe it is quite sound.

He pointed out that the whole business of taxation, particularly the taxation of corporations, is in one sense an illusion because, as he pointed out in one of his speeches at that time, all the corporations do is pass on the taxes imposed upon them in the form of increased prices of the products they sell to the public, so that in the end the consumer pays every nickel of taxation in this country. You may say that we impose so much individual income tax, so much sales tax, so much corporation tax, so much of other kinds of taxes, but in the end it is the individual consumer who buys and pays for the products that are manufactured or produced in Canada, who pays every nickel of the taxation, because, it is all passed on to him in the prices of the goods he has to buy.

That being so, the only real way in which the people of Canada through their various levels of government can have full and complete control over their own revenues is by participating in the greatest possible way in the management of their own affairs. One of the ways in which that can be done is through public ownership, whether it is done on the federal level, the provincial level or the municipal level. The other way it can be done in order to avoid this concentration of financial power in the hands of a few corporations in certain areas of the country is through co-operative ownership. In my opinion this is one of the finest ways in which the production of wealth and the revenue derived from that wealth can be kept within the community to serve the needs of that community rather than having it all drained off and channelled into one huge financial empire, with no loyalty to any part of the country, and which only cares about its own affairs.

I believe these two factors have to be taken into account when we are discussing the problems that arise with respect to the question of sharing revenues. In my opinion, prior to this kind of legislation, if it cannot be done in the midst of it, if I may put it that way, a dominion-provincial conference should have been called not so much for the purpose of finding a method or a formula to meet the immediate problem of how to share the revenues of the country but rather a constitutional conference. I will grant that an attempt was made not so many years ago to have that kind of conference. Unfortunately, for one reason or another it did not go very far and was not resumed. But I think it is even more important in the long pull, if we are to operate our federal system efficiently, to have a constitutional conference of the provinces with the federal officials and take a good, cool look at the provisions of the British North America Act with the amendments that have been made.

I say that because a great many of these petty and sometimes partisan arguments that come up in a debate of this kind could be avoided if the fields of endeavour, responsibility and jurisdiction were more clearly defined than has been the case up to this time. Certainly we would avoid the one thing which has been deplored by speakers on both sides of the house, and that is the question of one government raising the revenue and another government spending the revenue. Personally I do not think it is the worst thing that could happen in a country, particularly a country like Canada, but it is an undesirable way in which to handle our revenues.

If there were a constitutional conference, and if those who participated took a good look at things, had expert advice, decided what from now on could be more efficiently handled on the provincial level and what in the national interest could be more efficiently handled on the federal level, and then suggested to parliament and eventually to the parliament of Westminster further amendments to our constitution based upon the results of that conference and arising out of common agreement among the representatives of the provinces and the dominion, we would do away with a great many of the difficulties that arise at a time when we are wondering how best to share these revenues.

Mr. Harris: Is that not what the Rowell-Sirois commission did?

Mr. Zaplitny: The Minister of Finance asks if that is not what the Rowell-Sirois commission did. I do not quite agree with him that that is what the commission did, if that is the view he holds. What the commission did was to investigate, do a good deal of necessary basic research work and get a great many facts and place them before the government or parliament. The commission's duty was not to propose definite constitutional amendments. They could make certain general recommendations, which they did. They also supplied the background material upon which such decisions can be based, but only the elected representatives of the people can go to the extent of actually recommending the necessary amendments which have to be made to the constitution.

I believe that until we have a conference which will devote itself much more fully and deeply to the question of our constitutional relationships, many of these problems are going to arise again and again. I think what is also required are conferences within the provinces between the municipalities and the provinces themselves. Certainly after such a constitutional conference as I have mentioned had been held; after there had been some clarification and the best possible job had been done within the terms of the agreement among those participating so the provincial jurisdictions knew exactly what their responsibilities were, the provinces would then be in a position to call in the officials of the municipalities within the provinces. Then they could decide in conference to what extent certain changes would have to be made in their various municipal acts and other legislation dealing with municipalities. That should be done in order that there might be some clear-cut idea in the minds of those who are serving the same taxpayer on the municipal, provincial and federal levels.

I think the very worst thing that could happen, and during this debate it has almost happened, would be a competition in passing the buck or trying to make good fellows of ourselves by saying, as the Minister of Fisheries did, "Well, here we are and we are offering you $115 million more." What business have we to offer anything to anybody? Whether members of this federal parliament or of a legislature or of a municipal council we are trustees, and very temporary trustees at that, of certain moneys which are given to us by the people of the country who trust our wisdom to the extent that they feel we will spend those moneys in the best possible interests of all the people concerned. But for the federal government to take the attitude that it has certain moneys which it is in a position to give or grant or hand to any province is, I think, looking at the matter from the wrong point of view.

That is why I suggest there should be some clear-cut arrangements made in order that the various levels of government will know exactly what are their responsibilities. It is quite conceivable that as to many of the things which today are considered to be, and are in the legal sense, the responsibility of the provinces, the time may now have arrived when the provinces themselves will agree that those responsibilities should be transferred to the federal jurisdiction. Having done that piecemeal in a great many respects already, it may perhaps be felt that certain of the responsibilities should now more properly lie within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. But let there be a clear understanding of those terms and arrangements before we begin to talk actual money.

I want to add this. I believe I should say this because in a sense it has a bearing on this very legislation that we are now discussing. There are certain things this parliament can do to ease the burden on certain parts of this nation which have been referred to as not as well developed as or retarded in relation to other areas. We have to take a good look at our tariff structure. Certainly no one will deny that our tariff structure right from the beginning, its setting up, has had the effect of concentrating industry in certain parts of our nation, which has had the result of asking the people of other provinces which are not favoured by such industry actually to subsidize this industry in the form of higher prices because those industries enjoy that certain protection. That is one of the things this parliament could do without in any way disturbing the autonomy of any province and without in any way having to amend the constitution. By reducing our tariff duties on certain products we could come materially to the help of many of those provinces which today find themselves in an inferior position financially.

Those are some of the things that could be done. I think most of all we in this parliament must somehow train ourselves to understand that we are here not as federal representatives as such but rather that we are here as representatives of the same taxpayers who are represented by the members in the provincial legislatures and in the various municipal councils. We should therefore try not to approach these jurisdictions on a competitive basis or on the basis of saying "We can do better than you can".

Let the taxpayer decide who can spend his money most efficiently. Let those who are in the various levels of government lay before the taxpayers in clear terms what in their opinion should be the responsibility of each level of government. Let us approach the whole question from a national point of view so that the people across the country will feel that we do not have a bunch of politicians at the top scrapping amongst themselves for the credit for what is done. Rather let them feel that they are willing so to apportion the revenues of the nation so that each government at every level will have the opportunity to discharge its responsibilities.

Because it is in the position of having access to the greatest volume of revenue of all, I think this parliament should lean over backward to avoid making the provincial governments feel as though they are getting a handout, or as though they are being put on the spot by having a piece of legislation thrown at them on a take it or leave it basis. I think the provincial governments should be made to feel that we are willing to sit down as mature people and say, "Here is a nation with a federal system. There are certain revenues that must be raised. Let us find out what is the best way of doing it so that each level of government may discharge its constitutional responsibilities".

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in discussing this bill this house is dealing with what is undoubtedly one of the most difficult problems before the dominion parliament and indeed before the nation as a whole, namely the problem of so adjusting the financial relations between the dominion and the provinces that each governmental authority may be enabled to discharge the responsibilities which are placed upon it.

Before coming to some of the details I desire to discuss tonight I should like to make a suggestion, and I do this in all seriousness. In my opinion one of the reasons there has been so little progress made in solving this problem—and here I am not wishing to overlook real progress where it has been made—or one of the reasons I do not think we have yet set out our feet firmly on the path of an over-all solution, is that we are trying to fit dominion-provincial relations and the problems of the fiscal relationship between the governments into the strait-jacket of preconceived financial proposals and then cutting the limbs—the arms and the legs—of the various governments in order to fit that garment which has been tailored in the workshop of Harris and company—

Mr. Pickersgill: Harris tweed.

Mr. Fulton:—instead of measuring the customer and finding out what are his real requirements in the year 1956 and the next 20, 50 or 100 years. I do not think one can go too far in matters of this kind. You must be realistic. But what should be done is to assess the requirements of the future that can be measured; then tailor the garment to fit them. The government here is approaching the problem from its own preconceived notions of what should be the size, type and colour of the garment, and then forcing the customer into it. If a leg sticks out here or a foot sticks out there, they cut it off and stuff it in somewhere else.

Mr. Sinclair: You should change your tailor.

Mr. Fulton: The people of Canada will do that at the next election, because the people of Canada—and particularly the provincial and municipal governments—do not like having their necessary expenditures chopped off and curtailed in that way so as to fit the preconceived notions of the federal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does not the hon. gentleman believe in autonomy?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but a severed limb is not very autonomous. I think this is what the trouble has been. Of course, what the government is suffering from is gangrene and lack of circulation, especially to the head. We know that.

Mr. Sinclair: That is a Tory complaint.

Mr. Fulton: I wish that were not quite so obvious in their approach to this problem of dominion-provincial fiscal relations. I am putting this forward as a serious proposal, that what is needed, rather than trying to force our relationships into this pre-tailored fiscal garment, is a meeting of all the governments with a view to assessing their needs and what if any exchange of constitutional responsibilities can be arranged by mutual consent. Then having reached agreement on this point, arrange a federal-provincial fiscal program which will enable the various governments to discharge their agreed responsibilities.

That will be difficult, Mr. Speaker. I know that. But no one can overlook the difficulty or pretend that it does not exist. Confederation was also difficult. I would say it was infinitely more difficult in 1867 with the problems of communication and the limited resources at the disposal of that collection of colonies which even then were not fully self-governing. I would say that the difficulties which were confronting them were infinitely greater than the problems confronting Canadian statesmen today in arriving at a similar solution. But our great misfortune is that in the ranks of the present government we have not a statesman with the same vision as those statesmen of 1867.

Since we are forced to approach this problem within the terms prescribed by the legislation laid before us by this government, suffering as it does from the disadvantages I have outlined, we must deal with the arguments advanced by the government as to why it can not meet the legitimate requests of the provincial authorities.

One set of these arguments was advanced today by the Minister of Fisheries. Indeed, he devoted a great deal more time to a resume of the obstacles in the way of enabling the provinces to discharge their responsibilities than he did in a serious attempt to find a solution. I do not think even he would deny that the provinces and municipalities are faced with problems mounting more and more to emergency proportions as one surveys the field of education at the primary and secondary levels as well as the higher learning institutions, the field of the provision of highways, and other provincial responsibilities.

Mr. Sinclair: I agree with that, but so is the federal government faced with exactly the same problem.

Mr. Fulton: The minister invited certain suggestions as to the solution of the federal government's problem. I intend to suggest to him some quarters from which he could find a solution, quarters which I think will be particularly welcome to the Minister of Fisheries. I think he mentioned four problems one of which at least would have to be met by the federal government if it was to be able to find the surplus revenues to meet the requests of the provinces.

One in which I am particularly interested and to which I intend to refer tonight is the one to which he said an answer might be found in the reduction of federal government expenditures. He referred to certain statements made by the leader of the official opposition. I have not his exact words, but as I took them down I think they went something like this. We do not hear very many concrete suggestions as to how expenditures can be reduced. He went on to recall that in a speech at Saskatoon, I think it was, the Leader of the Opposition had said that $500 million could be cut from federal expenditures without reducing essential services. In fact, as the Minister of Fisheries further recalls to us, that was made one of the planks of the Conservative election platform in 1953.

The minister went on to remind us also that he was parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance at that time and that he had shortly thereafter, and for a number of years thereafter, asked the Conservatives in the house to suggest specifically where expenditures could be reduced by the amount of $500 million. He used a rather uncomplimentary expression, and I shall not repeat the exact words, in which he said the Leader of the Opposition had nothing more specific to suggest than that we should have a commission along the lines of the Hoover commission in the United States.

It is true that that suggestion was made and is still made by the Conservative opposition, that if this government really put its mind to it, it could save upward of $500 million without reducing essential expenditures. We have advanced specific examples of waste, extravagance and duplication of services on the part of this government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Repeat them.

Mr. Fulton: I do not know what is the use of casting pearls before swine, because if—

Mr. Pickersgill: Never mind the pearls, just give us the facts.

Mr. Fulton: —these individuals were exposed to these suggestions before and were completely impervious to them—

Mr. Dickey: To what are you referring?

Mr. Fulton: —it may well be that the reason they do not accept them or attribute to them any merit is the source from which they come.

What I propose to do is suggest to them now a source from which they might find these proposals somewhat more acceptable. We all witnessed in this house today a rather touching scene. Whether it was a process of osmosis, a delayed reaction, or whatever it may have been I do not know, but the results speak for themselves. We saw the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher)—I am sorry I do not see him in the house. I am looking in the quarter of the house where he previously sat with the group of independents, but perhaps his seat has already been moved. Maybe I should look opposite in the ranks of the Liberal party. I do not see him there. I do not suppose it is any use looking in the ranks of the C.C.F. party which he left over a year ago.

Mr. Sinclair: You tried to get him as a Tory.

Mr. Fulton: I was tempted to look in the ranks of the Social Credit party, recalling that they made him a certain concrete offer in reference to his own province of Saskatchewan, but I understand he turned them down. To that extent, at least, I give him credit for intelligence.

Mr. Sinclair: He turned the Tories down, too.

Mr. Fulton: One place I do not have to look is behind and about me in the immediate ranks of this party—

An hon. Member: He knows better.

Mr. Fulton: —because this is one quarter from which no offers were submitted.

Mr. Sinclair: Have you consulted the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) before making that statement?

Mr. Fulton: I say this, that I endeavoured to indicate to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, for whom I have great personal regard and affection, that I would be discussing his recent change of heart tonight but I was unable to reach him.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; I was not here this afternoon but I understand that the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) raised a point of order as to whether this subject could be discussed. Surely if it could not be discussed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre himself there cannot be a debate about him.

Mr. Fulton: It is nice to know, Mr. Speaker, that when he is signing these letters the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) is concentrating on his signature. He says he was not in the house, but I believe he was and had he been listening he would have appreciated that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Eglinton was quite different.

Mr. Dickey: The point you are trying to make is that the rules only apply to other parties, and not to the Tories.

Mr. Fulton: In attempting to deal seriously with the suggestion made by the Minister of Fisheries, who after all was previously parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance, that one of the difficulties in the way of this government meeting the requests of the provincial governments was that this government cannot reduce expenditures, I am seeking to advance a suggestion from a quarter which I thought would be acceptable to the government but apparently is not acceptable to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration I suggest that if it is not acceptable in this case he will have to follow the lead of the Prime Minister, with whom I understand the course followed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was discussed, even if it was not discussed with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. May I say that one of the methods suggested on numerous occasions by this new-found colleague, this Moses in the bulrushes—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is rising on a point of order, we will hear him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is a rule of this house that if an hon. gentleman reads something from someone else, he must indicate whether or not he agrees with it. I think we should be told whether or not the hon. gentleman is endorsing what he is about to read.

Mr. Ferguson: That is nonsense.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I understood that it was Your Honour's alter ego who was writing the new book on rules and not the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I certainly hope that the one has more relationship to the rules than the other would obviously have if it were ever produced. I suggest that the minister go on signing his letters and leave the house to serious discussion.

Mr. Dickey: Oh, is somebody else going to speak?

An hon. Member: You should.

Mr. Fulton: In the course of the remarks the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre used to address to this house he suggested a number of methods by which federal expenditures should be reduced. I am prepared to admit that an isolated statement, an isolated suggestion or an isolated criticism of the government, one single incident, would perhaps not be indicative of such a critical trend or frame of mind that an hon. member could not overcome it in himself and find himself a home on the other side of the house. Those on the other side of the house could properly say that a single aberration and not indicative of a frame of mind or trend of thought that was really critical or indicated a philosophy diametrically opposed—

Mr. Sinclair: Those are big words.

Mr. Fulton: —and therefore the transition can be made easily. They could properly say there is not too big a gap and the bridge can be easily constructed. But we remember what the hon. member used to say as we listened to him in those days. I think I will ask just where the government obtained its engineering advice to build this monumental bridge that must have been necessary to span the gap between the line of think outlined to us by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre in his former happy days and the policies and practices which he has now embraced or with which he has been surrounded—

Mr. Sinclair: Take your choice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surrounded like a boa constrictor.

Mr. Fulton: That is exactly what the Liberal party is, of course, a boa constrictor; and, Mr. Speaker, it certainly swallowed quite a big meal a few years ago, because it has been asleep ever since.

Mr. Sinclair: I resent that.

Mr. Fulton: I am afraid that during the process of digestion the people of Canada have suffered.

You will recall, sir, that the Minister of Fisheries treated with scorn the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition that one way of finding reductions in expenditures would be to set up a commission of inquiry into governmental methods in Canada along the lines of the Hoover commission in the United States. It is interesting to note that there is one suggestion which was emphatically and vigorously supported by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, and if the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration cares to ask me now if I support it I will reply to the question which he might address to me by saying that this is a suggestion made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre with which I thoroughly agree, that there should be a commission of inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: That does not save money.

Mr. Fulton: Well, you certainly are not saving it. If the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as a supporter of the government is reflecting their attitude that they cannot save money, then they might have that election which we are inviting them to hold to let the people of Canada who want their money saved elect a government that is capable of saving money for them.

Mr. Dickey: Santa Claus has come to town.

Mr. Fulton: One of the particular methods by which the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre thought this government might save money was by the abolition of subsidies.

An hon. Member: You have a parliamentary assistant in the form of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Reinke: You had better have a little consultation with your pal over there.

Mr. Fulton: I wish to place on the record a few remarks made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre on May 31, 1955, as reported at page 4305 of Hansard. I want to point out that this was after the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre had shuffled off the coils of socialism—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: —and had advanced to the happy state of independence. As recorded at page 4305 he said:

> Over the years our estimate books have contained a great many subsidies.

Mr. Sinclair: What year of Hansard is that?

Mr. Fulton: 1955.

Mr. Knowles: The minister has not received it yet.

Mr. Fulton: I continue:

> I am quite prepared to admit that once a subsidy is commenced, usually because of an emergency, it is very hard to get rid of it, even if the emergency has ended. There are literally dozens of subsidies in the estimates book. During the supper hour I looked through the various departments, and would like to mention a few. For cold storage warehouses there is a subsidy of $500,000; there is a grain subsidy of $15,500,000—

This comes from the stalwart independent from the prairie province of Saskatchewan who has been embraced gladly, willingly and with open arms by the government.

Mr. Reinke: You would do the same.

Mr. Fulton: I continue:

> —there is a maple sugar subsidy for pails to the amount of $100,000—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. member supporting that? Perhaps he might tell me whether or not he agrees with it?

Mr. Harris: It does not exist any more.

Mr. Sinclair: Are you against that?

Mr. Ferguson: I am; I am dead against it.

Mr. Fulton: I have not joined the government.

Mr. Ferguson: Put that in your pipe.

Mr. Pickersgill: A Daniel has come to judgment.

Mr. Fulton: I continue:

> —there is a C.B.C. subsidy to the amount of $18 million; there is a coal subsidy of $10 million—

Some hon. Members: Are you against that?

Mr. Fulton:

> —there is a gold subsidy of $11 million—

Some hon. Members: Are you against that?

Mr. Fulton:

> —there is a subsidy on government annuities of $1,300,000—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman against that?

Mr. Fulton:

> —there is a butter subsidy of about $1,225,000;—

Some hon. Members: Are you against that?

Mr. Fulton: I do not know whether Hansard caught what I said:

> —there is a butter subsidy of $1,225,000; there is a subsidy to McGill University for a coal gas turbine of $100,000.

Mr. Dickey: Are you against that?

Mr. Fulton:

> Many of these may be useful; many of them are probably desirable. . . . But I do think that once these subsidies have been put on the books, from time to time somebody should review them, and make certain that the original need continues. An outside body, not having to worry about the political results, could go over these subsidies and make recommendations to parliament—

Apparently in those days the hon. member did not have to worry about political results.

> —as to whether or not any could be discontinued, or whether there was room for reduction in some particular item.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre discussed the possibility of reducing the expenditures of the government and of examining critically the subsidies that were paid, and recommended particularly the appointment of a royal commission to investigate governmental efficiency. It is of course questionable, to say the least, whether or not the hon. member is scheduled for a position in the cabinet, but this translation opens up interesting speculation.

Mr. Dickey: Jealousy will get you nowhere.

Mr. Fulton: I assure the hon. member the last thing I would be jealous of is anyone who joined the Liberal party. I can imagine no surer method of political suicide than that.

An hon. Member: Sour grapes.

Mr. Dickey: Except your own.

Mr. Fulton: There are rumours to the effect—

An hon. Member: Rumours; did you hear that?

Mr. Fulton: —that the Prime Minister is toying with the idea of relief from the burdens of office. He would be less than human—

An hon. Member: Ask George Hees; he'll tell you.

Mr. Sinclair: Dr. Hees, get up and take a bow.

Mr. Fulton: —if he did not. The Minister of Finance is rumoured to be ambitious in terms of advancement, and who knows but the finance portfolio may soon be opened up. If so, what more useful convert, what more useful evangelist could be found than this recent convert to the Liberal ranks who is so fruitful in suggestions and ideas for reductions in expenditure.

An hon. Member: More fruitful than the Tory party, anyway.

Mr. Fulton: Whether the axe will really chop clean or whether the edge will be dulled and blunted—

An hon. Member: It couldn't be duller than your speech.

Mr. Fulton: —as the hon. member is surrounded by the coils and tentacles of those who cling to office is, of course, quite open to question.

Mr. Reinke: Talk, talk, talk.

Mr. Fulton: Another thing the Minister of Fisheries dealt with specifically—

Mr. Reinke: Talk to the bill.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, may I ask just one question of the hon. member?

Mr. Fulton: If it is short.

Mr. Sinclair: This afternoon the hon. member addressed one short question to me and before doing so he asked permission. More than that, I am grateful that he sent word to me in this building to come down so I would be here when he spoke this evening. He is referring to the speech I made and I would like to direct one short question to him. Is the whole case of the Tory party for the reduction of a half-billion dollars based entirely on this one speech made by the independent member for Moose-Jaw Lake Centre?

An hon. Member: You mean the Liberal member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Fulton: No, it is built on several of his speeches, and on a speech of his to which the Minister of Fisheries contributed substantially; also on the facts of the situation as we know them today, as we see them, and as the minister in days gone by was wont to admit that the suggestions made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre were sensible suggestions which deserved serious study.

Mr. Sinclair: I was teaching him.

Mr. Fulton: Another point made by the minister was that no member today is willing to reduce expenditures on old age pensions.

I took down the minister's remarks and I have summarized them to indicate him saying that the Tory party in the Senate blocked the first suggestion by a Liberal government for old age pensions. Notwithstanding the fact that the minister would make that sort of statement, the fact is that it was the Conservative government which first introduced old age pensions. It would be interesting to know how the minister—

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Knowles: When the minister is through I will have one for him.

Mr. Martin: Will my hon. friend tell me and tell the house when the Conservative government ever proposed that there should be an old age pension program for this country? Is it not a fact that in 1926 the Conservative Senate rejected a proposal of the federal government? I have given my hon. friend long enough to answer.

Mr. Fulton: I did not think that I had let myself in for a speech on the part of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

An hon. Member: Answer it.

Mr. Fulton: I shall give the minister time to find his own answer. He is not unable to find an answer. The minister knows very well what are the facts of the situation. He knows very well that the Conservative party was a pioneer in the field of social security legislation, in both the dominion and provincial fields.

Mr. Martin: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the Minister of National Health and Welfare is rising on a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: Surely I can finish the sentence.

Mr. Martin: On a point of order—

Mr. Fulton: The Conservative party was a pioneer in this field in both the dominion and provincial spheres of responsibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The Minister of National Health and Welfare has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Martin: The hon. gentleman has said that I knew very well the first suggestion came from the Conservative party. It is against the rules of this house to say to one hon. member that he knows something perfectly well when that hon. member has repeatedly said the opposite. I do not know that that is the fact.

Mr. Fulton: That is not a point of order. I really cannot be responsible for the ignorance of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I think perhaps there is a point of order which has not been raised by either hon. gentleman. As is natural, the debate has covered a wide field, but perhaps the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) would not mind me telling him that his time is limited and perhaps the house as a whole would not mind me stating that the question before the house at the moment is not who is or who is not responsible for welfare legislation in this country but whether this house is or is not going to vote in favour of the principle of a five-year federal-provincial tax agreement as submitted by the government.

Mr. Fulton: If the Minister of National Health and Welfare really is so ignorant perhaps I may be permitted to give some instruction. The proposal made by the Bennett government which was in office between 1930 and 1935 was in the form of increased contributions to the provinces so they might pay old age pensions. Contrast that with the record of the Liberal government under Mackenzie King immediately preceding, who said he would not pay a five-cent piece to any provincial Conservative government. I also remind the hon. gentleman and all those beside him of the fate suffered by the Bennett social security legislation at the hands of the succeeding government under Mackenzie King, and my hon. friends opposite are the direct successors of that government.

Those are the facts; and although they do not like to be reminded of them I think it is well every now and then to try to pull aside the curtain and peer behind this mist of Liberal mythology to see what are the facts as to the contributions made toward the welfare of Canada by the different political parties of this country.

The point I had started on was that there is one hon. member of this house who has made specific suggestions for a reduction in old age pension expenditures, and that is the new convert, the recent delegate, the hon. member who has just been welcomed into the ranks of the Liberal party, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. Those suggestions by the hon. member will be found at page 3347 of Hansard for May 2, 1955.

[Mr. Martin.]

Then there was another speech made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre which I think should be discussed at some length and very seriously. It is true that it was made in the days when he was still professing socialism. This speech was made during the session of 1952-53 and will be found at pages 2534 to 2538 of Hansard for that year. I hope you will allow me a little time because of the interruptions, Mr. Chairman. There are some interesting contributions by the Minister of Fisheries to be found on those pages. I know the minister will like to be reminded of them, and the house will certainly enjoy them. At that time the present hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, who was then the member for Moose Jaw, indicated some positive ways in which expenditures should be reduced. He was highly critical of the Minister of Finance in connection with his budget and he said, as reported at page 2534 of Hansard of March 2, 1953:

> I say that cuts in federal expenditures are possible, desirable and feasible. Large sums could be saved, I suggest, by the introduction of sound business methods into government.

The Prime Minister, who apparently was consulted by the hon. gentleman as to his forthcoming venture into this new and interesting field, is in the house now and he can tell us whether he agrees with his most recent convert. Then at page 2535 the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre referred to defence expenditures and suggested a number of ways in which they could be reduced without reducing the efficiency of that department.

Mr. Sinclair: Such as?

Mr. Fulton: Such as the elimination of cost-plus contracts. Does the minister want me to give some quotations? I quote from page 2535:

> In this past year a high percentage of the construction contracts awarded by the Department of National Defence was on a cost-plus basis. I contend that the practice has cost the Canadian taxpayers many millions of extra dollars.

And again:

> —if you look at the public accounts for this year, pages N-23 to N-65, you will find that in the last fiscal year the Department of National Defence alone let 231 contracts on a cost-plus basis, valued at well over $106 million. Small wonder that our defence is costing so heavily.

He then went on to point out that it cost four times as much in Canada as it did in the United Kingdom to maintain one man in the armed services. He then went on to say:

> It is now fairly clear that the government has tossed money around recklessly on defence in the past year.

And later:

I charge this government with milking the Canadian taxpayer in those years to provide frills in defence spending.

He then went on to discuss a report by Mr. Arthur Blakely of the Montreal Gazette. He then gave some further details, and at page 2537 he summarized as follows:

In view of evidence like that, how can any Liberal say that the average taxpayer is receiving value for his defence dollar?

A little later on:

Personally I sincerely believe that defence costs could be cut not by 10 per cent but by 15 per cent or 20 per cent if the government really got down to business.

There is an amount of $1,770 million for defence, not very much less than it was some years ago. One-fifth or 20 per cent of $1,700 million, giving them the benefit of the doubt, is $340 million. That goes a long way toward meeting the $500 million objective suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, and it would be met in that one field alone. This is the suggestion of the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. I wonder that they did not take him over there sooner. I hope that his recent physical conversion will be productive of these reductions in expenditure which we, as well as he, have been advocating for some years. Then in the course of the same day the Minister of Fisheries intervened and had some interesting things to say, as recorded on page 2538 of Hansard.

Mr. Sinclair: What year?

Mr. Fulton: March 2, 1953. He said:

But now that I am on my feet—

A position in which ministers are sometimes surprised to find themselves.

—may I say that I am always amazed at the absolute inconsistency of the hon. member for Moose Jaw—

Mr. Sinclair: He was not speaking to me then.

Mr. Fulton:

—when he rises to make a speech.

A little later:

As I said, he has now reversed himself and has got back to the party line, no doubt in anticipation of the coming election.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the Minister of Fisheries is right again.

Mr. Fulton: That was the Minister of Fisheries—he was then Minister of Fisheries—who told us today that he was responsible in large measure for the conversion of his latest apostle.

Mr. Sinclair: He is continuing his education.

Mr. Fulton: I think my time is nearly up.

Mr. Sinclair: Go on.

Mr. Fulton: I have heard it suggested as a truism of political life in days gone by, and in other forms of activity as well, that when you find yourself in a position where you cannot beat them the thing to do is join them.

An hon. Member: Are you coming over, Davie?

Mr. Fulton: I wonder in fact whether the danger lies more to the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre or to the Liberal government, and whether in fact the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre will advocate from within the same largely sensible policies that he advocated when he was outside. Then I think the conversion, the translation, or the transition will not be too disadvantageous to the Canadian people; but I would warn the member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre that often it is found that the promises, the lures and the enticements held out are not realized in the performance.

An hon. Member: Is that what you found in your party?

Mr. Fulton: I hope the hon. member will be able to carry forward the vigorous apostleship he has shown in the past in advocating reductions in government expenditures because we know they are possible. I hope the government and the Minister of Finance who, with his colleagues, welcomed the hon. gentleman into their ranks today, will take to heart and give practical application to the messages he preached in the years gone by, and that the hon. member will not find that in order to rest happy in the ranks of his new-found colleagues he will have to give up those very sound and profitable philosophies which he held.

In closing, I can just wish the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre luck. I hope he finds in his new surroundings sufficient advancement and recompense to warrant the somewhat startling departure he made from his previously stated intentions. Reading at page 3069 of Hansard for the day on which he explained the reasons for his departure from the party to which he had formerly given his allegiance, he said:

For the remainder of the present parliament I propose to represent the constituency of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre as an independent member. I shall not apply for membership in any other party.

As I have said, these transitions are interesting to observe. One can understand that the Liberal party, reaching out for something that would give it favourable propaganda, might have conceived of this as a highly desirable time to be able to announce this particular transition. But I doubt, in the light of the statements which we find on the record of Hansard, that in fact it represents a change of heart by either the hon. member himself or the government, which has welcomed him today with all outward signs that they intend to give him a real home.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take too much time. The fact is that I had not intended to take part in this debate, but when we heard, in the philanthropic way the Minister of Fisheries has of dealing with the province of British Columbia and the revenue received from that province, I thought it was only fair to him and to the house that others who did not believe the same way he does should have the privilege of saying so and indicating their reasons.

I am satisfied that the leader of this group and others who took part in the debate on behalf of this group have thoroughly indicated our point of view with respect to the tax agreement itself and the clauses that are in it. Possibly we shall have more to say on the bill when the individual clauses are discussed.

However, the minister took a great deal of delight in referring to sessional paper 237A, which was in the name of the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) on June 20 this year. I intend to refer to that sessional paper, but not immediately. In trying to prove his point, he first referred to an expression the leader of this group had used in referring to the $115 million as being a niggardly sum. Possibly in the view of the government it is, when certain members of the government ask, "What's a million?". However, when a government can show a profit of some $750 million, I must say I feel that we should be able to get a little more than $115 million out of it, especially when the same federal government and the same minister point with such pride to the fact that it is through the frugality of the federal government that they have been able to hold down the increase in expenditures to 5·5 per cent as compared with the municipal increase of 276 per cent and the provincial increase of 292 per cent.

Mr. Sinclair: In fairness, I should like to point out that it was not I who said that. It was the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke who pointed with pride to the fact that federal expenditures had increased only 5·5 per cent in the past 10 years. I was quoting him.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Hahn: I have no doubt that the minister was quoting him; in fact he so indicated earlier this afternoon. I am also agreeing with the figures, but I am taking exception to the fact that it is said to be due to frugality on the part of the government, and the fact that the interpretation put on it by the Minister of Fisheries is that the government should be given credit for this frugality. I interpret it in two other ways. I would rather suggest that this discrepancy in the increases shows that the federal government is not assuming its fair share of municipal and provincial costs of operation and that the federal government, the municipal districts and the provincial governments are not sharing the costs of operation of government in this country in proportion to the needs that we must face at this time.

I do not want to spend too much time on that, but I do wish to refer to the sessional paper. First of all may I say that on page 31 of the report of the Department of National Revenue for the year ended March 31, 1955, it is indicated that the total amount taken in customs and excise was $86,265,000. That is the tax taken from the province of British Columbia. The sessional paper indicates that excise taxes, domestic and excise duties amounted to $19,689,000 and $15,650,000 respectively, making a total of some $35,340,000. There is a slight discrepancy of some $51,925,000 that is collected in the province of British Columbia and is not shown on the sessional paper.

Mr. Sinclair: There is a very simple explanation.

Mr. Hahn: I am sure the minister has one. I have been told not only by this minister but by other ministers, and I am going to take their word for it, that you can explain figures in any way you like, that you can use statistics at your own pleasure. If you want to refer to statistics in respect of unemployment insurance there are two sets of statistics, one which suits the unions and one which suits the government. We have two sets here, one that suits the Minister of Fisheries and one that suits the Minister of National Revenue. Then farther down in the sessional paper we have an asterisk followed by these words:

> Customs duties and excise taxes on imports are not included as such figures are available only by port of entry which is no indication of the point of consumption.

I would say that is quite an omission, especially when one considers that British Columbia has approximately one-tenth of the population of the country and that the total amount of customs duties collected, as indicated in the report, was some $427 million. In other words it is a simple matter to say that you cannot decide who the consumers are in this case, but certainly when you are estimating something it is just as simple to say that as one-tenth of the population is in British Columbia therefore one-tenth of the $427 million is a fair estimate of what would be consumed by the people of that province. Therefore the federal government must have received about $42,750,000 in customs duties which are not shown on this paper. I do not know why the amount is not shown here and why the figures are shown in the fashion they are. I am disturbed to think that our sessional papers should conveniently not show some of these things.

Added to the other discrepancy of $51,925,000, that makes a total of $94,675,000. Just by way of interpolation, I notice that the Minister of Finance looks quite unhappy. I am sure he would have liked to finish this bill this evening and I can feel for him, but he should learn to silence the Minister of Fisheries. That is one of the problems of the house. If he and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration would keep a little quieter possibly it would have its effect on some others of us.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, the best speech in this debate was made by the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Hahn: I am very pleased to hear that, but that, of course, is a matter of opinion. The Minister of Fisheries drew attention to certain other factors when referring to the sessional paper, but he failed to point out to the house that customs duties were not taken into account, and I am satisfied that the Minister of Finance, being the fair minister he is, will agree that possibly the Minister of Fisheries was in error in that particular.

Mr. Knowles: He is a fair minister.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness I do not think the hon. member should call me in error because I quoted from a return to the House of Commons prepared not for a Liberal member but for a C.C.F. member.

Mr. Low: Probably you did not look it over before you quoted it.

Mr. Sinclair: Do you look over every return to the House of Commons personally?

Mr. Fulton: Certainly, when you quote it.

Mr. Low: Especially when you quote from it.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe I can get into this too.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I think I should point out to the house that the hon. member for New Westminster has the floor.

Mr. Hahn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You are very kind indeed.

Mr. Low: A failure to give information in the return.

Mr. Hahn: With respect to what the minister had to say and having to do with the error, I suggest that the minister was in error in not pointing out to the house that the sessional paper had the specific note:

> Customs duties and excise taxes on imports are not included as such figures are available only by port of entry which is no indication of the point of consumption.

He did not read that part of it to the house.

Mr. Low: A little matter of $42 million is not much.

Mr. Sinclair: You say that $115 million is niggardly.

Mr. Hahn: I go to another item, expenditures by the federal government in the province. Section C refers to interest paid on government of Canada bonds based on the original distribution, by provinces, of the ninth victory loan bond issue. That depends on the interpretation one wants to put on it. Here is a matter of $36,195,000. I am satisfied that the minister would agree that this is an expenditure by the federal government in the province and not a payment to the province; therefore I do not think the impression should be left that the province got something. I would say that a big share of that money is being received by the banks in the community. It is true that a good portion of that amount will be made available through loans and so on, but at the present time the provincial government does not get it and it is not a gain to the province.

Mr. Sinclair: I did not say it was.

Mr. Hahn: No, I realize you did not. You did not mention that figure at all.

Mr. Sinclair: It is a payment in the province of British Columbia, not to the provincial government.

Mr. Hahn: Very true. I agree with you, but when the banks in the locality have an accumulation of the bonds I am satisfied that they find their way in due course to the central bank.

Mr. Sinclair: The people's savings in the banks buy these bonds.

Mr. Hahn: This is not savings. It is government bonds and in all likelihood they were sold to the banks. I know just as well as the minister does that there are thousands of people who did have these bonds. I know there are many thousands of them who bought them originally with the intention of keeping them as long as possible, in the same way as the minister and other members of the house did, but these people have been forced to sell them to the banks because they needed some ready cash, so they are in the hands of the banks today.

Mr. Sinclair: But when the banks buy them they buy them with the savings of the people who put their deposits in the banks, so the people own these things indirectly.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): And the federal government taxes it away from them.

Mr. Nicholson: Who is making this speech, anyway?

Mr. Hahn: With all this assistance I am sure the house will recognize that we are getting somewhere or nowhere, as the case may be. However, it is interesting to note that with that amount added we have a total amount of $130,870,000. I am not satisfied with the minister's interpretation that the people in the province have that money completely in their hands, because I feel it is in the hands of the banks. I know that where money is in the hands of the banks I have a great deal of difficulty in getting my hands on it.

Mr. Sinclair: Now you are talking like a C.C.F.'er.

Mr. Hahn: Maybe the minister has hopes that I will lean to the C.C.F., but I assure him that will not be the case.

Mr. Speaker, if we add that $130,870,000 to the reported figure given to the province, namely the sum of $270,857,000 which the minister quotes, it will make a grand total of $401,727,000. Against that the minister has said that the government expended $355 million, from which I would take that $36 million, so that we in the province of British Columbia actually are receiving only about $320 million as compared with the total amount we have given to the federal government of some $401 million.

Mr. Pickersgill: You had better send those figures to the Auditor General.

An hon. Member: We would not send them to you, anyway.

Mr. Hahn: On page 2 of this same report we find this; and I am particularly interested in page 2 because in the past two sessions of this parliament I have tried to arrive at some figure that the government would present me with having to do with the amount that is expended in the province of British Columbia in the way of defence production. I am pleased to note in section D of this report, "Estimate of major expenditures by government departments or agencies within the province", subsection (d), "Defence production, $221,000." Here are one-tenth of the people of the country and they receive the tremendous sum of $221,000 out of our total defence production expenditures, according to the estimate as set down here. I am pleased that this order for return gives us in British Columbia an idea of what we might expect will be spent in that province.

An hon. Member: I could not get the figures.

Mr. Hahn: You could not, I could not nor could anyone else because it was not desirable to indicate them at that time. We have set down in the same section, or rather in subsection (j), as far as national defence is concerned in British Columbia, $92,222,000. That is a substantial increase. But, Mr. Speaker, I think everyone will recognize the fact that a national defence expenditure is not an expenditure for the province of British Columbia alone. It is an expenditure that is intended for the over-all defence of Canada like any other training that we might feel would be necessary. In all fairness I do not think this expenditure of $92,222,000 should have been included as an estimate of major expenditure by governmental departments within the province. It is expended within the province. But even if we assume the suggestion is correct that we receive the expenditure in the province—that is for troops and so on who get it—it does not help in the building of the province in the same way as, let us say, defence production.

In any event, $92,222,000 out of the $1¾ billion the minister said we expend on our defence program—he indicated earlier, I am sure, that $1¾ billion is our over-all expenditure; I think that was the figure for defence expenditure estimates, at least—is only one-twentieth Canada's total defence expenditure. If we are going to carry on and recognize that equalization of taxes is a good thing—and I agree that it is a good thing—certainly we should have some semblance of agreement on it. I would say that it is not being carried out in any reasonable way, especially when one stops to consider the vulnerability of the west coast province to attack from those whom we suppose to be our enemies.

The minister said "Where is the money coming from?" He said, "Are we going to increase federal taxes?" I would say to the minister, "No, there is no need to increase federal taxes". I should like to make a suggestion to him, because he has such an optimistic Minister of Trade and Commerce who continually tells us that the gross national product is going to expand. I should like to suggest that there is no need to increase taxes because your taxes are bound to increase every year as your gross national product expands. Hence the Minister of Finance will not have any trouble at all in finding this money. He just must keep the gross national product increasing. Then on your tax basis, or on the basis as it is today, you will receive more in taxes.

I see the minister shaking his head. I do not mean the Minister of Finance; I mean the Minister of Fisheries. From the negative shake of his head am I to understand that he does not agree with me when I say that if the gross national product increases, the Minister of Finance will get more revenue?

Mr. Sinclair: That is when we cut taxes for the Canadian taxpayer, something that is very popular.

Mr. Hahn: Oh, yes; probably we will have that next year for election purposes. But at the same time I am satisfied that this government could make themselves just as popular if they were to help the municipalities and the provincial governments a little bit more. I am particularly interested in the municipalities in an indirect way, through the provincial governments.

Savings were mentioned. The minister said, "How can we save?" Mr. Speaker, the question was raised as to savings in so far as the department could make them. I think it was suggested earlier that the minister for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre was quite in agreement—

Mr. Sinclair: He is not a minister yet.

Mr. Hahn:—that they could have saved several hundred million dollars.

An hon. Member: What do you suggest?

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Hahn: If you will give me a minute or two longer I will be finished.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Hahn: When the estimates of the Department of National Defence were before us we asked that we be privileged to have a special committee set up for the purpose of examining into those estimates. We had certain charges made by highly respected men in Canada, by military men such as General Simonds, who indicated that all was not well in that department.

Mr. Goode: Do you support what General Simonds said.

Mr. Hahn: If the hon. member had been here he would know what I said.

Mr. Goode: I listened to every word the hon. member has said.

Mr. Hahn: In the discussion of the defence estimates I suggested that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. It being ten o'clock perhaps the hon. member for New Westminster will move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Hahn the debate was adjourned.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 24, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED TRANSFER OF WORK TO BY-PASS COLLECTIVE AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the Canadian National Railways is again letting out to private contractors some of its work normally covered by union agreements, with the result that the employees concerned are having to take lower wages? Will the minister look into this practice of by-passing collective agreements to see if it cannot be brought to an end?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman did not give me notice of his question and consequently I am not in position to make any statement with regard to the statement he has made. I am not sure just how far his assertion or the implication of his statement would be borne out by the facts, but I shall make inquiries to see what report I can get from the railway company in that connection.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. When the minister is making his inquiries will he inquire also into a similar move made by the Toronto Terminals Railway Company, a subsidiary in part of Canadian National Railways, with respect to the restaurant in the union station at Toronto?

Mr. Marler: I am not sure that I can accept the suggestion of the hon. member with regard to the Toronto Terminals Railway Company which is not a railroad coming under the Department of Transport, but I shall see what are the facts.

ATOMIC ENERGY

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION WITH UNITED STATES FOR LIMITATION OF THERMONUCLEAR TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of Sir Anthony Eden's statement in the British House of Commons yesterday that his government is prepared to negotiate with the Soviet union for the limitation of further thermonuclear tests, can the minister tell the house if the Canadian government is prepared to use its good offices to persuade the United States government to adopt a similar course?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question suggests that there is a difference in the positions of the United Kingdom and the United States on this important matter. There was no such difference at the session of the disarmament commission of the United Nations which has just concluded its hearings. However, this matter of the limitation of nuclear tests, which is so vitally important, will be considered again by the subcommittee of the disarmament commission when it meets, and before that time there will be discussions in which the Canadian representative will participate with United States, United Kingdom and French representatives.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, arising out of his answer to my first question. Are we to understand that the minister has information that the United States government now takes the same position as that announced by Sir Anthony Eden yesterday in the House of Commons?

Mr. Pearson: I merely said that at the last meeting of the United Nations commission on disarmament when this matter was discussed, the United States and British positions were substantially the same; and I have no reason to believe from Sir Anthony's statement yesterday that those positions are different now.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

YORK SOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister when the government will muster the courage to call the by-election in York South?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): When the by-election is called it will be announced in due course. I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is not a question of courage but a question of general convenience.

Mr. Fleming: Whose convenience? The riding has been vacant for four months now.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The convenience of the public.

Mr. Fleming: Of the government. It seems to be more convenient to deny the people their representation in the house to suit the convenience of the government.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COLONEL BELCHER HOSPITAL, CALGARY—ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ADMIT PATIENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question which concerns me because one of my constituents is involved. As a consequence of the distressing incident disclosed in the Calgary Albertan of July 19, 1956, would the minister explain to the house why it was that the officials of the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary, Alberta, took the inhuman attitude of refusing admittance to a young Strathmore mother who was forced to give birth to her baby on the cement steps of the hospital?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As the reports which appeared in the newspapers in Calgary were contradictory and did not coincide with the reports I received from the departmental officials in Calgary, I have given instructions to convene an independent board of inquiry, which I believe will be meeting this week to investigate the matter and report to me.

THE MINISTRY

REFERENCE TO PORTFOLIO OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): May I ask a question of the Prime Minister. Now that it has become clear why the portfolio of Postmaster General has been left open, does the Prime Minister not feel that two ministers from Saskatchewan would offset the geographical balance of his cabinet, and would it not be preferable now to give consideration to long overdue cabinet representation to the great industrial belt of southern Ontario?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman's very wise remarks will be given all the consideration they deserve.

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED SHOOTING OF CANADIAN SEAMAN AT HAWAII

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister give the house a report on the condition of a seaman from the destroyer Crescent reported shot at Hawaii and on the circumstances surrounding the incident, following which according to reports certain United States marines were detained? If the minister has not the information here, perhaps he could bring a report to the house later.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, I have no detailed information here, but I shall be glad to take the hon. member's question as notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTENTION TO PROCEED WITH INDIAN ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether or not it is intended to proceed at this session with the Indian Act.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Certainly, sir. I hope we shall be proceeding with it before this day is over.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LETHBRIDGE—COST OF OPERATION AND CASES DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): May I ask the Minister of National Revenue when the house might expect his answer to the last question I asked him concerning the matter of the Lethbridge district income tax office?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I expected to be in a position to answer that today, but unfortunately it will have to be postponed for a day or two owing to the absence of one of our officials who was dealing with the matter.

TAXATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

The house resumed, from Monday, July 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for the second reading of Bill No. 442, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into fiscal agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, at the time of adjournment last evening the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) had raised the question whether or not I agreed with the statement made by General Simonds. This matter was discussed to a certain extent on the estimates of the Department of National Defence. I began to explain to him that I agreed that a special committee should be set up for the purpose of studying the estimates of the defence department, and I indicated that I would be prepared to determine following such an investigation, before which I hope General Simonds would be asked to attend, whether any credence should be given to his remarks. I would then determine exactly what stand I would take at that time. In the meantime, such a committee not having been set up, I find it impossible to determine whether or not his statements are accurate.

Mr. Goode: Would the hon. gentleman say that he would be favourable to conscription?

Mr. Hahn: I would say that would depend entirely on what the general had to say and could prove to us.

Mr. Goode: Has the hon. member no mind of his own on the question?

Mr. Hahn: With respect to conscription or any other subject, the decision depends entirely upon the authority with which a person speaks in dealing with defence needs, the information he is able to present and the charges he is able to prove. I would certainly let the hon. member know my stand then. I would say that defence spending should not be cut down but rather should be decentralized and more money should be spent on buildings and so on in the poorer provinces so they would be able to improve their position and would not have to suffer the stigma of being referred to as the poorer provinces.

If certain provinces have not progressed as expected since the time of confederation, then the fault lies not only with the Liberal party but also with the Conservative party because they are the parties that have held office from time to time and have governed the country. Any development that has not taken place in the maritimes is of course the fault of the policies these two parties have had from time to time, and they are equally to blame.

It is not my intention to discuss the virtues or ill effects of the adoption of the Rowell-Sirois commission report. That has been done on more than one occasion since the report was made, but I would say that so far as dominion-provincial fiscal arrangements are concerned we have actually two alternatives. One is to come to an agreement with respect to the equalization of taxation as is proposed by the minister at this time. Alternatively, and I favour the plan that we should bring about the development of the non-industrial areas of Canada so we will not have such a thing as poorer provinces.

Since 1945 the federal government has been able to look after peacetime, wartime and defence needs. It has reduced the national debt. It has also reduced the income tax level by some 19 per cent since pre-Korean war days. Yesterday the Minister of Fisheries asked where the money was coming from for the increases we propose with respect to the equalization grants. I think he would agree in this instance that these tax cuts, which were made for election purposes, most notably to serve his own party's ends, certainly did not help the Canadian public very much as such but particularly helped those areas where they had heavy income taxes. These were not the poorer provinces, so it was a case again of giving income tax cuts to those provinces that were not in need of money.

If we are going to follow through the plan of equalization, I feel that it would have been more proper to have kept the rates as they were and to have passed on increased assistance to the provinces through municipal aid and otherwise. As long as private and public investment continues its expansion in this country I contend that the federal government will gain more revenue. That expansion, of course, will increase the gross national product, as I indicated yesterday, and so the government through taxation will feel the effects in its coffers of this increase in the gross national product.

The provinces, of course, have their headaches and I shall probably deal with some of them shortly. The federal government gets the major share of the profits from industrial development through the expansion of corporation taxes and otherwise, and leaves the provinces and more particularly the municipal districts to supply all services such as communication and conservation and development. It is only logical, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government should shoulder a substantial portion of that cost. I would say there is no need for a change in the British North America Act as such. What we need actually is mutual agreement with respect to fiscal responsibility. If we should have a reassessment of responsibility I feel that we could reach a mutual agreement between the provinces and the federal government, something which is lacking today.

I am one who is opposed to the federal government becoming the caretaker of the provinces. I absolutely disagree with the principle that is involved, namely that the federal government should collect all the taxes and hand them out to the provinces and to the municipal districts to do with as they wish. I say that for the following reason. From time to time we find that those who are given money very freely, as this would apparently be given, have become irresponsible in their methods of handling those funds. While I recognize the fact that the federal government, through the collection of these taxes, simplifies collections and that therefore the Canadian taxpayer will get more for his dollar in so far as the government will receive more, at the same time that advantage would be lost if any irresponsibility were to set in. The proper answer would be the development of the poorer provinces in an effort to bring them up to the standard of the richer provinces.

I contend that the unity of Canada will depend not on non-interference by the federal government in provincial affairs but rather upon federal participation in the development of these provinces. Under the circumstances, because of the lack of development in this country on an equal basis from the maritimes to British Columbia, I must accordingly agree that the need exists for an equalization in taxation to assist these poorer provinces. At the same time I must favour the money being spent for the development of those areas that are not being developed today.

I would say that from an equalization of grants to those provinces it does not necessarily follow that we shall have an equalization of expenditures in those provinces, by reason of the fact that each province has different problems. We have welfare differences in each province. My own province, by way of example, has a health and welfare program which includes a form of health insurance. We also have additional assistance to old age pensioners or senior citizens, whichever you wish to call them, who are in need. We have in the provinces problems that are peculiar to each, such as road building in British Columbia which is much more costly than it would be in Saskatchewan or Prince Edward Island. Each province has the problem of education and the municipal problems peculiar to that province.

There is one place where the federal authority might be of assistance in taking the load from the provinces in this field of education. If the government were to listen to its member from Victoria, British Columbia, who has from time to time expressed the view that a greater expenditure on technical training would be of inestimable value to the provinces, it would be of assistance. I would say that none of that load ought to be carried by the provinces. The federal authority would not be interfering with education by developing the field of technical training, in view of the fact that there is such a need in this country today for such trained people. We have the problems of conservation peculiar to each province, such as the forest production in my own province as compared with other provinces such as Prince Edward Island. We have the agricultural problems in Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island as compared with the manufacturing production of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia. There is the problem of resource development, and the lack of natural resources which is apparent in some of these poorer provinces. We do have specific centralization of population and industry in certain provinces which causes an imbalance, as I see it, within the nation itself. This makes it impossible for these poorer provinces to develop as I feel they should develop. We have the problem of marketing as it applies to each individual province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I maintain it is a responsibility of the government of Canada to develop Canada on a more equitable basis and so prevent the federal government from becoming a caretaker government. It is my contention that if this government were to expend some of its surplus in the development of areas that are today considered the poorer provinces, eventually those provinces would reach a point where they would no longer be so considered, thereby doing away with the need for this parliament to continually revise the tax agreements with the various provinces. The equalization grants as I consider them, mean that a certain amount of this money is being poured down the drain. As I have indicated at other times, there are only so many dollars available from the Canadian taxpayer, and those dollars should be utilized to the greatest advantage of each province in Canada.

In closing I can only urge that this government use some of the surpluses it has from time to time through the growth of the country and the increase in the gross national product for the extension of technical training, for industrial development and to make funds available through the industrial bank to secondary industry to a greater extent than it is today; to develop power and resources in the various provinces that have no such resources and power available, and to the utilization of our natural resources to the absolute maximum.

If this government follows through with the tax agreement program I am satisfied that five years from now we shall be asked to discuss once again a program of equalization grants for the provinces. In any event this bill should not be passed until such time as we have some indication from the provinces that they are prepared to accept it.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, if I needed any excuse for intervening in this debate on second reading I think possibly the references that were made by certain maritime members of parliament to conditions in the maritimes would be that excuse. I refer to government maritime members of parliament, who talk about the good conditions that prevail in the maritimes today. They have been called—in particular the member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Kirk)—the Pollyannas of this parliament. If you look at the word "Pollyanna" I think you will find that it is the name of the heroine in a novel who was accused of pure, blind optimism.

In this connection, editorials have appeared in the maritime provinces dealing with the utterances of this member and some other maritime government members. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, it is not very often that we have harsh editorials in the papers in the maritimes. Whether that be good or bad I do not know. I should like to refer briefly to the first paragraph of an editorial in the Moncton Transcript.

> Strange indeed are the utterances of some of the members of parliament who, while representing constituencies in the maritime provinces, persist in painting a more roseate picture of conditions here than the facts warrant. Latest Pollyanna seeking to convince the maritimes that all is well and that this section of Canada is enjoying the same degree of prosperity that prevails in other parts of the nation, is T. A. M. Kirk, parliamentary assistant to the Postmaster General and Liberal member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare.

There were some others from the maritimes, Mr. Speaker, who looked at this new legislation through rose-tinted glasses and, as I say, if I wanted an excuse for my brief remarks I can say it was the remarks of those hon. members. But I would prefer simply to say that this is a last ditch appeal to see whether New Brunswick and the maritimes can possibly have one or two somewhat larger crumbs from the plentiful and bounteous table that is Canada.

Whether we be federal politicians, provincial politicians or poor Canadian taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, we have two duties to perform in looking at Bill 442. First of all we have to consider the constitutional aspect of it. I am not qualified, and I do not have the time, to go into its details. Whether one is from a poor or a rich province I feel that one also has to consider the bill from the historical and constitutional angle. We have the history of dominion-provincial relations and the various agreements already on the record. The tendency toward increasing centralization is something that has to be watched, but I shall leave that to the experts. However, the second point—and this is the point we actually have to face up to—that I should like to touch on is what, for want of a better name, I have called the dollars and cents aspect of it.

This legislation has been said to be necessary, of course, to provide a reasonable level of provincial services without an abnormal burden of taxation. I think those are the words of the Prime Minister in letters to the premiers, and they are also already on the record.

I want to take a minute to indicate some of the onerous taxation burdens borne by the province of New Brunswick. I think these are facts and figures which have not yet been brought to the attention of this house. First of all I should like to refer to our problem in connection with education, and the financing we must do in New Brunswick. A royal commission sat last year which dealt quite extensively with the problem of school financing. It was found that the people of New Brunswick spend a higher proportion of their personal income on education than do the people of any other Canadian province, 3·9 per cent in the last recorded year as against 2·7 per cent for Ontario and 2·8 per cent for Canada generally. Of course I could go on to point out how that disparity is increased because our personal income is lower.

This royal commission noted that whereas New Brunswick has 4·4 per cent of Canada's school enrolment it has only 2·2 per cent of Canada's income. Ontario with 32 per cent of the total school enrolment has 40 per cent of Canada's income. New Brunswick lacks educationally because it lacks economically. Then we are faced with the shocking fact that although New Brunswick is making the biggest effort of any province to provide proper educational facilities, it falls far short of the mark.

In that respect I should like to refer to sets of figures which have already been put on the record. First of all is the statement by the leader of the C.C.F. party, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), who gave the per capita personal income by provinces. It was shown that in 1954 New Brunswick had a per capita income of $795, which was a little over half that of Ontario which was the highest with $1,470. The average for all Canada was $1,193.

The third set of figures I should like to place on the record deals with the debt of the provinces. The heavy financial burden of New Brunswick has now reached the stage where our per capita provincial debt is $332.07 as against the national average of $238.57, and a low of $99.22 in the case of Alberta. We have the highest provincial debt of any province in Canada. I have already indicated that we carry the highest educational burden of any province in Canada.

The next set of figures which I wish to place on the record was mentioned briefly by the premier of the province at the conference held on March 9. They are significant figures which were advanced as the basis of the formula proposed at that time by the province. They indicate the percentage of provincial and municipal revenue from all local sources paid out of personal income, and the percentage they bore to the total personal income of the province. New Brunswick was highest again with 11·24 per cent, the lowest being Newfoundland which was nearly half with 6·22 per cent. At that conference the premier made this statement:

> The burden of taxation in New Brunswick is very onerous indeed—for the year 1953, it took 41 per cent more of the personal income of the people of New Brunswick than of the average Canadian, and this too out of a personal income only two-thirds of the Canadian average.

Now I should like to refer to the recognition that has been given by certain people in this country to the perilous condition existing in New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces generally. First of all we had the statement by the financial critic of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell), during the budget debate. He referred to the serious condition which exists in the maritimes and the need for more consideration in the budget and at a later time. It was a straightforward, frank appraisal of the situation. I think it was one of the first national recognitions of the problem facing our province.

Next was the statement made by Mr. Walter L. Gordon in connection with the early sittings of the Gordon commission, who said:

> Canadians need more appreciation of the problems faced in other parts of their country. For instance, New Brunswick is faced with a shortage of cheap electrical power.

Mr. Gordon was very careful to be impartial, but the fact is that there was a further recognition of our problem. Then followed a statement made by the Prime Minister on April 24 at the labour convention in Toronto, when he recognized the peculiar problems which exist in the Atlantic provinces and perhaps mistakenly said it was essential that we should come up with some initiative ourselves in order to receive consideration.

The next important recognition of the growing problem is to be found in a meeting at Sackville sponsored by Mount Allison University and attended by the premiers of the three maritime provinces. This has been referred to before, but I think the statement by Premier Matheson of Prince Edward Island bears repetition. He reiterated his view that Prince Edward Island had not in any way, shape or form got a fair deal out of the federal-provincial conference, that Prince Edward Island probably got the worst deal of all. Premier Hicks also referred to some of the problems down there and guessed that the project would be more harmful than helpful. Those are statements by Liberal premiers of two provinces of Canada.

Then, probably as a culmination of our fears and indignation, a meeting was held on July 9 in Fredericton of the four premiers of the Atlantic provinces. That was a significant meeting. It was unusual that they should sit in that way. I believe it was an omen for the future. It was an indication that we are beginning to co-operate. I could refer to some of the statements made there, but I believe certain of them are already on the record. Surely the Prime Minister and this government will take some recognition of this meeting. It always amuses—perhaps I should not use that word—or delights me to hear Premier Smallwood speak. He is in the unfortunate position, perhaps, of having to speak last at these conferences, due to the fact that Newfoundland came into confederation in the tenth position.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with the last word?

Mr. Bell: Premier Smallwood was very critical of this government and their attitude toward conditions in the Atlantic provinces. Another meeting of this group is to be held in Halifax in the near future. Although I do not have any say as to who is to be invited, I should like to see members of parliament invited, particularly the three cabinet ministers from the maritimes. I do not know what the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Kirk) or the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) would say if they were invited after what they have said in this house, but they might attend such a meeting and say some of the things they have said here. I do feel it would be an advantage if federal members, particularly cabinet ministers, were invited to this conference.

Now we come to the proposals that were made by New Brunswick, and I think the ones from Nova Scotia were similar or at least they arrived at similar demands; they were the same in principle. We asked in the province of New Brunswick that special recognition be given to our fiscal needs. We suggested a fiscal need factor. It is in our statement. I shall not bother the house now with the details, but it was based on the request that we be allowed to bring up our income to 85 per cent of the national average. That is not too much to request. We did not go to 100 per cent. We did not say we wanted as much as the rest of the people of Canada. We only said in our modest way that 85 per cent would be good enough.

So we had the suggestion made of a fiscal need factor, some sort of adjustment that would help the poor provinces. Of course it has been said that the result of the proposals made today will be to make the poor provinces poorer and the rich provinces richer.

Mr. Harris: To the contrary.

Mr. Bell: That is true. There have been some contradictory remarks in that respect about this, but the actual fact, and the figures that we have—

Mr. Harris: Who said that they would make the poor provinces poorer?

Mr. Bell: For one I shall quote Mr. Harvey Perry. He does not use that exact quotation here, but I think his words will convey the same impression, and he has expressed it better than I can. He says this:

> In principle the new offer comes within shooting distance of the sort of solution the more needy provinces have proposed at the federal-provincial conferences. They argued that their low-income status should be recognized through grants which would bring their means up to the level of the wealthier provinces. The combination of "standard tax yield" grants and "equalization" grants is in essence a concession to this approach. However, it is less favourable than the formula they proposed.

That is significant.

> Furthermore the relative improvement in the position of the four Atlantic provinces (taking these as the more needy provinces) is less marked under the new scheme of "equalized tax potential" on a per capita measurement than would be expected, because under the tax rental agreements these provinces were receiving a relatively higher per capita payment than most other provinces.

Then he deals with the question of statutory grants, to which I shall come in a minute. That is a statement that was made at that time, and it is made by an expert on this. I shall not go on and explain in my plain English just what has happened to these grants, but I think that it is significant that the premiers themselves—the Liberal premiers too—are dissatisfied with these new terms. I am asking here today when we are going to get this recognition that everybody inside and outside this house has been talking about.

Now I come to the important part of my few remarks, and I hope the Minister of Finance will reply. It was said—I do not have the exact quotation here—that we should be given some further statutory grant that would compare with the grants set out by the Duncan and White commissions. We came up with our proposals for equalization payments on fiscal need. Evidently they have been turned down, but I should like to know what the position is going to be now that the alternative demand has been made by New Brunswick—and I think the other provinces also referred to it in their briefs—for some sort of new statutory grant that would be similar to the Duncan commission grant of 1926 and the White commission grant of 1934. They would now have to be scaled upward with reference to our present provincial budgets, and it is estimated that we would want about $20 million to bring us up to the demands that we felt were reasonable. I feel that the minister owes it to the maritimes to very sincerely reply as to what is going to be the fate of that proposal.

Mr. Perry goes on to say:

> One of the elements under the tax rental agreements which produced this relative advantage was the statutory subsidies. No mention is made in the Prime Minister's letter of the manner in which they will be treated under the new offer. They no doubt will be continued to be paid—

I hope his optimism is not unfounded.

> —but whether they are paid in addition to the amounts offered or are offset against them will be of very material consequence. In total they amount to about $20 million, of which $6 million goes to the Atlantic provinces.

I was more optimistic.

Mr. Harris: There is nothing whatever in this bill about statutory subsidies.

Mr. Bell: I realize that, but I think this is important because it affects our consideration of it. I looked through the bill and I went through every speech the minister has made. I feel he owes it to us to say what the future policy is going to be in this regard. This is all part of the proposals. He has either to dismiss it or mention it in some way. If we are going to get those statutory grants, I am not saying that I would support the legislation, because it has too many other undesirable factors, but it certainly would cut down my criticism if we could have a frank statement about what the future is going to be for those grants.

Mr. Harris: I can make a statement now. As I say, there is nothing in this bill that affects the subsidies and grants; therefore they are going to continue to be paid.

Mr. Bell: Are they going to be given the new consideration that was asked for in our proposal regarding the tax rental agreements?

Mr. Harris: The answer to that is that we are dealing with the division of the three particular tax fields at this time. Other matters are matters of consideration separate from those.

Mr. Bell: It will be the same old story, as far as I am concerned. It is the same old eyewash, whether it comes from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. These smokescreens do not mean anything to me. When the government is again considering the position of Newfoundland in confederation, as is provided under their agreement, under the royal commission that will be set up, I would suggest very seriously that the three maritime provinces be included in that reference. It would save money and it would be worth while. It would give the government a way out to save face, and that is what it is after now.

It is amusing to me. The Minister of Finance spoke in the pipe-line debate. I said he made a good speech and I enjoyed it, but as he developed the picture throughout Canada he talked of pipe lines and seaways and this and that, and then he stopped. I suppose he would say that he was only getting his breath, but I know he was going to go on to something else. We asked, "How about the maritimes?" The only thing he could think of was some of the old public works hand-outs in the ports of Saint John and Halifax and a few other post-election promises—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Pre-election promises.

Mr. Bell: Some of those pre-election promises that turned out to be post-election corpses. I suggest very seriously that consideration be given to the inclusion of the maritime provinces before this royal commission. We are seriously dissatisfied with the treatment we have been given under this new legislation. We are disappointed in the Liberal members from the maritimes who had the temerity to get up in this house and talk about the promises and the hand-outs that have been given to the maritimes.

When it comes to talking about the maritimes I have no pride left. I do not care whether it is crumbs we are looking for or assistance that will give us a little more wealth or what it is; we have to have consideration, and I think the minister realizes it now. The only problem is, how is the minister going to get out of the hole he is in? He knows the result of the New Brunswick election and the impending result in Nova Scotia, which the Liberals fear very much. All will bear out the tale that this government has forgotten the maritime provinces. They played on the sectionalism of this country, one area against another. We came up here with our proposals in a sensible, nonpartisan way. When the Beechwood proposals for hydro development were presented to the legislature of New Brunswick the opposition agreed to those proposals both times. That is a point I should like you to note. Why is it that the Liberal opposition in New Brunswick agrees to our two major demands, yet the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) gets up in the house and says something entirely different?

These are my thoughts, Mr. Speaker. I hope the next time we come up here with a carefully laid out plan for the consideration of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and others, the Minister of Finance will not sit back and smile and say that it is an ingenious plan, as he is supposed to have said. I hope he will definitely give it the consideration that is its due.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is quite apparent that the hon. member for Charlotte is not too popular with the Tory members from the province of New Brunswick. I believe that may be a result of my speaking—

Mr. Bell: Is this going to be another personal attack?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not interrupt you. Why don't you sit there and take it?

Mr. Bell: I just want to know whether it is going to be sensible, so I can decide whether to stay.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Don't get angry; sit there and take it for a minute. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat wondered what I would do if I were called into one of these meetings of the governments of the maritime provinces. Let me say at the outset that if I were called into such a meeting, and particularly if I were the premier of any one of the maritime provinces, I certainly would not bite the hand that is trying to help me. That is my first suggestion. Take that down, the exact words I have used, and I will tell you why I use those words. I should like the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) and some of the other Tories to get up and show me where any Tory government since confederation ever made a subsidy payment of any kind to any one of the maritime provinces, just once. I lived down there when we had a Tory government—

Mr. Nowlan: That is untrue.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —and I should like them to show me when any Tory government ever made a subsidy payment of any kind to any one of the maritime provinces at any time other than this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes, and listen carefully. They paid a dole of 20 cents a day in the 1930's. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert has suggested that this agreement can be helpful in no way to the province of New Brunswick. Surely no intelligent person would argue that an increase of 20 per cent is not a help. Surely no intelligent person would argue that the province of New Brunswick, from which $7 million is taken from these tax fields and to which over $19 million is returned, is getting a bad deal.

The hon. member has painted a very gloomy picture of conditions in New Brunswick. I will ask him to go back to the New Year's message to the people of New Brunswick by the Tory premier, on New Year's eve. I can assure you there was no gloom in that message. If there ever was a province, according to him, that could look forward to the greatest era of prosperity in the history of Canada it was the province of New Brunswick. I listened to him on the radio and he did not have a complaint.

I want to go back for a few minutes to the time this same premier was elected in 1952. He was elected on an economy program, and the theme of his election campaign was that they did not need the revenue that was being spent in the province of New Brunswick and that he could run the province in a much better way with much less revenue. That was the plea he made for election. He was elected on an economy program.

At that time the province of New Brunswick was being paid about $13½ million under these agreements. That amount has been increased since 1952 to over $19 million and still the premier of New Brunswick is not satisfied, is not happy and says he is being pushed around. I believe in giving credit where credit is due. If there ever was a government since confederation that has tried to do everything it could for the maritime province it is the government with which I am associated, and proudly associated.

In the last fiscal year $130 million was spent in the province of New Brunswick by the federal government. When my friends to the left suggest to me that this is a niggardly amount I just cannot agree with them. When the hon. member for Saint John-Albert stands up and tries to make the members of the house or the people of my province believe that we are not being treated fairly I just cannot take that kind of stuff because I believe, as I said before, in giving credit where credit is due. Conditions in New Brunswick are a whole lot different with a Liberal government at Ottawa than they ever were with a Tory government at Ottawa.

There is one other suggestion I should like to make to the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. The premiers of Ontario and Quebec are very much dissatisfied with the agreements. Is the hon. member gullible enough to think, if we had a Tory government at Ottawa working with Premier Frost, that Premier Frost would take the revenues from Ontario—80 per cent of the revenues in this country are collected from Ontario and Quebec—and give the greater portion of them to the maritime provinces? Do you think that is what Premier Frost is working for?

Mr. Fleming: Yes.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If you are gullible enough to accept that, don't try to push it down my throat, because I do not think Premier Frost has any interest other than the province of Ontario.

Mr. Fleming: That is silly.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have heard enough silly remarks from the hon. member who has interjected. Let me give you one he made yesterday. He insinuated yesterday that the Minister of Finance was playing politics with these agreements, and that he wanted to able to declare a great surplus next year because it was going to be an election year.

Mr. Rowe: That is obvious.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If ever I heard politics played since I came into the House of Commons the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) played politics yesterday. In his closing remarks he named the ten provinces in succession. He said that Prince Edward Island was not satisfied. Whoever heard of any provincial premier being satisfied with any sort of agreement where there was any hope of getting more? That is just crazy, and we all know it. The hon. member started with Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland and ended up with British Columbia. He made a plea to the voters. Yet he will accuse someone else of playing politics with this issue.

An hon. Member: To whom is your plea made?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am just stating the facts and my appreciation for what has been done for my people. That is what I am doing.

Mr. Bell: What about the last election in New Brunswick?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): My statements are based on facts and not on rumours, because I have lived there for quite a long time. As I stated a few minutes ago, I lived there when we had a Tory government at Ottawa and I know what we can expect again if that happens.

Mr. Montgomery: A lot better times.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I remember when people were selling potatoes for 10 cents a barrel in your riding and no one but a Tory could sell them. We all remember that. We all remember that not one barrel could be sold by a Liberal.

An hon. Member: Not a five-cent piece.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am stating the facts.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Would the hon. member permit one question?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Definitely.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): He has just suggested that if a Conservative government were in office it is conceivable that Ontario and Quebec might have received more than under the present agreement. Does he therefore suggest that under the existing agreement they are receiving less than they might under other circumstances?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I did not say anything of the kind. I referred to the plea that Premier Frost was making, with the assistance of the Ontario Tories. God knows it would never elect a Tory government here, but if that should happen do you think for one minute Premier Frost would be as generous with Ontario revenues as far as the maritime provinces are concerned as this government is?

Mr. Fleming: More so. He has said so.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If he is going to be more generous—

Mr. Fleming: His plea has been for all the provinces.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —then his generosity is much greater than the generosity of the leader of your party.

Mr. Rowe: He did the same thing.

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can remember when these agreements were under discussion in 1945 and the leader of your party put his portfolio under his arm, scuttled the conference and went home, so don't tell me about your generosity.

Mr. Rowe: We all went home last time.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The leader of the Conservative party scuttled that conference.

Mr. Fleming: It was the leader of the government that scuttled that conference, and you know it. It was adjourned sine die and they were to be brought back, but this government never called them back.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There are some of the greatest dreamers in the Tory party that I ever heard of. I was here at the time and I watched the conference that took place and I know exactly who scuttled that conference. I know why it was scuttled. It was scuttled because George Drew did not want to share any part of the wealth of Ontario with anyone else—

Mr. Fleming: That is as false as anything can be.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): —and I do not believe that his generosity would extend one bit further if he were prime minister of this country.

Mr. Rowe: You know you are not telling the truth there.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That is my opinion.

Mr. Rowe: That is your opinion, but it is not the truth.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It is my opinion.

Mr. Rowe: It is just an opinion and it is false at that.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have heard lots of false things here. The hon. member who has just interrupted me has never made a sensible speech since he has been here. They have all been full of humour but nothing else.

Mr. Rowe: That is another one of your opinions.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes, that is another opinion. I do not know why it is that when a Liberal member gets to his feet to express his views he is continually interrupted. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert spoke for 20 or 25 minutes. I did not interrupt him at any time. I sat in my seat quietly knowing that two-thirds of the remarks he was putting on the record were crazy. However, I still sat there and said nothing. I had nothing to say. But the very moment I get to my feet he gets up in that snarling way, then changes his mind and resumes his seat.

Mr. Hodgson: You are not snarling, are you?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): No, I am keeping very cool and I hope to be able to say what I want to say, because I believe it should be said.

There is another thing that I want to say at this point. I believe that when the time comes that we are through debating this subject, we should know exactly where the members of this house stand. I should like to know whether the hon. member for Saint John-Albert will get to his feet and vote against the subsidy payment of $20 million to our province, and then explain to the people what we would do without it. I hope he has the opportunity of doing that, because if the proposal were defeated we would be without $20 million this year. With a total revenue of only $50 million, where would the province of New Brunswick go if that $20 million were taken from it?

Mr. Hodgson: They would get some help.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It would not come from the Tories.

Mr. Rowe: That is your opinion.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It never did come from the Tories. I will go that far.

Mr. Rowe: That is another opinion.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): There is no question in my mind that there are many things we need in the maritime provinces, and there is no doubt that there are many things we will receive in the maritime provinces, but I assure you that no appreciation is shown by the Conservative members for that province of what has been done. I have heard references made to the Liberal premiers of the other provinces. I do not hesitate for one moment in criticizing the Liberal premiers of the other provinces because I believe that they are unfair in the statements they have made. I have never hesitated to say that. I refer to the premier of Nova Scotia, the premier of Prince Edward Island and the premier of Newfoundland. I do not agree with what they have said.

Mr. Bell: How about the Liberal leader in New Brunswick?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I will say this for him. He has never said that we had too much revenue and then come begging for more. The premier we have now did not need the revenue we had in 1952. That has increased by $7 million, and he still says it is not enough.

Mr. Bell: Do you agree with his stand on Beechwood and on the tax proposal?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not agree with him at all on the Beechwood project. I have stated that.

Mr. Fleming: Do you agree with his stand on the tax proposals?

Mr. Bell: Do you agree with anybody?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes; I agree with the Minister of Finance sitting there on the opposite side of the chamber, in what he is trying to do for my province. Just before I resume my seat may I say that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert has brought up another matter that I want to mention. He speaks about the way in which we have been treated. There is a section of the trans-Canada highway that is being built in my province. This government is paying 90 per cent of the cost of that highway, but we never get any credit. The hon. member would come here and say we should pay 103 per cent of the cost of that trans-Canada highway. Two friends of mine wanted to get a job there last week. They could not do so. Any man who works on the highway must get a certificate from a Tory M.L.A., yet we pay 90 per cent of the cost. Deny that statement if you wish to do so, and I can bring the proof.

An hon. Member: It is the same in Quebec.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yet the federal government is paying 90 per cent of the cost of it.

Mr. Montgomery: Would the hon. member name the man from whom they must get certificates?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes; any Tory in the province of New Brunswick, or the minister of public works. I am just putting the facts on the record. The $20 million that will be paid to our province by the federal government is used for one purpose only; that is, to take care of the friends of the premier. But I still support the proposal. When the cheque comes to Fredericton, as I submitted on one other occasion, instructions have been given by our premier that not one single dollar of that money that comes from Ottawa can be of any benefit to a Liberal. It must be used for his own friends.

Mr. Hodgson: Mackenzie King said "Not a five-cent piece to a Tory province".

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I still support the proposal, because I know we cannot get along in the province of New Brunswick without it. It is a measure that was fought for by Hon. J. B. McNair, who was premier of New Brunswick at the time. He stood in the Senate chamber in this building, and when the then prime minister said it would be impossible to renew the agreement unless all the provinces agreed—and I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) will agree with me—he said "Regardless of whether we all agree, we must have it in the province of New Brunswick". If it is such a bad deal as these premiers say it is, why do they all want to make it a statutory matter instead of having to come back every five years and renew it? I just cannot understand the approach they take. They tell us it is not a good agreement but they want it made final and definite for ever more. It is quite evident, in so far as I am concerned, that it is most beneficial to every one of the maritime provinces and in fact to at least seven out of the ten provinces of this country of ours.

I am now going to resume my seat, and I hope the hon. member for Saint John-Albert will not suggest on another occasion that the Liberal members from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick get up here trying to play politics on some measure.

Mr. Bell: I did not say that.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): You suggested that, because you said I was not stating facts. If I thought you were not stating facts I would think you were playing politics.

Mr. Hodgson: You did not state any facts; you just stated your opinion.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I have stated facts. The figures prove it. The taxes raised by the province would provide a revenue of about $7 million. They rent the field to the federal government, and in place of that $7 million they are paying the province of New Brunswick over $19 million. Judge for yourself whether or not it is a good measure.

Mr. Fleming: It is not good enough.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It would not be good enough for a Tory unless he was doing it; and if he was doing it, it would be nothing.

Mr. Fleming: It would be a great deal more.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): If there were a Tory government sitting here, no one can convince me that they would try to distribute anything that would be of any benefit to anyone other than themselves.

Mr. Fleming: Your mind is closed.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): My mind is closed so far as Toryism is concerned, because I have gone through it. I have gone through enough Toryism to know exactly the extent to which their generosity extends. I know it completely.

[Mr. Stuart (Charlotte).]

Mr. Fleming: What about the five-cent piece attitude of Mackenzie King?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can tell you that there is not much difference between the five cent frame of mind and the 20 cents a day in a work camp for young men all over this country. I am sure no one could call that generosity.

An hon. Member: Nineteen cents.

Mr. Fleming: You know what the people of New Brunswick said last month by their ballots.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Nineteen cents a day is correct.

Mr. Fleming: You know what the people of New Brunswick said last month.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Yes, and I know what the people of New Brunswick said in the federal election in 1935, what they have continued to say ever since then, and what they will continue to say in the next election.

Mr. Fleming: Why not bring on that next election very quickly instead of putting it off?

Mr. McCann: Oh, you don't want it at all.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I will say this to the hon. member for Eglinton. The time may yet come when I will have the flag draped over my desk. All we can do is wait and see. Before I sit down I just wish to add another remark. I feel it is a good agreement. I believe sincerely that it will be most helpful to every citizen in the province of New Brunswick, along with the other social services that have been provided, but not by the Tories. Each and every one of the social services they have enjoyed was provided for them by this government. I do not doubt that some of them might be taken away by a Tory government, but I assure you that they will never be added to by such a government.

Mr. Fleming: That is the same old story. It is false Liberal propaganda of the most shameful variety.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I know the hon. member dislikes me—

Mr. Fleming: I do not dislike you, but I dislike falsehood.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I will say this in all sincerity, the hon. member is one of the old, dyed in the wool, flag-waving Tories in this country. There are not many of them left, but he is an honest, sincere, flag-waving Tory.

Mr. Hodgson: What are you, an old flag-stomping Grit?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am a Grit.

Mr. Ferguson: I am proud to wave it on all occasions; are you?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Not when it is used for deceitful purposes, as it was used for deceitful purposes in 1911. When it is used for political purposes I have not any use for it.

Mr. Ferguson: Use it on every occasion.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): It should not be used for draping desks.

Mr. Ferguson: It is the greatest flag that has ever flown in the world. Wave it on all occasions.

An hon. Member: Who is the stranger we have?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I agree it is the greatest flag. I believe, Mr. Speaker, it is useless; apparently I have touched on a very sensitive subject. I realized it was sensitive when I mentioned it, because it has been used on so many occasions for that one purpose only.

Mr. Hodgson: By the Grits.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The hon. member behind says, "By the Grits". Any time I have ever seen a Grit use a flag it was used for a noble purpose. I have yet to see it used in an election campaign to try to deceive the people; never in my memory.

Mr. Ferguson: Any time is the time to wave the flag. Wave it on every occasion. The flag can never be waved on a wrong occasion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I guess I have created a lot of heat. I appreciate the opportunity of expressing my views. Again I would say that I believe my views will be endorsed by the great majority of the citizens of the country.

Mr. Fleming: When?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Now and at the time of the next election.

Mr. Fleming: When will that be?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): My guess would be about June, 1958, because I think nothing would please the hon. member for Eglinton more than to see it delayed for a couple of years to see if the Tories could not make some gains.

Mr. Fleming: What rot! Why do you not bring it on now if you are so confident?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I am going to suggest that date, but nothing would please the hon. member more than the opportunity to delay it for three years because their chances of getting anywhere today are nil.

Mr. Fleming: That proves you are crazy. All doubts are removed.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I may be crazy, but I could never take any satisfaction out of having a flag draped over my desk and, like a soldier, marching out through the door. I have never played politics to the extent that I wanted that sort of publicity, publicity apparently of which the hon. member for Eglinton is very proud, as are some of his friends. It is publicity that I would not want. I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the forgotten Canadian so far as this bill and these taxation arrangements are concerned. The Minister of Finance and other government spokesmen speaking in support of this legislation contend that it is designed to meet the need for some reallocation of revenues, and to assist the various governments to meet their financial responsibilities. Other members of this party, and other members in the house, have dealt with the question as to whether or not this bill goes any distance in enabling the various governments to cope with those responsibilities. It seems to me, as one who has listened to this debate both at the resolution stage and on second reading, that there is a forgotten Canadian so far as this bill and these arrangements are concerned. I refer to our old age pensioners.

I make no apology, Mr. Speaker, for mentioning old age pensions in connection with this bill; for government spokesmen themselves, in their effort to persuade parliament and the country that the federal government is doing something magnanimous toward the provinces, have drawn attention repeatedly to the amount of money that goes from the federal treasury toward old age pensions and other forms of social security.

We in this group are proud of the extent to which Canada has moved in the direction of social security. We are proud of the fact, and we believe we played some part in it, that some of our social security at any rate has been established on a basis of universality. We hope the day will come when we will have an over-all social security program based on that principle of universality, so that all Canadians will have certain guarantees which we believe are their right because of the contribution that all Canadians make to the economy and well-being of this country.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me most regrettable, in fact so far as I am concerned it is quite unforgivable, that in these times when the federal government has been entering into new taxation arrangements; in these times when the government claims to have been facing up to the financial responsibilities of the federal government and the various provincial governments, it has apparently given no consideration to the financial needs or the plight of our old age pensioners.

Mr. Harris: How would you do that in this bill?

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Finance and others on his side of the house, as I have already said, have made reference to what the government is spending on old age pensions as part of the total relationship between the federal government and the provinces with respect to the sharing of the revenues of this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a serious point of order.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister why he did not rise on the same point of order yesterday when the Minister of Fisheries was talking about old age pensions.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, you may not. I have the floor. I rise on a point of order. I have sat and listened patiently hour after hour throughout this session to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and he has spent very little time listening to me. I suggest that he really sit down in his seat and allow me to say what I have to say on the point of order.

I believe that it is not an exaggeration to say, and I am speaking directly on the point of order, that there has not been one speech made in this debate yet relating to the bill except the speech made by my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries, who did deal with the bill. But most of the members do not pretend to know the rules, certainly most of the members do not set themselves up as experts on the rules. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has bored this house hour after hour since January on points of order.

Mr. Rowe: What is your point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is that the principle of this bill has to do with certain tax arrangements between the provincial governments and the federal government, and with nothing else; and that it is quite proper for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to point out that he can afford only so much for this purpose because he is spending money for other purposes, and that it is quite proper for my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries to do the same thing. But it is an abuse of the rules, and a gross abuse of the rules, for hon. members, under the colour of talking about this bill, to rise in their places and make a plea for something entirely different. I would ask, sir, that you make a ruling on this point of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to the point of order? The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration contends that it is quite proper for the Minister of Finance to refer to old age pensions and that it is quite proper for the Minister of Fisheries to refer to old age pensions, but the moment the member for Winnipeg North Centre refers to—

Mr. Pickersgill: Starts to make a speech about them.

Mr. Knowles: —old age pensions he raises a point of order. Mr. Speaker, my contention is that this debate, and properly so, if one will look at the explanatory notes with reference to the bill, has ranged over the whole field of financial arrangements between the federal government and the provinces. Government spokesmen themselves have introduced time and again the question of old age pensions and the money paid out in old age pensions as part of the over-all fiscal arrangements between the federal government and the provinces. Other members have been permitted to discuss not only this question but all kinds of questions, such as the discussion we had today between the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. member for Charlotte. We have had questions affecting the economy of the country in all its aspects; but it remained for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to suggest that the member for Winnipeg North Centre should not talk about old age pensions, the expenditure of money on which is definitely a part of the fiscal arrangements between the federal government and the provinces.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, the ruling that you should make is that there should be no discrimination against the member for Winnipeg North Centre that has not been practised against the Minister of Fisheries, the Minister of Finance or any other government spokesman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has raised a point of order which I believe is only partially justified.

Mr. Hees: That is more than usual.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems to me that many speakers in the debate have referred to the aggregate of payments being made to provinces and in provinces and that they have quite properly done so. I therefore feel that the reference to payments in a province in respect of old age pensions is quite proper and, as I said, hon. members have done that. At the same time, I do not believe that on a bill with regard to fiscal arrangements with the provinces one should make an entire speech on old age pensions. I think there is a dividing line, and I feel sure that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can see the dividing line. I am certainly not going to prevent him from referring to old age pension payments, but I believe he will agree that he should not devote a whole speech to old age pension payments.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I agree thoroughly with your ruling.

Mr. Pickersgill: So do I.

Mr. Knowles: It is not my intention to make the whole of this speech on old age pensions. When I wish to make a speech entirely on old age pensions I shall make it on the estimates of my friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or on some other appropriate occasion.

I might point out that there have been speeches in this debate devoted wholly to education; speeches, incidentally, with which I agree, but a point of order was not raised on those occasions. My point is this, and I urge it upon the Minister of Finance and the government as a whole; that at a time when the government is allegedly considering the financial needs and the financial capacity of the country, when the government is in a sense realigning the distribution of revenues, and when it, as part of that picture, claims credit for what it is doing for old age pensioners, it should consider their situation as well. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in view of the increased gross national product, the increased base that there is for taxation on the basis of which the government boasts that next year there will be a larger payment by $115 million a year to the provinces, it should consider what its responsibilities are to the senior citizens of this country.

One of the arguments the government makes, either directly or by implication, is that these arrangements will put the provinces in a position to discharge more adequately their responsibilities. There flows from that implication a view which has been expressed on occasion by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and also by others, that the provinces have some responsibility in this field of old age pensions. The fact of the matter is that some of the provinces are doing their best to make supplementary payments to old age pensioners; but it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is getting away from the very excellent principle which this parliament supported when it passed the Old Age Security Act and provided for old age pensions on a basis of universality. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the very considerations that have prompted the government to revise its formula so far as federal-provincial taxation arrangements are concerned, considerations which include a greatly increased gross national product in this country, call for a change being made at the same time in the amount paid to our old age pensioners.

The present amount of $40 a month was set back in 1949, when our gross national product was something of the order of $16·4 billion a year. It has risen now—

Mr. Martin: I think there must be some fairness in this matter. My hon. friend has been anxious for my estimates to come up this week. I am here now, as my hon. friend knows, at considerable personal inconvenience. I have sat around here now hoping that we might get on with my estimates today, or at least not later than tomorrow. My hon. friend wants to go to Winnipeg, and quite properly, on Saturday. I think there is such a thing as fairness and I would ask him if the appropriate place to discuss what he is now discussing is not on my estimates when I will have the opportunity of replying. I would think, in the face of all the facts, my hon. friend is taxing the quality of fairness to a very great extent. In view of all these considerations and in view of what he and I discussed the day before yesterday about my estimates, I would ask him whether that is not the appropriate place to make the speech he is now making, and to which I would have an equal opportunity of replying in kind.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, first of all may I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he does put me at a slight disadvantage when he discusses any personal conversations we have had. It puts me in the position where I have no alternative but to remind him that he told me he was leaving town tonight and would not be here for his estimates during the remainder of this week—

Mr. Martin: And I am going to leave tonight if my hon. friend does not change his attitude.

Mr. Knowles: If he now tells me that he will remain for his estimates any day this week I certainly will oblige him and leave any discussion of details of the old age pension situation until those estimates; but apart from the kind of considerations that we shall present to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the human considerations that call for an increase in the old age pension, I say to the Minister of Finance, to the Prime Minister who is now in his seat, and to the government that in the context of the federal-provincial taxation arrangements that are being made, this is an issue that should be considered.

On that basis I shall hold off the remarks I intended to make even in this context with regard to old age pensions. My feeling and the feeling of this group is that they should be increased at this time to a figure of not less than $60 or $65 a month. I shall hold those arguments and details until we get to the estimates of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. But I do press upon the Minister of Finance and the government as a whole the contention that in the context of these agreements, to be talking about meeting the financial responsibilities of the country by making arrangements that do not take into consideration these forgotten old age pensioners is not fair. Some of the benefits of these agreements or these arrangements, whether they are adequate or inadequate, will get through to many of the people of this country, but none of the benefits from these arrangements will get through to our senior citizens. That is wrong. I contend that the question of old age pensions should be dealt with in this context.

Since I now have the word of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he will remain for a day or so—

Mr. Martin: I did not give you any such undertaking at all. I think it is about time this government ordered its business in accordance with the wishes of the government, and not to permit certain members to attend a party convention.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest that when one starts discussing any personal arrangements that have been made he gets into difficulty. I am prepared to assume that the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, having been announced for this week, will be proceeded with as publicly announced the other day by the leader of the house.

May I get back to saying just a brief word about the agreements themselves, or rather the arrangements envisaged in this bill. As members of this group have indicated already, we are disappointed. We feel that the government is departing from the principles laid down originally in the green book proposals. We feel that the government is departing from the principle of fiscal need and of trying to achieve a Canadian standard as set out in the tax rental agreements. We would rather see tax rental agreements than what are called in this legislation tax-sharing arrangements.

We hope that even after this bill receives second reading, as it probably will, further consideration of the whole matter will be given and that even yet there will be further discussions with the provinces as to the possibility of achieving something better than is provided in this bill. We of this group recognize that not to have this bill and these arrangements, not to have anything in this field, would be a more retrograde step, and on that basis we shall probably have no alternative but to accept the bill on second reading. But we urge that even after second reading, even if the bill passes, the government consider the extent to which it has retreated from the position it took and the position the Minister of Justice argued for so strongly in Manitoba during the last federal election, when he contended that the tax rental agreements must be preserved and saved. We regret that there is a retreat from that position.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is an advance from that position.

Mr. Knowles: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: I say that this bill is an advance from that position.

Mr. Knowles: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is entitled to interpret the position in that way. I do not know whether the literature used in Manitoba during the last federal election by the Liberals was also circulated in Newfoundland. If not, the minister could probably get from the Minister of Justice some of the literature which was circulated in our province, and then I suggest he will have to reconsider the statement he has just made.

Nevertheless it is my plea to the government that it not take the approval of this bill on second reading as the end of the story. I hope that even when this bill passes it will be just a peg to make sure that the fiscal arrangements with the provinces will not be any less or any worse than they are in this bill, but that real improvements will be made. We hope that consideration will be given to taking further steps in the direction of building a stronger and more united Canadian nation.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, we were wondering why the Minister of Finance did not make a statement in moving second reading of this bill, and we wondered also whether we were given a suggestion of an explanation when the Minister of Fisheries rose yesterday and gave the house in his entertaining way a speech which was in large measure shot clean through with errors. In the light of that fact we were somewhat surprised to have the minister tell us that was the best speech which had been delivered up to the present time in this debate. There is just one thing we hope, that this speech of the Minister of Fisheries is not an indication of the kind of campaign the Liberals will be conducting the next election. We hope there will not be a deliberate attempt to mislead the people by making it impossible for them to know the true issues.

We listened with great interest to the exchange between the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) and certain members of the Conservative party. Those people were telling each other just exactly what they thought of each other. They were honest and clean about it. They were stating facts. If there is anything I absolutely despise when I am dealing with anyone it is to have him misrepresent the position which he knows I take. If there is anything I would despise in myself it would be just exactly that very thing. If the thing I stand for is unworthy, then the mere fact that it is unworthy ought to be sufficient to condemn it. It does not need to be misrepresented. If the case of my opponent is worthy, he does not have to misrepresent my case in order to advance his own.

Perhaps the Minister of Fisheries is wondering just what I have in my mind. I propose to deal with one or two passages in his speech. One is to be found on page 6313 of Hansard of July 23 and reads:

> There is only one Canadian government in history that ever repudiated interest payments on government bonds. I refer to the Social Credit government of Premier Aberhart, but even they would not do that today, I think, so there is no hope of a reduction in this field.

The Minister of Fisheries has been in Canada long enough to know better than to make a remark of that kind. The government of Premier Aberhart did not repudiate the interest on bonds, it did not repudiate its bonds. There was every reason why it was put in such a difficult position that the measures it took were about the only ones it could possibly take.

Mr. Sinclair: What were those measures?

Mr. Blackmore: I will give them. I shall be glad to do that. I am happy to see that the Minister of Fisheries is apparently aware now that what he said was not the truth. Let me give the house the facts, which I hope all Liberal members will get accurately and will not try to misrepresent the Social Credit position by saying things which are half truths or absolute falsehoods.

In the first place, let us consider the position faced by Premier Aberhart when he went into office in Alberta. Let us remember that Alberta was in an absolutely hopeless financial position when Premier Aberhart took over. This is something which no Liberal ever makes allowance for at all. In the spring before the Social Credit party was elected in Alberta the U.F.A. government had tried to float a loan and failed, and had to withdraw the bond issue. This meant that they simply could not by borrowing meet the commitments with which they were confronted. What does this mean in the minds of all members, including the Minister of Fisheries? It means that the province had got into a hopeless position financially. We never hear anything about that. It is very true.

It is important to note that because of policies that were adopted either in Ottawa or in Washington which brought on the depression in 1929-30, the province of Alberta was forced into debt—$50 million—during the depression years. The U.F.A. government, which up to that time had done a good job in Alberta, was simply forced into the position in which it was unable to raise the money it needed.

This is the next important thing to get in mind. The U.F.A., as part of what they thought a good method of financing, had adopted the policy of selling Alberta savings certificates. You are not dealing with the Social Credit now, so don't lie about it. The U.F.A. had sold these savings certificates. A savings certificate was a promise on the part of the government to pay a certain amount of money on demand with interest at 4 per cent. Just get what I am saying. It is not easy to get these facts, anyway. The province of Alberta would borrow $100 from a man just as though he put $100 on deposit in the provincial treasury. It would agree to pay that $100 back when he demanded it, and would agree to pay him 4 per cent interest on that money until he demanded it. That is simple; anybody can see that. It was good business, because 4 per cent interest was a great deal less than Alberta had to pay for money on the money market. Altogether the U.F.A. had borrowed from the people of Alberta $10 million in that form. In other words there was outstanding $10 million of Alberta savings certificates. Once more remember that Social Credit had not come in at that time.

The next important thing is this. The member for Peace River reminds me of it. The member for Peace River was provincial treasurer in the Social Credit government of Alberta, and he knows. There was not a dollar of reserve on hand to meet those demands. In other words, there was a $10 million debt against Alberta with no reserve whatsoever, no sinking fund. That was a very serious situation. I ask the Minister of Fisheries what he would have done about that if he had been premier of the government of Alberta in the place of Premier Aberhart.

Mr. Sinclair: I shall answer that right now.

Mr. Blackmore: Do so.

Mr. Sinclair: If I had been premier of Alberta I would have done what the premiers of the other eight provinces did at that time. They honoured their obligations. Alberta was the only government that did not honour its obligations.

Mr. Blackmore: I am glad the minister raised that. It indicates that he is honest in this matter. What would he have done had he been Premier Aberhart, if he was given control of a province that was $167 million in debt, with $10 million of that particular kind of debt, and he knew he could not borrow money on the world's markets, because the U.F.A. had failed?

Mr. Sinclair: I should be very happy to answer that.

Mr. Blackmore: I shall make it a little more difficult first. The first thing I think the Minister of Fisheries would have done would be to go to Ottawa and ask for advances of money to help the province of Alberta meet its commitments.

Mr. Sinclair: Why not let me answer what I would have done, instead of putting words in my mouth? I repeat that I would have done what the other eight provincial premiers did and managed to meet my obligations, but one reason Premier Aberhart was unable to raise the money was that nobody in North America had any faith in lending him money. They had faith in the other premiers.

Mr. Blackmore: Then why did they not lend money to the U.F.A. government when they asked for it in the spring? Why would they not lend money to Alberta in the spring?

Mr. Low: Why did the U.F.A. government have to withdraw their loan?

Mr. Sinclair: They repudiated.

Mr. Blackmore: They did not repudiate the debts. We want to get the facts straight. We do not want the political answers of the Minister of Fisheries. The important thing is that there was only one place where Premier Aberhart could have got the money, and that was Ottawa. He certainly had a right to expect that he could borrow that money, because he had inherited a situation for which he had no responsibility and which he was trying to clear up. He was trying to solve the financial problems of Alberta. The Alberta Social Credit league was a league of ordinary citizens of Alberta—Liberals, Conservatives, C.C.F. and every other kind politically—formed together to get the province out of a mud hole from which it looked impossible to get out. Certainly the efforts of a group of people like that ought to have been looked on with sympathy by Mr. Mackenzie King, and would have been if he had been a real prime minister instead of a politician. There is no answer to that at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Let me get the facts on the record first, not interspersed with a whole lot of political nonsense. These are the facts. Have you not honesty enough to recognize facts when you hear them? The next important thing is that he sought assistance from the Bank of Canada, but he was refused. Then, what could be do? When Manitoba and Saskatchewan went to get assistance with their loans, they were given the assistance that Alberta was refused.

Mr. Sinclair: They had good stable governments.

Mr. Blackmore: Don't say foolish things. Face the facts. What could a man do? What could any government do? The next important thing was this. The U.F.A. government before it left office was trying to keep up the payments on those Alberta savings certificates. They were trying to pay the 4 per cent interest so there would not be a run on the province to get the $10 million, which would make the situation much worse. However, in so bad a condition did the U.F.A. government find itself that on August 27th, 1935, five days before the Social Credit government of Alberta took over, which happened on September 3, 1935, after the election had occurred on August 22, 1935—before the Social Credit government could take over at all, the U.F.A. refused to pay the interest on this $10 million of savings certificates. There is no answer to that. They had refused to pay when the demands for deposits were made.

Considering the loan which the U.F.A. government of the province of Alberta sought to float in the spring of 1935, and considering the fact that these $10 million demand savings certificates at 4 per cent had to be met, and that all those things happened just as they did, there was not even a shred of credit for the Alberta government in the markets of the world. They could not borrow a dollar from the banks.

Mr. Low: They already had $5½ million overdraft.

Mr. Blackmore: That is another thing the U.F.A. government had done. Furthermore, here is another thing the U.F.A. had done. They gave a postdated cheque for $500,000 coming due in October, just after the new government would take office, and this $500,000 was spent in building roads. William Aberhart said that financially in Alberta the bottom was scraped out of the barrel. Not only was there no money in the treasury but the bottom was scraped out of the barrel. Now, then, I wish the Minister of Fisheries would do a little thinking, and with him the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and tell me what you would have done if you had been premier of Alberta. You could not have done anything.

You would have had millions and millions of dollars coming due, because loans had been contracted at intervals of probably four months, six months and so forth. Alberta's bonds were coming due and had to be renewed but they could not be renewed because Alberta had no credit, not because of any fault of Aberhart, not because of any fault of the Social Credit government. The reason there was no confidence in Social Credit in Alberta all over the country was the infernal lies that had been told by the very people represented by the Liberals in this house, just as lies are now being told about the people who were in charge of Alberta at that time.

There was the interest on Alberta's debt. If I remember correctly, the average interest on Alberta's debt was 4·98 per cent, and on some of it the rate went up as high as 6 per cent. Let us say one of those loans came due in January, 1936. I ask the bright men who have had so much to say what they would have done about it. Just wait until I am done. I am going to stay right here and I will answer every single question every one of these apologists for Liberalism asks, and I will answer him until he will be ashamed he asked it, because I know. I was there. The hon. member for Peace River was in the cabinet. He knows. He lived right through it. We can bring the records to prove every single thing I have said.

The important thing is that Aberhart took over an impossible situation in Alberta, and when he died he had Alberta pretty nearly "sitting on top of the world", the envy of everyone, and that change took place in just a few years. He died in 1943. He had only eight years in which to govern the province, but by that time the province's credit was wholly restored. In a very few years Alberta's bonds were gilt-edged, as they are today. There are no finer bonds in the world.

An hon. Member: Everything was "oil" right.

Mr. Blackmore: How was that achieved?

An hon. Member: Oil.

Mr. Blackmore: If Aberhart was so bad a man as some of the simply dishonest people in this country would represent him to be, tell me how he accomplished that objective and still provided a great many fine services such as roads and all that kind of thing, roads superior to any that had been built before by any Alberta government. There was no major oil field at that time. There was no source of income at all, except what could be taken out of the very much impoverished people of Alberta.

Bond issues came due and the province of Alberta knew perfectly well that they could not pay the interest, but they were anxious to be square and do something like the right thing. That is what they tried to do. They talked with the people who held Alberta savings certificates and said, "If you will give us a ghost of a chance we will clear the whole thing up, but you have got to give us a chance." Where is there in this house a member who on occasion has not been in the position where he simply could not meet his commitments and had to go and deal with those he owed and say, "If you will just give me a chance I will clear this up."

That is what Premier Aberhart did, and the only people who would not listen were the bondholders. Some people will say there was a reason, but there were members who have sat right in this house who were involved. Anyway, what did the Alberta government do? They said to the people whom they owed, "We simply cannot possibly pay you the full interest rate. If we pretend we can we will only drive our province into a deeper and deeper morass of debt and make the situation more impossible all the time. Therefore we are going to cut the interest rate by 50 per cent for the time being, and we are going to put at your disposal 50 per cent of the interest. If the rate is 4·9 we will pay to your credit 2·5, or whatever the fraction is and you can take that and in due time, if the Lord blesses us so we can get out of debt, we will pay you back every cent of interest we ever owed you." That is what they did. Let the Minister of Fisheries tell us how that could be surpassed. I assume that is what he was referring to when he spoke about Alberta defaulting on the interest rate.

Mr. Low: He said "repudiate".

Mr. Blackmore: See how very, very wrong that word "repudiate" is. Alberta has never repudiated a dollar. It paid one-half the interest until such time as by dint of the tremendous efforts of the hon. member for Peace River, acting as provincial treasurer, and others, they were able to refund Alberta's debt at an interest rate that ought to have applied in the beginning, and to get themselves on a firm financial basis such as they are now on. Then in 1945 they began to pay back the other half of the interest rate which my hon. friend said they repudiated.

Mr. Sinclair: Only to those who held on.

Mr. Blackmore: You could not expect anything better.

Mr. Sinclair: The people expected fulfilment of their contract.

Mr. Blackmore: Why did they not go and ask for it?

Mr. Sinclair: What I said on page 6313 has been substantiated by the hon. member. They did repudiate their contract to pay full interest, but you have learned your lesson and you now tell us you will never do it again, for which I thank you.

Mr. Blackmore: We have said nothing of the kind.

Mr. Sinclair: You are going to do it again?

Mr. Blackmore: The simple fact is that anyone who gave up—

Mr. Low: There is quite a difference between "default" and "repudiate".

Mr. Sinclair: Who is making this speech, the hon. member for Lethbridge or the hon. member for Peace River?

Mr. Blackmore: He should be able to make a few remarks when the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has so much to say.

Mr. Knowles: As long as the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration does not object it is quite in order.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock? I have some more talking to do to these men.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, before the house took recess I had been considering a remark made by the Minister of Fisheries, in his speech yesterday as reported at page 6313 of Hansard. The net result of my examination of that subject seemed to be that we showed that when the minister said, or implied, that Alberta had "repudiated interest payments on government bonds", while he might have used the expression very innocently, it certainly did not in reality mean anything like what it looks to mean as it appears in the speech. We found out that Alberta did not repudiate the interest on its bonds, but that it did cut the interest on those bonds in half. Then, after it had recovered its financial position in 1945, refunded its debt and got on its feet so it could go forward, it began paying back that interest which had accrued from the other half of the interest rate which had been cut in two by the government back in 1936 when it found itself in such severe straits that it was simply unable to pay the full interest rate. Such having been made quite clear, I think we shall just leave that aspect of the question.

Mr. Sinclair: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit one question.

Mr. Blackmore: I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Sinclair: I think most of us perhaps had not realized quite how bankrupt the U.F.A. government was before the election of 1935, but the hon. member has made it quite clear that not only had they no money but that they were hopelessly in debt. That was before the Social Credit government took over. Then do you not think it was perhaps politically dishonest, in view of that situation, for Aberhart to promise the electors of Alberta that if he were elected he would pay them $25 a month?

Mr. Blackmore: I do not think so. The important think to bear in mind in this connection is this: That is a very honest question, but the important thing to bear in mind that Aberhart talked about over and over again was this: He said "There is no area I have ever seen on the face of the earth where there exist such bountiful resources. No one can tell me that in any province where there are such resources of such variety, people need to be in poverty".

Mr. Sinclair: Why didn't he pay his interest?

Mr. Blackmore: He was not able to do so until he got on his feet. He did not say he would start to pay $25 the day after he got in power.

Mr. Sinclair: He gave that impression.

Mr. Blackmore: That was not his fault. The next important thing is this: The resources and the productive capacity of a province or any other area are the things that ought to determine how well off the province is or how well off the people are. To go back to the Indians in former times, if there were plenty of buffalo, plenty of fish and firewood and of every other thing the Indians needed to have, in order to live up to a high standard, the Indians were intelligent enough to live up to that standard. It took the white man to say men could not live well in the presence of great resources and abundance. Aberhart saw that it was possible to use the resources of Alberta to give the Alberta people a high standard of living.

If Aberhart could have lived for 15 years he would have shown that could be done, even under the present orthodox financial system. But he was contemplating the introduction of the Social Credit system under which the government would monetize the goods which were produced by the province and use the money resulting from that monetization in order to distribute the goods among the people of Alberta in the form of dividends and in the form of compensated discounts. Social Credit maintains that can be done today and that anyone whosoever who looks at realities as they are must confess that it can be done. If it can not be done it must indicate a bankruptcy of intellect on the part of those who are administering the affairs of the country.

I think I have answered the question my hon. friend asked. Aberhart knew how serious the situation was. There was no man in Alberta and probably no man in the country who had greater skill in managing finances than had Aberhart himself.

I go on from that point. There is one matter that one of my colleagues mentioned; that is, there have been some people over here on the opposite side who made some remarks about oil. Those people undoubtedly implied that Alberta had plenty of oil and that this fact got us out of the difficulty. That is not what got Alberta out of her difficulty. The major oil discovery was not made until 1947 in Leduc, and Aberhart died four years before that occurred. Yet he had the province of Alberta on a fine standing of living already when he died.

When I finish this talk we will ask the minister of lands and mines in Alberta, if he feels so disposed, to tell us whether or not what I have said is correct about the first major oil well in Alberta being in the Leduc field in 1947. It is true that in Alberta oil had been discovered. There was discovery of oil in Alberta as far back as 1914, but not in any such quantities as to give the government a revenue of any considerable proportion at all. Hence the profit from the oil in Alberta came only as a result of the discovery of the Leduc field.

Maybe I might just say another word while I am on that subject, since the question has been raised. Alberta has made money from the oil by selling the right to drill on crown reserves. What that means is this! If we had the land laid out in the form of a checkerboard and if a company discovered a major oil deposit in one of the blocks of the checkerboard, the province of Alberta would reserve to the crown the blocks on all four sides of the square on the checkerboard. Then in due time, when the demand became strong for the right to drill on those reserves, Alberta offered a given reserve for sale at auction. That is, Alberta offered to sell the right to drill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blackmore: If the hon. gentleman will just listen to what I am saying—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blackmore: If the hon. member will get what I am saying I should be obliged. I would ask him not to break into what I am telling him.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand that the minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Blackmore: All right.

Mr. Pickersgill: My point of order is this. I raised a point of order with respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who certainly was not any further from the subject under consideration than is the hon. member for Lethbridge, for whom I have the greatest respect. But I am sure that he would at once agree that talking about the method by which Alberta manages its oil resources really has nothing to do with the matter before the house.

Mr. Nicholson: The Minister of Fisheries asked him the question.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, I admit the validity of what the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has said, but I think he would consider that I had done just a little less than my duty if I did not answer questions raised in the course of the discussion, and I have answered those questions.

Just in order to cover what the minister has broken into, may I say this: When the province would offer for sale the drilling rights on a quarter section adjoining a quarter section on which an oil discovery had been made, there was a time when they received as much or more than $3 million for the right to drill on that quarter section. It was the profits which were made by selling the right to drill on crown reserves which gave to Alberta the great amount of revenue. The mere fact that oil was in existence in Alberta and even had been developed in Turner valley did not give the government a chance to make money from the sale of drilling rights on crown reserves. I hope that fact is perfectly clear to everybody so they will not carry away erroneous ideas about how Alberta could get money out of oil. Some of them act as though they thought $5 gold pieces were floating in the oil or something of that sort.

There is another matter to which I should like to direct attention. I go on with another subject. I hope the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be able to feel at ease in his mind now for a time at least.

An hon. Member: That is a lot to expect.

Mr. Blackmore: I have faith in the minister. I think he is a downright honest fellow.

I wish now to refer to one more passage in the fine speech made by the Minister of Fisheries, and I quote again from page 6313 of Hansard:

> A final suggestion was just lightly touched upon in the third speech made by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) during the resolution stage. He reminded us that the Minister of Finance has the power to print money.

I certainly did that.

> Well, there may be some old line Social Crediters who think that is the solution, but I am sure that orthodox Tories like Premier Bennett, attorney general Bonner and Mr. Gunderson of British Columbia would be horrified at the thought of turning out a flood—> —of printed money here to help them, because they know it would hopelessly debase the currency they already have.

Heavy on the "flood".

There is no Social Crediter on earth who would not be horrified at contemplating a "flood" of printed money, and no responsible Social Crediter on earth ever advocated such a thing. All that Social Crediters have advocated is that enough money be created to make up the difference between the amount of goods ready for sale on the market and the money which is in circulation.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Blackmore: Just get this straight. What Social Crediters have advocated is to create enough money and put it into circulation in the right places to enable the purchasing power of the people to equal the amount of goods on sale on the market. Now, that does not mean a flood.

An hon. Member: A steady stream.

Mr. Blackmore: Of course there is a steady stream of goods, too, but it depends on the size of the stream. You could have a steady stream which would be only a trickle in a brook.

Having said that, I think I will just leave the minister for the time being. Before noon I promised that before I closed I would answer any questions any hon. member wanted to ask of me. I am just concluding my remarks with enough time to answer questions they may wish to ask in order to elucidate what I have said, or anything else that may be in their minds.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member for Lethbridge permit a question? I respect his convictions in this matter. Would he say that Mr. Gunderson, who is a prominent Social Crediter in British Columbia and at the same time a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, would subscribe to the monetary theories he has just expounded?

Mr. Blackmore: It generally works out that the man who works most with banking is most in favour of Social Credit, because he can understand just how Social Credit could work.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Today, Mr. Speaker, we have had a very enjoyable debate. I was particularly impressed with the contribution made by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart). He certainly lightens up any serious discussion in this house. However, I must say that he did not answer the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), and in particular those to the effect that under this bill the maritimes will find themselves in a position less than fair, less than reasonable and less than just.

I do not want to involve myself in any maritime argument, but I would say this. There is one difference between the members from the maritimes and those from the western provinces, and it is this. While we from the western provinces do disagree, sometimes on the basis of partisanship, nonetheless when the welfare of the western provinces is being discussed and in particular when our major subject, agricultural production, is being discussed, we bury our disagreements and unite for the common benefit of the western provinces. Sometimes, as I listened to my hon. friends from the maritimes upholding those things which they themselves assuredly cannot support other than vocally, I wonder whether a similar united front analogous to that being formed today by the premiers of the maritime provinces would not have a most beneficial effect upon the economy of the maritimes, especially if that analogy were continued and extended into the House of Commons. Certainly the hon. member for Saint John-Albert has strong arguments in support of the stand he has taken. I thought it was a remarkably effective and objective presentation of the situation that this house listened to this morning when he delivered that address.

I do not want to go far afield in order to call evidence in support of the strength of the arguments he advanced and the power of the analogy he drew as to the differences between the maritimes and elsewhere, but I think I should call as evidence an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star of last evening, a newspaper which throughout the years has never been too prone to criticism of the government except during the present session in so far as the preservation of the parliamentary system is concerned. Yesterday the Daily Star dealt with this question at length, and no one supporting the government will be able to say I am quoting from a newspaper that at any time has shown antagonism to this government. The subject of the editorial is, "Why Dominion-Provincial Tax Fight is Your Business". It sets out in detail quite a lengthy analysis of what actually is the essence of this bill, and it ends up in this way:

> Is there any satisfactory alternative to double taxation in Ontario and perhaps other provinces?

It is generally following the viewpoint of Ontario in that question, but it mentions other provinces. The answer it gives is, I think, an effective argument in support of what the hon. member for Saint John-Albert said this morning, and an equally effective answer to the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Charlotte. The answer given is as follows:

> The only alternative is for Ottawa to allow the provinces a larger share of income and corporation taxes. In the Star's opinion this is not only desirable in the case of Ontario but is essential in the case of the maritime provinces particularly.

I once more underline and emphasize those words; an increased amount of income and corporation taxes made available to certain provinces, and in particular in the maritime provinces, is essential. It refers to the maritime provinces particularly, and generally to the other provinces.

> Unless they receive a larger share of the national wealth they will continue to be second class Canadians, economically speaking.

That editorial, and in particular its concluding paragraph, summarizes the arguments we in the opposition have been advancing in recent days. I am not going to say that the terms offered by the Minister of Finance under the present plan are not an improvement over the previous system, but I am saying that in the present bill and under the proposed plan the provinces will be short-changed by the dominion government. As an analogy, if a person receives 45 cents out of a dollar he has exchanged, and receives 55 cents on the next occasion he exchanges a dollar, while on the second occasion he is better off nonetheless that person is still short-changed.

In my opinion, in so far as these agreements are concerned, the provinces are being short-changed, having regard to the fact that this bill will be effective for five years and a tremendous change can develop—it is taking place—which places an undue load upon the provinces and in particular upon the municipalities. I wonder often why this government has not taken the provinces into its confidence. Why these short-term meetings; why these gatherings of a day or two? Why do we not have a meeting of the federal authorities, the provincial authorities and the municipalities? Call it a constitutional convention, if you like, without the power of amendment of the constitution in respect of those fundamental rights which are inherent in the constitution, but why not have a gathering designed to bring about the reconsideration of a problem which for the last 13 years or so has become increasingly complex?

When I go back to 1945 I remember the great hopes that were held; and I am in agreement with my hon. friend the minister in this regard that the matter is complex. It is one of the most difficult problems that parliament, or the government, can be called upon to deal with, because there are so many facets, so many difficulties and so many situations that demand not an arbitrary attitude but a compromising and a considered one.

Sir, go back to 1945 and look at the green book. It was a step, but as we look at it today it was also merely an event out of which nothing effective resulted. I remember so well in 1945, in the latter days of March, when the question of the green book came up, now mildewed and disused. The question was asked of the Prime Minister, do the recommendations or suggestions in the green book exist anly longer? The answer was no. The Prime Minister went on to point out that the government had been fortunate that the provinces had refused, because it had saved the federal government from embarrassment since in the interval defence costs had mounted. But, said the Prime Minister, the government would renew the 1945 green book offer if it thought all the provinces would accept. It is simply a case of pay your money and take your choice. "We are glad, having regard to subsequent events, that the offer of 1945 was not accepted; otherwise we would have been embarrassed." It has been withdrawn, but if all the provinces would accept its terms, then there would be a restoration of the offer made therein.

I believe this. I think it is fair to say that the attitude taken by the government at the last conference was an arbitrary one. The government simply said, "These are the terms". No opportunity was given for amendment or for amelioration of any term. The recipe for a division of taxation was as final as the laws of the Medes and Persians; and how similar that attitude was to the attitude of the government in this house, which is that power makes perfect anything they do. There was no opportunity for negotiation; there was simply the attitude of a feudal lord bringing into being a modern feudalism and laying down the law to the vassals.

That is not the attitude, that is not the consideration to which the provinces are entitled under a constitution which allocates powers as between the federal and provincial governments. That is not an attitude which will remove the road blocks which today deny Canada the development which should indeed be hers. I feel that even yet if there were an attitude on the part of the federal government to negotiate, terms could be achieved which would be acceptable and which would go a long way toward solving this difficult and complex problem.

Somebody has said, "Well, they do not have to take the offer." What is the alternative? Even though the provinces realize that what is being offered is less than sufficient for their needs they are powerless to resist, believing as they must that half a loaf is better than none at all.

Whoever drafted this bill deserves high commendation for his powers of draftsmanship. The terms are difficult and intricate. This bill and the offer made by the government at the last conference constitute a political mixture. We have the carrot and the club. The government is dangling before the provinces less than is needed by the provinces, less than they can possibly and justifiably carry out their responsibilities with, and on the other hand is saying, "If you do not take it, then what?" It is the carrot and the club. That is not the attitude that brought about confederation; that is not a concept of mind which will achieve that greater measure of Canadian unity which all of us hope will be achieved.

I am going to deal with the situation from the point of view of the provinces other than Ontario and Quebec. Quebec stands to gain very materially, as it receives immediately an assured $40 million. The arguments on behalf of Ontario will be put up by Ontario. I should like to think of the other provinces, at the same time keeping before me the national viewpoint.

What is going to happen to the provinces? What of education? What of increased demands for highways and other development in the various provinces which inevitably bring benefit to the dominion government? The attitude of the dominion government toward the municipalities has been unfair and unjust. I have only to go back to a motion which was before this house on April 30 and May 1 providing for something for which the municipalities have been asking, that the dominion government should follow the lead of two provincial governments and pay taxation upon its own industries and upon its own public buildings in the various municipalities. The government went part of the way but did not go far enough.

Why should the municipal authorities be required to provide the necessary services in the way of roads and so on for federal government institutions without that government paying full taxation? Why should the municipalities be required to pay 10 per cent sales tax on their needs, apart from the exceptions in connection with fire and road machinery costing over $1,000 per unit? Why should the federal government lay burdens upon the municipal governments in that way? The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Thatcher) has now joined the supporters of the government. I ask hon. members to read the speech he made in May with regard to this matter, when he pointed out how necessary it was that changes should be brought about.

We are asking for a measure of development in Saskatchewan, and we look with some degree of hopeful expectation that this may be possible now that we have one Liberal on the government side of the house who has voted in favour of the South Saskatchewan dam. Every other one has voted against it. Now that he is over there I hope one of the major contributions he makes will be to convert the unconverted in regard to this matter and to change the adamant attitude of the Prime Minister, who throughout the years has stood firmly against this necessary work for the national benefit of Canada.

What is the situation with regard to the municipalities? I am not going into details other than to say that all over Canada the municipalities are finding it almost impossible to carry on. Real property cannot carry the load any more. Some of the provinces have a sales tax, but where are the provinces to get the rest of their revenue? Are they to get it out of liquor? In Saskatchewan the profit the government makes on liquor varies from 76 per cent to 94 per cent, so they cannot go much higher. We already have a sales tax. What other source of revenue is there?

Is Saskatchewan satisfied? In an interview the other day Mr. Fines, the provincial treasurer, pointed out that province is going to get more than it got before from the federal government, a greater share of taxes, but he said they were still being shortchanged. He went on to say:

> While at first sight this appears generous, the increasing cost of government, municipal and provincial, makes this amount look very small.

He pointed out how the municipalities are asking for assistance in connection with highways, education and the like. He concluded by saying that having regard to the responsibilities which face the municipalities and the province the amount is negligible, if the provinces and the municipalities are to be able to carry out their several responsibilities.

I have before me a table showing the increases in expenditures by municipalities for education and for general services. All these are eastern municipalities, but we in the west find ourselves in the same position. The percentage of increases as between 1951 and 1954 are as follows:

	Total per cent	Schools per cent
Scarborough	62·07	42·78
North York	29·05	25·33
East York	7·14	28·88
Ottawa	11·83	44·50
Windsor	4·92
Kitchener	49·11	77·33
Sault Ste. Marie	74·69	47·28
Barrie	28·71	15·53
Oakville	104·92	57·73
Kenora	17·49	9·43

There must be some responsibility upon the federal government in regard to this problem. This matter was dealt with at some length the other day by the hon. member for York-Humber (Miss Aitken), but I intend to go a little further today. Recognizing as we all do that education is a provincial responsibility I think the time has come, if the offer contained within this bill is the final offer, for the federal government to act in order to preserve and increase the amounts available for expenditure upon education within this country. The government says, "This is final. You take it or leave it." This is the law of the feudal lord to the vassals. The vassals must accept because of the exigencies of the financial responsibilities which exist.

In this changing world in which we live, wherein the communists place their emphasis on scientific training and technological education, there must be some responsibility placed on the federal government if Canada and the other free nations are to be able to take their place in our world today. Let us deal for just a moment with what has happened in the last five years in connection with primary and secondary education. The school population of Canada has gone up from 2·5 million to 3·5 million, and there are 97 per cent more pre-school age children today than there were in 1941. The provinces cannot discharge their responsibilities in assisting the municipalities in this regard. If you are going to leave that responsibility on the municipality and no change is made in the content of this bill, the result will be that in the very near future you will have a strong dominion government with bankrupt municipalities. If the government will not listen to this argument which I am advancing, will they listen to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre if he whispers that to them today? That view has been expressed by the hon. member over and over again.

What about the universities? What about the salaries paid in the universities? The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) is the chancellor of one of our great universities and no doubt has had experience with the magnetic pull by industry, government and business in so far as his teaching staff is concerned. Other universities have felt this. Dr. Smith of the University of Toronto has pointed out the great difficulty there is in this regard.

What assistance has been given to university education? There have been a few scholarships, a few research scholarships. The extent of assistance to the universities has been insufficient to meet the completely changing conditions that prevail today. You will not achieve the success with your five-year plan that Stalin had in mind when he instituted his five-year plan. You will have bankruptcy at the end for the municipalities of this country unless some assistance is forthcoming.

What about university salaries? President Sidney Smith has stated that the University of Toronto is losing personnel to government, industry and research because the salaries are two or three times what the university can afford to pay. Do you realize that the average Canadian worker has increased his wages two-thirds over the past generation, but the salary of the average teacher and research worker has remained unchanged?

Those are not my views. Those are the views of the Canadian association of university teachers. Thousands of the mentally gifted youth are barred from higher education by financial limitations. Are we going to restrict our universities by the financial assistance extended to the provinces today, or are we going to realize now that the U.S.S.R. has departed from its old policy of being a stolid introvert and has become a smiling extrovert that goes all over the world expanding its technological and educational system? Are we in the free world going to fall behind? Are we going to deny admission to the universities to all except those who are well to do? That is what is going to happen.

The United States sends to university seven times as many, in proportion to population, as we do. The U.S.S.R. sends far more than we do to that type of education, which is necessary in the world today as we enter this new atomic era. There is no way whereby the vast demand for engineers, scientists and mathematicians can be met other than by this dominion government extending itself as it has not done before and providing grants in aid, while maintaining the constitutional position whereby the provinces are in charge of education.

Sir, all you have to do is look at the record, the roster of engineers and scientists in the U.S.S.R. Do you say that they lag behind us and we do not need to increase our efforts? Within the past few days on July 19, John E. Bird, Canadian Press staff writer, referred to an interview he had with Dr. Lloyd G. Elliott, director of the physics division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, following the latter's return from a conference in the Russian capital May 14 to 22. This is what Dr. Elliott said:

> We in Canada knew very little about what Russia was doing in the field before the conference. We came away realizing that Soviet scientists are making real progress. . . . They are very serious and their plans are very extensive for placing large numbers of highly technical people in basic research.

We go on in the same old way, with 290 or so scholarships. What does the U.S.S.R. do? Here is the latest record. The United States has 108,700 engineers; the seven countries in western Europe making up NATO have 111,000; the Soviet union has 540,000. All over the world today they are loaning these technical advisers who, through the knowledge they possess, infiltrate in those countries and thereby secure an exchange, on the part of the freedom-loving people of those countries, of their freedom for all time in return for basic technical knowledge. The United States has 4,200 agricultural scientists; the seven countries in western Europe have 21,245; the Soviet union has 190,000. The United States has 6,100 mathematicians; the Soviet union has 160,000.

Make all due allowances, Mr. Speaker, for the impelling virtue that freedom gives to men and women, whether it is in the ordinary field of life or in science. The universities face a serious crisis and this bill in no way meets the situation. It simply places upon the provinces the handcuffs of five years of inaction in this direction, for they have gone as far as they can. I say to you, sir, and to the Prime Minister through you, that this is a field that must be entered by the dominion government as part of our national defence, failing which we shall lose the next five years under this five-year plan. We shall unless something else is done. We must act now if we are to maintain and preserve our position as a freedom-loving nation in the world. We must also accelerate our contribution to scientific technology and mathematical knowledge and technique everywhere in the world.

How far they have gone in the U.S.S.R. is shown by one other statistic. It was brought to Canada by Mr. James S. Duncan of the Massey-Harris company, when he said that so intent has the U.S.S.R. become on increasing the sum total of scientific knowledge that of the 40,000 workers in the Stalin works in Moscow, 10,000 in their after hours are taking courses which in five or six years will graduate them as engineers.

I do not want anyone to say that I want Canada to borrow the means of communism in order to defeat communism. However, I believe that if we in this country on the national level will give to the various universities not the paltry sums advanced today but sums in keeping with the responsibilities that rest upon those universities in this new world we shall not only ensure Canada's contribution to the maintenance of freedom, but we shall also make possible a university education for many tens of thousands of young people in our country who otherwise would be denied the opportunity of a university education which their ability and capacity would merit and which only their inability to finance would deny.

That is one phase of the picture; another phase is in connection with national development. I am not going to go extensively into that—it has been covered over and over again during the progress of this debate—but I wish to point out two matters of national import which we in Saskatchewan believe are deserving of, and indeed demand, dominion support. One of them, which was dealt with by several hon. members, is the need to realize that whilst highways are under the constitution a matter of provincial administration, to a greater degree than heretofore there must be grants in aid; for the present bill, if implemented, will make it impossible for provinces to expand their necessary highway development.

We have recognized the principle in connection with the trans-Canada highway, although the rate at which the trans-Canada highway is being built shows a pedestrian drive behind that worthy objective. Through the municipalities my own province of Saskatchewan, as well as other provinces, is asking that there be a realization that while at the time of confederation east and west roads were of first importance, today in the national interest there must be highways for defence in the various provinces. To that end federal assistance must be given. The provinces will never discharge their responsibility in this regard if hemmed in, as they will be, by the ambit of the terms of the present bill.

The demand for highways of that kind has some foundation in history. In 1912 both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden supported federal aid to highways necessary for development. In 1920 the government of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen brought into effect a system of assistance which, as I recall it, involved the spending of some $20 million. There must be some assistance in this regard. Who gets the benefit of the highway into the north? As soon as the highway is built and minerals are found, mines are opened and smelters are constructed, the dominion government immediately takes its cut. It takes it before in the sales tax. It achieves dividends immediately.

These highways are necessary for development. Indeed, I believe that a roads to resources program of assistance by the federal government would meet with general approval across the country, roads to resources, the opening up of the country, and those roads available later as defence highways if and when needed. I know that such a program would meet with approval in the western provinces. The United States has launched one of the greatest highway programs in all history. It is one that requires co-operation on the part of the states of the United States. In it the federal authority, with the administration resting upon the states, has launched one of the greatest moves in all history to assure that development which highways permit and, indeed, encourage.

Those are but two fields: education, highways and encouragement of national development, which will not be encouraged to the degree that they should be if the provinces are manacled by the bill now before the house. I said a moment ago that it is better than what has been given previously but it still constitutes a failure to realize that under our constitution the provinces were never intended to be beggars. The provinces have responsibilities, the provinces have fields of action, and the concentration of power and authority in the federal government with respect to taxation has had an adverse effect.

The bill will go some way toward removing those adverse effects, but unless the amounts to be paid to the several provinces are materially enhanced by grants in aid of education and by a system whereby the municipalities may be assured of a reasonable opportunity to discharge their responsibilities, then indeed, looking ahead five years, the provinces having to accept the terms of the bill will mean that the bill will have an adverse effect on the municipalities and their responsibilities and will adversely interfere with Canada's international responsibilities in the field of technical education to a degree that can never be gained back.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this, I believe, is the first occasion on which I have ever spoken in the house on any matter which was not directly related to my own ministerial responsibilities. It is in a sense a maiden speech, and I crave your indulgence accordingly. It is a very hard thing to be asked to follow so eloquent and persuasive a speaker as the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I have no eloquence. I can only try to deal with facts, and I intend to do two things that have been conspicuously absent during most of this debate. I intend to deal as far as possible with facts, and I intend to deal with the bill.

The hon. member for Prince Albert talked about the arbitrary attitude of the government, and several members of the opposition have said the same thing. I think perhaps it might be worth while to take just a minute to consider what really has happened with respect to these proposals. Nothing would have been simpler than for the government to go on as we did in 1952 and recommend that we continue the tax rental agreements, perhaps with some slight change in the formula, and continue the situation which had persisted since 1945, a situation which I submit was not good for this country and which could not much longer continue, whereby the benefits of this legislation were going to two-thirds of the country and not to the other third. That is no way, if we can find a remedy, to allow things to continue.

What did the Prime Minister do? He said that we were going to stick to our one objective that was paramount above all others, and that was to put the provinces on a basis of relative equality, but that we were not at all wedded to the means of tax rental agreements if something better could be found. It was suggested to the provincial governments that if any of them could suggest something better we would be only too happy to consider it. Four conferences were held to discuss various phases of this question, three before an offer was made and one after the offer was made. That was the conference in April which several hon. gentlemen opposite have sought, perhaps unwittingly, to give the impression was the only conference held. It was not.

The views of all the provincial governments were very carefully considered in one stage or another for over a year before these proposals were finally made. If there is going to be legislation there does have to be a point where something becomes final. You cannot bring in a bill that has nothing in it. You have to take a position; and the moment you do take that position it is, of course, very easy for someone else to call it arbitrary. But that does not make it arbitrary at all. The question is this. Does it accomplish what it sets out to accomplish? As I apprehend it, the purpose of this bill is to do two things, and two things only. It is to bring the income of the rest of the provinces up to the level of the combined income of Ontario and British Columbia in three tax fields, or rather the average of the combined revenues of those provinces. That is the prime purpose of the bill. What the government has said is that we feel that all the provinces are entitled to derive in one way or another as much revenue as they would get if they had a taxable capacity comparable to the taxable capacity of the two wealthiest provinces combined. With a scheme like that, it is not intended to raise money for provincial purposes generally. It is only intended to bring the less fortunate provinces up to the level of the more fortunate provinces. This bill does not purport to do anything else and it has nothing to do with anything else, except one thing, and that one thing is an extremely important thing too.

During the war we had the experience of having the wartime tax agreements and I think most Canadians came to the conclusion that it was much more convenient to have only one income tax and only one income tax collector. We are proposing to make that possible if the provincial governments want that; they do not have to take it at all; there is no "take it or leave it" business about it at all; the provincial governments can do exactly as they please about having a single income tax. That is true of every province, and no province loses its equalization payment by doing so. If they want to impose a standard tax, we are prepared to collect it for them. If they want to make a tax rental agreement and accept the yield of the standard tax, we are offering them that. If they prefer to have nothing to do with us and to collect their own taxes at any rate they like, they are still entitled to the equalization payments. It is very hard for me to conceive—and it was evidently quite impossible for any of the provincial governments to conceive—any further modification of this scheme that could have been put into effect; and indeed none of them suggested any. It seems to me that there is a great deal of validity in what Mr. Mackenzie King said in 1935 in that quotation which the hon. member for Eglinton cited yesterday. I do not think there would be any argument at all; not the slightest argument; that not one five-cent piece—and I use the term advisedly—should be collected by the federal treasury in order to be handed over to any provincial government if all the provinces had an equal taxable capacity.

Mr. Rowe: That is not what he said at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say it was what he said at all. The hon. gentleman misunderstood what I was trying to say.

Mr. Rowe: I did not misunderstand what he said, though.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I was trying to say was this. I think it is far better for the government which is spending the money to collect it. If we had a situation in those provinces where the taxable capacity—and in Newfoundland it happens at the present time to be the lowest of any of the provinces—was near the taxable capacity of Ontario and all the others were uniform, I would say we should have no bill of this kind at all; that the provinces should collect their own taxes and spend them; that we should collect ours and spend ours; and that we should not turn anything over to the provinces. But we do know this, and none know it better than do those who represent the Atlantic provinces. We know that is not the situation in which we live. But there is no excuse whatsoever, in so far as equalization is concerned, for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) to raise any money to be spent for provincial purposes in Ontario except one, and that is an extremely important one, namely that it is convenient to the taxpayers of Ontario to be obliged to pay only one income tax instead of two taxes. That is all that we should properly do. As far as the wealthiest provinces are concerned, they themselves should raise for provincial purposes what they need. If we want to change the constitution and transfer those powers, that is another matter. But it is not the business of this parliament to raise revenues for these provincial purposes, except for the one purpose of establishing equalization across the country. That is what the fundamental purpose of this legis'ation is.

There is only one other point I want to deal with, and it was also raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and in a somewhat different fashion by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell). I took down as completely as I could the words used by the hon. member for Prince Albert. He said that under this bill the maritimes—and by that I assumed he meant the Atlantic provinces—will find themselves in a position less than fair, less than reasonable and less than just. He then suggested that in some way those of us who represent the Atlantic provinces are less good at "ganging up" on the federal treasury than are the gentlemen who represent the western provinces. I do not know whether or not that is true, but I know this. We from the Atlantic provinces do not fill as many pages of Hansard as do members from some of the western provinces. But I do not think that is necessarily a proof that we do not represent our constituencies just as well. In support of his contention the hon. member for Prince Albert quoted an editorial in yesterday's Toronto Star. He quoted particularly the last paragraph, which reads as follows:

> I am not going to say to what.
> —is for Ottawa to allow the provinces a larger share of income and corporation taxes. In the Star's opinion this is not only desirable in the case of Ontario but is essential in the case of the maritime provinces particularly. Unless they receive a larger share of the national wealth they will continue to be second-class Canadians, economically speaking.

I am not saying anything about that reference to second-class Canadians. As far as I am concerned, the larger the share of the national wealth we can get for the Atlantic provinces, the better pleased I shall be; and I will do everything I can that I think is effective and that I think is fair to get a larger share of that wealth for the Atlantic provinces. But certainly the recipe suggested by the hon. member for Prince Albert is not going to do it.

The whole purpose of this bill and of this scheme is to achieve equalization. The larger the share of the field that is given to the provinces to tax, the better it is for Ontario but the worse it is for the poorer provinces. I think the hon. member for Prince Albert who represents a constituency from Saskatchewan had better think this matter out again before he endorses the Toronto Star merely because it happens to be a Liberal newspaper and once in a while disagrees with this government.

Mr. Rowe: He is not endorsing the Star but the Star is not endorsing you.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; the Star is not endorsing us. The Star is endorsing the premier of Ontario; and that brings me to the real point—if there is any point—to what I have to say here today.

Mr. Rowe: You are extremely modest this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: The real point is this. It was said by the hon. member for Eglinton yesterday, with his usual grace and refinement when I attempted to correct him; he was his usual polite self and showed the respect he usually shows for other members, for the chair and for the institution of parliament generally. As I say, when the hon. member for Eglinton made a statement yesterday I attempted to correct him and I finally succeeded, by being pertinacious, and by objecting not at all to what he thought was abuse which did not bother me a particle;—

Mr. Nowlan: And by being out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —I managed to get inserted into Hansard what I want to insert at greater length today, namely that there was one provincial premier who accepted and endorsed this scheme at the meeting in April; and he did it for reasons which are extremely important to all the Atlantic provinces and which I should like to put on the record. The Minister of Finance points out that it was in March, not April; it was on March 9. This is what Mr. Smallwood says, and I make no apology whatever for quoting it and saying I endorse everything in it.

Mr. Nowlan: Whose is the voice of Jacob, and whose the hand of Esau in this case?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe anyone who has heard the premier of Newfoundland speak will feel he needs to have words put in his mouth by anyone else. As a matter of fact I could bore the house with some anecdotes about having to follow the premier of Newfoundland three years ago when I had even less experience in public speaking than I have now. I did not like the competition; I am not equal to it. Here is what Mr. Smallwood said:

> The government of Newfoundland is just as anxious as any other provincial government to secure the maximum revenues that we can get out of federal-provincial arrangements for sharing income and corporation taxes.

I am sure every other provincial premier would say the same thing. Until the chips are down—that is a phrase people use who gamble and I do not know what it means but perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) could enlighten me.

Mr. Knowles: I was just saying that it was very apt in this case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Until the chips are down you could not expect any of the provincial premiers to say he was satisfied with the amount he was going to get. Mr. Smallwood continued:

No other province needs them more for provincial purposes.

I echo that, and I believe we need them in Newfoundland even more than New Brunswick does.

We entered confederation in 1949 on the understanding that we could share on a fair basis the proceeds of income and corporation taxes and succession duties collected all over Canada.

The only way we can share these proceeds on anything like the same basis as Canadians in the wealthier provinces is by sharing them through the federal treasury.

And that is true of every one of the provinces, except possibly British Columbia and Ontario.

The income and corporation tax fields in Newfoundland, no matter how assiduously we cultivate them, cannot be made to yield the kind of revenues that are secured by the wealthy provinces like Ontario and Quebec.

And yet the 400,000 additional consumers in Newfoundland, who buy nearly everything they consume from the mainland of Canada,—

I might add, mostly from Ontario.

—are contributing every day to the incomes from which income and corporation taxes can be collected in the other provinces, particularly Ontario and Quebec.

It is, therefore, in our provincial interest in Newfoundland and it is in the provincial interest of all the provinces where the tax potential is low, to safeguard the federal share of these tax fields, so that the federal government will be in a position to share them with us. That is the only way all Canadians can finance something approaching provincial services that Ontario can provide out of taxes collected within the province.

The premier of Ontario, at these conferences, has said a good deal about the immense demands for provincial services resulting from the vast industrial expansion of Ontario. Of course, these demands are very large, but the capacity to pay for them grows even faster. I can assure the premier of Ontario that all of us in the Atlantic provinces——would be glad to take on these new provincial liabilities along with the even greater new assets that come with them.

I am sure the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) will agree with this.

The premier of Ontario and the provincial treasurer have, at these conferences and elsewhere, hinted that Ontario is approaching the end of its fiscal resources. I am sure they don't really expect the premiers of some of the other provinces to be greatly impressed by their parade of poverty.

The provincial services in Newfoundland, measured in terms of roads or schools or health facilities, or by almost any other standard, do not compare at all with those in Ontario, and it will take many millions of dollars, as our brief to the Gordon commission showed, to bring them up to anything like a comparable basis.

And yet to pay for what we now have, we in Newfoundland have to impose a gasoline tax of 17 cents, compared with a tax of 11 cents in Ontario. We also have a 3 per cent social security tax on retail sales in the province—and that's on all foodstuffs, too.

I asked our officials to calculate how much more revenue Ontario would be able to collect if the people of Ontario had to pay, for provincal services, taxes which Canadians in the province of Newfoundland have to pay for services which are not nearly as good. I am told that, if Ontario raised its gasoline tax to the rate we have in Newfoundland, it could have collected in 1955 at least an additional 50 million dollars, and that a 3 per cent tax on retail sales in Ontario would have produced at least 150 million dollars in 1955.

That, I might say, is about five times the total budget of Newfoundland.

The fact is that, even with the proposed equalization payments, almost every province in Canada is going to have to continue imposing upon its people much heavier provincial taxation than is borne by the people of Ontario.

As I understand it, under the new tax sharing proposals, Ontario, with standard rates of taxes, will derive substantially more revenue than it would under a continuation of the present tax rental agreements. In other words, the new arrangement will give Ontario a proportionately higher gain than any other province will have.

If the equalization payments were based on the average of the four highest provinces instead of the basis proposed by the federal government,—

That was what Mr. Frost suggested should be done.

—the effect, as I understand it, would be that tax rates would have to be set which would give Ontario a still larger share of the yield from these taxes in order to give the other six provinces payments equal to those proposed in the present federal scheme.

In other words, averaging the top four provinces instead of the top two would give far greater advantages to the wealthy provinces than it would to those with smaller tax potentials.

It is impossible for us from Newfoundland to see how this could possibly be in the national interest, and we cannot help but feel that, by reducing drastically the share the federal treasury would get out of these national tax fields, we would be weakening its capacity to help provide reasonably equal provincial services right across Canada.

And that, sir, is what we understood we would get when we entered confederation in 1949.

And that is what this bill is seeking to continue on a much better basis than we have had it before. That is why I, sir, am only too happy to be supporting it.

I say, therefore, that from the point of view of Newfoundland, and I believe in the interests of at least all the people in the six provinces which the premier of Ontario would not include in his averaging, his suggestion is much less satisfactory than the suggestion put forward by the federal government.

I feel, to, sir, that we should not forget that the federal government is providing millions for costly services, not merely in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, but also in Ontario and British Columbia.

That is why we have come to the conclusion—

I wish the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) were in the house to hear this.

—that, pending the readjustments which we hope may be made as a result of the work of the royal commission on the revision of the terms of union we are prepared to support the basis of the present proposals of the federal government.

Now, sir, since the premier of Ontario began to change his tune—at first, he said that this plan was some improvement on anything that had been suggested before, and I do not think he has ever taken that back—he has been asking for more money for Ontario because of their new poverty—

Mr. Lennard: On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Eglinton is not here because at the moment he is in the banking and commerce committee, and I want that understood.

Mr. Sinclair: So what?

Mr. Weir: So what?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no objection if the hon. member is in the banking and commerce committee; I am not hurt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You are lucky, that is all.

Mr. Rowe: You are happy.

Mr. Sinclair: There is a little more decorum and a little more dignity in debate when he is not here.

Mr. Harkness: You are lucky he is not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is there anything wrong in mentioning that it is a fact? I said I was going to deal with the facts. I cannot rise to the eloquence of the hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Fulton: Is there anything wrong with putting all the facts on the record?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, but I have time for just a few. I will have lots more for the hon. member for Kamloops in another debate.

Since there was some hope of stirring up a little politics about this question, the Ottawa Journal said on July 17:

The idea that Mr. St. Laurent has solved dominion-provincial difficulties, an idea seemingly accepted by some, has no basis in fact whatsoever; all Mr. St. Laurent has done is to come up with a formula or prescription that has created a new crop of headaches, left the provinces more dissatisfied and frustrated than ever.

Mr. Rowe: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. That is what the Ottawa Journal said on July 17; but what did the Ottawa Journal say on January 13 when these proposals were brought before parliament before they saw any possibility of making any party politics out of them? An editorial from the same paper on January 13, 1956, had this to say:

Whatever happens, Mr. St. Laurent must be commended for having made a patient and sincere effort to find some just and workable formula, one which recognizes that Canada is a federal state in fact and should be one in spirit. If it is not the last and best word it is at least an honest attempt to solve a vexatious problem.

I must say, sir, that I prefer the Ottawa Journal sober to the Ottawa Journal drunk.

(Translation):

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up too much of the hon. members' time, but I want to express my personal opinion on the bill before us.

It was the aim of the confederation to unite the provinces, but without unifying them. It seems, moreover, that the fathers of confederation did not so much seek to unite the provinces themselves. Beyond the provincial borders of the day and those that would be established thereafter, they could see the two great races that formed Canada's population at that time and which make it up now, to a considerable extent. They wanted to bring together, not so much the political frameworks as the two ethnical components within those frameworks, to enable them to strive together more efficiently towards a common goal, while satisfying themselves that each of the two would conserve its own identity and would pursue its development according to its own racial characteristics.

In support of this contention I would like to quote an important statement which can be found in the brief presented by the University of Montreal to the Tremblay commission, in February 1952.

There are some who take no pleasure in hearing it said that confederation was a compact between two races . . . Any objective and unbiased examination of the Canadian constitution immediately points to the peculiar status granted to Quebec. Section 133 could hardly be clearer. Provisions relating to language and to the right to the use of it . . . show that the act was really a compact between two racial groups differing in language, religion and traditions, which both were bent on preserving.

Here is, moreover, a statement made at the time of confederation by an expert who, speaking from a neutral point of view, was no doubt in a position to express an objective and unbiased view. This view was expressed by Lord Carnarvon and may be found in the proceedings of the imperial parliament for 1867, page 568:

> Lower Canada is deeply attached to its particular institutions and it will join the union only on the clear understanding that it will keep them . . . It is in that spirit and at those conditions that Lower Canada now agrees to enter confederation.

Well, what are those particular institutions, if not our language, our faith, our traditions, our way of thinking, our way of life, of looking after our educational and health needs, and so on?

There is no doubt that the fathers of confederation took a right view of things, even though the means they put at our disposal to achieve their objective were not perfect and have thus, in time, given rise to the difficult situations that are facing us today.

However, because the Canadian nation has developed and progressed to a point that could no doubt be envisioned 90 years ago, and because of a similar change in the economic and social conditions under which this progress is to continue, it might be time to revise this agreement of 1867. It would be advisable to amend it, to clarify it and to adapt it to the new conditions, to draw from it certain practical conclusions which are potentially to be drawn from it and to interpret some of its clauses. Of course, this should be done at a round table discussion to which all interested parties would be invited, namely, the ten provinces and the central government. In other words, it would be the revival and the continuation of the federal-provincial conference held in Quebec in the fall of 1950. That conference, opened and adjourned under the most favourable auspices, had given rise to the fondest hopes. It was to have been resumed and, without blaming anyone in particular, I am very sorry that it was not and that we missed this splendid opportunity to streamline a constitution which no longer answers the needs of the institutions it governs. A further conference could have reassigned to each interested party its own field of taxation, and could have done this more adequately than by the bill now under review.

This task is an essential one, one which will have to be undertaken some time, to bring order and good understanding into intergovernmental relations in Canada. It is in that spirit, no doubt, that the Quebec chamber of commerce, in its submission to the royal inquiry commission in January 1954, made this statement:

> In order to amend the British North America Act and to provide Canada with a new constitution, the proceedings of the federal-provincial conference held in Quebec in September 1950 should be resumed as soon as possible.

Such a conference could also settle the equalization problem for which a one-sided solution is offered in Bill 442. I say it is a one-sided solution because there is no evidence that the provinces, which are at least as much interested in this as the central government, were in a position to have their views accepted, even if they were consulted. I do not object on principle to the richer provinces helping the poorer provinces, but I doubt that the way which is contemplated is the best.

Why, for instance, would the central government not encourage each province to levy its own tax on individual and corporation income, by granting not a uniform and partial deduction of 10 per cent of the federal tax, but rather a deduction equal to the full amount collected by the province? Each province would establish its own tax according to a schedule which would best meet the needs and wishes of its people. Such amount being fully deducted from the federal tax, the taxpayers would, in the end, pay the same amount of tax, whatever the variations may be between two provinces. In that way, for instance, the autonomy of Quebec would be preserved. The government of that province has found it advisable to set at a higher level than that of the central government the basic income above which taxes begin to be levied, thus protecting in a more equitable and social way, I think, the family group.

It is obvious, I think, that in such a way the spirit and the word of the constitution would be complied with as far, at least, as paragraph 2 of section 92 is concerned.

I foresee serious objections to the suggestion I am making but, nonetheless, I hold that a conference such as the one held in 1950 would be capable of dealing with those objections, by setting, for instance, a maximum which the provinces could not exceed for a certain period of time.

The constitution irrevocably assigned to the provinces certain fields in which they have the exclusive right to legislate, and that right implies the right to administer. Now then, administration requires the levying of taxes.

Among the fields assigned to the provinces, there are those, among several others, of education and health. Those are, of course, sacred fields to which the problems of money must be adapted, and not vice versa.

At present, the central government is offering provinces a joint health plan.

In all earnestness, I believe that the province of Quebec should not be put in a position where it should have to accept such a plan. Legislation of this type should be enacted by its own legislature. However, to achieve this object, the bill now under discussion should go even farther than it does, and should allow full deductibility with regard to the amount of the provincial tax, instead of allowing only 10 per cent of the federal tax.

In the field of education, the same situation prevails. In spite of considerable improvement over the last few years, there is still a great deal to be done. We need more revenue. We intend to preserve control of these sources of revenue and be free to use them in the way best suited to the mentality, habits and customs of our people.

We fear that some day the intrusion of the central power in this field may bring about a situation dangerous to our racial group.

I wish to repeat here what I have already said many times before this outside the house. I am not worried about the intrusion or the activities of the present government, headed as it is now by the present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). I am not worried either by the possible influence of a government which would be headed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). But who knows what the future holds in store?

What will be the intentions of the men governing the Canadian nation 25 or 50 years from now?

I therefore believe that it is essential today to prepare for the future and to protect it against possible dangers in this field. That is why we should strive to protect and guarantee provincial autonomy.

It seems to me that this measure, imperfect though it is, is a step in the right direction. I feel bound to support it and, in so doing, I believe I interpret the opinion of the truly nationalist independents of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I had understood that certain arrangements had been made, if not formally at least understood, perhaps to the detriment of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson), who had risen earlier. I know hon. members would like to continue the debate, either here or in committee, but it had been suggested that we might reach the committee stage before five o'clock and then certain hon. members who had indicated a willingness to speak might do so in committee. If that is the choice of hon. members it would be desirable that we have second reading now; if that is not the choice, then of course we would have to proceed.

Mr. Nicholson: I was on my feet before the other hon. member started but I am quite prepared to wait until we go into committee to make my remarks. However, if the debate is going on I shall want my turn later on.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I thought the debate was continuing when I saw the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) rise, although I was aware that an arrangement had been made. I am quite satisfied to wait.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Wylie: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Algoma West (Mr. Nixon). Had I voted I would have voted against second reading.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole?

Mr. Fleming: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, is there not a matter to be referred to the house from the banking and commerce committee? The committee adjourned about 20 minutes ago on an appeal from the chairman's ruling, and our understanding was that it would come before the house now.

Mr. Speaker: I am not a member of the banking and commerce committee. If anything has happened there, it will have to reach the house through a report.

[Mr. Hamilton (York West).]

Mr. Harris: On that point I think the hon. member for Eglinton is quite right, but I would suggest to you, sir, and to the house that we continue with the proceedings on this particular bill. Then at five o'clock you will go into the chair for private bills hour and the matter that has arisen in the banking and commerce committee can be disposed of.

Mr. Fleming: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, this was a government bill, not a private bill, and I wonder why the matter should not be dealt with now while you are still in the chair rather than wait until five o'clock for the hour reserved for private bills. All that is required is for the chairman of the committee to make his report now and have it disposed of because once the house has disposed of the appeal there still is the question of resumption of the committee sittings, and time is precious.

Mr. Knowles: How can there be a point of order when there is nothing before the house?

Mr. Speaker: That is exactly what I was trying to say a moment ago. I have no report and until I have one I cannot act on something that does not exist.

Mr. Sinclair: Study the rule book.

The house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

The Chairman: Shall this clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: On clause 2?

Mr. Dinsdale: On clause 1, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: It was carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Carried by whom?

An hon. Member: It was not carried.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We had an agreement that there was to be latitude on the clause.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, like my fellow Manitoban, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, I have been somewhat reluctant to inject myself into this debate. It seems that all Manitobans have that certain deference or reticence—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Dinsdale: If the hon. gentlemen opposite want to make a speech, I wish they would wait until I get through.

Mr. Habel: We are listening. Go ahead.

Mr. Boisvert: If you have nothing to say, sit down.

Mr. Dinsdale: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration describes his remarks as a maiden speech. But I would suggest that, if his was a maiden effort, he is a pretty tough old maid because I noticed some interesting Machiavellian twists in some of the observations he made—

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Newfoundlian" twists.

Mr. Dinsdale: —with regard to this extremely important bill we have before us. The reason I hesitated, Mr. Chairman, when there was so much noise coming from across the way, was that I feel that it is unfortunate that we are forced to discuss what I consider to be the most important subject in Canadian public affairs today under the kind of pressure that has been coming from the government benches just a few moments ago. It is unfortunate too—as I said in my opening statement—that we have to have that feeling of reluctance to make some small contribution to the consideration of this important topic. After all, we are here on the nation's business. We are not the only house that is still sitting or the only parliamentary body that is still sitting in various parts of the democratic world. I think the United States congress is still in session. Certainly, the parliament of the United Kingdom is still in session. If there is still that reluctance with regard to complete discussion of this important matter, the blame of course arises from the fact that we have delayed consideration of such an important subject to the dog days of the present session.

I am not going to make a maiden speech on this subject. I think the points that could be made concerning the technical details have been well made by the speakers who have already made their contribution at the various stages of the debate proceedings, particularly the Leader of the Opposition who, in my opinion, at the resolution stage of the bill made an excellent survey of the subject at hand. Also I thought the Minister of Finance in a succinct way helped to throw some light on the subject. I mention him particularly because I feel that he justifies a stand that we of the opposition have been making down through the years when the subject of dominion-provincial tax agreements has been before the house at earlier times in 1947 and 1952.

Mr. Harris: Why did you vote against it a few moments ago?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am coming to that in just a moment, Mr. Chairman. The opposition have always taken the stand on earlier occasions that there was a fundamental flaw in this method of handling an extremely complex and difficult subject. In reference to the earlier tax rental agreements, we have always maintained that they were of a temporary nature only and that they have in them a fundamental flaw in that they invade the rights of the provinces to an unnecessary extent. That flaw arises from the fact that there are no distinct and separate taxation rights that are reserved for the provinces. This has been the fundamental weakness of all our attempts to get around the vexing problem of the relative areas of jurisdiction for provincial and federal governments in this matter of fiscal relations.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question is this. Does Mr. Roblin take the same view?

Mr. Dinsdale: I would suggest that the minister direct his question to Mr. Roblin and not to me. I have no authority to speak for Mr. Roblin.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know very well that he does not.

Mr. Marler: I take it that the hon. member does not endorse what Mr. Roblin says.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, these men are all gazing into a crystal ball again. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has found it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The funny boy from Kamloops is back.

Mr. Dinsdale: The contention of the Minister of Finance is found at page 5988 of Hansard where he says this:

> While the tax rental agreements now in their tenth and final year have gone a long way toward meeting these objectives,—

The series of objectives which the minister outlined earlier in his speech.

> —in some ways they do not meet all the criteria to which some provinces attach particular importance. The proposals incorporated in this bill are designed to reconcile as far as possible these various conflicting points of view.

I quote that particular section because there has been on the part of the government a tendency to fail to appreciate the argument that we of the opposition made respecting tax rental agreements. We have put up a strenuous fight for an equitable reallocation of taxing and service responsibilities between the various levels of government. It is a source of encouragement to note that that fight has had the effect at least of carrying the government thus far in changing its mind. By continuing the fight we hope that we might be able to bring the government to a full sense of appreciation of what the essential nature of this difficulty is. In his remarks the Minister of Finance has suggested that he is almost on the point of seeing the light. I quote, for example, the portion of his remarks where he emphasizes the principle—and I am dealing with principle now—of this legislation. The Minister of Finance used the phrase that men and times change. That is quite true, change is a continuous process in the affairs of men. But I should like to add to that phrase used by the minister that principles never change, in this case, principles as they are related to our federal structure of government in Canada. It is a fundamental principle that there must be autonomous areas in both levels of government if our federal system is to survive.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) seems to have an appreciation of this because in his statement at the resolution stage he said, as reported on page 5987 of Hansard for July 16, 1956:

> The federal government is not the creature of the provinces, nor are the provinces creatures of it. Each has its own assigned responsibilities,—

It seems to me that there is the fundamental point of objection, at least it is a fundamental point of objection to the present measure so far as my own personal viewpoint is concerned.

I could quote from authorities other than the Minister of Finance in support of this essential principle. The late Mr. Mackenzie King was also a great exponent of the same principle, and in Hansard for 1930, volume II, page 1237, when this matter of giving assistance to the provincial governments was a burning issue because of the depressed economic conditions prevailing, Mr. King had this to say:

> When on a previous occasion we were discussing this matter of grants from one treasury to another, I said I thought it was an unsound principle; in fact, I think I used the expression that it was a vicious principle—> —to have one body raise the taxes and another body spend the people's moneys thus raised.

I underscore that word "vicious".

So we have it from the responsible minister in the current Liberal government as well as the gentleman who was the leader of that government for so very long that they recognized the principle that is at stake in this particular issue.

Now, the reason I am taking the trouble to raise this point at the present time is that in certain quarters of the Liberal party, particularly in Manitoba, there is a failure to appreciate the issue which is at stake. I recall when we were discussing the renewal of the tax rental agreements in 1952 and particularly during the election in 1953, the opposition's stand was misunderstood or misinterpreted deliberately in relation to this problem. I repeat that our stand on that occasion has been vindicated now by the Minister of Finance in the quotation I read where he says that they were merely temporary, that they were merely a passing solution to a very grievous and difficult problem and something better would have to be found. That is precisely the point we, as an opposition, made at that time.

A pamphlet that was circulated in Manitoba, and to which I took rather forceful exception, presented our stand on this matter in 1953 as an election issue. I think I could best bring it to the attention of the house by quoting from the interpretation that was given by the Manitoba Liberals to the Conservative stand at that time. I take the trouble to deal with this subject because I am quite sure that the same misinterpretation will be made of the present stand of the official opposition. The pamphlet, which is a rather rare pamphlet now because I think it must have found its way into the waste-paper basket as fast as it was delivered to those to whom it was directed, is an election pamphlet and it says something to this effect: The Liberal candidate supports the tax rental agreements but his Conservative opponent for Brandon-Souris supports Mr. Drew in his opposition to the dominion-provincial tax agreements and voted with Mr. Drew on his motion of censure reported in unrevised Hansard page 881, December 17, 1952.

Now, I turn to that Hansard and this is what I voted for, and I leave it to all hon. members whether it was a fair interpretation of the stand we took at that time. It was a Conservative amendment to the speech from the throne and there were several sections. Section (e) under question said the following as reported in volume I, page 33 of Hansard for 1952-53:

> (e) to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly increasing responsibilities.

There, we have it. It is not an attempt to deprive the provinces, such as Manitoba, of their legitimate share of tax resources. It is an attempt to provide additional access to those funds and the government, in this present measure, has gone some farther step along the road to recognizing that the members of the official opposition were correct in their analysis of the problem at the time. In his remarks at the resolution stage the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has this to say, as reported on page 5593 of Hansard for July 16, 1956. He had criticized the general principle of the bill being brought before the house, and he carries on in the following words:

> Now, in saying these things following the speech of the Minister of Finance, I wish to make it quite clear that the present formula has some merits in the acceptance of certain very important principles.

Principles are of the utmost importance in this whole business. Skipping a few lines, the Leader of the Opposition said as follows:

> The acceptance by the federal government of the place of the provinces and the right of the provinces in the field of income tax, corporation tax, succession duties and other direct taxes is, in itself, a welcome evidence of a return to the position which was always accepted without question over the years between 1867 and 1941, when the wartime tax agreements were signed.

As a result of prodding by the opposition, we have at least made the point that there is this fundamental principle of federalism to be preserved.

Now, I can go farther than the authority of members of parliament and current members of the government in demonstrating this point. Dr. MacGregor Dawson, one of our outstanding constitutional authorities, has on various occasions stressed the importance of maintaining this principle of giving the provinces their rightful prerogatives in the federal scheme of things. For example, on page 135 of the revised edition of his book, "The Government of Canada", he says:

> If the Canadian plan is to succeed provinces must be given certain minor tax fields over which they have complete control so that their structure will retain a degree of elasticity and they can enjoy some measure of fiscal independence.

That statement coming from a very eminent authority on Canadian constitutional matters is the point that I am trying to emphasize here. The opposition opposes this measure because, like the old agreements, it misses this fundamental point. The minister recognizes its necessity but does not quite implement it in the bill that we have before us.

I do not have to emphasize the importance of retaining the integrity of local government. That has been done over and over again in this debate. If we fail to give the provinces their rightful place it means that an increase in dependence upon the federal government causes a growing loss of power and prestige so far as the provincial government is concerned as a separate government entity and the same process carries over to the municipal governments as well. It is a fundamental condition of any healthy democracy that we must preserve the principle of division or distribution of powers. Without a doubt the tragedy that occurred in this house in early June would not have occurred had it not been for the fact that the prestige, the influence and the power of the lesser levels of government—and I use the phrase "lesser levels of government" in the geographic sense—had been undermined as a result of the increasing encroachments which arose primarily during the wartime conditions and which unfortunately have been perpetuated endlessly into the post-war period. Let me repeat, this is the principle the opposition is fighting for and it is a fundamental principle if we are to avoid what has unfortunately happened in this house, a situation that has been decried by the press from one end of the country to the other, and if we are to preserve a healthy state of democracy.

Let me come back to the sort of propaganda that caused me to rise on this occasion. I think it is absolutely unfair, and it is not in the best interest of national unity, to come out with the sort of propaganda which states that the reason we of the official opposition take this position is that we are favouring one section of the country against the other. As far as I am concerned, we are fighting for the fundamental principle of federal democracy. I could have read further from this pamphlet, but perhaps if I read the sort of publicity that tries to arouse regional passions over this important issue that appears from time to time in Manitoba it might make more effectively the point I am trying to make. Here is an advertisement which appeared in the Elkhorn Mercury around August 8, 1953:

> Manitoba now receives $23 million yearly under the dominion tax agreement. Drew would scrap this to fatten the money bags of Ontario and Quebec. Dare we take a chance?

That is the sort of propaganda we are up against in Manitoba and I think that what has happened as a result of the stand we took at that time when we were criticized so severely by the government for our unreasonableness is more than justified by what has happened in the changes in the bill now before us. We are hoping that in taking just as adamant a position in dealing with the inadequacies of the present measure before the house, in so far as they fail to include this fundamental principle of federal democracy, we will have some beneficial effect in helping to restore a balanced democracy in Canada. I do not want to go into that any farther. I wanted to be a little more positive and constructive in so far as the areas in which the lower levels of government might be relieved of certain service responsibilities, and thus be in a position to cope more adequately with the tax resources already allocated to them, are concerned. I refer in this regard especially to the tax on real estate at the municipal level of government. But just in passing, since time does not permit me to do more, I would mention that expensive modern road construction—the hon. member for Prince Albert dealt with this at some length—might quite easily under the British North America Act be carried on by the federal authorities if they so desired, and that is one of the expenses that fall heaviest upon the provinces and upon the municipalities. Under the peace, order and good government section of the British North America Act this responsibility could quite easily be delegated to the senior level of government.

There is one more point that Dawson makes that I should like to touch on before I conclude my remarks and it relates to the statement I have just made. Canada in 1956, because of the failure of the federal government to give leadership in highway construction, does not yet have an all-weather road from the east to western Canada. As a westerner, if I want to travel to Manitoba, I must pass through the United States of America, if I am going to have reasonable driving conditions, and this leads me to an item from book 1 of the Rowell-Sirois report.

The Chairman: Order. It is five o'clock.

Second reading of Bill No. 4, an act to amend the Railway Act.—Mr. Deschatelets.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

REFERENCE TO HOUSE OF APPEAL FROM RULING OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE

Mr. John Hunter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to refer to you an appeal from my ruling as chairman of the banking and commerce committee. Mr. Knight has stated that in his view the banking and commerce committee should immediately report Bill No. 51 to the House of Commons, even though the Canadian Consumer Loan Association has only started making its representations, and he accordingly moved, seconded by Mr. Regier:

That the banking and commerce committee immediately report Bill 51 to the House of Commons.

I, as chairman of the banking and commerce committee, ruled that the motion was out of order since Bill 51 had not yet been carried by the committee section by section, nor had the title been carried nor the bill carried. Mr. Regier appealed my ruling.

Mr. Speaker: This is a matter of rare occurrence. As you may have noticed, the Clerk and I have just had a consultation over the matter. As I understand the situation, standing committees, special committees and committees of the whole house, that is committees to study money resolutions, committees to study ways and means, committees to study supply or committees to study bills are all agencies of the house. According to the authorities the rules of the house are to be followed in committee as far as it is possible and in committee of the whole house an appeal under standing order 59 is allowed from any ruling made by the chairman upon report to the house.

If the rules to be followed by standing and special committees are to be the same as those followed in the committee of the whole we can assume that a member of a committee may appeal the ruling of the chairman, and the chairman of the committee, the same as the chairman of the committee of the whole, would report to the house to have the appeal satisfied by the house pronouncing upon it by way of a vote. That was always my understanding and I was just about ready to put the report to the house.

However, the Clerk has a different opinion on the matter and the argument he puts forward is rather cogent. He submits that the assumption that the rules to be followed by standing and select committees are similar to those followed in the committee of the whole house is based on the English rules and in the United Kingdom there is no such thing as an appeal, either in committee of the whole or in standing and special committees. They settle their own affairs without making a report to the house. If that is so, and if I were to present this report to the house, I am told that we would be initiating something which has never happened. The Clerk and the two deputy clerks have looked for a precedent but they cannot find a single case where an appeal from the ruling by a chairman of a committee has been reported to the house in the fashion which has just been followed today.

As I said a moment ago, I thought there was a possibility that this could be done but after having heard the argument which the Clerk made to me a moment ago it seems to me that the house would want to be most careful as to what precedent would be established if it were to insist upon having this report placed before it. If committees are to communicate with the house, under the rules there is only one time when the house can accept a report from a committee and that is at the beginning of the sitting under the heading "Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees".

This report is no different from any other report by a committee. In the first place, according to standing order 15 this would be the wrong time to receive a report. It is not a report in the sense that a committee would report a bill or recommendations about a matter which had been referred to it. The house may dispense with the rules on certain occasions. In this particular case the appeal was made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) who is now in the house. Would the hon. member not be satisfied to have the matter dealt with in the committee on banking and commerce so we could avoid establishing a precedent about which we might perhaps feel sorry later on?

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would be only too happy to comply with your suggestion. I simply wanted to impose closure on the lobbying of the finance companies. That was my sole purpose and I think we can settle the matter in committee.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I should like to make this brief observation. Standing order 59 states:

> The standing orders of the house shall be observed in the committees of the whole house so far as may be applicable, except the standing orders as to the seconding of motions—

Then clause 4 reads:

> The chairman shall maintain order in the committees of the whole house, deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the house;

Citation 428 of Beauchesne's third edition reads:

> From the chairman's decision no appeal should be made to the Speaker.
> In case of an appeal to the house, it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in the language reported to him and put the question, "That the decision of the chairman be confirmed." No discussion is allowed on the appeal. Should the Speaker be absent, the chairman takes the chair of the house and another member makes the report of appeal to the acting Speaker who will at once submit the question to the house for its decision.

Under the practice followed in connection with appeals from a ruling of the chairman of the whole house, once an appeal has been taken against a ruling the chairman simply rises and makes an immediate report to the Speaker. That does not give rise to the difficulty which you have mentioned of perhaps creating an interruption in the business of the house which might be the case if a select committee were making such report. Nevertheless citation 428 is in broad enough terms to include an appeal from the decision of a chairman of any select committee.

Personally I do not recall any appeal to the house in a situation of this kind, but I do remember an occasion some years ago when an appeal was taken from a chairman's ruling and he ruled that there was no power in the select committee to entertain the appeal and that the appeal must be taken to the house and that he must make a report to the Speaker.

The Speaker does not rule on the appeal. He simply puts the question to the house, and in the light of citation 428 I should have thought that was clearly the proper practice.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might say a word in support of the arguments which you say have been made to you by the Clerk of the house. It seems to me that the Clerk is quite right in suggesting that this would be a new precedent if the house were to consider the appeal from the ruling of the chairman of the banking and commerce committee. The hon. member for Eglinton has drawn your attention to citation 428. I suggest, however, that citation 428 clearly relates to what happens when there is an appeal from the chairman of the committee of the whole house. I draw the attention of the hon. member for Eglinton to citation 534, which is under the chapter in Beauchesne's third edition having to do with standing committees, in which it says:

> Committees are regarded as portions of the House and are governed for the most part in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the House.

In both instances "House" is spelled with a capital "H". I suggest that this is clear. The next sentence is:

> Every question is determined in a committee in the same manner as in the House to which it belongs.

"House" is spelled with a capital "H" again. I suggest that that makes it clear that the proceedings of a standing committee are governed by the rules and the practices that prevail in the house, not in a committee of the whole house, and in the house we would deal with an appeal from the Speaker's ruling, if such were sought, by a vote of the members of the house. Similarly, I think we would be not only meeting the request of the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam but we would be doing the right thing if we referred this matter back to the committee on banking and commerce and let the members of that committee make the decision as to whether or not they support the ruling of the chairman. In addition to citation 534 in Beauchesne's third edition, may I refer to certain citations in Beauchesne's second edition? First of all, there is citation 602, which is substantially the same as citation 534 in his third edition. Then on the next page I note citation 607, which states:

> Committees are governed in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the House and which continue in full operation in every select committee. It is upon this principle, that the practice appears to be founded, of consulting the Speaker, in reference to points of order and the forms of proceedings, by select committees.

There is quite a difference between the provisions in standing order 59 for an appeal to the house from a committee of the whole house and what is spelled out in citation 607, namely, consultation with the Speaker. In the other case, on which Your Honour had occasion to rule some weeks ago, the Speaker does not come into the picture at all; he merely puts the vote. So far as these standing committees are concerned, is it not quite clear from citation 607 that if the hon. member for Parkdale is in doubt as to what he should do he can have a consultation with Your Honour, but that that does not need to be in the house? I submit that we would be doing the right thing if we met the request of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and referred the matter back to the committee. I think the Clerk of the house has given Your Honour good advice in this respect.

Mr. Charles Cannon (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): In regard to what the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) has said, the procedure on appeals from a decision of the chairman of the standing committee should be similar to the rule applying to an appeal from a decision of the chairman of the house when sitting as committee of the whole. I thought it might help Your Honour to come to a decision if I cited from Bourinot's third edition, which I happen to have here, pages 519 and 520:

> If a question of order arise the chairman will decide it himself, unless it be deemed more advisable to refer the matter to the Speaker in the house itself. Rule 76 provides:
> "Questions of order arising in committee of the whole house shall be decided by the chairman, subject to an appeal to the house; but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the house, on receiving a report thereof."
> In case of an appeal to the house it is the duty of the chairman of the committee to report in writing the point of order which he has decided. The Speaker must then submit the matter to the determination of the house in the language reported to him, and put the question—"That the decision of the chairman be confirmed." No discussion is allowed on the appeal.

I respectfully submit that, our two authorities on parliamentary procedure, Beauchesne and Bourinot, not forgetting the hon. member for Eglinton, being of the same opinion, there should be no discussion on that.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to find the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Cannon) taking the view that he does. Just as he rose I was about to rise and direct your attention to at least two precedents on which I have been able to put my hands in regard to appeals from chairmen's rulings. This is in regard to a special committee, it is true, not a standing committee, but I think the procedure is the same whereby appeals from chairmen's rulings were decided by a vote of the committee. The hon. member was a member of that committee and voted to sustain the chairman's ruling in each case. It was not referred to the house, and nobody suggested that it be referred to the house.

I must confess I am surprised that the point should have arisen, because I have served on numbers of committees, both standing and select committees, where the chairman's ruling has been appealed and the matter has been settled by a vote of the committee without any suggestion being made that the appeal should be referred to the house. I refer to these two examples. In the special committee on estimates last year, you will find in the reports of Wednesday, March 2, and Friday, March 11, appeals from the chairman's ruling on that committee. I think we had more than two such appeals, but those are the two I have been able to turn up quickly.

I recall that in another select committee, it is true, the committee on veterans affairs in 1945 and 1946, there were a few occasions when there were appeals from a chairman's ruling. I also recall that in the special committee on defence expenditures we had appeals from the chairman's rulings, and they were decided in the committee.

Those committees to which I have referred were under experienced chairmen: in two cases the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) and in another case the former member for Spadina, now a member of the Senate; and that is the practice that was followed almost automatically. It did not occur to any member of those committees for a moment that it would have to be referred to the house. I should think that is because of a provision in a citation to which my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre has referred, that the proceedings in committee, meaning the standing and select committees, are governed by the proceedings in the house, spelled with a capital "h", meaning therefore the house in a technical sense, where an appeal from the Speaker's ruling would be decided by a vote. So in committee an appeal from the chairman's ruling, I suggest, should be decided by a vote of the members of that committee. Otherwise there will be, as somebody has pointed out, constant interruptions to the proceedings of the house.

Mr. Cannon: As the hon. member has referred to me, I might be allowed a word in reply. I have sat on several of the committees of this house where there was an appeal from the chairman's rulings to the committee itself, but I have always understood that the rule was the one I had mentioned in citing Bourinot and in citing Beauchesne but that the appeal from the decision of the chairman to the committee itself was done by the unanimous consent of the committee every time to get the matter over with rather than come to the house and go through the whole procedure. It is by unanimous consent of the committee in question if an appeal is made from the chairman's ruling to the committee.

Mr. Fulton: I suggest to the hon. gentleman that the citation he read from Bourinot applies exclusively to the committee of the whole house and that in this connection the proceedings in a standing or special committee of the house are different from the proceedings in committee of the whole; that in a standing or special committee the proceedings are governed by the same rules that apply in the house itself, so that an appeal from a ruling in a standing committee should be decided by the members of that body.

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my recollection goes back some years when there was quite a heated discussion in the same banking and commerce committee at the time that our friend, W. H. Moore, was chairman of the committee. There were several occasions when points of order were raised and he ruled on them and there was no appeal made to the house from the chairman's ruling on points of order at that time. I think I once had the same experience in the committee on agriculture and colonization. At that time the vote was taken in the committee to sustain the chairman's ruling.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my experience does not extend back as far as that of the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa, but it has always been the practice at any rate on any committee on which I have served that if there were appeals they would be decided by the committee itself, and until this afternoon I never heard anyone suggest that there was an appeal to the house from a ruling of a committee chairman. I would be inclined to think that a further search of the records and the precedents, which the Clerk has apparently had a somewhat limited time to undertake, would indicate that if this has occurred in the past it probably occurred back during the time referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre on another occasion when we discussed procedure at which time he argued, as I recall, that such appeals should not be to the house but should be to the Speaker. He cited references in 1896 with some brief references, I think, in 1907, to indicate that at one time it had been the procedure in a junior part of the house to appeal to the Speaker rather than to the house, and in that particular instance he urged upon us a reversal to the procedure that had been adopted at that time.

I think Your Honour disposed of that in the course of making your ruling but, as I recall it, the rule itself had been altered in the meantime to make sure that the appeal would be to the house. Therefore the quotation from Beauchesne surely cannot be more than an opinion based on experience in committee of the whole rather than on a precedent in the house itself or in a committee by way of an appeal to the house.

There is one feature about this concerning which I must say that I am gratified, and that is the desire of hon. members to have an appeal from a committee at least disposed of in a hurry rather than having delay, as has been the case during this session.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard several opinions and I should like to dispose of this matter but I should like to do it to my own satisfaction. If I go one way or the other I want to be satisfied. I do not know that the committee can function without having a ruling immediately. I would hope that it could function without having a ruling immediately because I should like to study the points raised by members on both sides of the question. Since the matter has been brought up I should like to study it very carefully. It may be that at times I have rushed into giving rulings. Citation 107 indicates that the Speaker may reserve his decision, and that is what I should like to do now. Can the committee function without having a ruling now?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, you will notice that citation 428 says that it is the duty of the chairman to leave the chair immediately and report in writing the point of order which he has decided. That I have done, and actually I would assume that whether the committee can sit while you are making your decision would depend on what your decision might be.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that it is music to my ears to hear hon. members plead that when an appeal is made from the chairman's ruling the Speaker must put the report immediately to the house and, according to citation 428, have it disposed of. I could not agree more with the opinion of the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on that score. I am only sorry that I did not adhere to those opinions at all times. It is almost with tears in my eyes that I recall the experience that cost me so much.

If we are to assume that the rules are to the effect that the rules in committee of the whole apply to the proceedings in standing committees and if in consequence of that the chairman, having received an appeal, acted upon the wording of citation 428 of Beauchesne, third edition, he had no alternative but to leave the chair and do as he has done. It appears to me that in the first place this is not the proper time to present such a report because, according to standing order 15, it should be done at the beginning of our proceedings.

In the second place, the practice has been ascertained both by the Clerk and by experienced members of the house and, as particularly pointed out by the hon. member for Kamloops, who said he had found two examples where appeals had been settled within the committee itself. I would gather that the practice with respect to appeals in standing and special committees is to have them settled by the committee itself.

Third, I think the house should consider the point raised by the Clerk which is to the effect that our practice is based largely on what happens in the United Kingdom. There appeals are not settled by the house. As a matter of fact, they have no appeals in their committees. They take the decisions made by the chairman without appealing.

I also go along with the remarks made by the hon. member for Kamloops to the effect that if we were to initiate this procedure of having appeals heard by the house there would be no end to the disturbances which might thereby be created, and I do not think that we create committees to study special matters that we refer to them merely for the purpose of having the chairman come back here and interrupt our proceedings in order to take a division on every one of the appeals which may be taken from the rulings of a committee chairman.

As I have said, it is against my own preference to make a ruling now but I am informed, and I know that it is so, that the committee cannot continue to function unless and until I give a ruling. I would have much preferred to study the matter more carefully and give a ruling later. In making a ruling now, however, I will enter this caveat, that I will study the matter further and should I find that I am wrong I will come to the house and say so. I have to rule now that the appeal from the chairman's ruling should be settled in the committee on banking and commerce and not reported to this house.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POLLUTION OF INTERPROVINCIAL RIVERS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Diefenbaker for the second reading of Bill No. 66, to amend the Criminal Code (nuisance).

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) moved the second reading of this bill on February 28 last, I was not able to rise to reply to his case until just a few minutes before six o'clock. In those few minutes I pointed out that we in the government were deeply sympathetic with the objectives which my hon. friend had in mind, but that we gravely doubted the efficacy of the method he proposed to use to achieve them.

The whole question here, of course, is as to what is the best method of solving this problem of pollution. As I have stated on previous occasions on which we have considered this matter, I do not think a satisfactory solution to this problem can be found by proceedings in the criminal courts. That, of course, has been the view of the government all along and it is still our view.

The impression I gained from these remarks of the hon. member for Prince Albert is that the supposed need for his introducing this amendment to the Criminal Code arises from what, in my opinion, he mistakenly regards as a defect in the existing law.

I think he is also mistaken in that, if such a defect existed,—and I do not think it does exist—the amendment which he has moved would not remedy this alleged defect. That is my submission, and I will now attempt to show that it is well founded.

Now, it may be that I do not understand correctly the case of my hon. friend from Prince Albert. In order to make sure that we are ad idem—that we understand one another—I should like to attempt to recapitulate his case in the hon. member's presence and to ask him to correct me if, at any stage, I state his position wrongly.

First, he made the plea, on the basis of a quotation by the mayor of Prince Albert of an opinion obtained from Mr. McCuaig of Edmonton, that there was "the legal difficulty of a city in one province obtaining an injunction against a city in another province and stated that as yet he has found no legal method by which this "can be accomplished", that is to say there was no legal method by which an injunction could be obtained in Alberta in respect to a common nuisance which had been created in Prince Albert in Saskatchewan. Then having pointed out that that civil remedy was not available, the hon. member for Prince Albert went on to say this, and I am now quoting from page 1633 of Hansard of February 28, 1956:

> Having first pointed out that the person has no civil rights on an interprovincial river whose water supply has been polluted, I am now endeavouring, following that, to show that the only means is to put teeth in the criminal law so that wrongdoers who would take advantage of the situation and thereby destroy this bounty of nature shall be severely punished.

Then my hon. friend goes on to say what his conception of the law is at the present time, a conception with which I shall in due course take issue. He states it in these terms on page 1634 of Hansard:

> As the law stands today there is no right under section 165, the present nuisance section, or any other section of the Criminal Code, to prosecute wrongdoers on interprovincial rivers. All that section will do is to cover the individual who dumps a bit of stuff into a river within the province in which the prosecution takes place. But nowhere and under no authority can anything be done by people living in provinces adjoining the province in which the pollution has taken place.

At that point I intervened with this question:

> Under the amendment to the code which he proposes,—

That is the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

> —if someone in Edmonton were guilty of an offence under it, which offence caused difficulty in Prince Albert, would he not agree that the prosecution of that offence would have to be conducted by the Alberta law enforcement authorities?

To that question my hon. friend from Prince Albert replied in part as follows:

> I do not have before me the section of the Criminal Code that covers exactly that type of thing where an offence happens affecting two jurisdictions.

Later, Mr. Speaker, I will cite that section to which the hon. gentleman was presumably referring and will endeavour to show that it completely covers the problem that he had in mind. He continued as follows:

> One of the earlier general sections of the Criminal Code provides for eventualities similar to that; but whether or not my hon. friend is correct, suppose the pollution took place in the province of Alberta: all that would need to be done would be for a charge to be laid in the province of Alberta and the witnesses transported to the place of trial within Alberta.

In other words, in those remarks my hon. friend from Prince Albert indicated that he had the impression, in perhaps a somewhat inchoate form but nevertheless a correct impression, of what the law is at the present time. Then I asked this question:

> May I ask my hon. friend another question? If that be so, then would not the same condition of affairs and the same reason apply to a charge for committing a common nuisance which had been committed in Alberta, which caused a bad effect in Prince Albert and which could be prosecuted in Alberta by taking Saskatchewan witnesses to Alberta for that purpose?

My hon. friend's reply to that question was this:

> With that general proposition I am not in agreement. In making pollution on interprovincial rivers a criminal offence I think the prosecution could be taken in either place where the pollution actually took place or in the province in which the effects of that pollution were felt.

Then after quoting from the definition of what is a common nuisance under law as it is now, the hon. member for Prince Albert goes on to say this:

> If the section as it now stands covered such cases as this, then a person in Prince Albert or any other place in Saskatchewan affected by the pollution would be able to take a prosecution against the Alberta company. But as the law now stands there is no provision whatsoever.

That is the point upon which I take issue with my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman from Prince Albert continued:

> That is not my opinion, although I entirely concur in it; that is the opinion of counsel. Under the law as it now stands, there is nothing that can be done by a resident in one province to meet the nuisance of pollution in an adjoining province.

Then I again intervened with a question as follows:

> Would he—

That is the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert:

> Would he point out in his amendment the provision therein which makes it possible for a person in Saskatchewan to prosecute an offender in Alberta? What language in his amendment provides for that possibility?

That is to say, if the supposed defect in the existing law is that a man who suffers a nuisance in Prince Albert cannot prosecute in Alberta, I was asking my hon. friend what it was in his amendment—that is the one that is now under discussion—that would remedy that defect. My hon. friend's reply thereto was as follows:

> Just wait a minute. I have already said that under the section as it now stands proceedings could be taken in Prince Albert if the present nuisance section covered the situation. I say that it does not cover that situation because pollution of an interprovincial stream does not come within the law as it is now constituted. It is because of that fact that I want this amendment added so as to cover interprovincial streams. Then immediately there will be available the right of action and there will also be teeth in the law.

So, Mr. Speaker, upon that point, the question of whether or not my hon. friend has a case depends upon whether he is right in his statement that there is no provision in the law to enable a person suffering from a nuisance committed in one province to prosecute in another. I would refer him in that connection to section 419 of the Criminal Code. I think this is the one that he had in mind when he said that there was a provision in the code covering cases "where an offence happens affecting two jurisdictions". Section 419 reads as follows:

419. For the purpose of this act,

(a) where an offence is committed in or upon any water or upon a bridge, between two or more territorial divisions, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions;

(b) where an offence is committed on the boundary of two or more territorial divisions or within 500 yards of any such boundary, or the offence was commenced within one territorial division and completed within another, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that where, in the province of Alberta, a company or companies or municipality, under the existing criminal law, discharge a polluting effluent into the Saskatchewan river which going down that river constitutes when it reaches Prince Albert, a common nuisance within the meaning of the relevant section of the code, that is a case which clearly falls within section 419(b). There is, therefore, no necessity for my hon. friend to move his present amendment for the purpose of clearing up that difficulty. It is already cleared up in this section 419 of the code. But if it had not been cleared up already in the code, then my hon. friend's amendment would not have had that effect in any case; because if this difficulty had existed the mere reference in my hon. friend's amendment to an interprovincial river would not have the effect of meeting this alleged difficulty.

Then, my hon. friend from Prince Albert goes on; and this is his next objection, as set out at page 1635 of Hansard for February 28, 1956:

As the matter stands today the maximum penalty—even if the present section applied—on indictment is two years or the matter could be proceeded with by way of summary conviction in which case the maximum penalty would be $500. But $500 penalties, even if they were applicable, would be simply nothing to corporations which wantonly and wilfully pollute these waters.

I go back to this principle and I am trying to make it clear to my hon. friend. As the law is now, or as the section reads now, there is no right of action for the pollution of international rivers. The amendment will make it an offence.

Now, with regard to this matter of penalties, I would refer my hon. friend to section 623 of the code which reads as follows:

Notwithstanding subsection (2) of section 621—

A reference which has no bearing upon the use of this section in the present context.

—a corporation that is convicted of an offence is liable, in lieu of any imprisonment that is prescribed as punishment for that offence,

(a) to be fined in an amount that is in the discretion of the court, where the offence is an indictable offence,—

So that the whole of my hon. friend's argument that the penalties under the relevant section of the Criminal Code are inadequate for the type of offence that was envisaged here is quite unfounded. If an accused were a corporation and were found guilty of this offence, which is an indictable offence, then there is no limit at all to the amount of the penalty which the court could impose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's position it seems to me is that he wants an amendment to the law because he is under the impression, which with respect I think is an incorrect impression, that the present law is not effective or not applicable. He says he has an opinion to that effect, but he did not table it or quote it except in very general terms. In my judgment that opinion is wrong. It may be that I am wrong in this matter; and if that were so then until these points are decided by the courts we would not know which of the two views was correct, although in the face of these clear provisions I have just quoted it does seem to me that the matter is not susceptible of very much doubt.

But I would state this, that both in provincial legislatures and in this house where a given law seems to require some reform the practice is the one which we followed in the revision of the Criminal Code, to have the need for reform studied, to draft legislation, to enact legislation with such amendments as may be made by committees of the house or by the house itself, and then when the law has been passed not to amend it further until it has been interpreted by the courts in a way that for example in the present case would afford my hon. friend some legitimate foundation for his suggestion that the law should be further changed.

Until the sections of the code which I have quoted today, which seem to me to be crystal clear, have been held by the courts not to mean what they say, I do not think my hon.

friend should come to this house with the suggestion that it be changed upon the basis of the sort of argument he has made in support of the change or of the information he has collected in support of this argument.

As I have said on previous occasions, we on this side of the house do not think a solution of this problem of the contamination of the waters of the country can be reached by any kind of criminal court method. I am not suggesting we should repeal any of the existing provisions which have stood the test of time, but I think if we are thoughtful we all realize that pollution is going to be cured by doing away with it by concerted efforts upon the part of the responsible governments concerned.

In order to inform the house as to steps that have been taken during this past year since the last time I made a report in this regard in relation to the North Saskatchewan river—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on to deal with these generalities I should like to ask him one question. Could he tell me of one case of a successful prosecution under the section in question where an offence was committed on an interprovincial river? I simply ask him that one question because if what he says is correct, and it is so easy to take these prosecutions, you would think that with the vast amount of pollution that is going on in this country and the ruination of the rivers, that section would have been used.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is a very clever counsel and the question which he has just asked me reminds me of another series of three questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have asked a very simple question.

Mr. Garson: I should like to illustrate this, and then I shall be glad to answer the question after that. An eminent counsel in the United States was examining a medical expert of national standing before a jury. He said to the medical expert, "Do you know Mr. Jones?" "Yes." "Were you his medical attendant?" "Yes." "Where is he now?" "Oh, he is dead." He said, "Do you know Mr. Smith?" "Yes". "How long did you attend Mr. Smith?" "Oh, for 12 years." "Where is he now?" "He is dead." "Did you know Mr. Brown?" He went through the same process with regard to Mr. Brown and others with unfortunate consequences upon the minds of the jury. Now, my hon. friend asks me the question as to whether I know of any case in which this particular section of the Criminal Code was invoked for the purpose of prosecuting a nuisance in an interprovincial river in one city which began in another. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, certainly not, because it has not arisen.

Mr. Garson: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It cannot be done.

Mr. Garson: This is an intelligent gathering.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You would not think it was from this sort of discussion.

Mr. Garson: I am suggesting that in this intelligent gathering hon. members will probably think that there has never been any occasion previously for anyone even to commence a case in respect of a nuisance within section 169 of the Criminal Code which arose on an interprovincial river in one province and was completed in another.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the Ottawa river? There was a prosecution in Quebec, but what happened? The court said no.

Mr. Garson: A prosecution in Quebec?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Garson: A prosecution in Quebec with respect to the Ottawa river but, if I mistake not, the Ottawa river is the boundary between Quebec and Ontario over a considerable part of its length, so that if someone in Quebec were polluting the river, we will say, at Campbell's Bay and some person else in Quebec was complaining about that he would not have to leave the province of Quebec in order to prosecute for this pollution. In any event, the mere fact that no occasion of this sort has arisen does not establish my hon. friend's point that the existing legislation would not be effective if it did arise; nor does it support my hon. friend's case that the present law should be changed simply because no person has as yet invoked it, or had any occasion to invoke it. But as I see it, Mr. Speaker, the important thing in this matter—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Pretty evasive.

Mr. Garson: —of preventing pollution is to prevent it and I have had this report from the Department of National Health and Welfare of progress in preventing pollution on the North Saskatchewan river during the past year.

During routine sampling carried out by the provincial department of health of Alberta in the early months of 1956, odours which were described as stale or septic were noted. This condition was quite distinct from that which gave rise to complaints during the winter of 1953-54. This condition was attributed to lack of oxygen resulting from the pollution originating in and near Edmonton and aggravated by the fact that the stream was ice-covered.

In an attempt to correct the situation, the Alberta health authorities instituted mechanical aeration of the stream, some 60 to 80 miles below Edmonton. Owing to difficulties of a mechanical nature and the lateness of the season, this experiment could only be continued for about three weeks. Consequently, only a slight increase in the oxygen content of the river was obtained. The equipment used in this experiment was supplied by the city of Edmonton and had been out of service for several years. When the electric motors were put into service, they burned out and some time was lost in replacing them. Comparatively mild weather during the experiment resulted in the ice remaining open at the points where it had been broken to instal the aeration tubes. Consequently, much of the air escaped through these openings.

Carbon filter studies carried out at the same time and with the assistance of the United States public health service and the Ontario department of health were designed to identify the pollutants responsible for odours. Examination of the extracts obtained from the carbon filters are now being conducted in the laboratories of the Alberta research council.

It should be noted that by means of observations and analyses conditions in the North Saskatchewan river are being checked constantly by the Alberta health department. It it our understanding that the oxygen content of the North Saskatchewan river has returned to normal as a result of the spring breakup with no complaints of odour.

The available information indicates that water treatment plants taking water from the North Saskatchewan river were able to produce water of satisfactory quality during the past several months.

Industries in the Edmonton area are continuing to maintain effective control of their wastes. For example, it is known that certain procedures, such as the following, have been instituted: burning of high-odour wastes, using combustible wastes as fuel and the retention of potentially offensive wastes which are checked prior to release to the river, or discharged to holding ponds if they are found to be objectionable. Storage ponds are used extensively to retain and dissipate wastes which might contribute unsatisfactory conditions in the river. Thus it can be noted that the industries of the Edmonton area have been active in providing treatment facilities for the control of taste and odour-producing wastes capable of producing objectionable conditions in the North Saskatchewan river. Results have been gratifying.

The city of Edmonton has been actively engaged in providing treatment plants for its municipal wastes in order to comply with the requirements of the provincial health department. A sewage treatment plant to provide primary treatment for part of the city's sewage was put into operation in 1955. Secondary treatment facilities are presently being provided at this plant. A second sewage treatment plant is now under construction and this will provide primary treatment for the balance of the city's wastes. These facilities should be in operation in the autumn of 1956. It is understood that this program will be continued so that secondary treatment of all the city's wastes will be achieved within the near future. This will obviously improve conditions in the river to a marked degree.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend himself will agree there is more in that one statement in the way of progress in the control of the pollution of the North Saskatchewan river than my hon. friend can achieve in a dozen criminal prosecutions, whether under the existing law or under the amendment which he has moved and which I think is totally unnecessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You seem awfully afraid of the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that we should go into committee before we rise?

TAXATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 442, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into fiscal agreements with the governments of the provinces—Mr. Harris—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: Since it is six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I think I can conclude very quickly the remarks I was making. When the committee rose at five o'clock I was making a point which relates itself to a statement in the report of the Rowell-Sirois commission, page 43, and I quote:

> National security, national development and the fostering of trade and commerce by appropriate regulation were regarded by the fathers—

By that they mean the founding fathers.

> —as the great functions of government. They were also the functions which they thought likely to expand in the future. When these had been transferred to the federal government, the provinces were left with functions, the burden of which was not expected to grow.

I think that gets us to the main part of our problem. The federal government assumed the major responsibilities of national security, national development and the fostering of trade and commerce. As the committee rose at five o'clock I was stating that notwithstanding the rapid development in this country in the past two decades, particularly since world war II, we have not yet built an all-Canadian highway from east to west. That is symptomatic of general neglect of the functions of national development allotted to the federal government.

One reason for the necessity of tax rental agreements, equalization payments and so forth arises from the neglect of the development of national economy in various parts of the country. I decided to raise this point because in the house today we heard some statesmanlike utterances concerning depressions and such like and the responsibilities pertaining thereto. Such speeches are often made in this house and there is not always a strict regard for historical accuracy.

If there is any cause for complaint concerning the progress of the development of the nation it certainly does not fall upon the shoulders of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, because since 1896 we have had the privilege of holding office only for some sixteen years. The Liberal party has carried the burden of responsibility for most of that entire period. Therefore if there is any criticism as to the state of the development of our economy it rests squarely upon the shoulders of that party.

Accusations are made concerning depressions and 20 cents per day. That was a measure adopted to meet an emergency problem in connection with young men who were unemployed during that period. I left college in 1937 two years after a Liberal administration had been returned to power and we were still in the depths of very serious depression. In fact the depression combined with the drought in 1937 brought us almost to the lowest level of that dark and bleak period.

Mr. Blackmore: There was no 20 cents a day either.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is just the point I was going to make.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I have time for one sentence to make my point?

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to proceed?

An hon. Member: One sentence.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: With the kind permission of the chairman and the committee I will continue with the point that I was trying to make, that in 1937 when there were no other job opportunities and because of the continuing bleak conditions in this country, notwithstanding the fact that a Liberal administration had been returned, I went into social work in an effort to do something toward solving the problem and my work was mainly among the unemployed employables and the charge they made at that time was that in the period 1930-35 they had 20 cents per day from the government but after 1935 they had only highways to pound.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, I cannot guarantee to give my whole speech in one sentence even if it be as long as the one the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has just used.

An hon. Member: Try it.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): It would be a pretty tough job.

Mr. Harris: It might be more effective.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I do not know. I used the illustration a little while back that there seems to be only one effective weapon to use here and that is to repeat over and over the problems that face any particular part of our population. That seems to be the only way we can get these problems across to the treasury benches.

I should have spoken this afternoon and I hope I will be given a little leeway. I went along with the Minister of Finance in connection with the suggestion he made. I should like to start by using this sentence: The parties shall bargain in good faith. That is a simple sentence and is one which appears in almost every collective bargaining agreement I have ever seen. It appears in almost every piece of collective bargaining legislation we have on the statute books of this country. Yet it seems to me that we are going through the motions of dealing with the most important domestic contract that has faced this country since confederation and I see no signs from the government benches of the good faith which I submit should be present in any negotiations of this type. There seems to be more grasping than good faith; there seems to be more manoeuvring than good faith; there seems to be more politics than good faith.

As long as we continue this type of bargaining there will be no progress along the line of a true rapprochement among the various taxing powers of this country, and I may say that that is badly needed. I am not going to spend a lot of time quoting figures, although I may quote a few.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer and I am only a simple layman.

An hon. Member: Simple is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member has been talking about contracts. I have always understood that in any contract there was a consideration given on each side. I wish the hon. member would explain what consideration the provinces are giving in return for these payments.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I think that is a very easy answer to give. The provinces are giving up to the dominion fields of taxation to which they had equal right and which they gave up during a time of crisis and now the dominion government is trying to hold them ad infinitum.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is completely incorrect.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): The minister had an opportunity to speak on second reading and I am sure he will have plenty of opportunities to speak at this stage and express his views again and again. He has a double advantage over the rest of us in that he has moved from one place to an adopted part of the country and he knows the problems of each. Most of us have not been that fortunate in our method of getting here. I may say that if we want evidence as to there being a serious problem I would read from Canadian Tax Paper No. 10 by J. Harvey Perry, in which he said this:

> Important as are these regional disabilities a far more universal problem arises from the seam-stretching strains on all provincial and municipal governments caused by a snowballing population and a booming economy. Provincial and municipal politicians, trapped between mounting requirements for essential facilities and services on one side and the impenetrable wall of federal taxation on the other, have been howling in frustrated wrath. And well they might, too, for theirs is a serious predicament.

There is a statement from one of the most prominent economists in the country, which indicates the position in which the provinces and the municipalities find themselves at the moment. If we need any proof about the politics that enter into this discussion, I might read from the same report. Further down in the report this is stated:

> No doubt in a sense it also marks a resurgence of political criteria over the predominantly economic evaluations of recent years. This is evidenced by the application of political tests to the tax agreements, which were designed by economists for economic ends, by the apparent assumption of the initiative in federal-provincial negotiations by the Prime Minister in place of the Minister of Finance, by the strong role played by the privy council officials in the negotiations with provincial officials, and in many other subtle ways.

That is an indication that here is a situation where politics instead of cold basic economics is playing by far the most important role. I might say to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that I was amazed today to hear, after all the talking that we have done, that the only situation that confronts us now is an equalization of welfare in the provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: The yield from taxes.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Surely there is the additional major problem of the balancing as between the provinces and the dominion, as well as that equalization required as between province and province. If we continue along the lines suggested by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, we shall end up by rationing poverty instead of equalizing prosperity.

There are many ways of proving to you the situation that faces the municipalities and the provinces, but I cannot pass this opportunity without referring to the brief prepared by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, covering the period 1930 to 1951, which at pages 31 and 32 says the following:

> Between 1939 and 1951, federal government revenues per capita rose from $45.33 to $270.68. In the same interval, provincial government revenues per capita in Canada rose from $21.10 to $65.68, while municipal government revenues rose by a lesser amount from $28.07 to $45.49.

This is an indication that this government during this period has increased its take of the taxpayers' dollar by nine times. The provinces have been able to do it by multiplying it three times. As far as the municipalities are concerned, they have been very fortunate to get a 50 per cent increase. Further on it says:

> Municipal governments, relying upon less flexible revenue sources than the federal and provincial governments, have become increasingly dependent on grants and subsidies of other governments; otherwise they will be unable to finance the local services and responsibilities traditionally falling within their jurisdiction.

Surely something must be done for these people. There have been many suggestions, but it is still not too late to ask that this tax group be brought together once more. There is still time. These agreements do not run out until the spring of next year. Let us see whether we cannot approach this problem in good faith. I do not think that anyone can honestly say that there has been an attempt to negotiate a fair and proper deal. As a matter of fact, we have listened to and heard about labour negotiations that may last six or seven months, called to work out a solution satisfactory to both parties. What has this group done? How much time have they spent on this problem?

Mr. Harris: More time than any other previously.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I do not know what the Minister of Finance may think about it, but they got together for a couple of days, they fixed some type of agenda and they had a few of the subcommittees get together for a few days. Then they came back for four days, to do what? To consider a set formula of this government. There was no negotiation, on this phase and as a matter of fact I might say that about six days spent, all told, is proof that good faith did not enter into this deal.

Mr. Harris: Who does the hon. member suggest did not have good faith?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I would suggest that this government was not in good faith when it presented after only two or three days—

Mr. Marler: How do you get six days down to two or three?

Mr. Hamilton (York West): If the Minister of Transport will take his time, I shall get it down to two or three. After two or three days of what might be called negotiation, a firm proposal was put forth to these people on a "take it or leave it" basis. To me, as I say, that does not indicate good faith. So I say, as a first point, let us reconvene this group before it is too late. There is still time to do something about it.

As we have gone through this session, we have heard from all sides various suggestions as to what might be done to assist the municipal taxpayer. First of all, I have heard it said that there should not be the levying of a sales tax on municipal purchases. There is an opportunity there to assist the hard-pressed municipal taxpayer in that connection.

I might say that the Minister of Finance has been urged strongly several times that we have now reached the stage where the federal government should not expect to have its buildings free from municipal taxation. That is another way in which equality could be given to the real property taxpayer.

As a third method—I think this was referred to by the previous speaker—I recall that some $15 million or so has been spent annually on the trans-Canada highway. At the same time sales and excise taxes collected on automobiles, rubber tires and accessories bring this government well over $200 million per annum, and it is returning approximately $15 million. If it had the welfare of the people at heart, the least that could have been done was the complete payment for that road and the maintenance thereof. As a matter of fact, I might say that one of the reasons why I voted against that bill was that quite obviously in principle it was a responsibility that this government should have taken completely.

For a fourth point—there has been no indication of a basic, progressive plan of spreading out our industrial base. If there were some indication from the government that it was interested in such a plan, then we should not have the same complaints emanating from various parts of Canada, there would not be the same reason for the maritimes to say they were the poor cousins. It is time the government gave some leadership in that connection as well.

Finally, if the indications now are that the government is not going to reconvene this tax parley then as far as the municipal taxpayer is concerned it is time that he was allowed some deduction from his income tax for the payment that he is making towards education costs. If that were done it would provide a broader base for the municipal authorities to collect their revenues. If you do not do this, if the government does not attempt these things or see that they are done they will end up by having created to the detriment of the Canadian taxpayers simply 10 moneychangers' pockets of varying physical sizes, of varying degrees of prosperity, of varying degrees of narrow provincial nationalism. You will make a shambles of confederation. The responsibility for this will rest firmly on the treasury benches. It will rest more so on the Minister of Finance and in the end it will really rest on the shoulders of the Prime Minister. Let me repeat, with one change, my opening sentence: The parties must bargain in good faith.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take very much time on the first clause but there is one matter especially to which I should like to draw the attention of the government and the house. First of all I should like to refer to one statement made yesterday in the debate by the Minister of Fisheries. I think he has been dealt with fairly adequately by some of the other members of this group but he said one thing which has not been referred to by either of the members of this group who have taken part in the debate and I should like to refer to it. As found at the bottom of page 6313 of Hansard of yesterday, the Minister of Fisheries said:

> A very curious attitude is held by the premier of British Columbia and his Social Credit colleagues in the house. When facing British Columbia they declare that British Columbia has never been more prosperous.

As found in the second paragraph on the following page he went on to say:

> But when they face Ottawa they have a very different story to tell. They tell us that British Columbia is poverty-stricken and must have more money. They tell us Ottawa must help not only with tax dollars but that we must move into purely provincial fields such as education, highways, toll bridges, flood relief on a minor scale, and even assist their provincial railways. They tell us Ottawa has to help poor poverty-stricken British Columbia.

I would not refer to this, Mr. Chairman, except that there may be some people who, without thinking the thing through, would believe the Minister of Fisheries.

An hon. Member: That would be a catastrophe.

Mr. Patterson: I think it would be a tragedy if anybody did believe what he said in this connection as well, of course, as some of the other matters to which he referred. However, I should like to say that neither the premier of British Columbia nor the members of the Social Credit group from British Columbia have ever stated that British Columbia is poverty-stricken. I should like to refer to the speech of the hon. member for Macleod in which he called attention to an issue of the Financial Post, the entire third section of which was devoted exclusively to the marvellous and outstanding developments in the province of British Columbia. When I had the opportunity to participate I referred to the same issue of the paper and quoted the writer of the front page article in that particular section of the paper. He said that the government, with a new boldness of concept, was directing record outlays.

I think that the Minister of Fisheries is going beyond the realm of fact and truth when he states boldly that we tell a hard luck story and present British Columbia as a poverty-stricken province. It is far from that, but no thanks possibly to the Minister of Fisheries. What British Columbia wants is justice and fairness. When the Minister of Fisheries refers to the fact that we want the federal government to move into purely provincial fields such as education, highways, toll bridges, flood relief, assisting the provincial railway and so on, may I just say that many of these things refer to the development of the province of British Columbia and it is through the development of the province that the federal government can draw from it the vast amount of revenue they are taking from it at the present time. We only say that if they are going to reach in with both hands and take as much money as they can out of the province because of the development they certainly should be ready to invest a little bit in that development. That is all I am going to say in this connection. I am sorry the Minister of Fisheries was not able to be in his seat tonight, but I wanted to put that on record.

I think the views of this group have been set forth very clearly and conclusively in the debates at the resolution stage and on second reading and it is not necessary for me to restate our position tonight. I only say again that we believe that the provinces should be taken into the confidence of the government, that the government should have been willing to sit down with the provinces and work out a proposal, agreement and formula that would be satisfactory at least to some of the provinces instead of just going ahead, setting it out and saying, "All right, here it is, do what you like with it."

I believe that the provinces are vitally interested in this proposition and they should have a better opportunity of presenting their views, entering into the discussions and formulating a plan because if we want to secure co-operation in the working out of a plan I believe it is absolutely essential that there be co-operation in the drafting of the plan and the proposals.

I should like to refer now to some communications. I have here a telegram dated July 10, 1956, addressed to the queen's printer, Ottawa, Ontario, from J. V. Fisher, deputy minister of finance of the province of British Columbia. The telegram is as follows:

> Ref Hansard June 25, 1956 page 5327 as soon as bill is presented to provide agreements with provinces please send three copies and bill undersigned.

If we refer to page 5327 of Hansard we find that it has to do with the resolution preceding the introduction of the bill. Here we have the deputy minister of finance requesting three copies of the bill. I also have here a mimeographed form letter which the deputy minister received from C. A. St.-Arnaud, superintendent of publications, the last paragraph of which reads:

> The large number of orders and letters of inquiry received each day by this office makes it impossible for us to write you a personal letter. We hope this reply is satisfactory and that you understand that we value your inquiry nonetheless highly despite the necessity of our answering in this form.

I now go back to the top of the page and read as follows:

> Mr. J. V. Fisher,
> Deputy Minister of Finance,
> Government of B.C.,
> Victoria, B.C.
> This will acknowledge your recent communication requesting Canadian government publications. We regret that we are unable to supply the following for the reason checked below:

Instead of being checked it is written in, and this is what I should like to call to your attention especially:

> Re your telegram of July 10, 1956, returned herewith. We regret to say it is not expected that the bill you refer to will be presented during the present session.

Mr. Dufresne: They are pretty well informed!

Mr. Harris: All I can say at this point is that if the inquiry had been directed to me, as I would have supposed it would have been, that answer would not have been made.

Mr. Patterson: We will just go a little further into the matter. Here we have it stated that they are not expecting the bill to be presented during the present session; and as far as we know the government of British Columbia has never yet received the copies of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: Can you not send them one?

Mr. Patterson: Yes. We could send it.

Mr. Blackmore: Why should he?

Mr. Patterson: The question is this, Mr. Chairman. Is the printer in league with the government on this thing?

Mr. Harris: Don't be silly.

Mr. Patterson: I am not silly.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is some doubt about it, anyway.

Mr. Patterson: That is one man's opinion. Another man's opinion is as good as yours.

Mr. Harris: With my hon. friend's consent, may I say this. This legislation has been mentioned, I think, five times during the course of this session and on every occasion it has been stated that we intended to proceed with it during the present session.

Mr. Patterson: Then why was this communication sent to the deputy minister of finance of the province of British Columbia saying that it was not expected that this bill would be introduced during this present session?

Mr. Pickersgill: People make mistakes.

Mr. Patterson: That is a question that perhaps can do with more explanation than has been given by the Minister of Finance. I just say again: What goes on anyway? They are wanting the co-operation of the governments of the provinces. They want them to co-operate in the drafting and the execution of the plans and so on. Yet when they ask for these bills they are not forthcoming.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Why does not the government send them out voluntarily?

Mr. Patterson: That is another question. The hon. member for Bow River asks why the government does not send them out to the provinces.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): They don't have to be requested to do it.

Mr. Patterson: All these things enter into it. Once again we say this. In view of this incident and some of the other things that have happened, and the attitude of the government down through the past, we think it would be a good idea even yet to get the provinces together and to make another try at getting an understanding on something that is mutually agreeable, and working out a solution and a formula that at least some of them would be satisfied with. We therefore just place these things on record, Mr. Chairman, as another reason why the suggestion that our leader put forward should be acceded to, namely that even yet another conference be called to discuss the proposition.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I just want to take this opportunity of recording the fact that I would have voted against Bill No. 442 on second reading this afternoon if I had not been making a radio speech at the time. Frankly, I did not think that the persuasive methods of the Minister of Finance would have been so successful and that he would have been able—perhaps rightfully—to talk us into continuing discussion at this stage. I had gone off for 15 minutes and missed that, but as my remarks certainly indicated previously, I was opposed to that particular stage of the bill.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): On this clause, which contains the definitions of the bill, it is possible to make certain remarks I have in mind concerning the department to which is to be assigned the responsibility for implementing the provisions of the bill. We find—

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I can assure you that I do not agree with the statement of facts given to the hon. member. If there is a complaint against the Department of Finance it is surely a complaint to be made on my estimates and not on any bill that I may present.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If the minister will bear with me for just one or two sentences more until he sees where I am going instead of stopping me before I have even got started, I think we will both be in agreement, Mr. Chairman. The responsibilities for implementing these provisions are left with the Minister of Finance. That is probably necessary at the present time because among all the cabinet members the Minister of Finance is the one most directly concerned with provincial-federal financial problems. However, in the course of the debate which has taken place on this bill it has become apparent that the present legislation is merely the culmination of relationships between the provinces and the federal government which have been in the process of evolution since confederation. At the time of confederation these things were reasonably well set out and reasonably established. Since then, changing conditions, the changing economy of this country and changing world conditions have caused many changes in the relationships between the provinces and the federal government. We find today that the affairs of the provinces and those of the federal government impinge not only in matters of finance but at innumerable other points. Only a couple of weeks ago the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources went out to British Columbia for a discussion which affected the water resources and power resources of that province.

Mr. Harris: Now I know I was right.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The Minister of National Health and Welfare is continually in contact with the various provinces and we often hear of his travelling across this country for meetings with officials of those provinces. The affairs of the Department of Labour, or of the Department of Justice and of almost every other department of this government, in addition to the Minister of Finance are interrelated to those of the provinces.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I come to the particular point which, regrettably I find in clause 2 of this bill, namely that it assigns the responsibility for carrying out the provisions of this bill to the Minister of Finance rather than to someone who perhaps might best be called secretary of state for provincial affairs. At this particular moment we have not a secretary of state for provincial affairs. As I think you would infer from my remarks, Mr. Chairman, to me that is unfortunate. I have pointed out how relationships between the provinces and the federal government are being carried on in a number of fields by a number of different ministers. There is no correlation. There is no force in the federal government which binds these various gentlemen together and relates their activities one with the other, save perhaps the force of a prime minister who is already over-age and over-burdened.

Mr. Pickersgill: Has the hon. gentleman never heard of the cabinet?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The cabinet, Mr. Chairman, has hardly been a cohesive force in recent months, as has been evident on more than one occasion.

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Mrs. Shipley: Consider the comment, where it comes from.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Despite the provocation, Mr. Chairman, I shall respect the hon. member for Timiskaming and restrain the obvious comment which springs to mind.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): It is the first time you have restrained yourself.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As we look back over the history of the development of the cabinet, we find that until recently certain cabinet posts, such as Secretary of State for External Affairs, did not exist. The portfolio was carried on by the Prime Minister as one of his many activities. From time to time other ministers would be delegated to undertake certain responsibilities in connection with our affairs with other countries. But, as I have said, recently that responsibility has been laid directly on the shoulders of one responsible minister. While we may not always agree with the policy carried on by that minister, I think we can say that it has been more convenient in this house to have an official responsible in that field, and with the exception of perhaps a little misunderstanding which arose early in this session it has usually been possible to get some form of information which was reasonably accurate from that minister because it was his job, as Secretary of State for External Affairs, to keep himself conversant with the day to day happenings in that field.

But my suggestion—

The Chairman: Order. I fail to see how a discussion of the duties of the Secretary of State for External Affairs can possibly come within the scope of this clause. The hon. member did preface his remarks by mentioning the Minister of Finance, who is defined in the clause, but it seems to me we must keep our discussion to the exact terms of this clause which is, after all, merely an interpretation clause.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I am in complete agreement with you, and the interruption with reference to the Minister of Finance comes at just the right time to point up the statement I was going to make. You will recall that I was interrupted just as I said, "Now my suggestion is—"; that is the point at which you rose. Let me now proceed.

My suggestion is that, rather than the responsibility for this legislation being submitted to the Minister of Finance, it should be delegated to an officer, a member of the cabinet, who might very well be called the secretary of state for provincial affairs or, in the alternative, the minister for provincial affairs. I assume, Mr. Chairman, you are satisfied I am now back on the bill because that is extremely pertinent to this piece of legislation. If it is to be implemented by a minister who has all the other responsibilities of the Minister of Finance of this government, who is fundamentally and foremost responsible for the financial affairs of the federal government, it is in the first instance going to be difficult to get a completely unbiased approach to the problem by the minister concerned. Secondly, even if we accept the fact that the approach will be unbiased, it will be difficult for the matters contained in this bill to get the most adequate study and supervision.

I suggest that this might be a very good point for the government to consider the departure I am suggesting, and go forward from here with the thought in mind of the establishment of a department of provincial affairs, one very similar to the Department of External Affairs, which would not infringe the rights of the provinces any more than the Department of External Affairs infringes the rights of other nations. But it would devote its entire attention to legislative matters such as this, and to the ever more increasingly complicated matters which lie between federal and provincial authorities.

Mr. Harris: I would say just a brief word about this, Mr. Chairman. It is not a new proposition. It has been advanced at one time or another in the house by the hon. member for Prince Albert. We had a secretary of state for the provinces from 1867 to 1872. We abandoned the post. I think nearly everyone, except those who now advocate it and they are very few, would expect that the provincial government and the federal government would have direct access on those problems that are required to be solved between them, and the more direct the better because there is more possibility of a good solution.

I appreciate that the hon. member for York West has argued that we are similar to trade unions and employers because under these arrangements the provinces appear to be working for us and therefore ought to have the right to bargain collectively with us. I do not approve of that and I do not agree with it. I think the appointment of a separate minister for the purpose of dealing with provincial governments would only aggravate the problems that we have rather than aid in solving them.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): May I just ask the minister a question about this? Does he then believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has aggravated relationships between our country and the other nations with which he deals, because the situation is very similar?

Mr. Harris: I think perhaps the inquiry answers itself.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): I do not think I likened the two parties to trade unions and employers other than to mention the good faith which was required ordinarily in entering into contracts of that kind.

I should like to ask a question about section 2. This may be defined in the Interpretation Act, I am not sure; but I wondered if the minister might define, "permanent establishment within the province on the last day of its taxation year"? I had in mind a problem of this kind. A company, such as an operating air company, has a place of business where letters may be received, correspondence answered, but it may be operating in a province with a contract and have its facilities merely in tents, and then at the end of the contract those aircraft may be back in hangars in the province from which the company originally operated. Now, in the contemplation of the definition of this section, how would it apply to a situation of that kind?

Mr. Harris: It is defined in the regulations. I have a copy, and I will send them to my hon. friend.

Mr. Michener: The discretion which is given to the minister under the act is, of course, a necessary feature of legislation of this kind. It crops up not only in the interpretation section but throughout the bill to the extent it is quite conceivable that the effect of the legislation will depend a good deal on the way in which the minister's discretion is exercised, and I should like to ask a question on that subject. Before doing so, just let me indicate the extent of the discretion in clause 2 which deals with interpretation and definition. The first definition in which there is a discretion is that of standard corporation income tax, which means the amount as determined by the minister. I appreciate the fact that there are factors which are not definite statistical calculations. For example, the permanent residence of a corporation might be subject to differences of opinion and so things might might fall on one side rather than on the other, depending on the exercise of opinion. I do not complain of the granting of the authority to determine matters, but I do point out that it is a very wide authority which the minister would have to exercise. There is the first example of it in this section, and it comes in other sections of the bill. I might just as well deal with the point now, with your consent, Mr. Chairman.

There is discretion in various definitions throughout section 2, in subsection 1, paragraphs (d), (f), (h), and then in subsection 3 of section 2, and again in sections 4, 5, 8, 9 and 10. I will not take the time to say to what all of these discretions relate, but finally we have the regulation section which says that the governor general in council may make regulations respecting:

The determination of any matter that under this act is to be determined by the minister.

This seems to be a fairly comprehensive provision; but the effect, as I say, might be substantial on the results of the legislation, and I wonder whether the minister would give us an estimate of the variation in the payments which are to be made under this clause as between a restrictive interpretation by the minister and an expansive interpretation of one of these definitions, such as the definition of standard corporation income tax? It might run to very substantial sums. I wonder whether the minister has thought about that and could give us some information regarding the discretion of the minister in carrying out these sections?

Mr. Harris: As the hon. member for St. Paul's has indicated, I doubt whether it would be possible to have a bill of this kind without ministerial discretion so that the house would, to some extent at least, have to put some faith in the minister and the regulations he may make under the bill. On the other hand, we have had the authority to make regulations under the Income Tax Act since there was an Income Tax Act, and also under the Tax Rental Agreements Act we have had authority to make regulations and in effect to exercise discretion. I must say that in the course of all the conferences we have had I have not had any complaints from provincial representatives that any dispute of substance between the federal government and the provincial government in connection with the regulations had not been more or less amicably settled after negotiation and consideration. I must add, however, that on occasion provincial governments have felt strongly about a matter of principle and when that has come to be decided it has been decided on the ministerial level. But as regards the discretion, for example, to arrive at the standard rate and the like and what it means in one province and in another, there has been remarkable co-operation and understanding between the provinces and the federal government in working out minor matters that may arise for ministerial discretion. I have not made a calculation of how much would be involved if I took a lenient view and how much would be involved if I took a restrictive view. I do not think that question would arise particularly because my recollection is that I have had only two problems arise during the two years that I have been minister. I suppose I should not confess it at this time but I think that in both cases we finally agreed with the provincial point of view on each of them.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister this question? I appreciate it is difficult to arrive at the differences which might result from a lenient and a broad interpretation but, as I understand the bill, the payments are based on a calculation of the tax collection for the three different taxes in Ontario and British Columbia and one very easy sort of difference of opinion would be a decision as to the province to which the tax on a particular corporation should be attributed. May I ask the minister whether in these conferences the figures which the federal department has produced as the amount of corporation tax levied in a particular province have varied very substantially from the figures produced by the provincial statistician to the point where there was real difference of opinion?

Mr. Harris: There is no difference of opinion, sir, because the provincial governments did not question the figures we gave in the sense that my hon. friend has mentioned. They understand quite well the method we use in attributing payments to one province or another, and, while there are minor matters of detail that are discussed from time to time, they did not, as I say, present figures nor, so far as I know, up to the present time have they questioned the figures that we issued to them in October by way of illustration or those that were sent with the offer in January, or those which we are now circulating.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this is a very complicated bill and one hesitates to ask any questions with respect to it at all, because one can get involved in all sorts of legal difficulties which undoubtedly will be resolved some day, possibly by the courts or, as the minister said, by a compromise, and it is always in favour of the provinces, I trust, rather than in favour of the federal department. I think he will admit there are more slight differences now between the provinces and the federal government than there were before because there has to be an absolute apportionment of corporation taxes, income taxes, and so on earned within the provinces, and therefore these questions may be of more importance today than they were heretofore when the tax rental agreements have been in effect. At least, there are some who profess to be authorities and who have written brochures on this matter which certainly indicate that and therefore the question raised by the hon. member for York West and to which the minister replied a moment ago, "I understand it is covered by the regulations and I am sending you over a copy of it" could be of some importance to a province, particularly one outside of the central provinces, as to just what is included in this definition of permanent establishment in the province. I think the minister said it was covered by the regulations, or he was presuming to accept the regulations under the Income Tax Act for that. In order to avoid discussion which might arise later on with respect to this, and disputes, it might be better for the minister to clarify that now rather than send over a copy of the regulations to one hon. member, which is an act of courtesy which we can appreciate, but which does not help anyone who may look at Hansard one year, two years or three years from now as to just what is involved in this. For instance, one can easily understand the case of the Canadian General Electric, shall we say, who operate a branch office in Halifax which has a sales manager and salesmen. Is that a permanent establishment under this definition or is it not? I can think of a dozen other minutiae like that that are going to determine how much each province gets, particularly from the corporation tax. Perhaps the minister should clarify that a little more clearly than he did in his answer to the hon. member for York West.

Mr. Harris: I shall read the regulations in a moment, sir; but in the meantime may I just add this? I know my hon. friend does not anticipate any real difficulty, but it should be borne in mind that at the earliest conference we had in April and the conference we had again in June it was decided to have our officials consider with the officials of the provincial governments various matters that might arise in connection with this proposal. Those of you who may have read the record will remember there was a meeting of officials in February of this year. These regulations are fully understood and appreciated by the various officials in the several governments. As I say, so far I have not had any complaints about them.

Mr. Barnett: Subclause 3 of clause 2, which relates to individual income tax, reads:

> Where from time to time by reason of a change in the rates of tax or in personal exemptions or allowances for dependents as defined in the regulations, the effective rate of individual income tax or of succession duty differs from the corresponding effective rate applicable
> the minister shall alter the standard individual rate or the standard succession duty rate, or both, as the case may be, in relation to the corresponding effective rate, so that the ratio of the new standard rate to the former standard rate varies inversely with the ratio of the new effective rate to the former effective rate; and for the purposes of this subsection the minister shall determine the effective rates.

Could the minister translate that into more intelligent English for those who like me find their mathematical understanding a little bit rusty?

Mr. Harris: That is very simple; it means just what it says. This is the guarantee to the provinces that if this parliament were to reduce the tax rate or the personal exemptions or allowances referred to, it would nevertheless compensate the provinces for that reduction by paying them at the rate existing on January 6 regardless of any change we might make. That is all it amounts to.

I might translate the effective rate in this way. Supposing one had an income of say $10,000 on which his tax was $2,000. The effective rate then would be 2 as to 10; the effective rate is not the percentage which he pays, be it 22 per cent or 30 per cent or 35 per cent income tax, it is related to the actual tax he pays on his taxable income. We say that if the rates are reduced by 10 per cent the standard rate is increased proportionately for the benefit of the provinces. They will not have any reduction because of our reduction.

Mr. Barnett: I had come to the conclusion that probably that was the gist of it. I should like to ask one further question by way of clarification. I notice that there is no reference in subclause 3 to corporation income tax. In subclause 1 (d) a definition is given of standard corporation income tax and a rate of 9 per cent is set out. Can the minister explain why there is no corresponding provision in respect to any change in the rate of corporation income tax?

Mr. Harris: It is 9 percentage points of the corporation income tax. That is, the standard rate remains constant and will always accrue to the provincial government at that rate. If we happened to reduce our rate of tax, which will be 38 points after this 9 per cent is taken off, if we were to reduce it to 33 per cent, it would make no difference to the income of the provinces because they would still be getting the flat 9 percentage points which we have established in this bill.

Mr. Barnett: Supposing the dominion government was to change the basis of corporation tax? That is not something that is likely to happen, I agree.

Mr. Harris: It does not affect the provinces. In the case of personal income tax we are giving a percentage of the yield to the province; in the case of corporation income tax we are giving 9 percentage points of the return regardless of our total return.

Mr. Michener: On that same point. If the federal government were to increase the corporation income tax rate, something to which we would not look forward with any pleasure, would it not be proper to have the standard rate increased by reason of the increase in the corporation tax so the province would get some benefit from the extra use of that field by the federal government?

Mr. Harris: I have been listening all day to hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly those of the Conservative party, and I have assumed that that question would be asked because every one of them has urged upon me an increase in federal taxes to take care of the provinces to a greater extent.

An hon. Member: Distribute the surplus.

Mr. Rowe: Nobody asked for an increase in taxes.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister had better take that off the record or he will never get this through tonight.

Mr. Harris: I have heard half a billion surplus spoken of. I gather then that hon. gentlemen opposite were only arguing in the light of the fact that they assumed there would be a surplus this year and that that surplus might be used. I have never heard anyone with any knowledge of the subject say that the surplus was going to be that amount. In any event let me point out that I am delighted to note this change in viewpoint because I take it that throughout the five-year period if there is no surplus the argument they have made today will be left for another occasion. To answer my hon. friend's question directly, he would not expect the answer to be yes.

Mr. Michener: Why not?

Mr. Nowlan: Let me simply say that there has been a recent anticipated surplus. Every responsible person in Canada expects that there will be. Of course the minister has to hide behind his official responsibility. Officials of the tax foundation and publications such as the Financial Post—the minister will not look down his lorgnette at them—and former officials of his department who have left to go into private business have made these predictions. They are the ones who have made estimates from $500 million up. We do not know whether that is the case and certainly we cannot do anything but guess at this time. But barring some debacle, which of course could always happen under this government but which is not probable, I am sure the Minister of Finance is going to have to work awfully hard to bury the surplus he will have at the end of this fiscal year.

We have assumed that there would be a surplus from which further distribution could be made to the provinces. More than that, the minister would not deny that under his beneficent reign and that of his government there has been an era of prosperity for 20 years and the gross national product is bound to increase from year to year. Therefore we are going to have large and more bounteous revenues from our tax yields without increasing the burden of taxation. I think the minister had better keep these matters in mind when he suggests that we have been advocating an increase in corporation taxes in order to pay these grants to the provinces, which certainly we have been urging during the last two years and which we will continue to urge and which ultimately the minister will accept if he happens to be there long enough. We will see them carried into effect.

Mr. Michener: The minister's answer does not really satisfy me. Apart altogether from the question, the matter we are dealing with here is the rate of corporation taxation. That rate is now 47 per cent and under this arrangement the provinces may tax 9 percentage points and that amount will be credited to the provincial taxpayers. It is quite appreciated that, if the federal government reduces its corporation tax rate, that is not to reduce the field in which the provinces can tax. That is proper, and there is no objection to that, but it seems to me it is a one-way street as it stands. In the case of the personal income tax and succession duties, if the federal rate goes up or down, the minister will then adjust to keep the rate the same, but if the corporate tax rate goes up that is a greater occupation of the field by the federal taxing authorities. It seems to me that it would be proper then to raise the standard rate so that the province has a proportionately larger field of taxation and so that it is not a one-way street in changes in the corporation tax field.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Payments to provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: I think there is one matter that should be cleared up now. As a matter of fact it probably was cleared up, or may have been cleared up, in the letter of the Prime Minister of February 18, which appears at page 1458 of Hansard, but which certainly was very indefinite and inconclusive. I think it would be well for the Minister of Finance to deal with that question now and say whether the provisions of that letter apply. Clause 3 is headed "Payments to a province". That covers, of course, payments for stabilization and equalization and all the other payments to the provinces. The question in my mind—I think it was probably answered by that letter but I would like that clarified—is this. What is the position of the provinces which have been receiving statutory subsidies up to the present time? The matter was raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, and I think I know why he raised it. It is based on a paper written by Mr. J. Harvey Perry for the Canadian Tax Foundation. Apparently it was written before the Prime Minister's letter of February 18, because in this paper Mr. Perry raised that question and said it would not look nearly so good for the "low income provinces." He said:

> One of the elements under the tax rental agreements which produced this relative advantage was the statutory subsidies. No mention is made in the Prime Minister's letter—> —of the manner in which they will be treated under the new offer. They no doubt will be continued to be paid, but whether they are paid in addition to the amounts offered or are offset against them will be of very material consequence. In total they amount to about $20 million, of which $6 million goes to the Atlantic provinces.

I presume that is the January letter.

I should like a definite statement from the minister at this time that any payments which it is proposed to make or which will be made under this legislation will be in addition to and will not be offset against any statutory subsidies or other subsidies presently payable to the provinces under existing legislation.

Mr. Harris: The statutory subsidies are incorporated in the British North America Act, either originally or by amendments. Nothing in this bill could affect them in any way, and does not.

Mr. Nowlan: They will not be offset?

Mr. Harris: That is right.

On clause 4—Tax equalization payment.

Mr. Barnett: I feel I should like to say a few words on clause 4 because in the discussion that has so far taken place in the various stages of this bill it has become clear that the provisions set forth in clause 4 are of very great importance.

As far as I am concerned, I think it is worth reminding those members in this house who voted against second reading of this bill this afternoon that clause 4 is in the bill, and I for one find it difficult to see how any Canadian could object to the principle that is therein set forth. I feel that perhaps I can say this because I happen to be a member from one of the two provinces mentioned in this clause as having the highest per capital income. Whilst it is perfectly true that the province of British Columbia does stand to gain in a very minor way from the provisions set forth in this clause, nevertheless it is a very minor gain as far as British Columbia is concerned.

This afternoon the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, quite rightly, focused our attention on the principles that are set forth in this clause. Whilst I must confess that I do not share the almost lyrical appreciation he apparently has for the premier of the province of Newfoundland in some of the statements he makes, nevertheless I confess quite freely that, being a resident and citizen of one of the wealthier provinces, such as British Columbia is today, it was for me a very salutary experience to spend some weeks in the province from which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration derives his representation in this house. I might perhaps interject here that I was thinking that he might have been well advised, in view of the remarks he made about the oratorical abilities of the premier of the province, to have one of his platters here this afternoon and play to us the statement from which he was quoting. He may perhaps have listened to one or two of the platters which I understand were circulated to the candidates supporting Premier Smallwood in the provincial elections. However, that is merely an aside from the point I am trying to make.

In this connection, as I listened to some of the exchanges that took place between the Minister of Fisheries and the member for New Westminster, both fellow British Columbians of mine, I could not help thinking that it might be a rather salutary experience for the premier of British Columbia to spend a few weeks in a province like Newfoundland or even perhaps if he were to return for a few weeks to his native province of New Brunswick, where I understand he once took school lessons from the member for Royal. It might perhaps serve to give him a little greater appreciation of the value of the provisions set forth in this clause than he appears to have at the present time.

I do not intend to speak at length on this clause. I have refrained from participation at the previous stages on this bill, but before I sit down I should like to tell the house that as I have listened to the debate I have been reminded more than once of one of the old nursery rhymes. Listening to some of the more eloquent spokesmen on behalf of some of the exaggerated provincialisms that appear in this house, I have thought of the nursery rhyme that goes like this:

> Little Jack Horner sat in the corner
> Eating his Christmas pie.
> He stuck in his thumb and pulled out a plum
> And said, "What a good boy am I".

Mr. Michener: This is the important clause which provides for the fiscal needs of those provinces which do not share the benefits of confederation as fully as some of the others. That is a principle which has been generally endorsed by all parties. Certainly our opposition to the bill did not indicate in any sense opposition to the principle of equalization payments. I think it would be well to point out as this clause is being considered that this formula which has been developed is a pretty rough measure of the fiscal needs of a province. In fact, it is not a formula based on fiscal needs at all. It is a formula based on the difference between the value of three taxes to a province compared with the value of those same three taxes in the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia at this time. Therefore it is really a formula which provides for payments based on the means of a province rather than on its needs, if I may make that distinction, and although it undoubtedly equalizes the revenues in these three tax fields among the provinces and to that extent does meet fiscal needs I do leave the thought with the house that this is not a scientific method, if I may say so, of arriving at what has been generally subscribed to as the necessity for equalizing payments among the provinces to enable them to provide a minimum or average standard of services to their people throughout the country.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Tax rental agreements.

Mr. Knowles: May I—

Mr. Harris: I should like to move an amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Maybe that will answer my question.

Mr. Harris: In the 20th line on page 6 are the words "in this section." I move that those words be changed to the words "in section 7."

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister that amendment?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Harris: I beg your pardon. I am told there has been a reprint. I am sorry; I did not realize that. What has my hon. friend got?

Mr. Knowles: My copy reads "as authorized by section 7."

Mr. Harris: That is all right. They had not favoured me with the latest printing.

Mr. Knowles: You are as badly off as the deputy minister of finance of British Columbia. The question I wish to ask is this. If a province does not enter into an agreement for a full five year period as set out in this clause but later wishes to enter into an agreement for the four or three years that remain in the period, would that be possible under the legislation?

Mr. Harris: We have discussed this with the provinces during the course of our conferences and discussions, and I always indicated that we would hope that we would have an early decision from the provinces with respect to an agreement because there are certain administrative difficulties in undertaking an agreement. Therefore it would depend on how soon after the act became operative whether or not we would enter into an agreement. One could appreciate that it would hardly be likely that one would want to enter into an agreement in the last two years and perhaps not even in the last three, but I should think that a period of at least three years could be considered favourably.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, looking at subclause 3 of clause 6 we find that it says:

> The minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may, on behalf of the government of Canada, enter into an agreement, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, amending the terms and conditions of a tax rental agreement.

I call attention to that power because of the history of previous tax rental agreements and to say that I hope that this is not looking forward to a series of bargains different one from the other in which one province may obtain an advantage which then is requested by other provinces and the agreements then cease to follow a pattern which at least holds an even balance but change from time to time.

I recall to the minister the sequence of events immediately after 1946 when Mr. Ilsley's budget gave authority somewhat similar to this and three provinces entered into agreements. I think they were Alberta, Saskatchewan and one of the maritime provinces. Then, British Columbia, presenting some very powerful arguments, secured what were undoubtedly much better terms from the federal authorities. That, of course, set the whole thing off again and there was a clamour from those who had signed wanting the same terms, and so the process of bargaining went on.

I am not sure what the purpose is of this provision which permits amendment in the course of the five years. Presumably the agreements will be made according to the terms of this legislation, that is, according to the formula which has been devised, and will be the same for all of the provinces and devised to do substantial justice at this level of tax sharing for which the legislation provides. If that is so, perhaps the minister would indicate what he has in mind in taking the power to amend uniform agreements which he looks forward to signing with a number of provinces in the course of the five year period.

Mr. Harris: The purpose is not that which the hon. member had in mind with respect to the negotiations that followed the 1946 budget. It is to take care of any minor matter that may arise either by inadvertence or by a peculiar condition in any given province which has no relation to any other, although one would not expect that to be very frequent, or it may take care of a real change in principle in which event, of course, the change in principle would be applicable to all the other agreements.

I believe that since 1952 we have only amended one agreement once and that was with respect to certain logging taxes in British Columbia. The other provinces, of course, were aware of this and they felt as we did, that it was a problem peculiar to British Columbia and that, if we felt so, it was a proper way of amending that particular agreement. It is not intended that there should be a period of bargaining. Indeed, the whole purpose of the bill is to have as much uniformity as possible.

Mr. Michener: One other feature of this clause to which the minister has just referred, and that is the one which permits a province to levy profits taxes on mining and logging, commends itself as a very distinct improvement over the former arrangements which did not permit the deduction of certain provincial taxes in the natural resources field. I only wish to say that it is a disappointment that the principle of exempting provincial profits taxes on certain companies operating in the field of natural resources has not been carried further.

In speaking at the resolution stage I gave figures indicating the great disparity between the returns to the province and the returns to the federal treasury in profits taxes from such things as mining and lumbering, and there is no doubt that the provincial expenditure in that field produces substantial returns to the federal treasury out of all proportion to what the provinces are able to collect. I bring it up because of my feeling that there is an area in which substantial justice has not been done to the provinces in restricting the exemptions which are permitted in that field of taxation.

Mr. Harris: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Nowlan: Before the clause carries may I say this. I think what the minister said a moment ago about the uniformity of the agreements would be somewhat disappointing to some premiers of whom I have heard at least indirectly if not directly, who suggested that there would be fairly ample scope for bargaining when these agreements were entered into. We all realize, of course, that there are individual taxation problems such as the one the minister referred to a moment ago affecting lumbering in British Columbia. After confederation there was one in New Brunswick where, on account of some difficulty in the industry, a set customs duty on lumber was omitted in some of the agreements for several years thereafter. I should just like to get a definite statement from the minister that, subject to these individual problems which are localized in particular provinces, he is telling this committee that the tax agreements negotiated will be on a uniform basis other than for those individual circumstances.

Mr. Harris: Quite so.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Tax collection agreements.

Mr. Michener: I think it would be useful if the minister would explain to the house the principle on which the federal government will collect the taxes of the provinces which see fit to levy their own taxes under this tax-sharing proposal, so that we may understand just what scope there is and also so that we may understand in what circumstances the federal government will not collect a provincial tax.

Mr. Harris: I am sorry, but I did not hear my hon. friend's final sentence.

Mr. Michener: I asked the minister for the circumstances under which the federal government would collect, and also the circumstances under which they would not collect, provincial taxes in these three fields.

Mr. Harris: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the provincial government would have to impose the tax in question; in the second place, it would have to be a tax with respect to which the definitions and exemptions were substantially the same as our own; and in the third place, they would have to agree to pay us a modest fee for collecting.

Mr. Michener: What is a modest fee?

Mr. Harris: We have made no arrangements, of course, because up to the present time no province has indicated anything more than academic interest in this proposal, and we have not suggested any particular fee. It would be negotiated with the provincial government. During the conference we made it clear that it was not our desire to make any profit out of this matter but that we would want to retain out of the tax about the cost of collecting. While I would let the provincial premiers speak for themselves on this matter, I think that most of them felt that we could collect probably as cheaply as could they. I think the house will understand that if the tax law happened to be substantially different from our own there would be a great many difficulties in collection and therefore we would not undertake it.

Mr. Michener: If the province has tax laws substantially the same, its variation in rate from the standard rates permitted in the act will not prevent that province from having its taxes collected by the federal authority? For example, what I have in mind is this. Under the arrangements which existed before the war I think the federal government collected personal income taxes for the province of Ontario and also for the province of British Columbia, with the result that the taxpayer had only one return to file, the taxes were paid to one authority and then distributed, and the province was free to levy whatever rate of tax it saw fit to levy. Will that flexibility exist under this legislation, Mr. Chairman? For example, can a province levy an income tax which is more than the authorized ten percentage points and still have it collected by the federal authority if the terms of exemption and so on of the taxing statute are substantially the same?

Mr. Harris: No. It would have to be at the standard rate.

[Mr. Harris.]

Mr. Michener: Is the minister willing to reconsider that position so that if a province wishes to undertake the hazard of taxing in excess of the allowed rate and therefore imposing a duplicate tax, its citizens may still be spared the necessity of filing two income tax returns?

Mr. Harris: I know my hon. friend would not want to impose on me any greater embarrassment than he thinks I ought to bear. But I think it would be almost impossible for this government to collect the tax other than at the standard rate. I think he would appreciate the reasons why. But as I said at the resolution stage of this bill, five years is a long time, although not nearly as long as the 20-year period to which some hon. members kept referring in the course of the debate; and one never knows what will come out over a period of time as a result of consideration by the various governments. But at the moment we have concluded that we ought not to accept responsibility for collecting for a province other than at the standard rate.

Mr. Michener: I hope the government has not come to any final decision in these matters because it seems to me—and this opinion has been expressed by various speakers on the other side—that there is a real advantage in not requiring duplicate sets of returns. It seems to me to be consistent with the principle of freedom of a taxing authority among the provincial authorities that the federal government should act as an agent where the tax laws are substantially the same except in the matter of rate. After all, that is the point we have been arguing. The decision as to the rate of tax in these fields is the responsibility of the province as an autonomous government with an equal authority in that field. I now express the hope that the government will show that degree of co-operation which is essential in a federal system in working out arrangements to meet the circumstances which arise in the future where there are differences as to the rate of tax to be collected and where provinces see fit to go their own way within the reasonable limits of this tax-sharing proposal.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 9 and 10 agreed to.

On the title:

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Low: No. In connection with the title, Mr. Chairman, may I say that the wording is not proper or is not properly dignified at all.

In an important measure of this kind I think that the wording of the title should recognize the partnership principle in the relation that ought to exist at any rate between the dominion and the provinces in any negotiations that take place between them or with respect to any agreements that are drawn up between them. Certainly the wording of this title cannot be considered to be in that class. For the benefit of hon. members who have not listened to it, I will read it. The title reads as follows:

An act to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into fiscal agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Mr. Chairman, it sounds as though the whole purpose of the bill is to enable the Minister of Finance to dole out allowances to the governments of the provinces. In order to make the title reflect the kind of principle which I suggest should govern in the relations between the government that we head and the provinces I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge:

That all the words of the title after the word "authorize" in the first line be deleted, and the following substituted therefor:

"the government of Canada to enter into fiscal agreements with the governments of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada, and to authorize the Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada to make cash refunds of all direct taxes collected in each province in accordance with the terms of such agreements and in accordance with the terms of the British North America Act of 1867."

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I say just one word about the final phrases of the wording which I propose. Those final phrases indicate, if they are accepted, that the government is prepared to recognize the sanctity of the Canadian constitution, a thing which they have not given much indication of recognizing thus far.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Low) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 64.

Bill reported.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 439, to amend the Indian Act.

He said: I have no intention of speaking at any great length on the second reading of this bill. There was considerable debate at the resolution stage and a number of points were raised which I think could perhaps, more appropriately in most cases, be dealt with on my estimates, if and when they are reached. Most of them had very little relationship to the contents of the bill. I make no pretensions for this bill. I did not at the resolution stage, and I do not now. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris), when he had the portfolio I now have the honour to have, brought before this house a complete revision of the Indian Act. After two years' experience as minister, it is my opinion that this parliament did an excellent job in revising that act and that several years should go by before any major revisions are made.

The hon. member for Prince Albert, speaking at the resolution stage, suggested that the time had come to establish a royal commission to consider the future of the Canadian Indians. I would not say, out of hand, that I was opposed to that recommendation but I would say that I think it is a little too soon to do it. I think we need a few more years' experience with the kind of limited self government for the Indians that was instituted when the act was revised in 1951, and that produced the results which I attempted to describe to the house at the resolution stage of this bill.

Now, one purpose of this bill is to tidy up a few points that, in the course of administration, proved not to be quite as well drafted as perhaps it was thought they were when the act was passed in 1951. These are what I would call housekeeping amendments, and I do not really intend to say anything about them on the second reading. I will be quite prepared to explain any of them that do not explain themselves, and I think most of them do, when we get into the committee.

There are a number of clauses verifying Indian status, the two most important of which relate to children. There is some importance in them, and they do recognize a new principle and I think a good principle. It is unfortunately true that all too frequently Indian women have children before they are married. Some of these children are children whose paternity seems to be in a good deal of doubt. Up to now, the law has provided that an effort must be made to establish their paternity before they can be put on the rolls of the band. This has caused some hardship which I think has been unfortunate. I found at the meeting with the representatives of the Indians in December that there was not universal agreement, but that the overwhelming majority of the representatives felt that these children ought to be put on the band lists and be subject to protest within a certain period. It seems to me that is a much more humane way to deal with the problem.

There is another section dealing with the children of Indian women who marry non-Indians. As the law stands at present, Indian women who marry non-Indians are immediately—I should not say immediately but as soon as the governor in council can get around to it—enfranchised and cease to have Indian status. It has been the custom, and it is indeed the law, to enfranchise compulsorily the minor children of Indian women who marry non-Indians. That is quite all right in most cases where the children go to live as non-Indians with the stepfather. It works no hardship and it is indeed probably the right thing in most cases to do that. But in some cases these children remain on the reserve with grandparents or other relatives and live as Indians. It is the intention in the future that the enfranchisement of these children will not be compulsory but will be optional, depending upon the circumstances.

At the resolution stage I dealt at some length with the revolving fund which is, of course, the only section of the bill which has any financial implications, and I see no need to repeat anything I said at that time.

There are certain other clauses in the bill which have economic but no financial effects. There are clauses for the facilitating of the leasing of Indian lands where the Indians want to lease them. There are clauses making it easier to use the capital of bands for housing, to permit the pledging of band credit for housing loans and to authorize borrowing by bands for band projects and housing.

Now, I found that there were a minority of the Indians, a quite substantial minority, particularly those who were engaged in farming in western Canada, who felt that it would be desirable to go quite a lot farther and give them exactly the same rights as other people to pledge their lands and their other possessions in order to get credit. I must say I had a good deal of sympathy for the point of view they expressed; but it was quite clear that the majority of the Indians at the conference were not in favour of doing that. They feared it meant that something was going to be taken away from them, and we came rather reluctantly to the conclusion that this was such a step that, although some of the Indians were ready for it, they would have to wait for another occasion.

I have not any doubt—although I wish it were not so—that the parts of this legislation which will be debated most, both in this chamber and outside, are those clauses relating to the proposed changes in the law with respect to intoxicating beverages, and perhaps I might explain very briefly, first, what the present situation is and then what is now proposed.

A really fundamental change was made when the act was amended in 1951 and when for the first time it was left to any provincial authority which wished to do it to take certain initiatives which would result in permitting Indians in that province to consume alcoholic beverages in public places, but no other aspect of the provincial liquor laws could be made to apply to Indians. Several of the provinces have taken advantage of that provision of the law: British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Ontario, the Yukon Territory, and, most recently of all, the province of Manitoba. In fact, I think it was only one day last week that the provision came into effect in Manitoba.

What we are proposing at this time in this legislation is to extend the law in two directions. We are providing for a provincial initiative which would make it possible for the Indians in a province to be brought under all the liquor laws of the province, but the initiative would have to be taken by the provincial government. There is this further proviso, that any band which by a majority of its membership decides not to come under the general law could establish a form of local option on the reserve.

Then, we are also proposing, because I have been advised that there are one or two provincial governments which take the view that they would not object to having this discrimination done away with, though they do not feel they ought to take the initiative, for the initiative to be taken by the band on a particular reserve. In that case we would carry out their wishes only if the provincial authorities, having been apprised of their views on this subject, did not object. We feel that, since the provincial authorities have the responsibility for the administration of the liquor laws in the province, we should not go the whole length of abolishing the present law and imposing an entirely new regime without some measure of provincial consent. I suppose there will be members of the house who will say we should have gone the whole hog and had complete non-discrimination and there will be others who will say—in fact some hon. members have said to me privately—that they object to our giving liquor to the Indians. On that point I want to say just a word.

There is no intention on the part of the government of giving any liquor to the Indians or to anybody else. All this bill will do is to enable some Indians in some parts of Canada, after certain initiatives are taken, to buy liquor legally instead of doing as I am afraid is the fact, as I know—let us not pretend about this—far too many of them do now, that is buy it illegally.

There is another provision in the bill which I think I ought to refer to briefly and that is the section in regard to education. This section gives the minister the authority to require, rather than to permit, Indian children to go to school. I think this is something on which there would be unanimity in the house.

Really, sir, I would not have said anything else about this bill had not a point been raised at the resolution stage which I feel it is necessary for me to refer to. I refer to the fact that at four or five places in this bill the word "minister" is substituted for the words "governor in council". Because of that, an attempt was made by several members of the official opposition at the resolution stage to suggest, because evidently they had heard some rumours about what was likely to be in the bill, that this in some way was an attempt at self-glorification by the minister or an expansion of his powers, at whose expense I was not quite clear. Now, sir, I think it would take me 10 or 15 minutes to complete what I have to say and I am willing to go ahead if hon. members wish me to do so, or I am willing to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Blackmore: We have had a long day. Take it up tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will not be tomorrow; it will not be for at least 10 days.

Mr. Blackmore: We shall be here for two weeks.

Mr. Pickersgill: Shall I continue?

Mr. Fulton: I think it should be a continuous debate. When the minister has finished I rather feel there should be an immediate follow-up of the debate. Perhaps the minister would not mind adjourning the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite prepared to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Mr. Pickersgill the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take third reading of the bill we have just passed with respect to fiscal arrangements, and then interim supply and the estimates of defence production and northern affairs.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

VETERANS PAYMENTS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 554—Mr. Balcom:

What payments have been made to veterans in Nova Scotia during the last fiscal year ending March 31, 1956 in: (a) war veterans allowance; (b) war veterans assistance; (c) war veterans disability pensions?

Answer by: Mr. Bennett, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

Halifax D.V.A. district (province of Nova Scotia), (a) $2,489,023.71; (b) $26,990.48; (c) $7,238,679.78.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 25, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

STARRED QUESTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE INSURANCE

Question No. 60—Mr. Knowles:

1. Are civil servants or other government employees who are entitled to life insurance or a death benefit under part II of the Public Service Superannuation Act provided with any card, certificate or other document to show that they are covered by such protection?

2. If not, will consideration be given to the issuing of such a card, certificate or other document so that such employees might have evidence of such protection?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): A participant to the death benefit scheme does not receive evidence in the form of a card or document while he is still employed in the public service. However, should he on his termination of employment in the public service elect to continue his coverage, a document somewhat similar to an insurance policy is issued to him.

Consideration will be given to the issuance of some form of evidence to participants while they are actively employed in the public service.

OLD AGE SECURITY CHEQUES—DELIVERIES

Question No. 61—Mr. Knowles:

1. During the past 18 months, have there been any instances of old age security cheques being held in local post offices and not delivered to the addresses until a certain date?

2. If so, has this been done on the initiative of the local postmasters or on the basis of orders or instructions issued to them?

3. What persons issued any such orders or instructions?

4. By what authority were any such orders or instructions issued?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. On the basis of instructions issued to them.

3. The chief treasury officer, Department of National Health and Welfare.

4. The regular delivery date for old age security cheques since the inception of the act in 1952 was determined to be the last mail delivery day in each month. Inasmuch as the volume of mail to be handled might cause some difficulty in the post offices, arrangements were made to deliver this mail to the post office prior to the release date for sortation purposes, with the understanding that delivery to recipients would be made only on the last mail delivery date in the month. This has recently been changed to be the last banking day in the month.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—ADVANCES BY CROWN CORPORATION

Question No. 62—Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

1. What amounts have been advanced to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited by the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation?

2. On what dates were such advances made?

Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is $6,775,000, which is the same amount as announced in the house several weeks ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The answer to the second part of the question is June 18, 1956.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Question No. 63—Mr. Fulton:

1. What is the total number of immigrants admitted to Canada during the first six months of 1956 (June figures preliminary)?

2. What is the total number admitted in the same period in (a) 1955; (b) 1954?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer to the first part of this question is 69,938. I might say that in so far as the June component of that figure is concerned it is an estimate, but we think it is pretty accurate. The figure for 1954 was 85,765 and for 1955 it was 58,417.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BUTTER PURCHASERS, 1956

Question No. 533—Mrs. Fairclough:

1. Who were the purchasers of stocks of butter released by the agricultural prices support board in 1956?

2. What quantity was sold to each and at what price?

3. What were the terms of delivery?

P. F. R. A.—PRAIRIE PROVINCE PROJECTS, 1956

Question No. 537—Mr. Castleden:

1. What construction projects in excess of $5,000 are being undertaken under P.F.R.A. in each of the three prairie provinces for the 1956 construction season?

2. What is the location and estimated cost of each such project?

Inquiries of the Ministry

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PUBLIC WORKS CORRESPONDENCE

Motion No. 95—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of all letters, memoranda, telegrams and other documents exchanged during the past two years, between the Minister of Justice or any agent or person acting on behalf of the said department or on behalf of any other minister of the government, and any other person or corporation concerning acquisition of property at Joyceville for the purpose of extending the Kingston penitentiary.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Would the Prime Minister tell the house whether there is to be any more legislation introduced during the present session and, if so, the nature of that legislation and when it will probably be introduced?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Labour has a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act which he has already mentioned in the house, and the Minister of Finance may also have another bill to be introduced.

Mr. Green: Is the Prime Minister able to tell us the nature of the other bill and when these two bills will be introduced?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The bill concerning the Unemployment Insurance Act is on the agenda for consideration by the cabinet just as soon as we can arrange to have a meeting. We hoped to have one at two o'clock this afternoon but it was not possible; it had to be put over until ten o'clock tomorrow morning. Just as soon as the bill is approved by the cabinet it will be introduced.

Mr. Green: What about the other measure?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I am not in a position to say anything about the other measure.

AGRICULTURE

DEVELOPMENT OF DISEASE RESISTANT SUNFLOWERS AND HIGH OIL CONTENT SOYA BEANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. Pommer (Lisgar): I should like to address two questions to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture. 1. Is there any research being done by the federal Department of Agriculture in the development of disease resistant sunflowers particularly for the southern Manitoba area? 2. Are any new soya beans which have a high oil content being developed for this specific area?

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for Lisgar for giving me notice of his intention to ask these questions. The answer to the first one is yes. There is an intensive program at Morden in breeding oil seed sunflowers for resistance to rust. We have already released the variety "Beacon" which has proven to be highly resistant to rust in the southern Manitoba area. Other diseases of sunflowers are being investigated and related to the breeding program.

With regard to question No. 2, we are carrying on a selection program with soya beans at Morden in which selection is based on yield, high oil content and disease resistance. All of the early maturing hybrid lines developed at Ottawa are being tested at the Morden farm and constitute the material from which Morden selections are being made. In addition, hybridization work was initiated at Morden in 1956.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MOVEMENT OF WORKERS TO MORE POPULOUS AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister, a copy of which I supplied to him just a few minutes ago after he came into the house. The C.B.C. reported this morning that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) had induced this government to provide financial help to Newfoundland to move people into more populous areas. If the report is true, will the government also be prepared to help other provinces with similar problems, for example with respect to displaced coal miners in the provinces of Alberta and Nova Scotia?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is one of the usual arrangements made by the Department of Labour to provide alternative employment in areas where labour is required from areas where it is not required, and that the Minister of Labour can further develop the answer.

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, some time ago my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) brought to my attention the plight of families living in the small community of St. Brendan's, Newfoundland. From representations made it appeared that the prospects of their being able to maintain a livelihood in that community were extremely slim indeed. Consequently it seemed to me that it was worth the effort of having representatives of the Department of Labour and the national employment service jointly look into the situation. They were asked to do so and they have been doing so for some little time now.

That procedure is in general accord with activities that have taken place through the two agencies in other places in Canada during recent years. Sometimes the stress has been in the Department of Labour and assistance has been given in vocational training as in Westville, Nova Scotia and in my own constituency in Marysville, New Brunswick. Sometimes it has been the national employment service in co-operation with such a committee as Mr. Manning created in Alberta for moving families out from small coal mining towns to where they could get jobs elsewhere. In that case the provincial governments did not ask for financial assistance in moving but they did ask for and receive close co-operation and help in other phases of the move by our employees of the national employment service.

In this particular case I must say that I have not had the official report yet from my officials in Newfoundland but if it is as was outlined in this morning's broadcast, I will recommend favourable consideration on the matter.

Mr. Green: As a supplementary question, may I ask whether any legislation will be required in order to enable the government to implement this plan.

Mr. Gregg: No. There has been authority now for four years giving the Minister of Labour authority to investigate and survey what we have been accustomed to call in the past special "depressed areas" and, if the situation warranted it, to work out a plan with the provincial authorities and to recommend it to cabinet for the purpose of bringing relief to bear with respect to moving workers from that area.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENT HILL

PARKING ARRANGEMENTS IN LIBRARY AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. When does the government plan to make a proper parking area out of the at present disreputable looking area to the east of the parliamentary library? This is clearly open to view to all the tourists who are visiting parliament hill and is giving these tourists an extremely poor impression of the upkeep of this area.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The rearrangement of parking in that area is under consideration.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hees: In connection with the area of which I spoke this morning, and which has been in the same condition for many weeks —there has been plenty of time for making decisions—can the minister assure the house that this area will be made into a respectable looking area in the very near future?

Mr. Winters: I have been away for a few days and I returned to my office only this morning. I will take the matter into consideration at once.

HOUSING

CALGARY—EFFECT OF CREDIT RESTRICTIONS ON BUILDING OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) on Friday last. His question was as follows:

> Is the minister aware that yesterday Calgary's largest building company had to lay off a quarter of its labour force because of lack of mortgage funds, and other companies there are in the same position? Is the government now prepared to make any change in its policy in this regard in order to enable house building to go ahead?

The situation is that between January and June of this year there were more houses started and completed in Calgary than during the same period last year; and at the end of June this year there were 2,219 houses under construction, substantially more than at the same time last year. During the month of June itself 500 housing units were started in that city. I think if the hon. member will look fully into the situation he will find that the reduction in labour force has been due to factors other than the shortage of mortgage funds.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Harkness: May I ask a supplementary question? Does the minister know that the building companies in Calgary attribute the lay-offs entirely to the lack of mortgage funds?

Mr. Winters: No, I am not aware of that, but I am aware that that is not the situation.

Mr. Harkness: The builders are the people who should know, I would think.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. Did he receive a complaint from the mayor of the city of Prince Albert within the last few days concerning the detrimental effect of his policy and what reply, if any, did he give to that?

Mr. Winters: As I said, I have been away for a week and I have received no complaint from the mayor of Prince Albert. It may have reached the office, but I have not seen it.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it not a fact that in the last few days he has received a number of complaints from across this country relative to the shortage of mortgage moneys and the unfairness of the new rate of interest? Did he not receive one from the mayor of the city of Prince Albert pointing out the detrimental effect of the shortage of mortgage moneys there and the fact that as a result many houses that had been started could not be completed?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I just spent the better part of a week travelling in cities largely throughout western Canada and I did not receive a complaint of any kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You just do not believe them.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works following up the question asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert. I am not entirely satisfied with the minister's reply that he is getting no complaints about this. Does the minister not remember that he did receive complaints from the mayor of my city of Saskatoon and the city council some time ago concerning which I talked to him personally? What answer did he give?

Mr. Winters: The question asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert was rather more specific than that; he asked if I received complaints within the last few days. The fact is that I have not received any complaints within the last few days.

VANCOUVER—REPORTED ACTION OF MINISTER RESPECTING LOW RENTAL HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The hon. member for Vancouver East, Mr. Speaker, asked if I had received a letter from Mr. George F. Edwards, president of the senior citizens' association of British Columbia, under date of July 10. I find there is no record of any such letter having been received, but I have seen a mimeographed copy of the letter which was apparently sent to other people as well. The letter dealt with the policy of housing senior citizens.

The situation is as I set out when presenting my estimates earlier this year. Our general policy, of course, recognizes the position of our senior citizens. In government-sponsored public housing projects for low income groups, the government feels it is fitting and proper that a proportion of the units should be available to senior citizens in the appropriate income groups, but I think it would be unwise to assign any public housing projects exclusively to any particular class of Canadians. What we aim at is a good cross-section of all classes, races and creeds that comprise Canadian citizenship.

On the other hand, where private enterprise takes the initiative under the terms of the National Housing Act, even where the housing project is built largely with government funds as in the case of limited dividend operations, the owner may house anybody he wishes so long as the tenants conform to the income requirements.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works in view of his answer to my previous question. If, as the minister says, non-profit organizations which are in receipt of assistance from provincial governments are by a low interest rate from the federal government able to construct houses wholly and solely for senior citizens on a low rental basis, why cannot the city of Vancouver have exactly the same right?

Mr. Winters: Well, if the city of Vancouver by some means can arrange to constitute a limited dividend company, then it will have the same right.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister—I am convinced he is interested in the matter—explain how the city of Vancouver has authority to constitute itself a limited dividend company, and beyond that why should a city have to do it and be denied the rights given to a private corporation?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the city cannot constitute itself a limited dividend company as such. The hon. member, I think, is as well aware of the provisions of the statute as anybody in this house. There are means by which limited dividend companies can be set up, as the hon. member well knows, and where they are set up, of course, they can have the benefit of the statute.

Mr. Winch: By a city council?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Winch: This is an offer by the city of Vancouver on the land.

Mr. Winters: There are limited dividend companies in Vancouver which are receiving the 90 per cent loan, and which are housing senior citizens.

Mr. Winch: But not the city council; and why not?

BROCKVILLE—STATEMENT ON LANDSCAPING CONTRACT, CHURCHILL PARK PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stanton) asked when the landscape contractor for the Churchill park federal-provincial housing project in Brockville would commence work, and when the job would be completed. The work has already commenced, and the contractor is at present proceeding with it. It is expected that the finished grading work will be completed by August 15, and the seeding will be completed by September 15 of this year.

INDUSTRY

MOTOR VEHICLES AND PARTS—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT OF UNITED STATES IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister advise whether the government has completed its inquiry into the matter of importation into Canada of motor vehicles and parts from the United States? If so, what action is the government prepared to take in respect of this matter?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The matter has been investigated. The postcards which were received in considerable numbers referred to the fact that in 1950 we imported from the United States 3,154 vehicles and last year 27,392 passenger cars valued at $58,886,000. The two situations are hardly comparable, in that in 1950 we were exercising import control on a number of more or less luxury items which included automobiles, and therefore 1950 was an unusual year in that regard.

However, our imports of automobiles usually run as a proportion of the sales of automobiles in Canada, and the ratio runs between 5 per cent and 7 per cent. In 1951 we produced 282,714 units and imported 14,050 units, which was 5 per cent of the Canadian production. In 1952 we produced 283,534 units and imported 13,828 units or 5 per cent of Canadian production. In 1953 we produced 360,385 units and imported 23,501 units or 6½ per cent of Canadian production. In 1954 we produced 287,191 units and imported 17,954 units, or 6¼ per cent of Canadian production. In 1955, we produced 374,945 units and imported 27,392 units, or 7¼ per cent of Canadian production.

It has been the policy of Canadian automobile manufacturers to produce models that sell in large volume in Canada and to import those models where the volume does not warrant the cost of tooling. This applies particularly to the higher priced cars, which have been in increasing demand in Canada in recent years as a direct result of the high level of prosperity in this country. Our importation of parts increases with our increased production of motor cars in Canada. In other words, the importation of parts increases proportionately with the production of motor cars in Canada.

It seems obvious from our study that there is nothing abnormal in the present situation. The impact of the strike at General Motors was felt during that period. More cars than usual were imported, but aside from that the situation seems to be quite normal.

Mr. Coldwell: Do I understand that the minister's figures refer exclusively to the importation of United States cars and do not include the importation of other cars?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, the imports from abroad are on a declining scale, as against the peak years. There are certainly fewer foreign cars imported, that is cars from overseas, than was the case three or four years ago, and fewer than immediately after the war. However, the question referred particularly to imports from the United States.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANCER

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF HOXSEY TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or, in his absence, to his parliamentary assistant. On June 27 I asked a question regarding the use of Hoxsey cancer treatment, and at that time the minister said he would give me a report. I wonder whether the parliamentary assistant can tell us when the reply will be brought down.

Mr. F. G. Robertson (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will look into this matter and try to get an answer for the hon. member.

STORMS

BRUCE COUNTY, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST BY PROVINCE FOR ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF TORNADOES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the federal government been asked by the province of Ontario for aid in assisting the victims of recent tornadoes in Bruce county?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Will the federal government look sympathetically on such a request if it is made?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The federal government will look at every request that is made in the light of the general policies that have been established in that regard. Whenever there is a disaster that seems to surpass the capabilities of the locality where it occurs and the province requests assistance to come to the aid of those who suffer, the matter is very carefully considered.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): I have one more question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to direct it to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. Is the minister aware of the tornado damage done in Bruce county recently? If so, would he care to comment on how the victims of such tornadoes might obtain assistance?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I am aware of the fact that damage occurred in a small cyclone—I think that is the proper term—about three weeks ago.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Several cyclones.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Harris: I think the Prime Minister has outlined the procedure that might be taken.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You forgot to tell the Prime Minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NIAGARA CAMP—INQUIRY AS TO QUALITY OF FOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John B. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. As a result of his investigation is the minister now in a position to give the house a report as to whether there has been any improvement in the quality of food being provided for the militia at Niagara camp?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not at the moment. I am having the matter investigated, but I have not received a report as yet.

OTTAWA—REQUEST THAT JET PLANES BE PREVENTED FROM FLYING OVER CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received any complaints about low-flying jets over the city? I wonder if in view of the danger of these jets and the nuisance of the noise the minister would give consideration to preventing their flying over the immediate city area?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not personally received any complaints.

Mr. Knowles: Have you not heard them?

Mr. Campney: Yes, certainly I have heard them, but perhaps we will have to get used to modern flying.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LETHBRIDGE—AREA AND POPULATION SERVED BY LOCAL OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, notice of which I sent him.

What area, geographically speaking, has been and is now being served by the Lethbridge local income tax office? I would also like to ask this question. What would be an approximate estimate of the population in that area served by the Lethbridge local income tax office?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer these questions at the moment, as I have to obtain this information from the Lethbridge or Calgary offices. As soon as it is received I shall communicate it to the house.

TAXATION

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 442, to authorize the Minister of Finance to make payments to the governments of the provinces and to authorize the government of Canada to enter into fiscal agreements with the governments of the provinces.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore):

That Bill No. 442 be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

I do not move this motion with any desire to kill the bill nor with any desire to make it impossible for the government to complete legislation of this kind. There are some things within the bill with which we thoroughly agree. We think, for example, that inclusion of the equalization principle in the bill is good and necessary, particularly at this stage when there are provinces in Canada that are struggling to overcome their financial difficulties and trying to establish themselves in an expansion movement that will eventually help them to help themselves. We think that the equalization principle is sound and we are prepared to go along with it. We believe also that the principle of stabilization of revenues is good, and that is something we commend; we are not against that at all. We also believe that the increased refunds of tax collections to the provinces, provided by this bill, is something better than the provinces have had under the tax rental agreement.

I want you to note, Mr. Speaker, that I refer to the payments to the provinces as increased refunds of tax collections from the provinces. I like to look upon them as such. It is not a question of this government giving the provinces anything that does not belong to them. We have already made clear that in our view what the government of Canada is doing under these agreements is refunding tax collections from the provinces in a certain measure back to the provinces to help them to get along and to make it unnecessary for the provinces to impose double taxation with all the confusion that is bound to result from that sort of thing.

However, as I pointed out last night very briefly when I moved the amendment, the wording of the title and the wording of the bill itself at various places seem to indicate that the government of Canada feels that it is allowing the provinces something. I wanted to establish very definitely the principle that there is a partnership in this country and that what the government is doing is making available under a tax-sharing plan something that already belongs to the provinces but that it is being granted them under an agreement with which the provinces are ready to go along.

We look upon this bill as imposing a unilateral decision by this government on the provinces. That is our chief criticism of it. We feel it is unwise yet to go ahead with the bill before the provinces have considered the wording and have been able to convey to the government their feelings with regard to the whole bill. We look upon it as a denial of the partnership principle which is necessary if we are going to have a smooth-working federal democracy. The present bill and the present attitude of the government deny that partnership principle. The government's attitude seems to convey to the provinces the idea, "We are prepared to do something for you, to allow you this or allow you that, but you have to take it on our terms." I think that in principle that is wrong in every way.

We think there is still time to rectify the mistake that has been made in not submitting the bill to the provinces for their approval before it is enacted into law. That is the reason why we move the six months' hoist. We think the six months will give the Minister of Finance time to submit the bill to the provincial governments in conference, and he would still have time to have the bill made law before the end of the present fiscal year, when the old tax transfer agreements terminate.

We feel that the government and all the house should give careful consideration to this six months' period during which something further can be done to help the provinces to feel they are partners in this great Canada. I want to say that there seems to be very little noise made these days in defence of provincial rights. We want to defend those provincial rights. We do not want them to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage, and that is exactly what they do when they are dragged along with a unilateral proposal of this kind. So we feel very definitely that the government should make another effort, and I think they would be successful in carrying the provinces along with them if they would call a conference and try to satisfy the provinces that they were doing all they could. If they would call such a conference and place this very bill before them, and if the provinces indicated they were satisfied with it, they would hear nothing more from me about it, but I warn you that the provinces are not going to feel happy under the circumstances and I plead with the government to take these things into consideration and seriously give thought to the six months' delay.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Six months' delay means something more than a six months' hoist to the bill, and it seems to me that would be very unfortunate. The bill has received consideration in the house, although some of us would like to have seen modifications in the bill, and probably after second reading the bill might have been submitted to the provincial premiers for further consideration. But I would hesitate to vote against a bill which embodies a principle with which we are in complete agreement, namely, that there should be a division of certain revenues that were allotted to the provinces and to the dominion by the British North America Act.

However, let it be said that in imposing these taxes in this parliament we are exercising the constitutional right to do so. I did not go along with the idea that the provinces have a prior claim to these taxes.

Mr. Low: No, I think they have an equal claim.

Mr. Coldwell: I shall not argue the point as to equality, because after all there is not an equality between a province and this parliament. The British North America Act very clearly stipulated, or first of all stated, that there were three provinces which came into confederation. I think it is noteworthy that in the British North America Act those three provinces were made four provinces and it was stipulated that each province should have a legislature and that there should be one parliament for Canada. I have noticed with a good deal of misgiving that the legislatures of some of the provinces have been promoting themselves to parliaments of late and referring to the leading minister in those legislatures as the prime minister. To my mind that is completely wrong, and I think it is leading to a great deal of improper talk across Canada about the relation of the provinces and the dominion.

I could not support the six months' hoist which would kill the bill. I think the suggestion that there might be further conferences is a good suggestion, but let us be quite clear as to what the position is as between the provinces and this parliament. I readily admit that the provinces require more revenues, that the municipalities require more revenues, but the dominion, with the consent of the provinces, has assumed more and more obligations that were probably originally intended to be assumed by the provinces themselves. That is particularly true with regard to property and civil rights in the social security and other measures that we have adopted and I hope will continue to expand in this parliament. It seems to me that while negotiation between the provinces and the dominion is right and proper we should be very careful indeed that we do not accept the view that this parliament has not a right to make decisions of this sort.

Since the tax agreements expire on the 31st of March next and since in my opinion it is quite essential that we shall have something ready and the provinces shall know that we have got something ready and make their proper preparations accordingly, the six months' hoist, which would bring this matter into next January or February because we are at the end of July, would mean that neither the dominion nor the provinces would have sufficient time to make their plans. Consequently, while we would have liked to have seen further negotiations after the second reading of the bill we cannot support—I am sure I speak for those with me although I have not had time to consult them—something that would kill the bill and make it impossible to do the thing that is essential for the welfare of the country by the first of April of next year.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles: Will he? There is an amendment.

Mr. Fleming: He will be speaking on the amendment, not on the main motion.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. The hon. member is quite right.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, very briefly I think I should add a few words to what the leader of the C.C.F. party has said. I would be the first to agree that there may be defects in the legislation. Experience has shown that when you draw a bill and pass it through the house you may find at a later session that you want to amend it, and in so far as there may be a deficiency in what we have done or in so far as there may be an improvement that can be suggested to us we will be glad to bring it back by way of amendment at the next session of the house. However, on the main issue, namely, the question of a distribution of the taxing powers in the manner we have indicated in the bill and in the income tax amendments, I must say that I would have to disagree with a lot that has been said in the course of the debate so far. I do not admit that this is a partnership.

Mr. Low: I know you do not.

Mr. Harris: Each jurisdiction can impose these taxes if it so desires. There is no limit on the authority in either case, and until recently almost anyone in the opposition who criticized the tax rental agreements did so on the ground that we were invading and in some way abridging provincial autonomy. In the course of the debate on the resolution the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) spoke for an hour and ten minutes. I listened carefully and I read his address as it appeared in Hansard. I found no reference whatever to the phrase "provincial autonomy." We seem to have laid that ghost in the course of passing this bill through the house.

In addition, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) spoke for an hour the other day and I do not think he used the phrase "provincial autonomy" either. I used it once and until provincial rights were mentioned now I think that phrase was not used in the course of the discussion. So we now have before the house a bill which apparently alleviates or, shall I say, minimizes the complaints that have been made with respect to provincial autonomy, and the provinces have a choice now whether they will enter into a tax rental agreement much like the old one but with certain advantages added or whether they will choose to reassert their taxing powers as they have the right to do.

That will be the situation on the first of April next in those provinces that now have tax rental agreements. In the case of the province of Quebec, of course, they have already and are now imposing taxes in these fields. Therefore it would seem to me that it would be proper for the legislatures of the provinces to consider at their next sessions, if they so desire, what they ought to do with respect to tax rental agreements or the imposition of taxes again. I repeat, therefore, that I think it desirable that the bill should be passed at this session, but I also repeat my promise that if in the course of discussing the bill with the provinces, as we will undoubtedly have to do over the next several months, we find that improvements can be made we will certainly bring them before the house.

I only add that by next June we will have to make final settlement on the tax rental agreements and during all that time we will not only be negotiating with them with respect to those settlements but we will be discussing the question of the regulations and procedures to be adopted to carry out this legislation. Under those circumstances, if there is a deficiency I think we will find it.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on second reading of this bill on July 23 I sought to indicate the reasons why we of Her Majesty's loyal opposition feel that the bill does not do justice to the provinces nor to the municipalities of this country and why for those reasons we could not support the bill on second reading. At that time, sir, we urged a change of heart on the part of the dominion government and a recognition by it of the constitutional position of the provinces and the extremely onerous responsibilities that are cast today by the constitution upon the provincial and municipal governments of this country.

We said then that this whole question should be further reviewed and that there should be a new conference between the federal and provincial authorities if the federal government will show some change of heart and some adequate recognition of the constitutional position of the provinces and the needs and problems of the provincial and municipal governments. That is our position today. There ought to be a reopening of this whole question between the federal and provincial governments. No time should be lost in that regard, and out of that conference should come a very much better deal for the provinces and the municipalities.

It is true that the present measure does offer some improvement over the fiscal agreements that have been in effect during the past five years and which will expire on March 31 next, but the improvement is not nearly adequate and it does not afford sufficient reason for the provincial governments being tied up for the next five years, particularly at a period of tremendous national development of resources which throws such an abnormally heavy financial burden upon the provincial and municipal governments and which at the same time produces tremendous revenues for the federal treasury.

We have now reached almost the end of July. The present fiscal arrangements continue until March 31 next, eight months away. I think there is merit in the amendment that has been introduced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low). It does not deal with the bill finally but in effect it says to this government that we think that, in the next six months, they ought to carry out the plain duty that lies before them of taking this matter back in conference to the provincial premiers as spokesmen of the provincial governments and the municipal governments of this country; and that they should take it back not in the arbitrary and rigid attitude which has characterized the approach of the federal government to this problem but rather with a view to arriving at a settlement and agreement in the spirit which the fathers of confederation exhibited when they met to overcome much greater difficulties than those which confront the federal and provincial governments today in approaching their common fiscal problems and relations.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I think the house ought to support the amendment which has been introduced. It affords an opportunity which, if it is used by the federal government as it ought to be used, could result—with a wholesome Canadian attitude on their part—in a very much more satisfactory disposition of the problem of common fields of taxation and very great fiscal responsibilities in a period of rapid development of the resources of this country. Within that six months' period we would hope that the government would come back to parliament with a very much better scheme than the one embodied in the present bill. As I sought to say in speaking on second reading two days ago, we would be happy to come back here to a fall session or to a session at any time in order to deal with a better measure, one that will afford adequate recognition of the constitutional position of the provinces and the heavy responsibilities which they and the municipalities bear.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we consider that we are making a proposal that is good for all of Canada and that is good for the provinces whose administration of the resources that lie within their boundaries is going to have so much to do with the health of the whole Canadian economy in the years to come. If they are not to be healthy provincial administrations in a sound fiscal position, I submit to this house that the development of our resources is going to be checked. The administration of these resources, by our constitution, is confided to the provincial governments. They must be strong fiscally if they are to carry out their constitutional responsibilities. If they are hampered or if they are placed in a strait-jacket in that regard over a period of these next five years, which may be a period of critical importance in the development of this country, the federal government and the federal treasury are going to suffer.

We therefore say, Mr. Speaker, that here is an opportunity now to use valuable time—for no time should be lost—to re-examine the problem, to bring together the provincial premiers, and for the federal government to exhibit to them a wholesome recognition of the constitutional position of the provinces and the responsibilities which, under that constitution, fall on the provincial and municipal governments. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, we propose to support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Peace River.

Here are six precious months. Let this federal government use them to good advantage, to wholesome advantage, in the interests of the whole of Canada. If they do so, Mr. Speaker, I am sure this house will have the opportunity of giving approval to legislation that will represent a far more equitable distribution of the yield from common tax fields, a far more adequate recognition of the position that the provinces hold under our scheme of confederation; and that will not leave provinces and municipalities faced with colossal burdens and colossal expenditures far beyond their present capacity to meet, as is the situation today.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise on a question of privilege. Last evening—and I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) made this statement without intending to leave a wrong impression—as reported at page 6399 of Hansard, after a suggestion had been made by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Hamilton) respecting the need for the creation of a department of dominion-provincial relations or something analogous thereto, the minister stated as follows:

> It is not a new proposition. It has been advanced at one time or another in the house by the hon. member for Prince Albert.

I suggest to the minister that in that statement he is mistaken, for at no time have I advocated the setting up of such a department. I presume the statement was inadvertently made by the minister.

Mr. Harris: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am bound to accept the hon. member's correction. However, I am sure that, if I have time, I can turn up the reference to it in Hansard. I have heard it myself in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; the minister has never heard it because I have never spoken previously on this subject.

Mr. Harris: Oh, yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On dominion-provincial relations?

Mr. Harris: Yes.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reinforce only one aspect of what has been well covered by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). The minister himself recognized the possibility of improvement with respect to the federal government's proposals to the provinces which are embodied in this bill and in which they are given their legal authority. Just this morning he recognized that possibility and he said that he would come back to parliament if that improvement were realized. We welcome that attitude. However, I suggest to the minister that unless he wishes to force his present views upon the provinces, he should not force this bill through at this time. Rather he should proceed with his negotiations until substantial agreement has been achieved.

I do not propose to review the discussion of the method of achieving agreement. It is not a short process but it surely can be accomplished if the government is prepared to grapple with the problem and to endeavour to convert these temporary agreements which come forward every five years for renewal as stop-gaps into some more permanent solution. That is where the government has been derelict, namely in not endeavouring to make a more permanent settlement which will command the substantial approval of the provinces. If we in this house were to give unanimous approval to the government's present proposals, what position would the provinces be in to secure any of those improvements which the minister recognizes as a possibility? They would be faced with a cut-and-dried plan which they must accept or reject. Their negotiating power would be weakened by the fact that all parties in this house had accepted the government's present proposals as being the ultimate when it is clear that we do not do so. The suggestion is that this bill be deferred. Perhaps six months is not the right time, and perhaps a shorter time would be better, but the suggestion that the government proceed with these negotiations before determining what the agreement will be strikes me as being a sound procedure. After all, that is the usual method of arriving at an agreement, making the agreement before drawing up the document and signing it. In this case we are drawing up and signing the document and then proceeding to negotiate again for an agreement.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I do not think any of us need to kid ourselves at all, Mr. Speaker. An amendment to move a six months' hoist is not a move to adjourn, it is a move to kill. I believe that is the meaning of that amendment.

Now, I cannot agree with the previous speaker that the passage of this bill means that all parties are in anywhere near complete agreement as to its text or as to the procedure of the government in the making of their proposals. I hope, sir, that I made it very clear when I spoke on second reading we are actually very disappointed in the provisions of this bill, and very disappointed in the fact that there has not been what we think is a sufficient recognition of the fiscal inabilities of the provinces and municipalities to meet the responsibilities of their governmental jurisdictions. But we do believe very much in the principle of there being an agreement between the federal and provincial authorities on these taxation fields.

Now, sir, all the provincial legislatures meet early in the spring of the year. If my knowledge is correct, the departments of finance of all provincial legislatures have to start on the work of their budgets not less than five months before their legislatures meet. If we, therefore, accept the basis of there just being a six months' hoist I say that we place the provincial governments in an impossible position in the drafting of their budgets for introduction at the session early next year. I believe that from a practical point of view we do have to accept the principle of dominion-provincial agreements at this time, whether we consider them satisfactory or unsatisfactory. It is a fact that if this bill passes, as I presume it will, the provincial governments are faced with the proposition that they can accept the bill in full; they can accept it in part or they can reject in entirety the propositions there set forth. So under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, so far as I personally am concerned I agree with what has been said by my leader, that basically and from a practical point of view, even although we do not like what this bill contains, even although we think the government has not gone far enough, in basic principle we have to support the bill. We cannot, therefore, support the amendment which has just been moved.

I would like to say this. I would hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) would make some statement on the bill, in view of the criticisms that have been made and in view of the fact he must know that the provinces and municipalities cannot possibly for the next five year period finance their responsibilities through the amount of money that can be, by agreement on fiscal arrangements, granted to them. I would say that I go along with my friends on the right and my friends on the left in asking the minister to consider calling a further conference of the premiers of the provinces along with the representatives of the federal government, with a view to acceptance in part, in whole or rejection of Bill No. 442 and what it implies, and that the government by policy lay down additional assistance in those fields where the provinces now are caught, such as conservation, development, education and primary highways. I am convinced that one statement from the Minister of Finance now that he is prepared to discuss these matters in this coming year would make possible almost a full acceptance of the bill which is now before us.

Mr. Fernand Girard (Lapointe): I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I have to rise now and explain that if we support the government on this bill it is not because we approve of what has just been said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) or even what has been said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris).

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when a moment ago the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) stated that he did not agree that the provinces have an equal or prior claim to those tax fields, I felt he was going back in time to some ten years ago and restating a grave misconception.

I have the definite impression that the whole debate has centred on the matter of money, while basically this has not always been the main issue. If we approve the bill before the house, it is precisely because it gives, especially to the provinces, the freedom not to sign the agreements.

If it was merely a matter of money, that is 10 per cent of income tax, 50 per cent of succession duties and 9 per cent of corporation taxes, we could no doubt still speak about the poor provinces and of the fiscal agreements; it would be a matter of exchanging money for money, and each province could then accept the amount that would suit her best. But it is above all a matter of principle. While the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) has said that no one seems to have dragged in the ghost of autonomy, we are of the opinion that the matter of provincial autonomy is at the root of the problem. Let no one believe that, because there are poor provinces, the matter involved is only one of money and that the provinces, especially Quebec, would be satisfied with that.

Mr. Speaker, if in this debate the matter of money seems to have been the only important one, we should not forget that as far as we, the independents, are concerned, we approve the present bill solely because it is a step in the right direction, and more particularly because it enables the province of Quebec, which has every reason in the world to keep on fighting, to refuse to sign the agreements because she believes, and will continue to believe, that the matter of provincial autonomy is the crux of the matter.

We approve this bill not on account of the amounts offered but because we are free not to sign the agreement and because we can refuse to subordinate provincial autonomy to the central government.

I would like to say that we do not approve the motion before the house—at least I don't —since we have no intention of killing the bill, which would be the net result if such motion were carried. As I said, we are supporting this imperfect legislation because it is a step in the right direction. However, that does not mean that we are satisfied, on the contrary; as long as the federal government does not recognize that the provinces have the right to full deduction of the income tax levied by provincial authorities, we surely cannot feel satisfied.

(Text):

Mr. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I have a few words I should like to say regarding this legislation, and I therefore intend to take this opportunity to do so. I rise only to speak to this amendment because, up to this point so far as I know, no voice has been raised from my province regarding this legislation. The conclusion might be erroneously drawn, therefore, that Prince Edward Island is satisfied with the agreement. We believe that there are two problems which this agreement tries to meet. One is a fair division of the tax resources of the country between the central government on the one hand and the provinces on the other. We feel that this legislation does not go far enough towards meeting the needs of the provinces. As a matter of fact, there seems to be reluctance on the part of the central government to admit that the provinces have any rights, or rights to the extent the provinces believe they have in any case. As a matter of fact some of the provinces believe the central government is trying to sell them a ride on their own horse.

When the colonies which now form Canada came together, the fathers of confederation believed a reasonable division of tax resources was made to meet the needs of the central government on the one hand and the provinces on the other. As I have already said, that is one of the purposes of this legislation, to bring that division up to date. There is another problem which this legislation should meet. It should try to remove the injustice which is the lot of some provinces as compared to others in that they have not been favoured to an equal extent by confederation.

We in the maritimes feel that we have contributed greatly to the success of confederation generally, and that we have not benefited in proportion over the years. The governments of the maritime provinces, and that of Prince Edward Island in particular, have striven to put forward their just claims in that regard and have met with varying success throughout the years.

On one occasion the then minister of finance said, and I quote from Sir Thomas White very briefly when he was minister of finance in 1912—I do not intend to take up much time of the house:

> I have become enthusiastic about it, and I say that Prince Edward Island from the date of union has been hardly treated, and I believe that her dwindling population is, to a very large extent, due to the fact that she has been deprived of the subsidies to which she was justly and reasonably entitled from the dominion since confederation. I hope to show to the satisfaction of the house that this grant is not only justified, but abundantly justified. I hope that a new era will dawn for the province of Prince Edward Island when it gets this enlarged subsidy.

Then, the leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, had this to say:

> The one reason only which has impressed me—and it is not a constitutional reason, it is not a legal reason, it is simply a reason of equity—is the fact that Prince Edward Island has not profited by confederation.

As a result of these points of view the maritimes, and Prince Edward Island perhaps in particular, had these claims satisfied to some degree. Now I think the people of my province generally feel that a lot of these relative benefits which they gained through the struggle over the years have, for the most part, been wiped out by these new agreements and their position relatively is not now good. In referring to the table placed on Hansard by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) on July 16, I note that the per cent increase over the 1952 formula in total is 21·3 per cent, whereas in the case of Prince Edward Island it is merely 1·6 per cent, the lowest of any province.

I believe the feeling of the people of my province was summed up by the premier of our province at one of these provincial conferences recently, the one on October 3, 1955. I think the people of my province support his point of view when he said:

> Although we favour the continuation of the principles underlying the existing financial agreements, we feel that under the present formula we are not receiving a fair or adequate share. Our submission will indicate the necessity of and the right to substantially increased federal assistance for the public services which the province has undertaken, and in many cases pursuant to policies promoted by the federal government, which we were obliged to adopt.

I therefore think, Mr. Speaker, that very serious consideration should be given by the federal government to changes in the proposed legislation at the first opportunity which would bring back to their previous focus the claims of the maritime provinces and of Prince Edward Island in particular. I support the amendment and the purpose for which it was moved, namely, that an opportunity might be given for further consideration between the federal government on the one hand and the provinces on the other.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, let it be known first of all that the object of this group in moving the six months' hoist is not to kill the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: Please give me a chance to say so before you object. That is common sense, is it not?

As far as I can judge, it is quite possible for the minister to call a provincial conference as soon as this session is closed and, with the provinces, devise a bill which will be satisfactory to the provinces and then draft that bill and bring it into the House of Commons in the early days of the next session and have that bill passed before the time on which the other agreements expire. I think it is not beyond the possibility of this house to do that. I am sure hon. members would be quite ready to expedite the passage of such a bill.

The greatest anxiety that we feel as a group is that a precedent might be set, as I pointed out the other day, under which there will be a tendency to weaken provincial autonomy and consequently undermine the sanctity of the British North America Act. That was our whole reason in introducing the amendment last night. If the change had been made in the title of the bill which was envisaged by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) in his amendment, then there would have been written into the bill a specific guarantee of the sanctity of the British North America Act and we would have had no further objection whatsoever.

It has to be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that while we are dealing with provinces which are not populous at the present time, which number their populations in, say, 1½ million, provinces such as Alberta and British Columbia, we are dealing with infants just beginning to grow into giants. Those provinces in 50 years time may have populations of 10 million and 15 million each. Now, measures we take in this house could easily abrogate the constitutional guarantees of freedom of action which those provinces in those days with their great populations would need in the most urgent way. Therefore, in every move we make today we are building for the future.

I know there is a great deal of pressure at the present time to centralize control everywhere, as I pointed out when I spoke on a previous occasion. But that pressure to centralize is Marxism; it is communist, pure and simple, and it is being made by the agents of communism, the originators of communism, whom I characterized the other day as Turko-Mongolian reds descendants of Esau.

There will be those who say, "I do not understand". Well, there was a time when I could not understand, but I understand now. They are not the kind of people our forefathers were. Our forefathers, as early as we can find a record of them at all, insisted on local self-government and they met in their villages and elsewhere and decided what they would do and in large measure they governed themselves in their villages. Going back to constitutional history in Great Britain, you will find that everywhere written.

Our concept is just exactly diametrically opposite to the Marxist concept. Marxists are working for the centralization of power in the world so their people who now constitute only a very few millions of the world's total population shall be able to dictate absolutely the conditions of life for all the billions of people in the world. That is the object of centralization.

I indicated the other day that Major C. H. Douglas said that the British North America Act and the constitution of Australia are the two most perfect constitutions in the world. Perfect for what? Marxism? No. Communism? No. Turko-Mongolian reds? Oh no, it is just poison to all of them; but for British people, Anglo-Saxon-Celts, it is a perfect constitution and we want to keep it so. It is our anxiety in this group, lest something be done here in this bill by this house which might endanger those of the future, that has led us to take the position we have taken and to move this amendment.

I hope it is perfectly clear there is no desire to kill the bill or to kill the principle.

An hon. Member: May I ask a question?

Mr. Blackmore: All right just a minute. I shall be glad to have your questions but let us have them in order, please, so the question will appear on Hansard just as it was asked, and my answer will be recorded in exactly the way it was spoken. That is the only way in which the record will be worth while. If anyone wants to ask a question let him indicate his desire and I will answer it. The matter we are discussing today is too important to appear as a garbled report such as the Hansard people, capable and efficient as they are, can only produce if they cannot hear the questions that are asked and the answers which I give.

Now let me proceed to point out once more that we are not opposed to the principle of sharing taxation at all but we are opposed to the principle of weakening in any way the British North America Act.

When I was speaking the other day I pointed out that beyond a shadow of a doubt in my opinion the establishment of the Bank of Canada was accomplished by these very people who were seeking to centralize power and to put in Canada an agency through which they could control the destiny of Canada from London, for example, or from Basel, Switzerland, a thing which is not necessary at all.

We can control our own money here in this country and we want to keep that control right where it is.

I have said that we approve of the idea of sharing taxation.

I want to speak directly to Ontario for a few minutes, if I might. We have nothing but sympathy for the people of Ontario and for the province of Ontario and its needs for revenue. We fully realize that as industrial development has taken place in Ontario the burdens of government have increased, and inevitably so, if for no other reason than because the water supply which is used by industry has to be guaranteed by the provinces and the water has to be cleansed after industry is finished with it. All of these things constitute a burden on Ontario, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) pointed out when he was speaking, and there are many other ways in which he indicated that the burdens of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, our great industrial provinces, are greatly enhanced by the development of industry.

In case a depression comes along, what will be the position of the provinces in which there is a great labour population to become unemployed? It is immediately obvious that those industrial provinces, if they have wise governments, are going to be taking precautions to provide for situations of that sort. Because of all these things, I speak with great sympathy for the people of Ontario and Quebec, the highly industrialized provinces of this nation. I am thankful they are where they are. I rejoice in them; they are a blessing to Canada.

One of the main things we have in mind in Alberta however, is that we realize in the case of a big company manufacturing agricultural implements or automobiles for instance, much of the profit of the company is made out in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba. We ask, is there any reason why that portion of the money which is made in Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba should not be drawn off by a wise taxation policy in Ottawa and returned to us in those provinces where the money was made? We see no reason why that should not be done. Beyond that, there certainly must be great caution not to draw away from Ontario or Quebec the means of supporting the conditions which must obtain in those provinces.

I wish now to say a word or two about the four maritime provinces. One reason we do not trust this government in the main, and the whole set-up today, is simply that they are making no provisions whatsoever for permanently establishing the four maritime provinces in such a way that they can get along by themselves.

It is not good for a province to be on relief. The people in the maritime provinces do not want to be on relief. The people there are as fine as any people in the Dominion of Canada and probably there are no finer people in the British commonwealth. They are capable, independent, proud and self-sustaining. It is a source of the utmost mortification to them to have to come to Ottawa for more and more handouts, more and more subsidies and subventions and all that sort of thing. It is repulsive to them. The people in the maritime provinces ought to be put in a position where that kind of thing is not necessary. Up to the present time there has not been one single move made on the part of any Liberal administration since 1935 to enable those provinces to support themselves.

I appreciate all that was said by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) the other day. I rejoice that assistance has been sent down to those provinces, but let us see what it was that happened to those provinces when they came into confederation—New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and later Prince Edward Island.

In the first place they lost control of their financial affairs. Very, very soon the ownership of the banks in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia passed into the hands of companies whose head offices were located in Toronto or Montreal. This meant that the policy of those banks in those provinces was no longer subject to the control of the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. That was one of the most serious things that occurred to them, just as it was with us out in Alberta. In Alberta in 1935, when the Social Credit government took over, do you know what we were paying for loans from banks? Eight per cent. The member for Peace River points out that even though the statutory rate was 7 per cent, those banks were charging 8 per cent. That 8 per cent was increasing the difficulty of the producers of every single commodity in the province of Alberta. It was a burden imposed upon us which we had no way under the sun of alleviating or removing.

Our railroad freight rates were imposed upon us. There is not a thing we can do about it except complain, and I should not be surprised if the day comes when we will tell the two central governments, "Keep your railways at home; we shall build our own, because we are simply not going to be saddled with the increasing freight rates which render it impossible for us to live." Once you get the people determined, they will get somewhere. We were, I repeat, under a set of freight rates which bled us white, both when the freight was coming out to us and when it was going back from us.

The same kind of condition exists in the maritimes, and there is nothing they can do about it. If they fail in a business way, we blame them, when as a matter of fact we ought to blame the policy of the government which allows the railways to prey on them as they do.

The maritimes moreover lost the power to determine what goods they were going to admit. Raw materials which they had been accustomed to getting from the United States and elsewhere they were prevented from bringing in, because the central government imposed a tariff against those goods. No matter how much those provinces needed those goods, they had to pay that tariff. The result was that many industries in the maritimes, I understand, were put in the position where they simply had to die. We cannot enable the maritimes to run their own affairs until we overcome that difficulty.

Furthermore, there were customary markets for which they had arranged with various other countries. Those markets were closed in large measure because of tariff policies and fiscal policies here in Ottawa.

What can we do to make up to the maritime provinces for these disadvantages that have been imposed upon them by being in the Canadian union? People will say, "I do not know what to do." "I do not know what to do" is just not good enough! It lies in the power of the government here—the Department of Finance—to devise means whereby those disadvantages can be made up and whereby those provinces can produce their own goods and consume them.

Why should the people in the four maritime provinces have to pay the cost of a 1,000-mile haul in order to get goods from Ontario and Quebec and have that cost added to every single thing they buy? There is something seriously wrong there. They used to manufacture their own. I do not wish to go into too much detail regarding that matter but I should like to commend the member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) for the very fine speech he gave the other day, and several other of the maritime members who have given speeches demanding a fair deal for the maritimes. All honour to these boys. There have to be scores of boys like them coming here from the maritimes and fighting until some intelligence manages to seep into the minds of the people in Ottawa.

Mr. Philpott: You will notice that he did not vote against the bill.

Mr. Fleming: He explained the reason for that afterwards.

Mr. Blackmore: Just a silly cheapskate interjection, altogether unworthy of the member who made it. The important thing is that this man stood for some consideration for the maritimes.

The Social Crediters maintain that by a wise use of the financial instruments at the disposal of the Dominion of Canada it is possible for us to set up in the maritime provinces a banking system of their own and a financial system of their own under which they can get loans at a cost such as we in Alberta, after setting up the treasury branch system, were able to get for 5 per cent instead of 8. All we in Ottawa need is to have the will to do it.

Would Ontario and Quebec members rather do that and enable the maritimes to carry on themselves, or would they rather commit their successors or their children and the generations coming after them to a perpetual burden of sending subsidies to those people to enable them to keep themselves? Which would you rather do? Certainly common sense indicates that you would rather give them a financial system of their own under which they can operate effectively.

Similarly with the fiscal policy and trade policy, it is possible for the financial authorities here in Ottawa to enable the people in the maritime provinces to use what the Social Crediters call a compensated discount on the price of their goods, bringing the prices down so low that it will be impossible for goods from the United States or from Ontario or Quebec to compete with those goods, and thereby bringing the markets in the maritimes to the maritimes, which is exactly one of the fundamental rights of the people. People may say, "I cannot see how that is going to be done." The mere fact that the people now governing in Ottawa cannot see how it can be done indicates that they are unqualified for the positions they fill, because obviously it ought to be possible to render the maritimes capable of that.

I was in New Brunswick recently for some two weeks. I went all over that glorious province and kept my eyes and ears open. I was delighted with the perfect garden of Eden there was down there in New Brunswick. I was delighted over the fine soil there was and I was amazed, and still am somewhat confounded to think about it, that I drove along miles and miles of good New Brunswick roads and saw pastures, which would support the finest kind of cattle and the finest kind of animals and farming operations, raising what they call "cow pasture spruce" there. The mere fact that there exists in that province a set of circumstances under which the people cannot use their resources for the benefit of themselves, indicates that something is dreadfully wrong. The people did not know what it was that was wrong. They had ideas. I do not know whether the government that has just been elected down there knows; perhaps it does. If I talked with a Conservative down there, he said that this cow pasture spruce was growing there because of Liberal mismanagement. If I talked to a Liberal, he said he would explain it so that I would understand. But neither of them got around to doing that job so as to make the matter clear to me.

For this government right here, that situation poses a problem which is inescapable; if they are going to be worthy of the support of the Canadian people, something should be done. They told me in New Brunswick that they were shipping in milk in certain parts and shipping in cheese and butter, right in the presence of the finest pastures a man could put his eyes on. There is something seriously wrong there.

As I said a few minutes ago, I do not intend to go into too much detail except to say that there has been no indication on the part of the government at the present time in Ottawa that they even sense what is wrong down there or that they have any disposition to make it right fundamentally. It is one thing to give a person medicine to relieve pain from which he is suffering; it is another thing to cure the disease which is injuring him. It is the cure for the disease that is injuring the maritime provinces that we must seek out and apply. That in large measure is a matter of finance.

I think I have said enough to show that we are perfectly justified in moving this amendment on third reading of the bill. It is high time that the people of the country realized that something is radically wrong and ought to be made right before we go forward with a bill of this sort.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is one point I should like to raise at this stage and it comes about from remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) last night. In the course of our discussion the Minister of Finance placed on the record a statement which he did not subsequently withdraw. As found at page 6402 of Hansard he said:

> I have been listening all day to hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly those of the Conservative party, and I have assumed that that question would be asked because every one of them has urged upon me an increase in federal taxes to take care of the provinces to a greater extent.

It was pointed out to him immediately that no one had asked for any such increase in taxes. He then shifted his ground and said that he would presume that we were speaking about the surplus. But in the middle of that half-hearted explanation he went on to say:

> In any event let me point out that I am delighted to note this change in viewpoint . . .

I think there would be a much more satisfactory conclusion to this debate if the Minister of Finance had withdrawn that completely erroneous statement that we were asking for an increase in taxes to take care of the position we have been pointing out all along affecting the provinces and the municipalities. We have been suggesting a better division of the revenue derived by the dominion government and a better consideration of the plight in which the municipalities and the provinces have been placed and from the total revenue collected we suggest that a better sharing might result, but we have never at any time suggested that to meet the demands or obligations of the municipalities and the provinces a tax increase was necessary at this time.

In fact, we have pointed out year after year that there has been a great deal of waste and extravagance on the part of the government and the surpluses that have been piled up from time to time might better be used to assist those areas of our country that are in difficulty. Consequently I wish to draw to the attention of the house this completely erroneous statement of the Minister of Finance which he has left on the record without correction.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Harris moved:

That a sum not exceeding $264,409,639.92 being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and a sum not exceeding $12,168,792.75 being one-twelfth of the total of the amounts of items set forth in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957.

He said: This resolution, Mr. Chairman, asks for a grant of supply of one-twelfth of the amount of the main and supplementary estimates and in that connection I repeat assurances and undertakings I have given on similar occasions during this session.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Knowles: Before this resolution carries, Mr. Chairman, there is one matter upon which I should like to say a few words. It concerns both the Department of Transport and the Department of Labour. I did indicate to each of the ministers concerned, prior to eleven o'clock this morning, that I would be raising this matter. I note that the Minister of Transport is present and I hope the Minister of Labour will arrive within a minute or two. The question relates to the subject about which I queried the Minister of Transport yesterday. As I have already indicated, it seems to me that it is of concern both to him and to the Minister of Labour. That is one reason for my raising it at this time, when one can talk to two ministers at the same time. My other reason for raising this matter now is that in at least one of the instances of the grievance to which I shall refer something could be done about it if action were taken now because it relates to something that is scheduled to come into effect in a few weeks.

I refer to the fact that the Canadian National Railways seems to be following, far more often it seems to me than is good for labour relations, the practice of letting some of its work out by contract and as a result by-passing certain collective agreements. As hon. members will recall, a number of us complained about this practice last year and the year before with respect to contracts to the R. F. Welch company which had the effect of by-passing collective agreements between the Canadian National Railways and the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees. I understand that matter has been cleared up, in fact that it was cleared up earlier this year. I took the opportunity to indicate to the Minister of Transport that I was pleased that that had been done. It so happened that shortly after I learned that the matter had been cleared up I happened to see Mr. Donald Gordon in another connection and I indicated to him that those of us who had complained about the matter were pleased to know that the union was again being recognized so far as that kind of work was concerned.

However, I am now informed that there are a number of instances in which the Canadian National Railways is doing this same thing. I learned, for example, that at Midland, Ontario, just a few days ago nine carmen's helpers, whose work was covered by a collective agreement between the Canadian brotherhood of railway employees and other transport workers and the Canadian National Railways, lost their jobs because the Canadian National Railways let that work out by contract to a private firm. I understand that similar action has been taken at Sarnia, Ontario. In both of those cases the work was of the nature of cleaning freight cars, installing car doors and so on. I understand that at Sarnia the rate of pay under the collective agreement was $1.23 and a fraction per hour, but that the employees who enjoyed that wage under a collective agreement are getting only $1 an hour from the private firm to which this work has been let out by contract.

I am told that at the new express building built recently in Toronto the cleaning work has been contracted out at rates below those provided for in collective agreements covering such work. I have other instances before me of various places in Ontario and Quebec where this has been done, and it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the railway is doing in this instance precisely what was done previously with respect to the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees. I would hope that the railway, which apparently came to its senses in that other instance, will realize that this is a practice which is highly injurious to labour-management relations and should be brought to a halt right away.

Yesterday, in my question to the Minister of Transport, I asked him also if he would look into the situation that is developing in connection with the restaurant in the union station at Toronto. This is a place with which most of us probably are quite familiar. I would point out that for many years that restaurant has been operated by the Toronto Terminals Railway Company. According to my information, the Toronto Terminals Railway Company is incorporated under Canadian law and is owned jointly by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I find that amongst the directors of the Toronto Terminals Railway Company are such persons as Donald Gordon, N. R. Crump and others from the two railways. I find also that the officers include Donald Gordon, W. A. Mather, R. H. Tarr, and others connected with the two railways. In other words, it is quite clear that the Toronto Terminals Railway Company is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, which is owned by them for the purpose of operating the union station and providing the services at that union station.

However, the employees in the restaurant at the union station in Toronto, whose working conditions have thus far been governed by a collective agreement between the Canadian brotherhood of railway employees and other transport workers and the Toronto Terminals Railway Company, have been notified that their employment will terminate on August 31. As a matter of fact, on June 20 the employees of the company working in the restaurant at the union station, Toronto, received this communication which I should like to read:

> I am directed to inform you that as from September 1, 1956, the restaurants and news stands in the union station will no longer be operated by this company.

The communication was from the Toronto Terminals Railway Company. I continue:

> In the circumstances, I am required to give you notice that your employment with the Toronto Terminals Railway Company will terminate not later than the close of business on August 31, 1956.
> It is regretted that at the present time there is no other work with the company which can be offered to you. If you wish it, however, your name will be listed as an applicant for such further suitable employment as might become available.

My information is that waitresses working at the union station in Toronto are receiving $1 an hour at the present time under a collective agreement between their union and the company. Those waitresses have been told that their jobs end on August 31 because of the contract that is being let. Those same waitresses, so I am informed, have been offered their old jobs back under the new management after August 31 at 60 cents an hour. This is the direct result of this policy of letting work out at contract, namely, that these employees will take a reduction from $1 to 60 cents an hour. Likewise, I am told that short-order cooks working there are receiving $1.37 an hour under the collective agreement, but they have been offered 70 cents an hour by the company that is to take over that work.

Now, the Minister of Transport indicated yesterday, when I asked him a question on the orders of the day, that the Toronto Terminals Railway Company is not a railway coming under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport; but I point out, Mr. Chairman, that it is a company owned by the two major railways in this country, and I point out also that the labour relations of that company are under federal jurisdiction and that the contract referred to which provides the wages I have indicated is a contract under the provisions of the federal Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a pattern that is a serious one and that every effort should be made to prevent it being continued. Certainly, it is inimical to good labour-management relations to have a company like the Canadian National Railways, or any of its subsidiaries, entering into collective agreements with trade unions and then undercutting, by-passing, nullifying those contracts by letting work out, as seems to be done in these cases.

As a matter of fact, I have in my hand a copy of an ILO news service release, which is dated April 16, 1956, press release 56/23, having to do with contract labour. This happens to relate to contract labour in the petroleum industry, but I draw attention to the fact that this news release points out that the international labour organization looks with disfavour on letting out work by contract and, as a result, getting around collective agreements. This news release calls for action by government to prevent employers getting around the rights of the union by letting out work on a contract basis. The document also indicates conditions that make possible sound relations and emphasizes the fact that collective agreements should be recognized and their spirit should not be broken, as is being done in this case.

I would point out that this release to which I have referred, while put out by the ILO news service, indicates that 15 countries took part in the session that discussed this matter. Remember that government, labour and management are all represented in the ILO. One of the 15 countries which took part in this discussion was Canada. I am sure that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour agree with me that collective agreements should not be by-passed in this way, and toward that end I hope that either one or both of these ministers, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour, will get in touch with the management of the Canadian National Railways and, if necessary, with the management of the Toronto Terminals Railway Company and see to it that as the matter was corrected, at least so I am informed, in the case of the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees, it will also be corrected in this case and that this practice will not be further extended.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take one or two minutes to reply to the observations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He was kind enough this morning privately to supplement the information which was contained in his question yesterday. Before I come to it I would like to say this with regard to the question he asked yesterday, which was as to whether I was aware that the Canadian National Railways is again letting out to private contractors some of its work normally covered by union agreements, and would I look into this practice of by-passing collective agreements. I want to say that I immediately communicated with the management of the railway and, on the information that I was able to give them by reading the question, they were quite unable to identify the situation to which the hon. member had referred yesterday. This morning the hon. member was good enough to mention specifically these cases which do not fall within the scope of the Welch contract to which he has referred and as to which there has been discussion in the select committee on railways and shipping owned and operated by the government.

I would like to tell the members of the committee, Mr. Chairman, that so far as the examples he has just mentioned are concerned, my consultation with the railway management has been very hasty in view of the short time that has been available, but with regard to the situation at Sarnia I would like to point out that the contract to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred was entered into in May, 1955, not May of this year, and it was a contract entered into with an outside firm for the cleaning of the interior of box cars. There were six labourers and two helpers formerly employed by the railway who were affected by this change. In the case of Midland, the contract was entered into quite recently and, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, it is of a similar character. This affected some 17 railway employees, consisting of 7 car helpers and 10 labourers. One of the seven car helpers had seniority rights from 1947 and another from 1952. These two have been placed in other railway employment. The others were new employees of the railway. I have not been able to get information about the situation in Limoilou, Quebec, but I take it the situation is somewhat similar there to that which exists at Sarnia and Midland. The management have taken some trouble in their communications with me to stress the fact that no complaints whatever have been received from the unions with regard to the arrangements at these points. I think, however, it has always been understood, though I have not read the collective labour agreement between the railway and its employees, that the company reserves the right to have work done on contract when it is demonstrated that this method is more efficient and less costly. Apparently, substantial economies have been effected at Sarnia over the past year. And, Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult, having regard to the obligations which rest upon the railway, to believe that it would be proper for me to intervene and to try to exert pressure on the management to do something that in their judgment ought not to be done. It seems to me we can only obtain the best management and operation of the Canadian National Railway system when management remains free to run the system to the best advantage so as to procure the best results for the employees and for the public whom they intend to serve. I do not think it is in the interests, either of the employees or of the public, and therefore of the system itself, that they should be restricted to following the same pattern that they have always followed or that they should not be free, when the economics make it more desirable, to do by contract work that perhaps formerly was done by individual employees.

The hon. member referred to the situation in the station restaurant in Toronto. My recollection of the circumstances is the railway company decided that instead of running the restaurant themselves it would be run by a contractor, someone who tendered for the concession. I think the changes of employment are due exactly to the change in that operation.

I hope the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not seeking to imply that the company should do everything in connection with the system itself and that under no circumstances should outside firms be asked to do by contract such operations as running restaurants and newsstands and so on. I do not think that is the hon. member's intention but I think the management should remain free to do what it considers to be good management of the system property.

There is just one final comment I would like to make. I do not know whether it was the intention of the hon. member to do so but there was an implication that the Canadian National Railways was trying to get around or by-pass the collective labour agreements. I do not believe the circumstances would justify that assertion. My experience with the management of the railway is that when it makes a contract it respects it faithfully and I am sure that is what has been done in this case.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for the interest he has taken in this matter as indicated by the fact that he has been in touch with the management of the Canadian National Railways. There are just one or two comments I would like to make.

I am sorry that the Minister of Labour was not able to be here when I made my earlier remarks but I am glad he is in the house now and perhaps he has been informed as to what I had to say.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Labour cannot be unconcerned about the fact that the result of the changes we have been discussing has been that a large number of employees will receive a lower wage than they were getting before. I do not think the Minister of Labour can take without concern the suggestion of the Minister of Transport that the management of the Canadian National Railways should be left free to make its own arrangements and that the government should not intervene when the result is that certain people who were formerly making $1.37 an hour are reduced to 70 cents and others formerly making $1 an hour are reduced to 60 cents. The Minister of Labour must be concerned about good labour management relations but certainly this practice hardly comes under that category.

I feel, too, that the Minister of Transport should also be concerned about this matter from the standpoint of the efficient operation of the railway. The minister seems to think if the railway runs its operations more economically than under a previous arrangement that that is good management, but I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the employees of the railway get the fear that this kind of thing is going to be extended, if the dining car employees become afraid that what can be done to the restaurant employees in Toronto can also be done on the dining cars, it is not going to help much so far as the morale of the employees is concerned and it will affect the running of the railway.

Surely a very integral part of the operation of the railway, in addition to the balance sheets of receipts and expenditures, is the question of the morale of the employees. I strongly urge that this kind of thing is not good for the morale either of the employees whom it directly affects or those who are afraid they might be next on the list.

It has been suggested by the Minister of Transport that he should not be asked to intervene in connection with this matter. I feel very strongly that both he and the Minister of Labour should look into this matter and should make it clear to the C.N.R. that employee conditions are an integral and important part of the operation of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, I regret that owing to another meeting I was not in the house when this discussion began but I think I know the gist of the discussion.

I can tell my hon. friend that as Minister of Labour I have not had direct representation from the employees with regard to the matter under discussion this afternoon. Not since the two parties agreed to work out their general agreements on the basis of conciliation board reports have I had any formal representations from the unions or the employees, and consequently I am not in a position to make any statement as to what should or should not be done concerning the matter in hand.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I might just point out to the minister, Mr. Chairman, that I stated in the first part of my remarks that I understood that the difficulty that existed so far as the Welch contract was concerned had been cleared up. What I was referring to this afternoon was another instance or several other instances so far as another union was concerned, namely the Canadian brotherhood of railway employees and other transport workers. I am sure that as the minister interested himself when representations were made by the other union, if representations come from this union he will give the matter his attention.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

85. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,145,727.

Mr. Monteith: On Friday, June 29, the minister made some remarks, as recorded on page 5520 of Hansard, concerning a gun contract with Sorel Industries Limited of Sorel, Quebec. I should like to read a few paragraphs of the remarks he made at that time in this connection, beginning at the third line on page 5520:

In this connection, I should like to refer briefly to the contracts for the three-inch 50 calibre anti-aircraft guns to which reference was made in the report of the Auditor General for the last fiscal year. These contracts were carried out by Sorel Industries Limited in its gun plant at Sorel, Quebec, on behalf of the United States and Canadian governments, and the difference of some $112,000 each in the cost to the two governments provides a good example of the heavy expense of re-establishing a facility to do this type of work.

Apart from minor extras for special equipment required by the Canadian navy, the difference in price was accounted for mainly by three items of expenditure which were considered to apply to Canadian account only, inasmuch as they related to the re-establishment of Canada's only facility for the production of heavy guns urgently required by the armed services at the outbreak of the Korean war. These were plant and staff house rehabilitation expenses totalling some $908,000, or $19,900 per gun; plant maintenance costs, covering partial compensation for the expense of retaining this highly specialized gun facility (which had little or no economic commercial use) during the period from 1945 to 1950, amounting to $35,074 per mount; and the pre-production and learning expenses amounting to $33,158 per gun. These figures represent general overhead costs of the first year's operations which could not properly be absorbed in the relatively small volume of production during that period, bearing in mind that the plant had to be re-activated and staffed from a virtual shutdown condition.

I should like to say a few words about these three items of expenditure to which the minister referred. He had mentioned one, the staff house rehabilitation expenses, amounting to some $908,000. In the other two items he mentioned he gave figures as costs per gun. I should like to summarize those as the actual amount of dollars spent. The three items are: for pre-production and learning, $1,338,436; the cost of plant and staff house rehabilitation, $908,453; and portion of settlement with contractor to compensate for maintaining this highly specialized facility, $1,525,428. That comes to a total amount of $3,772,317.

I should like to refer to another item in connection with this contract. The actual profit, which was based on the 7 per cent figure, on the United States guns was $16,295 per mount and with 180 guns that amounts to $2,933,100. The Canadian profit per gun, owing to extra parts and so on, and as a consequence of the 7 per cent figure being somewhat higher, was $18,259. There were 46 guns under this contract, and that comes to a total of $839,914. Adding those two profit figures together, we come to a total, on the 7 per cent profit basis, of $3,773,014.

I should like to refer back for a minute to these three items which the minister mentioned as being peculiar to the Canadian guns. That figure is $3,772,317. It may be only coincidence, but it looks as though they are very similar amounts, and in the calculation here one would almost suspect that the contract might well have been considered on a 14 per cent basis, then cutting out half of it to put against the Canadian guns and splitting the other on a 7 per cent basis.

I mentioned these three items and I should like to say a few words about the third item particularly, the portion of settlement with the contractor to compensate for maintaining this highly specialized facility. That amounts to $1,525,428. Possibly we should go back and review briefly the history of plant as it existed at that moment.

In 1945 Sorel Industries Limited was relieved of any further armament orders relating to the second world war. The company was advised not to keep open in anticipation of further government orders for guns. Then came 1950 and Korea. Negotiations between the Department of Defence Production and Sorel Industries were reopened. Actual figures were agreed upon in March 1955, and a 7 per cent profit figure, which totalled $3,773,014, was determined, and also the total for these three items of $3,772,317.

Between 1945 and 1950, I should say, Sorel Industries operated as any other commercial corporation doing peacetime business without any hopes of further armament orders. They had been led not to expect any more.

I should like to review briefly the wording of this third portion of the expenditure of $3,772,317. The portion of settlement with the contractor to compensate for maintaining this highly specialized facility cannot mean to me anything other than compensation for loss of profits in the period 1945 to 1950. This sum of $1,525,428 was on this one contract only. The total amount paid to Sorel Industries Limited under this pretext was based on $80,000 per month for three years and came to a grand total of $2,880,000.

I feel that the company was paid sufficient mark-up on their contracts when they received a 7 per cent profit plus pre-production and learning expenses of $1,338,000-odd and the cost of plant and staff house rehabilitation amounting to $908,453. I cannot understand why they should be reimbursed for losses during the period from 1945 to 1950 when they had been told that they would be entirely on their own and not to expect any further government contracts. I have never heard of a similar contract where such a clause was inserted to cover a period such as this when the company was on its own operating as a private commercial business, and to me, sir, it appears to be an unjustified handout to the company of $2,880,000 of public money.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: Has the minister nothing to say about the matter raised by the hon. member for Perth?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The matter was discussed in a committee of the house of which I think my hon. friend was a member and I cannot believe that there was any fact that was not placed before that committee. Sorel Industries have the only heavy gun plant that we have in the country. It was closed down in 1945. Very valuable machinery was available there and when it was quite obvious that we would require guns for the Korean crisis we of course were anxious to make an arrangement with Sorel that the machinery would be kept intact for that purpose.

The owners of Sorel Industries took the view that as they had a plant that had to be kept closed between wars and opened during war they were entitled to a profit based on that situation. We took the view that perhaps they had some claim not for any profit between wars but to recover some of the dead loss which must be incurred in keeping a plant like that idle and keeping the machinery up as must be done if we are going to have the machinery when it is needed.

A settlement was made on the basis that we took, I think, one-half the loss that had been incurred in keeping the plant closed and we told them that as regards any work they would do in war they would get the same rate of profit that any other contractor would get regardless of the fact that the plant is only called upon in wartime. That was a decision made after a good deal of consultation. My officers made the recommendation and after examination I concurred. I think it was a reasonable settlement of the cost of maintaining a highly specialized plant for a purpose that is essential in war but has no place in peacetime. If there is any mistake involved I will take full responsibility for it. If there is good judgment I think I am entitled to the credit.

Mr. Monteith: There is one point I should like to stress. The plant had been told that in the period following the end of the 1945 hostilities there would be no further armament orders and as a consequence I would feel that they should be on their own responsibility entirely as to what happened in that peacetime period up until further contracts were going to be negotiated.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is a privately owned plant and we did not agree to buy anything in 1945. We said that we did not expect any further call for heavy equipment and that as far as we were concerned they could close the plant. Nevertheless, as owners of a private plant that had to be used in the Korean emergency I think you will agree they were under no compulsion to make guns for us at 7.2 per cent or whatever the percentage was of the rate of profit. The arrangement was made to work out something that would be fair and so that we would not have to make any different profit arrangement for the use of that plant. After all, I am accused by the opposition of wielding a big stick on industry. In fact we negotiate fairly with industry and I think we did so in this case.

Mr. Monteith: Following that one step further, I have nothing to say about the minister's wielding a big stick but I do have this to say. The minister indicates that when these contracts were entered into in 1950 the company did not have to make these guns at a 7 per cent profit figure. If they had been losing money, as is indicated, for the previous five years I would think they would be most happy to take a contract at a 7 per cent profit figure. Their straight profit figure aside from rehabilitation expenses and so on was $3,773,000 on this one contract only and there were many subsequent contracts.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If my hon. friend had a plant worth $25 million by anyone's estimate and it was his plant and he could do what he liked with it I doubt very much if he would keep it idle for five years, stand the cost of maintaining a $25 million plant in idleness and then be willing to take a contract at 7·2 per cent. I think he would have said: "That highly specialized machinery is now valuable and I had better sell it and cash in on some of the value." After all, we must be practical about these things. This idea that somebody must be glad to do something depends on a little wider consideration than my hon. friend gives it.

Mr. Monteith: I do not agree with that. I think I am as practical minded as the minister. In fact, I think in some ways I am probably more so.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In a small way.

Mr. Monteith: I am more money conscious and I would query, as I am doing, this $2,880,000 which has been given to Sorel Industries and which appears to me to be a handout for loss of profits from 1945 to 1950 when they had been told to close up and expect no more government orders.

Mr. Zaplitny: Perhaps it would help to clarify the matter to some extent if the minister would tell the committee whether this company received any capital assistance either before or after 1945 and, if so, in what amounts and on what terms.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): They did obtain some capital assistance in 1951 for some specialized machinery required for the manufacture of the 3 inch 50 calibre gun. The capital assistance took the form of machinery that was purchased by the government, installed in the plant and remained the property of the government. It was no handout to the company. It was simply installing certain specialized machines there that were required to carry out the contract.

Mr. Zaplitny: Perhaps the minister could supplement his answer by giving us the figures as to the amount of capital assistance given and on what terms. He states that machinery was supplied and that it is still the property of the government. In the meantime the company has had the use of the machinery and it was instrumental in providing the profit to which my hon. friend refers. What consideration has the government received in return for supplying the machinery? Obviously if it has been used by the company since 1951 the government is certainly entitled to some consideration for having supplied the machinery. I should like to know in what amount and on what terms this machinery was supplied.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Machinery to the value of about $6·5 million was installed. I may say that is in addition to about $20 million odd of machinery that was in the plant prior to that time.

Mr. Zaplitny: Was that all done in 1951?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): 1951 and thereafter.

Mr. Zaplitny: The other part of my question was, on what basis was the $6·5 million of machinery supplied and on what terms? Was that simply a form of subsidy on the part of the government to the company or was there some consideration so far as the government is concerned? Is the company under any obligation so far as the $6·5 million is concerned or can that be considered a subsidy to that company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. It is not a subsidy at all. The government bought that machinery and it was installed in the plant. It is the property of the federal government. Whether any of it has been taken out as yet, I cannot say; but it will be taken out and probably installed in the arsenal at some time or other when we decide that we are not likely to need this machinery any more at Sorel. It is painted a different colour than the other machinery. It is listed in the government inventory and it belongs to the government.

Mr. Zaplitny: On the basis of that answer, there seems to be something still missing. The company has had the use of this machinery now for five years. It was installed in 1951.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Exclusively on government work.

Mr. Zaplitny: Yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The company is not allowed to use it on any private work.

Mr. Zaplitny: That is understood; but on government work for which they were paid a profit of approximately 17·2 per cent. On the basis of ordinary depreciation, if the government were to claim that machinery now, it would be worth approximately $2 million. What does the government get out of the companies having the use of their machinery for five years? Do they get no consideration at all? It is not enough to say that they were working on government contracts. They were working on contracts for which they were paid a profit, and I would say it was a very adequate profit at that. Does that mean that the government puts this machinery into a privately owned plant for five years where it depreciates, or is used for that period? The fact that the government owns it at the end of the five years does not mean much, because it will be practically worthless as time goes on. Does that mean that the amount of depreciation on that machinery over a five year period is a direct subsidy to the company? I can see it from no other point of view.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Considering the fact that all the work being done was work for which the department was paying, it was rather a subsidy to the government. It would have been an additional cost had the machinery been installed by the company. The depreciation would have been paid that way and the contractor's profit would have been that much greater. At least the depreciation allowance would have entered into the calculation of profits, as depreciation is an item we must allow as a cost. We followed the usual practice in work of this kind. The United States government are quite happy about the arrangements which were made there. They paid, of course, for most of the work in Sorel. They had the larger part of the production. The arrangement was one that seemed to them to be a reasonable arrangement, and, as far as I know, no one is complaining except my hon. friend. It seems to me that when this is threshed out in the committee and the evidence is given there—I was not present but everyone else was—if committees are going to be used to collect evidence to use against the minister in the house, I do not think committees serve a very useful purpose in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think that is why it would be useful. That is an argument for having the committees.

Mr. Fleming: That would be an argument for having the committees.

Mr. Zaplitny: I think that is a most unfair statement and in my opinion a most unparliamentary one. Certainly if a committee is set up in order to obtain information, and if the information indicates that either the minister or the government used poor judgment in connection with these contracts, the members of that committee or any other member of the house should not feel at all backward about using the information.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If the committee comes to the conclusion that there is something wrong or that there has been waste, surely it is the duty of the committee to make a finding of that kind and report it to the house. Then we will all be on even terms. But for individual members of the committee to go in there to pick up special facts and information that I cannot get without a good deal of study, and throw bits of information at me and expect me to know the answers, is a procedure which I think is a little bit unreasonable if they are used for that purpose. Why did not the hon. member raise the point in the committee and ask the committee to make a finding in this case?

Mr. Monteith: I should like to say that this information I had presented has come from the committee and it has come from the minister's deputy. We asked questions and we received answers. I am convinced that the information that I have presented is correct, as represented by those answers.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That may be so. But if there was something wrong, why did my hon. friend not move that the committee find that there was waste of government funds and move that a report be presented to that effect? Did my hon. friend move that in committee?

Mr. Monteith: I would suggest that the committee tell the chairman of the committee to call a meeting of the committee and report.

Mr. Harkness: The minister seems to have a most peculiar idea of the functions of a committee. He seems to think it should be for the purpose of white-washing the minister and the government and that, if it does not do so, it has been a failure as a committee.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; quite the reverse. If the committee finds that there is something wrong, it is the duty of the committee so to report to the house.

Mr. Harkness: The committee so far has had no opportunity to report. We have not had a meeting since the meeting we had in connection with this gun contract, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Dickey: There have been no requests for a meeting of the committee from you or from anybody else.

Mr. Harkness: To come back to this same matter, the minister says that we must be practical about these things. I agree that we must be practical. But in this particular case it seems to me we have an example of being impractical and improvident as far as the government is concerned. It is a very peculiar situation, I think, when you have a plant which the government told Sorel Industries that they should turn over to some civilian use or not keep in operation as a gun plant in 1945. As a matter of fact, that was the evidence we had in the committee. The evidence also was to the effect, or at least there was an intimation, that Sorel Industries attempted to put some sort of civilian enterprise into it but failed to do so. Then in 1950, when there just happens to be some opportunity to manufacture guns, the government then goes to this plant and agrees to pay it a total of $2,880,000 to cover the costs of that business or of that plant standing idle for several years. The thing is just a ridiculous situation. As far as I can see, the government or the taxpayer had no responsibility whatever to reimburse Sorel Industries for whatever loss they may have experienced through having that plant sitting there and maintaining it for five years. Undoubtedly Sorel Industries made plenty of profit out of the plant during the war to begin with. I do not know who built the plant. Probably the government advanced the money or a good part of it for the building of that plant to start with.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is not true. The plant was built as a privately owned plant.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, but did they not get capital assistance and so on?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Later on they did.

Mr. Harkness: Yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But in the end they bought from the government all the assets that the government had there and paid for them in cash.

Mr. Harkness: In any event you have a plant there which had got capital assistance with respect to the building of it in the first instance; and they made sufficient profit out of what they manufactured in it during the war to pay for it. Then five years later the taxpayer of this country is called upon to pay $2,880,000 to this company because the plant has been sitting there for five years after they had been told not to keep it sitting there as far as expecting any future contracts is concerned. The thing is just a ridiculous situation. As I say, I think it is an extremely improvident deal as far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned.

In addition to that, this company got assistance of $908,000 for the cost of rehabilitating shops and staff houses and it got an amount of $1,338,000 approximately for the cost of making ready to resume production after this long shut-down, including cost of recruiting this labour, training this labour and so on. Therefore, all told, that company is being paid in cash over $5 million in order to make these guns. Now they are in a position that they are making certain other guns, I believe they are 105 millimeter guns.

But over $5 million in cash was being paid. In addition to that, as was indicated by the answers given to the hon. member for Dawson, the government has a great deal of machinery, upwards of $2 million worth, in there which they are making use of. In other words, the company has had extremely large grants and assistance from the dominion government.

In addition to that, they are given seven per cent profit on what they produced in that time. As a result of this information that we were given, it is very easy to see why the Canadian naval guns which were secured from them cost $112,000 each more than did the guns which went to the United States. Naturally the United States government would not put up money for payments of that kind because it is so unreasonable. I imagine that the United States government would never agree to making a share of these payments aggregating all told, as I say, over $3,770,000 on this one particular contract, plus another $1,300,000 so far as future contracts are concerned, and at the same time making loans on machinery.

In addition to these particular payments to cover the cost of the plant sitting idle from 1940 to 1945, I should like to know something more about this business of the cost of rehabilitating the shops and staff houses, including considerable plant machinery. When we were considering this matter in committee I asked how much of that was for rehabilitating these staff houses. I was told it was something in excess of $200,000. I said at that time, and I will say again, that it seems to me there is absolutely no justification for the taxpayers' money being used to rehabilitate or repair certain staff houses which are used by employees hired by this company. Questions were asked as to how much rent they paid for these houses or whether they paid any rent for them. It developed that they were sort of single men's dwelling places more than anything else; in other words, something in the nature of barracks.

We find that what these people paid for these staff houses was as follows: In 1951—this is for room and board—they paid $16 per week; 1952, $17; 1953, $16; 1954, $18. In other words, this $200,000 was given as a further subsidy to this company which enabled them to house their employees at much less cost than would have been the case if they had had to compete with other people building housing at commercial rates. In connection with this housing, I should like to ask the minister who built those houses in the first place? When were they built and who paid for them? I should like to know, in other words, whether the government paid for those houses to begin with?

Mr. Cannon: Before the minister answers I think I ought to set the record straight concerning some of the remarks the hon. member for Calgary North has just made. In my capacity as chairman of the public accounts committee I think I should point out to the house that when my hon. friend said he was surprised at the difference of $112,000 in the case of the United States guns—

Mr. Harkness: I did not say I was surprised.

Mr. Cannon: You said you did not like it.

Mr. Harkness: I do not like it, but I am not surprised.

Mr. Cannon: In any case, you certainly criticized it, and gave the impression that it had not been explained. I think the house should know that the difference in cost between these guns was analysed, was placed before the committee and was examined in detail by the committee. I think we are entitled to take it for granted that the committee was satisfied, because the draft report of the committee has been submitted to the steering committee of the public accounts committee, and has been approved by the steering committee of which the hon. member for Calgary North is a member; and the report does not blame the government in any way for any of the matters that were looked into and that came to light in connection with this contract for the guns.

It was also said that we have not had a meeting of the committee lately. As I said before, we had a meeting of the steering committee the day before yesterday and a meeting of the committtee is called for tomorrow to have the whole committee approve a report that has already been approved by the steering committee. I felt it was necessary to put these facts on the record.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I suspected that, but I did not know it.

Mr. Harkness: In reply to that I should like to say that we asked to have this particular gun contract investigated by the public accounts committee not very long after the committee had started to sit, I think at about the second or third meeting, as the result of one of the paragraphs in the Auditor General's report. This was some months ago. Eventually, after a long delay during which there had not been any meetings of the public accounts committee and after I got in contact with the chairman of the committee, we finally had a meeting on July 5, at which we had evidence in connection with this particular contract. The presumption was, when we left that meeting, that we were going to have a further meeting, which has never been held. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Dickey: It was never asked for.

Mr. Harkness: It was asked for at that time. We went away with the presumption we were going to have a further meeting. In any event, certain questions which were—

Mr. Cannon: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Harkness: —asked have never been answered.

Mr. Cannon: Will you show me in the record of the committee where you asked for another meeting? You never did ask for another meeting. While I am putting the record straight, may I say that when you or any other member of the committee asked for a meeting it was always granted.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am afraid that perhaps through my own fault we are getting this committee into a situation which should not be allowed. The subject which was brought up for discussion by the hon. member for Perth, of course, is a legitimate subject for discussion under defence production estimates. The Department of Defence Production estimates were not referred to a committee; therefore the fact that a discussion took place in the public accounts committee does not in any way prevent this committee now from discussing it.

The agenda committee of the public accounts committee has not submitted its report, and a discussion of its proceedings at this time is definitely out of order. I think it is obvious that I permitted the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine and the hon. member for Calgary North to go further than I should. We are now in the process of discussing not the estimates of the Department of Defence Production, but the conduct of the committee on public accounts. I hope the statements made by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine and the hon. member for Calgary North have been made and replied to by each of them to such an extent that we may consider the matter closed.

I am not ruling out of order any discussion about a particular gun contract which was let by defence production, but I am going to ask hon. members not to discuss the conduct of the committee on public accounts or its agenda committee until such time as it makes its report, which I believe is not very far off.

Mr. Harkness: I should like, if I may, to say that at the very end of this day's proceedings to which the chairman of the public accounts committee, the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine, referred, and after we had left these questions which you yourself will remember had not been answered, the chairman said:

> We shall adjourn to the call of the chair. It remains for me to thank Mr. Golden and his officials who have been called to give us this information.
> Now, I will get the required information from the department concerned, namely—

And so on. I believe the only thing anyone could take from that was that there was a further meeting of the committee to be held in order to receive those answers and get this further information.

Mr. Dickey: That is simply the normal procedure for the chairman of any committee.

Mr. Cannon: Not that another meeting would be held to get further information, but that another meeting would be held to draft our report and finish it.

Mr. Harkness: I think no one could take any other meaning from it than the one I took, that we would have a further meeting.

Mr. Dickey: You are the only one who did.

Mr. Harkness: I wonder if the minister could answer those questions?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know; I do not remember. These staff houses go back to 1940, and I do not know who paid for them then. I think probably they were built by the owners of the plant, which at that time was Sorel Industries Limited. We did not contribute any capital assistance, I think, until well into the end of 1940. But that is going back a long time and I would have to search the records. My hon. friend would not expect me to remember that.

The fact of the matter is that this plant built for the government over $100 million worth of guns. They were paid for the work, as an over-all profit, 7·2 per cent. If you add in the costs that have been given here the profit was 10 per cent. If anyone can find any guns in the United States or in England that can be built for a profit less than the over-all cost plus 10 per cent, I would be very interested.

Mr. Harkness: The profit would have been 14 per cent if you added in these other items.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, what are they? What do the other items amount to?

Mr. Harkness: On this particular contract the other items amount to $3,772,316?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Harkness: Then there is this further amount of $1,300,000 odd which they have been given in addition?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That was cost; it was not profit.

Mr. Harkness: These were not costs. This was the amount which was paid to them just because they had the plant sitting there for the five years from 1945 to 1950 to begin with, and it is the cost of rehabilitating those staff houses and other things along that line, which I can see no justification for the Canadian taxpayer paying. It was the cost, as it is outlined here, of making ready to resume production. Therefore in the three items the total is $3,772,000 odd. If you add that to the 7·2 per cent profit they were given it brings it up to a profit of more than 14 per cent.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The cost of preparing a plant for production is preproduction cost; it is not a profit. It is paying for the cost of assembling and training the men. How you can figure that to be a profit I am sure I do not know. My hon. friend is used to army life and I am used to production, but I never heard of production costs of that kind described as profit.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It sounds like gravy.

Mr. Harkness: As far as that particular item is concerned, or part of it, you cannot consider it as profit; but I think there is no doubt at all that this $1,500,000 odd is just an extra profit and, as a matter of fact, I think that was brought out in evidence before the committee.

Mr. Dickey: Not at all.

Mr. Harkness: Really what it came down to was an extra profit. Similarly, this amount which was given for rehabilitating staff houses cannot be looked upon as anything else but an extra profit. It is just a way of concealing profits, as far as I can see.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who got the profit?

Mr. Harkness: So far as all these items are concerned—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who got the profit in rehabilitating the staff houses?

Mr. Harkness: Sorel Industries got it, of course. Who else got it? The money was paid over to them. If it had not been paid by the taxpayer they would have had to pay it themselves. As far as this $1,500,000 is concerned that they were given, they were given it just because they had the plant sitting there. They had failed, after having been told by the government to keep the plant sitting waiting for more munitions orders, and so forth, to establish any ordinary industry in it; and as a result of their failure to establish ordinary industry in it, which most other people were able to do, they were then paid $2,880,000 in 1950 and subsequently because they had failed to establish any ordinary industry in that plant.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I was not a member of the public accounts committee and therefore do not intend to debate the proceedings in that committee; but I am interested in a contradiction in statements when I find it.

This afternoon the minister has expounded a most interesting theory as to the purposes which committees of this house are intended and are not intended to serve. He has said that if committees of this house are to be used to gather together information to be brought into this house and used to embarrass the minister on his estimates, then we should take another look at these committees, in effect, and decide whether we ought to have committees at all because it is a wrong use to make of them. I am not surprised at a statement like that coming from the minister, because it is quite in keeping with his whole political philosophy.

But here again this afternoon we have an interesting example of the application of the minister's political theory in that regard. This afternoon the minister was asked for an explanation of a figure which aggregates $2,880,000 which was paid as a profit, and is figured as a profit. The explanation given by the minister to this committee this afternoon was that this was paid to Sorel Industries Limited because that company was asked to keep its plant in idleness but available for military production if required. Now, the basis on which the minister sought to establish the payment—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is not true. Your statement is not correct.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, that is what the minister said, if the record stands as the minister made his statement this afternoon. If that were the fact—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is not the fact.

Mr. Fleming: —the payment made to the company, of course, would be justified if they were asked to keep their plant in idleness and not to put it to some other use.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The evidence is just the opposite.

Mr. Fleming: Payments made to them for that purpose would be proper if the payments were reasonable.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend is lost.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, are we going to have any order and is the minister going to respect the rules of the house, or is he going to break them all? Just sit down.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who was it that was thrown out of this house?

Mr. Fleming: The minister does not pay any attention to the rules of this house. He is at it again.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who was it that was thrown out?

Mr. Fleming: I said if that plant had been kept in idleness at the request of the government in order that the plant and its machinery would be available to be thrown into war production, or defence production, when required, it would be only proper that the company should be compensated for it, if the amount was reasonable, and that is the basis —I call upon hon. members to witness what was said—that is the basis upon which the minister this afternoon sought to justify the payment.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Fleming: What is the fact?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On a question of privilege—

Mr. Fleming: The fact is, as we have been informed—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No such statement was made, and the record will not show it. My hon. friend can repeat it as loudly as he likes, and let him accuse me of breaking the rules.

Mr. Fleming: It is perfectly typical for the minister to try to smuggle in a speech.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps we ought to have a little order. The Minister of Defence Production rose on a point of order which actually was, I take it, for the purpose of denying the accuracy of a statement made by the hon. member for Eglinton. I would suggest that the hon. member for Eglinton complete his remarks and the Minister of Defence Production will then have ample opportunity to reply.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask you a question, sir? Are we still on item No. 1?

The Deputy Chairman: We are still on item No. 85, which is departmental administration.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What are we going to do when we get to item No. 2, which is the item under which this matter could more properly be discussed?

The Deputy Chairman: I think there is a lot of merit in that, but I just do not see how I can start at ten minutes to four to say that this discussion should have been on another item when it has been going on since about 2.30. Perhaps it would suit everybody's convenience and promote efficiency if we tried to complete discussion of this particular incident on this particular item, as it is now perhaps nearly completed anyway. The hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Harkness: On the point of order the minister brought up, I would have been glad to discuss this matter on item 87, but I reckoned on item 87 it would have been out of order and the minister would have said it was out of order.

The Deputy Chairman: I point out to the hon. member for Calgary North that we have decided the discussion is to continue on item 85. The hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the only basis upon which the minister could have justified this payment of $2,880,000 to this company as profit would have been if the company had been asked to retain that plant and hold it available for government use. On no other basis could any such payment be justified by the minister, or by anyone else. But what do we find to be the fact? The fact, as disclosed by his deputy minister, is that the company was advised in 1945 not to keep the plant open. The statement was quite clear that the company was told in 1945, "don't look to the government. We are not telling you to hold that plant available to us; on the contrary, we are telling you not to keep your plant open".

Therefore the company evidently quite clearly was told at that time, "So far as that plant is concerned, you are on your own; you are warned. Do the best you can with it, but don't look to the government". But five years later what happens? At that time the government required the production of this plant for war purposes, and it was not sufficient at that time to provide the company with the cost of opening up the plant. No one would question proper costs of starting the plant up again for war production.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member for Calgary North does.

Mr. Fleming: No; that is a very different thing. He is not challenging the minister's inclusion in these costs of production of things that were quite properly so classified. I am just stating the facts. It is perfectly clear. The minister can not come back and change what has been said already in this discussion this afternoon by the hon. member for Calgary North.

But, sir, here we are dealing with a payment the government makes as profit, retroactive for the whole period of five years from 1945 to 1950, a period during which this company has been warned not to look to the government, that they were on their own. They had been told not to keep their plant open; yet when 1950 comes the government is not satisfied just to pay a fair amount to this company to get the plant in operation at that point. They say in an outburst of extraordinary generosity—perhaps not too extraordinary for this government, but an outburst that most taxpayers in this country would regard as extremely extraordinary and quite indefensible—to that plant, "Well, we will go back and say that we told you to look after yourselves for this five-year period, but we will now hand out $2,880,000 of the money of the taxpayers of this country as a payment equivalent to the profit you would have made if you kept that plant open."

The government not only did not ask them to keep the plant open but told them at that time not to keep the plant open for war purposes or for government purposes; yet here is a juicy sum of $2,880,000 handed out in 1950, five years later, apparently to give this company something that was not earned. Now, the minister drove some kind of bargain with this company—

Mr. Dickey: A tough bargain.

Mr. Fleming: —and the terms of the bargain included a payment which in my submission, based on what we have heard here this afternoon was a highly improper and unjustifiable payment, a payment made retroactively to give this company profit for five years for this plant. Whether it was sitting idle or whether it was in use does not matter, because it was not in use for the government and it was not kept in idleness at the government's request. Here we have the statement of the deputy minister of this department that this company was told in 1945 not to keep the plant open; yet they were paid $2,880,000 in 1950 for the consideration that they kept the plant open.

We have had, I think, a very telling example this afternoon of the benefit of having committees of this house do a little scouting, and particularly the benefit of having a committee do some scouting around this department.

When I spoke on June 29 in the opening discussion on the estimates of this department I urged that there should be a review in a select committee of the operations of this department. This department has now been in existence for the last five or six years. In the course of that period it has expended $6 billion, and there has not been a select committee which has had an opportunity to make a thorough study of it. It is true that the committee—

Mr. Dickey: Three sessions, three committees.

Mr. Fleming: No, no. Again the parliamentary assistant is just repeating the same erroneous statements he made on June 29. The fact is that we had a committee on defence expenditure. The first year that committee met was before this department got set up and in operation.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Fleming: That is what I said on June 29. The two later years that committee sat no one can pretend it did more than a bit of scratching on the surface. What we have seen this afternoon, sir, ought to be abundant evidence to satisfy any reasonable person that what is needed is a very detailed review of the administration of this department and of some of the contracts that have been entered into.

At the beginning of this session the Leader of the Opposition asked that the estimates of various departments should be sent to the estimates committee. Those that were sent were of the government's choosing, and we objected to their choosing. We asked that one of the departments at least of this minister should go to that committee.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You asked for trade and commerce.

Mr. Fleming: Yes, and we would have been glad to have it. It is one for which we asked.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You did not say so.

Mr. Fleming: We were turned down.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You did not say so.

Mr. Fleming: We were turned down; the government would not accept any request from the opposition as to any department. They made the selection, and it will be left to the hon. members of this house and the public to ask themselves why it is the government wants to pick and choose what departments are to have their estimates and their administration reviewed in detail by committees.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it just so happens this afternoon that because another committee of the house, the public accounts committee, happened to have an opportunity to do a little looking into this particular contract and the juicy payments that were made to this company in connection with it, that we have had information from the deputy minister of that department to correct the statements made here by the minister this afternoon.

If that information had not been available to us through the committee I suppose we would have been in the position of having statements from the minister to justify this payment on the ground that this plant had been kept in idleness at the request of or for the benefit of the government. We know that is not the fact, and there is no justification for this payment; and I say all credit to those members of the public accounts committee who obtained the facts there and to the hon. member for Perth and the hon. member for Calgary North who have brought this information to the attention of this committee this afternoon and have established that there was a payment of $2,880,000 which, as the hon. member for Perth said this afternoon, was just a handout.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, Mr. Chairman, I have heard my hon. friend distort other situations—

Mr. Fleming: No, you never have.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —but I think the distortion of this particular matter—

Mr. Fleming: You have never heard me distort the truth; not if you recognize the truth.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —excels his usual distortion.

Mr. Dickey: You hand it out; just take it for a change.

An hon. Member: Sit still for a while.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member stated that I said in 1945 we asked the company to keep this plant ready for operation. The fact is exactly the opposite.

Mr. Fleming: We know that now.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That was said in the committee and I have said it in the house. I knew it then and of course I know it now.

Mr. Fleming: Why did you try to justify the payment?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member is trying to sneak in an extra speech just as he accused me of doing.

Mr. Fleming: I asked a question.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You are the hon. member who was thrown out of the house for butting in.

Mr. Fleming: And you are the man who should be thrown out today—

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Get the facts.

Mr. Fleming: —and when I was very improperly suspended on May 25—

Some hon. Members: Ha, ha.

Mr. Fleming: —by the vote of the majority of this house—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —here is the minister who should have been thrown out if he were not a member of the majority.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I remind the committee that we are discussing, or should be, the estimates of the Department of Defence Production and that incidents which have been previously decided by actions of the house are closed so far as this discussion is concerned. May I say to the hon. member for Eglinton, as I said to the minister a short time ago, that the Minister of Defence Production should be permitted to make his statement and an opportunity will be given for reply.

Mr. Dickey: The rules do not apply to the hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The facts of the matter are that in 1945 we had to decide what facilities outside of those owned by the government we wished to keep active. In the matter of Sorel we looked into that, and it was a very costly affair to keep that plant active. We notified the company that we did not intend to do so. The company were told that they were free to dispose of the equipment and turn the plant over to civilian use. Well, they chose not to do so. The matter was considered and I know they had offers for some of the equipment. Some of the equipment was specialized and some of it was standard, and it was all very valuable. I know they received an offer from another government for the equipment. They came to see me and on my advice they did not accept the offer.

However, we had no obligations to the plant and we would have had no obligations had we never required the plant again. In other words, if the Korean situation had not come along and if we had not been again required to build heavy guns in quantity in this country we had no obligation to the plant.

Then we found in 1950—1949, I guess it was—that we did have a requirement for the plant.

Mr. Fleming: 1950.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We did have it; and we naturally went to the company and said, "We need your plant; what arrangements can we make?"

Mr. Diefenbaker: Were there any other companies in the same position that received the same type of reward?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Here is another man. He is the hit and run artist. It is not time for him to hit yet. He had better listen for a while.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wondered whether Sorel Industries was the favourite company.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Just let me tell you the story. You can make your speech later, after you have picked up a few facts. Your arms will wave—

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are trying to get the truth.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You don't worry about the truth. However, we came to this point in 1949 or 1950. I do not remember when we decided that we were going to need the plant. However, we said, "We need your plant." They brought us a bill that showed us the cost of maintaining that plant without orders for the intervening period, and they said, "What about that? We shall require a special profit if the plant is to be used for a two or three-year period. If you want to make a long-term arrangement for the use of our plant that is one thing, but do you intend to give any undertaking that at the time these contracts are filled there will be a future for the plant?" We said, "No, we do not think that as part of the defence effort we should undertake to carry as part of our long-range equipment a plant of that size. We want to make an arrangement for the work incidental to the Korean emergency, and we want no continuing obligations."

A good deal of negotiation went on. My officers are familiar with it because they carried on the bulk of it. It was decided that we would pay a portion of the cost that had been involved in carrying on the plant. Incidentally, that was not a profit; it was made up of expenditures that had been made by the company, as indicated by their books. An arrangement was made that having given some compensation for that, we would treat them on the same basis as any other contractor and pay the costs ordinarily allowed for the work performed according to our own formulas of allowable profit.

We had then in hand an order for 48 guns for the Canadian navy. You may say it was not worth starting up a plant of that size to make 48 three-inch 50 calibre guns. Nevertheless it was the policy at that time to make sure that Canada was self-sufficient as far as naval production was concerned, and as part of that program the navy wished to have those guns manufactured in Canada.

We started up the plant on the theory that we were going to make 48 guns for the Canadian navy. The starting up expenses were based on the Canadian program. Later on we were able to obtain a share of the United States program for the same guns, and from then on we were able to divide our costs over a much greater base. In the end, I think, the situation worked out quite well. We finished up the United States guns to their complete satisfaction. They shared in the costs from the time their contract was entered in the books, and their participation very greatly lowered the overhead on the Canadian part of the project.

The two guns were not exactly the same. The Americans sent up a breech-block made by a special contractor in the United States who made the breech-blocks for all the United States guns. Our own navy wanted their own breech-block, and we had to tool up in Canada to make that breech-block. This accounted for some part of the difference in costs—not a great part, but that was the main physical difference between the two guns.

What we did there is what we would have done had we used a similar plant anywhere else. You say that we put in the bunkhouses. Certainly; when we use a plant that had not been active or had been active on a lower scale we give capital assistance, as we did in this case, to put the facilities in shape to carry out the work that we have for the plant. There was nothing exceptional about the Sorel situation, except that we picked up part of the cost of maintaining the plant and the equipment in the plant in idleness for the intervening five years.

My hon. friend from Eglinton said that it would have been quite all right if we had decided to do that in 1945. We decided not to do it then, but that does not alter the equity of the situation. When we found that we would profit by the fact that the plant had been kept intact, the equity of the situation, and the desirability of putting the plant on all fours with every other plant that had been in use in the interval, as far as the entitlement to profit was concerned, was considered by my officers and myself as a sufficient reason for making a settlement on part of the out of pocket costs of maintaining the plant over the intervening five years.

Mr. Fleming: Now will the minister answer a question? Does the minister confirm the fact that this company was told in 1945 not to keep its plant open as far as the government was concerned?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly; I told them myself and I have never represented otherwise. My hon. friend is the only one that has represented that I said otherwise. I do not know whether I wrote them a letter advising them to that effect, but I told them in any event.

Mr. Fleming: The statement of the minister just now completely obliterates any justification for the payment of $2,800,000.

An hon. Member: In your opinion.

Mr. Harkness: The minister, in replying to the hon. member for Eglinton, I think was attempting to represent me as saying something which was not just what I did say. What I was trying to get at here, as far as these two items are concerned, the cost of rehabilitating the shops and staff houses and the cost of making ready, were the amounts which were used for various things. I had said that I could see no justification whatever for the Canadian taxpayer paying $200,000-odd for rehabilitation of these staff houses. I should like the minister to give us a breakdown of this item, and I should like a breakdown of the other item later. I should like a breakdown first of the item $908,450 for rehabilitating shops and staff houses.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Do you expect me to give it from memory? This is only item 1.

Mr. Harkness: The minister has his officials here, and possibly they could provide that for him. Perhaps he is not showing enough confidence in them.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): They tell me they do not have it. However, we shall get it as soon as we can and supply it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Zaplitny: The minister gave some figures on the Sorel contract which are interesting. If I heard him correctly, he stated that this company has manufactured approximately $100 million worth of guns over a period of time—I did not catch the period—and for that they received a profit of approximately $7·2 million or 7·2 per cent. Let us take the period from 1940 to the present time. What was the total amount of capital assistance provided to this company?

The minister also stated in his address that a certain amount of that capital assistance had been purchased by the company over a period of time. Perhaps he could give us the figures as to what portion of that capital assistance had been purchased by the company, and at what discount price. Naturally they did not pay the value of the equipment as at the time when it was put in; they must have received a certain discount.

Would he also at the same time tell us the balance of the capital assistance still outstanding, and the book value of that capital assistance at the present time? In other words' what I am trying to get at is this.

I have stated, and I think correctly, that over and above the 7·2 per cent profit admitted by the minister there is a very substantial element of subsidy to this company through this capital assistance, because the minister has already stated that the government provided certain machinery and equipment to be used in fulfilling these contracts. The company has received a profit for the fulfilling of the contracts. Therefore the use of that equipment, for which the government apparently received no other consideration, cannot be considered anything else but a subsidy over and above the 7·2 per cent profit. If that is not the case, the taxpayers of Canada should know what amount of subsidy goes along with that 7·2 per cent profit, so we will know actually what we are paying for this $100 million worth of guns.

Mr. Enfield: Before the minister answers the question, I too was rather interested in the basis on which machinery or other equipment supplied as capital assistance was then sold to or taken over by the private industry concerned. I think the hon. member for Dauphin could have found some of his questions answered if he had read the annual report of the department. On page 27 it has this to say in this connection:

> In line with the policy of encouraging private investment in defence production facilities, a number of important assets have been sold to the management companies. This is particularly true in the aircraft field where, by the end of 1955, sales of crown assets had been made to 13 companies. During 1955, negotiations were also concluded for the sale of the plant in Toronto housing the crown-owned facility for production of naval propulsion turbines.

It seems to me the picture is that if machinery and equipment are supplied to an industry then, when you make your contract for the production of goods with that industry, the consideration for the machinery is reflected in the price you are going to pay for the production of the goods. On this basis the machinery would remain as an asset in the hands of the crown. The title would remain in the crown. Then you get to the point: All right, what price do you receive when the asset is sold to the company? I think it would be very interesting to know how we fare financially at such time as the equipment is sold and turned over to the private industry concerned.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I doubt if we can go back to 1940. The department we are discussing was brought into being in 1950. I think the department of munitions and supply was wound up around 1948, and where the records are now I do not know. I suppose they may be in the records building. In any event these transactions had the blessing of continuous committees of this house for several years and the records were disposed of with the approval of the government agency that decides these matters. I am willing to go back as far as the records of the department will permit, but I do not think I can go back to 1940.

Mr. Zaplitny: Go back to 1950 at least.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I can do that. I shall be glad to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the minister a while ago by way of an interruption while he was speaking whether or not any other company had received the same treatment as Sorel Industries; a reward, as it were, for the period it was unoccupied and its facilities unused. Is there any other company that at the time of the Korean crisis or since has received a payment similar to the one we are discussing at the moment?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There was no similar situation. In the case of the aircraft plant we had spent a good deal of money to keep them alive and pay the carrying costs. As I recall, the only important war plant used in the last war that was allowed to close down was Sorel Industries. We decided it was too big an obligation to take on with no certainty that the plant would ever be required again, even in the case of war.

Mr. Dufresne: I think I heard the minister say a few minutes ago that in 1945 the government had left some machinery in Sorel Industries. Can the minister tell us what Sorel Industries paid for the machinery left there in 1945, and also what was the original value of that machinery?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The machinery was paid for by Sorel. We left no machinery there. Sorel bought the assets of the plant on the usual formula which is the cost of the machinery less straight line depreciation at the normal rate provided for in the income tax regulations for the period in which the machinery was used. The machinery was bought on that basis, and when the plant was closed down in 1945 we had no assets in the plant and no interest in it.

Mr. Michener: On the revenue side of the accounts there are some items which I should like to ask the minister to explain to the committee. They all relate to a transaction with Algoma Steel Corporation Limited. In the public accounts for 1952 there is reference at page DD-9 and page DD-12 to an Algoma Steel credit of $239,312.93 which is explained in these terms:

> The credit in this account represents the final principal payment by the corporation in accordance with the terms of the agreement. This loan bears no interest.

Then in the 1953 public accounts at page DD-22 there is an amount of $4,401,652.26 shown under the heading, "Balances receivable under agreements of sale." In 1954 there are further entries of receipts on that account of $4 million-odd with this explanation as found at page DD-11:

> This represents the balance due for property disposed of under lease-purchase option agreement which terminates April 30, 1977, and provides for annual instalments, plus interest at 3 per cent per annum on the balance as follows . . .

Then there is a statement of the interest. Then in the public accounts for 1955 there is a final entry of receipts in this transaction. At page DD-7 under details of ordinary revenue there is an item, return on investment, Algoma Steel Corporation Limited, $123,406. That appears to be a long-range transaction, and if the minister can I wish he would give us the particulars.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It goes back to world war II. Certain facilities were put in Algoma as capital assistance facilities that Algoma did not feel justified in supplying themselves. They were supplied as capital assistance, and at the end of the war the assets were purchased by Algoma on the usual formula, cost less straight line depreciation, and the terms of the agreement obviously gave them some time to pay. Five to seven years was common, and I presume the payments referred to are payments made under these old agreements. Whether or not I can find them I do not know. The world war I stuff is not so accessible but I will see what I can find.

Mr. Michener: This is world war II.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): World war II, I should say.

Mr. Michener: Does the minister have the total cost of these facilities and the payments that were to be made by Algoma in purchasing the assets under the formula of depreciation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I cannot promise. I will get all the information I can. My hon. friend is now going back long before the department under discussion was established. The records of the old department have been filed away, but we will endeavour to get them and we will find out if we can.

Mr. Michener: I thank the minister, but let me point out that this is current business.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Not current business for the department. When sales are made and agreements are made they become debts to the crown. The Department of Finance and the Auditor General would know about them, but the Department of Defence Production does not collect these accounts.

Mr. Michener: I am not sure how the departments divide these matters, but in the public accounts these are details under the heading, "Department of Defence Production". I assume they are matters which the Department of Defence Production keeps under its eye in order to see that the proper payments are received. If the minister could get that information, I would appreciate it. I refer to the total cost of these assets or facilities. I assume they were for the purpose of providing war materials at the time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will get it if I can. I cannot promise to do so, but I will get it if I can.

Mr. Michener: And also the prices which were paid. I have one other question along the same line. Can the minister indicate to the committee any current transactions between the department and Algoma Steel Corporation Limited.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not recall any outstanding transaction, but I will be glad to look the matter up.

Mr. Michener: Other than this one transaction?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That was a sale of equipment installed during the second world war. I know of no similar transaction arising out of the Korean war, but I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Michener: Will the minister ascertain whether the department does any current business with Algoma Steel Corporation Limited and, if so, what sort of contracts are at present being negotiated with this company.

Mr. Zaplitny: Before we proceed further, I wonder whether the minister intended to supply at this time the information for which I asked, or whether he intended to leave the matter to a future date. I refer to information with respect to capital assistance to Sorel Industries.

While I am on my feet, I should also like to add that I hope the answer on the matter of depreciation will be a little more specific than the reply he gave my friend the hon. member for Quebec West because, in reply to him, he stated that the rate of depreciation was that allowed and provided for by the income tax regulations. As the minister well knows, all that the income tax regulations provide for is a maximum. They do not specify the rate of depreciation on any particular article. They specify the maximum that can be charged. In this case it would probably be 20 per cent.

In giving the information I hope he will specify what the rate of depreciation was and not simply refer to the income tax regulations, because they do not specify the rate. They only provide for a maximum. I hope the minister will specify what the rate was, unless it is the case that the maximum is always charged. If that is the case I hope that information will be forthcoming.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As I understand it the rate the Department of National Revenue allows on machinery is 10 per cent per annum. That is under straight line depreciation. There are two methods. One is 20 per cent diminishing balance. But in transactions for the department we allow depreciation at 10 per cent per annum on a straight line basis. It is more favourable for the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like the minister to tell us what is the investment of the people of Canada and the interest they have in Sorel Industries. Is it as set out at page DD-21 of the public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1955? Is that amount $15,799,000?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, we have not any such investment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the nature of these figures setting out "Investment at March 31, 1955" with respect to Sorel Industries Limited?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know what the significance is, I am sure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That figure is to be found at page DD-21 of the public accounts.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I think my hon. friend includes the arsenal plant at Longueuil which we own.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is "Investment in Plant and Equipment" and various industries across Canada are shown. Included is Sorel Industries Limited, and the figure shown is $15,799,000.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have the summary of capital assistance with contractors, March 31, 1956.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the total amount of capital assistance at the time to Sorel Industries?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The figure is $6,580,609.91.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is since when?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is on March 31, 1956.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This report is for the year ending, March 31, 1955, and it sets out that the total amount of investment in Sorel Industries is $15,108,024. During the year it increased by $931,000, and there were transfers of capital assets and the investment in this country is $15,799,000. I just wondered whether or not that referred to the answer to the question that was asked a while ago by the hon. member for Dauphin, and represented the amount the government of Canada has advanced to this company through the years.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, that would not be the answer. He was asking what the investment in the company was from 1940. As I say, the investment up to 1945 was liquidated by a payment from the company to the government which transferred all the property to them. I am not just clear. Sorel Industries expanded their capacity by taking over a plant that the government owns in Longueuil, outside of Montreal. The only thing I can think of is that there must have been a combination of these two plants. But of course Longueuil is owned by the government and always was owned by the government, and all the equipment in it is owned by the government. I will send this sheet across to my hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would just turn to the public accounts and give me an explanation of what this $15 million figure is, I should be obliged. It is to be found at page DD-25.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am sorry, but I have not a copy of the public accounts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will send this copy over to the minister.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The Longueuil plant under this account is charged to Sorel. That is, it is put in the keeping of Sorel; it is turned over to Sorel for operation. Nevertheless the Longueuil plant and everything in it is owned by the government and will continue to be owned by the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister's figures a moment ago were some $6 million as the amount as of March 31, 1956?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How does he account for the difference? What has happened during the last year whereby the indebtedness of Sorel has been reduced from $15 million to $6 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was never an indebtedness. This is simply a list of crown assets charged to the various companies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That would be indebtedness, would it not?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is not a debt. It just shows that certain government capital assets are in their keeping. It is not a debt until the government sells the assets to them. If the government owns it, it can take it out. It is not a debt. That Longueuil plant in the figure quoted from public accounts was obviously charged to Sorel Industries Limited.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How much was the value of the Longueuil plant charged to Sorel Industries?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It must have been the difference; $9 million, probably.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the minister the figures there among his papers? That seems to be a lot of millions.

Mr. Harkness: He is just guessing at $9 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is so.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The Longueuil plant was built for the government. It was operated by the government during the second world war, and in fact after the second world war. When it was found that additional space was needed for heavy guns, operations there were transferred to the Quebec arsenals plant and this plant was turned over to Sorel Industries. I am sure that at that time the plant and the equipment in the plant were listed under Sorel industries, although it was government property.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister would just find out from his officials why there is this difference between $15 million and $6 million in a year? What was the amount for the Longueuil plant? The minister said approximately $9 million. I would ask him if he would get the exact figures in that connection, because he apparently has them before him?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, I have not. We have the Sorel figure, but not the Longueuil plant. The Longueuil plant was built about 1940 or 1941 and it has always been owned by the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It still does not explain the $15 million for March 31, 1955, and how that $15 million item was made up? Did it include the Longueuil plant, and if so what portion of the $15 million represented the Longueuil plant? It is quite a large item, and one would expect some kind of a breakdown of it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I gave the amount that was listed for the Sorel plant. We have it here. The balance must have been the Longueuil plant, but we will be glad to look up the original figure and tell you how it came about.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course $9 million is quite a lot, I would think.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I know, but the Longueuil plant does not enter into these estimates. It has not been operated by the department.

Mr. Harkness: When was the Longueuil plant taken over by Sorel Industries?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does this company, Sorel Industries, pay for the equipment and for the Longueuil plant? Has the minister got that? It must surely pay something for that?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The Longueuil plant was used for government work and we were not charged anything for it. I do not know whether they paid anything. I would be glad to look that up. My hon. friend wants to go back over about $17 billion worth of contracts and expects me to have the information—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, this is March 31, 1955.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):—expects me to remember the details of every one of the contracts that made up the $17 billion. I cannot do it, I will tell you frankly. If you will give me the definite information you want I will endeavour to get it. I am sure I can get most of it. If you want to go back into the dim past, to 1940 or 1941, I am not sure I can get it because I imagine those records are in central storage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know my hon. friend once said, "What is a million?"

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is a fiction that has been plastered all across the country by my hon. friend.

Mr. Fleming: You originated it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, as a matter of fact I have kept it out of sight at all times. I would not refer to it at all, but I am saying it was said.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Even Maclean's magazine took the trouble to go back to try to get the origin of it. Now it has been exposed to the public, but my hon. friend keeps on saying, "What's a million?"

Mr. Fleming: We all heard it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was never said.

Mr. Fleming: We heard it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend now has made a statement, and I can pin him down on this statement. You find the exact page of Hansard where I said that and produce it, and I will resign my seat and go to the country.

Mr. Fleming: Has there been an expurgation job done on Hansard?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend makes these statements, and this is only typical of the statements he makes every day. This happens to be one on which I can pin him down, and perhaps he will apologize.

Mr. Fleming: We all heard it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who has the floor now?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend appreciates a fabrication.

Mr. Fleming: I would appreciate your making a correct statement. We heard you say, "What's a million dollars?"

Mr. Harkness: I heard it myself.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Surely these people had better put up now. You are very intelligent people with lots of spare time. While you are sitting around here trying to keep the government here by stringing out this session, surely you have time to go through Hansard and find this reference. We do not mind sitting here, you know. We realize that only five or six members run the house and the rest are up in their offices. Surely they could take half an hour and find that quotation?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not concerned about that million which did not amount to anything, but I am concerned about this $15 million that appears in the public accounts as the investment of the people of Canada in Sorel Industries, and charged to Sorel Industries.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It does not say so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would not appear there if the dominion government had not some interest. I have asked the minister a very simple question; how much was charged for this Longueuil plant? What was the value of the Longueuil plant? The minister says, "I have not got figures like that."

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend is on item No. 1, when general speeches are made. Am I supposed to have all the figures he can think of asking me to produce? I will get those figures and I will produce them, but I cannot do it now. I do not remember them, and I have not the information before me. I can give him the amount charged to the plant at Sorel, but I cannot give him a breakdown of the amount charged to Sorel Industries.

Mr. Zaplitny: I want to ask a question and I am sure the minister can answer it, because he does not have to dig through figures to do so. It is a matter of policy. I refer to the same matter now under discussion, this investment of $15 million of public funds in Sorel Industries, or in any private company. What is the policy of the government? What consideration does the government receive on behalf of the public treasury in return for putting that investment in the hands of a private company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Lower profit is allowed. The profit margin is reduced in proportion to the amount of government-owned machinery that is used. The end product costs less because no depreciation for the equipment is charged. For instance, if a plant buys its equipment and additional profit is allowed the plant because it owns its own equipment. These adjustments are made as a matter of routine. We might pay a light industry 4 per cent for operation with government equipment, and if it buys equipment we might pay 5 per cent or 5·5 per cent.

Mr. Zaplitny: That is very interesting and very important, because I think it is important that the public should know on what basis these industries are paid for the contract they undertake for producing these materials.

Let me ask this question. The minister says a consideration is that the profit is not as great where there is an investment by the public in the form of equipment. At what point is that decision arrived at? For example, let us say the government lets a contract in 1955 for a certain quantity of guns. In letting that contract to a private firm, is it a firm contract on which a margin of profit is provided, or is there a total price provided, or is that an open contract to be adjusted at the time of completion? What type of contract is it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It depends on the nature of the contract. If it is let by competitive tender of course it is a firm price. If it is for a product that must be built in a particular plant, there are many ways of getting it done and often the profit is to be adjusted. For instance, in aircraft production we have a starting rate and it is adjusted. As the learning curve proceeds and efficiency goes up the rate of profit is adjusted. It is a very complex business. I do not think I can explain it on the floor of the house. Perhaps I do not know it well enough myself to explain it, but we have a pattern in these things. If my hon. friend would like to have a committee next year I am sure my officers would be very glad to go there and they would be able to go into this thing. With the right kind of talent there and sitting as long as you like we could let the committee decide whether it is right or wrong, and not come back to the house and ask me to decide.

Mr. Zaplitny: If I may pursue one more question, I should like to point out to the minister that these are not the kind of questions on which we can obtain information in a committee, particularly in the public accounts committee, because they involve government policy. It is well known that officials of a particular department will not answer questions involving government policy, and I think quite rightly so. That is the responsibility of the minister concerned.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend is not asking me policy questions; he is asking me questions for information, questions of fact. I would be glad to answer policy questions, but that is not what he is asking.

Mr. Zaplitny: I shall change the question slightly. Will the minister place before this committee the policy that is followed with respect to government contracts in the industries in which the government has an investment in the form of equipment such as, for example, Sorel Industries? I would suggest to him that perhaps the best way it could be done—he tells us it is a complex business, and no doubt it is, but that is all the more reason why the public should know all about it—would be to table one or two typical contracts so that all the terms of the contract would then be known. They could be used as an example. He could choose the contracts that would be the most typical, and then the public would have an opportunity to know exactly on what basis we are paying these companies.

At the present time I am firmly convinced that the margin of profit admitted or stated is not the true margin of profit, because there is an element of subsidy on account of the fact that there is this equipment supplied and paid for by the public treasury for which the government or the treasury receives no consideration. That must be added to the overall profit because there seems to be no other place to put it. If an example of a contract could be tabled so we could see ourselves just where that consideration comes, just where those adjustments are made that the minister mentioned, then I for one would be satisfied, and that is definitely a matter of government policy.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I am sure there are hundreds of contracts filed with the Clerk of this house. Every contract is tabled in this house. I do not know what more I can table than is tabled.

Mr. Zaplitny: Did I understand the minister to say that every contract has been tabled in this house?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; a number have been tabled. For instance, at every meeting of the defence expenditures committee a number of contracts have been tabled. If my hon. friend will tell me that he wants a particular contract tabled I will be glad to table it. A report of the department indicates how many separate contracts were made during the year, and I know it runs into hundreds of thousands. Just to pick out one is difficult. Why does my hon. friend not pick out one?

Mr. Zaplitny: I will be glad to do that. If the minister would table the contract with respect to the guns manufactured by Sorel Industries that has been mentioned here this afternoon, that one would be quite satisfactory.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am told that all these contracts were tabled in the public accounts committee. Is my hon. friend a member of that committee?

Mr. McGregor: I never saw them tabled.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am told they were tabled; I do not know.

Mr. Sinclair: I would like to continue to discuss the point raised by the hon. member for Prince Albert, the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Calgary North. All three hon. gentlemen say they remember the Minister of Trade and Commerce saying, "What's a million?" We all know, of course, how inaccurate is the memory of the hon. member for Eglinton. The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that the Tories, since they have mentioned it so often, should go and get Hansard and show that he said, "What's a million?"

None of them moved, so I went out to the library and very quickly got Hansard for the second session of 1945, shortly after the hon. member for Eglinton entered the house. Here is the famous remark which the hon. member for Eglinton was so sure the minister made and so arrogantly said he remembered distinctly, as did the hon. member for Calgary North. The discussion was on the estimates of the then minister of munitions and supply. At page 2251 of Hansard the minister had this to say:

I call the attention of my hon. friend—

His hon. friend is the financial critic of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Greenwood. I notice that the hon. member for Eglinton is aspiring to that job in the absence of the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Fleming: No, he is not.

Mr. Sinclair: You are not worthy to aspire to fill his shoes. I continue:

I call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that we are dealing with an over-all bill for some $1,365 million. This is only a break-down for purposes of discussion, and this amount is not being appropriated by itself; a bill in which this is included is being prepared. I dare say my hon. friend could cut a million dollars from this amount; but a million dollars from the war appropriation bill would not be a very important matter.

Mr. Macdonnell: I suppose that is true.

On an estimate of $1,365 million, $1 million is about one-tenth of one per cent, or a little less. This is the statement which the hon. member for Eglinton has just said he distinctly recalls being, "What's a million?"

Mr. Fleming: The arrogant Minister of Fisheries has just made one of his statements that has a very fishy flavour to it. Mr. Chairman, what particular passage the Minister of Fisheries has dug out in compliance with whatever request he received from the Minister of Defence Production will have to be his responsibility; but whether that is a passage about the same time or not, the fact is that members of this house did hear the statement, and it is a curious thing—

Mr. Dickey: You produce it.

Mr. Fleming: —that here we are at July 25, 1956—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is a falsehood.

Mr. Fleming: This statement, attributed to the Minister of Defence Production, "What's a million dollars?" has been referred to in this house and elsewhere, I suppose, hundreds and hundreds if not thousands of times; it has been quoted many times in the hearing of the minister and this is the first time he has been prompted to suggest that he never made the statement.

Mr. Dickey: It has been denied before.

Mr. Fleming: It is a curious delay, Mr. Chairman, a long delay.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend makes so many speeches and delivers so many falsehoods.

Mr. Fleming: There he is on his feet. The rules do not mean a thing. He is up on his feet cutting into the middle of other people's speeches. He is not satisfied to let anybody else make a speech. The rules are only for other people; they are not for him. He has his cackling chorus taking up the story. There they go; there they are.

Now, Mr. Chairman, members of this house have made their comments. The Minister of Fisheries has brought up a passage and he is asking the house to say that is the only statement the minister has ever said that comes close to the one attributed to him. Well, statements by members have been made here this afternoon, and I do not know that anybody is going to change his statement. I certainly do not intend to, Mr. Chairman. I comment again; it was a curious demonstration; it is an amazing demonstration. After this famous statement has been carried right across this country; it has been discussed, I suppose, or referred to on every election platform or on the hustings for the last decade, and it has been referred to in this house on more than one occasion. Yet the minister, in this year of grace 1956, has suddenly discovered that somebody has made the statement that he made the statement, and he says now he did not make the statement.

Mr. Dickey: Which is true.

Mr. Fleming: There may be a lot of credulous people in this house, Mr. Chairman, but I think this strains credulity beyond all possible recognition.

Mr. Sinclair: I can perhaps answer this, too, because the hon. member for Eglinton has once again displayed his amazing ignorance about other people's speeches. He knows his own speeches very well because he keeps requoting them to us.

Mr. Fleming: You have never heard me quote from one of my own speeches.

Mr. Sinclair: The first time this was mentioned was in the 1949 budget speech of the financial critic of the Tory party who was then the member for Muskoka, I think it was, and who is now the hon. member for Greenwood. In the course of his speech he claimed the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said, "What's a million?" That was my first year as parliamentary assistant. I looked up the remark then and answered him immediately. That was the reason I could find this so quickly, not because I remembered my own speech. I went to the library and found my speech and came back with the answer in Hansard of 1945. At that time I put on the record not only what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said in 1945 but what happened, and the Tory party has been lying about it from that day on.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the fishy remark we have just heard does not affect in the least the facts as stated here this afternoon, and it is not going to deter anyone who heard the remark that has been referred to from referring to it whenever it pleases him to do so.

An hon. Member: Whether it is right or wrong.

Mr. Fleming: The remark has been referred to on many occasions in this house and the minister has not denied it in 11 years. I fail to understand, Mr. Chairman, what has given rise—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —to this very interesting situation where suddenly out of the blue, on July 25—

An hon. Member: The year is 1956.

Mr. Fleming: —1956, apparently someone around the minister suddenly becomes conscious of the fact—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps they read Maclean's magazine.

Mr. Fleming: Yes. This remark has been referred to for 11 years, but it is only today that the minister pretends he has suddenly become aware of it. How extraordinary! It is just too much for human credulity, even the Liberal variety.

Mr. Sinclair: One last suggestion, Mr. Chairman. I would suggest that this little pocket Mussolini put up or shut up. Let him now find the remark in Hansard; let him quote the minister using the words, "What's a million dollars?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I do recall that in the last parliament the Speaker of that house, when I chose to draw certain comparisons between the attitude of one Mussolini and the Minister of Defence Production, thought it was an unparliamentary sort of remark and—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member only referred to you as a pocket Mussolini, though.

Mr. Fleming: Pardon?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He only referred to you as a pocket Mussolini; that is different.

Mr. Fleming: Well, I shall refer to the minister as a great big overgrown, overstuffed Mussolini.

An hon. Member: He is certainly not overgrown.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I have said what I have said, and I stand by what I have said.

Mr. Dickey: Which is nothing.

Mr. Fleming: I am not the least bit impressed by these remarks of the sullen Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Sinclair: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Fleming: We have had some examples that hon. members have not forgotten when surgical operations were performed on Hansard by the ministers this session.

Mr. Sinclair: Back in 1945?

Mr. Fleming: If those words I have referred to are not readily available in Hansard, then I can only infer that somebody has gone back and performed a surgical operation on Hansard similar to the one that was performed—

An hon. Member: Name it.

Mr. Fleming: —this session by the Minister f Agriculture.

An hon. Member: How low can you get?

Mr. Fleming: You ought to know.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Bow River. Order. I think I should apologize to both hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for The Battlefords rose a moment ago and I incorrectly identified him as the hon. member for Bow River. The hon. member for Bow River also has a question and perhaps he would permit the hon. member for The Battlefords to speak first.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I was just going to ask you if you could not get the house back to business.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, my question will not be much longer than that of the hon. member for The Battlefords. I would like to ask the minister a question concerning the payment that was given to Sorel Industries in view of their being idle for the five year period. I understood the minister to say that after 1945, when the government informed Sorel they would not be getting any more orders and therefore they should turn their plant over to peacetime production, they had received offers to dispose of their machinery and came to the minister to get his opinion regarding it. If I understood the minister correctly he said he advised them not to do that.

If that is so, then I would think the minister would have had to indicate to them the reason for saying that. Probably the reason would be, "Well, you should not dispose of the machinery because later on we may want"—and I use the word "may" advisedly—"to place an order for guns or something of that sort, and then you would have the plant ready".

If that is a proper inference and if that were said to the company, then I think in 1950 when the government came to Sorel and said, "Now here is an order we want you to fill" probably the Sorel company would be in a position—and rightly so—to say to the government, "You advised us not to dispose of our machinery but to hold it until such time as you placed an order with us. Therefore by right you should pay at least something for maintaining our plant and machinery up to this time". Is that the situation or not?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, no, I think that is putting it too strongly, really. They came to me and wanted to know what the view of the government would be about a prospective sale they had to another government. I said this government would not like it. I did not intend to intimate that if they did not make the sale we would probably use the machinery. I did not suggest that for a moment. Nevertheless, while we were unwilling to take any risk on having the machinery maintained in 1945, when we realized in 1949 that we were going to need the plant we took a different view of the situation. We felt something should be done to put the plant on something resembling a basis of equality with other plants and that we should bear a portion of the cost of maintaining the plant during the period it was closed down. That decision was made in 1949, but it was not determined by anything said in the past; at least I did not so consider it.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I have another question to ask the minister, and it does not relate to Sorel Industries. I notice in the estimates that the amount to be paid is $22,002,628. I wonder if the minister could tell us the share each of the provinces receives out of this estimate?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am afraid we cannot make a provincial breakdown. The difficulty is that the main contract is placed in one province but subcontracts may go to other provinces. Raw materials, for instance, may come from other provinces. We find we cannot make a breakdown concerning defence purchasing that means very much as far as a division among the provinces is concerned.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I do not expect the minister could go into a detailed division, because I understand raw materials may come from one place and other materials from another; but I should not think it would be very difficult for the minister to say what portion of the contracts that are let are allocated to the various provinces. How much was given to Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec, and so on? I would think that information would be very easy to obtain.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We do not keep records in that way for the reason given. For instance, a great many companies maintain head offices in Ottawa and their contracts are signed here. So far as we know they are Ottawa firms, but if we trace it back we find they are not Ottawa firms; they may be Halifax firms, for all we know. The records of the department just do not allow an accurate breakdown of work as between the provinces.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Perhaps I could put it this way. It is not my purpose to embarrass the minister, but I should like to know what share of this $20 million-odd is received by industries in Alberta. I do not think we get any of it. It seems to me that this is an opportunity to encourage industrial development in all the provinces.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend realizes that this $22 million is really an administration vote. It does not buy anything. There is $6 million for departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production. That is practically all spent in Ottawa; a little perhaps elsewhere. There is an amount of $500,000 for care, maintenance and custody of stand-by defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling. That depends on where the closed-down production plant is; it could be traced, perhaps. There is $7,500,000 for capital assistance. That varies from year to year. The bulk of it is in connection with the CF-105 program and it is mostly spent in the province of Ontario; I should think it is practically all spent there. The payment of grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on crown-owned defence plants is spread around the provinces, and that would apply wherever there are government-owned defence plants.

Under crown companies there is Defence Construction Limited. Some of that has probably been spent in Alberta. That is the work of supervising defence contracts that occur during the year. Then there is Canadian Arsenals Limited. I do not think there is any arsenal plant in the west now. There used to be one at Calgary but there is none there now. I should not think that any of that is spent in Alberta. I should think my hon. friend is correct in saying that practically none of this vote is spent in Alberta.

Mr. Hahn: On the question raised by the hon. member for Bow River, I referred during another debate to sessional paper 237A, in which it was estimated that British Columbia was going to get $221,000 in defence production. I am wondering how they arrived at that particular figure in view of the answer that was given to the hon. member for Bow River. Referring to that specific figure at this time, it strikes me as rather difficult to understand. Here is a province, as I said in another debate, with one-tenth of Canada's population, getting an appropriation of approximately $221,000, which must have been arrived at by this department or it would not have appeared on the sessional paper, out of a total of some $22 million. That would be about 1 per cent of the total.

My question is this. I am wondering what consideration, if any, is given the placement of these contracts on a geographical basis. I am thinking more particularly, of course, not just of the net returns that are received by a province but of the matter of defence itself, and the fact that it would help labour in some of the more distant areas. I am not thinking specifically so much of the case of British Columbia; it could apply to any one of the provinces.

It would seem to me, whilst I can understand the minister's explanation up to a point, that here we have an instance of a contract possibly being let in Ottawa and then sublet in British Columbia. Indirectly they are getting some of it, and if the main office for that particular company happens to be in Ottawa, then British Columbia would be directly benefiting from it. But you have instances such as took place last year, where a firm in Quebec—I forget the name—was given a contract to make pallets. I understand they made some 750,000 in Quebec and sent them around through the Panama canal or some other way to British Columbia to be used in North Vancouver. It seems to me that there was no subletting of a contract there. Where we have the lumber and everything else required, I was wondering why these things are not let on a geographical basis.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): When my hon. friend suggests that British Columbia does not get its share of defence contracts, I think he is hardly giving his province proper credit. For instance, I think British Columbia has a good share of all the naval shipbuilding in Canada, and shipbuilding is a very big part of defence. It has a very good share of defence airports. Of all the installations for defence throughout Canada, I think British Columbia has had its full share.

As far as the much discussed pallets are concerned, the fact of the matter is that we called for tenders for pallets delivered at Vancouver. We found that a firm in Quebec could make the pallets in Quebec, pay the freight to Vancouver and beat the price of pallets made in Vancouver. We did not believe it when we got the answer, but we found that it happened again, and so we placed the order accordingly. We are given a delivery point, and the terms of purchases are freight paid to delivery point, we think there is no reason to give the local manufacturer the job of making the pallets at an increased cost in spite of the advantage he gets from being on the spot rather than being 3,000 miles away.

Mr. Hahn: I am very pleased with the answer the minister has given in respect to the pallets. It certainly explains a point that possibly contractors in British Columbia should keep in mind when they are bidding for some of these contracts.

The question I have in mind now is, how did this figure of $221,000 appear in sessional paper 237A if, as the minister says, British Columbia is getting its share of the contract? Certainly there is $22 million in contracts here. I should think that the $221,000 should include all the enterprises of which the minister spoke a moment ago. I can think of no way in which that figure would get on to the sessional paper unless it came from his department. Just a few moments ago, however, he told the hon. member for Bow River, as I understand it, that there was no way of breaking it down.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The hon. member is perhaps referring to the items that I read from the estimate book. These are not expenditures for contracts; they are services. For instance, the first item is for salaries paid to people who work for the department. I suppose we have perhaps a dozen or 15 people stationed in British Columbia who draw their salaries there. The next item is care, maintenance and custody of stand-by defence plants. I do not think we have in British Columbia any such defence plants. The next item is capital assistance, but there probably does not happen to be any capital assistance provided for British Columbia for this year. The next item is grants to municipalities. They would be comparatively small.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

I am not sure whether we have any crown-owned plants there. The next item refers to Canadian Arsenals; and the arsenals are all in the east. Then there is Defence Construction Limited. There would be a share of that spent in British Columbia. Perhaps part of the amount mentioned is for salaries for inspection of defence projects there. Those are all the items covered by the $22 million. I am not surprised that the part of this particular $22 million spent in British Columbia is as stated in the return. The greater part of it is spent in Ottawa, right in this city.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Quebec West.

Mr. Barnett: I was going to pursue the same subject, Mr. Chairman. I should like to ask one or two questions on the figures used in the debate last night by the hon. member for New Westminster, because I think it is important that we get a clear picture. I take it from what the minister has said that the $221,000 set forth in the sessional paper is a proportion of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production and does not represent the value of the contracts that were awarded by defence production on behalf of the Department of National Defence.

The hon. member for New Westminster referred to one other figure in the same sessional paper. In subsection (j) reference was made to $92,222,000 having to do with the Department of National Defence. Can the minister explain to us whether the figure of $92 million odd includes the amount spent on defence contracts in British Columbia or whether that merely represents the operating account for the defence forces located in British Columbia?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I should think it would surely include defence contracts. You see, we make the arrangements for the procurement. We place the contract, but the money is paid by the Department of National Defence and the commitment is made against funds of the Department of National Defence. Therefore if that is a breakdown of national defence expenditures in British Columbia it would surely include all expenditures made by the Department of Defence Production, except the $22 million voted directly to cover administration.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, before going on to the various items, and since a general debate is allowed on the first item, I believe this is the appropriate time to speak on behalf of a group of employees who are now working for a crown company called Carde, at Valcartier. If my memory serves me right, on September 27, 1955, a brief in favour of the 40-hour week for all employees of that company was submitted to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). The brief also dealt with salaries. According to the information I have received, I believe that the matter of salaries has been settled, but the employees concerned are still anxiously awaiting a decision on the matter of the 40-hour five day week.

I also understand that nearly all employees of that crown company are now on the five day 40-hour week. However, there are still a certain number, commonly known as guards, or as they are called in English, "security guards", who do not enjoy this same privilege granted to the other employees who work exactly at the same place.

(Text):

Mr. Dickey: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member is entering into a discussion of the Canadian army research and development installation at Valcartier, which comes under the Department of National Defence and for which the Department of Defence Production has no responsibility at all.

Mr. Dufresne: May I ask the parliamentary assistant a question? What is that factory at Valcartier which produces ammunition for the Department of Defence Production? That is the one I am talking about.

Mr. Dickey: There is an arsenal of Canadian Arsenals Limited, but my understanding is that the hon. member was referring to the research and development centre there. If the hon. member wants to discuss the Canadian Arsenals plant I suggest that the appropriate time would be to discuss it on the item in the estimates relating to Canadian Arsenals, when we will have the president of Canadian Arsenals here and will be able to deal much more satisfactorily with whatever the hon. member has to say.

Mr. Dufresne: I have no objection at all to waiting, but I do think I have the privilege at this stage of speaking on the question on which I have already started to speak. With respect to the parliamentary assistant wishing me to speak later on the subject matter of arsenals, I am ready to do so on items 91 and 92, but the fact is that I have something to say now regarding Canadian Arsenals.

An hon. Member: What about the goat?

Mr. Dufresne: We will speak about the goat at the proper time. Don't make a goat out of yourself. You are doing that too often.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I will continue with these remarks.

I was saying then that I was putting the case of a certain number of arsenal employees, particularly those who are at present employed at Valcartier and who belong to the Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada. They have asked me in fact to be their spokesman in this house in order to bring to the attention of the department the fact that they believe themselves to be victimized because, unlike all other employees in the place where they work, they do not enjoy a five day, 40-hour week.

On the other hand these employees who are commonly called guards and who work 48 hours receive no more pay than those who work 40 hours.

I am told that until last year these guards were allowed statutory holidays and, if they were called upon to work on those days, they were paid overtime. I am also informed that this practice was discontinued during this year, so that the average pay of these guards has now fallen considerably below that of the other employees who are employed in a like capacity.

I am also told, Mr. Chairman, that at Valleyfield and at St. Paul l'Ermite, the guards who, I understand, are not on the 40-hour week either, have however the advantage of getting their uniforms, buttons and insignia supplied by the company that hires them, which is not the case at Valcartier with regard to the employees I just mentioned.

I am of the opinion that those guards are entitled to the same measure of fairness as the other employees with whom they work. After all, they are not only guards. They have taken the oath of special constables, which means that their work is of an important and particularly responsible nature.

Well, I shall be told that, before giving them the 40-hour week, their number should be increased. I am all for it. It would be necessary. If the 40-hour week is applied there, their number will, of course, have to be increased. However, I do not think the government would be any poorer if it agreed to add a few members to the existing staff, in order to grant this class of employees the same privileges as are granted to other employees of the federal government.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, a great number of employees of other departments, doing exactly the same work, enjoy the 40-hour work week.

Indeed, I am informed that some guards of the Department of Immigration and even of the national harbours board are on the 40-hour week. Moreover, I believe that the guards of penal institutions recently obtained the 40-hour week. The latter's work is therefore absolutely identical to that of guards working either for the arsenals or for crown companies.

It has often been said that the 40-hour week could not apply in certain areas because of local conditions. Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that, as far as Quebec city is concerned, local conditions were not taken into account in the past, because most of the industrial and commercial establishments in that city do not grant the 40-hour week.

However, post office, customs and excise tax employees as well as other civil servants in various federal departments in the city of Quebec have been granted the 40-hour week.

Mr. Chairman, that is the only suggestion I wish to make at the moment. I am fulfilling a promise I made to those who requested my help. I respectfully submit to the house this matter of the 40-hour week which, I am told, is not enforced either outside the city of Quebec. However, if it is granted at one place, I believe that it should also be implemented at Quebec, but I would not like it to be done to the prejudice of civil servants elsewhere in Canada. If it is put into force elsewhere, I beg the department to grant the privilege of the 40-hour week to the employees in Quebec at the same time as it is granted elsewhere. I urge that this request be taken into serious consideration.

For instance, I suggest that the authorities of the Department of Defence Production and of the Department of Finance get together to study this matter in order to do justice to the employees I have mentioned.

Besides, I do not see why between 5 and 10 per cent of all those who are employed by the government are not enjoying the 40-hour week. Everyone should be on the same level. I therefore take this opportunity of requesting that the five day 40-hour week be granted to all civil servants, including guards employed by the arsenals and crown companies.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, at page 23 of the report of the department there is a statement concerning government policy in making procurements in the United Kingdom as well as the United States. I notice that this year the purchases from both the United Kingdom and the United States have dropped as compared with other years. I conclude that situation results from the fact that the rate of procurement has decreased because of the decrease in demand. But in view of the over-all trade position of Canada in relation to both these countries and of our dangerous imbalance with the United States, I imagine that in the instances where heavy expenditures are involved, the policy of the Department of Defence Production is to encourage purchases in the United Kingdom as much as possible.

I wonder whether the minister can inform the committee just how the emphasis is placed with reference to the purchase of radar equipment. We are engaged in a rather large radar defence project. I imagine that much of the material must be purchased outside of Canada. Can the minister give us any details as to how much of this material is obtained in the United Kingdom or in the United States or is produced by our domestic companies engaged in those activities?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As far as radar and electronic equipment is concerned, Canada produces nearly all we use. Of the small balance, the bulk comes from England. In addition to that, a good share of the equipment that is manufactured in Canada is manufactured by a wholly-owned British firm, namely Canadian Marconi; not that that makes much difference. But I would say that of the radar equipment bought by Canada and originating outside of Canada, more of it comes from England than from the United States.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is it possible to give any statistics with regard to the size of the purchases or the amount?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We would have to analyse our purchases abroad and see how much of the equipment was radar equipment. It is sometimes rather difficult to determine which is radar equipment and which is something else. We often buy it as components. About all I can say is that we buy in England all the radar equipment that we can buy there. But with regard to specially designed projects, such as the mid-Canada line, there is some equipment that must be purchased in the United States because they are the only people who have developed that particular equipment. Generally speaking, however, we make all our radar equipment in Canada.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Harkness: On page 16 of the report of the Department of Defence Production for 1955 there is a list of ammunition of various kinds. I will not read the list, but I should like to ask the minister where this ammunition is produced and particularly what percentage of it is produced by Canadian Arsenals.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Canadian Arsenals do all the filling. In the case of many types of ammunition, the components are made outside, but they are assembled and filled in the arsenals. That applies to all types of ammunition.

Mr. Harkness: There is quite a bit of this ammunition that would not be of the filled type. I refer to 30, 50 and 20 millimetre small arms ammunition, and anti-tank ammunition. Some of it would be solid shot. Has the minister any figures as to the percentage of our ammuntion production which takes place at Canadian Arsenals and as to who are the main suppliers in addition to Canadian Arsenals?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I have all the information here. Some of it is marked secret and some of it is marked confidential. I will give what I can here anyway.

Mr. Knowles: Which are you giving us? Are you giving us the "secret" or the "confidential" information?

Mr. Dufresne: Give us the private one.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As to the 105 millimeter shell, howitzer and gun, that is marked secret but I think I can say that the forging of the empty shell is by Canadian Car and Foundry Company, Montreal; 105 millimetre shell, semi-fixed, HE, forgings by National Steel Car Corporation, Hamilton; machining by Lindsay plant of Canadian Arsenals; 90 millimetre shell, fixed, forging and machining of the empty shell by Trenton Steel Works, Trenton, Nova Scotia; complex new type fuse by International Business Machines, Toronto. Production of filled rounds is well advanced. As I say, the rounds are filled in Canadian Arsenals plants, all of them. Three-inch 50 calibre cartridges, empty shell produced at Lindsay plant of Canadian Arsenals; three-inch, 70 calibre cartridge, Canadian Arsenals Limited. Four-inch calibre cartridges, empty shells produced by the Lindsay plant, Canadian Arsenals; 20 pounder high explosive shell, forging and rough turning by Trenton steel works, Trenton, Nova Scotia; machining of shells by Robb Engineering, Company, Amherst, Nova Scotia; 17 pounder shell, components by Acme Screw and Gear and Canada Cycle and Motor Company Limited, Toronto; shot assembled by Canadian Arsenals; filling and final assembly by Canadian Arsenals Limited; 40 millimetre cartridge, major components Canadian Arsenals Limited; 60 millimetre mortar bomb, forging and machining, Thompson Products Limited, St. Catharines, Ontario, filled at Canadian Arsenals; 81 millimetre, mortar type—is that enough?

Mr. Harkness: Yes. I do not think we need take up any more of the time of the committee going down the list. Would the minister say it would be correct to say that the actual manufacture and forging of shells, cartridge cases and so forth, generally speaking is done by private companies and the filling is entirely done by Canadian Arsenals?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, I said that.

Mr. Harkness: Practically none of the actual forging and machining in the making of either the shell or the cartridge case is done by Canadian arsenals?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, the Lindsay plant is equipped to do that work and is used for odd sizes of ammunition where a contract to industry is not warranted. But generally speaking my hon. friend is correct, except for the Lindsay plant.

Mr. Harkness: Are any of the plants of Canadian Arsenals, outside of the Lindsay plant, and particularly the plants where filling takes place, equipped to do the full manufacture of these shells, or are they only equipped to fill shells?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): They are equipped to do all the manufacture of small arms, 20 millimetre and down, but all the artillery ammunition, no, except for the Lindsay plant.

Mr. Harkness: Apart from the small arms it has to be a matter of getting the shell or cartridge case, as the case may be, made at some forging works or something of that kind. Then also in regard to ammunition there is an item that intrigues me. There is a new type of anti-submarine projectile being produced, and I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to what type of projectile it is; and is it Canadian Arsenals that are making it or some other company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. It is marked confidential, but we call it the "Squid". The empty projectile is made by Chatco Steel Products and the filling is by Canadian Arsenals.

Mr. Harkness: Is it an air to sea missile or a ship to submarine missile?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Ship to submarine.

Mr. Fleming: There are certain questions I asked when I spoke in a general discussion on June 29. I wonder if the minister can now give us that information. The first question was as to the actual expenditure last year.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You mean by the department or the total of all purchasing?

Mr. Fleming: By items; the expenditures were not complete when the estimates were made, and the figure as to expenditures is based upon the actual expenditures up to last autumn and then an estimate as to the expected expenditures for the balance of the fiscal year. Now could we have the actual figure with respect to each item.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): These are the actuals for 1955-56; vote 85, $6,391,430.

Mr. Fleming: No, that is the estimate. It is the actual expenditures that I wanted.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am told that the actual figures only came in a few days ago. We do not appear to have them properly tabulated. Will it be all right if I produce them when we sit again in this committee?

Mr. Fleming: I want them before this item is carried. I might say to the minister that on June 29 I indicated a number of questions and a number of matters on which information was requested so the minister would know what they were and his officials could gather the information together. I thought in that way we would make a contribution to expediting a review of these particular estimates. If the minister has not that one—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We seem to have your other questions except that one. We do not seem to have that particular figure.

Mr. Fleming: I shall pass to another question and we can come back to that later, before this item is carried. I hope the minister will have it then. The next question I asked the minister was as to the relationship between his department and the Department of National Defence for which it is acting in so many ways as a buying agent. Is the relationship between the two departments precisely as it has been in the past?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Precisely the same.

Mr. Fleming: In other words the Department of National Defence simply gives a requisition to the Department of Defence Production on which that department acts without questioning the requisition in any case?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is right.

Mr. Fleming: I asked a question also concerning the revolving fund in the department. I drew attention to what the report of the department has to say about the revolving fund and made a certain comment on it. The page references are 53 and 58. I asked for more information concerning the revolving fund, and the use that is being made of it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): In the first place, there are inventories of strategic materials which are held as emergency stockpiles and which are subject to little or no outward movement. The second category, covering transactions in cloth and wool, involves both inventories and the sale of these items to contractors when required. While some items remain fairly static, there is a good deal of movement in and out of the warehouse. The third category covers components required in shipbuilding, ammunition, gun and aircraft programs. This is primarily a financing operation, as these items move directly from the supplier to the contractor for incorporation in the end item.

Where crown-operated warehouses are involved, a mark-up is charged, based on actual cost of warehousing and other charges. In all the other cases, actual costs of the components are charged to the revolving fund and recouped when payments are made for the end items.

The details of the revolving fund appear on page 53 of the department's annual report for the year ended December 31, 1955. Then the hon. member had some questions on the utilization.

Mr. Fleming: I will come to that. But on the revolving fund, what is the maximum at any time that has been actually committed in that revolving fund? There is a total of $150 million made available by parliament under two grants. There was $100 million by the original act, and then a further $50 million provided in vote 825 of the supplementary estimates for the year 1951-52. Is the revolving fund being used now to the same extent as formerly, or are there the same demands upon it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; January, 1954, was the peak of the revolving fund. At that time there was $111 million out; as of March 31, 1955, $70 million, and March 31, 1956, $59 million. If the present activity is maintained or the downward tendency continues, it appears possible to operate within the statutory maximum of $100 million, and on that basis the supplemental $50 million would seem superfluous. Incidentally, we do not keep that money in the bank in a special account. We have the right to draw down up to these limits, but, as I say, as things appear now we could drop $50 million from that authorization.

Mr. Fleming: Well, as I understand the effect of the fund, the $100 million and the amount in item 825 of the supplementary estimates of 1951-52, by reason of the provisions of the act are available for the continued operation of the revolving fund. In other words, it is not like a normal annual vote. The act itself makes provision for the addition to the revolving fund, and unless there is some amending bill brought in the $50 million continues to be available as part of the revolving fund.

It is quite clear from what the minister has said, I think, that there has been no drawing on that additional $50 million for a couple of years now, and that the commitments on the revolving fund are likely to be reduced from this point on. Therefore I raise directly the question as to whether the time has not come for the return of that $50 million. In other words, surely the $100 million in the original act would be adequate, and parliament would be justified now in withdrawing the additional $50 million as being no longer necessary.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I would not mind bringing in a bill at the next session to reduce the amount available to the revolving fund. As my hon. friend will understand, if the money is not used it does not leave the treasury. It is merely taking away the right to use the revolving fund to that extent. This department will have no objection whatever to a bill reducing the amount of the revolving fund to $100 million.

Mr. Fleming: I realize that if the money is not used it remains there unused; but my concern is to maintain the principle of parliamentary control. In regard to expenditures out of revolving funds there is, I think, a particular reason, because revolving funds sometimes are hard to reconcile with the principle of parliamentary control. We have them in several departments. For instance, we have them in the Department of Transport, and the Auditor General has been asked more than once about the operation of those revolving funds, because of the necessity of maintaining the strictest parliamentary control. That is my interest in keeping the amount available in that revolving fund down to what is reasonably necessary to meet the foreseeable requirements of the department, and I welcome the statement of the minister that he is prepared to bring forward a bill at the next session of the house to remove that superfluous $50 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I can now give my hon. friend the information that I thought I could not give him. It has appeared from somewhere. Actual expenditures last year; administration, $5,831,835; capital assistance, $2,084,615.

Mr. Fleming: Can the minister give us the amounts of the corresponding items in order here? Item 85 is the figure of $5 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Departmental administration, item 85, $5,831,835; item 86, $160,499; item 87, $2,084,615; item 88, $203,000; item 89, $3,388,371; item 91, $4,406,812.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not given item 91.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is the last one.

Mr. Fleming: Item 91 is the last one? Was there no expenditure at all for item 90?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Dickey: That is the $1 item.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is the $1 item.

Mr. Fleming: I am always interested in getting these figures of actual expenditure, because they throw a good deal of light on the direction in which expenditures are moving. I consider it our duty to check these expenditures as closely as the rather awkward procedure in this large committee of supply permits.

Now, the book of estimates would appear to indicate that the department on this large first item of administration is budgeting for a reduction from $6,391,430 last year to $6,145,727 this year. In other words the book of estimates shows a decrease of $245,703. But it is always well to look beyond those figures to get the figures of actual expenditures, and here we find that the amount actually spent by the department, the amount that was adequate to cover all the needs of this department under the administration item, was $5,831,835, which indicates that the department this year is not budgeting for a decrease as compared with last year's actual requirements, Mr. Chairman, but that the department is actually budgeting for an increase of $314,000; for the difference between this year's estimates of $6,145,727 and last year's actual expenditure of $5,831,835, according to my arithmetic, indicates the department is asking approval this year of a sum $314,000 larger than was spent last year. Therefore I ask the minister what accounts for the increase? Is there anything more that enters into the increase than increases in salary rates?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is an increase of about 5 per cent. I do not think you would need to go beyond the increase in salary rates to make up the difference of 5 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: The number on the staff of the department is almost the same as the year before, according to the book of estimates. If the minister says this is simply an increase in salary rates that is his explanation, but I do draw attention to the fact that on this item the department is budgeting not for a decrease, as the book of estimates would indicate, but for an actual increase over last year's expenditure.

The next question, Mr. Chairman, was in regard to the basis of purchase. I drew attention to the sentence on page 24 of the annual report of the department, which reads:

> With the increase in Canada's industrial defence potential it has been possible to purchase more goods in Canada, to increase the number of cases in which contracts are placed on the basis of competitive tender, and to move from cost plus to target price or negotiated firm price contracts in those fields in which Canadian firms have gained more operating experience.

Looking at that statement I asked, as indicated at page 5524 of Hansard, for detailed information on the number and value and proportion of the total of contracts placed on competitive tender and the numbers and amounts and percentages of those placed on a cost plus basis, or a target price basis, or negotiated firm price basis.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, Mr. Chairman. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, over 116,000 orders were placed as a result of competitive tenders. In terms of value these contracts represented about 60 per cent of all contracts placed by the department during that period, a very appreciable improvement over the previous year when some 30 per cent by value were based on competitive tender.

The analysis of non-competitive or negotiated contracts for the last fiscal year shows that most of these contracts in terms of value were placed by the head office of the department. Contracts amounting to $242 million were in this category, while the balance of non-competitive contracts amounting to $11 million were placed by the district offices of the department.

Of the $242 million, $41 million were on the basis of firm price, $55 million were on the basis of cost plus, $14 million were ceiling contracts and $2 million were target price.

Mr. Fleming: Would you give the third figure again, please?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Fourteen million dollars were on ceiling contracts. The balance of $130 million were placed on a price to be negotiated basis and have not been finalized.

Of the $11 million placed by district offices no breakdown is available, but most of these contracts would be under $10,000 and would be for items for which there is only one source of supply; for instance, spare parts for the repair or maintenance of items used by the services.

I would like to point out that because a contract is negotiated it does not follow that the terms are less favourable to the government. Rates of profit are maintained at fair and reasonable levels, and in many cases the department is receiving discounts that are equal to or more than those allowed by the contractor to his most favoured customer. Moreover, in most non-competitive orders an audit is performed and certain qualifications are imposed by the department on the determination of the costs upon which the agreed rate of profit is to be applied. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Fleming: Yes. I thank the minister for that information. There is one thing I did not get clear as the minister was reading over the figures. I believe the minister said that 116,000 orders were placed as competitive orders which constituted 60 per cent of all contracts. Was that in number or amount?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): By value.

Mr. Fleming: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that all hon. members would be glad to see an increase in the proportion of total business the department is doing which is now being done by competitive tender. May I ask the minister if the outlook is such that he considers this desirable trend may be expected to continue?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, it is doubtful. For instance, all the equipment for the mid-Canada line is very secret and the location of the sites is secret. It is impossible to do other than negotiate a contract. The CF-105 is similar, and we are breaking new ground there with a new aircraft. It is quite impossible, of course, to get anything like a target. All you can do there is proceed on the basis of cost plus until you get to the production stage; then after that there is a target arranged for a certain number of planes and a lower target is arranged for subsequent ones as the curve goes down. For defence procurement there is a limit to the amount of equipment that may be purchased by competitive tender. It means there must be at least two sources of the material before you can get competitive tenders.

Mr. Fleming: Are we to infer that the minister thinks we now have hit the maximum in the proportion of contracts placed by competitive tender?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, but we have hit a level where I would say it would be a toss up whether the percentage for next year would be greater or less. It depends entirely on the predominance of the work and the nature of it.

Mr. Fleming: The next question relates to the Defence Production Act. As indicated at page 5523 of Hansard, I asked the minister how many orders have been made under that act, and I asked for their listing or classification under the various sections of the act. In other words, as I said at that time, what orders have been issued under each of the sections of the act conferring powers upon the government or the minister?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No orders are now in effect.

Mr. Fleming: Excuse me, but the period I have in mind would be, let us say, from the beginning of 1955. If the minister has more figures we had probably better hear them first.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): All the orders were revoked before 1955. There are no orders now in effect. The only orders issued under those sections of the Defence Production Act conferring powers on the Canadian government or the Minister of Defence Production are those covering the designation and control of essential materials. These consist of orders in council under section 30 of the act and orders of the minister under section 31 of the act. Other sections of the act referred to above are 21, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29 and 33. No orders were issued under any of these sections.

I can give my hon. friend a list of the orders that have been issued since April, 1951, to May 31, 1954. The last one was issued on May 31, 1954.

Mr. Fleming: Perhaps it might be convenient, Mr. Chairman, and would save time, if the list were put on Hansard without taking the time to read it, if that is the wish of the committee.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): They have all been revoked and I doubt if it is worth cluttering up Hansard with that information. There is a long list here, but they are all orders that expired not later than 1954.

Mr. Fleming: I would be satisfied if the minister could supply a copy to those hon. members who are interested.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will be glad to do so. I will give my hon. friend this copy if he wants it.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, it is six o'clock and I would just make this one comment on the minister's last answer. It has not been found necessary by the government or the minister to issue a single order under this act since the debate a year ago on the continuation of the minister's powers under this act, and I think that is an eloquent tribute to the position taken by the opposition at that time on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: No. It is six o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue tomorrow with these estimates and then take the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the C.B.C.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 26, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR—THE PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to draw to your attention the presence in the diplomatic gallery of our dear old friend Right Hon. R. G. Menzies, Prime Minister of Australia. On the occasion of this trip he is accompanied by Mrs. Menzies, and to both him and Mrs. Menzies we wish a hearty welcome and a pleasant stay in our country.

(Translation):

We rejoice in the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister of Australia is to be honoured by old Laval University, of Quebec. His name will be written into the roll of those statesmen who have been similarly honoured, either for their scholarship or in recognition of their services to humanity or to the cause of peace, and who deserve our confidence, our friendship and our admiration.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GARSON—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORTS OF REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JULY 24

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Ottawa Citizen and the Ottawa Journal in their evening editions of yesterday, July 25, 1956, have both attributed to me assertions which I did not make—indeed almost the exact opposite of what I made—in debate in this house on July 24, 1956. The Citizen said this:

> Justice minister Garson has told the Commons that pollution of the Ottawa river could be controlled or eliminated through the Criminal Code.

The Journal said:

> Pollution of the Ottawa river could be eliminated or controlled through prosecutions under the Criminal Code of Canada, Justice minister Garson has advised the Commons.

What I actually said, as reported at page 6388 of Hansard, was this:

> As I have stated on previous occasions on which we have considered this matter, I do not think a satisfactory solution to this problem can be found by proceedings in the criminal courts. That, of course, has been the view of the government all along and it is still our view.

I concluded my remarks with a review of the progress that had been made in controlling the pollution of the North Saskatchewan river during the past year and then, as reported at page 6392 of Hansard, I said this:

> I think, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend himself will agree—

I was referring to my friend the hon. member for Prince Albert.

> —there is more in that one statement—

That is the statement I have quoted of the progress that had been made in the preceding year.

> —in the way of progress in the control of the pollution of the North Saskatchewan river than my hon. friend can achieve in a dozen criminal prosecutions, whether under the existing law or under the amendment which he has moved and which I think is totally unnecessary.

The hon. member for Prince Albert had urged the house to amend the common nuisance section of the Criminal Code to make it possible to prosecute a corporation which puts into the North Saskatchewan river at Edmonton a polluting material which, flowing down that river into the province of Saskatchewan, creates a common nuisance in Prince Albert. He asked for support for this amendment upon his allegation that under the present law the corporations located in Edmonton within the jurisdiction of the courts of Alberta could not be prosecuted in those courts for the indictable offence of a common nuisance which they had created in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, within the jurisdiction of the Saskatchewan courts. I opposed the hon. gentleman's amendment upon the ground that section 419 (b) of the new code provides as follows:

> For the purposes of this act . . .

I am just reading the relevant words.

> . . . where an offence is commenced . . . within one territorial division and completed within another, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed in any of the territorial divisions.

A territorial division includes a province.

This is not only the law now but in a somewhat different wording it has been the law for many years before the new code was passed. The corresponding section of the old code was section 584.

But because it is possible to prosecute a corporation or municipality which commits a common nuisance by putting a polluting effluent into a river, either an interprovincial river or a river wholly within one province, it does not follow that a series of prosecutions under such a law is necessarily an effective method of controlling or eliminating pollution. Indeed, we have always taken the position that it is not and that the proper method is to prevent pollution by concerted action of the municipalities and governments concerned.

MR. FLEMING—ALLEGED CHANGES IN "HANSARD" BY MINISTER OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon following a remark made by the Minister of Defence Production, I made certain comments based upon his statement. These are found at page 6439 of Hansard. I will not read them all, but only one or two. I said, as reported in the second column on that page:

> The explanation given by the minister to this committee this afternoon was that this—

That was the sum of $2,880,000 that was paid as a profit to Sorel Industries Limited.

> —was paid to Sorel Industries Limited because that company was asked to keep its plant in idleness but available for military production if required.

The minister denied that that statement was true and also denied having made the statement that I attributed to him and on which I based my remarks. I added, Mr. Speaker, "that is what the minister said if the record stands as the minister made his statement this afternoon".

Now, the statement that Hansard attributes to the minister in this regard reads as follows at page 6433 of yesterday's proceedings:

> It—

That is speaking of the plant of Sorel Industries Limited.

> —was closed down in 1945. Very valuable machinery was available there and when it was quite obvious that we would require guns for the Korean crisis we of course were anxious to make an arrangement with Sorel that the machinery would be kept intact for that purpose.

That is what Hansard says the minister said, but Hansard is not correct. What the minister did, in fact, say is as follows:

> It was closed down in 1945. Very valuable machinery was kept there and when it was quite obvious that we would require guns for this year we of course were anxious to make an arrangement with Sorel that this machinery would be kept intact for that purpose.

I draw to your attention the fact that there are important differences between the statement the minister made and the statement attributed to him in the Hansard record at page 6433. I draw your attention to the fact that my statement, based upon the minister's statement, was quite justified in relation to the actual remark the minister made, for the year referred to was the year 1945.

Mr. McCann: He was talking about 1950.

Mr. Fleming: We were talking about—

Mr. McCann: He was talking about 1950, and "this year" refers to 1950.

Mr. Fleming: Apparently the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) is now going to jump in and change what was said. What was said was:

> It was closed in 1945.

The minister then goes on to talk about "this year". There was nothing said by the minister in that sentence about the Korean crisis, which came in 1950. The whole of the discussion was as to when this company was asked to keep its plant available for the government. There is the whole point, and I draw your attention to the fact somebody has changed the record of what was actually said yesterday.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): May I say that I did not see the blue sheets. I believe Hansard because Hansard does represent what I did say and intended to say. I am glad I had a witness to this discussion, otherwise the views of my hon. friend might carry more weight.

However, I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the committee that has been examining the Sorel situation, the exact matter under discussion, met this morning and presented a report that puts no criticism whatever on the government in relation to that.

An hon. Member: It gives it no credit, either.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I suggest perhaps the matter might be regarded as closed.

Mr. Fleming: The matter is not closed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I intervene at this moment to say it strikes me that the discussion which took place, took place in the committee of supply yesterday. I take it that as soon as we reach the orders of the day the committee of supply will resume consideration of these estimates. Now, if there is to be any discussion of the matter which has been referred to by the hon. member, I suggest it should be in the committee of supply when consideration of the estimates of the Department of Defence Production is resumed.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the matter is not raised now as a matter for argument. We had some argument about it yesterday. The matter is raised on a question of privilege as to the correctness of the Hansard report, and the statement I made as to what the minister said is not just my recollection; it is what appeared in the notes taken by the reporter and transcribed by him.

Mr. Speaker: Following the argument we had a few months ago this session with respect to Hansard, I would like to inform the house again that neither the Clerks nor the Speaker have anything to do with Hansard whatsoever. The man in charge, the editor, has the full responsibility as to what goes into Hansard, and if any member makes a correction the Hansard editor accepts it because he thinks it is within his order of reference; otherwise he would have to reject it on his own responsibility as editor of debates.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection if the minister indicated that he wanted to correct the statement that he made yesterday. That could be done at any time, and no one would raise objection to it, if the minister wanted to correct in a proper way the statement that he made. But the fact is that what was taken down and transcribed has been changed, and the record as it appears in Hansard at page 6433 is not the correct record of what the minister said yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by standing and special committees.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Third report of standing committee on public accounts.—Mr. Cannon.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—INQUIRY AS TO CONCLUSION OF TAX TREATY AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, press dispatches this morning carry a report that a tax treaty agreement has been reached between Canada and the United States. Can the Prime Minister make any comment on this report?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the agreement has not been completed. It is still before us for consideration, and as soon as it is completed the house will be advised.

Mr. Green: Is it expected that there will be any legislation at this session in respect of this treaty?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The matter will have to be considered. That was the bill the Minister of Finance had in mind yesterday, but the position is not such that a bill would be justified at this moment. If the agreement is reached and there is time to consider a bill, and it seems urgent that it should be considered, the matter will be discussed in the usual way with the representatives of the various groups.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INJURY TO CANADIAN OBSERVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would comment this morning and give the house further details concerning the injury to the two Canadian truce observers on Tuesday in the demilitarized area between Israel and Jordan and, in particular, say whether truce observers are given adequate protection when they are on duty and what went wrong in this particular instance, if something did go wrong.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as soon as we heard of this tragic accident to two Canadian observers, and since then I have heard of one to a Swedish observer of the United Nations truce observation organization in Palestine, we asked for a report on the matter from our representative there. I have just received a telegram which does give some information on the matter, and maybe I can read it to the hon. gentleman and to the house. It reads:

The foreign ministry—

That is the foreign ministry of the Israeli government.

—advised me—

That is our representative in Israel.

—of an incident on Mount Scopus—

This, as the hon. gentleman knows, is on the outskirts of Jerusalem.

—which has resulted in serious injury to two Canadian observers, Major George Flint and Major Marcel Breault.

According to the ministry report, a group of Arab legionnaires penetrated the Israeli-occupied section of Mount Scopus on the morning of July 24, seized a house there and refused to leave it. The United Nations truce observation organization then sent in an investigating team including the two above-mentioned Canadian observers. The ministry states that the United Nations Organization declined an offer of Israeli protection that apparently was made before they investigated and that in approaching the house the mine accidentally went off, seriously wounding the two Canadians. They were transported to the hospital in Jerusalem, the new city, where Major Flint was immediately operated on and his situation is reported grave. Major Breault, although badly wounded, was in less serious condition.

The wives of the two officers have been notified of this tragic incident, Mr. Speaker.

So far as the question of protection is concerned, the officers, of course, are United Nations officers although they are of Canadian nationality and we have never had any reason to believe that the United Nations Organization was not being given the protection by the governments concerned which was available although by the very nature of their work which is so hazardous that protection could never be complete.

ISRAEL—INQUIRY AS TO POSITION RESPECTING EXPORT OF SABRE JETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has any finality been arrived at with respect to the granting of export permits for the shipment of Sabre jets to Israel? There has been a press report that finality has now been achieved, and that is the reason I ask the question.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The press report is quite wrong. There has been no final decision made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the present position?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The present position is that the matter is under consideration and, as I have stated many times to many questions asked in the house, when a decision is reached it will be announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is taking a very long time to reach a decision.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If my hon. friend had the responsibilities we have it would take him a long time too.

Mr. Dickey: It would take him longer to get that responsibility though.

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO REDUCTION OF CANADIAN FORCES IN EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Defence or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Pickersgill: Make up your mind.

Mr. Knowles: I will add the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to the list if he would like to be included.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, thanks.

Mr. Hees: He will get up and speak anyway.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Knowles: What is the government's comment on this morning's Canadian Press dispatch that the government is considering, subject to action by Britain and the United States, a reduction in the number of our armed forces in Europe?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The question of our participation in NATO and what it requires or will require to carry out our part of the obligations of that organization is always under consideration with our associates in the organization.

FINANCE

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED GOVERNMENT SURPLUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Canadian Press this morning reports government authorities as estimating that the surplus at the end of the fiscal year will exceed $300 million, does the minister not consider that this is the time to consider substantial cuts instead of waiting for his sunshine budget?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report concerned, but at any rate at $300 million the estimate is a good deal less than the figure used by my hon. friends during the recent debate.

WATER POLLUTION

OTTAWA RIVER—INQUIRY CONCERNING PROSECUTION UNDER CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. I may have misunderstood him the other day when he spoke on the subject of pollution, but I did understand him to say that the present Criminal Code and the provisions thereof would meet the situation in prosecutions against wrongdoers polluting streams, and I thought the report to which he objected was substantially correct. In order to clarify it, however, I would ask the minister whether in his opinion under the provisions of the Criminal Code as they now are prosecutions could be taken in regard to what is taking place on the Ottawa river in particular whereby the waters are being so terribly polluted. Does he believe that under the law as it now exists prosecutions could take place successfully?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. friend to clarify his question? Prosecutions for what?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Prosecutions for pollution under the law as it now exists.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is surely aware that we have not been discussing pollution in these present debates. We have been discussing the creation of a common nuisance through pollution, which is a very different thing from the mere act of pollution.

If I may reply to his question in terms of the common nuisance we have been discussing, then I would say, confining it to the North Saskatchewan river—and the same thing would apply to the Ottawa river if the circumstances were the same—that where a corporation or a municipality puts a polluting effluent into an interprovincial river, which effluent flowing down the river creates a common nuisance in another province, if those who are interested in prosecuting can get sufficient evidence to bring home this common nuisance that has occurred, let us say, in Prince Albert, to the corporations which put the effluent in the river in Edmonton, then under the new Criminal Code as it now stands, and indeed as it stood before we recently revised it, it is quite possible procedurally to launch a prosecution in Edmonton for the common nuisance that was created in Prince Albert.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is almost more involved than the minister's previous explanation. I asked a simple question—

Mr. Dickey: The hon. member is the only clear example of a common nuisance—

Mr. Diefenbaker: —concerning the pollution of the Ottawa river. Is there a section of the Criminal Code today that would permit the prosecution of wrongdoers?

An hon. Member: Is this an extension of the private members' hour?

Mr. McIlraith: Those are the rules of the Conservative party.

Mr. Garson: If the effluent was put into the river by a municipality or a corporation and it caused a common nuisance in the same province in which the effluent was put into the river, I am sure my hon. friend from Prince Albert would agree that no problem of jurisdiction would arise; for in such a case it would be possible to launch a prosecution in that same province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under the laws of the province.

Mr. Garson: What I have said in relation to the North Saskatchewan river applies equally to the Ottawa river in so far as section 419 of the Criminal Code is concerned, which clears up the question of jurisdiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That section has nothing to do with pollution.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO SPONSOR PORTION OF CENTENNIAL RECORD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, notice of which I have not given so perhaps this can be taken as notice. In view of the fact that a province can hold a centennial only once, will the minister explain why the government has declined to sponsor any pages in the British Columbia official centennial record for 1958, and will the minister reconsider the decision not to participate in any sponsorship of this centennial record of the province of British Columbia which I think is a very important province of the Dominion of Canada?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree that British Columbia is one of the important provinces of the ten. As my hon. friend says, there are many ways of celebrating that in the course of a centennial. I have been spoken to by several members from British Columbia representing all parties in the house with regard to the matter to which my hon. friend has referred, but up to this moment I have been unable to find what are the true facts and how they came about. I shall mention this in the house later.

Mr. Winch: May I say it was under the name of Mr. C. A. St. Arnaud that the request was turned down.

Mr. Harris: I understand that a letter was written to that effect, but the matter has not been drawn to my attention. I shall make inquiry. It should be borne in mind, of course, that centennials come and go but, as my hon. friend has said, they ought to be celebrated properly if possible.

Mr. Winch: They come only once.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

BURNABY, B.C.—REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR ARTHRITIC CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if a health grant would be available for a treatment centre and home for arthritic sufferers such as is planned by the New Vista society of Burnaby? Has such a grant been applied for and whose responsibility is it to make application?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will have to see the details of the specific project. My hon. friend was kind enough to send me some newspaper clippings but I shall have to consider all the details of the project before making an answer. In the meantime I know my hon. friend will be happy to know that the federal government has given the child guidance clinic, the mental health centre, and the Burnaby general hospital considerable financial assistance quite recently.

MILK

ONTARIO PRODUCERS—REFERENCE TO TREATMENT GIVEN DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Huffman (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Minister of Agriculture. Is the statement of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) correct as carried in the Woodstock Sentinel-Review of July 20 where it is reported that the hon. member said that a deputation from the Ontario milk producers' association had appeared before the minister and were attempting to read their brief when the minister said that he was not interested in hearing about the milk industry?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, one of the newspapers in Toronto telephoned me last week and asked if such an incident had taken place. I stated to them that I could not remember any such incident having taken place at any time and was quite certain that no delegation had been met by me at any time in the manner suggested. I have been away since that time, having got back just this morning, when I found the following letter awaiting my return:

July 25th, 1956

Honourable James G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Gardiner:

This letter goes to you at this time, to express our deep regret and concern, over an article which appeared in the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, and the Toronto Globe and Mail of last Friday, July 20th. This report would indicate that a very disagreeable relationship existed between our organization and yourself and accuses you, sir, of refusing to listen to a brief which we endeavoured to present to you the preceding day, and states you were not interested in the problems of the milk industry.

You will recall that no representative of our group has met you since early in May, nor have we attempted to do so. On that occasion, while you may not have seen fit to accede to all our requests, the fact remains that we were given a kindly and courteous hearing by yourself, and on no occasion can we recall when you have treated us otherwise. Parts of this report, therefore, we deem as absolutely untrue, and grossly unfair to yourself, and we can assure you, sir, that we are making a thorough investigation to find out where and how it originated and will demand a retraction of these untruths. Trusting that on no future occasion a similar condition may arise, we remain,

Yours very truly,
Ontario concentrated milk producers' marketing board,
President, S. George Lowry,
Secretary Treasurer, Chas. Milton.

All I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, is that I wish to thank the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) for having created circumstances under which it became necessary for me to receive this kind of commendation from this organization.

Mr. A. E. Robinson (Bruce): Did the concentrated milk producers apply to the agriculture committee to put a brief before them and what reply did they receive?

Mr. Gardiner: The file was handed to me this morning and I notice there is an article in the Globe and Mail reporting someone who has discussed that question too. These people have some ideas with regard to it but, as was said, when this question was up in the house before—

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. Gardiner: I am answering your question and shall continue if you will remain in your seat. Only one can have the floor at a time.

Mr. Lennard: Get along with it.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not remember whether it was my hon. friend or some other member but within the last two weeks a question was asked in the house by some hon. member with respect to whether certain questions could be submitted to the agriculture committee. My reply at that time was to the effect that this house can submit any question to the agriculture committee. Those questions are not submitted by outside organizations. They may be submitted by them to the house itself, and the house can submit a question to the agriculture committee. The article to which I have referred states that the only things that come before the committee are matters having to do with the west, particularly wheat. If those are the only matters that get there it is because the western members are interested in seeing that those questions are brought before the house and submitted to that committee. Any other group from anywhere in Canada can go through the same procedure, get a matter submitted to that committee and have it discussed there, but that has not been done in this case.

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege, in relation to the statement the minister has made, in the absence of the member for Oxford I think I ought to say that I saw the article in the Toronto Globe and Mail to which the minister has made reference and the member for Oxford told me that the news report was not an accurate report of what he had said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Tell us another one.

Mr. Dickey: Any more hearsay evidence?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gardiner: Before we go on to any other matter I think I had better complete this one in view of the fact that my hon. friend has referred to the discussion that has just taken place. My hon. friend refers to something which was in the Globe and Mail and I think I should read a short statement appearing in another article in that paper. It reads as follows:

> The charge that a delegation of milk producers was turned away by agriculture minister Gardiner was vigorously denied yesterday by the head of the delegation. George Lowry, president of the Ontario concentrated milk producers' marketing board, said that the accusation made by Wallace Nesbitt, P.C., Oxford, was entirely false. Mr. Nesbitt made the charge last Friday at Woodstock in the course of an attack on the Gardiner administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gardiner:

He said—

I am repeating this "he said" to call attention to the fact that "he" means the hon. member in order that there may be no misunderstanding as appeared a few moments ago as to what "this" meant. I continue:

> He said the marketing board delegates were told by Mr. Gardiner that he had no time to listen to their problems. But Mr. Lowry said that when the delegation appeared before Mr. Gardiner in May "he treated us like a gentleman. Although he didn't accede to our request for a subsidy on exportable milk products he heard us out completely. I was there."

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture was: Did the concentrated milk producers ask to appear before the agriculture committee and, if so, what reply was given to them? I understand that I have not received an answer to that question yet.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not recall that any such request was made. It would not necessarily be made to me, although it could be, but I am not sure whether or not such a request was made.

Mr. Charlton: I can tell the minister it is a fact that they did try to get a hearing before the agriculture committee. Is it not a fact that in order to get a hearing before that committee the request must have the approval of the Liberal majority in the House of Commons?

Mr. Gardiner: I can assure my hon. friend that if either he or I make such a recommendation at the proper time it will probably get the support of the majority.

Mr. Charlton: It has been made before.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN REGULATIONS AFFECTING PRIVATE NETWORKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the C.B.C. contemplating any change in regulations that would permit the establishment of private networks in any form or under any circumstances?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the regulations were either changed or were under discussion at the last meeting of the board of governors of the C.B.C. The matter had to do with an application on behalf of certain private stations to set up a network, and although I am not sure as to the details of the minute that was passed I think it is being done on an experimental basis for a year. However, in order to be accurate I shall review the minutes of the meeting of the board of governors and bring in their recommendation in detail at another time.

Mr. Fleming: Could the minister either table the new regulation or draft regulation or send copies to members before we commence the consideration of his C.B.C. estimates in committee of supply?

Mr. McCann: I will see that it is either tabled or put on Hansard.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED USE OF R.C.A.F. PLANE IN 1953 ELECTION CAMPAIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. On whose authorization was it that an R.C.A.F. plane flew the former minister of transport from Ottawa to Lindsay and back again and to other political meetings in July of 1953?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has raised this question once or twice previously. I recall that on the last occasion I reminded him that I was not minister at that time and that I have no knowledge of what he is talking about.

Mr. Hodgson: The minister acknowledged the question and said he would give an answer I have never received. While he is getting that information dug up, I should also like to know who paid for the plane and who received the money.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

WINNIPEG—ALLEGED LOW FLYING OF R.C.A.F. PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he has yet received a report concerning the alleged low flying of R.C.A.F. planes over the cities of Winnipeg and St. James. I raised the question a week ago on the estimates.

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. I myself have not received any report on that matter directly. There may be one in the department that has not come to my attention.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

85. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,145,727.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I was going to answer some questions and give some information that I was asked to give at the last sitting. I do so as follows:

Statement on capital assistance to Sorel Industries Limited: The figures listed in the public accounts and referred to by the hon. member for Prince Albert include not only capital assistance to Sorel but also capital assistance to the Longueuil plant of Canadian Arsenals, together with the value of the Longueuil plant and equipment previously carried on Canadian Arsenals books and transferred to the Department of Defence Production in 1951.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No assets have been sold to Sorel Industries Limited since 1951. The book value of capital assistance assets remains the same as it was at the time of acquisition. Depreciation is only done at the time the assets are sold. The assets are as follows:

Housing at Sorel:
(65 houses renting at $75 to $93 per month)	$1,112,512
Capital assistance from 1951 to date:
At Sorel, including tools and equipment	2,931,707
At Longueuil, including tools and equipment and plant alteration	2,217,180

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the minister withhold his reply until it is quiet enough in the house for us to hear it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to take the house as I find it. I thought things were fairly calm. My friend the hon. member for Eglinton is not saying anything. That is something which is unusual.

Mr. Fleming: Don't speak too soon.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I continue:

Canadian Arsenals plant at Longueuil, occupied by Sorel Industries Limited: (book value as per Canadian Arsenals records)

Land	150,062
Buildings	1,712,353
Equipment	6,950,591
Raw materials	724,791	9,537,797
		15,799,196

That is the figure in the statement presented by my hon. friend as charged to Sorel Industries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow one question there?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On page DD-19 I note that Canadian Arsenals Limited, Ottawa, is all together in one item and that the amount under investment is given as $107,711,637. Does the minister say that, in so far as the public accounts are concerned, that figure or total for Canadian Arsenals Limited of $107,711,637 does not include Canadian Arsenals at Longueuil?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is correct. I was tracing down the figure that my hon. friend referred to yesterday, namely the $15,799,196. That included Longueuil. The figure he has just given does not include Longueuil.

I also have a breakdown of the figures on rehabilitation costs at Sorel Industries Limited. It is as follows:

Boarding houses	$215,000
Shop rehabilitation	680,000

(includes repairs to furnaces, electric and plumbing systems, purchasing such items as wire mesh, lumber, steel ingots, plates or castings, machinery parts, etc., and labour costs.

The above figures are approximate only as it would entail going through a large number of audit accounts to obtain the exact figures.

I also have a breakdown of figures in public accounts for fiscal year 1954-55 at page DD-21. It is as follows:

Sorel Industries Limited:
New machinery, equipment and plant alterations at Longueuil	$584,578
New machinery and equipment at Sorel	346,843
	$931,421

I think I have answered the questions I was asked.

Mr. Fleming: When the committee rose at six o'clock yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I had been asking a series of questions about matters pertaining to the administration of this department. We had reached the point where the minister was answering a question I had asked about orders in council and the minister's orders issued under the Defence Production Act. From the table which the minister had before him it is quite clear that no orders have been issued under this act since June 1, 1954, and that the orders in council that had been made prior to that time have all been allowed to lapse. I do not intend to launch into a long discussion on that particular subject, except to point out that it is the clearest kind of answer to the case which the government put up in this house a year ago when asking for continuation without limitation of the absolute powers that were vested in the governor in council and in the minister by that act. They have given their own answer now. The government have not found it necessary to pass a single order in council since June 1, 1954; every order in council that had been made prior to that time has been allowed to lapse and is not in effect; and the minister's orders under that act, as we see from the table the minister has before him, have likewise expired. Clearly, a great deal that was said last year by the government on the subject of the necessity of the continuation of these powers, without any trammelling or limitation, has been proven now to be utterly without foundation.

I come now to the question of house construction carried on through this department and its agencies. I should like to ask the minister how many housing units were constructed during, let us say, either the calendar year or the fiscal year on whatever basis it may be made up, and what was the cost of the housing?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The Department of Defence Production does not build houses in cities. We build accommodation up around the mid-Canada line and some remote areas, but the agency responsible for building housing for the armed forces is Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Fleming: Does the minister say that Defence Construction Limited is not taking any responsibility in connection with the construction of housing for the armed forces? My understanding has been that, while they farmed that work out to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, nevertheless the residual responsibility rested with Defence Construction Limited which is, of course, responsible to the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, Mr. Chairman, the responsibility was transferred from the Minister of Defence Production to the Minister of Public Works some years ago by an order in council prepared by myself. We always try to get the agency most capable of doing the work given the responsibility for it.

Mr. Fleming: May we take it that Defence Construction (1951) Limited now has no responsibility whatever in connection with any program for construction of housing quarters for the armed forces or for any government enterprise or agency that is responsible to the Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Except, as I said, there is some housing required in connection with stations on the mid-Canada line and also stations on the "Pinetree" line. What we are providing there is accommodation. We do not provide separate housing, but we do provide accommodation at isolated points on projects of that type for which we take full responsibility.

Mr. Fleming: That is not married quarters in any sense; that is just for individuals?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Fleming: There are several other specific questions I should like to ask in regard to last year's expenditures. If the minister will turn to page 170 in the book of estimates, there are several items there about which I should like to ask.

The first total is the sum of the salaries for full-time positions. The next line reads, "less anticipated savings due to staff turnover, $200,000." This is an increase of $60,000 over the estimate for the year before, which was $140,000. Can the minister make some comment on the rapidity of turnover in this department. That seems to indicate that there are going to be more savings due to staff turnover, which I presume means more vacancies in the course of the turnover. We were given to understand last year that if the department were put on a permanent footing, it would dispose of the uncertainty of employment of the members of the staff and result in greater stability within the staff. Will the minister explain this increase?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, a great number of our officers are technical men, particularly engineers. The turn-over in engineers does not arise from any lack of security in their government jobs. It arises from the fact that employers outside of government pay them twice as much as we do. We are constantly losing key personnel. This is one of the great difficulties. We recently lost the director of our aircraft division. I believe he was offered about 2½ times what we were paying him. This $200,000 is an estimate of the vacant positions we will have on an average during the year.

Mr. Fleming: My point was, does the increase in the estimate in this respect indicate that more staff turnover is expected in this fiscal year than occurred in the last fiscal year? Is this problem of the loss of technical personnel becoming greater?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, it becomes more serious every month. The demand for trained personnel is terrific and the salaries paid by private industry to get top, key men astonishes me. I thought I was hardened a bit to engineer's salaries, but I must say the modern generation's estimate of them is much higher than I ever thought.

Mr. Fleming: The next item is two lines down, "Less salaries of Employees of Cloth Warehouse, $116,468." What is the explanation of that deduction?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is charged to the operation of the revolving fund. We have a markup on our cloth covering the cost of warehousing and the cost of the salaries of the people engaged in the warehouse are charged to that item.

Mr. Fleming: The form of the estimate indicates that this is a new type of deduction. Has there been a change in the method of dealing with this matter?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It does not represent a change in the system. It has been suggested that previously it was done by a transfer at the end of the year. In other words, we obtained from the cloth account an amount equivalent to the payment of this commission, but we are not sure of that. We would need to explore that a little more fully. It is an accounting matter and I would want to get the accountant's view. In any case, we have always charged the cost of operating the cloth warehouse to the revolving fund and made a countercharge in the sale price of the cloth to cover it.

Mr. Fleming: The next question is about an item two lines farther down, "living allowances", indicating an increase from $85,000 last year to $90,000 this year. Could the minister explain that increase?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, that covers the allowances for offices abroad. There are new offices in the United States, somewhat larger offices in England and on the continent. It is a supplement to the salaries that are paid to people abroad.

Mr. Fleming: I take it that this increase is attributable to either the enlargement of the staff or the opening of new offices abroad for purchasing personnel?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is really due to opening offices at Dayton, Ohio, and Philadelphia; more personnel in the United States.

Mr. Fleming: It is for purchasing personnel?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, purchasing or selling; one or the other. Most of our aircraft orders or orders for electronic equipment come from Dayton which is the headquarters of the United States air force and Philadelphia is the purchasing centre for the navy.

Mr. Fleming: Then, three lines farther down we have an item, travelling expenses, $200,000. May I ask what was the actual expenditure in the last fiscal year ended March 31, 1956?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is $173,157.

Mr. Fleming: What is the reason for the contemplated increase this year, then? Is there going to be more travelling done? I thought the indication was that probably now the work of the department in relation to defence had been well advanced and there would probably be less of this type of work to do than in recent years.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, Mr. Chairman, that is not the case. I think our work this year was at the peak of all the years, taking into account the mid-Canada line. It is not so much the volume of the work as where the work is located. This is an estimate by our staff of the probable amount required to cover travelling expenses. If we do not need it we return it to the treasury.

Mr. Fleming: The last item on the list is "Sundries, $90,000". I ask what it covers and what was the actual expenditure last year on the item?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was $64,992. The item provides for unforeseen and other items which do not come under the headings of special categories.

Mr. Fleming: Can the minister be a little more specific as to the sort of thing that the sum of $64,992 was expended on in the last fiscal year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, I can give that information. Provision for 16 impressed accounts last year amounted to $15,250; services of Dun and Bradstreet, $725; payments to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation re disposal of scrap, $10,000; payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation of one-quarter of one per cent of the value of NATO procurements, surcharged by procurement services, $35,000; social security payments in France, $1,800; miscellaneous, $27,225.

Mr. Fleming: Does the minister contemplate an increase in the expenditures of that type during this fiscal year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is what we expect. The figures I just read out are what we expect. That is the allocation for this year. The hon. member wanted the actual expenditures last year?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, I thought that was what the minister was reading.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, the proposed expenditures for 1956-57.

Mr. Fleming: What do they aggregate? Is that the aggregate of $90,000?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is right.

Mr. Fleming: But last year the actual expenditure was $64,992.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. The items I have given are the break-down of what we expect: the impressed account; we always use Dun and Bradstreet a bit in connection with our work; disposal of scrap, the same as last year. I understand that is warehouse charges in connection with scrap. Then, we pay Canadian Commercial Corporation for their procurement services for NATO work, procurement outside the usual department responsibilities; social security for our people in France, and the miscellaneous item for further items that cannot be anticipated but they do crop up.

Mr. Monteith: I think this is where questions on the Canadian Commercial Corporation would be asked. I am just curious about the statement for the year 1956. I notice that interest earned is $96,635. I am just wondering what is the basis for charging interest in this corporation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is interest earned on bank balances. The money is often paid, for instance, on procurement for the United States, which is a very big item. Usually the payments are made before the—the Canadian Commercial Corporation pays the producer for the items. With respect to "Pinetree", for example, money was moved up in large amounts in anticipation of expenditures on the program.

Mr. Monteith: In the expenditures I notice contributions to employees' superannuation, death benefits and unemployment insurance totalled $21,995 in 1955, which is the first year the item appears in the accounts; and in 1956, it is $14,251. Does that mean that it will probably level off about there from now on?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, that is what we expect. We do not anticipate enlarging the staff of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. It seems to be about right for the business it is doing.

Mr. Monteith: With respect to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, I notice this item in the statement this year, "Provision for bad and doubtful accounts outstanding for five years or more, $45,157". Does that cover all accounts outstanding over five years?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am not sure. The Auditor General approves the manner in which the accounts are set up. I presume it is the equivalent of a businessman's provision for bad and doubtful debts. I daresay some of them will be collected. That often happens in business, I know. I cannot say other than that I can make inquiry about it later and find out for the hon. member.

Mr. Monteith: Actually, I would like to know how that amount of $45,157 is arrived at and the exact accounts going to make up that amount. I notice that it was charged to the expenses only this year. In other words, there had not been a reserve of any kind previously to March 31, 1955, and I am just interested in getting some of the details.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I shall be glad to bring that down; I shall have to consult the accountants of the company.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, there is another item in the expense account on page 30 of this statement that I am interested in, namely, "Amortization of costs of office partition, $13,205". In the previous year it was $3,877. I am just wondering why the word "amortization" is used there? I do not see any amount as deferred assets in the balance sheet.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am told it is the normal way of dealing with changes in leased premises; in other words, the changes which have to be paid for by the tenant are written off against the balance sheet in the year in which they occur.

Mr. Monteith: In other words, the full cost is charged in the year in which it is spent?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I believe so, yes.

Mr. Monteith: Amortization is hardly the right word.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): These are all short-term leases. It is expected that when the new building on Wellington street is finished Crown Assets will then occupy government quarters, but for the past two or three years it has been occupying leased quarters, I think, in two different locations.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, on this section I should like to ask one or two questions with regard to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. The corporation handles almost everything, apparently, as seen from this report, from aircraft and so on to land and buildings. In particular, I would like to know how material for disposal comes into the hands of the corporation from the defence services? Do the defence services declare the material surplus to their establishment and notify the corporation to that effect and then hand it over to them? What is the method by which the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation gets control of material from defence services?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The only manner in which anything comes into the custody of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is through a declaration of surplus by an authorized officer of some branch of government.

Mr. Churchill: I was interested in the arms and ammunition which apparently has been declared surplus to establishment by the services, and has gone into the hands of the crown corporation. Looking back over the last five years I find that some of the surplus equipment has been disposed of by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. For example, in 1950 they disposed of a substantial number of Browning machine guns and parts but in the year 1954-55—I am going by the fiscal year ending 1954-55—surplus pistols, automatic guns, Colt shell guns, rifles and cartridges ball have all been disposed of by International Firearms Limited or Sumac Industries or Ansco Products Company.

I presume these companies perhaps bid for the material that is available from Crown Assets. I do not know, but I would like to follow that up with this question. On page 16 of the report of the department there is a paragraph concerning ammunition which indicates that production of complete rounds of ammunition increased in both volume and variety in 1955. If that is the case and if ammunition is still being produced for the services, how would it become surplus in 1955 and disposed of to the International Firearms Company in the amount of just under 400,000 rounds or cartridges ball as shown in the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation annual report for March 31, 1955, on pages 20 and 21? If the services require ammunition what type of ammunition are they declaring surplus?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The Department of Defence Production would not know why the ammunition becomes surplus. All we know is that we have a declaration showing a certain amount of ammunition and its location and it is declared surplus to requirements. We do not go back of that declaration; there is no reason why we should, really. The hon. member said the disposal is carried on also by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. That is not a fact. The Canadian Commercial Corporation acts as procurement agent for foreign governments and NATO. Any ammunition they take on is to fill an order from NATO or from another government. Any declaration of surplus comes to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and is acted on by them.

Mr. Churchill: I understand that. I mentioned the Canadian Commercial Corporation as having, I judge, purchased from Crown Assets certain Browning machine guns in 1950 perhaps on behalf of a foreign government.

I also appreciate the fact that Crown Assets does not know why material is declared surplus to establishment but there is an overlapping here with defence production and crown assets and the defence services themselves. I am simply asking this question in an exploratory sense and now the minister has given the answer I would consequently have to go back to the Minister of National Defence to discover why he found it advisable to dispose of approximately 15,000 revolvers within the last two or three years and 400,000 rounds of cartridges.

There is just one other question along that line. The prices to the purchasers seem to be very reasonable. I take it that in the report of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation on page 20, where about ten lines from the top cartridge ball is mentioned and in brackets the figure 311,900 appears it would represent the quantity, and the price is shown as being $4,751.51, which means that these cartridges are selling for one and a half cents apiece. I have no idea whether that is just the bid the corporation gets for this material or whether it is the price they set on it but certainly the ammunition is selling very cheaply.

It would be very interesting to know what that ammunition cost when the Department of Defence Production was producing it and it would also be interesting to know what the pistols cost which were selling in 1955 for $3.75 or $7.40. These prices must be just a fraction of the original cost of the ammunition and the revolvers.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, in selling revolvers my hon. friend will appreciate we do not sell them from door to door. We must be very sure of the disposition of the revolvers we sell, and very often they are sold with an undertaking that they will be mutilated and converted into scrap. Where we have an article that can be sold freely we must call for tenders and advertise the sale and the company accepts the highest tender. I have no way, and I am sure my hon. friend has no way, of knowing the condition of the ammunition. It may have deteriorated. I think a good deal of ammunition does come for disposal due to the fact that it is over age and therefore not serviceable for the armed services. Whether this is a part of that, I cannot say, but the rule of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is that every sale is advertised in the newspapers and the highest bid is accepted.

Mr. Green: There is one point on which I would like some information and that is the operation of the mid-Canada line. What are the plans for actually operating the line once it has been completed?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, the line is now being constructed and the management agency for the construction is the Trans-Canada Telephone Company. They have designated the Bell Telephone Company as the agent for the company in charge of this particular project.

The line is due to be put into operation on January 1 next. That date still seems to be valid and is the original date planned. So far as I know it will be carried out. Nevertheless the construction of the line will not be fully completed for another several months. There will be testing of equipment required and tuning up and that sort of thing. It is the proposal of defence production with the concurrence of the services to arrange an operating contract with the Trans-Canada Telephone Company for the first three years and that contract is now being negotiated.

I think my hon. friend would agree it would be a tragedy to have one organization building the line and another organization operating it. You would have a gap there which I think would be dangerous for the owner and that is what we are trying to arrange for by this negotiating contract.

Mr. Green: Does that mean in effect that the Bell Telephone Company will be operating the line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Green: What companies make up the Trans-Canada Telephone Company?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): B.C. Telephone Company, Alberta Government Telephones, Saskatchewan Government Telephones, Manitoba Telephone System, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, New Brunswick Telephone Company Limited and Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company Limited. While Bell is the agency for having the work done under the contract, all these companies make a contribution to the work. For instance, if we are building a station in northern Alberta, Alberta Telephone supply the equipment and men needed in constructing and operating the line. It is expected that Bell will draw on all the companies making up the Trans-Canada telephone system. The manning is quite a problem as provision must be made for rotation. I doubt if technical men can be kept in the north for more than one year at a time and it is quite important that the company which undertakes the operation be able to rotate employees so that an employee leaving the line will not be out of a job. That is the advantage of having Trans-Canada Telephone.

Mr. Green: Will there be any civilian use permitted of the mid-Canada line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No, it is restricted now and I think it always will be restricted to military use. The communications system must be instantly available in case warning is given anywhere on the line and it must not be cluttered up with civilian messages or the staff supposed to be watching for military messages must not be worrying about civilian messages.

Mr. Green: Is there more equipment being installed than is required for defence purposes?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Just the minimum for defence purposes.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give the approximate number of men required to man the line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Approximately 800.

Mr. Green: That would be entirely civilian staff?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That would be entirely civilian staff. In addition the R.C.A.F. will have men on the line to the extent required for the military use of the line. In other words, at probably each main station an R.C.A.F. technician will be in charge, but that is simply to make sure that the operation ties into the requirements of the R.C.A.F. and the U.S.A.F. The headquarters for air defence are in Montreal and at defence command at Colorado Springs.

Mr. Green: At all events the manning group would be mainly civilian personnel?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There would just be air force personnel in charge to maintain military control. I do not know how many there would be, but I think the number would be quite small.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any question as to the civilian use of the mid-Canada line? Could not some navigational aids be given through the facilities of the line, particularly in connection with search and rescue operation?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Perhaps it could be used in emergency for search and rescue or something of that sort. It is not designed to have any commercial use whatsoever. In other words, while the communications are there, if a man drops into a station and wants to send a radio message home, that would be barred.

Mr. Dinsdale: Are not search and rescue operations tied into the communication facilities of the mid-Canada and other lines?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am not aware of it. That is something I would not know about as it is a military matter.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): A moment ago the minister said that a contract was being negotiated with the Trans-Canada Telephone system and I should like to know if that company has been given definite assurance that it will have the operation of the line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I dare say they suspect that we want to bring that about, but it will depend entirely upon whether we can negotiate a satisfactory contract. If we cannot we will try someone else.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Within the framework of that answer, that the company has not been given any assurance that they will have the operation of the line and that there is a possibility the contract might be awarded to someone else, I should like to draw the minister's attention to an article which appeared in the Montreal Monitor, a very fine weekly newspaper which carries a number of interesting features and news about Montreal generally. On page 3 of the issue of July 9 will be found a series of photographs of men training for the operation of this line under the aegis of the Bell Telephone Company of Montreal, as agents for the Trans-Canada Telephone system. While the article gives prominence to the fact that the line is now being constructed by this organization, it contains this paragraph which I think is interesting:

> The mid-Canada line, which will be over 3,000 miles long, is being built, and eventually will be maintained, by the Trans-Canada Telephone system.

Further on they give a description of the work and training of these people and then the article states:

> He will co-ordinate equipment installation, operate the electronic apparatus and keep it in working condition.

I must say it is most interesting to find that a company which has been given no assurance whatsoever that it is going to get the contract and therefore can have no positive expectation that it will get the contract is already training men to carry out the provisions of that contract. I am just wondering whether in the light of the minister's observations and the effect of what we see here there may be something else the minister could inform the committee about as to perhaps some other indication the company has had that they are going to have the operation of this line.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The explanation is quite simple. The management contract presently in force between the government and the Trans-Canada Telephone system provides that Trans-Canada will train men for operating the line, for installing the equipment and maintaining the line. That is under their present contract. That must be carried out well in advance of the take-over of the line by the management contractor. Bell, I think, have no assurance at the moment which would allow them to undertake work for any new contract. Perhaps they are sure enough that we can arrive at an agreement to venture out, but it does not sound to me like the Bell Telephone Company. I cannot be responsible for the article which my hon. friend read from the very fine weekly paper, but those are the facts.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The minister made his statement and then he hesitated for a moment, stating that the present contract carries the provision that the Bell Telephone Company will train men to operate the line.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is an error; I said "operate" but it is to maintain the equipment, instal and maintain the equipment.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): If evidence can be introduced that the company is training men to operate the apparatus on the line it would indicate that the Bell Telephone Company for whatever reason has gone somewhat further than would be expected by the terms of the present contract.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is a lining up and testing before we can take over the line; no matter who operates the line the Bell Telephone would have to line up the equipment and test it and get complete approval of it before we would pay them for it. They are also training air force personnel in the same school and for the same duty. I have no reason to believe that the Bell Telephone Company is operating outside the requirements of their present contract with the government. If they are, the government, of course, has no responsibility for the costs involved.

Mr. Green: What is the latest estimate of the total cost of the mid-Canada line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It has not changed. It is $170 million.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a couple of fairly short and simple questions. On page DD-14 of the public accounts for 1955 we find an item of $4,176 for removal expenses involving one employee of this department. That is a rather fantastic sum.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What is the name of the employee?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. D. B. Mundy, the second column, approximately 15 names down.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): He was our representative in Paris and that is the cost of moving himself and his family from Paris to Ottawa.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Farther down in the same column we find an amount of $6,348 for the living allowance of a Mr. Solly-Flood, and I am wondering whether that is a typical living allowance.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The explanation is given there. That is Solly-Flood who took over the office in Paris when Mr. Mundy left. The amount of $1,666 is indicated as removal expenses and the $6,348 is the living allowance at the annual rate.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): What is the annual rate?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is set by treasury board. It is the same for all officers abroad whether they are in an embassy, a trade office or in this office.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Earlier there was some discussion about the sale of surplus material. In that connection I am wondering whether when such material is sold there is any provision made that it should not be sold back again to the government at inflated prices or represented as new material when it is sold back.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I think it is sold on the basis of caveat emptor.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Which translated, and probably for the benefit of the minister himself, means, let the buyer beware. I think that is an unfortunate principle for the government of Canada to use in selling material. I should like to think we had a government that stood behind its actions rather than expecting the person who buys from it or does business with it—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend a question? Would he like to guarantee second-hand materials that are sold on a bid basis?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): No, I quite agree with the minister that I would not like to guarantee them but I would not come out flatfooted and say that I did my business in the disposal of surplus materials on the basis of buyer beware. I think there is a middle ground between no guarantee—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I can assure my hon. friend that surplus materials are sold as is, where is, no guarantees of any kind, and I think the buyer is well aware of that and bids accordingly.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): That, however, was not the point. The point I was asking about was whether there is any restriction on the sale of this material which would prohibit the buyer selling it back to the government at any kind of inflated price that he is able to obtain. Let us imagine, for example, that a few months from now we are in a period of hot war in which the government suddenly requires again a great deal of this material that it has released. Can the present buyers hold up the government for any amount that they feel they can obtain or is there a clause in the contract which refers to a selling price when the material is sold back to the government?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. Materials purchased from Crown Assets Disposal Corporation are sold without restriction. There are no strings on them at all. Of course, it could not be otherwise. How long would my friend suggest that these materials be held to make sure that they did not come back to the government? What would be the time limit on it, a five year period or a ten year period? We could not sell goods on that basis.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to make what I think is a constructive suggestion. Why is it not possible for the government in selling surplus material to include a clause in the contract that if and when that material is sold back to the government it must be identified by the seller as surplus material? I pointed out a situation to the Minister of National Defence naming specific contracts which had called for material of new and current manufacture and where, according to my information, the material sold was actually surplus material which was paid for at new and current manufacture prices.

Under the present terms that is quite legal. I do not think it would handicap the government in any way in its sales efforts nor would it be an unfair imposition on the people who buy the material to have to agree that if they sell it back to the government they must identify it as surplus material at the time of the sale. Otherwise it is quite possible for a person to sell material back to the government and the government, quite unwittingly and unknowingly, to buy it as brand new material. Is that not possible?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I do not know whether or not it is possible. The government does not buy surplus material. It buys new material. Remember that Crown Assets Disposal Corporation does not handle anything that can be useful to the agency that declared it surplus. If a vendor introduces as new material articles that he got from that corporation and can palm off some of that material I should think he runs a very great risk of being cut off from future transactions with the government or the risk of prosecution if the offence is serious. My hon. friend says that we should put a tag on this material. How do we know where it goes? It is usually bought by dealers and the dealer sells it the next day. Just how would you arrange to follow that material around to enforce a provision that if it is sold by anybody to the government it should be tagged as surplus material?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The minister says that if the purchaser of surplus material sells it back to the government he is in danger of being cut off from future government contracts, and by inference the minister indicates that the man has engaged in very unusual and unfair business practices. May I suggest that perhaps the gentleman or the company in question is operating in a business on the basis of caveat emptor which the minister has just recommended as being the government's own method of operation in handling surplus material.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister this morning answered one question I had asked but he failed to answer the other question with reference to this plant at Longueuil which he says belonged to Canadian Arsenals Limited, the equipment and plant of which was used by Sorel Industries Limited and apparently included in the public accounts as though it represented a capital advance to Sorel Industries. As reported at page 6448 of Hansard I asked whether any rental had been paid by Sorel Industries Limited in this case to Canadian Arsenals Limited for the equipment or the premises used by Sorel Industries Limited. Can the minister give us that information?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. The plant at Longueuil was used for reconditioning artillery sent there for that purpose by the armed services. When we found that more floor space was needed at Sorel, we moved that operation to another arsenal and turned that space over to Sorel. There was no purpose in charging rent because, had we charged rent, it would simply have come back to us in the form of cost plus profit from Sorel. We do not charge rental for government-furnished property which is used exclusively for producing government articles. There would be no purpose in doing so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a very good deal for Sorel Industries.

Mr. Holowach: There is just one question I should like to ask in respect to this item. It deals with Canadian Commercial Corporation. I was wondering whether the minister could tell us something with respect to the defence procurements of this corporation. As I understand it, when the government or a foreign government has defence procurements that it desires to make in the country it acts through the Canadian Commercial Corporation and a surcharge is made on all purchases on behalf of the government or of a foreign government. Has the minister any information with respect to the total purchases made by the corporation and as to what percentages of them were for foreign governments?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. It is in the annual report every year. Has my hon. friend a copy of the annual report?

Mr. Hansell: He has not it at hand.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was delivered to him, I believe, when it was tabled. If he will look at page 7, he will find that whole page is devoted to that information. For instance, for the year under review—that is 1955-56—we find the following:

> The total value of supplies, services and projects contracted for by the corporation during the fiscal year amounted to $77,860,000, as compared with $92,981,700 in the previous year.

Then it breaks down that amount among United States military departments, Colombo plan, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, United Nations agencies, United Kingdom, importing of Rhesus monkeys—

Mr. Knowles: More Liberals.

Mr. Dickey: No; they were C.C.F.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): —and other transactions.

Mr. Holowach: I have one more question. Are the surcharges made by the Canadian Commercial Corporation insufficient to pay for the administrative costs of the department?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. They are quite sufficient for the corporation, not the department. The corporation is a buying agency for handling purchases for foreign governments or purchases by the department in countries abroad. Instead of working out government to government transactions, which is a very cumbersome method for most governments, it is much more convenient to be able to have a crown corporation handle the transactions. This method is preferred particularly by the United States. It greatly simplifies purchases when they are made from one government agency to another. Therefore we use the Canadian Commercial Corporation for that purpose; and the surcharge that it applies is sufficient to cover its costs.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Can the minister explain to us the item "Rental of office accommodation" at $5,000? It was my understanding that all matters of this kind were handled through the Department of Public Works and were not under the jurisdiction of any other department.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is for new offices in Paris until the Department of Public Works can organize to get us offices in Paris.

Mr. Holowach: Mr. Chairman, the point I was making with respect to the question I asked was this. Since the surcharges are sufficient to meet the administrative costs of Canadian Commercial Corporation, why is it necessary to vote money for the administrative costs of this particular department? I understand that the assets of Canadian Commercial Corporation are quite substantial. I just cannot quite understand why we should be adding to their assets.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, we have never voted money for operating costs. We have voted money for capital account. It takes a certain amount of capital to handle these transactions. For instance, some are paid for by the recipient government sometime after the purchases are made. Originally we had capital of $10 million. For a time during the Korean crisis we were obliged to ask for an additional appropriation. That has been returned. I think about $4 million of the $10 million has been returned to the treasury. But certainly capital is required to carry on the business. The interest on that money which is borrowed from the government is a charge against the corporation, and the fee covers the interest on borrowed money as well as the operating costs.

Mr. Low: Is the capital fund not operated as a revolving fund?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No; it is not.

Item agreed to.

86. Care, maintenance and custody of standby defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling, $500,000.

Mr. Fleming: I presume the trend of expenditure under this item and the next is downward and will continue in that way?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We have not really had enough experience on this item. I would say it is likely to grow larger. For instance, we have a private firm that has a line of machinery set up to manufacture, we will say, 25-pounder shells. A decision has to be made as to whether that line can be dismantled and the machinery returned to whoever owns it—it is usually returned to Canadian Arsenals—and whether we can do away with the facilities. In many cases we think we can do so but occasionally we think it would be dangerous to do so. In that case we make a deal with the private company to maintain the line in operating condition so that it can be reactivated on short notice if required. The United States goes very extensively into that plan of operations. We are just feeling our way in it. We have not gone so deeply into it as yet. Just what the future will bring for us we do not know. We would not care to predict what may happen more than a year ahead.

Mr. Fleming: This item was estimated last year at $750,000. I refer to the estimate for care, maintenance and custody of standby defence plants, buildings, machine tools and production tooling. This estimate last year was $750,000. Yesterday the minister reported to the committee that the sum expended—which is the sum actually required by the department in the light of its experience during the fiscal year—was just $160,499. We can, of course, appreciate the fact that the estimate for the present fiscal year of $500,000 was prepared some months ago when the book of estimates was under preparation. But now in the light of experience for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, I think it is evident that the department does not need nearly as much as it has asked for. That was the experience last year. If in this year's estimate allowance is made for a reasonable increase over last year's actual expenditure in order to cover any contingency, that ought to be enough. I again draw attention to the fact that the amount actually expended for the last fiscal year was $160,499. If the sum of $200,000 were allowed for this item, that would represent an allowable increase of 20 per cent over last year's expenditure. It seems to me that ought to be a reasonable allowance for this purpose. I therefore move:

That item 86 be reduced by the sum of $300,000 to $200,000.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend seems to think that the officers of the department can look ahead 18 months and decide what production lines are running out of work and also decide, in the light of conditions as they may be then as to whether the government should go to the expense of maintaining the production line. There are two variables in there which no one can predict with accuracy. We do not know when other orders will come in to keep the lines going. I think that happened to the estimate last year. Circumstances may change in the military requirements so we could be certain that a production line will not be needed.

We have here the considered opinion of our production officers who are in immediate touch with matters. I certainly would not take the responsibility of cutting the estimate that they have prepared in the light of their intimate knowledge of the problem, and I am in touch with these matters every day. I would think my hon. friend is in a much less favourable position to form an opinion than I am. I believe I must ask that this amount be voted.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Does this item 86 take care of government plants or is that in any way connected with contributions to be made to other concerns, such as Sorel that we were discussing the other day where there were payments for care and maintenance.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It could be both, but it was really intended to take care of the expenses of maintaining Canadian government equipment in operating condition in plants the government does not own. For instance, we have a line that is being maintained at Oshawa in the plant of General Motors to make military vehicles. It is not in use now but we feel sure there will be a call for more military vehicles. We think the line should be maintained. We have made an arrangement with General Motors for that purpose.

There are other lines which we feel we will need in the future and therefore we pay the firm for the space that is occupied so the line will be ready when we start up. This is specialized production and it is far easier to maintain an existing line than it is to tool up again when the requirement comes along.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The total amount spent last year was about $160,000?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I had better read the explanation here. The item is to provide for the cost of care, maintenance and custody of defence plants in standby condition and for the care and maintenance of buildings, machine tools, equipment and production tooling, including the costs of dismantling, packaging, crating, transportation, inhibiting, storage and other expenses incidental to the preservation of such facilities which may be required again. It is essential to ensure that buildings, machinery and equipment, assets which make up key defence production lines, do not deteriorate upon completion of various production contracts.

In order to do this it may be necessary, where arrangements cannot be made to continue production for defence purposes or to meet the problem by using crown owned facilities for commercial purposes on an adequate rental basis, to preserve production lines in such a manner that they can readily be put back into service with little or no delay. In most cases, capital assets which make up these key production lines are crown owned. However, there are a limited number of cases where, in order to preserve a vital production line comprised of intermingled crown owned and privately owned capital assets, it may be necessary to reimburse the private owners for keeping their assets in an inactive status.

Therefore, it is proposed to take the following action where necessary to ensure preservation of key production facilities:

(a) Preserve fully integrated crown owned defence plants and buildings, in part or in full, in standby condition;

(b) Move capital assistance assets and production tooling from a contractor's plant to government warehouse for storage or preservation in situ, or move to other contractor's plants when advisable. In the latter event, repairs, adaptations and moving costs would be paid from this item.

(c) Preserve contractor owned equipment in a standby condition.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I mentioned a moment ago that I thought it was about $160,000 that was spent last year; is that right?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, about that.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): The hon. member for Eglinton had moved a motion to reduce this amount. I can hardly agree with that personally because, although I do think that $500,000 is a lot of money to have in this item, I also believe that you must be in a position to have production of this necessary equipment or arms when the need arises. I believe we would be in a bad position if, suddenly, an occasion arose and we demanded immediate production of our war materials and we found the estimate had been reduced to an amount that could not properly keep our equipment and tools in condition.

Now, I am not one of those who advocate that the government should spend money unnecessarily or by under-the-table methods. I think it should be all above board. But I would not like to see our defence put in a position where we did not have the proper tools, the proper factory space, to carry on the necessary work that may be required at a moment's notice. I do not think, therefore, I can support the motion that has just been moved.

Mr. Fleming: I have a brief observation to make.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. Resolution 86, and the amendment of Mr. Fleming. Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, there are a few observations I should like to make on this amendment before the question is put.

In his comments on my amendment the minister drew attention to the fact that this estimate of $500,000 was prepared by the officials of his department. We are aware of that; we are aware that the estimate was prepared last autumn before the full experience of the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956 was known. These estimates are already, I suppose, about eight months old. A good eight months—and perhaps more than that; it may be a year—have passed since these estimates were prepared by the officials of the department. They followed the usual course of going to treasury board and then being printed. The book carries the estimates, so far as the actual expenditure is concerned, only down to December 1, 1955, so that when we are at the end of July, 1956, it seems to me that we have an advantage, a very great advantage in respect of time and the experience of the last fiscal year over those who were called upon to prepare these estimates perhaps as long as a year ago.

I think we are bound, Mr. Chairman, to look at the record of the estimating a year before. Now, with all due respect to the same officials who prepared their estimate under the same admitted handicap as to time, the estimate they prepared on this item for the previous year, that is the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, was $750,000; but in actual experience it was found that the money required, in other words, the money actually spent, was just $160,499. Therefore, we know that, expressing it in terms of percentage, the amount that was found to be necessary in actual experience was just 22 per cent of the amount that was estimated by the department the previous year. I ask hon. members to weigh the fact that there was a 78 per cent excess in the last fiscal year, that is, the year ended March 31, 1956, in the amount asked for over the amount that was actually required. That, I think, cannot be overlooked.

In the amount I have suggested should be substituted I have not cut below last year's actual requirements. Indeed, the figure that I have proposed to be left in is $200,000, which is a sum substantially in excess of the amount actually required and expended last year. There is a 20 per cent increase permitted there, and I think there has not been any case made out for any increase and certainly there has not been anything said yet in this discussion to warrant the belief that that amount would not be sufficient, yes, and more than sufficient.

We like to see accurate estimating. I think it is the duty of parliament to check these estimates closely, always recognizing, as I have tried to do this afternoon, that the officials who prepare them did not have the advantage that we have in point of time.

The minister says, Mr. Chairman, that if the money is not actually required it will not be spent. That is not the proper approach for representatives of the people sitting in parliament and dealing with the expenditure of public funds. We should examine to see what is properly necessary to meet the cost of government services that are approved in this house, and we should not be putting in these estimates larger sums which are just a temptation to spend. I suggest that we remove where we can any excess and thus remove any temptation to spend.

Having regard to the fact that the amount that this amendment will leave available in this item is ample to meet all the needs indicated and provide for a 20 per cent increase over last year, if that were necessary, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this item is much too large and that it should be reduced by the sum of $300,000, leaving $200,000.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, may I say just a word in connection with estimating? On June 29, 1956, the hon. member for Eglinton questioned the accuracy of departmental estimating by comparing the moneys voted by parliament with actual expenditures made by the department. I would like to point out that most of the difference was in the capital assistance votes and that this type of vote has a number of variable factors which must be taken into account because they involve relatively large contingencies of a kind not required in most departmental votes.

A review of the figures relating to the capital assistance votes shows that a little over $300 million was voted in the last five fiscal years, and that actual expenditures accounted for slightly less than half that amount. The difference, of course, is comprised of the amounts which lapsed at the end of each fiscal year. It should not be assumed, however, that because the balances were allowed to lapse, the moneys should not have been voted in the first place.

Some 20 per cent of the total voted, or $82 million, represented moneys revoted because the projects were not completed in time to pay all the accounts from the original vote. The net amounts voted for new projects were, therefore, in the order of $220 million. It might also be observed that the largest portion of the revotes occurred during the early days of the present defence program when shortages and bottlenecks made it difficult to judge the rate at which projects would be completed. As the program continued, work on capital projects proceeded at a more uniform rate, and in the last fiscal year only 9 per cent of the total vote was for funds committed but not paid in that fiscal year.

Another explanation accounting for more than one-third of the total lapses, or 20 per cent of the total amount voted, relates to projects not proceeded with but which were under consideration at the time the estimates were prepared, which was six months in advance of the fiscal year. You will appreciate that, in a defence production program, plans have to be made well in advance, often on the basis of projected requirements of the Department of National Defence. In some cases we were able to persuade private industry to build or acquire the necessary facilities and equipment, or we found that other arrangements could be made. In other instances, it was found after careful study of all the facts that the requirement had changed and the project was no longer needed.

Lapses occasioned by overestimating the cost of approved projects amounted to $15 million, or 5 per cent of the total voted, and this margin does not seem unreasonable.

My hon. friend says that at this stage we should have changed our views and decided that a lot less money is required. We are unable to do that. We are the servants of the Department of National Defence. If, tomorrow, the Department of National Defence tells us to close down one of our principal plants we close it down immediately. But what do we do with the equipment? We can sell the plant, perhaps. We had a case a while ago of a hexachlorethane plant that had been very active for a great many years. It ran out of orders. We had to close it down. We had to inhibit the equipment. We know the plant will be needed again whether there is war or peace, and we spent a good deal of money on that project. There may be similar cases tomorrow or the next day or another day. If we have not the money we just have to let the machinery deteriorate until we get the money.

I can assure my hon. friend that I have discussed the matter with my officers in the luncheon period and I am assured that they believe this estimate is just as valid today as it was when the estimates were first prepared. In the circumstances I cannot for a moment consider reducing the amount of the estimate.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Goode: I want to refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Eglinton because I am usually very interested in what he says. In this case I think he has a good point. He based his remarks just now on the fact that the government had a temptation to spend because this vote this year is $500,000. If one follows this same line of argument the temptation to spend last year was 50 per cent more than it is this year because last year the vote was $750,000. The department spent $169,000. Therefore, I think the officers of the department and the minister have shown their responsibility in this matter. This is just a difference of opinion on the government side of the house and on the opposition side. The minister in this case has shown his officials that the responsibility was well placed. I think he has done very well in cutting this vote by 50 per cent, and that the temptation to spend is thus 50 per cent less than it was last year.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 29; nays, 92.

Item agreed to.

87. To provide capital assistance for the construction, acquisition, extension or improvement of capital equipment or works by private contractors engaged in defence contracts, or by crown plants operated on a management-fee basis, or by crown companies under direction of the Minister of Defence Production, subject to approval of treasury board, $7,500,000.

The Chairman: Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Fleming: No, no.

Mr. Dinsdale: On item 87, Mr. Chairman, I note that the vote is mainly concerned with capital assistance for the construction, acquisition, extension or improvement of capital equipment or works by private contractors engaged in defence contracts, et cetera. There is a reduction of almost $1 million in this item for the current year and I presume this trend will be continued as we recede from the Korean war emergency.

I recall that when the Department of Defence Production was re-established to meet the Korean crisis this sum for capital assistance reached quite substantial proportions.

We in western Canada were extremely interested in this particular aspect of the Department of Defence Production and our chambers of commerce and business and industrial leaders made very strong efforts to ensure that western Canada and particularly the prairie provinces would receive an equitable share of the new upsurge in defence production.

We remembered the experience of world war II when the prairie provinces became depopulated almost overnight as our young people moved to fill the labour demands in the defence factories that were mushrooming in eastern and central Canada to meet the industrial demands of world war II.

There seem to be several hon. members who want to make speeches at this time, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Finish your speech. Go ahead.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am suffering from a cold, Mr. Chairman; otherwise I could make my voice heard above the noise in the chamber.

Examining the public accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1955 it would seem we have not had too much success in overcoming the mistakes that were made in the build-up of world war II so far as a more equitable distribution of defence industry across the country is concerned.

As I look at page DD-3, a list of capital assistance items totalling over $25 million, I observe that with only three exceptions out of a long list covering pages DD-3 and DD-4 each one of those capital assistance grants was made in some part of Ontario or some part of Quebec.

The same pattern is observed in the contract awards of over $25,000 outlined on page DD-4 of the public accounts. In like manner the grants in lieu of taxes for defence industries are all concentrated in the two central regions. This is a complaint that has been raised in the house from time to time particularly by members from the western and maritime provinces and I would like to frame it in a specific question at this time.

I note, for example, that the Minister of Defence Production has considerable influence in this regard because on page 26 of the report of his department, in the first paragraph under the heading "Industry and Defence", we read the following:

In addition to purchasing responsibilities, the Minister of Defence Production is charged with responsibility for organizing and mobilizing the resources of Canada, including the co-ordination of economic and industrial facilities, in order to meet the current and prospective needs of defence.

That is a big item. The minister has almost complete power and responsibility over a large segment of our economy. Continuing with the quotation:

The general economic background against which the program will have to be carried out must be taken into account in discharging these responsibilities, which fall into two main categories. The first is the development and maintenance of production capabilities (i.e. adequate facilities, skilled labour, engineering experience and technical knowledge) which are required to meet the equipment needs of the armed forces. The second is the availability of the strategic and basic materials needed to carry out the defence production program.

As I have already indicated, that gives the minister tremendous responsibility in seeing that the defence industry as it moves forward fits into the general economic scheme of things in a most effective and efficient way. I would point out that the fact we have failed to overcome the mistakes of world war II when defence industry was largely concentrated in the two central provinces would suggest there is a genuine cause for complaint from those of us who represent western constituencies. The economic trends have been analysed in a summary fashion by the Financial Post. In the issue of July 7 there is an analysis carried out by Mr. J. K. Edmunds who projects the economic patterns in Canada for the year 1980. That projection incidentally is based largely on the very copious evidence submitted in various briefs to the Gordon commission. On the basis of that evidence Mr. Edmunds concludes that by 1980 Canada will have a population of 28 million, 75 per cent of which will be living in towns and cities and 65 per cent in central Canada. That reinforces the assumption that as far ahead as 1980, more than two decades, the present unfortunate trends will still be continuing, producing a state of industrial and economic imbalance even at that far distant date.

I should like the minister to indicate what steps are being taken to reverse these trends as far as possible. According to the information contained in his report, obviously he has the power to do this and obviously it is in the best interests of Canada that we try to establish a more equitable pattern of national development across the country. The huge expenditures involved in the Department of Defence Production provide a most fruitful source of brighter prospects in this regard. The main estimates today seem to be along the lines of electronic and aircraft development, two items of manufacture which could easily be carried out in the relatively sparsely settled parts of the three western provinces.

One final word on this score, and I think this is my strongest argument in this regard. Last week Canada engaged in a comprehensive civil defence exercise. For three or four days headlines screamed from the papers. Of course they were mock headlines, but the whole scheme was carried out as realistically as possible. Those headlines stated that large metropolitan areas had been completely wiped out as a result of attack by guided missiles with nuclear warheads. One report I read said that the city of Montreal had been completely wiped out.

The various departments of government responsible for the defence of Canada seem to be working at cross purposes. The civil defence people are warning the public of the dire prospects in the event of attack of that kind, which we hope will never happen. We are told that large metropolitan areas like Montreal can be wiped out by one nuclear weapon strategically exploded in the right spot. Yet it would seem from the information which I have placed before the committee and which I gleaned from various reports that we are still continuing to concentrate our strategic industries in these vulnerable urban centres.

I wonder if the minister could give us any idea as to what steps if any are being taken to disperse this concentration of industry so that we may have the necessary defence in the case of possible nuclear attack and also, more positively, that we may have in Canada a more equitable distribution of industry across the country.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, the purpose of capital assistance is to create facilities for the production of a given war store. The governing factors in the allocation geographically are the availability of skilled labour, the availability of management capable of handling the task, the availability of power, the availability of raw materials and the availability of subcontractors if subcontractors are required. Generally speaking it does not allow too much latitude to the department as to where a plant might be located. The situation usually indicates pretty clearly where the plant should be located.

When we do have a choice we always give preference to a location outside the industrial areas of Ontario and Quebec. For instance, we have given a good deal of capital assistance in the maritime provinces when perhaps we could have done equally well or better in the central provinces. We have put a fair amount of capital assistance into the west, particularly on the west coast, with a fair amount in Winnipeg. But in those cases we were dealing with the type of product which was suitable to the labour n the area. The production was such as could be obtained without too large a shift in population. Obviously if you must build a new plant and housing to house employees, if you must bring in your skilled management and skilled labour, you have a very expensive type of production.

We are simply the agents for the armed forces and are using their funds. We must be able to assure them that we are doing that economically. Within these narrow limits we do attempt to diversify the location of our capital assisted projects but, as I said previously, we have very little latitude in that regard. I am inclined to think that within the discretion available to us we have done a pretty fair job.

The item we have before us deals almost wholly with aircraft and is almost wholly devoted to the CF-105 program. The details of the program are as follows:

Aircraft	$6,906,570
Ammunition	740,000
Electronics	750,000
Guns	5,500
Sundries	40,817

From that we deduct $1,443,683 which represents cash not required during the fiscal year 1956-57. Obviously the only place you can spend money being used to advance the CF-105 program is in the vicinity of the Avro plant at Toronto. I do not know how we can exercise much latitude for the benefit of the city of Brandon or any other point in the west.

Mr. Dinsdale: I want to thank the minister for his comments on this important subject. I noticed he raised the matter of the availability of technical skill and labour. I want to assure him that in any part of western Canada we have all sorts of potential labour, labour that is obviously quite mobile judging from the fact that a good many of the workers in the defence plants of Ontario and Quebec originally came from the prairies. A couple of weeks ago it was my privilege to attend the 75th anniversary celebration of the community of Boissevain, Manitoba, in the heart of perhaps the richest agricultural area in the west.

Mr. Bryce: Go easy now.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, even taking into account the constituency of the hon. member for Selkirk I think I can say that it is the richest agricultural area—

Mr. Knowles: In southwestern Manitoba.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. They published a very interesting book, "The Beckoning Hills", which reviews the history of that community from its origin in 1881 down to the present time. It is full of all sorts of anecdotes concerning the pioneering spirit of the people who settled that part of Canada so recently, because after all 75 years is a fairly recent period of time in the whole span of man's history. It is hardly more than the biblical span of a man's lifetime. The book gives the population statistics and they indicate the problem that the prairie provinces as a whole are up against.

In 1901, 20 years after the first settlement, the population of this part of the country was 6,430. By 1926 it had increased to 7,011. In 1931 it was 7,340 and in 1941 it was 6,478. There had been an exodus of almost a thousand people from this rich agricultural area under the first impact of the war. The downward trend increased up to 1946, and the census of 1951 gave the total population of that area as 5,615, or almost a thousand less than there were in 1901. That is what you call making progress going backwards. The difficulty arises, of course, because of the changing conditions of agriculture, mechanization and so forth, which are causing widespread depopulation of the prairies.

I realize that the item we are dealing with at the moment does not cover comprehensively the problem I am concerned with, and I must admit there have been some excellent and worth-while developments to meet this problem in the city of Winnipeg. I believe, for example, that a component of the CF-100 is being produced by the Bristol Corporation in Winnipeg, which is a step in the right direction, and I presume that the same trend will follow as we move into the production of the CF-105.

I re-emphasize this problem repeatedly because I think such assistance is one of the most fruitful ways of dealing with the basic economic problem confronting Canada at the present time, namely, more and more concentration in a relatively small area of Canada. I was particularly shocked to see that a projection of our economy to 1980 in that very reliable source, the Financial Post, indicates that this concentration will go on as a continuous trend.

By way of further detailed information, has the minister information available indicating what capital assistance programs have been established? Can he give some specific examples of capital programs that have gone forward in the prairie region as part of the activities of the Department of Defence Production since the beginning of the Korean crisis?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I might point out to my hon. friend that he overlooks one factor. A plant to produce war material must be a big plant. In other words, you do not make war material by the piece; you make it by volume.

Mr. Churchill: You do with aeroplanes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Where do you have small plants? Just name me a small plant that makes aeroplanes.

Mr. Dinsdale: Component parts.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Component parts, certainly. We do not usually have to give capital assistance to get component parts made. We use existing plants. But may I point this out to my hon. friend? Suppose we went to Boissevain and put up a plant there that required 5,000 people or 500 people, if you like. You would dislocate that area for years. I remember well when General Motors went to Regina in the late twenties and established a plant there. I think they went there about 1926 and in 1932 they closed the plant down after having moved 1,000 or 1,200 people out there. That gave Regina a set-back from which it did not recover for ten years. That would be exactly the position in Boissevain if you put a war plant there.

One thing we must watch is to see that you do not create that kind of dislocation. If you put up a war plant it should be in an area where it can be converted to civilian production and have a chance of surviving as a privately owned plant. The hon. member asks what western plants we have helped. We have helped Bristol Engines with considerable capital assistance, also Standard Aero Engine of Winnipeg, Northwest Industries of Edmonton and I think one or two plants in Calgary. But to obtain the size of production that we require for war we must go into areas that can furnish the manpower and the skilled supervision without a great dislocation of population.

In the maritimes we have put a good deal of capital assistance into New Glasgow, a fair amount into Amherst, a fair amount into Saint John in the shipbuilding industry there, and a very considerable amount in Halifax. Where we have had populations and locations suitable for the kind of work we have wanted to do we have spread the work around as much as we could.

Mr. Dinsdale: I agree that the establishment of the parts assembly plant at Regina came at a very unfortunate time in the pre-depression era, and I think the dislocation that occurred in Regina and throughout all the prairie provinces for that matter during that unfortunate period was brought about by more than the necessity of closing the parts assembly plant at Regina. I further agree that you would not expect to establish a plant employing 5,000 people in a community the size of Boissevain. It would have a tremendous impact on the community in all respects which perhaps could not be absorbed by the social amenities that exist there already. That is not exactly what I am thinking about.

Having mentioned Boissevain, may I say there is one industry there, a private endeavour, making laminated structures. It was established in the past few years and it employs some 40 or 50 men. It is making quite a contribution to the vitality of that particular community. It is handicapped by the freight rate problem. The Canadian Railways do not allow in transit rate privileges as the railways of the United States do in an attempt to assist the establishment of industry in their prairie region.

I should like to say further, Mr. Chairman, that private industry generally is ahead of the government in recognizing the changed circumstances on the prairies. We now have a sufficiently large population—following the population recession of the war we are now beginning to move forward—to provide a fairly strong local demand. Particularly in the field of the manufacture of electrical parts we have a shift from the east to western Canada and also in the packaging and manufacturing of food products. For example, the Campbell Soup Company is contemplating establishing a further branch plant in Manitoba. The emphasis that I should like to see maintained is the emphasis that the department itself was trying to maintain. When the defence production activity got under way, within the department there was established a small defence industries branch which functioned for three years and then disappeared. When I queried the minister on that point, he said that it had carried out its role adequately and that it had done the necessary job. I did not agree with that statement at the time and I still do not agree with it. I thought that was an excellent innovation in these complex affairs, namely making certain that every possible provision was being made to decentralize this huge accumulation of defence industries which have become established largely around the two urban centres, namely Toronto and Montreal and which overnight would be destroyed—the whole defence industrial potential would be destroyed—if we ever faced an atomic attack. I suggest that we might well keep in mind the objective that was indicated in connection with the small defence production branch in trying to establish the manufacture of component parts of various electronic equipment for aircraft on as widely-scattered or as widely-dispersed a basis as possible.

Mr. Bell: Before this item carries I should like to follow along on the thoughts that have been expressed by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and the review that has been given by the Minister of Defence Production. I appreciate the fact that this item is a centralizing one but it is an item that needs generally a great deal of consideration and future planning. The minister referred to the fact that Saint John and Halifax are getting some assistance in connection with their shipyards. That is true, but I would say that it is a very small amount of assistance compared with what the shipyards on the St. Lawrence are getting. Two or three years ago in the town of Marysville in New Brunswick we had an example of a textile industry closing down. At that time something was said—and I think some approaches were made—with respect to the possibility of locating there some sort of government-assisted industry to replace this textile factory that it was necessary to close. I do not know whether or not it would have been possible to do something there, but certainly the facilities were available, namely a factory in fairly good shape, some labour and some market.

If we take the attitude that has been suggested, namely that we can locate only where there are available population, labour and materials, I suppose we shall never be able to disperse industry in any way. In New Brunswick also a short time ago we had an example in connection with the army camp work there. I do not want to go into the details of the contracts, because the matter has been mentioned here before. I just want to say that there was a problem in connection with the letting of those large contracts by the Department of Defence Production in connection with the camp. The department naturally wanted to get the work done as cheaply as possible and in as modern a way as possible. In most cases they call for tenders in connection with large contracts. I suppose that is the businesslike way to do the thing. But our smaller contractors were not able to get together and were not able to extend themselves for these larger jobs.

I put this reservation in these remarks, Mr. Chairman. We have had some contracts and since the initial planning others have been given. I mention the matter only in order to say that the problem is there, and it is the same one that is there with respect to this other work. The United States have had this difficulty to contend with for many years and they have taken many measures to overcome it. They have set up entire new communities for their large plants. I remember reading that in the New England states a method was found whereby the federal government could give some type of depreciation assistance to an industry in a certain locality. In that way the burden and the initial difficulty with respect to an industry surviving or even locating in a tough area would fall on the federal authorities rather than on the local municipal people who were already burdened, as has already been mentioned in recent debates. I appreciate the difficulties and I have mentioned these examples merely to show that it is a problem that is becoming of increasing importance. In the United States, in England and in Scotland they have had to do something about it. I suggest to the minister that we must have some careful planning for the future. In his department he has experts. Probably they could look into the matter. If this amount needs to be extended or to have its scope broadened, I am sure that the areas in the prairies and in the maritimes would greatly benefit. Such a procedure would get over some of the criticism that we have heard in recent days with respect to the difficulties there.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, the debate so far has brought to my mind a few remarks that I should like to make at this time. We have been talking about decentralization of war plants, labour and so on. I should like to refer the minister to the Canadian Arsenals plant at Lindsay, Ontario, which has had three quite definite lay-offs since last year. Employment there is getting fairly small. I should like the minister and his officials to give consideration to that plant. With their large budget I do not see why they cannot create some employment in the town of Lindsay.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I may say to my hon. friend that we have been looking at that situation very hard. We hope to get some work for it. The Lindsay plant is more or less a specialty shop. It does small runs of ammunition because of the nature of its equipment. We try to bring them along regularly, but I know it has hit a little low spot recently. We hope we can improve the situation.

Mr. Van Horne: I wish to draw attention to the fact that in Campbellton we have the McLennan Engineering Works. Some years ago this firm spent a considerable amount of money becoming equipped to repair aircraft engines. The contracts that they obtained from the government lasted a very short time, and afterwards they were denied any further work. In the last two years McLennan Engineering Works have not had any federal work and this tremendous investment which they were encouraged by the federal government to make is now going to waste. I would recommend that the minister check into the amount of repair work we have received in the maritimes. We have several plants fully equipped to do federal work, such as the McLennan Engineering Works, but for the past three or four years they have not been favoured with any work. This places a terrific burden, not only on the owners of the plants but on the public and on the employees who are dependent on these plants to make a livelihood. I am sure the minister will be kind enough to look into this matter and do something about it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to point out that last year the department asked for and obtained a vote of $8,250,000 for this item. The minister reported yesterday that the department actually expended during the last fiscal year $2,084,615 on this item. It is quite clear, therefore, that the amount that was voted that was proven not to be necessary was over $6,150,000. In other words, the amount actually required, as shown by experience as reflected in the actual expenditures, was only a small fraction of the total estimate. It was just about 25 per cent of the amount the department asked parliament to vote.

The minister was frank enough to say that this item of capital assistance is one with which the department has had most difficulty in estimating over the years. I drew attention on June 29 to the fact that for this item in the fiscal year 1951-52, parliament was asked to vote and did vote $100 million for this purpose, whereas the sum expended was $22,190,419. Perhaps I could just give the amounts in round figures, Mr. Chairman. The following year, 1952-53, parliament voted $110 million and the sum expended was $78 million. In the fiscal year 1953-54, the sum asked for by the department and voted was $60 million. The sum expended by the department was $36 million. In the fiscal year 1954-55, the sum asked for by the department, and voted by parliament, was $25 million, and the sum expended was $7 million. Now, we have before us the experience of the fiscal year 1955-56 and we see that although the department asked for $8,250,000, and parliament voted that sum, the actual need was only one-quarter of that sum.

So, Mr. Chairman, for the same reasons that I put before the committee in connection with the last item, I think it is our responsibility here to make sure that the estimates that we approve and pass are closely in line with the proven requirements of the department, and I move:

That item 87 be reduced by the sum of $5 million to $2,500,000.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, that that amendment would leave the department with a substantial sum of money more than it actually found necessary last year. Last year it found it necessary to expend $2,084,615, and this amendment would provide them with $2,500,000, a figure almost 20 per cent larger than their actual expenditures for the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1956.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I may say that if this motion passes it will set the CF-105 program back at least 12 months. We are already committed for considerably more money than would be left in this vote if this amendment passed.

Mr. Fleming: For how much are you committed?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We have to build certain test facilities for a supersonic engine which is being developed there, and we must provide certain new equipment for the aircraft plant. We have already approved expenditures and commitments, but we would have to withdraw the commitment. I know all these commitments depend on parliament voting the money, but that is the particular situation in this case.

I am surprised, really, at being criticized for not spending all the capital assistance for which we asked parliament. We know what we have to have, roughly, in the next year, but we do not know the extent to which we may be able to persuade private industry to put up the capital themselves. We do our best. We part with capital assistance money very reluctantly and I may say it has been practically cut off at the present time except for the aircraft industry where we are bringing out a new plane and where new techniques, new testing equipment and new facilities are required. As I say, we are committed, not for the full amount, but we are committed for over half of it. If this vote passes, I will just write A. V. Roe that they will have to do without for another 12 months. They will have to do the best they can after that.

Mr. Fleming: What is the precise amount of your commitment to A. V. Roe?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is around $5 million. We cannot say exactly because we do not know exactly what these things will cost. We have authorized certain work to be done under capital assistance. It is somewhere between $4·5 million and $5 million. We know other work must be carried out. What we do not know is whether we can persuade private industry to furnish additional facilities that we must have. If we cannot do that, we must put up the money as capital assistance. It is as simple as that. Go ahead and vote on your amendment, if you want to. I am tempted not to vote on this amendment and let it go through and let the opposition take the responsibility for it. I think that is about what the hon. member for Eglinton is asking for, and should get it.

Mr. Fleming: That was a silly, stupid, concluding remark, Mr. Chairman. This is the first time the minister has spoken about the CF-105 production program being attached to this item.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I made a statement in which I said that $6,906,570 was allocated to the aircraft branch. I said then it was for the CF-105 program.

Mr. Fleming: We were not told it was on this particular item.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I read it on this particular item.

Mr. Dickey: It was just 10 minutes ago.

Mr. Fleming: In view of what the minister has said, Mr. Chairman, about the commitment, and if this is related to the CF-105 program which is an important program, we are quite prepared—this is an addition to last year's program—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Very generous of you.

Mr. Fleming: We are here to do our duty to the taxpayers and to see that money that is not required is not voted here; that is the situation, and that duty we intend to discharge. The minister has said that there is about $5 million required—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I said nothing of the kind. I said $5 million was committed.

Mr. Fleming: We are prepared to change the amendment to the extent of $5 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We will vote on this amendment first.

Mr. Fleming: In the light of what the minister has said we are prepared to withdraw this amendment and substitute another one. If the minister will not agree to the withdrawal, then he will just have to take the responsibility. In view of the minister's further explanation, we are prepared to make the usual request to the committee for permission to withdraw the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Order. Has the hon. member—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): If the hon. member wishes to withdraw the amendment and finish there I, of course, will agree. If he wants to change the amount in the amendment, I do not agree.

Mr. Fleming: I am quite prepared to withdraw the amendment and have another look at the minister's figures, if he will give us the figures in regard to his commitments and in regard to the amounts that he thinks are going to be required on this program this year.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fleming: But we are not just going to let this go without information. The minister says nothing more. We want information.

The Chairman: Order. As I understand the situation, Mr. Fleming moved:

That item 87 be reduced by the sum of $5,000,000 to $2,500,000.

I also understand that the hon. gentleman is requesting leave, which he must do, of the committee, with unanimous consent, to withdraw the motion.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member consent to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Fleming) negatived: Yeas, nil; nays, 48.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister now whether he will state in detail the commitments actually made to date, that is, the actual commitments, and then in addition the projected demands on this item for the remainder of the fiscal year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We do not give actual capital assistance estimates in advance. I gave this figure before; I will give it again: aircraft, $6,906,170.

Mr. Fleming: These are actual commitments already made?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. We are committed to certain projects, but I am not going to put amounts of money on them because I do not know what they will cost. Ammunition, $740,796; electronics, $750,000; guns, $505,500; that is for the new rifle; sundries, $40,000. From that we deduct cash not required in 1956-57, $1,443,683, leaving a balance of $7,500,000.

Mr. Fleming: We have supported the project as far as the development of the CF-105 is concerned. The minister spoke about having made actual commitments. That was the burden of his remarks before, but he is not prepared to tell us now what the actual commitments are. We are simply given now the breakdown of the figure of $7,500,000 in the estimates. As to that, we had similar breakdowns of similar estimates in preceding years. They were built up of subitems in the same way, and we found that in every case in every one of those years the figures in the estimates were much higher than the amounts actually required.

Take last year, for instance. Notwithstanding the fact that the estimate was built up of subitems like this, it was found that when the department came actually to make the expenditures the amount actually required was only one-quarter of the amount the house had been told and had voted—

Mr. Dickey: Because we saved money.

Mr. Fleming: —when the estimates were before the house. Are you not going to attempt to save money this year?

Mr. Dickey: We certainly are.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, where there is a will there is a way, and if we can judge the accuracy of this item by the experience of other years it is quite evident there is a good deal of money here that will not be required this year. What the minister has said about commitments is not touched by this because he will not give us the figure of actual commitments. I think, on the experience of other years, it will be found that there is a good deal more money here than is required. I am moving, therefore, that the item be reduced by $1 million, to $6,500,000.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Are you going to vote for it this time?

Mr. Fleming: Oh, sure; I hope you are, too.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The reason we did not give commitments for capital expenditure before is that if we give the commitment, if we tell someone we have an item in the estimates to cover certain projects, there is no possibility of getting private industry to make the investment. Because we are committed there is no possibility of saving. What my hon. friend is saying is, "All right; tell the world that you have provided money for these projects, and then you will not have any savings on your estimates and everything will be fine". I have never seen quite such a row raised about saving money out of funds voted by parliament. However, my hon. friend thinks that is statesmanship, so I presume we shall vote on this item.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, we have been challenged—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I just want to put the amendment. It has been moved by Mr. Fleming:

That item 87 be reduced by the sum of $1 million to $6,500,000.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Fleming) negatived: Yeas, 11; nays, 48.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Fleming.]

88. To provide for payment of grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on crown-owned defence plants operated by private contractors, $227,900.

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister put on record now the figures of the payments to municipalities in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, under this item?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The actual amount spent was $203,000, but we cannot put our hands on the breakdown though we thought we had one here. It is a bit less this year because we sold two or three plants. We will have to get that information and we will table it.

Mr. Fleming: How long will it take to get it? Could it be put on the record today?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, I think so.

Mr, Fleming: Has the minister with that his estimate covering the anticipated payments to municipalities this year?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We never give that. We have an argument with every assessment commissioner about the amount we pay.

Mr. Fleming: May we take it that there are no new municipalities involved, and that the list is going to be a little smaller by reason of dropping some municipalities from it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): By reason of the sale of certain assets, yes.

Mr. Fleming: But there are no new municipalities to be added to this year's list as compared with last year's list?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is right.

Mr. Fleming: And it is understood that will be put on the record?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes. I am sure my staff can secure it.

The Deputy Chairman: In order that it will be understood, the minister is undertaking to produce a list of payments made to municipalities which will be handed to Hansard and printed by unanimous consent.* Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item agreed to.

Canadian Arsenals Limited—

90. Administration and operation, $1.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I will just start to say a few words in English in order to tell the minister where I am leading. About two weeks ago I asked a question regarding the sale of the Riviere du Loup arsenal, and in reply to my question I received an answer on July 23. The first question was as follows:

1. Have the Riviere du Loup arsenal buildings been sold? If so, on what date?

The answer was:

1. Yes. Agreement of sale executed following order in council of May 24, 1956. Possession of property given purchaser on June 29, 1956.

The second question was:

2. What was the amount of the sale and what were the conditions of payment?

The answer was:

2. Sale was made after public advertisement of the property for $17,500 cash.

The third question was as follows:

3. What was the conversion cost of the former Canadian National shops, which subsequently became the Riviere du Loup arsenal?

Listen to the answer:

3. The Canadian National Railways shops at Riviere du Loup were transferred to Canadian Arsenals Limited and converted for the production of components for ·50" and 20 mm ammunition at a cost of $285,453.80 to meet orders valued at $3,835,000.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, it is now definitely established that the Riviere du Loup arsenal, which operated for three years only, was sold by tender for $17,500, whereas an amount of $285,453.80 had been spent in order to convert the former Canadian National plants into an arsenal. Even if it served to produce about $4 million worth of small arms ammunition, this arsenal operated for only three years, during which employment was available to a very limited number of people. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that instead of going to this fabulous expense, it would have been possible in view of the few people employed there, to have the same done at Quebec or Valcartier arsenal, thus avoiding considerable lay-offs.

I return now to the price paid for this building and the property on which it is built. It is an excellent building, with magnificent grounds, and yet they were sold for the ridiculous sum of $17,500, whereas the department had formerly spent on the rehabilitation of the same premises the considerable amount of nearly $300,000. Therefore the transaction involved only about six per cent of the original amount. In other words, the loss involved was exactly 94 cents out of every dollar. This, I am told, was done to satisfy a company which will eventually start producing underwear in this plant.

From all this it appears that the company which has bought this arsenal is called the C. Turnbull Company Limited. If my memory serves me well, its head office is in Galt, Ontario. The surprising thing about all this though, is that until January 11, this company had held a federal charter granted on December 17, 1930, a charter which it renounced on the date I have just indicated, that is five months before purchasing the arsenal. I can say however that this company—against which I have nothing, since I do not know it, though I do know that its product is, by all accounts, excellent—has a provincial charter granted by the Ontario government. According to arrangements entered into between the provinces, it is allowed to operate in the province of Quebec, provided it abides by the laws of that province and pays corporation income tax.

The fact is, however, Mr. Chairman, that we have here a difference that is rather hard to explain. I was informed this morning that only one tender had been submitted to the department, and that was the one from the Turnbull company.

Mr. Dupuis: Well, you can hardly make them up.

Mr. Dufresne: I did not attempt to make anyone up, and I would not advise the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Dupuis) to make anything up, for it would be a substantial waste of my time. I am now dealing with a serious matter, and I hope that the hon. member will stop his trifling, so that I may proceed.

Mr. Dupuis: It is still better than in Quebec, because, over there, no tenders are called at all.

Mr. Dufresne: If my hon. friend is interested in a seat in the Quebec legislature, all he has to do is to resign; but then he might have the same fate as his son.

Mr. Dupuis: I prefer the atmosphere of honesty in this house than that of Quebec.

Mr. Bonnier: Abolish Bill 34, and we will go to Quebec.

Mr. Dufresne: If the hon. member wants to talk of honesty, he would be well advised to wait for a judgment to be rendered shortly.

Mr. Dupuis: If it is rendered by a man like you, I won't answer for anything.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): People who live in glass houses—

Mr. Dufresne: He asked for it.

As I was saying, the least that this transaction suggests is objectionable favouritism. If the intention was to sell the property, conversion costs of which had amounted to close to $300,000, it seems to me that a basic price might have been set and, in this way, a more appropriate price might have been obtained.

Mr. Dupuis: What a businessman.

Mr. Dufresne: I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that such a policy is bad enough to give rise to the indignation and vigorous protests of all those who, through the taxes they pay, contribute to maintain in power a government so wasteful of the Canadian taxpayers' dollar.

Surely, the small industry which is being set up in place of the arsenal will hardly be enough to improve economic conditions in Riviere du Loup, because I am convinced that few people will find jobs in that plant. So, Mr. Chairman, it has been a waste of public moneys. We have, in the past, seen a mass exodus of Canadian National Railways' employees, especially in Riviere du Loup, who had to move to Montreal, Moncton, Campbellton and Halifax in 1952.

An hon. Member: To Quebec.

Mr. Dufresne: And now, we have to stand by and see public moneys being thrown down the river, always in connection with the same building. The only conclusion is, I think, that Riviere du Loup, despite what we heard last fall, especially in September, will never be the Garden of Eden of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to mention another matter regarding the Quebec arsenal. We have in Quebec city an arsenal located below Palais hill on quite a large piece of land. I am glad that we have that plant in Quebec city for it provides work for quite a number of conscientious employees who can thus earn a decent living.

Next to that plant of Canadian Arsenals Limited, there is a nice and vast piece of land commonly called Artillery park on which stands the residence of the superintendent of that company, a very distinguished gentleman and a great soldier, Brigadier Theriault. I say these nice things about Brigadier Theriault so that my hon. friends opposite will not be able to claim what they claimed the other day when speaking about the 22nd Regiment. I say that all French Canadians, and especially those in the province of Quebec, hold in high esteem and respect this distinguished soldier, Brigadier Theriault.

However, I believe that piece of land could be put to much better use than to provide luxurious accommodation for an official who certainly does not need all of it. Part of that land is wasted.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the minister sell part of that land to the city of Quebec which, I think, would be happy to buy it for several reasons, one of which would be the broadening of McMahon street, which is very narrow. It would ease traffic in that part of Quebec city and would permit the occasional parking of some 500 cars. It would also bring much more business to that business section of the city, especially for those who operate a business on Saint Jean street.

I don't ask that Brigadier Theriault be deprived of all the ground he now occupies. However, I would suggest that officials of the Department of Defence Production enter into negotiations with the city of Quebec, which is badly pressed for parking space, or try to interest certain individuals in buying that part of the property. This would help develop that important district of the city of Quebec.

An hon. Member: It's goat's pasture.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, such was the suggestion I wanted to make in connection with that site, and I think that in so doing I have conveyed the feelings of the majority of my fellow citizens of the city of Quebec, and I trust that the department will take into serious consideration the suggestions I just made.

(Text):

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I am sure my hon. friend will grant me the indulgence of replying in English. I could try to do otherwise, but perhaps I had better not. The explanation with regard to the plant at Riviere du Loup is simple. The Canadian National Railways had a problem on their hands through the dieselization of the region, and the president informed us that the locomotive and car repair shops at Riviere du Loup were surplus to his requirements. There were about 125 families dependent upon the work provided by those shops. He asked if we could help him out, and told us that if we could he would be pleased to deed over the property to the dominion government. Subsequently we found that we had an order for small arms ammunition amounting to about $3,800,000 which could not be handled at the Palace Hill arsenal but which could be handled at Riviere du Loup if there were some adaptation of the facilities there.

Arrangements were made accordingly. Early in 1953 the property was transferred without cost to the Department of Defence Production. Alterations were made amounting, if I remember right, to around $250,000 to provide for new facilities and installation of machinery that was moved down there from the arsenal at Quebec. For about three years we operated the plant at Riviere du Loup. In that time we turned out ammunition to the value of a little over $3 million.

Mr. Dufresne: $3,800,000.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes, $3,800,000. The production was increased over what would have been possible had we operated the facilities at Quebec to full capacity. The need was there and the property at Riviere du Loup filled it very nicely.

Mr. Dufresne: Would the minister excuse me? I think I just heard him say that the arsenal at Quebec was working at full capacity at that time.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Dufresne: I think the minister is wrong, because it was last year and two years ago that we had so many lay-offs at Quebec and Valcartier.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But they were mostly in the shell filling division and not in this particular division. However, we expected when we took over the property that there would be follow-up orders for small arms ammunition and these did not come. Therefore when the work was completed we were in exactly the same position as Canadian National Railways had been three years earlier. We had been employing a peak of 140 employees on the property with an average of about 105, and we faced the same serious problem of laying off these employees in an area that was not able to absorb them easily.

After discussing the matter with the mayor of Riviere du Loup we decided to call for tenders for the property with the reservation that we would not sell the property to anyone who could not give a reasonable guarantee of employment on about the scale we had provided in operationg it as an arsenal. Tenders were invited. We advertised in several papers. We only received one tender, and it was from a textile firm that was able to undertake to provide employment for in excess of 100 people.

The mayor favoured acceptance of the tender. True, it was a low tender; nevertheless it relieved us of the problem of maintaining a plant in idleness, which is costly; and in view of the employment situation it seemed that the right thing to do was to accept the tender, which we did. I feel that we acted as a useful link between the railway who built the plant and owned it for many years and the textile company, which is moving in at the present time. We did provide employment without any loss to the government. You can say that we spent $250,000, or whatever the figure was, in setting up the plant to make small arms ammunition. That is true, but we produced $3,800,000 worth of products; and as I remember it the margin on the product, which was for the United States government, was about 10 per cent. Therefore the story probably is that we worked there and got out without any loss of public funds. As far as Palace Hill is concerned, my hon. friend wants us to tear down a building there—

Mr. Dufresne: No.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):—that is older than I am. Palace Hill, from the earliest days of Quebec, has had on this site the residence of the superintendent of the arsenals.

Mr. Dufresne: If the minister will allow me, I never mentioned anything about destroying the Palace Hill arsenal. I am not even speaking about taking away the residence occupied now by the superintendent, Brigadier Theriault. I was just asking if the minister would not mind taking under consideration the fact that adjacent to this private residence there is a very big piece of land, a part of which the city of Quebec would be interested in buying, first of all to widen McMahon street and, second, to make a good parking area for the commercial district of Saint-Jean street.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As far as I know there has been no request to the department for that land. It is maintained by Brigadier Theriault as a public park, and it is a very beautiful park in the heart of Quebec. While we certainly would entertain a request from the city of Quebec for land sufficient to widen a street I would be very reluctant, and I think the city of Quebec would be, too, to do anything that would transform a beautiful park in the centre of the city into a parking space for automobiles.

Mr. Dufresne: First of all I wish to thank the minister for the detailed information he has given me regarding the Riviere du Loup arsenal. Can the minister tell me what the department paid for the land and buildings formerly owned by the C.N.R. which afterwards became the Riviere du Loup arsenal?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I thought I told the hon. member that the land and buildings were deeded to us without cost. They cost nothing.

Mr. Dufresne: May I add one word. Could it have been possible to establish a floor price before asking for the tenders to which the minister referred? I know the minister will admit, as will every hon. member of the house, that even if the plant is to employ 100 or more employees in the new operation, which I am very glad to hear, the price for which the Riviere du Loup arsenal was sold was a little bit ridiculous when we think that we had to spend $285,453.80 to convert one building and could not get a better price three years later than $17,500. I think a lot of people are worrying about the matter and are asking how this kind of transaction could take place.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): According to the report I received from Canadian Arsenals, if we had held the property it would have cost about $50,000 a year to keep the plant closed, maintain a watchman service and pay the taxes. To do so would also put 105 people out of work in an area where no alternative work was provided. The property was developed to repair locomotives and freight cars. Private individuals do not repair locomotives and freight cars. We took over the plant to make munitions of war. Private individuals do not make munitions of war.

The next question is, who can make use of that property? It is not everyone's meat. The fact that it is a fine plant which cost a lot of money many years ago, and cost some money for alterations and installing equipment to make munitions more recently, is interesting but it is not interesting to a man who can use the plant in Riviere du Loup and use it profitably.

We advertised for tenders. We let it be known through all our contacts that the plant was available for sale. We advertised in the papers and we got one tender. It did not take us long to decide that if we could solve the government's problem, relieve ourselves of caretaker responsibilities which might go on indefinitely, and remove ourselves from Riviere du Loup in a way acceptable to the local people it was a very advantageous transaction as far as the Department of Defence Production was concerned.

Mr. Dufresne: The minister says that advertisements were published in the papers. Can the minister say in what papers advertisements were published? Was it in the local papers or in papers throughout Canada?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was advertised in three newspapers.

Mr. Dufresne: Three newspapers?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Three different newspapers, yes. L'Action Catholique was one. I do not remember the other two.

Mr. Dufresne: That must be Le Soleil.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Possibly it was Le Soleil. I do not remember.

Mr. Dufresne: Were they Quebec papers?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Two were Quebec papers. One was a paper in Three Rivers or in Riviere du Loup.

Mr. Dufresne: Le St-Laurent?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. I find that one was in Riviere du Loup, one was in Quebec city and the third was in Montreal.

Mr. Dufresne: Are the three of them French papers?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Dufresne: It is a very amusing thing, Mr. Chairman; here is an English company which has its head office in Ontario. I think it is in Galt. There is an advertisement in three French papers. One is in a Riviere du Loup paper which is a weekly paper that is distributed in the Riviere du Loup area and in the whole county of Temiscouata. The other one, L'Action Catholique, a Quebec city paper, is also French.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I now find that the third one was an English language paper. I believe it was the Montreal Star.

Mr. Dufresne: There might be a chance that the company saw it there. But even so I find it very strange that this company in Ontario would have a chance to read this article or this advertisement in the Montreal paper. I think someone must have given this company some information of some kind.

Mr. Lesage: What are you complaining about?

Mr. Dufresne: I am just complaining about the price that was paid by the company for a building which cost the government $285,000, just for conversion, when this company paid only $17,500 for it. After all, that is a loss of 94 cents on the dollar in three years. That is my complaint, if the minister wants to know it. I find that it was a ridiculous transaction. That is my opinion.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): The company might be bilingual, might it not?

Mr. Dufresne: Not according to the list of directors which I have. I have the names of the directors. Three or four are from Galt, Ontario; two are from Brantford, Ontario, and one is from Pittsburgh in the United States.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I have people who do not speak a word of English who have English names. You can have English people speaking French as well as French people speaking English. We are, after all, a bilingual country.

Mr. Dufresne: Yes; I think I am one of the members in this house who have given evidence of that fact. Any time I have occasion to do so, I speak both languages in this house.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Yes, you can. Once you addressed the Minister of National Health and Welfare in English, and he answered you in French.

Mr. Dufresne: Yes, because I had an extremely important question that I wanted to be heard and understood by everybody in the house.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are bilingual.

Mr. Dufresne: Yes; I am bilingual.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, in either language.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Chairman, I approve the sale of this particular crown corporation. I approve it in the first place because I think it is good for the community. There are going to be a good many more people employed there than are employed at the present time. But I approve it mainly because of the principle involved. Today we have approximately 30 crown corporations in this country. Some of them have cost us a great deal of money. Many are being subsidized fairly extensively. I think it is a good thing for the government to get out of many of these businesses which were set up in the war period or in the emergency shortly after the war. I hope sales of this nature will happen time and time again in the near future. I should like to see other crown corporations sold also, because I think the business of government is to govern, not to be in business. From what I have seen of crown corporations in business they simply do not operate as efficiently as private enterprise. I am therefore heartily in accord with this particular sale.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the Department of Defence Production.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

244. Departmental administration, $1,222,800.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members will find this resolution at page 48 of the book of estimates, the details starting at page 346.

Mr. Blair: Does the minister wish to make a statement?

Mr. Martin: No.

Mr. Blair: The estimates of this department were before the estimates committee of the House of Commons for several weeks. At that time there was a fairly complete discussion on all the items, especially on the other item under the Department of National Health and Welfare, namely civil defence, which I think was considered by the committee in sittings which extended to 10 or 12 hours. The same remark might apply to another matter that was brought up and talked about in that committee, namely the question of health insurance or hospital insurance and the proposals and discussions between the federal government and the provinces.

But in the general consideration of the estimates before the house there is no doubt that there are matters of interest which other members who were not on the estimates committee might like to discuss at this time when the estimates are before the committee of the whole. Furthermore, they may desire to obtain information that was not available to them at the time the estimates committee was sitting or because they were unable to attend. They might desire of their own accord to discuss some of these matters with the minister.

It has always been my belief that the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare, dealing as they do with matters which are so important to the well-being and happiness of the people of the country, should receive fuller consideration by the house than they do receive, and that more time than is usually spent on them should be devoted to their consideration. I think the fact that the estimates of this department were sent to a committee this year was an excellent thing. As a result of questioning the minister and his officials I believe more information was obtained in that committee than would have been obtained as the result of a few hours' discussion in this chamber. Of course every person did not agree in that committee, but there was that opportunity available and there was the fullest discussion of these matters.

In so far as the estimates of this department are concerned, there should be unanimous agreement throughout the committee today that the matter of keeping well is of the utmost importance to the people of this country. But if you go back a few hundred years in European history you will find that the point of view among those who were interested in the healing arts was concerned with the curing of disease. There is a great deal of difference between using preventive measures and curing. The idea of preventive measures probably never crossed their minds at that time. The most they could hope for was to have physicians who were sufficiently versed in an understanding of disease that sick people under their care would rapidly get well.

Under these conditions it is clear that only a small proportion of the population could share in the benefits of the increasing skill of these physicians. But today hospitals, laboratories and physicians are in close contact with new scientific equipment. They are armed with new drugs and they are providing a medical service today that would have been unbelievable in the eighteenth century. Even today improving our methods of curing disease is not sufficient, and I emphasize the word "curing", the problem today is to get people well and to keep them well. This is the prime objective of the people who are working in the fields of public health and preventive medicine.

Throughout the last decade especially great progress has been made in the curing and treatment of disease. There are, however, still many problems, and there is a demand for still more rapid progress. But if we look back over the last 20 years on the discoveries that have been made in that time, we can see that there is every reason to believe that it will come. Equally new and exciting results will follow the new and exciting discoveries which have been made. But if we still pursued the old idea of keeping people well by curing disease, it would involve a tremendous expenditure on the part of the nation. From the standpoint of the taxpayer it would be a very expensive proposition. It would require the training of a large number of professional people to keep all the people cured of disease.

Today we have developed a public health program to such an extent, and this is coupled with our increasing knowledge of preventive medicine, that we are making remarkable progress in the campaign to keep people well. As the program advances the costs of keeping people well will decrease. At the present time one could visualize that the future may bring a period when the need for hospitals will diminish, so that the health program in continuing to keep people well will become the great objective rather than the older concept of curing disease.

I came across a quotation from a very eminent man, Dr. C. E. Winslow, a very distinguished man in the field of public health. This was written in 1949 but I think it still applies today. The quotation is as follows:

> As I see it today, public health is the science and art of preventing disease, prolonging life, and promoting physical and mental health and efficiency through organized community efforts for the sanitation of the environment, the control of community infections, the education of the individual in the principles of personal hygiene, the organization of medical and nursing service for the early diagnosis and treatment of disease, and the development of the social machinery which will ensure to every individual in the community a standard of living adequate for the maintenance of health.

This statement, made by such an eminent man, applies today with greater force than it did seven years ago. I think he has covered the whole field in that one short statement.

Now, in so far as present conditions in Canada are concerned, I am not going to attempt to cover all the diseases and all the troubles with which medical men in Canada are faced today. There are two or three that I intend to discuss for a short time before this committee. I shall first consider the question of cancer. Statistics show that this is still the great scourge. It is true that there have been marked advances in the treatment of this disease in the primary type. The difficulty there lies in getting these patients at the time the disease first makes its appearance, in the primary lesion stage. Then a great deal more could be done in a curative way in protecting these people. Possibly more advanced diagnostic methods have shown a larger number of the population to be suffering from the disease; nevertheless a high percentage still appears in our mortality rates.

In that regard, X-ray facilities along with other means of diagnosis have shown that many of those people who possibly were undiagnosed at previous times are now getting a more complete diagnosis, and this accounts for some of the rise in the death rate attributed to cancer. But it is also true of this disease, as it is true of heart disease and the group of people who suffer from cardiovascular disease—that is disease of the heart and blood vessels—that as the span of life has been lengthened we seem to have more people suffering from this disease than we formerly did. Not only that, sir, but in so far as the mortality rates are concerned we are going to have older people ultimately succumbing to this disease.

So I have one plea and one suggestion to the minister today in regard to cancer, and it is this. While research is costly, no apparently worth-while project in research looking toward the discovery of the cause of cancer, or even of the treatment, should be neglected through lack of funds. While other nations are spending funds in the common objective of the solution of this scourge, I believe our Canadian scientists are capable of contributing a great deal toward scientific research. They are capable of contributing a share, as they have shown in the past, that will compare favourably with that of any nation in the world.

This is a disease that has baffled all the greatest workers in the world in the scientific field. But the big problem today under present conditions, knowing as we do very little though advances have been made regarding the cause of cancer, is to intensify the measures that have already been taken to hold the disease in check. The other big problem is getting the people to go to the physician or to report to a treatment centre when the very earliest symptoms come upon them. Then more can be done toward cutting down the mortality resulting from cancer.

The other subject I shall discuss today, sir, is mental disease. Unfortunately in Canada there has been a very definite rise in the percentage of cases of this disease. Tuberculosis is now under control. There was a time when we spent a great deal of time in this house discussing tuberculosis. I may say that due to the advent of new methods of treatment and scientific measures, especially in the field of public health, this disease has been brought well under control. Our campaign now is to try to find these isolated cases, keep checking up on them, and eliminate the disease for all time.

In that regard, a great deal of work is being done in my own province—I am not conversant with the work in the other provinces—in mass surveys. If 4,000 people in a town appear for X-ray and possibly three, four or five cases of incipient tuberculosis are found, even if that small proportion of the population is found suffering from this disease it makes the survey worthwhile because every one of those people is a carrier of the disease in so far as the rest of the population is concerned.

However, I was speaking of mental disease, and it continues to account for a high percentage of bed occupancy in hospitals. The provinces are spending large sums of money to provide accommodation for those who are afflicted. It is unfortunate that mental diseases for so long have produced so much suffering in the world. They have not, in general, received the same attention in the field of preventive medicine. In looking back over the history of mental disease one finds there was a time when this disease, through ignorance of the cause, was attributed to demons. Later there was a form of what might be called custodial care. The patients were shut up and their treatment was not what perhaps, in the light of present day standards, we would consider as anything less than cruel.

There may be varying causes for this increase in mental disease in Canada. Some place, somewhere, we must look for that cause and if there is a possibility of correcting it we should turn our attention to those corrective measures. We hear all sorts of reasons advanced as to why this is occurring. It may be the stress and strain of present day life. It may be that something is wrong with family relationships, or it might even be attributed to an increase in alcoholism. There is a cause for it some place. Statistics show there is a high percentage of bed occupancy in the hospitals of the country due to this disease. In fact there are as many people with mental disease occupying beds as there are with all the other bed-occupancy causes put together; that is, those who are suffering from acute diseases. The building of more hospitals will not entirely solve this problem. We also have to give up one other concept and that is the old concept of custodial care.

As far as mental disease cases are concerned, while the admission rate into hospitals does not compare with the rate for those who are admitted for medicine and surgery, it is the slowness of the recovery of those people that is a major cause of the hospitalization. But there is one bright spot, Mr. Chairman, and that is the number of cases that are being discharged as cured from those institutions. In view of that fact, I think we have made a great deal of progress along the line of dealing with the disease. The only thing now is to do something further. If we can correct the cause of this disease, if we can by treatment or prevention do something toward eliminating a great deal of this trouble that is afflicting people, then we shall be making quite a bit of progress.

If we take mental disease as an example, history has shown that interest in the treatment of the disease has always preceded interest in its prevention. Success has now been shown in the treatment and the outlook is brighter. As I said before, that brighter outlook can be seen from the large number of discharges of people after short-term treatment, and of people who were afflicted for longer periods.

What we require in dealing with this disease that seems to be uppermost in the concern of those who are working in the field of public health is hospitalization, of course, where it is required, and mental hygiene clinics and more trained personnel. If we are to carry on a successful campaign against the incidence of this disease we require more people who are trained both in the treatment and the nursing of this disease.

There is one other point I should like to make. I made an appeal to the minister concerning the question of coronary disease. When the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs were up I suggested to the minister that a study could be made of that older group among the returned veterans, especially of world war I and of world war II. I suggested that they could go through their hospital records and thereby derive certain information regarding the cause of coronary disease. If there is one group of people who were subjected to the strains and stresses it is the veterans of the first and second world wars.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs agreed to consider it. I suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this is one group with respect to which he could lend assistance in a study of the causes of this disease. This disease is becoming pretty common. You can hardly pick up a newspaper nowadays without noticing that some well-known man, possibly a man who had a great deal to contribute toward the building up of this country, has suddenly passed out from this disease. It is not just a disease of old age that is afflicting people who have a great deal to contribute. It is afflicting people at the age of 40, 45 or 50. You see very promising careers cut off suddenly by this disease. It is true that a fair number of them recover, but on the other hand they have to live within their limitations and possibly are not as active as they would have been if they had not suffered from the disease.

Unfortunately the whole picture in regard to the percentage of mortality cases is changing; coronary disease, listed of course with diseases of the heart, is coming up to the top of the list. If anything should be done it is research, research into the diet and into the way in which people live. There is a cause for this increase in the number of these cases. It is gratifying to know that last year an organization made its first appearance in Ottawa. It was a group of specialists formed to consider this disease. There is a great field for them in this work. I was certainly glad to see that a beginning had been made among a body of men who are so well acquainted with the disease. I think it will do a great deal to stimulate research into the question, and it certainly should be to the advantage of the citizens of this country.

Another thing that seems to be bothering the health authorities is the incidence of cardio-vascular disease among our people. We commonly call it high blood pressure. Further study should be made of this disease and information should be derived from that research which would produce new procedures for the early detection of heart disease, and facilitate treatment and improve further the prognosis.

There are many subjects, sir, that should receive consideration by this committee. I have spoken of these two, mental disease and coronary disease, because of their increasing incidence. However, I wish to refer briefly to the importance of the benefits of research grants and fellowship programs. I know that a great deal has been done in this country, but I feel that the more research we can afford, the more money that is devoted to research by the department, the more will be done in that regard and it will pay for itself in time in relieving suffering and in cutting down the incidence of disease.

There are many fields in medicine which are left to be explored, so that any country such as ours needs an adequate force of skilled scientists and more information if we are to solve such health problems as cancer, mental disease, heart disease and even the common cold.

There is another matter that I should like to bring before the committee, namely the question of old people. It is true that we have lengthened the span of life. New discoveries, new methods of treatment have gone a long way toward lengthening the span of life, but there will come a time when something happens, and it seems to be cardio-vascular disease or cancer, that will ultimately carry them off. If we can make life better for these people of advanced age by new methods of treatment we should do everything possible to devise those methods.

I am concerned about the care of those elderly people. It is difficult to find some place where they can go when they become ill, when they become chronic invalids. We talked the other night on a bill about nursing homes. It is true that nursing homes are helping in a great way to take care of many of those people, but on the other hand you will find them in the hospitals possibly suffering from some chronic disease without hope of recovery. There is no place else to put them, and they are occupying beds which possibly could be put to use for acute cases, if there were some places in which those chronic cases could be properly attended. Hospitals seem to lack care for those suffering from chronic diseases, and especially those in the older groups.

There is another matter at which we should take a second look, and that is the legislation concerning old age pensions. Under present conditions I find people writing to me very often stating that they find it very difficult to get along on $40 a month. Sometimes I feel that some of those who are trying to get along on $40 a month are suffering from malnutrition.

So far as hospitals are concerned, there still remains a demand for beds. It is expensive to build hospitals even with the grants given by the federal and provincial governments. The question of the cost of hospital care still remains before us. To the individual who seeks a private room, a semi-private room or even ward care, hospitalization is a very expensive procedure; and not only that, but hospital boards throughout the country are continually trying to balance their ledgers and they find it extremely difficult to finance their institutions.

One other matter I will discuss at brief length is the question of the shortage of nurses. I do not believe the shortage is as extreme as it has been at previous times. The minister has always told us this is a provincial matter. It is perfectly true that the training of nurses comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but I think something further could be done by the federal government in view of the large number of nurses employed by that government. The federal government requires nurses for its veterans hospitals and for the institutions which come under the care of the minister. T.C.A. also require a large number of them. Because the federal government requires so many nurses for its various branches I feel that something could be done by this government by way of grants to assist some of the institutions which find it difficult to train nurses.

I have one other matter for the attention of the Minister of Finance. From time to time we have an application from someone who is importing some of the new drugs from the United States. There have been concessions made, and I was very glad when the matter of oxygen received consideration by the department. There are still drugs, however, which are available in the United States at a much lower price than that for which we can obtain them here in Canada. These drugs are continually used by physicians. If they accomplish something in the way of relief or cure I think we could very well do something to reduce the price of those drugs by bringing them into the country free of any duty or anything else which contributes toward making them more expensive for the patients who require them.

I have one other matter to discuss, and I realize it is not the concern of this committee in so far as legislation is concerned; that is the question of accident prevention. This matter has been before the house before. Last winter we were all alarmed at the tremendous number of children who were burned in fires throughout the whole of Canada and particularly in and near the city of Ottawa, where the matter was constantly brought to our attention. I do not know if there is any legislation regarding the electrical wiring of houses or fire prevention that would do something to cut down this high rate of mortality from burning, but if there is something that can be done we should do it. If nothing can be done in the way of legislation, would the minister put out pamphlets and advertisements and carry on a definite campaign concerning this matter?

Another aspect of the same subject is the question of highway accidents. I realize that to some extent this matter comes under the Criminal Code, but our rate of accidents in Canada is becoming simply ghastly, and in some way all governments must work together to stop this tremendous mortality rate on the highways of our country. I remember producing statistics in this house two years ago, I think, that revealed our bad record in this country compared with other countries in the world in the matter of highway fatalities. If anything can be done by consultation among the provincial governments or through legislation originating in this parliament, I suggest we should co-operate with the other legislative bodies in doing everything we can to decrease the rate of mortality among children and adults who are burned in fires and the number of people killed as a result of highway accidents.

I may have other statements to make on particular items, and I shall defer any criticism or contributions I wish to make until that time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we are now dealing with the estimates of one of the oldest departments of government in this country, and I am sure the minister will agree with me when I say we are dealing with the estimates of one of the most important departments of government. Indeed, he is favoured in having the responsibility of presiding over the affairs of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

As one who is sometimes known as a severe critic of the minister and the government for the snail's pace with which it deals with matters that come under the general heading of health and welfare, I want to say that we in this group are proud of the extent to which we have made some progress in this field in Canada.

It is now recognized—and this is a departure from the days when the British North America Act was framed and the word "health" was not even mentioned in it—that the health of the Canadian people is a social responsibility and therefore a responsibility of government. It has also been recognized by this parliament that economic security, particularly with respect to contingencies over which people have no control, such as old age, is also a responsibility of the legislative bodies of Canada. We have recognized that responsibility in a way of which we in this group are particularly proud; namely that we have established in Canada the principle of universality with respect to old age pensions, at least for those 70 years of age and over, and with respect to family allowances.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, although we welcome the progress that has been made in Canada, we are extremely critical of the government and of the minister who presides over this department for what we feel to be an attitude that the job is done. It seems to me that what the minister and this government need to learn is a very simple truth that was brought home to Alice in Wonderland; namely, that there are times when you have to run as fast as you can just to keep up with where you are.

The minister and the government, particularly since old age pensions were put on the new basis represented in the Old Age Security Act and the Old Age Assistance Act, seem to feel that all of us on this side of the house and all the people in the country should from this point on just praise the government for what has been done. The government seems unable to realize that time is moving on and problems such as those facing our senior citizens, and problems in the field of health such as those which have been outlined so capably by my friend the hon. member for Lanark, require serious attention and action at a much faster pace than they are getting from this government.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the government in the words of a pamphlet which I have on my desk and to which I made reference in the committee on estimates, that the time has come for a new look in welfare. That phrase, "the new look in welfare", was the title of an address given recently in Toronto by Professor John Morgan of the school of social work at the University of Toronto.

I indicated in the committee on estimates when we were dealing with these matters that Professor Morgan's thesis, if I do him justice by trying to boil down a lecture into two or three sentences, is that the time has come to realize that welfare is not just a matter of rescuing the underprivileged but rather it should be seen as a case of the mutual dependency of all individuals in our highly organized society. At one point in his lecture Professor Morgan referred to a phrase which is quite common, namely the welfare state, and suggested that it might be an improvement on that phraseology to speak of the "socially responsible state". I think hon. members will recognize what Professor Morgan has in mind in suggesting that change.

There is perhaps a tendency, at any rate on the part of some of those who talk of the welfare state, to think of programs of public welfare as programs for rescuing the underprivileged. Let it be said categorically that so long as there is one underprivileged person in the country it is the job of society to try to rescue that person. But Professor Morgan makes the point that in our highly organized society there should be a recognition that there is a mutuality of responsibility and a situation of interdependence which can be more accurately apprehended under the title of a "socially responsible state".

It is that new look which I should like to urge upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare, upon the government, upon this parliament, and indeed upon the people of Canada who are interested in these problems. As I have already suggested, let us never fail in our responsibility toward the underprivileged, toward those in need, but at the same time let us recognize that we have a tremendous opportunity with the tremendous wealth that we are capable of producing in this modern age to organize our society on the basis of mutual interdependence in such a way that all members of the community, all members of society, may enjoy health and economic security.

Some of those who attack expenditures on health and social security seem still to have the notion that programs under these headings are simply programs to give something to certain individuals. We suggest that the proper approach to health and welfare programs in this day and age is to see in them a general or co-operative sharing of the wealth we are able to produce in such a way that all our people will have decent minimums of health care, decent minimums of social security and be able to enjoy life to the full as we believe it is possible in this modern age.

Toward that end I urge upon the government, using again the words "new look", that it reconsider the whole question of our old age security. As I say, the Minister of National Health and Welfare seems to feel that because we are paying at the federal level pensions of $40 per month to all Canadians 70 years of age and over, that because we are paying at the federal level half the cost of pensions on a means test basis to those between the ages of 65 and 69 years, that is enough for the time being. I suggest that anyone who takes that approach is looking at welfare on the old basis, as a case of handing out money solely on the basis that there are underprivileged who are in need.

We contend that it should be the aim of our old age security program to share with the senior citizens in any generation the wealth which is being created at that time, the volume of which is due in part to what the senior citizens did in their working days to build up the country. You do not recognize that principle by the payment of only $40 per month at 70 years of age and only $40 a month between the ages of 65 and 69 years on a means test basis.

I shall perhaps have more to say on this when we reach the particular item in the estimates, but I want to lay it before the minister and before the government at this point, as one of the most important items to which attention should be given, that the time has come for a substantial increase in the amount of the old age pension and for the removal of the means test at age 65.

As everyone knows, we have witnessed in recent years a tremendous increase in our gross national product. It was something of the order of $16·4 billion in 1949, and I take that year because that is the year in which $40 was first set as the amount of the federal old age pension. The predictions are that this year it will be of the order of $28 billion. That is an increase of more than 70 per cent. Although from 1949 until the present we have witnessed an increase to the extent of 70 per cent in the gross national product of this country, we are still paying to our senior citizens the same amount of pension we paid in 1949. It is true that certain changes have been made in the meantime, in that the pension has been put on a universal basis and the age of eligibility has been changed, albeit with the means test; nevertheless the amount our older people get out of the federal treasury or as a result of federal legislation is still the same as when our gross national product was considerably less than it is at the present time.

That is not in keeping with what I have referred to as the new look in welfare. That is not in keeping with Professor Morgan's phrase, "a socially responsible state". The greater wealth we are producing today is due in part to those who are working today, but it is due also in part to what our older people did in the decades gone by in helping to build up this country. It is our contention that these older people who have helped to make possible what we are enjoying today should be given, not just enough to maintain a bare existence but a proper share in that greater wealth.

Toward that end we suggest that the increase in the amount of the old age pension should bear some relation to the increase in our gross national product. Since the amount of the old age pension was set at $40 there has been a 70 per cent increase on the one hand and we suggest that that should be matched by an increase of similar proportions on the other hand. If you take that figure the pension should be increased to $68 per month. We suggest that certainly it should not be less today than $60 or $65 a month, and we urge that on the government as strongly as we can.

Some of us were disappointed a week or so ago when we seemed to have difficulty getting out of the government a clear-cut statement as to what was going on in the government's mind regarding an increase in the old age pension. When the question was asked as to whether the government was planning to increase the old age pension at this or the next session the answer was, "No." When the question was asked whether the government was considering the plight and needs of our senior citizens, the answer was, "Yes." So the newspapers are confused; so the people of Canada are confused.

The difference between consideration and planning may be a case of splitting hairs which makes it possible for the government to give one answer to one question and another answer to the other, but we suggest that no society, no economy, is capable of making any boast unless it provides a decent medium of security for its older citizens. We say to those on the treasury benches that if they think they have any right to claim another vote of confidence from the people of this country, before they go to the people they must present to them a decent, adequate increase in the old age pension. We say it should be raised without delay to not less than $60 or $65 a month.

I share with the hon. member for Lanark the satisfaction that the estimates of this department were referred to the committee on estimates where we did have a very good discussion. Nevertheless when we discussed this matter in the committee the minister suggested that the provinces had some responsibility in this field as well as whatever responsibility the federal government might take. It is our contention that if you try to pass to the provinces responsibility for anything beyond $40 a month to our old age pensioners you are getting away from the principle of universality which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is so pleased about so far as old age pensions are concerned.

The provinces simply do not have the resources to pay pensions to everyone without a means test. If you pass the buck to the provinces so far as any increase in the pension is concerned you are asking for a reinstatement of the means test, at least with respect to that part of the pension, and I am sure the minister agrees with me that after the long struggle it took to get rid of the means test we do not want to go back to it. Yet to suggest that any additional amount of pension should be paid by the provinces is to ask for a reinstatement of the means test. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, that is one of the reasons I sought to speak about this the other day in the context of another matter. However, that debate is over.

But I say to the minister that he is not measuring up to his own responsibility in this field. He is not being consistent with his pleasure that the federal government has accepted the principle of universality. When that principle is endorsed in other countries the minister is always glad to note it. He is always pleased when in the United States or in some European countries bouquets are given to Canada for the fact that we pay a pension without a means test, but I say the minister is not being consistent with his satisfaction over that fact when he replies to us that the provinces should take over from the $40 figure in so far as any additional amount is concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I lay that before the government on behalf of this group just as strongly as I can. I am conscious of the fact that I am laying this before the government not many months in advance of an occasion when the government will probably go to the people of the country. I say that if they are going to the people of Canada, to whom they owe their responsibility, before they do so they should indicate clearly what they are going to do in the important field of old age pensions.

As I indicated earlier in borrowing a few thoughts from Professor John Morgan, I feel that the idea of a new look in welfare also calls for a new approach to the whole question of health care. We all listened with interest to the speech made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Lanark, and I am sure he too would agree with this quotation, which is in line with some of the things he said. I quote from Professor Morgan:

> It seems clear to me that the socially responsible state must necessarily recognize an overriding responsibility for insuring that as many people in the community get as much health care—notice I say health care and not disease cure—as can effectively be arranged.

If we are going to take a new look at the health of the nation, if we are going to recognize that this is a responsibility just as great as if not greater than some of the things we do under the heading of defence production, which we were talking about earlier, or under the heading of trade and commerce or under the heading of finance—and I suggest, and I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare will agree with me, that when we are talking about the health of the people of the country we are talking about something that is far more important than these other matters—we have to strike out much more boldly than the government has done up to the present time.

I am aware of the proposals made to the provinces by the federal government as a result of the meetings held in Ottawa in January of this year. As I said in the committee on estimates, we of this group welcome those proposals as a step in the right direction. To have them put into effect would certainly bring about a better situation than that existing at the present time. There are certain things that are good about those proposals. In any province in which they would come into effect the principle of universality of such hospital care as is provided would be established. A portion, though in our view not a sufficiently large portion, of the cost of hospital care is to be paid for, according to the proposals, out of the federal treasury, and to the extent that that amount is paid out of the federal treasury there is some recognition of the principle of paying according to ability to pay.

But, Mr. Chairman, in our view the proposals do not go far enough. In the first place they cover only hospital care and one or two other matters. They do not cover some of the major items of health care. The government's proposals are not set up on a basis that gives us the hope that within a reasonable time they will be extended to all the people of Canada from coast to coast, in whatever province they live. The sharing of the cost is not on a basis that puts enough of the cost on the federal treasury where costs are met according to ability to pay, rather than according to the illness that people happen to suffer. There are also other shortcomings, such as the failure to provide coverage for people in mental institutions and others in similar categories.

Nevertheless we would like to see a start made. We regret that so far only three provinces have agreed to the plan whereas the government requires six representing a sufficient number of people to constitute a majority of the population of Canada. But we suggest that one of the reasons for the slowness on the part of the provinces is that the federal government has not measured up to its own responsibilities in this field, has not played a role consistent with the talking it has been doing in the field of health insurance for many years.

I am not going to go back again to that ancient year when the Liberal party first started talking about health insurance. Everyone knows what year it was. There are a number of members in the house now who were not even born when the Liberal party first advocated health insurance. But I would remind the minister, who is proud of the proposals that he has been in a position to make to the provinces this year, that some pretty striking publicity was given to moves made by this government some time ago. I hold in my hand a copy of the Ottawa Journal which is getting a bit yellow. The date is Tuesday, March 16, 1943; in other words it is over 13 years old. The main heading reads, "Billion Dollar Yearly Outlay Required for Post-War Social Security Plans". Look at the next heading: "Health Insurance Bills Provide Medical and Dental Care." Over in the right-hand column in the main story I find that it says:

> A gigantic pooling of Canada's doctors' bills was proposed today by pensions minister Mackenzie in draft health insurance bills submitted at the first meeting of the special House of Commons committee on social security. Health insurance was presented as a concrete measure for study by the committee but the minister also submitted a report on a general plan for social security which would involve retirement pensions, revisions of the present old age pensions and unemployment insurance systems, children's allowances and funeral allowances, as well as health insurance.

Then spelling out what had been laid before parliament, here is another article on the front page under the heading "Still Have Choice of Doctor Under Health Insurance Plan". Then over here in another column I find the highlights of the proposals of that day, and this is a reference to the Marsh report which was laid before parliament at that time. There are eight or ten proposals set out and one of them is this:

> Institute free medical care for all citizens.

I well remember when this paper came out. In fact I was so greatly interested in it that obviously I saved it so I would have it in future years to look back and remember that on that day the Ottawa Journal came out and told us the news, that health insurance was before us as a concrete measure just around the corner.

Mr. Chairman, the Ottawa Journal was not off the beam in what its columns said about draft bills, because at least one draft bill was prepared. I have a copy of it in my hand. The date at the top is April 26, 1944. It is marked "Draft Bill". It was actually tabled in the House of Commons in August of that year, but that is as far as the government went with it. The long title of the bill is as follows:

> An act respecting health insurance, public health, the conservation of health and the prevention of disease.

Clause 1 reads as follows:

> This act may be cited as the national health act.

It is a bill of some 43 pages, spelling out in detail the mechanics for setting up national health insurance. That was back in 1944. Incidentally, this particular bill was available to certain candidates in the 1945 election, as indeed there have been other items and documents through the years to show that the Liberals stand for health insurance. There is no doubt about that. The Liberals stand for health insurance and they have been standing for it for a long time. But they seem to have the opinion that by assuring the people that they stand for it, by promising them that something is going to be done, by making proposals to the provinces, the people will keep on putting them back here, counting on the government doing something about it.

We welcome the proposals the minister made to the provinces this year, despite their shortcomings about which I shall have something to say later. But my fear is this, and it is a fear that has been developing in the last two or three months as time has gone by with no more than three provinces agreeing. My fear is that the government has made these proposals requiring the concurrence of at least six provinces, including either Ontario or Quebec, hoping that the making of these proposals will do as a health insurance plank for another federal election. I submit, Mr. Chairman—and I think the minister knows it—that he cannot face the people of Canada in another election unless something is done. I am sure the minister knows that in order to convince the people of Canada that something is going to be done, these proposals must be revised and improved to the point where they will be more acceptable to the provinces, so that the required six or more will come into the arrangement.

I plead with the minister and the government, as I did with respect to old age pensions, to face up to the seriousness of this problem. I care not whether our gross national product is $28 billion, $48 billion or $108 billion; I care not about the buildings, the highways or the other things that we may produce as marks of our great civilization. If we are not able to take care of the health of our people, on both a curative and preventive basis; if we are not able to make sure that our people get health care because they need it, whether or not they have the money with which to pay for it, just as we insist that every child gets an education regardless of the income of his parents, I say that our economy has nothing to boast about.

I urge that the minister and the government take a new look at these proposals, at this health insurance scheme which seems to have bogged down. I urge that following that new look some modifications and improvements be made so we might very soon have the enactment of this health insurance plank that has been promised across the years. I am indebted to Professor Morgan, as I have already said, for the phrase that I have used more or less as the theme of my remarks today, namely the need for a new look in welfare.

I call upon the government to take a new look at these two important problems of old age security and the health of our people, and to put into the solution of these problems enough will and determination and enough money to see to it that our people have decent security in their older years, and that all the people in this country have the health care they deserve.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, I should like to follow the two previous speakers in the request for greater and improved health services. I believe everyone in this house is quite sincere in asking that that situation be brought about. However, in so far as the last speaker is concerned, that is just about as far as he and I are in agreement. I certainly cannot agree with the method by which he wants that situation brought into effect.

I listened with a good deal of interest to the hon. member for Lanark, as I always do when he speaks on health matters. He speaks with sincerity, and of course he also speaks from professional knowledge that we as laymen do not possess. But in looking at this department we must realize that an extremely large amount of money is involved, namely over $70 million. Yet it is not a matter of dollars and cents alone. In the committee on estimates this department received careful consideration, and I believe we worked co-operatively. I know the minister and the officials of his department co-operated to the fullest degree with us. Some 370 printed pages were devoted to the proceedings of this committee, and many of the matters were discussed at length. I therefore feel that it is unnecessary to go into them in any great detail today.

Health is a national problem, Mr. Chairman. I do not think anyone disputes that statement. So long as federal taxes constitute the lion's share of taxation in this country—I believe about 72 per cent—a large measure of responsibility must rest on the shoulders of the national government. In saying that I am not saying I am in agreement with the method of taxation and with the need of having that procedure of health and welfare care followed. We must realize that it is policies such as that under which we are working, and we must govern ourselves accordingly. But as I say, national assistance is becoming more and more necessary. At the same time, however, we must have co-operation between the central or national government and the provinces.

I am glad to note that throughout the entire proceedings of our committee the minister of this department and every one of his officials expressed a keen desire to work with the provinces in a wide-open spirit of co-operation. So long as that spirit prevails there is not too much fear from central domination or central control.

I should like to refer in a general way to the national hospital assistance plan. However, I do not think I need to say any more than the few words which I said in committee. I realize that this, speaking of the national hospital plan, is an interim step and I do not believe we should look for perfection at this time. We are bound to find that there are some difficulties and we shall meet some problems that will have to be ironed out.

Now, there are possibly some problems within the framework of this proposed scheme, but I am confident that with the spirit of co-operation which the minister evidenced in his appearances before the committee there should not be too much difficulty along those lines. Some of us were disappointed that assistance was not provided for the care of mental cases. Of course I think that resulted more from the fact that we were not correctly informed. I understand that mental cases being cared for in hospitals will be treated as ordinary hospital patients, and a share of the cost of looking after those patients will be provided. Of course those in institutions will not be a responsibility of the federal department.

Then we must realize, as was so well pointed out by the hon. member for Lanark, that the thinking of the medical profession today is directed more toward preventive medicine than to the cure or treatment of disease. Of course we cannot neglect treatment; we cannot let these people die without attention. But I believe that over a long period of years we will derive more benefit from every dollar that we can possibly channel into research work and into every known means of preventing disease. I was glad to see that there is a lot of money—I am not going to say it is enough—being contributed by this government along those lines. For instance, commencing in 1948-49 there have been grants from the national treasury for the care of crippled children totalling $129,676. There has been $2,208,016 given toward mental health.

The hon. member for Lanark mentioned the system of control and checking in connection with tuberculosis. We have practically eliminated that disease. There has been a contribution of $611,573 toward that. Then there is the very important field of public health research. It is something that I should like to see expanded very widely. There has been a contribution of $2,415,016 toward that. Then for general public health the contribution amounted to $1,566,944. Child and maternal health is another very important field that has been given a lot of consideration. We have prenatal care and infant care today such as was not dreamed of, and I think the smaller death loss in infancy can be attributed in no small measure to advances in these two fields. So we have a total of $6,999,364, and that does not include a grant of $682,966 to the cancer control institute.

We are asking for larger grants, and of course that is human nature. We are never satisfied with what we are getting. However, there is no point in making grants, Mr. Chairman, unless the facilities are available to make use of these grants. We find in another table that of the total that has been allocated, $6,999,364, the total expenditure during that period was $5,775,271. I feel that every person in this house will agree that if the various departments of health in the provinces and the various research centres throughout Canada had the facilities to use the total amount of money which was allocated, they would certainly have used it and been crying for more. Here we see that there is over $1 million, almost a million and a quarter, of the amount that was made available which these various institutions were not able to use. Therefore I would certainly recommend that every effort be made to enlarge the facilities in this important field of research and preventive medicine. Then when we have got to the stage where we are able to use all the money which is made available, it is time for us to start hollering for more money.

Of course we realize that there are some steps being taken to increase the number of pupils who are taking advantage of professional training. The hon. member for Lanark mentioned mental illness, and perhaps the greatest shortage of trained technical and professional men and women is in that field. However, I am glad to see that steps are being taken to provide scholarships and financial assistance, as well as training centres, where these people can get the necessary instruction if they so desire.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words about welfare. We have had quite a demand for the new look in welfare. I do not think any of us feel that our senior citizens and our disabled, no matter for what reason, are being properly cared for. Again I am going to put on the record a few words which I said in committee in dealing with this subject. "I know we will all agree it is a disgrace, in a country with the gross national product and the gross national income which we have, to expect people to live on $480 a year. It is just proof of the fact that the time has come when we have to take a new look at it and give further consideration to those who are dependent entirely on it."

I think those last words, Mr. Chairman, will give you an idea of our thinking along those lines. We do not like the sound of that word "universality", and we do not like this system of transfer payments to everyone when they reach a certain age. On the other hand, we are firmly convinced that those who are unable to earn their own living whether it be through age, sickness or disability, must be provided for by society. And, of course, the only way in which that is done, or can be done, is through some sort of national scheme in co-operation—and again I stress the word "co-operation"—with the provinces.

Since I come from the province of British Columbia I am proud to say that our people in the categories I have just mentioned are cared for a little better than the national average, but we realize that even that is not good enough. I would make a special plea to the minister that the pensions across Canada for those unable to earn their own living, regardless of the cause, should be brought up to a standard which would allow them something that is in keeping with the productive capacity of this great country of Canada.

I would like to make a special plea for the blind in a word or two, in closing. This class of afflicted persons has special problems. Seeing-eye services are required. There are personal appliances that are available for them; there are appliances for use in their homes that are available to blind persons and I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that some provision should be made under which those blind people would be given a fund to purchase the many things which would make their way of life much easier and much brighter.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of this particular department were before the estimates committee this year. I was a member of that committee. Therefore I should like to say a few words in this debate.

The major item involved, of course, was the proposed national health insurance plan. I think it is fair to say that all political parties in this house favour the principle of a national health insurance plan. The Prime Minister has stated in effect that when six provinces, including either Ontario or Quebec, agree to participate, we are going to have the plan. I suppose an agreement will be reached in the very near future. In view of that fact I think Canadians, particularly hon. members, today should give a good deal of thought to the costs which are to be involved in a plan. I think they should also consider the methods which are to be used to raise the revenues to pay for the plan. At page 61 of the proceedings of the estimates committee the minister made this statement, and I quote:

> The total scheme is going to cost the federal government $182 million at the minimum in its first year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since the provinces must match that sum it is contemplated that the initial cost will be about $364 million. Personally I think even this figure is far too conservative. If we take the experience of the Saskatchewan and British Columbia governments with their hospitalization schemes we can expect that costs will go up very rapidly and very sharply once the program has been inaugurated. Only in the last week, out in the province of Saskatchewan, the government was forced once again to raise its hospital rates substantially.

I think costs will go up, particularly in the first year or so of the plan, because immediately it is inaugurated, immediately the beds theoretically are supposed to be free, you have an abnormal demand for hospital beds. The various governments concerned will have no alternative but to build additional accommodation. I say, therefore, the cost—and I think parliament should realize it—will probably quite substantially exceed the figure mentioned. So long as the general taxpayer and the general public are aware of that fact, I think the new plan will work well. But I am absolutely opposed to a painless method of financing this scheme. I think every citizen should realize that this measure is going to be paid for, not by the government, not by the wealthy people of this country, not by the big crown corporations but by the average Canadian out of his hard work and toil.

I think a national health insurance plan is certainly desirable; I favour the principle of it. At the same time I think everyone should realize that it is going to take very heavy taxation to pay for it. I believe most strongly, even though some may not agree with me, that every individual who has working capacity should make a direct contribution to help pay for national health insurance. Hospitalization, as we found out in Saskatchewan, is a very expensive business, and it is imperative that any kind of scheme should be protected against abuses. It seems to me that the best way to ensure this protection, the best way to keep costs within reason, is to have a system of financing which forces people to realize that the services they are getting are not free. Therefore I appeal to the minister this afternoon—at this time I appeal to him as a member of the Liberal party, I guess—to finance this scheme, or at least a portion of it, by the direct premium or contribution method.

In the committee the minister was fair enough to point out that for constitutional reasons it might be difficult to finance a hospital scheme by a direct premium method. He also said it would be most difficult for the federal government to point out to the provinces that they had to finance their share by the direct taxation method.

Mr. Chairman, if that is correct I think it is most regrettable, because it seems to me it is far too expedient to finance social welfare schemes by the back-door method. If these taxes are hidden, too many people remain in blissful ignorance of the actual costs involved. If this should happen with our national health insurance scheme, I think in the long run it may mean very real trouble.

As I see it, Canada needs a national health insurance plan; as I see it, most Canadians want such a plan. Yet if the provinces decide not to incorporate the direct personal premium into the financial arrangements, I think costs will rapidly skyrocket. Therefore I believe the federal government should make one of the conditions requisite to entry by any province, an assurance that at least a part of the financing will be done by the direct premium method. I hope the minister will give some consideration to this suggestion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, one thing I think we will all agree has become very clear during the last few years is that the $40 old age pension is inadequate to provide a livelihood for our older citizens. I think every hon. member is familiar with cases of older people who are experiencing real hardship today, and the increasing cost of living is making the situation grow worse as time goes on.

Since the pension was first introduced in 1950, its value in terms of the things it will buy has been steadily decreasing, with the result that today you must spend $45.70 to buy the same amount of food, clothing, heat, rent and the other necessities of life that you could buy for $40 when the pension was first introduced. That means, Mr. Chairman, that in terms of things it would buy in 1950 a $40 pension today is worth only $34.30. In another 10 years, at the present rate of inflation, the value of the pension will have been reduced still further until it is worth only $25.

In addition to the inadequacy of the pension as a means of support for people over 70 years of age, another very serious problem is that faced by workers who reach the age of 65 and are retired, and for whom no pension plan has been available to which they could contribute during their working years, and by which they could support themselves and their families when they are retired.

Some firms have pension plans but unfortunately the great majority do not, and when most workers are retired at 65, they have only the savings which they have been able to lay aside during their working years, after meeting the many obligations which families encounter from time to time. Often a lingering illness or serious accident has reduced those savings to a point where there is little left to live on after the breadwinner of the family has retired. I think we all agree it is obvious that some better method must be found for bridging the gap between 65 and 70 years of age, and for bringing our old age pension more into line with the needs of the great majority of the people who receive it.

The question is, of course, how can this desirable end best be accomplished? I believe, sir, that the social security system in operation in the United States offers a practical means of providing such a plan, and supplementing our basic $40 old age pension so that our people may look forward to their later years without fear of hunger, cold, or lack of the primary necessities of life.

For the past 20 years the United States has had in operation a contributory social security program which is paid for by contributions from employers, employees, and the self-employed. The way this plan operates has been very well outlined in an excellent pamphlet entitled "20 years of social security" issued by the United States department of health, education and welfare, social security administration, under code No. OASI-26-C, August, 1955.

Mr. Martin: Is my hon. friend aware that the United States is giving consideration to adopting our old age security plan?

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, after reading this pamphlet, I would be very surprised if they are. They might be using some features of our social security plan, but it seems to me the social security program outlined in this pamphlet is a very excellent one, and bears consideration. I know from talking to quite a number of workers in the United States that the plan is very popular with the people in that country.

Under this program, when a worker's earnings cease due to retirement at 65 years of age or later, monthly cash benefits are paid to the worker. If he dies, monthly cash benefits are paid to his survivors. Today nine out of ten people living in the United States who work for a living can look forward to receiving retirement benefits from the federal social security program, and nine out of ten mothers and children are assured of receiving monthly cash benefits upon the death of the breadwinner of the family.

When this program started 20 years ago, only those employed in commerce and industry were eligible to participate in it. However, in 1950 and 1954, amendments were passed by the United States congress which extended the coverage of this program to most self-employed people in business, on farms, and in certain professions, and also to hired farm workers and domestic workers as well.

By the end of 1954, the monthly average payment to a retired worker with no dependents was $56.50. To a retired aged couple it was $98.50. To aged widows it was $46; and to widowed mothers with two children it was $126. These figures are averages for all beneficiaries. Payments are higher for those who have more recently come on the rolls, and whose benefits are based on earnings from 1950 on. Among these, the average monthly benefit paid to a retired worker with no dependents is $76; an aged couple, $128; an aged widow, $65; and a young widow with two minor children, $180. There is also a lump sum paid to a worker's survivors, varying from $90 to $225, and obviously designed to pay funeral and other expenses that occur at the time a person dies.

I think it is interesting to note that the year 1950, the time from which one can qualify for this latest series of payments I have mentioned, was the same year when our present old age pension plan came into operation, which pays $40 at 70 years of age, and provides no survivors' benefits.

Under the provisions of the 1954 amendment, a United States worker who meets certain work requirements may preserve his benefit rights during a prolonged period of total disability, by having his earning record frozen. When that record is frozen, the period during which he is disabled and receiving little or no earnings does not count in determining the amount of work required for payments, or in figuring the average monthly earnings from which the amount of the benefit is figured.

Money to pay for old age and survivors' insurance comes from social security contributions, paid by employees, employers, and the self-employed. These contributions are paid into a special trust fund which can only pay out benefits and the cost of administering the program. These contributions amount to 2 per cent for employers and employees, and 3 per cent for the self-employed, on earnings up to $4,200 a year. The cost of administering the program amounts to 2 per cent of total contributions.

I believe these figures give us an idea of the social security coverage which a United States workman receives in return for the payment of 2 per cent of his wages.

Let us now see what his Canadian counterpart pays and receives. First of all, the Canadian workman pays 2 per cent additional income tax, and an extra 2 per cent sales tax on practically everything he buys. In return he receives a pension limited to $40, for which he has to wait five years longer than his United States counterpart. If he should die, there are no survivor benefits whatsoever.

Thus we can see that the Canadian workman pays considerably more than his United States counterpart, and receives considerably less social security coverage in return. For these reasons, I submit that the United States social security program should be given very serious study by this government as a means of making available to Canadians, first of all, a contributory retirement pension at 65 years of age; second, survivors' benefits for dependents; and, third, adding sufficient to our old age pension so that our people can look forward to their later years with confidence and peace of mind.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Martin: There is a question I want to ask so that my hon. friend's statement may be complete, because I followed him with great interest. Is the hon. member suggesting that we should adopt the old age security program of the United States which, as my hon. friend knows, is based largely upon a means test except for certain items.

Mr. Hees: No, I did not say that; I said that I believed there were many features which were attractive, and which would prove useful in our Canadian social security system. I urged the government to give that program serious study to see what features could be incorporated into our social security system to provide our people with the same benefits enjoyed by United States citizens.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, since the spokesmen of the various parties have been heard on this item, I was going to suggest, if the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne) will allow me, that it might be preferable to discuss the various items as they are called. I am merely making a suggestion to the hon. member and I do not insist.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the hon. minister is so eager in trying, by indirect means, to prevent hon. members from making suggestions.

Mr. Martin: Such was certainly not my intention, Mr. Chairman. However, since the spokesmen of the various parties have been heard, I had thought that the questions which my hon. friend has in mind could perhaps be asked when we come to the various items such as old age pensions, health insurance, and so on. I have made that suggestion so as to save time, and without any ulterior motive, I can assure you.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I accept the minister's statement and I merely wish to say this, since in three minutes it will be six o'clock and the house will have to rise.

An hon. Member: There are four minutes left.

Mr. Dufresne: The department whose estimates are now before the house is, in my humble opinion, the most important of the federal administration—

Mr. Martin: Hear, hear! I agree.

Mr. Dufresne: It is the most important, perhaps not because it is headed by the hon. minister, but in my humble opinion, because it deals with our most precious asset in Canada, our human resources. I believe it is of great importance that we take proper care of those human resources which form the basis of our society, of our progress and of everything from which stems every noble and great achievement in this Canada of ours.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the previous speakers who have taken the liberty of making suggestions to the hon. minister in connection with the social legislation administered by his department. I wish to mention not only old age pensions but I would also like to say a word about the disability pension and the pension for the blind. I will even say a few words about family allowances.

As far as the old age pension is concerned, I strongly believe that the department should without delay take the necessary and appropriate steps to grant all pensioners, that is people of 70 years of age and over, a pension a little more generous than the one they are now receiving, that is $40 per month. In my opinion, those pensioners can barely live on the amount they are now receiving, especially if we take into account the shameless squandering in certain departments, which has been denounced more than once in this house, and which I denounced myself during the preceding debate.

Mr. Knowles: It is six o'clock.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I had just started to speak on the question of old age pensions when the committee took recess. So I will go on now with the few remarks I want to make regarding the men or women who get these $40 a month pensions.

How can any reasonable person believe that anyone, even if over 70, who has no other source of income can live a somewhat decent life on $40 a month.

This amount is surely inadequate if we consider that, on so little money, these people have to pay for all their housing, clothing and food expenses, and, as it happens quite frequently at their age, pay for medical care or for certain drugs that are absolutely necessary to maintain their health.

Everybody in this house knows what it costs for food and for the necessities of life. This is particularly true in the case of old people who refuse to enter religious institutions, preferring to live on their own income, in spite of the sacrifices they have to make.

Many old couples, after living long years together, cannot bring themselves to part, even if they realize that they are reaching the end of their days.

As to those who have already lost a lifemate, or who have never married and thus have nobody to offer them a home, they have to face reality and enter an institution or home for the aged where they spend the remainder of their lives.

While in the various religious institutions like those I have in my county, and the others that are found in my province, they receive what I would call a mother's care and attention from the devoted nuns who are responsible for them, the amount those old people receive is far from adequate.

More than anyone else, the hon. minister, who certainly is quite experienced in the field of hospitalization, knows very well that those institutions are faced monthly and annually with huge deficits which would lead them to bankruptcy, at least as far as my province is concerned—because I can only talk about things I know—if our provincial government did not help them out with generous yearly grants.

I wish to take this opportunity to pay a heartfelt and deserved tribute to all those dedicated souls, particularly in my county, who spend their lives trying to bring more happiness and serenity to those old men and women whose pilgrimage is about to end. May I particularly mention the nuns of the General hospital, those of the Hotel Dieu, of Sacred Heart hospital, and especially those of the Saint-Sauveur orphanage, in which I have always been deeply interested. Needless to say that I also pay that tribute to all similar institutions, without distinction, administered by religious orders, and they are quite numerous in my province and everywhere in Canada.

I therefore beg the hon. minister to spare no effort to convince his colleagues in the cabinet of the necessity of giving our older citizens, who, during their lives, have contributed so much through their work to the development and prosperity of our country, the consideration and reward we owe them.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the pension for the blind is concerned, I would like to restate, in somewhat different terms perhaps, what I said last year.

During the session of 1955, the hon. minister was kind enough to grant the numerous requests he had received and bring about some amendments as a result of which the pension for the blind is now paid at 18 instead of 21 years of age. I thanked him then and I do so again today.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am still wondering why those under 18 are excluded and why the pension is not paid to those unfortunate people as soon as they have been declared blind by a doctor. I cannot see any difference between a person who is blind from birth and one who becomes blind at 18 or some older age.

I point out to the hon. minister that on reaching age 16 a child no longer qualifies for family allowances. Yet, at that age, particularly if the child is blind, his education is most important, as the burden of ignorance should not be added to the misfortune of blindness. In my opinion, we must therefore give more serious thought to these sad cases which truly deserve our sympathy.

Let me suggest that, for those who are blind from birth or who become blind before age 16, the pension for the blind be substituted for the family allowances to which they are entitled.

Mr. Chairman, I leave those few remarks and suggestions to the consideration of the minister and the government.

Now, as regards pensions for disabled persons, I repeat the request I made at the last session that this social security legislation be made less rigid than it is now.

Last winter, on the occasion of a conference held here in Ottawa, the minister, officials of his department and medical authorities met and discussed all the aspects of that problem. I understand that all those present at that important conference realized the severity of the act and that, indeed, many of them suggested that it be amended so as to allow pensions to be paid to more people prevented by severe disability or sickness from earning a living. Even if an applicant can walk and eat unassisted it is by no means a proof that he is in a position to earn his living. Those people to whom a pension is refused in spite of their need become charges on the provincial governments and the municipalities. These not having adequate revenue are not always in a position to satisfy the enormous number of calls made upon them. Thence misery and desolation.

I therefore ask the government to bring to this piece of social legislation those amendments necessary in order, first of all to bring relief to the needy, and then to provincial and municipal governments.

After all, Mr. Chairman, the Liberal government in Ottawa should never forget that if it has been able to institute these various social security measures to which I have referred, it is because it has always had control of the main sources of revenue which belong to the provinces, of which they were deprived during the war and with which a large amount of political capital has been constituted since that time.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there are family allowances.

We, on this side of the house, have been forever harping upon this matter and pointing out that family allowances are no longer adequate to serve the purpose for which they were instituted, and that an adjustment is long overdue. Let them be raised at least in proportion to the rise in the cost of living. In this way every large family, especially those of my constituency, will be entirely satisfied.

Mr. Chairman, we are informed by the press that, at the end of the fiscal year the government will reap a surplus exceeding $300 million.

If such a surplus is declared, it is because they have exacted from the people in taxes $300 million more than was needed for administrative purposes.

What comes from the people must, in my humble opinion, revert to the people. I have provided the Minister of National Health and Welfare with a splendid opportunity of building up for himself and his own party an excellent election platform. I say to him, take advantage of it right now. If the government with which he is associated waits until the very eve of a general election to make use of it, I fear that the Canadian people, who have already lost confidence in the present administration, will get rid of it at the first opportunity.

Mr. Habel: And that's what you fear, is it not?

Mr. Dufresne: Very much so.

Mr. Habel: There is no danger.

(Text):

Mr. Enfield: I want to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to discuss what I feel is a very important expansion or proposed expansion of the functions of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I refer, of course, to the proposed national hospital insurance scheme.

I think I should take the opportunity to make it clear, at least to those in my constituency for whom I am concerned, that a rather difficult constitutional problem exists with regard to the implementation of a national hospital insurance scheme. I do not know whether the public generally realize that we have no constitutional authority to enter into the field, and that this is a matter that requires the co-operation, as has been said previously by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and by the Prime Minister, of at least a majority of the provinces.

I am particularly concerned here because I feel that the scheme can never be instituted unless my own province, Ontario, decides to take part in it. I think that proposition is generally accepted. We are a populous province. We are quite a rich province. In order to make a practical job of instituting such a scheme; in order to ensure that there will be sufficient participation in the scheme; and in order to make it at all financially practical to institute such a scheme I feel, and I think most hon. members will agree, it is necessary to have Ontario participate.

A procedure was adopted at the series of federal-provincial conferences in April of 1955 and October of 1955 whereby representations were made to the federal government by the provinces, and in turn discussions were carried on by the federal government with regard to several matters, among which was included this national health insurance program. I for one was rather optimistic after the conferences as to the future of our activities in this field. As I recall the conferences, particularly the October conference, the representatives of Ontario, led by the premier of that province, came forward with what I felt was a comprehensive suggestion for a national hospital scheme.

For the benefit of hon. members I should like to recall just a short excerpt from the representations he made to the conference. I am quoting from page 24 of the proceedings of the federal-provincial conference, 1955, of October 3 last. The premier of Ontario made the following remarks:

> It is beyond question that a comprehensive plan requires both federal and provincial participation. In its proposals of 1945, the federal government set its participation at 60 per cent. Thus, it is properly a federal-provincial matter, and it should be brought out into the open and placed before this conference for study and action. If this is not done, we can look forward to more misunderstanding and confusion. The federal government and the ten provinces will continue to move in different directions, creating a hodge-podge that no one will be able to disentangle; and a national health plan will never be achieved simply because of the impossibility of finding common ground upon which to act. A few years more and an integrated plan becomes an impossibility. It was with this in mind that Ontario asked that this matter be placed upon the agenda where it could be studied with a view to producing a sound, workable plan with which we could proceed.

Those were very positive and, I think, very sensible words.

An hon. Member: Whose words were they?

Mr. Enfield: They were the words of the premier of Ontario at the federal-provincial conference in October last. I am not going into the details of the plan proposed by the Prime Minister. They are all to be found in the proceedings. I was left with the impression that a great deal of consideration and study—and I think it is true—had been given to this problem by the province of Ontario.

Subsequently, as we all know, the Minister of National Health and Welfare of the federal government made a definite proposal to the conference for a health insurance plan limited to the field of hospital insurance. I think this was done in view of the fact that most of the representations of the provincial premiers and delegations indicated that some caution should be inserted into the proceedings, that the plan should be proceeded with in stages, that of course there were a great many matters to be considered such as the question of raising the money, the question of the cost of the scheme and so forth. Hence it was felt that the plan should be limited at this time to a hospital insurance scheme, and a concrete, positive, precise program was outlined by the federal government at the conference.

Subsequently the Ontario legislature met in the spring of 1956—that was in the spring of this year—and not too much was said about Ontario's participation in the proposed scheme. The legislature prorogued with no definite decision having been taken. As far as I know the problem was not given the aggressive, active consideration that one would have hoped it would be given by Ontario.

I realize that Ontario cannot enter into the scheme lightly. There arises the question of raising some millions of dollars at a time when expenses are running high, when there is a great deal of expansion of business activity in the province and when a great deal of capital expenditure is required. But in order to be fair with the rest of the provinces and with the federal government, I think the province of Ontario should at least have given to us and to the other provinces its evaluation of the scheme proposed by the federal government at the federal-provincial conference.

I am not saying they will not do this, but at this stage one begins to look at the situation with some anxiety. At one moment the province attends at Ottawa, led by its premier, and seems to be very keen indeed on a proposed health scheme. Then the legislature meets and there seems to be, to this date, in any event, a significant silence on the part of the province in regard to the scheme put forward. Hence I am getting anxious. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek said he was concerned about how we were going to collect the money for and pay the costs of the health scheme.

An hon. Member: It was the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Enfield: I am sorry; I should have said the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Knowles: He did not sound like a Liberal. I do not blame you for the error.

Mr. Enfield: Thank you for correcting me. As I say, he expressed his thoughts with some concern and in my opinion neatly and concisely—and I think his point was well taken —about the collection of this money to pay for the scheme. What I am concerned about is this. I am getting anxious about whether or not any scheme at all is going to be introduced.

So, Mr. Chairman, having put these remarks on the record, I should like to point this out to the people. Unless we do hear this fall from the province of Ontario regarding their acceptance, rejection or other evaluation of this scheme, it does not appear to me as though we are going to be in a position to introduce legislation at the next session of this parliament which is, I think, what we had hoped, in order to institute a scheme of national hospital insurance that will be of benefit not to Ontario only but to the whole of Canada.

Mr. Cardiff: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he feel that Ontario should show the way and take the lead for the dominion?

Mr. Rowe: They do in most things.

Mr. Enfield: I certainly think there should be, as the premier of Ontario himself has said, co-operation between the two governments. He pointed out in no uncertain terms at the conference that it was a matter for dominion-provincial co-operation. The conference took that line. There were suggestions made and there was a proposal put forward. The proposal was precise in its terms and it was given in detail. It left nothing to the imagination. It required only an answer. As I say, our concern is the lack of an answer.

Mr. Nicholson: I am very glad the hon. member for York-Scarborough has taken part in the debate. Although the health experts from the three parties on this side of the house put on their very best effort this afternoon, the only contribution from the government side was the speech by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre. We were disappointed that the minister and his parliamentary assistant remained in their places and gave first position to their new recruit.

There are rumours that there are cabinet changes to be made in the near future and that Saskatchewan is to have a new member in the cabinet. I hope the fact that the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre spoke on health will not mean that he will succeed the minister, if and when he accepts another important position. The contribution made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre certainly was not in keeping with the leadership the minister has given throughout Canada in the last number of years in the field of health. I will not say more about those remarks, except to emphasize again that I hope the fact that he was chosen to speak for the government this afternoon will not indicate that is the pattern we are to follow.

My colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dealt with two very important subjects that come under the supervision of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I want to confine my remarks chiefly to those two fields, too, and I shall not repeat any of the excellent material that was developed by my colleague. I think he established very clearly that the $40 per month that is available for our senior citizens in Canada just is not good enough when you consider the productive capacity of this country. We do not think the wealth of the country is a piece of pie that can be cut up and divided once and for all. We know the wealth of the country is created day by day by the labours of the men and women of this country applied to our natural resources. It can increase, and it is increasing. The fact that our gross national product has increased so tremendously in the past 10 years is a matter which should give most Canadians some pride; but the majority of people who have passed their three score years and ten are denied the right to share in that increased production.

I have a copy of "Age and Opportunity", an excellent study prepared by the welfare council of greater Winnipeg. They propose a monthly budget which I think most people will probably consider not too extravagant for a city like Winnipeg. They consider that a couple should have not $80 a month, but they should have each month $40 for rent; $60 for food; $20 for clothing; $4 for church; $6 for medical, insurance or care. Then they should have $10 for hobbies and membership—I suppose that would include newspapers—$9 for transportation; $10 for incidentals; $4 for laundry. This totals $167.

I feel that no member in this chamber can view with satisfaction the fact that such a large number of our fellow citizens are paid $80 when some of the ablest authorities in Winnipeg think they should have $167. They come up with a budget for the individual that is just half, $83.50 per month. They point out that two-thirds of the aged in greater Winnipeg are living on incomes that are marginal or less. No one can put any responsibility on the C.C.F. for the fact that two-thirds of the aged in greater Winnipeg are living on something that is marginal or less.

The pamphlet, "Fourteen days as an old age pensioner", describes life in Toronto the good. I suggest that the minister, who has been a friend of mine for many years since we were both private members and were not able to afford to stay in the Chateau, but shared quarters in a home in Ottawa which was not as expensive as the Chateau, should come along with me—

Mr. Martin: We are getting very old.

Mr. Nicholson: —and I would be glad to go along with the minister for two weeks so he could check on me and I could check on him, and we would try doing what this young reporter for the Toronto Star, William MacEachern, did. He describes in this way:

> My existence for the next two weeks will depend on a one-burner hotplate, a frying pan, a teapot, $20 and my own resourcefulness.
> Monday morning I move into an unheated stark, 2 x 4 cubicle on the edge of Toronto's slum empire, and for the next 14 days I will try to lead the life of an old-age pensioner. In my pocket will be $20—

May I invite the hon. member for York-Scarborough who is younger than we are to join us.

> —the amount most pensioners receive over a two-week period; with this I will have to pay for my room, eat and entertain myself.
> My room will cost me $5 a week, which means that I will have $10 to keep body and soul together for these two weeks.
> Small and bare as my room is, it is by far the cheapest and by far the most acceptable of 39 places I visited in the city's so-called cheaper rooming house section. I also received 68 answers to an ad in the Star last weekend. In the ad I said I was a pensioner and wanted a light housekeeping room.
> Only one—the one I eventually accepted—was under $6. Seventy-five per cent were over $10 and the rest were around $8.
> At first I didn't give the callers any explanation but listened patiently while they extolled the virtues of their accommodations: "Nice, clean room, fully furnished, quiet, in a nice section of town," and so on.
> It's all over.
> This morning at 10 o'clock—14 days, $19.98 and 11¼ pounds after I began my ordeal as an old age pensioner—I walked out of my mothball mansion, out of the hotplate jungle, back into a world of satisfying meals, regular pay cheques and happy, fast-fleeting hours.
> Behind me are two of the most memorable weeks of my life, two weeks spent slavishly worrying over little, petty, insignificant things—at least they seem petty and insignificant now but at the time they were the most important things in my life—trying to squeeze the last iota of purchasing power out of my dollars, quibbling over dimes and nickels and even pennies and scrounging and scrimping here, there and everywhere.
> Gone are the niggardly, skinflint, pinchpenny days when a nickel for a newspaper was wanton extravagance, a dime for street car fare was out of the question, and a walk around town was an evening's entertainment.

Well, that is enough, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Boisvert: I would be willing to try.

Mr. Nicholson: I am sure the hon. member who has interrupted would be willing to try for two weeks, as this young reporter did.

Mr. Boisvert: I would be willing to do so.

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the hon. member for York-Scarborough would be willing to try it, I am sure the four of us would come back here with a very different attitude from what we have now toward the people of Canada who are forced to live day after day, week after week, year after year on $40 a month.

Mr. Boisvert: How many million people are living under worse conditions?

Mr. Nicholson: I am aware of that; I am aware that in India, in China, in Burma and in a great many other countries people are having even worse times than our old age pensioners, but our old age pensioners are squeezed down to a niggardly $40 a month at a time when our corporation profits are higher than they have ever been in Canadian history.

Mr. Boisvert: Does the hon. member not think that those who are squeezing them down are—

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member can make his speech on old age pensions after I am through. My time is limited. I did not hear the question, Mr. Chairman. My time is limited and I want to—

An hon. Member: Come back.

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, I shall be glad to come back when we reach the item, but I want to discuss the question of health as it affects the people of Canada. I was not surprised at the remarks made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, but no one in this day and age can establish the fact that good health is not a matter of national concern; the quality of the health services must not be measured by one's bank account.

Let me remind the committee that when war broke out we passed legislation that compelled the young people of this country to place their services at the disposal of Canada, and in due course we drafted mobilization regulations. I hold in my hand Hansard for November 11, 1941. At page 4427 the then minister of national war services, now Judge Thorson, placed before us a table showing the percentage of young Canadians of military age in the different categories in the different districts in Canada. Most people nowadays cannot quite realize, following those 10 years of depression, that 44·1 per cent of the young lads in the prime of life failed to get into category A. They were in other categories, B-1, B-2, C-1 and C-2 and all down the line. Out of 209,298 called up there were 92,498 young Canadians rejected for military service in 1941 because they could not measure up to the standards that were thought desirable for military service at that time.

I realize that the regulations were changed later, and I also realize that there are many men who have disabilities which prevent them getting into A category who can do many other useful things. While I cannot prove it, I am sure that a great many of those 92,498 were rejected because they had been forced to live on relief budgets. In my area $5 a month, plus $1 per month per child, was the amount considered ample during those terrible 1930's. Therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in wartime or in peacetime no nation can accept the situation that I have just described when such a large percentage are rejected for military service.

The hon. member across the way suggests that there are countries where conditions are worse than they are in Canada. That is quite right. I hold in my hand the book entitled, "The War On World Poverty" written by Harold Wilson. He gives some statistics for all the major countries of the world. These statistics are not right up to date; this book was written in 1953. Canadian figures are a little better at the moment. I think the figures for infant mortality can be accepted as a fair criteria of the general health of the people in the various countries. One can see that Canada is in a much better position than Formosa, for example, which has an infant mortality rate of 125 for every 1,000 live births. Korea has 115; Burma, 203. Canada has a much better record, of course. Canada's rate at that time was 42·8; but let me tell the committee that the United States, New Zealand, Switzerland, Sweden, the United Kingdom, Denmark, Australia and Norway had much better records than Canada.

Mr. Dupuis: What are their rates?

Mr. Nicholson: I shall be glad to give them. The rate for the United States is 31·1; New Zealand, 23·8; Switzerland, 34·3; Sweden, 23·2; the United Kingdom, 34·1; Denmark, 35·3; Australia, 23·3; and Norway, 29·6. There are a great many countries that have worse records than we have. I submit that our very rich country, with our broad spaces, with our trained personnel, cannot be proud of the fact that she is so far down the line in connection with such an important question as infant mortality.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough and the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre apparently are paving the way for some retreat in this important field of a national health insurance plan.

Mr. Martin: I can assure the hon. member with all the vigour at my command that the government is not in any way retreating, but is anxiously awaiting the replies of the provinces.

Mr. Nicholson: I am very glad to hear that statement. I wish the minister had made the statement before the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre spoke.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend has referred several times to the fact that I have not spoken. I felt that we would make more progress if we waited until we reached the item. There is an item for health insurance, and I will be prepared—

Mr. Nicholson: Why did the minister not suggest that to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre?

Mr. Martin: I have already suggested it to several other hon. members, and I would be prepared to expand on our proposal and deal with some of the points that have been raised. It seems to me, if I can make a suggestion, that we have had a good general discussion, and I did think that was the right place and that I should give some leadership myself in that connection. That is the only reason. I am very anxious to discuss this particular question of the federal proposal on the matter of hospital insurance.

Mr. Nicholson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all very glad to hear the minister any time he rises, but I want to assure him he is not closing me off at this point. I have here an interesting table which the minister presented to our committee. I think the hon. member for York-Scarborough should consult the proceedings of this committee. The information which has been compiled regarding the estimated cost of the proposed national hospital scheme is quite extensive, and I think they make the proposal so attractive that no province in Canada would stay out of this scheme.

The minister gave us figures for the provinces. I have not checked all of these. He also gave an estimate of what the people in the various provinces pay through Blue Cross and other non-profit plans and through private insurance companies. There is also an estimate of what people pay for hospital care in some 510 out of 855 general hospitals in Canada. This last figure is not complete, and the conclusions I am drawing are certainly on the conservative side.

This table points out, for example, that the province of Nova Scotia is now spending over $5·4 million, the municipalities are spending $1·5 million and the people in Nova Scotia are paying $1,085,000 under Blue Cross, $500,000 to private insurance companies and $1,585,000 to hospitals. This suggests that the amount that would have to be raised in Nova Scotia is only $2,400,000. They are already paying $3,304,000 for services which would not be nearly as complete.

The province of Quebec is now paying over $13 million and the municipalities $4·8 million. It is estimated that Quebec would have to raise $27,400,000. But when you add the other figures I mentioned for Quebec, they are now spending $28,323,000; so the province would actually be saving money if one considers what is being paid to Blue Cross, to private insurance companies and the sum the citizens are now paying to their hospitals.

In Ontario the amount to be raised is $36,100,000. They are paying to Blue Cross $24,273,000, to private companies $11,835,000 and to hospitals $27,894,000. The amount that is needed in Ontario is $36,100,000 and they are now paying for other services $64 million, so I do not see how Ontario can possibly stay out of the scheme.

Concerning the province of Manitoba, I note that the people in that province are already paying $1,400,000 for hospital care. Municipalities are paying $2,200,000 and under Blue Cross over $3 million is being spent. Altogether they are paying $7,800,000 in Manitoba. All that would have to be raised in Manitoba would be $5,700,000. As you go across Canada province by province and take into account what is being paid to Blue Cross and insurance companies and to regular hospitals you find that the people in the provinces would be better off if their provinces reached an agreement with the federal government and the scheme was set up.

I want to say that while the proposal is a step in the right direction I feel this committee must not let the minister get away with his proposal to bar from the scheme over half the sick people in Canada, those who are suffering from tuberculosis and mental illnesses. I received an answer to a question on March 12 of this year. My question was as follows:

> For the last year for which statistics are available of the number of patient days spent in Canadian hospitals, how many and what percentage were in the following: (a) mental hospitals; (b) psychiatric wards in hospitals; (c) T.B. hospitals; (d) public hospitals; (e) federal hospitals; (f) private hospitals?

The two groups the minister is barring in the mental and tuberculosis hospitals represent only 50 per cent of the sick population of this country who are ill every day of the year. They are to be barred from the benefits of this legislation.

Mr. Martin: Is my hon. friend aware that that is not a completely accurate statement?

Mr. Nicholson: Well, the minister can correct it. This was an answer that was brought down by the Department of Trade and Commerce, and these are the figures of the dominion bureau of statistics which were given to me. On the same day I had another question which read as follows:

> For 1943 and 1953, what was the estimated cost per patient per day in the following hospitals: (a) mental; (b) T.B.; (c) public?

If you go back to 1943 you will find that we were spending in Canada 98 cents per person per day for the mentally ill. There has been an improvement, and we are now spending $2.70 per patient per day. Concerning people suffering from tuberculosis, in 1943 we were spending $2.76 per person per day. That is now increased to $6.29. In our public hospitals for people who are going to be in for just a few days and then released we are now spending $10.77 a day compared with $4.08 in 1943.

I think the minister must not be allowed to get away with his proposal to bar over half the sick people in Canada from the superior benefits which will be provided as soon as a national hospital plan comes into existence. When we are spending only $2.70 per person per day for the mentally ill, $6.29 per person per day for people in tuberculosis hospitals and $10.70 per person per day for people in our public hospitals I think a great injustice is being done to over half of our sick population.

I can think of no good reason for the minister to exclude this large group except that people would demand and expect to have better care under a national hospital insurance program. Before the minister can expect to have an agreement from the provinces in connection with this important development I think he must be prepared to recommend that the benefits which he proposes to extend to the provinces to provide care for the sick should be available to all the sick. Surely we are not going to have one law for people in one type of hospital and a different law for people in another type of hospital.

I think the minister must also make more progress than he is making with a view to providing a complete medical health program for all the people in Canada. I mentioned earlier the serious problem which confronted us when war broke out. I might mention now that one of the problems which is having a very disturbing effect on our economy is the problem we have been discussing in the last few days in connection with the bill of the Minister of Finance.

I have before me a survey of physicians in Canada dated June, 1954. We find that while in Canada as a whole we have one doctor for every 971 people, in British Columbia there is one doctor for every 777 and in Newfoundland one doctor for every 2,117 people. It is possible that the people in Newfoundland are healthier than those in British Columbia, but I think the reason is that it is possible for a doctor to make a better living doing less work in a more congenial climate in British Columbia. Ontario is the only other province where the ratio is less than 1,000 people for every doctor. When disease hits the country the people living in Newfoundland are subject to plagues just as much as people living in any other part of the country. The training of doctors is now very costly, and when they graduate they are permitted to go to any part of the country or even to other countries. Therefore I submit that a complete program providing the very best health services for all the people of Canada should be accepted as a national responsibility.

The minister has put out another interesting booklet which I shall not discuss, but which I suggest hon. members should order from the very efficient research division of the department. This deals with selected public hospital and medical plans in Canada. I note that it has been necessary to draw on the province of Saskatchewan for a good deal of information.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Is it not true that shortly after the provincial election the hospital rates for the citizens of Saskatchewan were increased by the provincial government?

Mr. Nicholson: I believe that is true.

An hon. Member: That has happened after every election.

Mr. Nicholson: I tell you frankly that that is one of our problems. If I were permitted to discuss the question which we were dealing with for the last few weeks I would mention that we have suffered real disabilities in Saskatchewan because we have had to pay a tremendous tribute as a result of tariff policies throughout the years. Corporations with head offices in Ontario and Quebec which have drained the maritimes have also drained Saskatchewan and we have had to finance a first class hospital program with the resources available in our own province. There was no way we could do it without passing the cost on to our people.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Blackmore: Is it not the result of the scandalously increased prices which have been permitted in this country from 1946 on? That does not sound so good.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just spoken has made some statements which in view of the importance of the subject I am afraid should not go without some explanation or some challenge. I was hoping that we could discuss this matter on the particular item. I would not want to preclude anyone, nor do I want to take advantage of anyone, but I feel that the statements the hon. member has made should be dealt with, and perhaps this is the most convenient time to deal with them though I would have preferred to wait until we get to the item.

This is the first time I have discussed in the house the proposal put forward by the Prime Minister last January on behalf of the government, at a time when I was discussing the same proposal at a meeting of all the provincial ministers of health, the provincial treasurers and representatives of our own Department of Finance in an adjoining room in this building.

That proposal is recognized by all in this house as one of the most important to have been made by the federal government in this field. It is a proposal which has been widely commented on from all sides of the house. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken referred to it in eulogistic terms, as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, particularly when he was speaking in the committee on estimates. His enthusiasm in this house has not been as generous or as vigorous as it was some months ago, but I can only conclude that that is because he has some other preoccupation in his mind.

Mr. Knowles: It is because several months have gone by and you are not getting along very well.

Mr. Martin: On March 21 the hon. member did say in the committee on estimates, as reported on page 18 of the proceedings:

—we, of the C.C.F. group in parliament, are pleased that this step in the field of national health insurance is being taken—

And then at page 21:

The minister knows that we will support him 100 per cent against any opposition he may have to this plan—

Then at page 145:

I am glad to see this program coming into effect.

And again on the same page:

—in this commendable step which I am glad he is taking and which I support—

Then at page 178:

Is there not some way in which this committee could express its approval of the proposals made by the government to the provinces—

I do not think I am being unfair to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when I say that represented then, as I am sure it does now, his acceptance of this plan. The background of this proposal lies in the fact that in May 1948 the federal government embarked upon a large program of grants in aid away and beyond the proposals made in 1945 in the matter of what has been properly characterized as a package deal covering a wide front of government activity both federal and provincial. When the prime minister of that day announced that program he said it was a prerequisite to the kind of proposal which we are now discussing.

As the hon. member for York-Scarborough pointed out, last fall the premier of Ontario felt that the time had come when the provinces should give expression to this subject and when in a spirit of co-operation between the two levels of government some definite move in this particular field should be begun. It was as a result of that and the suggestions made by other premiers that it was decided to hold a conference apart from the fiscal conference which was then in session, to see if the responsible ministers with their colleagues in treasury could not meet and generally discuss this whole problem. We had a long conference, lasting a week, the longest dominion-provincial conference I think in history, last January when this whole matter was discussed.

The federal government took the position that we were not going to impose our views on any province. After a number of years in this portfolio I am satisfied that notwithstanding what may be the view of individual members, the only way to make progress in this field is by trying to understand the problems and responsibilities of the different levels of government and in that spirit to try to see if agreement cannot be reached.

I am sure that as a result of that view we have made great progress in the health field in this country between all the provinces without exception and the federal government. I am satisfied that if we are going to make further progress in this field that is the spirit which must animate those who have to do with any level of government. That certainly is the attitude I have taken and that I am taking tonight.

With that in mind, on behalf of the federal government I said that we had our view as to what the next step should be but we were not going to impose our view, and we would like to have the provinces tell us what they thought were the steps that should be taken, if any steps could be taken in so far as the provinces were concerned. I indicated that we were prepared now to give technical and financial support to schemes put forward by the provinces on the basis of roughly 50 per cent federal contribution and roughly 50 per cent provincial contribution, based upon 25 per cent of the national per capita cost and 25 per cent of the provincial per capita cost.

This formula would yield to the maritime provinces in particular greater proportions from the federal treasury than would be the case with certain of the western provinces, notably British Columbia and Saskatchewan, both of which provinces, by the way, through their appropriate ministers said that our formula was fair and, in the words of the provincial treasurer for Saskatchewan, that we had put forward at long last a scheme which he thought was calculated to encourage interest on the part of the provinces and which was fair to all the provinces.

The provinces then put forward unanimously, without any exception, the view that we should proceed on a stage basis, and no province insisted that we should go further than we have in the proposal before us, and that included every province without exception. The province of British Columbia did say that they would prefer a wider scheme; but they recognized that at the present time, as this situation depended on the co-operation of all provinces and the federal government, it would be impractical to try to impose upon certain provinces financial obligations which they were not prepared to assume or which they thought they could not bear. Therefore no one should suggest that the limited aspect of the program is the product of any one government, because that it not the case, as the records of the conferences would show.

The provinces suggested, and with this we agree, that the next steps in this matter should be in the fields of laboratory and radiological diagnostic services and hospital insurance. It is true that at the conference that was held in the winter the premier of Ontario proposed for study some six different stages and phases of health services which he thought should receive the embrace of the federal and provincial governments, but at that conference his spokesman joined with the other provinces in saying that they did not want at this time to deal with any other aspects than the two I have mentioned, radiological and laboratory diagnostic services and hospital insurance.

We have put forward this proposal based upon the formula that it can become effective if six provinces, representing a majority of the people of Canada, express their concurrence; and I have indicated that just as quickly as that concurrence is expressed no delay will be forthcoming legislatively on the part of the federal government. I have taken advantage of the interval between the conference in January and the present time to discuss this situation informally with certain provinces in the hope of helping them to arrive at a decision at the earliest possible date. Not very long ago I discussed this matter with the premier of Ontario. I think I can say, and I think this is the way in which I should express myself in a matter involving co-operation, that we had a useful conversation, a helpful conversation, a constructive one, the kind of co-operation, the kind of discussion which I believe is calculated to achieve results. I remain hopeful that as a result of these discussions there will not be undue delay.

I recognize, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough has said, that this is an important matter, a matter that will cost the federal government in the first year a minimum of $182 million with a total national expenditure of almost $400 million, a matter that quite properly should be considered with care by every government concerned. The province of Ontario has established now a hospital commission with a very eminent hospital administrator, Mr. Swanson, as chairman. While its existence is not predicated upon the necessary acceptance of this proposal, it would seem to me that the implications in the announcement of the commission are clear that the commission would not have been established if the government of Ontario was not giving sympathetic and serious consideration to the proposal which the federal government has made in this field.

The federal government will have to decide through its Minister of Finance, speaking on behalf of the government in terms of what the budgetary policy in this particular will be, but I can say that under no circumstances is it the intention of the federal government in any way to impose any condition on any province as to how it has to raise its portion of the sharing plan. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre expressed the hope, if I understood him rightly, that we would see to it that this would be on a contributory basis, and that we would see to it that the provinces embarked upon schemes with that principle in mind. I can only say that as far as the federal government is concerned we have indicated to the provinces that we attach no conditions as to how they raise their share of the program; and that was stated by the Prime Minister, I think, at the full conference as well.

I may express the view that contributions, as they have them in one province, are perhaps a more difficult way of realizing the program; but that would be a personal view. In the province of British Columbia they now take the money out of the consolidated revenue fund and I think the scheme there, in spite of the difficulties that attended it at first, is now working admirably. Let there be no mistake about this. The federal government is not dragging its feet on this matter, as was suggested by the hon. member for Mackenzie, and he knows better than that. I take it that was a slip of the tongue.

He knows we have put forward a proposal that was arrived at after careful consideration, a proposal that in our judgment, would have great benefits for the people of this country, a proposal which depends for its realization on acceptance by the required number of provinces. We have had three provinces, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, who after an interval, that interval being some months in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan, have acceded to the proposal.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the table I placed before the committee on estimates, which shows the relative responsibilities of the various jurisdictions in so far as the net cost to governments of this proposal is concerned. I do not propose to go into those details now. We can do that if necessary when we reach the item. But there is something I do want to say, and it is one of the main reasons I rose to my feet at this time. I did not want it to go out to the country that this proposal was giving preference to one group of sick people as opposed to another. The hon. member for Mackenzie said that we were excluding mental patients and tuberculosis patients. That is the same argument he made in the committee on estimates. Notwithstanding my answers he persists in making that statement.

Mr. Nicholson: Has the policy been changed?

Mr. Martin: The fact is this. In every province of Canada but one the total cost of mental health care and of tuberculosis care is borne out of provincial revenues. It is not borne by the individual patient himself. The only exception to that, in terms of the provinces, is the province of Ontario. There the burden is over 90 per cent; that is the burden borne by the province, not by the individual patient. In other words, patients who are suffering from mental illness in the province of Ontario, to the extent of over 90 per cent, receive medical care and treatment for that illness at the expense of all of the taxpayers of the province. The individual does not pay for these services. That is the case in every other province, only to a larger extent. This is not a scheme to subsidize provincial governments—

Mr. Campbell: Is the minister not wrong? Saskatchewan does that.

Mr. Martin: Yes. I said every province except Ontario; and there it is 90 per cent.

Mr. Zaplitny: Has the minister checked in respect of Manitoba? I think he was wrong about that.

Mr. Martin: No; they told us the same thing at the conference.

Mr. Zaplitny: If the minister checks, I think he will find that he is wrong.

Mr. Martin: They gave us this information at the conference; that is the information I have given to you.

The point I am trying to make is this. This is a proposal for hospital insurance to assist the individual in meeting his costs of hospital care. It is not a proposal put forward to relieve the provincial governments of responsibilities which normally they have accepted and which they continue to accept. It is a proposal made to assist individuals in meeting the cost of hospital care. Any individual who is suffering from tuberculosis or from mental illness and who is receiving treatment in a general hospital is included in the scheme; and he should be included in that scheme because in those cases the individual is called upon to bear the hospital cost himself, not the province. The province does not give assistance in those cases. That kind of individual should be embraced by this proposal.

So the statement that has been made by the hon. gentleman is not a fair one. I am not criticizing the hon. gentleman unduly. I just think that in a matter of this importance he would want to join me in making sure that what I have said is correct. To show that the position we are taking is a proper one may I say this. No hon. gentleman can point to any jurisdiction in any country in the world, except in the case of the United Kingdom, where tuberculosis and mental patients are covered by the hospital insurance scheme. The reason they are covered in Britain is that the hospitals there now belong entirely to the state. In Canada I do not think anyone seriously proposes that the title to our hospitals should be transferred from religious or private bodies to the state, either in the name of the federal government or of the provincial government.

In any event, this government does not propose to enter into any scheme whereby we would take over the ownership of hospitals. There is not one jurisdiction in the world, including the province of Saskatchewan and the province of British Columbia, where the cost of tuberculosis and mental care is covered by the hospital insurance program. In the province of Saskatchewan there is a separate account. The cost of mental illness and the cost of tuberculosis care in that province, in British Columbia and in Alberta, is borne by the province out of the consolidated fund. It is not covered by the hospital insurance scheme.

In asking that we should do something the provinces themselves do not do, or do something that no other jurisdiction in this field does, my hon. friend is simply asking us to use a device to give further grants not to individuals but to the provincial governments themselves. I can tell my hon. friend this. Whatever he may think about us on this side, that is assuming a measure of naïvete which I do not think even an active critic like the hon. member could possibly justify, and so we are not going to do what he urges. But let me make it clear that individuals who bear the cost of mental illness care and of tuberculosis care and who are in general hospitals will be embraced by this scheme.

I do not intend at this stage, Mr. Chairman, to deal with the other points that were brought up except to say to my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that he may find it convenient to make all these proposals involving considerable sums of money. However, I should like to tell him this. We believe this proposal is a good one and I know he thinks so too. We should like to see it realized. One way to stop it from being realized would be to saddle the people with a burden which at this time I do not believe, on my responsibility as a minister of the crown, I should like to say they could bear.

For instance, he has proposed that we should have an enlargement of our old age security plan. I have calculated that the proposal he has made would cost another $621 million, which would mean that we would be spending on old age security at this time, if that proposal were accepted, more than is spent now in this entire department. He is asking us to spend in this one particular field twice as much money as the federal government spent on its entire account in 1938. If one were to accept his proposal now—which by the way does not take into account supplementary payments in British Columbia, in Saskatchewan and in Alberta—I am sure we would not have any hospital insurance scheme. If my hon. friend really believes in hospital insurance, as I believe he does, though I sometimes question the effectiveness of the methods by which he seeks to realize his objective, if he wants to stop this hospital insurance program all he has to do is to go on making extravagant demands that he knows or must know cannot possibly be met.

I say that to him. As anxious as he is, as am I and as is the government to see these things done, I ask him to realize the effect of some of his proposals. Does he think for one moment that it would be possible to persuade the people of Canada to increase appropriations in this one field by $600 million and at the same time go forward and realize the various schemes of health insurance that he has been talking about and that we have been talking about and with regard to which we are now proposing that something be done? When we come to this particular item—I hope he does not do it now, in order that we may get on with the business—no doubt my hon. friend will deal with the matter.

I simply want to conclude what I have to say by saying to the hon. member for Lanark that I thought he made an admirable statement today. I have always felt that the hon. member for Lanark makes a constructive speech on this particular subject, and I thought his speech today was of a high order. I can only say to him that the matters he covered are engaging our attention. As he knows, many of the subjects referred to by him are subjects that come within the primary competence of the provincial governments. However, under the grants in aid program we are able to give great assistance to the provinces in these matters.

Finally I would simply say this with regard to the hospital proposal, the government has made this proposal one that has no strings attached to it except that the plan should be universally applied, that it should not be given to one class and not to another. That is the only condition we have put forward. I am hoping this, and I am not saying it in a narrow political sense, because I know what are the responsibilities of the provinces. I can only say in the name of the federal government that we are hoping the provincial governments will be able to give their acceptance to this proposal as quickly as possible.

Mr. Bryce: I have one or two matters I should like to bring before the minister, Mr. Chairman. I should like to bring all of them before him at the one time, because in that way I will save your time, I will save my own time and I will save the time of the committee.

The first matter is the one which has just been discussed by the minister, the T.B. patients. I am not going into the problem of who pays for them. I know the province does that. We have built the finest hospitals in Canada, we take these people in and restore them to good health. After they have been in there two years, the doctor looks them over and says, "Now, you are getting on well and you can go home." He says, "Get a light job". Are there any light jobs for such people? I think all the jobs available are heavy jobs.

Then if an Indian who has T.B. comes down to Winnipeg or Selkirk he goes into the hospital for a year or two. When it is time for him to go home he is told to get a light job. He does not do anything, because there are no light jobs. He has to eat, so he goes to the Indian agent, and what does the doctor tell him? He tells him to live on a light diet and here is what the Indian agent gives him: 38 pounds of flour; five pounds of lard; one and a half pounds of tea; four pounds of sugar; a box of matches; two and a half pounds of baking powder; five pounds of beans; two pounds of cheese; seven pounds of salt bacon—that is not the kind of bacon we get on our breakfast table, that is sow belly—five pounds of rice; two and a half pounds of table salt.

Here is a man who has been in the hospital for two years, and they give him that sort of diet on which to live. This can be remedied. A doctor can issue an order so he will get more nourishing food. There is no milk included in this diet, and I believe a sick man should get milk. However, I leave that to the doctors to decide. There should be some law by means of which these people would be taken care of in that period, because we make them better in these hospitals that cost a lot of money and then they are back again six months after we let them out, perhaps as bad as ever. I say, don't waste money in that way.

Now, you know, you have a very fine hospital at Norway House, but you cannot get service there because there is the break-up and the freeze-up.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend think I was unfair if I suggested that when we come to the item on Indians we could deal with this particular question? My hon. friend is obviously interested in Indian health, and would he not think that when we come to these various items he could then ask his questions and I could give him answers? We are now on the first item, the general debate.

Mr. Bryce: I have no need for any answers, I am just going to tell you what can be done. I want you to hear me because I do not bother you very much. You are not listening to a word I am saying now. I want the minister to listen, Mr. Chairman; that is what I come here for, to tell him these things.

You can get double the good out of that hospital at Norway House by building a road. You will say to me, just as you say to everybody else, that is going to cost a lot of money. There are enough Indian prisoners up there to build the road, and they will be glad to get jobs. If you build a road around to the new hospital you will be able to use it at least 11½ months of the year, whereas now you cannot get into or out of the hospital for six weeks. I should like the minister to take that up with his officials when he gets time.

What is the responsibility of the federal government in connection with retarded school children? Will the minister write and tell me?

Mr. Martin: Is my hon. friend asking me a question?

Mr. Bryce: Yes.

Mr. Martin: That is the very difficulty I spoke to my hon. friend about. Can he wait until we get to that item?

Mr. Bryce: The minister will let me know about that? I know the provincial government is still adding schools to take care of these children, but there do not seem to be enough. I wondered if the federal government contributed any money?

Mr. Martin: I shall be glad to deal with it.

Mr. Bryce: Then there is the matter I took up last year, that I thought the panels that were employed across the dominion in connection with the Disabled Persons Act were not uniform. I can prove that to you; they are not uniform in the various provinces. I think it would be a good idea to get the panels together and agree on a standard; then we will not find people saying that one province is doing better than another.

Mr. Philpott: I have a few remarks to make of a general nature. First, let me say I was going to bring up the matter of old age pensions, but in view of what the minister has said I shall reserve my comments on that until we get to the item. Let me say I have no intention of unduly holding up the minister, because I know he has two very big jobs on his hands. One of his jobs is this department, which I consider is probably the most important department in the entire government. Then he has been picked by Canada, because he is Canada's ace peacemaker, to deal with the Russians in regard to disarmament. I personally believe that we will never have a really substantial increase in the old age pensions, family allowances and so on, until we do make a very drastic reduction in our expenditures on armaments. We cannot make a drastic and worth-while reduction in armaments unless we have a world agreement on disarmament. So I say everybody who really wants a better welfare set-up in Canada should do everything possible to send down to New York again our ace peacemaker, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Now, in my opinion, and I have given a great deal of study to this as well as visiting a good many of the countries myself, Canada has the best balanced welfare system of any country, at least in our part of the world. I regard the proposal for the first stage of the national health insurance scheme as the most important proposal that has been made, even by this government all down through its long record of achievement in the welfare field.

Tonight during the supper hour I was reading some of the history of the introduction of family allowances into this house. I am glad I did take the time to read it, because I found that I was doing a great injustice in my own mind to the Conservatives.

I had always thought all the Conservatives had opposed family allowances right down to the time of the vote, but when I read Hansard for 1943 and 1944 I found that all but one of the Conservatives in this house at that time did vote for family allowances. While it is true that one of the very ardent Conservatives from Toronto was temporarily suspended from the house because of the ardour of his opposition to family allowances, that was the beginning of the agreement of the whole party, because the whole party except one did vote for family allowances on that particular day.

An hon. Member: That was not the reason the hon. member was suspended.

Mr. Philpott: I am glad to say that down through the years there has been manifested from time to time by all those in this house an appreciation of what national health insurance would mean for this country. For instance, last year I think we all received a great thrill, certainly I did, when the man temporarily leading the opposition, the veteran member for Dufferin-Simcoe, surprised us all by coming out for health insurance at the tail end of his speech in the debate on the speech from the throne. When I look back in Hansard, as I did in my search today, I see that the present acting leader of the opposition, my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, asked this question at page 5472 of Hansard of 1944, volume VI:

> Then, what about health insurance? We were led to believe last year that a health insurance measure was shortly to be placed upon the statute books of Canada. Well, a committee was set up, and a draft health insurance bill was placed before it; not even having the endorsement of the government, but simply presented by a department of the government. That bill was considered all last session, and this year we have had the same procedure. Another bill has been thrown to that special committee—known as the committee on social security—and has been mulled over. But we are to provide for no health insurance in Canada at this session.

What I am pointing out, of course, is that as early as 12 years ago the prominent members of the Conservative party were pushing this government for health insurance. I ask, what is the reason for the strange paralysis that seems to have overtaken the Conservative party in this house and in the country during the past few weeks? We heard the premier of Ontario, as late as the conference of last autumn, pressing the federal government to go ahead with health insurance, and then finally we have the Prime Minister of Canada laying down the conditions on which this government will recommend to this parliament federal participation in national health insurance.

I should think those terms would be endorsed not only by every fair-minded member in this house, but also by every fair-minded citizen in the whole Dominion of Canada. The federal authority was to spend $185 million a year to go in with the provinces on what amounts to a fifty-fifty scheme, with the provinces left free to decide in their own way just how they would handle it; but the strange thing is this. Three provinces have already agreed to go ahead. Three of the necessary six, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, which have different types of governments, have already agreed to go ahead.

In terms of practical politics it means this. Unless Ontario agrees to go ahead it is impossible in the foreseeable future to get sufficient governments with sufficient populations to meet the very fair stipulation laid down by the Prime Minister of Canada. Therefore, I ask, why the strange lethargy on the part of the premier of Ontario; why the strange silence on the part of the premier of Ontario? Certainly when the great pipeline crisis was on the premier of Ontario took a very forthright stand on the side of the right. Why, when this great chance for a great social advance comes along, and when the attitude of the government of Ontario is so crucial, why do we get this strange delay?

I must say that as a member of parliament from British Columbia I have a very real and immediate interest in the accession of Ontario to this scheme. I certainly hope that Ontario does not continue much longer to hold up the whole procession toward adequate social progress in this great Dominion of Canada because we, as the minister pointed out in his evidence before the estimates committee at page 124, are in this position. This is what the minister said before that committee; here is how the provinces would make out:

> So that Saskatchewan would have on the positive side some $9 million, British Columbia, $8·9 million, Newfoundland, $1·8 million and Alberta, $800,000.

In other words, if and when this plan goes through—and it will not go through until Ontario ceases to fail to co-operate—we in British Columbia will immediately benefit to the tune of almost $9 million a year without any further contribution on our part from any source whatsoever.

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Philpott: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: While he is commenting on what he refers to as the lethargy of the premier of Ontario, will he not comment on the attitude of the premiers of Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland?

Mr. Philpott: Why, certainly, and it is just as crucial that those provinces should co-operate; but surely even my hon. friend, whose mathematics are none too strong on a good many occasions, knows perfectly well that Ontario has the balance of population in this country with over 4 million people. Therefore, unless the government of Ontario agrees it is impossible to get the necessary 50 per cent.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question, and in doing so I accept the hon. member's point that in terms of mathematics Ontario or Quebec must come in to meet the formula. Would it not be a good lead for Ontario if some of the Liberal provinces in the country were to say that the plan proposed by the Liberal federal government is an acceptable plan?

Mr. Philpott: Of course it would, and if the Tories here from Ontario will guarantee to look after the Tory government of Ontario we Liberals will guarantee to look after the Liberal governments in the other provinces.

That brings me to this. There is my hon. friend the veteran member for Dufferin-Simcoe, who has great influence with Premier Frost of Ontario. Certainly he should be able to stir Premier Frost from his long lethargy and get his government to take some kind of action. There is my hon. friend the member for Vancouver-Quadra, who like myself has a stake in British Columbia getting this benefit of nearly $9 million that will accrue to the province when Ontario comes into the scheme. There is my good friend the hon. member for Hamilton West, who comes from such an enlightened part of the country where all the people believe in social welfare. Surely she can get her friend, Premier Frost of Ontario, to quit his one-man sit-down strike and get in line with the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. And what a good article my good friend the hon. member for York-Humber could write in her column in the Toronto Telegram. She could write a good column in the Telegram entitled, "Step Lively, Leslie; It is time to Wake Up".

Mr. Knowles: And the Minister of Justice could say the same thing to Premier Campbell of Manitoba.

An hon. Member: What about Quebec?

Mr. Philpott: I do not know whether Quebec is hopeless or not.

Mr. Dufresne: Never mind Quebec. Take care of British Columbia and we will take care of Quebec.

Mr. Philpott: I leave that to the experts on goats coming from that province.

Mr. Dufresne: You have all the goats on the other side.

Mr. Philpott: I do not profess—

Some hon. Members: Baa, baa.

Mr. Dufresne: You hear them about 50 times a day; listen to them again.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Dufresne: They are not satisfied with being sheep; they are goats as well. We can smell them here, you know.

Mr. Philpott: I just wish to say, Mr. Chairman, all in good fun, that I do hope and expect the great province of Ontario will not be too long in making up its mind and stepping into line with the progressive provinces in western Canada which have already given their consent to this great measure.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, tonight I was surprised to hear the hon. member for York-Scarborough in bringing forward the point he was trying to present take such a circuitous route to approach it. It seems to be the same point the hon. member for Vancouver South arrived at concerning the probability of Premier Frost of Ontario accepting the national health plan brought forward by the government.

I was perfectly satisfied to let the matter rest after hearing the explanation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. His explanation was reasonable and acceptable. He pointed out that all the provinces in the dominion were very interested and co-operating with the federal government, and it was collaborating to the extent of trying to make the bill one which could be acceptable to all the provinces. He indicated that the federal government was not putting the provinces in a position where they would have to accept. The same thing is being done, apparently, as was done in the dominion-provincial tax-sharing bill. In other words the federal government is not forcing the provinces. Instead, the situation and attitude is, "If you do not like it you do not have to come in".

The situation today is that 37 years after the great Liberal party offered a national health plan as a plank in its platform, in 1919, it has finally brought it in. It did not bring it until after Premier Frost of Ontario had gone into a comprehensive and exhaustive study of the subject. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, Ontario has six different plans, but none are acceptable at the present time. However, the government of Ontario had a plan and was prepared to launch it, if the federal government was not prepared to do so. That is the only reason the federal government has brought down this bill. It is because the province of Ontario brought one down and is willing to go ahead with it. Now the members of the government are standing up here and saying, "Where does Ontario stand on this matter?" Ontario is ready to give the lead any time but it is the same old story; this government has brought in a bill that has conditions attached to it.

As far as government public buildings are concerned, it will pay taxes under certain conditions. As far as dominion-provincial agreements are concerned, there are certain conditions attached. This government always brings in a jug-handled deal and usually a short-change bill as far as Ontario is concerned. The government tries to make Ontario the goat. Why does it not concentrate on bringing other provinces in instead of Ontario? Ontario will give you the leadership if you want it.

Mr. Knowles: You cannot talk about goats or horses around here any more.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some remarks at this juncture. I can see that the minister is anxious to get the first item through, but I require a little latitude here. I think it would be better if I brought this matter up under another item, if the minister does not mind.

Mr. Martin: I do not want to preclude any hon. member from speaking particularly on these matters. We have now had a pretty general discussion and I am asking my hon. friend because he is on my side of the house —I know what would happen if I asked others—would he not think it desirable if he has specific questions on specific items that we might deal with it when we come to the items?

Mr. Rowe: It is bad enough that you stop the opposition; don't stop your own men.

Mr. Harrison: I am in somewhat the same position as the hon. member for Selkirk. I do not have a specific question, but I have a little discussion I want to go into. If it does not inconvenience the minister I might proceed with it now, unless the minister would care to give me a little more latitude later on when we are discussing some of the items.

Mr. Rowe: Go ahead. Read him a speech.

Mr. Martin: When we come to the family allowance item I shall be glad to accede to my hon. friend's request.

[Mr. Small.]

Mr. Harrison: With that reservation I am quite satisfied.

Mr. Barnett: I am going to preface my remarks by saying I do not intend to speak at any great length, and I hope the minister will not take any of my time in trying to persuade me to defer what I have to say.

I waited with interest for the reply that might be forthcoming to the statement of the hon. member for Vancouver South in respect to action that might be taken by Ontario to facilitate what we hope to see in British Columbia. I am in complete sympathy with that aspect of the hon. member's discussion, but I must say I was rather disappointed at some of his earlier remarks when he dragged in the old bogey about an increase in the old age pension being dependent on some reduction in arms expenditures.

In this connection I notice that the minister —I am going to get mixed up in his title like the hon. member for Vancouver South did— the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. Castleden: Wealth and hellfare.

Mr. Barnett: —did not suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre earlier today had made a slip of the tongue when he put forth his proposal in respect to an increase in the basic old age pension. He can say that something is being done in the field of national hospital insurance, but I certainly cannot go along with the thinking of people like the hon. member for Vancouver South and the minister who suggest that an increase in the old age pension at this time would necessarily endanger progress in the field of hospital insurance. I can understand the minister with the responsibilities of his office perhaps being a little more timid, particularly when he might have to convince some of the more timid-minded members of the cabinet—

Mr. Martin: None of them is timid.

Mr. Barnett: —but I am surprised to find the hon. member for Vancouver South tagging along with that timidity.

The suggestion the minister made that this increase would cost $600 million is one I do not find the least bit appalling. I think it is a matter of having a proper appreciation of what is important, an appreciation of those things on which the people of Canada should be spending their money. I agree that $600 million sounds like a lot of money, but to me in terms of the plain economics of the productive capacity of the Canadian people, $600 million is not a great sum. It might mean that some people in this country could possibly not afford a new car quite as often, or perhaps they could not turn in their old television set for the latest model as frequently, but I believe a proper appreciation of the values involved would indicate that even if some people had to make minor sacrifices of that kind the $600 million would be much better spent in the field of old age pensions. I certainly would not agree that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was the least bit unrealistic when he put forward his proposal.

I would like to tell the minister a little story concerning something that happened to me last fall. I was invited to attend a banquet of an old age pensioners' organization. I felt this was a strictly non-political gathering and I made what I considered to be a nice little speech appropriate to the occasion. I very carefully avoided becoming too fervent in any expression of my own particular views on the subject of what should be done concerning an increase. I found myself with mingled feelings of consternation and delight when a little later on in the proceedings one of the women in attendance, who I happen to know is the president of the Liberal women's association in the district, got up and made a very forthright speech on the subject of what should be done about old age pensions.

I only wished I had a tape recorder there so I could play her speech here for the benefit of the minister at this time, because I am sure no words of mine could be as forthright in expressing the requirements in this connection as her words were. I am completely confident that the majority of people—at least those in my own constituency—would be quite prepared to support a proposal to increase the old age pension in something like the degree suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

It seems to be that if this great Liberal party with its huge majority in this parliament had a bit more courage and would take that kind of issue to the people of this country, they would be more likely to prolong the life of this government than if they hang back with their present timidity in this field. I think it is time to go out and tell the people of Canada that an increase in old age pensions is going to cost money. Let us not try to hide the fact that these things do cost money. Let us go out and say that in the kind of society in which we feel we should be living, this is the sort of thing we should be spending our money on instead of on some of these highly advertised, unnecessary gadgets which we find in the country today.

This is all I intend to say on this particular subject, but there is one other point with which I should like to deal while I am on my feet. I have made previous reference to this question, and I should like to make a special plea for a specific guiding allowance for the blind persons of Canada.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend be prepared to deal with that when we come to the particular item covering blindness allowances?

Mr. Barnett: I shall co-operate with the minister to that extent. He knows I have an interest in this matter.

Mr. Martin: I shall be glad to deal with it then.

Mr. Blackmore: Before the item carries I should like to ask the minister a specific question. This is the occasion on which he is officially before the committee, but there are certain matters which I wish to discuss with him pertaining to his performance at the United Nations. Will he be appearing in a capacity in which I can ask those questions at a later date? To be more specific, will he be along with the Secretary of State for External Affairs when we are discussing those estimates? Will he be prepared to explain what he did in respect to the package deal he worked out last year? I shall refrain from asking any questions now pertaining to that matter, on the understanding that he is making a special commitment to be here so I can ask him these questions at a later time.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, during the past two or three years there have been a number of times when hon. members on this side of the house have asked the minister questions on the orders of the day and he has spent a great deal of time eulogizing his party and the great program they have undertaken. He has given the impression generally throughout the country over the years that this was just about the most perfect thing that ever happened in a most perfect world, and everything was shipshape. However, that is far from the truth in the case of old age pensions of $40 per month on which people of 70 years of age and over are asked to live.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend permit me, as an old-time room-mate who lived in the same house, to suggest that we could discuss that on the particular item?

Mr. Castleden: If the minister will give the same kind of long dissertation as he gave on health.

Mr. Martin: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Castleden: Is the minister prepared to give it now?

Mr. Martin: When we get on the item.

Mr. Castleden: There are a number of things I would like the minister to talk about when we come to that. I can list a few of them. He may try to place the blame on the increased cost of living, but I would like him to explain how we can expect old age pensioners to have a better standard of living today on $40 a month than they had 15 years ago when the cost of living was about half what it is today.

Mr. Martin: When we come to that item I shall be happy to deal with it.

Mr. Castleden: Are you going to deal with the matter?

An hon. Member: Only three minutes to hold it up.

Mr. Castleden: I will not take as long as the hon. member for Vancouver South, and I shall try to deal with matters having to do with the department of wealth and hellfare, when people of 70 years of age are asked to live on this amount. The cost of living is striking these people so hard that it is just utterly impossible for them to carry on. This will require a lot of explaining, and I hope the minister will have something more than words to give us. What I want to see is something in the way of action in giving assistance to people who have to live on $40 a month. The hon. member for Mackenzie referred to an article in a Toronto paper where a reporter outlined his experience trying to live on $40 a month. It brings things pretty close to home.

We read in the paper that the cost of living index had gone up 1·2 points, but that was let go by almost without a gesture or statement by the government. The great part of that increase was made up by the increased cost of food. It is costing the older people more for the food they have to buy, while the producers in my part of the country find that their returns are going down. The Minister of Agriculture knows that.

There is something wrong about the way we are forcing and compelling these people to live when the cost of living continues to go up. There is absolutely nothing being done to help people who are absolutely helpless and able to do nothing about it except wait for their cheque for $40 at the end of the month. The first statutory item under the minister's estimates is for $17,000 for himself, which is quite a bit more than the $40 per month the old age pensioner gets. Under the present system, when the minister reaches 70 years of age he will have that added to the $17,000, provided he is still minister.

Mr. Knowles: Heaven forbid.

Mr. Castleden: I do not know how many years he has to go. This matter is far too important to be glossed over when we are dealing with this department.

Mr. Martin: We will be coming to the item dealing with old age pensions, when we can have a full discussion.

Mr. Castleden: The only difficulty about that is I may be called out to a committee meeting. The committees could have been sitting in January, February and March. I asked the chairman of one committee when the committee was going to sit and he just said, "How high is up?" May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Martin: Would the hon. member not agree to leave this until we come to the item, so we can pass the general item? We have had a very full general discussion.

Mr. Castleden: I am sorry, I cannot concede that. I have other remarks I should like to make on the matter.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall continue with these estimates and then C.B.C., justice and agriculture.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 27, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PUBLIC WORKS

REPORTED CUT-BACK IN PROGRAM BY $20 MILLION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works perhaps I should direct this question to the Prime Minister. Press dispatches of this morning indicate the probability of the Department of Public Works cutting back their program for this year to the extent of $20 million. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell the house whether or not that is so and, if it is so, whether a similar pattern is to be followed in the other departments.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There has been no decision reached as to cut-backs. Of course, no department can do more than supplies of material and manpower will justify, and the matter of the possibility of there being $8 billion of capital development in Canada made this year is now under very serious consideration.

Mr. Green: There is a possibility that a cut of this type will be made?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There is a possibility that it may not be feasible to do all the things that were being planned for this year, but no decision has yet been reached.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING TAX ON CERTAIN ADVERTISING REVENUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Finance if, in view of the long delay and the number of press articles and rumours that are going about, he does not think it is about time to stop coyly playing the game of hide and seek and tell the house whether he does or does not intend to proceed with the proposed 20 per cent tax on advertising matter in certain magazines.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I have been informed by hon. members opposite that the session will take quite a while, and under those circumstances there will be plenty of time to deal with the resolution.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

INQUIRY RESPECTING STUDY OF REDISTRIBUTION BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can the minister tell us what the situation is now with respect to the study of redistribution that was recommended by the committee on privileges and elections last year?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): I have just received a letter from the counsel who was appointed to make a study of methods of redistribution in other commonwealth countries, and he informed me that his report is now ready and he will send it to me in a few days. This report will have to be studied and action, if any is to be taken, will then be announced.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? If this material is not studied and available in time for consideration by a committee at this session, will it be considered at the next session if there is another session of this parliament?

Mr. Pinard: I will make a study of the report and will announce the decision taken at that time, after discussing the matter with my colleagues.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO QUOTAS IN NEW CROP YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the new grain crop year in the west begins next Wednesday, could the minister announce the amount of grain farmers will be permitted to deliver on the new quota?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I understand a formal announcement from the wheat board will issue today. In the meantime, subject to that announcement—in other words if there is any error here it will be corrected in the announcement and I am not guaranteeing this information—my present information is that the initial quota on Durum wheat will be 5 bushels per seeded acre; flax 5 bushels; grains generally 100 units, the same as the opening quota for last year. There will be the same provision as last year for the delivery of malting and pearling barley. In order to help out points with a lower quota than normal at the present time, all outstanding rail orders will remain in effect so as to effect higher deliveries at the opening of the new season for points that have not already shipped the maximum quota.

FLAX—INQUIRY AS TO QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's statement with respect to grain quotas for the new crop year and the fact that in western Canada there is likely to be a large flax crop, do I understand that there is to be a quota on flax this year? This seems to be a departure from previous years when flax was not under quota. Will flax be under quota during the new crop year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I recall the situation of a year ago, flax was initially under a quota and the quota was removed shortly after the opening of the crop year.* I understand that there will be an initial quota of 5 bushels per seeded acre which, in my opinion, is a large quota. Whether a quota on flax will be maintained throughout the year I cannot say.

BOX CARS—INQUIRY AS TO ALLOCATION IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will he look into the matter of allocation of box cars at the delivery points in Saskatchewan? He asked me to draw this to his attention if I was interested in it. My attention has been called to the town of Wishart where the pool is unable to get its allocation on the basis of shipping orders.

Hon George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall draw the matter to the attention of the transport controller.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COLONEL BELCHER HOSPITAL, CALGARY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON BOARD OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): The other day I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he would give an explanation of the unfortunate incident which occurred in the Colonel Belcher hospital a few days ago. He said at that time he was setting up an independent inquiry to investigate this. My information is now that the inquiry which has been set up is to be made by three D.V.A. officials, and is not what I call an independent inquiry. Will the minister or his assistant make an explanation of that?

Mr. C. E. Bennett (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs): I shall bring the question to the attention of the minister when he returns on Monday.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO PRESERVATION OF OLD SUPREME COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a decision has now been arrived at by the government to preserve the old supreme court building as one of the shrines of our national freedom, rather than allowing it to be destroyed for the demands of the moment?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision reached about that matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is consideration being given now to its preservation?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There has been no report from the Minister of Public Works to the cabinet about the matter so far.

ST. THOMAS, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF CALLING FOR TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary assistant. Can he advise the house of the progress being made toward the construction of the new post office and public building at St. Thomas, and approximately at what time tenders will be called?

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Public Works): I think this is the kind of question that should be put on the order paper. If my hon.

friend will put his question on the order paper we shall give him the information he wants.

TRADE

TEXTILES—ENFORCEMENT OF ANTI-DUMPING LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the government taking any further action with respect to the anti-dumping laws, having particular regard to textiles, in view of the purported action being taken by the United States government on August 1?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): The anti-dumping laws are part of our laws and will be enforced in the normal way.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION IN CONNECTION WITH ALLEGED POISONOUS FOOD DYES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the minister of national wealth and hellfare—I mean the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister now in a position to indicate whether his department is prepared to take action regarding the use of coal tar food colouring in this country, in view of a recent press dispatch headed "Probers Claim Some Food Dyes Poisonous—Linked to Cancer", a copy of which I sent to the minister some days ago?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been introduced as the minister of health and welfire and wealth and hellfire, but the man who introduced me referred to me as heading one of the best departments of the government of Canada, although this is to my officers and not to me.

After August 1 of this year, oranges coloured with oil red XO will be treated as a food containing a non-permitted colour and subject to the sanctions of the Food and Drugs Act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED ISSUANCE OF INSTRUCTIONS FOR GENERAL ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Secretary of State a question which has been only partially answered in a previous reply to questions from other hon. members. Will the Secretary of State inform us whether instructions have gone out to returning officers in federal constituencies to prepare for an election? If not, will the minister explain why I have now received a communication from the returning officer of my constituency asking that I submit the names and addresses of 140 enumerators in my constituency?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was told by the chief electoral officer some time ago that the documents, with instructions, that had gone to returning officers were just routine; but in view of the remark that has just been made, I shall take the matter up with the chief electoral officer to learn what has been done and report later.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, following the inquiry just made and in view of the statement made by a reporter very close to the government and one who is usually correct in his prophecies, and in view of the statement in the Ottawa Citizen that an election is likely to be held October 29, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether there will be an election this year?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has not been any date fixed for an election, and when one is fixed it will be announced to the public otherwise than through any reporter.

Mr. Rowe: Thank you very much. I would expect that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That reporter is usually correct in his predictions.

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State aware that the necessary official preliminaries for an election which are being undertaken in most constituencies are not in progress in Notre Dame de Grace owing to the government's failure to appoint by order in council one of its supporters as an impartial returning officer for that constituency?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that fact. I will inquire of the chief electoral officer and see whether this could not be attributed to the hon. member himself.

Mr. Knowles: He is not an impartial supporter of the government.

Mr. Pinard: In any event I will see what the situation is in the hon. member's constituency.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, would the Secretary of State take steps to see that an order in council is passed appointing a returning officer for this constituency so that polls may be delineated and the other work undertaken? It is the government's responsibility to recommend that name to the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will surely take this question as notice of the wish of the hon. member to see that this is done and it is also our intention that a returning officer be appointed for that constituency.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rowe: I should like to ask the Secretary of State, in how many electoral districts are there returning officers now established either by recent appointment or permanently from the last election.

Mr. Pinard: I think this question could have been put on the order paper. In any event, I shall make inquiries and find out.

NATIONAL REVENUE

LETHBRIDGE—NUMBER OF TAXPAYERS SERVED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, notice of which I have recently sent him. In the geographical area that has been and is now being served by the Lethbridge income tax office, how many persons were required to pay income tax during each of the years 1951 to 1956, inclusive? How many of these consulted the Lethbridge income tax office personnel for guidance or assistance during each of the years 1951 to 1956, inclusive?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to regard this question as notice, as I received it only about five minutes ago. However, at this time I should like to answer questions that were put by the hon. member a few days ago as follows:

Will the minister tell the house how much the maintenance of the Lethbridge income tax office has cost the department during each of the years 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955 and 1956 to date?

The answer is as follows:

	Salaries	*Other Expense	Total
1950	$14,148	$ 500 (Est.)	$14,648
1951	15,620	525	16,145
1952	17,060	1,302	18,362
1953	17,650	1,460	19,110
1954	19,050	1,343	20,393
1955	19,680	1,435	21,115

* This does not include rent, stationery and supplies or public forms.

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

The second question was as follows:

Will he tell the house how many income tax cases the Lethbridge income tax office has dealt with during each of the years 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955 and 1956 to date?

The answer is as follows:

	No. of Cases
1950-51	1,250
1951-52	780
1952-53	952
1953-54	1,200
1954-55	212

Since the end of December 1954 most of the work formerly done in Lethbridge has been done by our Calgary district office. Since that time the number of returns sent to Lethbridge for action has been restricted to the number that can be efficiently handled by the three assessors who were stationed there. Field investigations for the Lethbridge area have as a matter of fact always been undertaken in large part by Calgary assessors. In effect, therefore, the volume of assessments actually handled in Lethbridge is, and always has been, a small part of the total.

I would like to assure the hon. member for Lethbridge that the Calgary district office will each year hereafter station two or three assessors in Lethbridge for two or three weeks in the spring of each year when it comes time for the filing of income tax returns. These men will provide adequate service for the area and will for the most part be a satisfactory substitute for the maintenance of a permanent staff there.

This, I think, will give the reason and the justification for closing up our last regional office in Canada.

There was a further question asked by the hon. member for Lethbridge on July 25. The hon. member asked me to state the boundaries of the area served by the Lethbridge office. I again emphasize the fact that the whole area of southern Alberta is served by the Calgary district office. The portion of the province served by Lethbridge is undefined because the only returns handled are those specific cases referred to them.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NIAGARA CAMP—STATEMENT AS TO QUALITY OF FOOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on July 20 I told the member for York West (Mr. Hamilton) that I would look into the provision of food for militia units at camp Niagara-on-the-Lake. This matter has now been looked into and, as so often is the case, the allegations made have been found to be somewhat exaggerated.

However, the commanding officer of the camp who conducted the investigation has reported that the quality of catering, which was by contract, was not as good as it should have been when the camp opened. It should be pointed out that to organize a catering service to take care of a large number of men at one time and quickly does present some difficulties, particularly at the opening of the camp season before the catering organization has got into its stride. However, there has been steady improvement in the situation at this camp and the quality of food and arrangements for its serving are now reported to be reasonably good.

Since the difficulty here stems from the early camp catering period I am asking the army authorities to look into ways and means of getting the quality of catering up to better levels at the outset of militia camp training next year. Our objective is to provide members of the militia with first quality food well prepared and well served. I am hopeful that our studies of the situation at this camp and elsewhere will lead to improvements in the quality of commercial catering services for which we must contract to supplement our regular army facilities.

WEST GERMANY—STATEMENT ON ALLEGED INADEQUATE RATIONS OF CANADIAN TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. White) referred to an item in the London Free Press reporting a complaint about food provided for the Canadian brigade in Germany. The allegations on which the article was based were those of Private Tunks and they may be briefly stated as follows: First, that he and his fellow soldiers did not get enough to eat; second, that Canadian troops were on British rations; third, that they got bully beef day after day; fourth, that they got only two eggs a week.

Briefly, the answer to Private Tunks' complaints is that Canadian soldiers in Germany eat very well indeed. While supplies in Germany are drawn from British sources their issue is based on Canadian troops ration scale. The issue of fresh meat, ham, poultry and fish averages 12 ounces a day, besides 2½ ounces of bacon and pure pork sausage. Once a week 3 ounces of bully beef are also served in order to provide turnover of the reserve rations of which this forms a part. Fresh eggs are provided on the scale of one per man per day. There is also a pint of fresh milk a day.

With regard to the hon. member's query as to whether Canadian products are used in making up the Canadian rations in Germany, considerations of economy and practicability militate against our attempting to set up separate lines of supply using exclusively Canadian products. Instead we draw our rations from the British army of the Rhine. Qualitatively and quantitatively our scale of issue overseas compares favourably with the excellent scale of issue in Canada. Fresh milk, eggs and so on are of course obtained in Europe. Since Europe is a large purchaser of Canadian food products, very probably part of the rations are of Canadian origin.

I can assure the house that despite Private Tunks my own sampling of meals served and the observations of other experts in this line —possibly I can include the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Pearkes)—convinced me that our soldiers in Europe are eating very well indeed, which is as it should be.

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON ALLEGED USE OF R.C.A.F. PLANE IN 1953 ELECTION CAMPAIGN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Hodgson) asked me the following question:

> On whose authorization was it that an R.C.A.F. plane flew the former minister of transport from Ottawa to Lindsay and back again and to other political meetings in July of 1953?

The short answer is that there was no authorization because there was no flight by an R.C.A.F. plane for the former minister of transport during July, 1953. I am very much surprised that the hon. member should persist in raising this question with monotonous regularity, particularly as a very full answer was given to his own written question on this very subject and which, if he will take the trouble to look, he will find at page 1422 of Hansard for February 23, 1955.

Mr. Hodgson: Would the minister like to have a picture of the plane when it landed at Sturgeon Lake?

Mr. Campney: I always like to look at pictures.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

244. Departmental administration, $1,222,800.

Mr. Castleden: Last evening we were discussing the matter of the administration of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the matter of old age pensions. The minister seemed to be rather pleased that I should keep this item open. I should like to tell him that the members of the C.C.F. party in this house historically have been acting as a goad and a spur to the governments of this country in the matter of old age pensions ever since the party was elected to this house. It was largely through the efforts of one of the original members of this party that the old age pension was established.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Castleden: I see that a lot of other members agree with me. Today we have some 745,000 pensioners in Canada, and the cost to the Canadian government is about $353 million. I think that the fact that we pay that amount of money and are taking care of those people is all to the good in Canada, and we can be proud of the record. However, there is something very seriously wrong with the pension that is given out today. I think the Canadian people will support an increase in that pension because it is the actions of the present government at Ottawa that have brought about a condition that these people are not living as senior citizens of this country should live.

I refer to the fact that the $40 a month that is now paid to old age pensioners, to people in Canada when they reach the age of 70, is not sufficient for them to live in the way they should live after reaching that age. A few years ago, a pension of $40 per month probably would have been sufficient to take care of the needs of an average person, but the cost of living—the cost of rental, clothing, food and particularly medical attention in hospitals—has increased so tremendously that the value of the $40 per month is practically wiped out. The people are still trying to exist on a niggardly, paltry $40 which will buy very little. I do not know any place in Canada where a person can obtain decent shelter for $20 per month, certainly not in the cities. To try to exist on the remaining $20 a month, to buy food, clothing, medical care and medicine, with the costs today constantly increasing, means that these people just do not get them.

[Mr. Campney.]

The government that sits opposite today is responsible for the increased cost of living. When they took the price controls off, immediately after the war, they allowed the cost of living to skyrocket to a point where they have found it necessary to see that the Canadian people got some increase in their income. Members of parliament increased their pay to $10,000 per year. Cabinet members increased their pay. Wage earners have found it necessary to go on strike to get more money in order to be able to cope with the constantly increasing costs of living. The provincial governments have difficulty in administering their own departments. The minister's estimates and the report of his department show how the costs of administering that department are constantly increasing because of the cost of living.

One group of people who seem to be unable to pass on their costs are the old age pensioners. Left with a miserable $40 a month, life to them is a mere existence. It is fortunate that in some provinces these people receive a little extra because the provincial governments have assumed a responsibility which I maintain is not theirs out of pity for the old age pensioners. The province of Saskatchewan, and also the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta, pay a supplementary allowance in order to help the pensioners to eke out an existence because they cannot exist on $40 a month.

The provincial government of Saskatchewan has assumed the responsibility for all medical care for old age pensioners. What a relief that must be for the people who live in that province compared with other provinces where the old age pensioner must spend part of his $40 a month on hospital care, doctors and medicines. Our province provides free medical attention, free hospitalization, eye, ear, nose and throat care, dental care and other assistance of that kind to needy pensioners without cost.

Mr. Studer: How many people get the supplementary allowance?

An hon. Member: How many get it in Manitoba?

Mr. Castleden: All needy people get the supplementary allowance.

Mr. Studer: You are the humanitarians. How many get the supplementary allowance in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Castleden: I suppose none at all?

Mr. Studer: Only twenty-two.

Mr. Castleden: Is that all the people who get the supplementary allowance in Saskatchewan? The hon. member ought to be ashamed to say that is all who get the additional allowance.

Mr. Studer: I said supplementary allowance to the full extent.

Mr. Castleden: To the full extent—now you are changing it a little. The allowances are given according to the need.

Mr. Ellis: How many Liberal provincial governments give anything?

Mr. Castleden: Saskatchewan gives an allowance although the per capita income is quite low and it is one of the poorer provinces.

Mr. Studer: Only twenty-two people with need.

Mr. Castleden: Now you are trying to go back again. Is that all who get any supplementary allowance? Is that all who get free hospital care and free medical attention? Are those your figures?

Mr. Studer: Who get the maximum.

Mr. Castleden: Now you are changing it. Every person who is in need gets a supplementary allowance and receives the full benefits of free hospital care and free medical attention, and you know it.

Mr. Ellis: What about the Manitoba Liberal government?

Mr. Studer: Manitoba does not claim to be humanitarian but you do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Manitoba is not humanitarian; Manitoba is Liberal.

Mr. Studer: Tell the truth over there for once.

Mr. Castleden: Absolutely everything I have said is true. You are the one who is trying to twist things and make it look as though there were only twenty-two people receiving hospital care, medical care and so on.

Mr. Studer: Receiving the maximum allowance under the supplementary pension.

Mr. Castleden: It is amusing to listen to you, old flannelmouth. It is nice to have you back in the house again after your long sojourn in the west.

Mr. Studer: When did you come back?

Mr. Dickey: Yesterday.

Mr. Castleden: I have been back a long time. Unfortunately I had to go west to see some of my friends.

Mr. Dickey: It seems like a long time, as you have been speaking ever since you got back.

Mr. Castleden: The government is now spending a matter of $353 million on old age pensions at the rate of $40 a month per person. I suggest that if this government—

Mr. Martin: The figure is $379 million.

Mr. Castleden: For what year?

Mr. Martin: That is the estimate. It has increased this year by $11 million.

Mr. Castleden: I took the latest figure from page 114, I believe, of the minister's annual report and the figure is $353,205,333.

Mr. Martin: Actually it is $379 million.

Mr. Castleden: That was last year?

Mr. Martin: No, that is the estimate for this year.

Mr. Castleden: That is your estimate for this year. Good. We are pleased to see them spend that, but I am trying to point out to the minister that with the cost of living increasing the amount is still insufficient and quite inadequate. Certainly it does not take care of the old age pensioner trying to exist in those provinces where he does not get any additional assistance. We intend to continue to fight to get an increase in the pension to take care of these people adequately.

It is because of their suffering that we cannot allow the minister's estimates to go through again without a further and emphatic protest. An increase of even a little bit would mean so much to these people. You are giving the pension to every person who has reached the age of 70. How many thousand people are there, 745,000?

Mr. Martin: We are giving the pension to about 780,000 people 70 and over.

Mr. Castleden: That is the old age pension.

Mr. Martin: Old age security recipients number about 780,000.

Mr. Castleden: That is in what year?

Mr. Martin: That is as of today.

Mr. Castleden: The minister can give me all the figures he likes.

Mr. Martin: I would point out to my hon. friend what the difficulty is, as I suggested to him last night. He is dealing with a particular subject and I have no objection to his carrying on, but only when we get to the particular item. I will answer what he says and deal with it then, which I think is the proper way to do it. If my hon. friend wants to make a general speech, that is his privilege. I do not want him to think that I am huffed in any way. He can take all the time in the world, but the appropriate place is on the proper item.

Mr. Castleden: That is true, but at the same time general speeches are made on the first item of the department which the minister administers. We hear him speak quite frequently in the house and on almost every occasion he is asked a question he gives a long talk on the splendid work the government is doing.

Mr. Martin: I am not a bad old fellow.

Mr. Castleden: The minister referred yesterday to the fact that we used to be roommates some years ago.

Mr. Martin: We lived in the same house.

Mr. Castleden: That is right. I was using the minister's words. I can remember your cherubic figure in those days, and I suggest that if you had gone on the old age pensioners' diet at that time you would not have had to go on an artificial one to attain your present fine figure. The minister's waistline in those days would scarcely have been appropriate for a minister handing out $40 a month to old age pensioners living in the condition of starvation in which they have to live. The point I am trying to make is this. The fact is that the situation is so bad that provincial governments have to enter the field in order to relieve the dire need of people who are unable to help themselves, whose earning capacity is practically gone and who have no way of passing on increases in the costs of living to anyone else, as the manufacturers can. Even with the supply of food that we have in this country, old age pensioners who are attempting to live on this amount of money cannot help but be actually hungry. Coming from the prairie provinces as I do, and seeing the abundance of food in that part of the country, in my opinion it is a shame that these old age pensioners have to pay the prices that they do, even for the bread they get, for the meat they have to buy and the other things they have to purchase. The fact that people over 70 years of age are hungry in this land, with hundreds of millions of bushels of surplus wheat, is a tragic situation, in my opinion.

I believe that the federal government has got to assume responsibility for a larger and larger share of the payments to old age pensioners in this country. These people have made their contribution to Canada. They have completed their life's work and in their declining years most of them, through no fault of their own, find themselves in dire circumstances. They could live on $40 a month if the cost of living were not so high. But where there are cases of need, particularly in the matter of hospitalization and medical care, surely it is the responsibility of the federal government to see that their senior citizens in any part of Canada do not suffer. If the provincial governments are going to undertake this, and they do it because the federal government refuses to do so, that is a sign that the need is there. It is a sign that the federal government should accept its responsibility. So long as these conditions exist we cannot be complacent; we cannot be satisfied and we cannot be proud of the achievements of the minister's department.

I am willing to pay tribute to what he has done in some fields. In view of the fact the cost of living is so high, with the resulting hardship on old age pensioners, I say that here is a place where humanity demands that the Canadian people should take care of their senior citizens. Some years ago when I came to this house I protested against conditions amongst the native people of this country, our Indians, particularly in the matter of health and welfare. I want to commend this department for the job it is doing in taking over the matter of health amongst the Indians. The result has been, as departmental records show, that with the new treatment for tuberculosis remarkable steps have been taken. It is only because we constantly bring these matters to the attention of the people of Canada so they know what is going on that we get action. I want to tell the minister that we are going to continue to pound at this government for action on the matter of old age pensions. Until we can get some action, we will continue to talk on every possible occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have just one or two words which I want to say to the minister with regard to the level of old age pensions today. No one can deny that the level is such that many of our old age pensioners find themselves in an impossible position. The reason for it, of course, is simply this. While Canada has in circulation more and more dollars, those dollars buy less and less. Indeed, having regard to the remarks yesterday by the chairman of the Bank of Canada, we are facing inflation in this country. More and more the level of prices is rising as inflationary influences are felt. I regret that today little or nothing has been done by the government but to continue their course.

I believe we have arrived at a plateau and that prices will continue to rise rather than return to the levels of 1949, the basic year now taken as a standard by the bureau of statistics. The old age pensioners, because of that fact, find themselves in difficulties and in an intolerable position. My hon. friend mentioned that the entire responsibility is that of the federal government. I do not belong to that school. I believe that the provinces have a responsibility, without in any way relieving the federal government of a primary responsibility which it has accepted to assure that old age pensioners shall not be made to suffer unnecessarily. The fact remains that there is also the responsibility of provincial governments.

I am not going to enter into a controversy that has been carried on between the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the hon. member for Yorkton, but it is a fact that in Saskatchewan the numbers receiving the maximum amount of the provincial government additional assistance to old age pensions is less than 30 pensioners.

Mr. Nicholson: How does the percentage compare with Ontario?

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend can deal with that. I have heard my hon. friend for so many years preaching this humanitarianism here. We are all in favour of that. When one commences to discuss the situation in the province of which I know something, he immediately goes to some other province because he believes that in doing so he can take the heat off.

Mr. Nicholson: But you are running down your own province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not running down, I am giving facts. There is no question of running down. I simply say that from 1944 on we have heard that old, old story that social security can be provided for everyone without cost to anyone.

Mr. Nicholson: No, no.

Mr. Ellis: That is a figment of a Tory imagination.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently that is a sore point with my hon. friend. It is nonetheless a fact, that in Saskatchewan we were told about the wonderful Utopia that would be established; that social security would be available for all out of the profits that were going to be made by the corporations that would be publicly operated by the government. I am simply pointing out that in the light of our experience social security can only be provided if the people are prepared to pay for it. I am in no way excusing the dominion government for the present level of old age pensions when I say this, that in the province of Saskatchewan, where my hon. friends who now interrupt me are in power, there is nothing to prevent them from raising by an additional amount standards in so far as old age pensioners are concerned.

Mr. Nicholson: What do they do in Tory Ontario?

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend may have his say afterwards. I am simply pointing out the facts.

Mr. Ellis: What about Tory Ontario?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am dealing with Saskatchewan, since it has been raised as the standard of standards, and I simply say this. As for these humanitarian claims—and all of us have them; they are not a monopoly of my friends to the left—there is a simple way whereby they may achieve an additional amount for the old age pensioners and that is within the province of Saskatchewan where their own government is in power. I say that at the same time as I note that the situation of the old age pensioners is such that all of us must realize that many of our old age pensioners are in need and find themselves in dire circumstances.

What I rose to speak about particularly was the administration of the Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend not agree to wait until we come to the item? I would appreciate it if he would.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, I do not expect to be here.

Mr. Martin: The difficulty is, I do not have an opportunity to reply directly.

Mr. Nicholson: Hit and run is the term.

Mr. Martin: I think the hon. member for Prince Albert is being fair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want the opportunity of doing this and I may not be present when the item comes up. As I understand it, this is a general discussion.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend will not mind my intervening. I am saying this by way of suggestion to the Chair as well. We are now dealing with particular items. If we were having a general debate it would be proper on the first item, but the hon. member for Yorkton spoke a moment ago and I should like to deal with what he said, and I should like to deal with disability allowances, but I cannot do it on the general item. I should like my hon. friend to accommodate me; I am sure he will do his best.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am going to be so brief and so succinct that I am sure my hon. friend will have no objection to my taking a few moments on the general item instead of discussing it piecemeal here and there. I am referring to the Disabled Persons Act, passed by this house in 1954. This act provides for dominion and provincial contributions; it provides for the payment of an allowance to those who are totally and permanently disabled as prescribed by the regulations. In my experience, this act is being altogether too rigidly administered. The joker in the act is the section that provides that the definition of total and permanent disablement shall be that definition determined by regulations.

The situation today, in whatever cases have come to my attention, indicates that the basis of interpretation excludes many persons who should be qualified and who should receive the allowance. I am not going into particular cases, but I am going to say this. The regulations were apparently designed to deny many persons who should be entitled. I have a recent example in mind, and I am not going to refer to the man's name because the minister has it. It is the case of a young man willing and able to work who is afflicted with a disease.

Mr. Martin: That is the boy who cannot walk?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Martin: I have that case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has always been willing to work, but he is stricken with a disease that has made him permanently the occupant of a wheel chair. He is a married man with one child. He does not ask for charitable assistance. I heard of his case and the difficult position in which he finds himself. I took it up with the authorities. The man has tried to train himself through the instrumentality of courses that are available to those who are totally incapacitated. Since he is a married man with one child he finds it difficult to take the type of training that is only available some 150 miles from the place where he lives.

The man's wife has endeavoured to work. From time to time she has been incapacitated, or at least ill, and unable to carry on. The definition of total and permanent disablement has denied him this allowance. This is one case of many. I feel that at the next session this question should be submitted to a committee in order to determine a fair and proper definition of total and permanent disablement. Parliament never intended that the definition should exclude many who should be entitled on the basis of the ordinary meaning of the words and expression "total and permanent disablement". I also feel that this is a matter that deserves the attention of a committee of this house for the reason that while in part the contribution is provincial and the definition of total and permanent disablement has been arrived at as a result of conferences with the provinces, there can be no justification for the rigid and utterly inexcusably restrictive nature of the interpretation of this term as now exists. In saying that, I realize that the provinces have an equal responsibility to make sure that the definition will guard against the possibility of claims being favourably accepted from those who should not be entitled but at the same time will be so interpreted that worthy cases will receive a fair opportunity to receive the allowance which is admirable in its purpose and deserving in its concept.

I have nothing more to say at this time regarding this matter, but I ask the minister to give consideration to having a definition arrived at in keeping with the ideas of this house when it passed the legislation. This is one of the great dangers of regulations. Parliament passes the law, regulations define it and, in many cases, the actual ambit of the law, and in that definition departs from the concepts that were in the minds of legislators when they gave support to the legislation in question.

Mr. Martin: May I say to the hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that I will reply to him. He deserves a reply, but this is not the appropriate time. I would be completely out of order in doing so. I am rising at this time to suggest to the chairman, with much respect, that when we are dealing with particular items, he should see it desirable to indicate that it is out of order on the general item to do so, and that we should have an orderly debate where we can put questions and give answers on the particular items. In doing it in this way we are going all over the map and we are not having a meeting of minds.

I had to ask the hon. member for Meadow Lake last night, an hon. member from our own side, not to go ahead with some questions that he wanted to put to me critically, I know, in respect of the family allowances situation. I asked the hon. member for New Westminster last night and he acceded. I asked the hon. member for Yorkton a moment ago and he did not see fit to do so. That is his own affair. The hon. member for Prince Albert said he had to leave and that is why he was making his remarks now. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that that is the desirable way to proceed and one in which I am sure no one will lose the opportunity of expressing himself, or expressing his view, but at the same time we shall have an opportunity to put the other side of the case. I rise at this time, Mr. Chairman, only to suggest that this course be followed.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, earlier today I had occasion to refer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare as the minister of wealth. I am pleased to hear at this time that he is again pointing out the desirability of taking some of these matters on a particular item. However, Mr. Chairman, in speaking to that for a moment before carrying on with my discourse, I am sure the minister realizes as do many hon. members in this house that we are not always free to be in the chamber at the particular moment when specific items are called. Many of us belong to various committees, some of which are sitting, and it is difficult for us to be here at the appropriate time because we have other commitments and it is unfortunate that we cannot be here when a particular item is called. Because we have certain other engagements which sometimes take us from this chamber while the house is in session the only time we can raise particular questions is at the opportune moment and I would say that possibly the purpose of having the first item as an administrative one is in order that we can deal with specific problems under it.

Mr. Martin: No, no.

The Chairman: Order; may I just interrupt there. The hon. member has mentioned duties on committees and elsewhere which might prevent him from making a speech on the particular item under which it would be relevant. Of course, the Chair could not recognize any such argument. If we have a rule of relevancy it must be strictly adhered to and speeches should be made at the proper time.

I have no intention of curtailing in any way the general discussion which takes place on the first item of the estimates but I must agree with the remarks which the minister made a few moments ago and say that in my opinion we can proceed with our work in a much more orderly manner if we confine our speeches on the first item to a general discussion.

Hon. members will realize that the minister in charge of a department has his officials appear when the particular items are before us. It would be much preferable and would enable us to do our work in a much more orderly manner if the particular matters raised were dealt with when the relevant item is called. Therefore, without attempting to limit the general discussion in any way, I do suggest it should be a general discussion.

Mr. Hahn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In that case I shall continue. As I said earlier, I referred to the minister as the minister of wealth. I am sure everyone here recognizes that he has a wealth of words, a wealth of diplomacy and a tremendous ability to evade. Today he has also demonstrated, to me at least, a wealth of wisdom in the case where I asked him to implement a certain restriction in respect to the importation of oranges with colour added to them.

In respect to this matter I might say it is not a case of constituents always bringing problems to one's attention, but in the matter of health I think it is our duty from time to time to try to find where possible any instances wherein we can safeguard the health of our constituents and the people of Canada as a whole.

I drafted a particular question having to do with colour which is added to oranges that come from Florida and brought it to the minister's attention. He was kind enough to have the question examined into and after further discussion with him on this particular matter I was finally put in receipt of a newspaper article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun and with which I think every hon. member in this house should be somewhat familiar.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend feel he could discuss that on the appropriate item, the food and drug item? We can deal with it at that time. It is a most important subject and I cannot deal with it now. Perhaps we could deal with it when we come to item 255 which is where it belongs.

Mr. Hahn: I will accede to the minister's request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Martin: Thank you very much.

Mr. Hahn: I will do so because I am opening up a new subject and I realize it has not been discussed here earlier. However, in doing that I am satisfied that when I deal with the next item I have on my list in a general fashion the minister will agree that I am quite in order because of the extensive way in which discussion has taken place up to this moment. I wish to speak in a general way of the health of pensioners, not specifically old age pensioners but blind pensioners as well.

Mr. Martin: Could we deal with that when we come to the specific item?

Mr. Hahn: I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that what the minister says is quite true. There is not an item in this book with which we could not deal—

Mr. Martin: I am referring to item 279.

Mr. Hahn: —but I am dealing in a general fashion with this particular subject. I am not making my speech on the subject of blind pensioners. I am simply asking at this time that the minister keep in mind the fact that we have blind people in this country who require special assistance.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke in sepaking for this group also drew this matter to the minister's attention. In my capacity as a member of parliament I have received—and I think this might interest the minister—more representations from groups including fraternal societies and so on concerning special assistance for the blind than I have received in respect to any other piece of legislation that is before this house, and that includes further assistance to old age pensioners or senior citizens as the case might be. Concerning pensions, those who are in the low income group, and I am thinking particularly of pensioners such as C.P.R. pensioners, have sent me a great deal of correspondence on this matter.

Possibly in speaking concerning pension legislation the minister would care to outline how the new act we passed this year with respect to insurance for unemployed employables might apply to this group of citizens in order to save my asking questions on it.

Mr. Martin: When we come to that particular item I will be very glad to do so. These are all specific questions.

Mr. Hahn: Then we have the old age pensioners themselves. I know the minister will say we have an item for that particular question and I agree that we do have one, but he will realize as I do that every group in this house except this one has indicated something concerning their stand on the question of old age pensions.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke did so extremely well.

Mr. Hahn: I would be very happy to accede to the minister's request but I am satisfied he would agree upon an examination of the speech of the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke that the hon. member did not deal with it in specific terms, as some of our friends to the right may have done.

I have just one or two observations to make in respect to this matter. A great deal has been said about humanitarianism and the attitude of the various provinces concerning it. I believe there is no disagreement among hon. members of this house concerning the fact that the provinces do owe something to our senior citizens. Whether we are members of the C.C.F., the Social Credit group or the Liberal party, I think we all agree something more should be done for the senior citizens. However, our points of view differ in some respects from those of the minister, and those who support him, who have suggested it is impossible and impracticable to do it at this time. Yesterday an hon. member suggested that we would have to do away with our defence spending, but such is not the case as far as I am concerned. There are other means which could be devised. We find our Conservative friends are highly in favour of this but they feel that the provinces owe more in this regard. I am satisfied that those who took part in or listened to the debate on the provincial-federal tax agreements which took place a few days ago must realize that the provinces are not in a position to do much more than they are doing at the present time. The federal government seemed to realize that when they suggested equalization payments.

I come now to the charge made, I believe by the hon. member for Yorkton, with regard to supplementary allowances as paid by the various provinces. I think everyone recognizes the virtue of the C.C.F. government as far as the people of Saskatchewan are concerned. Those people had the opportunity to elect a better government but decided against it and to carry on with the type of humanitarianism under which they suffer in that province.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): You put in all your big shots and you were not very successful.

Mr. Hahn: I am always amazed at the comments we hear from our hon. friends when we try to draw a parallel between what they are doing and what other provinces are doing.

Mr. Ellis: Keep the record straight.

Mr. Hahn: I am going to keep the record straight. If my hon. friend hears anything to which he wants to take exception he can do so.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friends agree to have this dispute when we come to the particular item?

Mr. Hahn: If the hon. member will allow me to finish.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to ask hon. members, unless they are going to deal with matters generally, which they are at liberty to do, they should in fairness to all of us deal with the specific items. There will be various opportunities offered and I would ask you to see that the discussion is general. I am sure that hon. members will be glad to follow your directions.

Mr. Hahn: I shall be only too glad to accede.

The Chairman: Hon. members will realize that there is difficulty in deciding what is a general discussion. I recall that the hon. member for Yorkton and other hon. members discussed the very question which the hon. member for New Westminster is now discussing. I do not feel I would be dealing fairly with the hon. member for New Westminster if

I attempted to limit him in discussing matters which have been discussed previously by other hon. members.

Mr. Hahn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; you have stated exactly my reason for being on my feet at this time. I would be only too happy to agree with my C.C.F. friends that Tory Ontario is giving nothing in the way of supplementary allowances, and neither are Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Manitoba. On April 1, 1955 the province of Saskatchewan increased the maximum supplementary allowance from $2.50 to $20 per month payable to those who are eligible. That would be the maximum amount payable to a married couple where only one was receiving an old age pension. I do not think my hon. friends will take exception to that statement.

That means in effect that a married man and his wife who are both in receipt of old age pensions and can prove under a means test that they are in need will receive a combined payment of $20 from the province of Saskatchewan. I do not say that to belittle the efforts being made by Saskatchewan. Possibly that province is doing all it feels it can do.

Mr. Ellis: It was the first province to give supplementary allowances of any kind.

Mr. Hahn: I notice the increase is phenomenal, from $2.50 to $20 for a family of two. I am satisfied the people of Saskatchewan like that attitude or they would not have re-elected the government they have at the present time. At the present time British Columbia pays a supplementary allowance of $20 per month to each individual who is in receipt of old age pension and who can prove need. It was pointed out earlier by an hon. member that there were 22 per cent or so of the citizens in Saskatchewan who receive this supplementary maximum allowance of $20 per month. I am not sure of the exact number in British Columbia but I am satisfied that the figure would be something like 75 per cent of the total number of recipients of old age pensions.

Mr. Philpott: You are a little too high.

Mr. Hahn: What is it?

Mr. Philpott: Substantially less than that.

Mr. Nicholson: There is a means test.

Mr. Hahn: I said all those in receipt of old age pensions who could prove need. Then there would be those who would get less than the maximum.

Mr. Castleden: The per capita income of that province is higher.

Mr. Hahn: The point I wish to make is that both the husband and wife are eligible for further assistance. In other words, the maximum is $40 per month as compared with $20 in Saskatchewan and $15 per month each in Alberta or a maximum of $30 for a family of two. I have a table here which indicates the maximum amounts payable in each province. The figures are as follows:

	Alberta	British Columbia	Saskatchewan
Old Age Security
Single	$ 900	$ 780	$ 600
Married (both receiving old age security)	1,440	1,440	1,080
Married (one receiving old age security)	1,380	1,260	720
Blind Persons Allowance
Single	960	900	600
Married (both receiving blind persons allowance)	1,560	1,560	1,080
Married (one receiving blind persons allowance)	1,440	1,380	720
Old Age Assistance
Single	780	780	nil
Married (both receiving old age assistance)	1,320	1,320	nil
Married (one receiving old age assistance)	1,320	1,140	nil

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that in view of that—

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Blackmore: Why not let him give his talk? You do not expect him to be an encyclopedia, do you?

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I do not think the hon. member should get excited. I just wanted to ask the member a question, possibly to prevent me from making a speech. I wonder whether the hon. member would complete the picture and put on record the comparable services in Alberta and Saskatchewan in connection with nursing services, optical services, physiotherapy, chiropody, and everything else in connection with the two forms of assistance given.

Mr. Blackmore: In other words, be an encyclopedia.

Mr. Hahn: I am very appreciative of what the hon. member has asked me. With the wisdom of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and taking a leaflet from his booklet, I will say that I shall take the question as notice, for I do not carry such information with me, and I shall give it further consideration at a later date.

Mr. Ellis: Why not get a well-balanced picture?

Mr. Blackmore: Why not give your own speech?

Mr. Goode: On a point of order. We all like to enjoy the sweepstakes in regard to old age pensions, but I suggest that when a member of this house wishes to ask a question he should address the Chair and not have a personal conversation with someone else in the house.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to touch on another project as well, but I see that it is nearly 12.30 and I have practically come to my full allotted time, so that I shall give way to the next speaker.

Mr. Martin: I had not intended to deal with this question of old age security at this time, but in view of the fact that—

Mr. Gillis: The minister had better not, or he will start another round of speeches. I wanted to say something myself.

Mr. Martin: In fairness to those of us who sit on this side of the house, I should say that it is not fair that there should be statements made about old age security and government policy without the government's point of view being put forward so that people can really see what the situation is. I am perfectly aware, as my hon. friend from Cape Breton South has pointed out, that that is the situation, but I asked hon. members if they would not accede to the suggestion of the Chair that we might on these specific items deal with them when they were reached. The hon. member for New Westminster did not see fit to accede to that request. That is his privilege, although I submit with much confidence that he was clearly out of order.

Mr. Hahn: On a point of order. I would ask the minister to indicate whether the members who preceded me and talked about old age pensions were not justified.

Mr. Martin: I think they were justified in talking about them, but what I am saying is that this is on the general item. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was perfectly in order, as he dealt with it in a general way in terms of principle along with the whole work of the department, but the member who has just spoken—and he is a man for whom I have great personal esteem —did not deal with it in a general way. He dealt with particular items, as did the hon. member for Prince Albert, who is now out of the house and will not be listening to what I am saying. Those who sit on the Speaker's right and who have propounded these policies should have a chance to answer. I have decided that the fairest thing is for me to answer this right now, and I propose to put forward the government's position in the matter of old age security.

Mr. Knowles: I do not blame the minister for what he is about to do, but would the minister care to ascertain whether any other members propose to speak on the first item. If perchance there are none, we can get on with it. If others intend to speak, the minister is perfectly right in seeking to go ahead.

Mr. Martin: I would agree not to make my statement if it is agreed that we can pass the general item and deal with these matters specifically. I know how hon. members on the government side feel; they feel that I should be answering these things. I think we have something to answer and I think it is my duty to do so, but I am willing to wait until the appropriate item if the house will accede to that.

Mr. Winch: I wish to speak on the first item, not on anything that has come before but only under the general item.

Mr. Martin: Is it a general subject? If it is a specific subject it means—

Mr. Winch: It will not take more than four minutes.

Mr. Martin: That is what the hon. member for Prince Albert said. He took 15 minutes.

Mr. Winch: Give me four minutes and I shall be through. I postponed what I intended to say because I found no place under which I could say it except under the general item. That is the matter of the natural health resources of Canada.

Mr. Martin: That can be discussed when we come to the research grants, item 264. I shall bear that in mind when we come to that item as we did last year.

Mr. Blackmore: On a point of order. I have been sitting in this house now for 20 years and I know a little about these things. The minister is now attempting to establish a principle which is unsound. Ever since I have been here, it has been customary as a principle for a member to discuss any aspect of the whole estimates under the general item. If I might just kindly suggest it to the minister, we have just seen the Minister of National Defence go through just the kind of grilling that he is going through, and the Minister of National Defence answered every question that was asked under the general item.

Mr. Martin: May I point out in fairness that the only—

Mr. Blackmore: Will you let me finish what I have to say?

Mr. Martin: The Minister of National Defence has only four items. We have nearly 40. There is no comparison. I know my hon. friend is a fair-minded member and he would agree with me—

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, your hon. friend wants to be fair-minded to both sides. I remember when we were practically squeezed right out of discussion by a rigid application of the relevancy rule in respect of the individual items as we came to them. That is the reason why the members began carrying on full discussion under the general item. That is the whole situation. May I tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if he will permit this discussion to go along without any interruptions and answer where he has the experts to do so and, where he has not the experts, say, "I shall answer this at such and such a time," I shall promise him that the same thing will happen as has happened already with the Minister of National Defence. The members said all they wanted to say. They asked all the questions they wished. When they will have done that and the first item goes through, the other items will go through like straw through a threshing machine. It has happened time and time again. If he will not be so particular about keeping people in order, he will get his estimates through just as fast, perhaps faster, and we shall all feel happy about it. I wish to commend the chairman for the ruling he has made up to the present time. I do not wish him to move from that. I must support him in that position when he resists the minister's desire to restrict the discussion on the general item.

The Chairman: Order. I do not think there is any attempt here to establish any new principle or to restrict discussion in any way. The difficulty is merely one of the Chair being able to interpret to the satisfaction of the committee what is general discussion and what is particular discussion. I notice that when the hon. member for New Westminster started to speak on one subject the minister pointed out that it could more appropriately be discussed under a particular item, and the member immediately acceded to that request. I think that if the committee proceeds on that basis we will not be establishing any new principle but that the chair will be assisted very materially in making what are at times very difficult decisions as to interpretation.

Mr. Nicholson: The general discussion has gone on for quite some time and I think the government is partly to blame. I believe it was understood yesterday that one speaker from each party would speak and then we would get on with the items, but the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre spoke for the government and raised some very controversial questions and since that time I think it is only natural that members of all parties felt that they wanted to make some comment. I had no intention of speaking on the general item yesterday until the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre made his provocative speech.

Mr. Winch: I would have been all through with what I had to say by now but the minister said I should make my remarks on item 264. I have looked at item 264 and the details as found on page 368. Where in those details is there any item on which I can discuss it? I can only see one and that is on a grant.

Mr. Nicholson: Go ahead.

Mr. Martin: That is the place where I would have the authority—

Mr. Winch: You could have had the entire speech over by now if you had not been so damn sticky.

Mr. Martin: That is the item where I would have the authority to do what my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. Winch: Where, under item 264?

Mr. Martin: Yes, the general health grants.

Mr. Winch: But this is strictly something of a federal nature.

Mr. Martin: I know, but the only authority we would have to provide for that particular form of research would be under that item. When we come to it my hon. friend will see what I mean.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

245. National health branch — administration, $155,250.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question which perhaps it might have been better to ask under the item we were just discussing but I was prepared to wait until we reached the detailed items. I wonder whether the minister's attention has been drawn to the fact that companies selling batteries for hearing aids have recently increased the prices of those batteries rather substantially. If not, I am drawing it to his attention, and in view of his interest in the health of people I wonder whether he will look into the matter and see if there are any appropriate suggestions that can be made so that people who have to use hearing aids and have to replenish the batteries will not be put to unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. Martin: We are already looking into that.

Mr. Nicholson: I have a question about the world health organization which perhaps I might ask at this point. In returns prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce in connection with the Colombo plan administration I notice that there are 44 Canadians employed by the world health organization in different parts of the world. I think it is unfortunate that the people of Canada do not get better information regarding the splendid contribution which is being made by these 44 Canadians. I have had some conversations with the minister. When I ask external affairs about their publicity they say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows everything about that and that the minister has a great deal of information.

But when you telephone the information section of his department and ask what information is being supplied regarding Canadians who are working for the organization, where they are working and what they are doing, you get very inadequate information. Could the minister make some statement about the possibilities of giving the Canadian people better information regarding the general problems of health throughout the world, the progress that is being made towards meeting them and the contribution that these 44 Canadians are making in different parts of the world?

Mr. Martin: The world health organization, as my hon. friend knows, came into being in 1946 at the United Nations as the result of a proposal made by Canada and China. I mention that to indicate the interest of this country in the world health organization. Canada has been a member of the executive council of the world health organization for two years, and we are the only country in its history to have been assigned a second term, which is an indication of the interest we have taken in this organization.

My hon. friend asks quite properly that information about its work should be distributed more widely throughout the country. Since he discussed this matter with me a few days ago, I have looked into what we have done and have arranged to send him some of the material we have been distributing. It may be that as a result of the suggestion he makes, I know quite sincerely, we may be able to do more because the world health organization does very important work not only for materially underdeveloped countries but for all countries.

Item agreed to.

252. Occupational health, $332,373.

Mr. Knowles: Under item 252 there is a question I should like to ask the minister. He will recall that a few weeks ago I asked him a question on orders of the day concerning news reports having to do with radioactivity. The particular reference in the news reports was as to whether or not persons in various occupations or persons being exposed to X-rays in trying on their new shoes and so on are getting too much radioactivity. As I recall, he indicated at the time that the matter was being looked into. Has he any further information on this point?

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Martin: I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for asking this question because I had wanted at some time to make a statement on this subject. I would think it is possibly one of the most important matters facing the world and certainly facing Canada at this time. The minister of health in the United Kingdom recently made a comprehensive statement in the House of Commons. I understand that my opposite number in the United States is about to do so and I know that the same will be done again in the United Kingdom. In view of this, and particularly in view of my own participation recently in certain phases of disarmament activities, I feel that I should make a statement, and that I now propose to do.

On April 4, 1955, I tabled replies in answer to a series of questions by the hon. member for York-Scarborough which outlined in some detail the work being carried out by the Department of National Health and Welfare and other federal agencies in studying the health effects of ionizing radiation and in supervising the safe use of radioactive materials in industry, medicine and research. In describing the potential health hazards of radiation, reference was made not only to the deleterious effects on exposed individuals, but to the possible genetic damage that might be done by ionizing radiation arising from test explosions of atomic and nuclear weapons and from other sources of radioactivity. Anyone who has seen the statement made by Dr. Lapp, the eminent American scientist, will recognize that perhaps no subject that has been discussed in this house is as important as the one now involved in this statement.

Two important scientific reports have recently stimulated increased public interest in this matter. I refer to the report of the national academy of sciences in the United States and the report of Great Britain's medical research council which was recently presented to the United Kingdom parliament at the request of Prime Minister Eden. These two reports have confirmed the views expressed to me by the late Dr. A. J. Cipriani early in 1955 which largely formed the basis on which we have developed our own departmental program in this field. Dr. Cipriani died after having served only a few months on the United Nation's special scientific committee, and Canada and the world owe to this late distinguished and eminent scientist a debt of gratitude which I am sure history will recognize.

I want to make it perfectly clear, speaking on behalf of the government, that if, as a minister of health, the expert technical advice available to me indicated that there were serious health hazards to the human race in the continuance of test explosions at the present rate I would consider it my duty to recommend urgent negotiations directed towards their total abandonment and thorough re-assessment of the international political consequences of such action.

Now, I must say at once that this is a complex problem, and one about which much remains to be learned in so far as the health effects of radiation are concerned. However, there is already a body of scientific opinion of very great value available to us. It is on the basis of this evidence, admittedly imperfect and at times contradictory, that we must base our decisions in this matter. The urgency for filling the gaps in our existing knowledge in this field was recognized last November at the United Nations when approval was given to a proposal put forward by the United States for the establishment of a scientific committee on the effects of atomic radiation, to collect and collate all available data in this field.

Now, this committee has made a valuable contribution. The place of Dr. Cipriani has been taken by Dr. E. A. Watkinson, who is responsible for our department's very considerable program of research in this field. On this committee will depend much of the scientific assessment in this very important field for the future.

In examining the health effects of radiation, two points must be borne in mind. First, the effects of radiation are almost invariably harmful. This characteristic is utilized to advantage in the treatment of malignant tumours by radiotherapy. Second, radiation is not a new phenomenon. Human populations have always been exposed to ionizing radiation from natural sources including cosmic rays from outer space and radiations emitted by compounds of certain heavy elements such as uranium and radium. It is therefore the degree and not the nature of the hazard that is new.

Now, in the past 60 years since the discovery of radium and X-rays, some individuals have been exposed to greater amounts of radiation than naturally occur in the everyday environment. As new applications of atomic energy to industrial, medical and research uses are discovered and developed, more and more people will be exposed to increased levels of radiation. This is altogether apart from test explosions or the possibility of nuclear warfare. The potential risks of deleterious effects to health must be weighed against the unquestioned benefits to be gained from the use of ionizing radiation in various forms and the exploitation of nuclear energy for constructive and peaceful purposes.

Now, before dealing with the health effects of test explosions, I should like to touch briefly on the hazards associated with these other uses of radioactive materials and to describe some of the steps taken by the Department of National Health and Welfare to ensure that high standards of protection against radiation injury are observed. In doing this I am answering a request made the other day by the Canadian Medical Association for a statement by the government on this subject.

As long ago as 1950, the department established a radiation service for the express purpose of providing health supervision over the use of artificially produced isotopes in industry, research and medicine. Among other things, this service includes advice to prospective users of radioactive isotopes on recommended methods of planning laboratories; periodic inspections of such establishments to ensure continued safe handling practices; the maintenance of a film monitoring service for measuring both gamma rays and X-rays, thus assisting in the protection of persons who may be exposed to these rays in the course of their work; guidance in regard to the safe storage of radioactive materials, as well as the safe disposal of radioactive waste. As a major contribution to protection efforts, we have also assisted in the preparation of a summary of the recommendations of the international commission on radiological protection for wide distribution to radiation workers throughout Canada.

As part of its advisory service, the department has also drawn attention to the health hazards associated with the use of shoe-fitting fluoroscopes. In this particular, I am answering directly one of the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In an effort to ensure protection for the customer as well as the members of the sales staff, detailed recommendations on the operation of these devices have been prepared and are being widely distributed. While it is acknowledged that this is not a major source of radiation, these machines contribute unnecessarily to the total radiation background. In this connection, the international commission on radiological protection has recommended that their use should be limited to strictly medical procedures under the supervision of qualified persons. This is a matter which the federal government has no constitutional authority to act upon and is one that has been brought to the attention of the provincial governments concerned for enforcement purposes.

Then, services for the monitoring of dental and hospital X-ray installations have also been made available through our radiation service for several years. A pamphlet was prepared on the subject of protection in diagnostic X-ray departments in response to an increasing interest in this subject from radiologists and X-ray technicians. In addition, the department provides advice in regard to the health supervision of cobalt 60 beam therapy units, which of course is a very important instrument in the treatment of cancer, and other similar sealed sources of radiation for the treatment of cancer and allied conditions. This may be taken then as an indication that Canadian physicians have been aware for some time of the potential hazards related to medical uses of X-rays and are developing methods to ensure the maximum safety against possible deleterious effects associated with the use of this very valuable diagnostic and therapeutic agent.

Recognizing, therefore, the public health implications of exposure to increasing levels of radiation resulting from the wider development of peaceful applications of nuclear energy the department, over a year ago, convened a meeting of experts to assist in planning studies and investigations which would enlarge our knowledge of this exceedingly complex field. As a result of the recommendations of this advisory committee, a special laboratory was established to determine levels of radioactive strontium 90 in certain food products and other biological materials. Our findings from these investigations will serve to establish a base line for the future. In addition to laboratory investigations, we are also developing studies related to the incidence of radiation-induced diseases and the possible genetic effects.

With regard to the latter, the genetic effects, the department is now engaged in investigating three distinct lines of research. The first is the assessment of trends in the genetic components of the public health. That is to say, a study of vital statistics records to determine whether there has been any increase in the incidence of certain conditions that might be induced by exposure to radiation. The second is a study of the incidence of congenital defects among offspring of heavily irradiated individuals. The third is the measurement of spontaneous mutation rates for particular human genes. All we have to do is observe what happened to those Japanese fishermen to realize that there is, perhaps, no study as important to the human race as this one.

So far, we have been giving most attention to the first of these, which may give information on long-term genetic effects of ionizing radiation. Our country, with its well developed and highly mechanized and centralized system of vital records and statistics, is particularly well equipped to consider this approach. Should this prove practicable, it may lead to the extension of present health record and reporting systems to include a recognition of the genetic aspects essential to the assessment of this potential hazard.

It will be seen, therefore, that vigorous measures are being taken by the department to supervise, from a health standpoint, the use of all radioactive materials and to further research into the potential future hazards. The results of our Canadian research are being made available to the special United Nations committee to which I have already referred.

I come now to the question of the bomb tests and their implications for the health of this and future generations. As we see this problem, the chief hazards for world populations are of two distinct kinds: (a) those associated with the ingestion of radioactive material, principally radioactive strontium 90; (b) those associated with effects on reproductive tissues and having a possible genetic effect on future generations.

When a nuclear bomb explodes radioactive fission products are produced. Close to the site of the explosion, the radiation given off from the bomb and the resulting fission products can cause serious radiation injury and even death. For this reason, testing sites for these explosions have been chosen in remote areas. Some of the fission products are carried high into the atmosphere and eventually fall on all parts of the world. The potential hazard for humans associated with that portion of the fission products carried up into the higher atmosphere results from the fall-out of these products onto the surface of the earth.

Some of us may conceive the hazard of radioactive fall-out as an immediate danger to human health and well-being. This, however, is not the case and, for a proper understanding, it should be appreciated that the important radioactive element, strontium 90, slowly settles to the earth over many years and becomes incorporated into soil and subsequently absorbed into certain plants.

Since strontium is deposited chiefly in the bone, where a sufficiently high concentration could cause tumours or other serious effects, the consumption of food with a high content of radioactive strontium could constitute a major health hazard. I now quote from the British report:

> Such measurements as have been made of strontium 90 in human bone suggests that the highest levels are at present about a thousand times less than is considered permissible for those occupationally exposed.

Work which has been done to date in our country indicates that Canadian levels are substantially the same as those in the United Kingdom and in the United States. Nevertheless, it should be pointed out that the best scientific opinion suggests that for the population at large the concentration of radioactive strontium should not exceed one-tenth of that permitted to the small number of persons employed in radioactive industries.

With regard to the genetic effects, it is accepted that exposure of the reproductive tissues to ionizing radiation may result in mutations which are mainly deleterious in effect when transmitted to succeeding generations. However, according to the best scientific evidence available to this government and to the governments of the United Kingdom and of the United States, and from recent discussions that I had in New York with France, the testing which has occurred to date will have no significant effect on the genetic quality of the population as a whole. Therefore, the principal cause for concern at this time is not, as some have feared, the possibility of genetic damage that would adversely affect future generations, but what are called the somatic or the direct effects from radioactive strontium 90. It should be clear from what I have said that the present levels of strontium 90 are well within acceptable limits for the general population.

May I just briefly summarize what I have been saying before I take my seat? Three propositions have been arrived at after a most careful study of the British and the United States reports, and data available from other countries as well as from the findings of our own research. I may say the statement which I have given to the committee today represents the compilation and efforts not only of officials of my own department but of some of the most eminent medical scientists, chemists and physicists in our own country and some with whom we have collaborated elsewhere, so that I am giving a statement that has behind it the authority of the best skills available in this field. My summary, therefore, is, there have been no significant harmful effects on the world population as a whole from all the nuclear weapon tests that have occurred to date. If testing continues at the present rate the genetic effects on the world population will be negligible. However, the strontium 90 levels will increase and may ultimately reach a point beyond which harmful effects could result. I therefore suggest to the committee that this is evidence of the interest and concern which we share with other countries, in this important matter, one which is receiving our continuing study.

Mr. Knowles: I am grateful to the minister, and I am sure the entire committee is, for the statement that he has made in answer to my question. Indeed, he has answered not only the question that I put to him this morning but other questions that have been asked in the house from time to time with regard to radioactive fall-out. It is good to know that the governments of countries like the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada are giving serious thought and serious study to these problems, and there will be a measure of reassurance in the kind of statement the minister has given here which, I understand, is a counterpart to a statement being made shortly, or that has been made, by the governments of the United Kingdom and of the United States. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Blackmore: Are we going to talk all through noon? It is one o'clock now. Why not go on after 2.30?

Mr. Knowles: I am in the hands of the Chair or the committee, Mr. Chairman. I could finish my reply to the minister in a couple of minutes.

Mr. Martin: Finish it and pass the item.

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, at one o'clock I had just indicated to the minister that the house would be interested in the statement he had made concerning the studies conducted by his department into the question of radioactivity in relation to human beings and the studies into radioactive fall-out generally.

I had said there would be a measure of reassurance gained from the statement made by the minister but I admit I am not sure just how great will be that measure of reassurance. As the minister is aware, conflicting statements do come out from time to time from eminent scientists and one cannot help but be conscious of the fact that there are rather eminent scientists who are afraid that continuing nuclear bomb tests hold the prospect of danger to the human race.

If I may put it just in this very brief form as certainly nothing more than a layman in this field, it seems rather strange to me that in the same statement the minister tells us of the care that should be taken with respect to fluoroscope machines that are available when one buys a pair of new shoes and at the same time we are told in that statement there is not really any danger from the nuclear tests that are being conducted.

It seems to me if the minister is correct in suggesting that people should not submit themselves to unnecessary radiation in the use of the machines to which I have already referred it would be the part of wisdom for mankind not to submit itself to unnecessary nuclear bomb tests.

I hope that in his joint capacity as Minister of National Health and Welfare and Canada's second minister of external affairs, in view of the large part he plays at the United Nations, he and the government will consider if the time has not come in the interest of the safety of the human race to put a stop to these nuclear test explosions.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, such wise counsel as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just given is all to the good if the minister starts at the right end, if he starts with the Russians, the communist conspiracy that controls Russia, and succeeds in making them see that they should discontinue these tests; otherwise, to talk this way to our people is to talk sheer defeat. It is just saying in effect that the British race, the Anglo-Saxon Celtics are wasting their time in trying to stand up against the Russians and that they might as well sit on a log and cry themselves to death because there is not a thing they can do about it and in the interests of protecting ourselves from fall-out we simply have to put the hammer and sickle over Washington, London and Ottawa and call it a day. Surely we should not have too much of that kind of talk in this house. At the same time I appreciate the point of view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Knowles: Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Blackmore: It is interesting that so much of this kind of warning comes from one group in this house. May I now read to the minister something which I am sure he will be glad to have put on the record as being in support of what he has just said.

I have in my hands a copy of the July 21, 1956, Lethbridge Herald. On the last page of the Lethbridge Herald for that date a statement appears which has some bearing on the other side. It reads:

U.S. Atom Chief Cagey
Says Progress is Made "Localizing" Fall-out.

Washington—(AP)—Pacific island nuclear tests have brought reports of "real progress" toward goals of reducing radioactive fall-out and of providing atomic anti-aircraft weapons.

The announcement came from chairman Lewis L. Strauss of the atomic energy commission in a generalized statement on which other AEC officials declined to elaborate.

The statement raised the possibility that American atomic scientists have found the secret of how to blast an intended H-bomb target without spreading radioactivity to other areas.

Strauss indicated progress also in the weapons field, and spoke of the goal of "a wide range of weapons . . . including defence against air attack."

Much of the statement was devoted to limiting the danger of radioactive fall-out—the fearsome by-product of nuclear explosions.

It said the tests have shown progress toward "achievement of maximum effect in the immediate area of a target with minimum widespread fall-out hazard."

I do not wish to elaborate on this matter but I do wish to point out to the country and to this house once more that we do not need hon. members in this house preaching defeat to this nation. We have to have people who will preach hope of ultimate success. I see no reason at all why the great Anglo-Saxon Celtic people with their admirable and enviable record of benefit for mankind extending over thousands of years should be ready to surrender themselves to a group of evil-minded men, some few millions in the world, who are seeking by all sorts of devices to talk us into surrendering to them and letting them rule the world.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Chairman, I will not comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge—

Mr. Blackmore: No comment is necessary.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): —while at the same time pointing out to him that the almost unanimous opinion of the report of Admiral Strauss on the ability to now control fall-out has been described by almost every observer in Washington by the charitable word "disingenuous" which is, of course, a polite term for a harsher expression.

I was rather interested to find that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was able to extract so much comfort and assurance from the report of the British medical research council recently tabled in the British House of Commons because from the information I have received direct from London, and in one case from one who is actually engaged in research work for the British medical research council, and from the reports on that report that were carried in the New York Times of June 13, I doubt whether the minister's optimism can really be justified. In this report in the London Times reference is made to the report of this committee of the medical research council as follows:

On the question of long-term genetic effects, the report states that present knowledge does not justify the naming of any specific figure as a limit for the average dose of radiation which might be received by the population as a whole. "It is highly desirable," the committee state, "that such a figure should be named as soon as possible; and we understand that the international commission on radiological protection has this matter under consideration."

"In the meantime, we feel bound to state our opinion that it is unlikely that any authoritative recommendation will name a figure for permissible radiation dose to the whole population, additional to that received from the natural background, which is more than twice that of the general value for natural background radiation." The recommended figure might be appreciably less, and those concerned with the development and use of such sources of radiation would be well advised to keep this possibility in mind.

Although no specific recommendations on long-term genetic effects are thus made, the view was expressed yesterday in circles closely in touch with the report that the effects of thermonuclear explosions would exceed the criterion in respect of radioactive strontium in bone at an earlier stage than they would approach any reasonable limits that might be recommended in respect of the total radiation dose to the whole population.

I suggest that that indicates that this committee has in fact been warning the world of the possible, in fact the probable dangers of continued thermonuclear tests. To pretend that we can get comfort from that and go on gaily approving such tests is I think a distortion of the facts. I have here an article written by Dr. James G. Foulks, department of pharmacology, University of British Columbia, in which he quotes leading British and United States scientists on this point. He quotes Dr. A. H. Sturtevant, one of the United States foremost geneticists, as follows:

There is no possible escape from the conclusion that the bombs already exploded will ultimately result in the production of numerous defective individuals, if the human species itself survives for many generations, and every new bomb exploded will result in an increase in this ultimate harvest of defective individuals.

Dr. Foulks also quotes Dr. H. A. Muller, who received the Nobel prize for his researches in this particular field. I would remind the committee that Dr. Muller was the man who was prevented from going to the Geneva conference by the United States atomic energy commission because of his views with regard to the possible genetic effects of thermonuclear explosions. Dr. Muller had this to say:

Despite a number of unfortunate publicized statements by non-geneticists casting doubt on the mutagenic effectiveness of small doses of radiation, the work has gone so far as to make it inconceivable, on physico-chemical grounds, for a single ionization track traversing a cell nucleus to be without its proportionate probability of inducing a gene mutation.

The article continues:

Actually, Dr. Muller believes it probable that a single ionization or molecular activation, when properly situated, will suffice to produce a mutation.

And again:

Such considerations have led one scientist to conclude that "the long-range genetic danger of exposure of mankind as a whole to low-level, but widespread and persistent radioactivity, is the most ominous of all the dangers of the atomic age."

The chairman of the subcommittee of the British medical research council is Sir John Cockcroft, usually considered to be one of the outstanding British scientists. I was interested in finding in Nature, volume 176 of July 16, 1955 a criticism of Sir John Cockcroft's estimate of the dangers of radioactivity by J. B. S. Haldane, usually considered one of the world's leading biologists. In the course of this article in Nature, Dr. Haldane suggests that Sir John Cockcroft's estimates of permissible dose may be ten times too high. I am not going to read the whole article because it is much too technical but the conclusion he reaches is that Sir John Cockcroft has been far too optimistic. He winds up in this way:

The problem is not insoluble. The figures given above could, I think, be improved. I have, however, deliberately used estimates made before the question of the genetic effects of experimental explosions was raised. Estimates made later may have been influenced by conscious or unconscious political or ethical bias. Research on this problem requires extremely careful planning, including the realization that apparently hopeful projects may prove useless.

I would point out further that as a result of this report by the subcommittee of the British medical research council last week in the British House of Commons Sir Anthony Eden agreed that his government would make direct approaches to the Soviet union, and presumably to the United States, with a view to seeking a limitation of these bomb tests. I would suggest that that was a more rational and realistic result of reading the report of the British medical research council than the one indicated to us this morning by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

255. Administration of the Food and Drugs and the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Acts, $1,389,761.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, earlier today it was suggested that the discussion I had in mind might better be brought up under this heading. I refer to a question which I asked the minister following up one presented to him on May 24 and having to do with the toxic effect of colouring used on oranges imported from Florida in the United States. This question and the question of added colouring to foods may not seem too important, but when one considers the number of boxes of oranges that come into this country and the fact that it has been found that certain coal tar colours are toxic and poisonous, then I think it does become important. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun to indicate just how important this really is. This is an Associated Press Dispatch from Washington under date of July 16, 1956, and it reads:

Probers claim some food dyes "poisonous", linked to cancer.

A special committee says there is evidence some coal and tar dyes used in food, cosmetics and drugs actually are poisonous or cause cancer.

The committee added that it may take the food and drug administration another 25 years to determine whether 116 dyes now certified as safe under U.S. law really are harmless.

It said the research program should be strengthened.

Only 15 of the 116 dyes certified under the 1938 food, drug and cosmetic act have been studied to any great extent, the committee said. These 15 are used in foods.

Just commenting on that article, I wonder if the minister could indicate to us how many such dyes are used in Canada in comparison with the number used in the United States. The article continues:

Among the 15 coal tar derivatives which have been studied, the committee said, 10 resulted in some harmful effects on experimental animals.

"Several are distinctly toxic (poisonous) when fed to rats at levels as low as one-quarter of one per cent of a standard diet," the committee said.

This morning the minister, in reply to my question, suggested that he was having the question of added colour put under the Food and Drugs Act for administration purposes. I was wondering exactly what his departmental findings were in respect to this substance that was used and what work has been done in discovering the dangers that are pointed out in this article, whether or not the colours used in oranges are the only food colourings that are being examined or whether we have used in this country food colourings from this coal tar substance. The article goes on to say:

The committee also said the practice of labelling certain dyes as harmless is unrealistic unless the amount which can be safely used is specified.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

I should like to know whether we have any control of the amount of colour that is being used in those oranges, what the percentage is, and what experiments have been conducted to indicate that there is no poisonous effect.

The group concluded, in view of the widespread use of coal tar dyes in foods, cosmetics and drugs, that it could "see no alternative to strengthening of the present research position of the food and drug administration in the area of coal tar colours."

The question in my mind is whether or not the very fact that oranges and such foods are being put under the Food and Drugs Act is a sufficiently strong measure in so far as periodic examination is concerned, and exactly what the department has found in respect to the toxic effect of these colours, as mentioned in this United States dispatch.

Mr. Winch: There is one matter I should like to raise under this vote. I shall admit quite honestly that I am hesitant in raising it, and yet I have to. I am a great cheese eater. I like cheese. I like Canadian cheese. Nine times out of ten when I order dessert, I ask for cheese. Therefore I am very much interested in that product, especially if produced in Canada. I was very much disturbed at something that appeared in the daily press relative to the conditions in some of the cheese factories in Canada. I have been in receipt over the past few weeks of a great many letters from my constituents enclosing copies of what was published in the British Columbia press of an article under an Ottawa dateline. In almost all the letters I received, they pointed out that they felt, along with others, that they would be very much disturbed if the situation as outlined were not denied nor a statement made in public by the minister that the situation had been corrected.

It is solely because of my desire to see more Canadian cheese consumed that I agree with those who have written to me that, in view of the publicity that was given, now is the time to have some publicity counteracting it—as I hope—to the effect that the situation now is not as outlined in the press release, as the result of the investigations of Dr. Thatcher, the head of the department's microbiology section and the two bacteriologists in the same department who were with him. I am not going to place on the record the published results of their findings, because I am certain the minister knows to what I refer and the reason why I am so concerned about it. Can he give some assurance to this house that, as a result of the investigation, action has been taken and that those who like eating Canadian cheese can now do so without any fear that the situation which the department found to be prevalent is now continuing.

Mr. Martin: I can give my hon. friend—and I am glad he raised this question—full assurance in that particular. Under the Food and Drugs Act, the dominion analyst advises me that our examination of Canadian cheese shows that it contains the qualities that justify all of us in this house ascribing to Canadian cheese the highest standard which we have attributed to it. My hon. friend refers to a paper that was written three years ago in reference to a particular batch of cheese. That paper must not in any way be construed as in any way a reflection upon the wholesomeness and the good quality of Canadian cheese, a liking for which I share with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Winch: Is the minister referring to the same report? This says that 137 factories were examined.

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mr. Charlton: Would the minister also point out that the situation was rectified shortly after the first investigation, which was three or four years ago, and that this was a repetition—which was very unfortunate, I might say—of an article written three or four years previously as a result of an investigation, of some three or four years previously, and it was repeated after the situation had been fully rectified?

Mr. Winch: I point out to my hon. friend that I am trying to do him a favour, if he represents a cheese producing area. It has appeared on the front pages of the Vancouver press. I asked whether or not this could be confirmed and whether the matter had been straightened out, and I did so in the interests of the cheese producers, because this has appeared in the press in recent weeks.

Mr. Blair: I think that the publication in the press of a report three years old has done a great deal of damage to the cheese industry. The fact is that the situation has been corrected, and there should be a statement to the Canadian people, as the minister said, that Canadian cheese is of high quality. I consider it most unfortunate that this report of three years ago concerning a certain number of factories has been given to the public and that a slap in the face has been given to the cheese industry of Canada.

Mr. Martin: I fully agree with what the hon. member has said, that this report should never have been published. It was done without my knowledge. It was with regard to particular situations. We all know that Canadian cheese can compete in quality with cheese of any country in the world.

Mr. Hahn: The minister did not answer any of my questions. Perhaps he does not care to.

Mr. Martin: Yes, I was going to deal with them right now. I thank my hon. friend for acceding to the request, as he did so kindly, to discuss this matter under this item and not under the general item this morning. I shall simply say, in addition to what I have already said, that in taking the step that we did with regard to the particular colour in oranges the ban applies as of August 1. It was not because we had found dangerous levels in colour in oranges in Canada but because we simply wanted to take a precautionary step.

In the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act, provision was made for the use of 17 coal tar colours in foods. In addition there is a requirement that the maximum amount of colour to be used in any food is limited to one part per 3,500 parts of food or approximately 0·03 per cent. In surveys which have been conducted in the food and drug laboratories of our department, it has been found that this level is reached in only a few foods, and the level of colour in the majority of foods, where it is used, varies from one to two parts per 100,000 parts of food. At the time the permitted list of coal tar colours was established, and with the evidence then available as to the safety of their use in foods, no indication of harmful effects was evident. Moreover, no reports have come to the attention of the food and drug directorate that the ingestion of foods containing any of the colours in amounts permitted in Canada has caused harmful effects in humans. However, my hon. friend may be assured that this matter will continue to receive the attention of our officials in the food and drug division in conjunction with our own work along with that particularly carried on in the United States.

Mr. Bryson: It seems rather obvious that the report referred to by the hon. member who spoke was more or less suppressed. I should like to ask the minister if that report was suppressed and why the information has only come to light now.

Mr. Martin: What report is that?

Mr. Bryson: The condition that the hon. member has spoken about.

Mr. Martin: We have passed that item. However, I will answer briefly provided we do not carry on a discussion. We have passed that item.

Mr. Bryson: Oh, no.

Mr. Martin: Oh, yes, we have passed that item.

Mr. Charlton: No, you have not.

Mr. Martin: Well, there is no sense arguing. Our officials examine these things. Dr. Thatcher had made an examination of a particular group of cheeses. I would not want to be regarded as publicly criticizing an official who generally does great service to the country, but in this particular instance his report should not have been published. I was not aware that it had been published, I can assure my hon. friend, but that is the situation and what I said about Canadian cheese stands.

Mr. Winch: That raises an issue that I think is of prime importance. The minister says that it should not have been published. Is the minister saying that this information which has the character of dynamite should not have been published and made available?

Mr. Charlton: On a point of order, that is not proper information. The minister has just made the statement that the report should never have been published. I want to say that the report was published at the time. The minister has just given information which is not correct. The report was published at the time and that was three or four years ago. It should never have been republished. If it has been republished now it should not have been done. The report was published. The information was never stifled. The information was given to the public at the time and these situations have been corrected since. It is not fair that the matter should be brought up again after an interval of three or four years.

Mr. Martin: I agree with what my hon. friend has said. It was not published at the time.

Mr. Charlton: Yes, it was.

Mr. Martin: My deputy minister tells me it was not. However, that is not an important fact.

Mr. Charlton: Yes, it is.

Mr. Martin: All right. Our officials make reports to the dominion analyst daily. These reports go to the desk of the deputy minister. Those that he thinks should receive the attention of the minister go to the minister. All I am saying is that a report made by an individual in his capacity as a member of a government department should not have been published without the authority of the head of the department. That is all I was saying a while ago.

Mr. Charlton: You are making it worse all the time.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Martin.]

256. Administration of the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act, $188,171.

Mr. Campbell: I should like to ask the minister if peyote buttons have been brought under the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act.

Mr. Martin: No, they have not.

Mr. Campbell: Is the department considering taking that action?

Mr. Martin: That is now being studied, as I said three weeks ago in the house in answer to a question.

Mr. Bryson: Apparently we are on different items for some reason or other, but I should like to ask the minister if he will explain to the committee the contributions that are made by his department to the province of Saskatchewan in respect to the hospitalization of Indians and the out-patient treatment that the Indians receive.

Mr. Martin: We are not on Indians. That is item 257.

Mr. Winch: We are dealing with the administration of the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act. I should like to ask the minister if this is the place to ask him what action, if any, is going to be taken on the report on narcotics made by the senate committee. What is the present situation and what policies does the minister have in mind?

Mr. Martin: The report of the committee is now before a group who are in consultation with the provincial departments of health in respect of certain portions of the recommendations which apply to the provinces. The penal sections are likewise under discussion with the Department of Justice. I hope before too long to have an opportunity to make a public statement in this regard.

Indians and Eskimos health services—

257. Operation and maintenance, $15,983,621.

Mr. Charlton: The minister received a letter from the council of the Six Nations Indian reservation some time ago, as a matter of fact it was in April, regarding the situation existing there now at the Willingdon hospital on the reservation. I received a copy of the letter the minister received. I wrote to the director of Indian health services and subsequently received a letter from the minister explaining the situation. However, the minister did not answer one of the questions I asked him. I asked him if there had been a change of policy with regard to Indian health services at the Lady Willingdon hospital, and if so, when the change took place and why it took place.

It has always been the understanding of all the people on the reservation at Brantford that hospitalization was provided to them free of charge. It has always been the case up until very recently. During the last year, in most cases, although possibly not all, charges have been made and several bills have been sent out to people on the reservation after hospitalization has taken place.

It is my understanding, and I have it on very good authority, that subsequent to the sending out of bills for hospitalization some official of the department was sent to the Six Nations reservation after the minister received the letter to which I have referred and that some of these people at least were told that they did not need to pay the bill and that, moreover, they should forget ever having received a bill.

If the situation is as expressed in the letter to the minister and if after some complaints are made some people are told not to pay the bills they have received and to try to forget they ever received them, then I suggest to the minister that is a very unfair practice.

Mr. Martin: Was it an official of the department who said that?

Mr. Charlton: Supposedly, yes. Either the people on the Six Nations reserve are to be charged for hospitalization or they are not to be charged. No charge has ever been made before. Therefore, I ask the minister now, as I asked in the letter I wrote to him in May, when that policy was changed and why it was changed.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend may be assured that the policy in this particular has never changed. The policy always has been that those who can pay should pay. That is the only policy. If there are hardships, my hon. friend might bring them to my attention. Of course, only a small portion of the Indians are able to pay, but where they can I think it is generally felt that they should pay. I am going to look again at the particular case to which my hon. friend refers to see what it is about. However, if the individual cannot pay, then of course he is not going to be called upon to do something he cannot do.

Mr. Charlton: That is not the point. I do suggest that might be the case for Indians living on the reservations, living there permanently. There are, however, cases of Indians residing on the reservation and working off the reservation, only coming back week-ends or something like that. Then, there may be some excuse, but if the rule is to be made for one then it should apply to all. Where a person has been frugal during his lifetime and has saved his money, he should not be jeopardized in his old age or jeopardize his children by having that money taken away from them, while the chap who has not saved any money is getting away free.

Mr. Winch: I might mention the same subject to the minister. I would ask the minister to look into the situation in British Columbia. I have letters in my files, I am sorry I have not them here, from the north Thompson tribes who complain about the fact that it was their understanding they were supposed to be supplied with medical attention while they were on the reservation. They complain that they cannot get a doctor to go to the reservation. They are told to go into his office, and if they go into his office he makes a charge. That is a complaint almost identical with that of my hon. friend, and it is from the north Thompson tribes in British Columbia.

Mr. Martin: Certainly, I will look into that.

Mr. Bryson: May I ask the minister now a question as to what contribution is made by his department to the province of Saskatchewan for Indians who are in receipt of hospital care or are outpatients there?

Mr. Martin: In the case of Saskatchewan, we suggested to the government the desirability of including Indians under their hospital insurance scheme. We would, of course, be prepared to pay the premiums. The commission there was not able to accede to our request. We had been able to make similar arrangements under the hospital insurance plan in British Columbia. That being the case we continue to exercise towards the Indians in the province of Saskatchewan the same attitude that we do towards the Indians throughout Canada, and that is to pay their actual costs of medical and hospital care.

Mr. Bryson: My question was based on an article I have here quoting Mr. Bentley, the health minister. I should like to read it to clarify my question. Speaking about the health services rendered to Indians, Mr. Bentley had this to say:

> Another difficulty, as Mr. Bentley saw it, was the problem of Indians in the program.

He is speaking about the Saskatchewan government health program.

> The province had never been given any authority or responsibility for the health of its Indian population. That was a federal prerogative. But, under the federal proposal, the province must provide hospital and outpatient service for Indians.

I was wondering what the proposition was.

Mr. Martin: We do that now.

Mr. Bryson: What was the proposition which the department made to Saskatchewan in that respect?

Mr. Martin: I think I indicated that we had offered to pay the premium cost of Indians under the hospital insurance plan in Saskatchewan. They did not want to include them.

Mr. Campbell: There is one phase of the medical health service for Indians that I should like to draw to the attention of the minister, and that is the field nursing service. There is a very fine body of women doing that work under a terrific handicap. For instance, there are no roads on the reservation. As soon as one leaves the main highway to go into the reservation, one is met by mudholes or snowbanks in the wintertime. These nurses are running the danger of losing their lives by freezing to death. I am wondering if the minister could not get together with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to do something about roads.

Last summer I went into several Indian reservations. When I came to one reservation I asked an Indian if he would take me around the reservation and he said, yes. We had not gone 100 yards until we came to a big mudhole. I looked at it and I said, "We will never get through that." He said, "Oh, yes, the nurse was here this morning and she went through; if she got through, you can get through too." The rest of the reservation was just a continuation of the mudhole. I do not think it is fair to ask these girls to take such chances by driving where there are no roads, either winter or summer. I think it would be a good thing if the minister would consult with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and try to get roads provided so that these girls, who are doing such a fine job, will have some chance of doing their work without taking their lives in their hands.

Mr. Dinsdale: On this item, I should like to pursue the point raised by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand a moment ago. There is an attempt being made to encourage Indians to emancipate themselves from the reservation. There has been an increasing number doing so, leaving the reservation and finding employment in various capacities. As a result of this new move, I have discovered a few of them running foul of the regulations pertaining to Indian health services. Can the minister say if there is any formula which can be applied to those Indians who are not completely enfranchised, but who have moved off the reservation—perhaps they might be working in a neighbouring military camp—and who find they have incurred medical expenses? They are presented with a hospital bill of $200 or $300 and this scares them back to the reservation. It is discouraging this very desirable movement away from the reserve system. Is there any formula being applied to ease the problem during the transition period?

Mr. Martin: Yes, we allow them 12 months. If they establish a residence off the reservation, after a period of 12 months they are expected to bear their own expenses. But we give them that 12 months in which to work it out. If they return to the reserve, as sometimes they do, the status quo is reverted to.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is there any suggestion in the formula that the expense is borne only by those Indians who are actually paying municipal taxes?

Mr. Martin: There is nothing of that nature.

Mr. Dinsdale: If they are not able to pay their own medical expenses, it means the municipalities automatically become responsible, and it seems to me that tying it up to some tax paying responsibility might be a step in the right direction.

Mr. Martin: Once they have established their residence, after a period of 12 months they are like anyone else. Most municipalities recognize that.

Mr. Bryce: I should like to ask the minister if he has any answer to the problem I raised with him a month ago regarding the hospital at Selkirk supplying services to treaty Indians. I sent the minister the bill. I know that other arrangements have been made since and they are sent to the Dynevor hospital, but when is the bill going to be paid to the hospital at Selkirk?

Mr. Martin: After my hon. friend asked his question I got hold of the director and he has sent out a message to get further elucidation. I hope that next week I will have something I can tell my hon. friend definitely.

Mr. Charlton: I wonder if the minister would give me the number of doctors in attendance at the Willingdon hospital at Ohsweken?

Mr. Martin: There are four.

Mr. Charlton: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that up until the time Dr. Davis retired, he looked after the hospital alone. He made thousands and thousands of calls all over the reservation himself.

Mr. Martin: There were two doctors with him, I think.

Mr. Charlton: For a good many years there were not two doctors; he was there alone. Now with four doctors there the doctors refuse to come out after six p.m. to make a house call in the reservation unless it is a case of very extreme emergency. How is a person going to know at six p.m. at night whether or not the case is going to develop into an emergency at midnight? I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that with four doctors doing the work that we will say two did before—I am not criticizing, actually I am criticizing because I do not think they are taking the interest in the job they should take if they refuse to make the calls after six p.m. Probably their hours are short enough, and they could quite nicely make emergency calls after six p.m.

Mr. Martin: I shall certainly look into that, but I want to pay this tribute to the doctors and nurses in this service. If my hon. friend knew the difficulty of getting professional help, because of the incomes received outside by professional people, he would see why I am anxious to pay a tribute to them. We have part-time doctors, full-time doctors and nurses all through this country who are giving yeoman service in remote places as well as in settled areas, and while that does not excuse an individual indiscretion or failure of duty, my tribute to them all is certainly well deserved. I shall be glad to look into the other question and discuss it further with my hon. friend.

Mr. Charlton: The reservation at Brantford is not in a remote place. The doctors do not have to travel over bad roads.

Mr. Martin: I said I will be glad to look into that particular situation.

Mr. Charlton: I accept that, Mr. Chairman, but I do want to point out that Ohsweken is not comparable with other places. What salaries do these doctors get there? Are they underpaid in comparison with other doctors? Is it a fact that they are underpaid in comparison with what they could earn in private practice? I do not know whether it is at all comparable or not. As I understand it, these doctors are not Canadian-born, and they might not be able to get positions that other doctors can get.

Mr. Martin: Two of them are not Canadian-born, but that does not alter the fact that they are all good doctors.

Mr. Charlton: I know it does not. I do not want to be misunderstood at all. Can the minister give the salaries of these doctors again?

Mr. Campbell: The minister paid a tribute to the doctors and nurses in the service. How well is he paying the doctors? What is the average salary of the doctors?

Mr. Charlton: I asked that question.

Mr. Martin: The average is $7,500.

Mr. Charlton: The average is $7,500? That does not answer my question.

Mr. Martin: That is the question I was asked.

Mr. Charlton: What are the four doctors getting?

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend not think it would be fair if I gave him that information privately? I have given the average. I do not think it is fair to give the salary of an individual, but I shall be glad to give it to him.

Mr. Bryson: In the minister's explanation he mentioned the Saskatchewan health service and said that he had offered the province the premium which has been $40 a year. He knows as well as I do that that does not in any way cover the cost of hospitalization.

Mr. Martin: I said we would continue the tubercular care, as we had in the past. I was simply putting it that way. We wanted the Indians to be included in the hospital insurance plan to the extent that the plan covered the ordinary individual. We would continue to be responsible as we are now.

Mr. Bryson: Yes. Since the minister's department and the department of Indian affairs accept Indians as wards of this government, I certainly cannot understand how the minister can reconcile his explanation with the position that he has taken with respect to this offer.

Mr. Martin: I do not think there is any difficulty. The situation is briefly this. There is no legal responsibility on any jurisdiction in Canada to look after the health of the native population of this country. That is the general situation; but the federal government has assumed that responsibility. Ten years ago our budget for Indian health was a little over $1 million. Today, it is between $18 million and $19 million. Hon. members, like the hon. member for Brandon and the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand and others, who have Indian hospitals in their constituencies, recognize the great service that is being performed by our officials under the direction of the present director in the matter of the improvement of the health of Indians and Eskimos throughout this country. All one has to do is to look at the reduction in the incidence of tuberculosis as a result of this program in which we operate hospitals all over the country at considerable expense for a population of around 150,000 people. The fact that the Indian population began increasing almost concurrently with the establishment of this nation-wide hospital policy is a pretty good indication of the effectiveness of this work.

There is no attempt on the part of the government of Canada to get out of its responsibilities. In the particular case to which my hon. friend has drawn attention we are simply seeking for general hospital purposes, with the payment of a premium, to do the job in a more efficient way, and we could not get agreement in that particular. In British Columbia we were able to have it included under the hospital insurance scheme there; that is all. It does not mean that there has been any retrogression.

Mr. Patterson: The minister will remember that some time ago I brought to his attention some of the problems faced by the administrators of the hospital at Abbotsford, British Columbia, in their dealings with the Indians. One of the problems was the fact that in many instances Indian children were brought to the hospital, or hospitalized, and because of the nomadic character of their parents, when the children were ready to be discharged the parents could not be located, and therefore the hospital had to accept the responsibility of caring for those children until such time as the parents could be found, even though they were eligible for discharge prior to that time. I did raise the question. I realize, of course, the province of British Columbia has assumed responsibility for the Indians—at least they are bringing them under the hospital plan. The question was raised whether or not some facilities could be provided to where those children could be moved after they were discharged from the hospital instead of continuing to occupy beds in the hospital, which are at a premium, I may say, in Abbotsford. The suggestion was that possibly some provision could be made at Coqualeetza Indian hospital. There is a new addition to that hospital. I was advised by the minister it would not be possible to place the children in that institution. I was wondering whether the minister had given any further consideration to this problem and whether he has any suggestion to offer for alleviating the condition to assist in the provision of adequate hospital space for the residents of the Abbotsford community?

Mr. Bryson: I should like to ask a further question on this Indian problem. A moment ago the minister mentioned the incidence of tuberculosis. Certainly, he knows as well as I do that a few years ago the incidence was appalling. As a matter of fact, the incidence of tuberculosis among Indians at the present time is almost 12 times that of whites. What is the per capita amount the department is paying in the province of British Columbia for hospital and other treatment and care?

Mr. Martin: For Indians? I do not understand my hon. friend's question. Does he mean for Indians?

Mr. Bryson: Yes.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is asking how much money we pay for the health of Indians in British Columbia as compared with the amount we pay in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bryson: Per capita.

Mr. Martin: I do not think we have it on a per capita basis. I will try to work it out, but we do not keep it on a per capita basis.

Indians and Eskimos health services—

258. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,272,200.

Mr. Castleden: Will the minister give us a breakdown of the $894,000 for acquisition of buildings and works, and $387,000 for acquisition of equipment? Could you give us a rough breakdown as to where the buildings are located?

Mr. Martin: The total is $1,272,000. The sum of $410,000 is for the completion of a number of construction projects which are under way, including the dispersal of frame buildings at the Charles Camsell hospital, which is our leading tuberculosis hospital, in Edmonton; a residence for 29 nurses at Sardis; a residence for 29 nurses at Miller Bay, and a residence for 29 nurses at Fort Qu'Appelle. The sum of $304,000 is for the improvement and rehabilitation of existing properties, including the enlargement of our water and sewage processing system at Moose Factory, for the connection with the municipal sewage system at Fort Qu'Appelle, for the rehabilitation of the culinary facilities at Coqualeetza hospital. My hon. friend may not have heard my answer but the matter he raised is actually being studied.

This is for a standby generator at North Battleford. Power failures have been frequent there and they have had alarming possibilities. We have had to do some work there. At Cardston we are replacing a worn-out low pressure boiler. We have $180,000 for new construction at Baker Lake, at Fort Providence in the Mackenzie district, at Obedjiwan in the province of Quebec and in Manitoba at Little Grand Rapids. The remaining item is for the purchase and transporting of hospital lighting and other equipment for all our hospitals generally.

Mr. Castleden: That lighting equipment is the other $378,000?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: That is lighting equipment?

Mr. Martin: $378,000.

Mr. Castleden: That is the amount, but I was wondering if that is all lighting equipment.

Mr. Martin: No, no. It is lighting, transporting and other equipment generally. It is general hospital equipment; X-ray and operating equipment.

Mr. Castleden: Can you give the total amount of the contract for construction at Fort Qu'Appelle?

Mr. Martin: $50,000.

Mr. Castleden: Is that the building?

Mr. Martin: No, that is to connect with the municipal water and sewage facilities, and to provide additional fire facilities.

Mr. Castleden: And what is the contract price for the nursing home you are building there?

Mr. Martin: $80,000.

Item agreed to.

259. Grants to hospitals which care for Indians and Eskimos, $64,000.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions on this matter. Am I correct in understanding that this is a grant for the operating costs of hospitals?

Mr. Martin: No, these are grants to the hospitals that look after Indians and Eskimos.

Mr. Barnett: Are they operating grants or construction grants?

Mr. Martin: No, these are construction grants.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder if the minister could give us a breakdown of what the grants are?

Mr. Martin: The sum of $44,000 is for our nursing station at Nain in Labrador; $10,000 is for our general hospital at Queen Charlotte, British Columbia, Skidegate Inlet; and we are making a contribution toward the construction of a hospital at Alert Bay in British Columbia.

Mr. Bryson: Have you any available figures for Saskatchewan?

Mr. Martin: There is nothing beyond what I have already indicated to the hon. member who raised the question.

Item agreed to.

263. Health insurance studies and administration of the general health grants, $108,355.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few additional words concerning the federal government's proposals to the provinces regarding hospitalization insurance.

The minister was perfectly correct last night, even though he quoted just excerpts from the remarks I had made in the committee on estimates, in putting statements of mine on the record to the effect that this group hopes the proposals the government has made will soon be put into effect. We express that hope and we give the minister our support to that effect, despite our clearly expressed dissatisfaction in that we feel these proposals do not go far enough.

We feel that in this year, 1956, we should be a lot closer to an over-all program of national health insurance. The minister knows that that is our view, and that even after we get any beginning such as he may be able to bring before parliament after obtaining an agreement with the provinces we will press for an improvement and a moving on to an over-all national health plan including provision for all of the costs of health care, and including as well sickness benefits to take the place of income lost when the breadwinner is out of work.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, having made a speech last night expressing our general aim in this field, I shall content myself now with a few remarks with respect to the actual proposals the government has made to the provinces.

I say quite frankly that our concern is that time is running on. The minister may say it is only a few months since the proposals were made to the provinces. It is actually six months since that time, and with the Liberals months have a way of running into years, years have a way of running into decades and decades have a way of running into lifetimes. We are afraid that unless some bold steps are soon taken by the government the proposals that were made last January may collect dust along with the green book proposals of 1945, the draft bill of 1944, the Marsh report of 1943, a few speeches from the throne in the early forties, and the Liberal platform of 1919.

In six months three provinces have signified their readiness to come into the plan outlined by the federal government in January, and I think credit is owing to those three provinces, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, for the studies they made of the proposals and for the replies they gave to the minister. But surely it must be evident that with this much time going by and no other province showing any indication that it is going to come into the plan, the time has come for the government to revise its proposals.

There are certain modifications which might have the effect—in fact we believe they would have the effect—of encouraging the provinces that have not yet agreed to come into the plan to give the plan favourable consideration. I will not rehash the arguments we had in committee and those which took place last night between the hon. member for Mackenzie and the minister with respect to the inclusion of patients in tuberculosis and mental institutions, but that is one way in which the plan could be modified with the possible result that more of the provinces might agree to it.

I think perhaps an even more significant modification could be made with respect to the sharing formula. I will not take the trouble to spell out in detail this roughly 50-50 formula that is based on a 25-25 proposition. As I said in the committee on estimates, we feel there is justification for splitting that federal portion into two divisions, one arrived at on the basis of the provincial per capita cost and the other arrived at on the basis of the national per capita cost; but we think that instead of a 25-25 proposition it should be a 37½-37½ proposition, or something even better.

In stating that view we are concerned not only with setting out these proposals in a way that will make a better appeal to the provinces, but we are also concerned with the end result. Despite what was said yesterday by the new Liberal member across the way, an attempt should be made to put the payments for medical and health care on the basis of ability to pay rather than according to the illness that hits the particular individual. To the extent that payment for hospital insurance or health insurance or medical care is left to the individual or even to direct premiums to that extent you are making people pay according to their requirements for health care rather than according to their ability to pay. To the extent that you pay for health care out of the federal treasury, which is collected in the main out of income tax, corporation tax and taxes paid to some extent at least according to ability to pay, you approach recognition of the principle we advocate, namely that health care should be paid for according to ability to pay.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, both because in principle we think it is more correct and for the reason that we feel more of the provinces might come in if the percentage paid out of the federal treasury were increased, we think the government should give consideration to revising the 25-25 formula to a higher figure. I suggest that 37½-37½ or indeed a still higher figure might be considered.

We feel something should be paid by the provinces in order to bring them into the picture, not only administratively but in terms of cognizance of the cost, but that the main burden of the care of the health of the Canadian people should be paid for out of the main treasury of the Canadian people, the federal treasury, which as I say is collected more than any other treasury in this country according to the ability of our people to pay.

Last evening the hon. member for Vancouver South, making a speech when the minister was trying to encourage us not to talk about health insurance on the administrative item but to wait until we got to this item, spent most of his time dealing with what he referred to as the lethargy of Premier Frost in not showing more interest in the proposals made by the federal government. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South, and I agree with the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec hold a key position in relation to the formula the government has laid down. The formula is that six provinces, representing a majority of the Canadian people, must agree before it comes into effect, which means that one of the central provinces has to agree. If all the other eight agree and those two stay out, the terms of the formula have not been met.

Therefore there is no question but that there is particular importance attaching to the consideration which Premier Frost or Premier Duplessis may give to this matter. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South that anything that can be done, whether it is through a provocative speech such as that made by the hon. member for Vancouver South or through the co-operative attitude shown by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to persuade those two premiers to give more serious attention to this matter is all to the good.

I should like to take just a moment to develop the question which I interjected during the speech last night by the hon. member for Vancouver South. That is, if the federal Liberal government is keen—I am satisfied the Minister of National Health and Welfare is keen, because I am sure that there are few things that would delight his heart more than to get this plan on the statute books—about matters concerning health and welfare, I suggest that they should begin talking turkey or something stronger to the Liberal premiers of four of the provinces in this country. Premier Frost could very well reply to the hon. member for Vancouver South, "Supposing I do agree, that would bring the total number of provinces up to four but the plan still could not go into effect." Unless you get Quebec to come in—of course if you could get both Ontario and Quebec to come in that would be fine; that might be different—but if you cannot get both Quebec and Ontario, if you simply get Ontario along with British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan you would have to find two more.

Where are you going to find them? There are four Liberal provincial governments in the country, in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. I suggest that if Liberals like the hon. member for Vancouver South and the Minister of National Health and Welfare want this plan to go ahead they should see to it that those four Liberal premiers realize the importance of their position in relation to this formula.

I noted the remarks the minister made with regard to Premier Frost; I have noted the very co-operative manner in which the minister has approached this whole question, but I suggest that the premiers of those other four Liberal provinces hold a pretty important place. I suggest to the minister that he would make much better headway if he would just get those Liberal premiers to take a good look at the matter. As I say, Premier Frost can say, "What does it matter if I come in or not; there would be only four provinces that agreed, Ontario, British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan." If two of the Liberal provinces came in, two out of Manitoba, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, then there would be five, and only one more would be needed.

I suggest that one or the other of these two lines should be taken by the government if they mean business with respect to their own proposal. They should either revise the proposal with regard to the percentage the federal government is prepared to pay, or they should talk turkey to the Liberal provinces of this country so we can get somewhere with this formula which the federal government has laid down. I urge upon the government that one or the other if not both of those courses be followed. Although the plan may have shortcomings, which we deplore, nevertheless it would be a step in the right direction. It would be a beginning after all these years, 37 of them, during which the Liberals have been promising health insurance. I think it is high time we had at least a beginning along the lines laid down in the federal government's proposals to the provinces.

General health grants—

264. To authorize and provide for general health grants to the provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates and under terms and conditions approved by the governor in council including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current year not to exceed a total amount of $48,460,401, $33,750,000.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters I should like to place before the minister arising out of this vote. The first has to do with the possibility of help being given under these grants toward the construction of small hospitals. I understand that at the present time the requirements of the grants are such that it is practically impossible for a hospital with fewer than 30 beds to qualify for help.

Mr. Martin: We have made many grants to hospitals with fewer than 30 beds. There was one case in western Ontario where the hospital had only 9 beds.

Mr. Green: This difficulty has arisen in British Columbia, and I believe it is due to the standards required under the regulations. In some small towns it is not necessary to have a hospital with all the facilities to be found in a city hospital.

Mr. Martin: Could my hon. friend give me the particulars of the case so I might see just what are the facts?

Mr. Green: This case arose in Agassiz where the citizens were trying to work out a scheme for the construction of a small hospital, but evidently the requirements were such that it was impossible for them to qualify for assistance. Perhaps the minister would explain to the committee how these regulations work in a case of that kind. If a patient requires special treatment, he or she can of course go to the large hospitals in Vancouver or New Westminster or one of the other larger centres, and there is no need for a small hospital to have all the facilities that are found in the larger hospitals.

Is there not some way in which this help could be spread out to a greater degree to aid in the construction of hospitals in the small centres? The grants have been in existence for eight or nine years, and perhaps the time has come when there should be some concentration on helping with the construction of these smaller hospitals which would not have all the facilities of the main hospitals in the country.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend may be assured that there is no discrimination as between the small and the large hospitals. The procedure is simply this. The province is the only jurisdiction under the British North America Act that has authority over hospitalization, so if a province requests a grant for a particular hospital we are prepared to make a grant of $1,000 per acute bed or $1,500 for a chronic bed. The requirement we have is that of safety. We have had no difficulties. I can only recall one hospital, and I think it was in the constituency of one of the members opposite, where we had a difference with the hospital authorities, and there we were not satisfied that they had complied with the report of the fire marshal of the province. That is the only case I know of in British Columbia.

I have sent for the particulars of that case. I do not know what they are, but I can assure my hon. friend that no discrimination whatsoever was made between the large and small hospitals. The conditions are laid down primarily by the province. If they say that the hospital should be built there and assistance is forthcoming from them, then we give consideration as to whether or not in the circumstances there should be assistance given by the federal government. However, I am going to have that case looked up and I shall be very glad to discuss it with my hon. friend when I get the facts.

Mr. Green: Does the minister have any check made in respect of the decisions of the provincial governments about these smaller hospitals? It may be that in British Columbia the provincial government is laying down provision of such a nature that these small communities cannot qualify for this federal assistance. Perhaps it would be wise for the minister to look into that situation. I should like to have the minister's assurance that this plan is designed to help with the construction of hospitals in small centres as well as in large centres and, even though the hospital to be built in the small centre has not the same high standard of equipment as the hospital in the large centre—

Mr. Martin: I assure my hon. friend that is the case. I have already given him that assurance. The position and the standard of equipment in the hospital does not enter into our calculations at all. I am not aware of the particular facts; I shall have to go into that particular case. Ours is a sharing plan. The province must give at least a similar amount. There have been a number of cases in two provinces where the province has not wanted to give the full $1,000, and as a result we have had to give less than $1,000, or we were not able to give more than $1,000, and the result was that the total amount of money available was not sufficient.

That may be the case; I do not know. I shall be glad to go into it, but I can assure my hon. friend that there is no discrimination under this plan. We have provided assistance, along with the provinces and with the voluntary groups, for the building of almost 80,000 hospital beds in the last eight years. I am sure that represents a tremendous achievement on the part, first of all, of the voluntary bodies, the provincial governments and ourselves. It is a co-operative arrangement, and is I think a great monument to what can be done co-operatively in this country.

Mr. Green: The minister will realize that this is one of the serious problems facing the residents of the small communities, and I hope he will do his best to remedy the situation. The other question I wish to raise has to do with the program for research in connection with the rheumatic diseases, such as arthritis. Under the health grants there is no specific provision for this particular type of service.

Mr. Martin: There is no particularization at all for any research grant. We have given funds for arthritis research in great amounts for many projects, particularly in British Columbia, but the vote does not call for a particular research. The procedure is that we have a special committee that take into account all applications for research grants. This committee is made up of eminent officials in our own department and outside. If they say that a certain project should receive consideration and should receive financial assistance, that forms the basis for our policy. My hon. friend says there is no grant for research in rheumatism and arthritis, but he will find that we have given almost $491,000 for research in that particular field to date.

Mr. Green: I did not say there was no money spent on research in our province. I said there is no specific grant for that particular type of research. There is provision for a general public health grant and a public health research grant, but research for arthritis could only come under either of those headings if the provincial government or the public health authorities should decide that research on arthritis is a matter of public health. I am asking the minister whether this disease is not serious enough in its effects on the Canadian people as a whole to have a health grant for the specific purpose of dealing with the problem of arthritis.

We have raised this question in other years, and the minister has said that money is spent on it, just as he started to say today. Last year he said in reply to questions, as reported on page 6296 of Hansard, that $78,000 had been made available to an arthritis and rheumatism society in British Columbia. I found out subsequently that that $78,000 covered a period of several years. It was not a grant for one year. It included amounts paid for seven or eight years, beginning with the year 1948, and out of that sum $67,000 was for the provision of equipment—

Mr. Martin: A travelling clinic.

Mr. Green: —and not for research at all. Only $11,000 had been spent for research; not all of the $78,000. I am also told that the total research grant for rheumatic diseases in Canada, as of last summer, was $173,719.73 which would make an average annual grant of $21,715 for the dominion research program for rheumatic disease. That does not seem to be very much. That does not seem to go very far toward meeting the problem of research in connection with this particular type of disease. Can the minister tell us whether there is any plan at the present time for increasing this particular type of research, and if so, what it is?

Mr. Martin: I thought I had explained the situation carefully earlier, but perhaps my hon. friend has understandably not appreciated the nature of the grants. If we were to have a research grant for arthritis or for rheumatism we would have to have equally a research grant for every conceivable disease.

Mr. Green: Why does the minister say that?

Mr. Martin: I am going to explain. The general public health grant is the generic term that covers general public health which includes research, which includes treatment, which includes everything. Then the other grants are the tuberculosis control grant, the mental health research grant, the hospital construction grant, the cancer control grant—

Mr. Green: Those are special grants under the plan.

Mr. Martin: Those are specific ones, but you could not possibly have a grant for every conceivable disease. Any particular disease in this country that is given priority by our scientific assessment committee or by decision of the government based upon other considerations can qualify for a research grant. Out of the national health program we have spent on research over $7 million since the beginning of the program.

Mr. Green: How much of that was on arthritis?

Mr. Martin: Just a minute. When this program began there was no money spent at all on research by the federal government except through the national research council's grants, which were very limited. With regard to arthritis, the figure my hon. friend referred to in British Columbia of $78,496 was for mobile and other equipment. That did not have anything to do with research. The research in these things is done at places like the Connaught laboratories. It is done by the University of British Columbia medical school. It is done by the neurological institute of Montreal. It is done by the Charles Best research institute in Toronto, the Dr. Collip institute at the University of Western Ontario, the great research centres where personnel are heavily concentrated.

Taking arthritis, we had a project on ACTH and cortisone, as the hon. member for Lanark will know, that alone cost $436,000. That is only in the field of arthritis. We have other projects now. There is one at the University of Western Ontario. There is a small one at Laval University. There are two at McGill University. I am not sure whether or not there is one at the University of British Columbia. These are projects of research into the various forms of rheumatoid arthritis, but the organization to which we have given assistance in British Columbia is not a research body. It is a body to teach people what can be done, to bring them to the clinics. For instance, there are the automobiles they use. I do not know if my friend has seen those in British Columbia. Undoubtedly he has. They are very fine and they were provided largely, I think entirely, by us out of our funds. But these are not research projects.

My hon. friend may be sure that consideration is given to this subject, which is a very important one. We estimate that there are about 150,000 people in Canada who suffer in a serious way from rheumatoid arthritis of one kind or another, and I am told there are over two hundred different types. There are many more people who have the disease. The Metropolitan Insurance Company has made an estimate of 700,000 people who suffer from rheumatism in one form or another, not in the way the 150,000 do but who are afflicted by it.

These various research centres are dealing with this subject. But you have to have the personnel to do it, and you have to have the projects to do it. Last year under the national health grants we provided almost 2,000 different bursaries to 2,000 individuals engaged in the health fields, and of that 2,000 over 250 went to men engaged in fundamental research, cancer, rheumatoid arthritis, heart disease and various other maladies.

We are now about to make a big grant for the new heart disease institute in Montreal. We have just finished giving a grant of $150,000 to an organization in Toronto for the study of heart disease. My hon. friend will see that not only rheumatoid arthritis but all these various other diseases are the subjects of great research projects.

Mr. Green: The minister has himself explained very clearly the very large numbers of Canadians who are suffering from this disease, and he knows just as well as I do just how serious a factor it is in the national picture. Surely those very facts are sufficient to warrant the extension of the health grants to cover arthritic and rheumatic diseases. The minister has a general public health grant, a tuberculosis control grant, a mental health grant, a venereal disease control grant, a crippled children grant, a professional training grant, a cancer control grant, a public health research grant, a laboratory and radiological services grant, a medical rehabilitation grant and a child and maternal health grant. These are all excellent. I am not quarreling for a moment with any of them, but does the minister not think that the problem of arthritis is sufficiently serious to warrant having a specific grant for the purpose of dealing with this condition?

Mr. Martin: I agree that it is an important matter, and it is the subject of research, as I have indicated to my hon. friend. I do say that if we were to particularize all the illnesses that should be the subject of research the list would be endless. I do say that rheumatoid arthritis is not the most important. One of the most important concerning which we are now engaged in a coordinated campaign effort is heart disease. Another is cancer.

Mr. Green: You have a grant for cancer.

Mr. Martin: I know, but we have not got one for heart disease.

Mr. Green: Perhaps you should have.

Mr. Martin: I think my hon. friend misinterprets. Except for the tuberculosis and the mental health grants, these various grants are all generic in quality and out of any of these sums, general public health grant, research grant, cancer control grant, can come moneys for research in those particular fields. Out of the general public health grant can come, in addition to a research grant of $500,000, assistance for arthritis or anything else. My hon. friend is asking that we should name arthritis as opposed to other diseases. I cannot agree with that. It is very important and it is a very unfortunate malady, but the titles of these grants does not interfere with the nature of the assistance that is given.

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Green: I am only suggesting that if there were a grant for this purpose it would focus attention on the problem, and I think the result would be a great deal faster and more far-reaching action to solve that problem than we are likely to get under the present method of handling research in connection with arthritis and the other rheumatic diseases.

Mr. Winch: There are two points I would like to discuss under this vote. One has already been mentioned by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, the question of hospital construction grants. Back in 1948 the government laid down what was undoubtedly a very fine principle, namely the acceptance of responsibility in a financial way for a basic contribution to the construction of hospitals in this country. As was mentioned a little while ago by the minister, the basic grants as they were outlined back in 1948 were $1,000 per bed for active treatment hospitals, $1,500 per bed for chronic, convalescent, mental and tuberculosis hospitals, and $500 per bed for nurses' living quarters. I think the government should be commended for the fact that in the years that have gone by since 1948 they have extended that to include other fields. There is now some provision for a basic hospital construction grant in the realm of laboratories, health centres and training facilities. The government, as I say, are to be commended for the action they have taken in that regard.

I do think it is time for the government to take a second look at their basic construction grants. Since 1948 when they laid down the rates of $1,000 per active treatment bed, $1,500 for chronic and convalescent beds and $500 for nurses' beds, there has been a great alteration in the cost of construction throughout the dominion. I am speaking for no other province except British Columbia, and in British Columbia I only speak on behalf of Vancouver.

In 1948 when the basis was laid down, the cost of active treatment hospital construction, excluding equipment, was $9,000 to $10,000 per bed. There has been a great deal of construction going on in Vancouver in the realm of hospitals, and I am informed by the authorities there that the cost this year for active treatment hospitals is $14,650 per bed. When you compare that with the basic cost in 1948 of $9,000 per bed I say I think it is only reasonable that the time has come for the minister to give consideration to increasing the basic grant at least by an amount that is going to take up a fair share of that increased cost. I do not want to enlarge too much upon that point, having stated it.

In addition, in connection with this question of hospital construction grants, I do think the minister should pay particular attention to one aspect. When this principle was laid down in 1948, and when the chronic and convalescent basic rate was set at $500 higher than the active treatment rate, as I read the reports of the department they state very definitely they had a reason for doing that. One of the objectives of the hospital construction grant was to encourage the construction of additional accommodation for chronic and convalescent patients in order to remove these categories of patients from active treatment hospital beds. They can be accommodated in specially designed hospitals, or in wings attached to acute hospitals, with potential savings in nursing and other costs. I think it is regrettable that the objective of the government in 1948 has not been achieved.

I was most interested in reading a breakdown showing how the grants of the minister's department have been made. Since 1948 the grants have gone on this basis: for active treatment, $31,161,000; for chronic and convalescent, $5,037,000; mental hospitals, $14,293,000; T.B., $4,292,000; bassinets, $6,604; nurses beds, $8,574,000; community health centres, $4,142,000; combined laboratories, $130,000; training facilities, $35,000. These grants total $74,268,000. But the important point is this. The grants for active treatment have totalled $31,161,000 and for chronic and convalescent only $5,037,000. Although the government in 1948 recognized the problem by granting an additional $500 per bed if they would build convalescent hospitals, these figures show what has occurred.

Now, sir, during the last day or so we have heard about hospital insurance in Canada. This government will have to assume a substantial part of that cost. Therefore the government should be keenly interested in efficiency in the operation of hospitals and keenly interested in seeing that, although they pay all that is required for medical and hospital attention, they do not pay any more than they have to for these services. I think most medical men will agree that now, when we are moving into a national health insurance plan, we have to concentrate more intensely on convalescent hospitals. I am not speaking of the chronics, I mean those who require hospitalization but do not require the medical care of an acute hospital for a certain period of time.

Unfortunately this spring I had to spend 14 weeks in hospital and I know, as a result of my observations, that including myself, a number of the patients there did not need to be in an acute bed. Our requirements could have been met in a convalescent bed. I made inquiries of the hospital authorities in Vancouver, and they told me that the difference between the maintenance of an acute bed and a convalescent bed in Vancouver is the difference betwen $18 and $10 a day.

Now then, that being the case, if under proper arrangements and planning medical attention can be given the convalescent in the neighbourhood of the acute, so you could get that treatment if required, it does seem to me that in the interests of federal government financing they should not only increase the basic hospital construction grants in comparison with 1948, but there should be a greater increase in the grants for the construction of convalescent hospitals. This would act as a persuader to the provincial authorities to increase their activities in this field of hospitalization.

I have spoken to a great many medical men and hospital authorities, and they all seem to be in agreement with that opinion. I am certain the minister must be in agreement also. I do believe he should give a little more in the way of financial persuasion so as to get this work under way in all provinces. Admittedly it will require the expenditure of additional money, but I think it is almost axiomatic that sometimes you can save money over a long period of time by making an expenditure at the proper time. Surely it would not be asking too much, because under the item we are now discussing I note that the allocation is only $6,762,000 plus $2,736,000 of a revote; plus $4 million in another revote, or a total in all of $13,499,060 in hospital grants in this present fiscal year. I most certainly would like to hear the comment of the minister on those two aspects which come under this item.

There is one other subject which I mentioned in the general discussion and agreed to have stand over, and that is the question of the natural health resources of this country. I took occasion in the committee to speak of it, and on other occasions I have spoken at length on Canada's natural health resources. I am not going into the details. I only say that I am still convinced Canada has the greatest natural health resources in the world. If we had the proper research to develop them Canada, and in particular British Columbia, would become the health mecca of the world. We have a potential multi-million dollar industry, but so far we have not done anything about it. Last year the minister was kind enough to say he was interested. If we refer to page 6286 of Hansard for July 16, 1955, we find that I said this:

> But I hope the minister who, I understand, is interested in what I have said, and has made some inquiries, will give some indication of his stand at the present time and tell us if something is going to be done in the next year or two, or in the next five years perhaps, in the matter of research and development.

Then the minister said:

> My hon. friend may be sure of my deep interest. This matter is now being discussed, as a matter of fact, with the Charles Best institute . . . in Toronto, and a project is possibly under way. In any event, the matter has been referred to the research committee and it is being given further attention.

In view of this statement by the minister last year about research and the Charles Best institute, would he kindly give us a report as to what has taken place in the past year?

Mr. Martin: I am sure I express the view of every member in this house when I say that one is reminded, when the hon. member speaks, of the fact that he himself has unfortunately been indisposed for some months now and has been a sufferer in one of the Vancouver hospitals. Several months ago we told him how glad we were to see him back, and perhaps I would be permitted to do so again at this particular moment.

With regard to the other matter, it is one on which there is a divided opinion scientifically, as to whether or not there is value in that particular form of research. Last year I indicated my own personal interest in the matter, along with that of the hon. gentleman. We did discuss the matter with the director of the Charles Best institute, Dr. Best himself. Dr. Best felt that since at this particular moment he is engaged on a program of research he could not disturb it with advantage at this time, and quite properly so. The matter was discussed as well by me and by one of my officers with another research director who is now giving consideration as to whether or not his program of research in his centre—he has a very important cancer project under way—could be fitted into this particular field, because this one is not a specific subject. This is one, as my hon. friend knows from his interest in it, that covers a very wide field.

I can only say to him that the matter had not escaped my interest even before he raised it. I can assure him, as I think I did privately, of my own personal interest in the matter. These researches cannot be undertaken by us; they have to be undertaken by particular medical scientists. They have to be people who can fit into their program. I certainly hope that will be possible.

[Mr. Winch.]

With regard to the hospital construction matter that my hon. friend raised earlier, our objective, when we brought in the national health program, was to assist in the building of 60,000 beds in a period of 10 years. We have exceeded that objective. I am not saying there is not much to do yet. Of course there is; there always will be in the field of health, but I think, as I said a moment ago, that the combined efforts of all of us, of all jurisdictions and of people generally in this field, have been notable in this country, and we have every reason to be proud. We estimate now there are about 25,000 beds to be built. That number will increase as the population increases. That represents pretty much the current need, but it does not create, in these terms, the problem that might be suggested by the mere mention of the 25,000.

I agree fully with what my hon. friend has said about chronic beds. The reason we have a higher grant for the chronic, as opposed to the acute, is in part the reason he himself mentioned a moment ago. We wanted to encourage the provinces; we wanted to encourage private institutions to pay more attention to chronic care and to building institutions for chronic keep, and we have not succeeded. When I say "we" I mean all of us. I have sought in declarations I have made from time to time to keep emphasizing the importance of chronic care. Of course one of the finest chronic hospitals in Canada is St. Mary's in London. I mention that to those who are interested in this work. If they will go there they will see what can be done in a chronic institution. I can only hope there will be an increasing interest in this phase of the matter.

My hon. friend said that one way to do it is to increase the amount. All I can say at this time is that that matter, of course, continues to receive our attention.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask the minister a question. These general health grants to the provinces are matching grants?

Mr. Martin: Not all.

Mr. Gillis: A lot of them are.

Mr. Martin: The hospital construction grant is; the cancer control grant is; the rehabilitation grant is in part; the laboratory and radiological services grant is in part; the venereal disease control grant is. All the rest are not.

Mr. Gillis: What I would like to find out is this. A certain amount of money is available to each province each year, provided it can match the grants that have to be matched. Can the minister give us the amount of money that was available last year to each province and how much of it was taken up? I think it will partly answer some of the questions.

Mr. Martin: It is a very long list. Does my hon. friend want me to table it, or does he want me to go through the whole list? It is quite an extensive table.

Mr. Gillis: If the committee is agreeable, table it.

Mr. Martin: There are the general public health grants, which are not matching; there is the tuberculosis grant, which is not matching; there is the mental control grant, which is not matching; there is the research branch, which is not matching; and the professional training grant, which is not matching. The hospital construction grant is; the cancer control grant is; the child and maternal health grant is not; the rehabilitation grant is, in part. Therefore my hon. friend will see that over two-thirds of the money made available by the federal government to the provinces is not on a matching basis.

Obviously the money must not be given unless for good purposes. I am not criticizing the provinces for this, but sometimes for personnel and other reasons they have not accepted the moneys. For instance, I shall take my hon. friend's own province of Nova Scotia. The amount available to Nova Scotia last year was $2,480,581. We have approved projects in the amount of $2,041,000. There is a free balance left of $438,000. That is for Nova Scotia. If I file this table it might be of interest to my hon. friend.

Mr. Gillis: That is fine.

Mr. Martin: With the permission of the committee I will table it.

Mr. Thomas: Could we have it in Hansard at this point?

Mr. Martin: Yes, it is going in now.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare can include this table in Hansard at this point?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin: The table follows:

Mr. Gillis: The minister said that $400,000 was available to Nova Scotia last year that was not paid out. Was that because of inability to match the grant?

Mr. Martin: No, it was not all matching. A portion of it was for hospital construction. Hospital construction was the largest amount, $183,000; $8,000 for crippled children; $4,000 for professional training; $35,000 for mental health; $3,000 for general public health, and so on.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the legitimate differences of opinion members in different parts of the house may have on many problems, it is rather a satisfaction that we have now spent some hours today discussing those problems which concern human distress, and that no party and no individual in the house has any particular monopoly on compassion and regard for those problems. It is with some diffidence that a member who does not belong to the medical profession speaks on a subject with relatively little knowledge; but I want to add just a few words at this time which I think properly comes under this vote, Mr. Chairman. I refer to the matter of mental health.

The minister may recall that on the opening day of the session, and for some weeks, there stood in the name of the member for St. Lawrence-St. George a resolution to the effect that a national survey might be called under the leadership of his department, in co-operation with the provincial authorities and other groups in Canada, with respect to the question of mental illness. Members here, who are all relatively well informed, need not be told about the problem of mental health in Canada at this time. We are all pretty well aware of a real interest in that aspect of illness.

I think we as Canadians might take some degree of legitimate pride in the fact that Canada stands somewhat in the forefront in what is being done in this field. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that while we are giving consideration to the question of mental health today we should not be too smug, because it is possible that throughout the country there may be little clusters of men like ourselves in mental institutions who are trying to decide what they should do with us here. It is a question of relativity and of degree. I am not at all certain, Mr. Chairman, that I would want to pass an intelligence test for admittance into this honourable chamber at this time of my life.

I think we are all seized with the importance of mental illness, and this is borne out by the fact that in a constituency such as I have the honour to represent we have one of the great international institutions in this field, the Allan Memorial Institute presided over by one of the leading psychiatrists of the world, Dr. Ewen Cameron.

My proposition, Mr. Chairman, is one which I suggest requires no money from the government of Canada. Even within the vote the minister has under this item it may be that his department would give the necessary leadership in encouraging private institutions, provincial medical authorities and the professions themselves to make what I would call a reappraisal of the whole problem of mental illness. If that is done, and if additional money is required, then I am sure those great benefactors throughout Canada, both private and corporate, who are interested in this problem would gladly respond in providing whatever funds are necessary for this service.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, while the house has not been required to engage in a long debate on the resolution standing in my name, I thought it only right in the interests of all my fellow Canadians who are suffering from mental illness today and who have very few to serve as spokesmen for them, that all of us in this chamber and our friends and relatives who are more happily blessed should take a moment to suggest that notwithstanding the great work that is being done by provincial and federal authorities, by the profession itself and by helpful and compassionate individuals, we all might take a new look at the whole question of mental illness and make a national survey in order that this modern pestilence may soon be obliterated to the extent that we as decent people in our modern society might expect.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to the general health grants which are participated in by the provinces, and in particular a grant which has heretofore been made to St. Patrick's College under the mental health training project for psychiatric social work, which in 1954-55 amounted to $2,739 and in the preceding year to $2,600. It is my understanding that this project was approved by the Ontario department of health but was turned down by the federal authorities. The grant was used to pay part of the salaries of a lecturer in psychiatry and the professor of psychiatric social work. Would the minister say what reason there is for reducing what is a small grant in so far as the department is concerned but a very important one so far as the college is concerned?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend said it was approved by Ontario. That is not exactly the case. If this grant was made available it would be made by the federal government on an application sent to us by the Ontario government. They are only the channel in that sense; they do not contribute anything.

Mrs. Fairclough: I grant the minister's remarks. I had not intended to imply it was a 50-50 arrangement, but is it not true that the provinces ask for approval of these grants?

Mr. Martin: They are passed on to us. We took the position that it was mainly a social work grant. We had given assistance before. It was a grant for work that had some element of mental health in it but it was basically for social work. We felt in fairness to other similar applications where there was a greater emphasis—I do not say a greater work but a greater emphasis—in this field we would have to give the matter consideration, as we did.

Mrs. Fairclough: I hope the minister will reconsider, because as I understand it this will have a disrupting effect on the continuity of the service.

Mr. Martin: I am very familiar with the situation.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure the minister must be, but it has just come to my notice.

Mr. Martin: I thank my hon. friend for mentioning it.

Mrs. Fairclough: The minister will continue to consider the matter, will he?

Mr. Dinsdale: I would just like to make a brief comment on the topic raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. On February 14 last I received an interesting return on the subject of mental health in Canada which indicates it is a problem, as was pointed out by the hon. member, that is of growing significance in Canada. For example, in the period from 1950 to 1954 there has been an increase in the total number of admissions of mentally ill patients to hospitals. In 1950 the figure was 16,411 and in 1954 the equivalent figure was 29,351.

It is very important, of course, that we provide institutional care for this type of illness, but coming to the next heading I think it brings us to an even more important approach to the solution of this problem. There is an active movement on the part of the laity to do something about this increasing problem. For example, the White Cross appreciate that the best solution to the difficulty is not necessarily within institutions, but rather it lies in trying to rehabilitate our mentally ill and emotionally ill within the framework of society itself.

Considerable progress has been made in encouraging volunteer interest in this important aspect of the problem. It seems to me, however, Mr. Chairman, that the laity needs some professional guidance, and that guidance must come mainly through the phychiatric social workers.

According to the information I received in this return it would appear we are somewhat deficient in the number of trained psychiatric social workers available in this country. In the year 1954, the last year for which figures are available, the total number of psychiatric social workers employed on a full-time basis right across Canada was 37. If one looks at the provinces one finds that Newfoundland has one, Prince Edward Island none, Nova Scotia two, New Brunswick four, Quebec 15, Ontario 10, Manitoba one, Saskatchewan two, Alberta two and British Columbia none.

That obviously is a very inadequate number to deal comprehensively with this volunteer approach to the subject. Could the minister inform the committee what steps are being taken to make available a greater supply of trained psychiatric social workers?

Before I resume my seat I should like to say to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that I hope he will repeat his motion next year, so we may have a chance early in the session to have a comprehensive discussion of this matter.

Mr. Martin: Last year we trained 236. I want to say to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that I am well aware, as I am sure the committee is, of his great interest in this matter long before he came here. I want to thank him for the great work he has done as a layman in connection with the Montreal mental health association. I can only say to him that the problem on which he has focussed our attention is an important one.

It is true that mental illness is one of our serious major problems, but not any more serious than it is in the United States and other countries. I would not want to make odious comparisons, but it is a fact that the number of people who are going into institutions is on the increase. That should not be taken necessarily as an indication of the deterioration of the human body in this country; it is largely an indication of the new techniques of diagnosis, the greater skills which are available and the type of institutional care that is provided.

I should like to emphasize that in seeking to do what we can do with the moneys provided by the federal government we must recognize that these are problems which engage the attention of the provincial departments of health, which have the primary responsibility. Our role is one of co-ordination and supplementary assistance.

We have sought to give emphasis to two things in this field. First is prevention and treatment. We now have in existence some 105 mental health clinics, whereas when this program began eight years ago there were only 15. The purpose of these clinics is to reach the mentally ill person before his illness takes on a maturity which justifies confinement. These clinics, together with the child guidance clinics we have established on a pilot basis in a number of centres, are proving most valuable in our program of prevention.

The second aspect to which we are seeking to give emphasis is in the field of research. My hon. friend has mentioned the Allan Memorial institute in Montreal, which is carrying on most important research work. We are giving grants to other places for this purpose as well. My hon. friend may be assured, as indeed the committee may be assured, of our great interest in this problem. I have always felt, and I feel and say now, that one of the ways in which we of the western world can demonstrate our capacity to provide a desirable form of society is by the interest we take not only in this particular matter but in all matters having to do with health.

I want to pay tribute to the voluntary organizations in this country for the work they have done in the field of mental health, and I want to pay a special tribute to the Salvation Army. I know some of the work they do, as does the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, particularly in the city of Toronto. I repeat my tribute to them as well as to all religious bodies for the work that is being done.

Item agreed to.

Grants to health organizations—

265. Canadian mental health association, $10,000.

Mr. Zaplitny: What procedure is followed in deciding whether a grant shall be made under this item? Is application made to the federal government, or does the province in which the organization is located make an application on its behalf?

Mr. Martin: There is a variety of methods. Most of them come to see us personally, and where it is said to be a national organization we seek to establish whether in fact it is such. An organization may have a name which suggests it is national in scope when actually it is regional or even community in scope.

Mr. Zaplitny: What criteria are used to decide whether an organization is national in character?

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Martin: If they carry on operations in all provinces or in a greater number of provinces.

Item agreed to.

266. Health league of Canada, $10,000.

Mr. Knowles: During the sittings of the committee on estimates several hon. members asked the minister if consideration was being given to increasing the grant to the Health League of Canada. I have not the record before me, but my recollection is that the minister gave one of those kindly answers in which he paid tribute to those carrying on this work. Has his kindliness reached the point where he will recommend an increase in this grant?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend will appreciate that we get many requests and have only so much money. I can only say in regard to these grants, some of which are shown here and some of which are still under consideration, that they are matters that are considered in the department. When we come to prepare our estimates next year I shall be in a better position to give my hon. friend an answer. I can assure him of my great sympathy with the work of the Health League of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Welfare branch—

Family allowances and old age security—

278. Administration, $2,693,059.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to repeat at length the points I made when I spoke yesterday on the first item with respect to the amount paid to our old age pensioners. Neither is it my intention to get involved in the arguments which developed this morning when the supplementary payments made in the various provinces were being discussed. Rather I rise simply to remind the minister that in the view of an increasing number of Canadians it is the responsibility of the federal government to see to it that our Canadian senior citizens have a decent standard of living.

As far as I am concerned, it does not help the case of our senior citizens when hon. members suggest that part of this responsibility should be borne by the provinces. As I said yesterday, when you put any portion of this responsibility on the provinces you are calling for a reinstatement of the means test, at least to a certain extent. The only jurisdiction with sufficient resources to provide old age pensions on a universal basis for all Canadians as of right is the federal government.

Once again I urge the minister and the government to consider the needs of our people and in the light of the increased resources of this country do something at an early date to raise these pensions.

I suggest to the minister that it is not the part of wisdom for him to criticize and speak against those of us who urge an increase in the old age pension, because if he stays in his present position I am sure, as he is, that it will not be much longer until even he and even the government of which he is a member will have to do something about this important problem. There are rumours about a certain event in the political life of Canada which may take place on October 29 of this year or June 17 of next year or somewhere in between.

Mr. Martin: Do you want me to tell you when?

Mr. Knowles: I do not suppose that the Minister of National Health and Welfare really knows, any more than I do, the precise date for the election. These are the suggested dates: October 29, 1956, June 17, 1957, or some date in between, say in April or May of next year.

Mr. Martin: We are bound to have an election within the next two years.

Mr. Knowles: And the chances are that it will be on Monday, since that is what is provided under the Canada Elections Act. I suggest that with a surplus developing in the federal treasury, with an increased gross national product, which means that at the present tax rate still more money will come in, and in view of the fact that with the easing of world tensions there is likely to be quite a substantial reduction in the national defence budget next year, there is quite a possibility that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will make headway with his colleague the Minister of Finance and get out of him money not only for health insurance but for an increase in the old age pension.

I suggest, therefore, that instead of criticizing those of us who advocate that an increase be made, he should take these appeals to heart and realize, as I am sure he must, that this government does not dare face the people of this country without doing something about this issue on which there is growing feeling. I urge with the least possible delay an increase in the old age pension.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend and many others have spoken on this subject all through my estimates, and this is the first chance I have to make a reply which I think should be made from this side. My hon. friend referred to the Minister of Finance. He need not seek to select one member of the government as against any other, because the fact is that every member of this government is as interested in these problems as any other member of this house, and the Minister of Finance is certainly as interested as is the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles: That is good.

Mr. Martin: With regard to old age security, we on this side of the house need not apologize for what we have done and are doing for the aged citizens of this country. We are now spending more for old age security than any other country in the world on a comparative basis. We are the only country that has a non-means test system. The other day the hon. member for Broadview mentioned the United States system, and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would agree with me that he would not want to compare the project that came out of the old age security committee a few years ago with the kind of suggestion which was made by the hon. member for Broadview, when in fact the committee recommended against the particular suggestion the latter made.

Mr. Knowles: In principle the minister's statement is correct, but not with respect to the amounts that are paid.

Mr. Martin: It should not be forgotten that this year alone we have increased our total commitments to the aged by some $11 to $12 million. Ninety-five per cent of the moneys that are paid for old age security and old age assistance in this country comes from the taxpayers of Canada, under policies proposed by this government in this house. That is the fact. I think the hon. member for Prince Albert pointed out this morning the desirability of making sure that we should recognize that the provinces have their responsibility in this particular as well as the federal government, and I think that is true. I recognize the validity of what my hon. friend said about trying to maintain the non-means test character; but at the same time, whilst we are giving consideration to these problems—I wish to say that the government's policy will be announced when the government is in a position to do so—I may say that nevertheless we should not overlook the fact that the federal government is not in any way dragging its feet in the provision it is making for the aged citizens of this country.

In Newfoundland the federal government provides $7,599,405; in Prince Edward Island, $3,313,000; Nova Scotia, $18,411,000; New Brunswick, $13,246,000; Quebec, $77,110,000; Ontario, $134,644,000; Manitoba, $21,953,000; Saskatchewan, $22,331,000; British Columbia, $44,657,000; Alberta, $22,681,000. The whole cost of old age pensions three years ago in Canada was only $10 million more than the $77 million we are now paying to the province of Quebec, and it was not as great as what we are paying to the province of Ontario, $134 million. So anyone who says this government is not doing its duty to the aged is stating something not in harmony with the facts.

We have no reason to be ashamed on federal account of what we are doing for our senior citizens. I could not help feeling that it was unfair this morning—and I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree—when one of the hon. members sitting behind him referred to myself, heartless man that I was, because I would not recommend any increase for the aged of our country. I want to say to the hon. member, who is not in his seat, that I take second place to no man in this house for what I have sought to do for the aged of our country. Since I have been a member of the government we have made important modifications in the old age security program. We have increased the amount. We liberalized the income ceilings before we had the non-means test program, and we have conducted ourselves in a way that I think justifies my saying, with all those who sit to Mr. Speaker's right, that we do not need to hesitate at any time to face the people of this country for what we have done for the aged and for other sections of the people.

My hon. friend keeps mentioning elections. I assure him that in this particular matter we can hold our heads high, because no government anywhere in any part of the world has done so much as this government has done for the senior citizens of our country.

Mr. Knowles: Five o'clock.

Progress reported.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF ANNUAL HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

The house resumed, from Friday, June 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles for the second reading of Bill No. 211, to provide for annual holidays with pay for employees.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I think I had the honour of adjourning the debate the last time this matter was before the house. May I say I also have to be very careful because I remember that at one time earlier in the session when one of the hon. members opposite had two items standing in his name on the order paper, I spoke on the wrong item. There was one on which I intended to support him and another on which I intended to oppose him, and as the house will remember I spoke on the wrong one.

I am in somewhat the same spot today, because with respect to one of the items standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) having to do with holidays I intend to oppose him, but as far as this particular bill is concerned, although I was taken by surprise last time and only entered the debate under the exhortation of my friend the hon. member for—

Mr. Knowles: Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Philpott: —Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), I have had some time to think about it in the meantime and I have decided that this bill is worthy of all the support I can give it.

I may say I have come to that conclusion after thinking over carefully not only both sides of the question but all sides of the question. Quite often I find my heart on the same side as a good many of the hon. gentlemen opposite but I often find my head on the other side, or perhaps I should say my pocketbook. Quite often I am thoroughly in agreement with a good many of the things they suggest, and we on this side are presenting them to our own cabinet ministers. We have to press for them both in public and in private and the argument we have to meet is well, where is the money going to come from? I think some of my hon. friends on the other side do not always have to meet that argument as we do.

Therefore we have to watch our step as to what we support, but I do think that in this case that consideration does not enter into the picture, because the question of public finances is not involved in Bill No. 211. I will state frankly, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things that would incline me to oppose the bill at first glance would be that it seems to me that this parliament or any other law-making body should never pass a law where what is to be covered has already been covered by the people in the ordinary course of their own actions.

I submit that if we examine the general situation with respect to holidays with pay in Canada we will find that by and large the people of Canada have solved their own problems very satisfactorily with regard to this matter. We also know that the bill applies only to the minority of workers in Canada who can be covered under our constitution by federal legislation, and that the vast majority of workers are covered by provincial legislation.

I find that six provinces already have legislation similar to that proposed here. They are Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. British Columbia and Saskatchewan have the best laws. Modesty prevents me from saying which is the absolute best, but Saskatchewan is not so very far behind.

I find that only 400,000 of Canada's total working force of more than 5 million could be affected in any way, even theoretically, by the bill proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I also find that of the 400,000 workers who could be theoretically affected by the bill, 93 per cent of them are, by and large, already covered fairly satisfactorily one way or another by arrangements which they have worked out themselves, either as the result of collective bargaining or through the ordinary business processes involved in the relationship between employer and employee.

The matter boils down to this, that only about 7 per cent of the workers who could theoretically be covered by federal legislation might get some real and immediate benefit under Bill No. 211, advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Therefore it seems to me that we have to ask ourselves what is the advantage of passing such a law if only a minority can be effected in any event and only a small fraction of that minority are already outside the limits of the benefits proposed in the bill.

After careful reflection I have come down on the side of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with respect to this matter, because it does seem to me that the parliament of the Dominion of Canada has a moral obligation to set a good pace in all measures for human betterment, and I certainly do not think that in any matter involving wages, working conditions or that sort of thing it should ever be left to the national government of Canada to fall behind any of the provinces, even the most progressive provinces of Canada such as we have in the far west.

Therefore I have decided to lend whatever support I can to the passage of the bill. While I have no doubt that if the bill gets to the industrial relations committee we will be able to improve some of its details, by and large I think it is a good bill worthy of support, and I commend it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a question?

Mr. Philpott: Before we come to the hon. member's question, let me state something quite openly and in so doing continue the bad habit I started in the first part of my speech two or three weeks ago when, as I said, I was thinking out loud. There is one real objection in my mind, and that is the one I mentioned the last time although I did not pick a very good illustration of it because I referred to the floor price on butter. I suggested offhand that the floor price on butter tends to become the ceiling price on butter, and some of my city friends have pointed out that is not necessarily so, that in Canada the commercial price of butter is often quite a lot higher than the floor price, as we all know.

But I do believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and all of us should think about this aspect of the problem, too. Is it a fact that if you enact a law establishing a floor under working conditions, that floor tends to become the ceiling? I know that in the old days the old fashioned trade union leader very familiar to my good friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), never wanted the government to do anything for him except to keep their hands off his business and let him run his show in his own way. The old fashioned trade union leader always considered that a minimum wage became the maximum wage, and therefore in the earlier years it was their tendency by and large to oppose all such things as minimum wages and provisions of a similar type. But I have noticed in later years, as the organized trade movement in Canada has got bigger, stronger and broader—maybe it is better, though I do not know; I do not think it is better in all ways but certainly it has become more powerful—it has swung around more and more to the idea of legislative action when legislative action might tend to assist general working conditions.

The final thing which has influenced my judgment that the bill deserves support and that we should send it to the industrial relations committee to see if we cannot improve some of the details is that it seems to me that all laws having to do with working conditions and labour are tending to reduce disagreements over those things that some call the fringes, those things on the fringes that tend to cause disputes or that sometimes lead to injustices even if it is to a small minority of the workers.

I am not one of those who believe it is better to leave all these things to collective bargaining or fringe benefits which may be offset against increases in pay and working hours. It seems to me it is much better, where legislation fits the case, to make as fair a basis as you can for the general problem you have to meet, and leave the ordinary process of collective bargaining to deal with the really tough things which are always working conditions and wages.

Has the hon. member a question?

Mr. Knowles: Yes. I wonder if I might ask the hon. member this question. When he gives the figure of 93 per cent as the percentage of employees under federal labour jurisdiction who already have substantial holiday benefits, does he not feel he should make it clear that the 93 per cent includes those who get two weeks' holiday with pay only after as long as three years service, and that only 47 per cent get what this bill provides, namely two weeks' holidays after one year's service? In other words, is it not correct to say that instead of just 7 per cent of the employees gaining by the passing of this bill, something over 50 per cent of them would gain by the passing of this legislation.

Mr. Philpott: I think that is true. I believe the table which the minister put on Hansard at page 3837 sets the whole thing out very clearly. It is obviously true, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says, that a lot of them would get their two weeks' holidays with pay who would have to work for longer than is provided in this bill. As against that I think there is a very real argument that we would have to consider, and that is whether or not, in fact, the floor does tend to become the ceiling. As I say, on balance I certainly think this bill is one that deserves the support of all the progressive members in the house, at least to the extent of sending it to the industrial relations committee and discussing it there to see what we can get out of it.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I should like to say a few words in support of this bill. In his remarks the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) suggested that the old type of labour leader wanted a hands off policy. Well, I think the reason for that attitude in that period was that he did not have very many friends in parliament or the legislatures of the country. They were mystical bodies that he looked upon with a great deal of suspicion. Since that time employers, governments and labour leaders have grown up, and today they try to do their business on a business basis.

Now, I should like to say that while this bill only applies to organizations under the federal government, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, about 50 per cent of those who would come under this particular bill would benefit by its passage. In my judgment the important thing to remember is this. The federal government, as an employer, should set an example to other employers in the country. While the idea that these matters should be ironed out by collective agreement is a very good one, we must remember that in our labour force in this country today, some 5·5 million approximately, there is a very small organized percentage who have the right to make collective agreements. There are only about a million and a half out of that 5·5 million. It is the example that would be set by the federal government in this matter to other employers in the country that would be of benefit.

With the great bulk of the labouring force in Canada unorganized and having no opportunity to bargain in matters of this kind, there is a need for this legislation. There are only two provinces in Canada that have legislation similar to this on their statute books, and they are British Columbia and Saskatchewan. In those provinces, whether or not you are organized and sign a collective agreement, the employers are bound to live up to the laws with respect to holidays with pay. Other provinces have not that kind of legislation.

I suggest to the minister that in view of the benefits that would accrue to those who come under federal jurisdiction, and in view of the example the federal government would be to other employers across the country and to the provincial governments which have not similar legislation, he should accept this bill. He should concede that, perhaps after working 365 days in any industry in this country, the workers in that industry should be entitled to a holiday with pay. It is all right to depend on the generosity of the employer, but there are many of them who have employees who do not get any holidays. In my judgment this is one of the best examples the federal government could set at this time to either the provincial governments or to employers across this country.

Mr. Gregg: My hon. friend should have said 260 days instead of 365.

Mr. Gillis: Yes, but a lot of them work Sundays, too.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to add a word regarding this bill. First of all I should say that we agree with the principle of it, but I do think the bill should be sent to the committee on industrial relations so it could receive a full clause by clause study. It does seem to me that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) was correct when he said there should be no question in anyone's mind, either inside this house or outside, that after a person has worked for 52 weeks he is entitled to a week's holiday with pay. I think that is a general principle that is accepted by almost everyone across the country. If we cannot so arrange our industrial or any other type of development as to allow our workers at least two weeks' holidays with pay, it does seem to me there is something wrong.

It is true that it can be said this should be the subject of negotiation between employers and employees, but I am of the opinion that it would not do any harm to have legislation on the matter, because it is only a humane act to start with. It is something that should be taken care of by legislation rather than by negotiation. I do believe, too, that many of the provinces apply all these conditions, but the federal government is the one that should take the lead and set the example to the rest of the provinces. If the federal government took that lead, I think a great many of the provinces would follow. Of course, that does not offset the fact that we should have this principle implemented so far as the federal field is concerned.

I do not think there is anything more I could usefully say that would not be a repetition of what has been said. There are some clauses in the bill about which I am not too sure. The hon. member for New Westminster and myself have gone over the bill rather carefully, and I think it would be of advantage to the house—I cannot see any disadvantage to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—if the bill were sent to a committee for thorough study. I believe there are places that can be improved, but I want to state here and now that we agree with the general principle of the bill.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): When I first read this resolution my first reaction was one of a faint sort of hope, born no doubt of wishful thinking, that its scope might be broad enough to include members of parliament. But after I got down to a serious study of the bill, and read particularly the explanatory note as to its purpose, I could not help but think what a great pity it is that such legislation is even necessary, because we are all our brothers' keepers whether we are employers or employees, and certainly annual holidays are in the interests of both.

In the world in which we live today, annual holidays are a necessity for health and for efficiency, and because of that they are in the national interest. Furthermore, the economic cost of annual holidays to employees is more than recovered in the gains to industry through less absenteeism on account of ill health and greater production on account of better efficiency. Not only that, but we are living in an age when our way of life is challenged, and we are proponents of a way of life which is primarily based on the importance of the individual.

All our democratic system and all our democratic institutions have been built up on that principle, and certainly in an age of ideological conflict we cannot afford to forget that even for one minute. But on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, as I reflect more deeply on the bill, I must come to the conclusion that in one sense it hurts our democratic system, because of necessity it removes responsibility from the individual and we cannot remove responsibility without at the same time removing freedom of choice. These two factors are absolutely essential for the preservation and the development of our democratic way of life.

The explanatory note says that the purpose of this bill is to provide that all employees in Canada who come under federal labour jurisdiction be granted at least two weeks' holidays with pay after one year of employment. Certainly the stipulation of paid holidays is also a necessity because in our high cost society that we have built up here in Canada few employees can afford holidays without pay, and few can save up enough to enjoy a really good vacation out of their savings.

I think the important thing to remember about this legislation is that the key to this problem is not the number of employees affected but the number of employers, because it rests with every employer to grant these concessions to his employees whether they ask for them or not. I know it is pretty well admitted that the majority of our employers throughout Canada have already granted holidays with pay and that, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver South, only a small percentage of employees of the total working force of Canada will benefit from this legislation, but I think proportionately the number of employers will be smaller still.

The point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this very small group of employers, by shirking their responsibility to care for their employees, are doing a great disservice to the cause of democracy, because it is their irresponsibility that has made this legislation necessary. I have always been grateful that I had the opportunity of taking my university training in the field of science, because an understanding of the great laws that govern the forces of nature help very much to understand the human forces that control society. One great natural law is the balance of forces. All the great forces of nature are very neatly balanced, and I think the greatness of Shakespeare as a dramatist lies in the fact that he understood, perhaps more than any other writer of his day, how the internal forces inside of people are also very nicely balanced, and when that balance happens to be upset by a chance happening, or by some flaw in the human character, then these forces have to work themselves out until a new balance has been established. The working out of these forces can often lead to tragedy. It perhaps leads to tragedy more often than to the happy ending which we call comedy.

If a very small number of employers do not treat their employees properly the question naturally arises, why not? What forces are at work preventing their doing it? Are they forces of greed for more gain; are they forces of fear that industry cannot stand the extra cost; or are they purely economic forces which prevent their doing so? I think it is necessary to know, because the great challenge which the free world faces today has arisen from these human forces borne of a sense of injustice and a sense of neglect, which have come about primarily because capitalism failed to realize it is not enough for enterprise to be free. Besides being free enterprise must also be responsible.

I would like to see more emphasis on scientific training in our schools and particularly in our business colleges, because if employers had a better knowledge of the forces of nature I think they would also have a better understanding of how human forces work and of the consequences that would result from their actions.

I have made these observations, Mr. Speaker, because I find myself in a peculiar position with respect to this bill. As far as the principle is concerned no one can disagree with it at all, and I certainly give it my hearty support. On the other hand there is some doubt in my mind as to whether this is the best solution to this problem. As a parliament of Canada our aim should be to build up through the country a system of free and responsible enterprise. How can we ever develop responsible enterprise if government is continually going to intervene and take upon itself responsibility that more properly belongs to the individual? How much better it would be if every employer did the right thing, not because there is a law which compels him to do it but because it is the right thing to do. In those circumstances this type of legislation would not be necessary.

I would hope that the Minister of Labour might consider setting up somewhere in his department—perhaps he already has the machinery with which to do it—some machinery to survey problems like this so we would know exactly how many employers are not treating their employees responsibly, and not only that but also the reasons they are not doing so. We should also have machinery established to assist them to do the right thing. If it is clearly a matter of management or efficiency, then it would be much more positive for us to have someone go into that business and give the necessary assistance in order to enable them to do the right thing merely because it is right.

It seems to me this age is labouring under two misconceptions. One of these is that human nature cannot change. There are hundreds of thousands of people in the world today who can prove that this conception is contrary to the fact. There is abundant evidence in every part of the world to prove that human nature can change and will change voluntarily much more quickly than under legislative compulsion.

The second great misconception is that present social evils will be cured by increased social justice, more education and a greater sharing of wealth even if it is done through compulsion. I am convinced the cure will not come in that way. We cannot obey all the laws we have now, and the only way this problem is really going to be solved is by finding the answer to our human weaknesses. Unless we do find the answer to our human weaknesses humanity will go from crisis to crisis until lawless dictatorship takes over.

Therefore I would suggest that whenever we deal with any social problem of this kind we should know exactly what it is with which we are dealing and all the pertinent information should be obtained. In this case we should know how many employers and employees are involved, and the reasons for their not employing methods which we consider today to be simple elementary social justice. I would like to see this legislation deferred until the Department of Labour has had an opportunity to make this survey and obtain this information, and until it has been able to give more thought to the question of finding a better solution than that presented by passing more legislation.

It seems to me that this type of legislation, which little by little encroaches on the freedom of the individual and limits more and more the freedom of choice, is in the end going to defeat its own purpose because as I see it the answer is responsible enterprise. This represents democracy applied to industry and to economics, and I fail to see how we will ever preserve democracy by curtailing freedom.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaks now he will conclude the debate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if my counting is correct I believe that nine members of the house have spoken to the second reading of this bill. I am encouraged as I check over the positions taken by these nine members, in that seven have indicated they are in favour of the bill or at least that they support its principle. The eighth member, the hon. member who has just taken his seat, seems to find it difficult to believe laws have a place in establishing rights for people, but nevertheless even he is in favour of the principle set out in this bill, namely that workers should have two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service.

That accounts for eight of the hon. members who have spoken. There is only one other, and of course he is a rather important person. I refer to the Minister of Labour. He did not indicate that he could support the bill. He did not say he was against it nor that he was going to vote against it, but he said that at the moment at any rate he could not bring himself to support it. If the house will vote in accordance with the views which have been expressed by the nine members who have spoken there is no doubt as to the result. I certainly hope that will be the case.

I am most grateful, not only to those on this side of the house in the three opposition parties who have spoken in support of the bill but for the attention given to it by the Minister of Labour. I am of course pleased with the support which has been indicated by the hon. member for Vancouver South.

In summing up, since it is hardly necessary to do anything by way of reply in view of the fact that most of the speeches have been favourable to the bill, I might repeat just one or two facts which were given earlier in the debate. It is correct to say that there is legislation regarding annual vacations with pay on the statute books of six provinces, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Incidentally, using the formula we have had occasion to discuss yesterday and today under another heading, those six provinces represent a majority of the provinces and also a majority of the Canadian people. It seems to be pretty well indicated that this principle is accepted in this country.

However, as far as those six provinces are concerned, only two of them have legislation which provides that there shall be two weeks' vacation with pay after one year's service, those two being British Columbia and Saskatchewan. The other four provinces provide for one week's holidays with pay after one year's service. Some of them provide for a greater length of holidays after more years of service. These provincial laws relate to employees who come under provincial labour legislation, and do not touch the 400,000 who come under federal jurisdiction. This bill would deal with that group of 400,000 workers who come under federal labour jurisdiction.

Nevertheless, I think the point should be made that there is a tendency on the part of the provinces, particularly in the labour field, to pay attention to what the other provinces are doing and to what the federal government is doing. I think if a lead could be given by the federal parliament in this matter it would hasten the day when we would have legislation of this kind throughout Canada, so that all the workers of this country would have vacations with pay as a matter of right. This is a principle which the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo accepts; and I think even he will have to agree that that can be brought about only if we use the rule of law to establish the rights to which we believe our people are entitled. After all, laws are not just the negative things that he seems to think they are; laws are not just restrictive, laws are also positive in that they establish certain rights. That is what this law is. It is similar to the laws in some of the provinces which do establish the right of working people in this country to enjoy two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service.

May I say to the hon. member for Bow River that I indicated on May 11 when I moved second reading that I would be happy to have this bill go to the committee on industrial relations. If it is given second reading I would move that that be done, rather than the usual motion of reference to committee of the whole house.

I should like to say just a brief word further with respect to the number of employees who would be affected by this bill, following along the exchange between the hon. member for Vancouver South and myself. I think we got it clear, basing our statements on the table put on the record on May 11 by the Minister of Labour, that approximately 47 per cent of the employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction now have, by virtue of collective agreements or for other reasons, two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service. That leaves some 53 per cent who would gain if this bill became law.

Industrial Relations

It is true that in addition to the 47 per cent who have two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service there is roughly another 2 per cent who have two weeks' holidays with pay after two years' service and there is another 44 per cent who get two weeks' holidays with pay after three years' service. If you add those three groups together you arrive at the 93 per cent indicated a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Vancouver South.

However, I think cognizance should be taken of the fact that even the 47 per cent of the employees under federal labour jurisdiction who enjoy two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service includes three groups of workers who I think it would be fair to say are in preferred categories. Those three groups are air transport employees, bank employees including employees of the Bank of Canada, and employees in government enterprises not included in the preceding classifications. The employees in those three groups, as will be seen from the table on page 3837 of Hansard, enjoy two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service to the extent of 100 per cent. When you deduct those employees from the total and consider the rest, that is all employees under federal labour jurisdiction except those in preferred occupations who enjoy this privilege 100 per cent, you find that so far as the rest of them are concerned —in other words, averaging those in railways, shipping, motor and all other transport, mining, manufacturing and so on—it works out to about 35 per cent of all the rest who enjoy the privilege of two weeks' holidays with pay after one year's service.

I believe the principle is gaining ground. I believe it is pretty well accepted in Canada that people should have reasonable holidays with pay as a result of their contribution to the economy of this country. Nevertheless it is true that there are still a great many people who come under federal labour jurisdiction who need the improved benefits and protection provided by legislation such as this. So I hope the house will give approval to this bill so it can be sent to the industrial relations committee.

As I say, seven of the nine of those who have spoken say they are for it and the eighth member says he is in favour of the principle although not in favour of doing it by law. If the eight of us can just get the Minister of Labour on our side we will have won the day.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; I did not want to interrupt the hon. member while he was speaking but I am sure he would not want to leave an improper interpretation of what I said. He will remember that I started out by referring to the fact that we are our brothers' keepers. I recognize therefore that every man has a moral right to be cared for and when a man has a moral right to something there is a moral responsibility on somebody else to supply it. When a man already has a moral right, in recognition of a moral law, I do not see that legislation is necessary to establish it as a legal right.

That is what I said. I do not think the hon. member would want to imply that I did not think legislation was necessary to establish rights. I said this is a moral right, and I think a moral law should take precedence over a man-made law.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Family allowances and old age security—

278. Administration, $2,693,059.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): There is a question I should like to direct to the minister. One of his senior officials was in Winnipeg at the beginning of June, and apparently he made a speech there which was reported or misreported in one of the Winnipeg newspapers. His remarks were to the effect that a third world war was certain. I just wonder if the minister can give me the facts of the situation.

Mr. Martin: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that I presume my hon. friend is talking about one of the officials in our family allowances division, for whom we have the highest admiration. I am sure he would not be guilty of any deliberate indiscretion. I am quite sure that if he was reported as having said that, there must have been some inaccuracy in the report.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Can the minister ascertain the facts for me?

Mr. Martin: I will be glad to.

Mr. Green: This vote is the administration item in connection with family allowances and old age security. Since the house last met, one or two weaknesses in the regulations have come to my attention, and I should like to place them before the minister tonight.

The first has to do with family allowances. We have in Vancouver a boys' band known as the Kitsilano boys' band, which has been conducted for quite a few years by Mr. Arthur Delamont. It is a very famous band and has played here in front of the parliament buildings on different occasions. Mr. Delamont has taken these boys to Great Britain and the continent on several different occasions. Apparently the minister's department has ruled that when one of these lads is away for more than three months, then the family allowance must be repaid. I have actually had one of those cases come to my attention.

I do not believe that is proper under the terms of the Family Allowances Act itself. The act provides in section 4, subsection (2) (b) that the allowance shall cease if the child ceases to be a resident in Canada. I think if the regulations are such that the allowances are cancelled in cases such as the one I have mentioned, then those regulations go farther than is permitted by the act. The condition should be the residence of the family in a case like that, and there certainly has been no change of residence. These boys have gone on these trips as members of the band, and I think the minister's department is making a mistake in cancelling the allowances under those conditions.

Then the next case has to do with the Old Age Security Act regulations. This old age security to Canadians over 70 is paid entirely by the dominion, so there can be no argument that the provinces have to be consulted about the regulations. This is purely a federal payment, and it is made on a contributory basis. The government itself has asserted time and time again that our old age security payments are contributory. The people are contributing by way of additional taxation imposed for the purpose of providing old age security. In view of these facts I think that there should be some change made to cover cases such as the following.

In the first place, Canadians employed abroad by Canadian firms should be covered. For example, take a man who represents one of our great newspaper firms in London. I know of a case of that kind. This man represented Canadian newspapers in London for quite a few years. When he retired he came back to Canada, but he cannot get the pension because of the time he was in the old country. I believe anybody in that position should be counted as a Canadian and should be able to get the payment.

Another group of cases concerns people who have been away within the last 20 years. There is a provision in the act to the effect that unless they were in Canada during the period before the 20 years started to run for twice the time they were away in the last 20 years, then they cannot qualify. That is in section 3, subsection 1, paragraph (b) (i) of the act. It reads:

(i) has been present in Canada prior to those 20 years for an aggregate period at least equal to twice the aggregate periods of absence from Canada during those 20 years.

I believe the time has come to take a second look at that provision. Instead of requiring double the length of time prior to the commencement of the 20-year period, surely that should be made an equal length of time, or having resided in Canada for a total period of 30 years even though part of the last 20 years was spent out of the country. I know of several cases where this ruling has come into effect, and I think it is very unfair.

Another case concerns those who have resided in Canada for the necessary length of time and qualified for the old age security payments, and then wish to retire in the United Kingdom. That person has made his or her contributions and surely should be entitled to the old age security payment. Under the present legislation he loses out; he cannot get the payment.

Why is it not possible for Canada, if she will not make the payments direct to these people who go to the United Kingdom or any other part of the commonwealth, to negotiate an agreement with the United Kingdom under which the payments would be made. There is an agreement of that kind, I believe, between the United Kingdom and Australia and another one between the United Kingdom and New Zealand. My facts may not be accurate, but that is what I am told, that there are agreements between these nations of the commonwealth under which if the old age security recipient moves to the other country he or she will still be eligible for the payment.

I think, too, there should be a change made so that a person who has reached 70, and who has to go south for health reasons, can still qualify for these payments. There are not a great many of these cases, but every so often you run into one where it is a matter of life and death. If the person is to survive at all he has to go to a milder climate. I do suggest consideration should be given to making a person in that category eligible for the payment.

[Mr. Green.]

These regulations are too rigid. For example, on the west coast we have the boundary in one place running across a peninsula which is called Point Roberts. The tip of that peninsula is in the United States and the rest of it is in Canada. We have a large group of people from Vancouver with small homes just over the boundary on the United States side of Point Roberts. They buy all their groceries in a store on the Canadian side. Their money is all spent in Canada, but they live in the United States a few feet over the border. Some of them have spent all their lives in Canada, yet they are disqualified for old age security. That is a ridiculous state of affairs, and I do not think it was ever the intention of this parliament that people in that position should be disqualified. I am sure if the minister himself will look into that situation he will be able to find some way out of the difficulty.

Then, finally, the minister's department has the responsibility for people on old age security. I should like to know what the views of his department are with regard to having housing schemes which are to be used by old age security recipients exclusively, or to a large degree. I ask that for this reason. Another department of government is saying that if there are, I think it is, over 30 per cent of the occupants in a scheme of this kind who are on old age security, then the dominion government will not permit the scheme to go ahead.

We have had a case of that kind in Vancouver where the city has suggested a scheme, I think it is under section 36 of the National Housing Act—I may have the wrong section—under the section which calls for co-operation among the city, the province and the federal government. I believe the city and the province are willing to go ahead with a scheme for housing which will be for old age security recipients exclusively, but the dominion government, under the Minister of Public Works, is refusing. It says it is not right to let senior citizens occupy a housing scheme exclusively. This other department of government wants them mixed up with a whole lot of younger people.

I would like to know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare thinks that is a sound policy from the point of view of those senior citizens? In Vancouver we do not think it makes any sense at all. The result of the refusal of the Department of Public Works to authorize a scheme of this kind has been that there is not any scheme at all. I should like to hear from the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether his department has objections to a scheme such as has been proposed by the city and apparently approved by the province.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a little of the time of the committee to discuss a matter which I think lends itself as a subject of some interest to members in all parts of the house; a subject, too, that, when they find what is being done in some parts of Canada, may cause them a little surprise and some of them may be a little appalled.

In the central part of my riding I have an area that was settled in the early days of the settlement of the west, and I am not talking of the settlement that occurred with the advent of the railways, but with the advent of the fur trade and the settlement from Hudson Bay. The Churchill river system, which is a tremendous system of large lakes, occupies the central part of my riding, and it is about that area that I wish to speak for the next few minutes. The area was settled mostly by people of Scots descent, brought in by the Hudson Bay Company, and a little later by French people who were employees of Revilon Freres, a fur-trading firm in that area at that time.

Those people mixed with the native population to give us what is known as our Metis population, or our half-breeds. The mentality of those people has not changed much with the admixture of British and French blood. Their mentality is still the Indian mentality. About 15 months ago family allowances began to be cut off from these people, and they have been progressively cut off since that time. A few people were affected initially. Later more and more were affected, and pretty well the whole area now is cut off from family allowances.

Hon. members will be surprised, I think, even as members of parliament, to learn that in the Family Allowances Act we have a means test, and it is a means test of this kind. You must provide for your child amenities of one kind or another to the amount of $5 a month or you do not get family allowances. Well, of course, that is no difficulty as far as people are concerned whose children are at home. It is taken for granted by the department that the $5 is paid as long as the child is at home, but the difficulty begins the moment the child is sent either to a boarding school or to some institution. Ordinarily it is not necessary to do that, but in this area the vocation of the people demands that this be done practically 100 per cent.

What is their vocation? Well, their vocation is trapping and fishing. It must be recalled that their mentality is still that of the Indian, and therefore they are naturally nomadic, anyway. It was only with the advent of family allowances that any great interest was taken in education there by the Indians themselves, although with the coming of the missions—and the Oblate order came into that area about 160 years ago and settled mainly in places like Iles a la Crosse and Portage la Loche and others—there has been some interest in education. They have done a marvellous job but they ran into the natural resistance of those Indians or half-breeds to education.

Family allowances changed that a great deal. It gave them an incentive to go to school, and the missions were able to persuade them to go to school and get some education. Family allowances and the health department that our minister so ably heads have done other things for that country that had quite an impact on it. Over a period of years we have got rid of the scourge of tuberculosis amongst the Indian population, and now instead of a vanishing race we have a great multiplying race.

This brings problems, mainly the problem that the old life of fishing and hunting will not fill the bill. It will not provide sustenance for the increasing number of people in that area. Therefore we have to seek new channels of employment for those people up there. They must assimilate more with the white race and follow the white man's pursuits. The first step in that is education. And so this matter of the cutting off of family allowances, though it is not education itself, is an adjunct that is necessary, and has proved beneficial.

For the first four or five years that we had family allowances in this country these people were paid. You would naturally wonder why they are not paid today. During the period when they were paid we had this very beneficial effect. The missions were increasingly able to get those people to go to school. The heads of those missions tell that sometimes it took four or five years of pleading and argument on the part of the priests, who for a period of, as I say, over 160 years have tried to bring this situation about, to get them to go to school. I wish to pay a tribute to those missionaries who have spent their lives in that country in order to help the half-breeds and the Indian population. They have been willing to spend their lives there, and I think we should be willing to spend the family allowances and make them payable to all our people.

I brought up the question as to why they were being discontinued. They were discontinued on the retirement of the regional director of family allowances a year and a half or so ago, when a new one was brought in. I made inquiries about this gentleman, and the minister has been kind enough to have him come down and talk with me. I have also talked with other officials in this department over the past few months, but all with the same result. They tell us it has to be fixed here in this place, and that is what I contended from the outset. They were cut off by the new administrator, who hewed to the letter of the act as far as these people who send their children to boarding school are concerned, and those who send their children to places where they can board and go to a day school.

As I have told you, that is a necessity in that part of the country because the people are nomadic. They live anywhere from 50 to 150 miles away from schools, and it is essential for their children to be in a central spot or they will receive no education at all. Family allowance was cut off, on the basis that the parents are not paying $5 a month to the institution concerned, and therefore they are not qualified for family allowance.

Mr. Gillis: How many were affected?

Mr. Harrison: In Ile a la Crosse about 130 were affected at that school. I inquired at Easter when I went through and learned that 20 of them had left school in order to get the family allowance. That may seem a rather odd thing, particularly when we remember the spirit in which the Family Allowances Act was passed. I was not a member of this house in the days of Mackenzie King when this legislation was framed, but if I correctly understood the intent of Mr. King it was to bring a better standard of living, particularly in terms of education, to people in the lower income group. If I am wrong in that I would like to be corrected. In practice the opposite is the case. The new administrator wishes to hew to the letter of the act, and he wrote to the parents of some children as follows:

> . . . as soon as your child returns home let us know so we can reinstate him . . .

—on the family allowance. Instead of insisting as we always have that children go to school in order to obtain the family allowance, in this area they are insisting that the children stay away in order to obtain it.

I checked with Father Bourbonnais, the priest who is the principal at the mission at Ile a la Crosse and I learned that 20 children had already left school in order to obtain the family allowance. Father Bourbonnais contemplates that more will be leaving. In the mimeographed booklet which is published there, by the children, about three or four times a year, Father Bourbonnais makes a plea to the parents to send the children back after the summer recess. I would like to read a portion of this to you:

> After holidays well spent come back in September. Come numerous to prepare your future. "Education is key to the Indian problem" declared some Indian chiefs to the Honourable Jack Pickersgill, federal Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. The Metis and Indians have the same problem. The population is increasing in the north and is going to keep on increasing. Only a small number of the native population in the next generation will make their living by hunting, trapping and fishing. The others will have to learn new ways to earn their living, such as mining, lumbering, working in mills and doing office work; or become nurses or teachers. All this means preparation—by attending school regularly and learning as much as possible.
> Presently there is the problem about taking pupils in residence, on account of the family allowances regulations.
> The parents are responsible for their children and must contribute for their education. Unfortunately some misunderstanding has been going on for some time, and children who should be at school are not attending presently.
> Our Right Reverend Bishop Paul Dumouchel, O.M.I.,—

—who has been in Ottawa, I might say, on three or four occasions in connection with this matter—

> —along with the provincial and federal government officials, are doing their best to solve the problem, and we hope their efforts will be crowned with success.

I hope they will, too, because some of these people have been without the family allowance for 15 months on the ground that the institution charges only $2.50 a month and they are ordered to pay $5 per pupil. I think the people at the mission know more about what the people in that area can pay than the officials of the department of my hon. friend the minister. The Oblate fathers have been there for 160 years, and if they do not know the situation which obtains there I would venture to suggest that no one knows. I know this area intimately myself, and I know a great many of these people personally. I go in there once or twice a year and meet the people and listen to their problems. There is not the remotest possibility of their being able to pay that sum.

Many hon. members have been talking about the possibility of increasing the family allowances. Before we begin to do that I think we should first pay it on the basis we now have it, because an increase is not going to mean anything to the people up there. Even an increase of 50 per cent would be of no value, because an increase of 50 per cent of nothing still equals nothing. Even if you triple it, it is still nothing.

One runs into some extremely difficult situations and it is interesting to review some of them, though I do not want to bore hon. members by speaking at too great length.

Mr. Blackmore: You will not bore us; go ahead.

Mr. Harrison: I want to place some cases on the record because a desperate situation exists in that area. Granted it is not a very large area and it does not contain a great many people, but it has already affected at least 130 children and before long, it will have affected a great many more.

I believe this is important. I do not know why any Canadian child should be barred from the family allowance, particularly when its parents are at the very bottom of the economic scale.

I have no objection to a means test for family allowances providing it is put in the right place. For instance, I would have no objection if it applied to persons in receipt of an income of $50,000 a year, and if they had to fulfil certain stipulations; but to impose it on this group of people is something I cannot tolerate, particularly when one hears hon. members saying from time to time that we should give more money to Burma or other countries under the various plans we have. When we do give away money it is without strings attached. We do not say that someone has to provide $5 before we will give them $25 million. I think we should do something about seeing that our own people in this country are protected, particularly those who are in severe need.

I spoke about children who had to go home from school, according to the new regional director. I spoke to this young man, and he is a very decent fellow. He told me he has to adhere to the act as it is written, and I agreed that he does. The only reason family allowances were paid before was because the regional director winked at some of the regulations. One of them was that the family allowances cheque must be paid directly to the parents.

In effect the mission in that area is the guardian of the children for at least 10 months of the year and frequently for longer periods of time. The result is that, in order to make this thing work, the money has to be paid direct to the mission. As a matter of fact the same gentleman went out and was going to have the former head priest Father Gagnon thrown into jail because he was collecting the cheques at the post office at Ile a la Crosse, despite the fact that the parents would be required to travel many miles to get the cheques and could not read them when they were received, because most of them are quite illiterate.

These things are not taken into account by the officials. Their thinking and the act itself is based on the assumption that in its administration one would be dealing with people of normal intelligence and education. The directives they have issued are useless, because they have no foundation in fact.

I said a minute ago that I would give the details of a few of these cases so the committee will have some idea of the impact this has had upon these people. Here is a letter from a person who has enough education to write a letter:

> Please if you going any time to Regina and please ask for me to Mr. G. P. Allen, regional director family allowances, ask him what for didn't send family allowance to my kids since seven months. Now ask him please to send all that to my wife Vitalin Gardiner.

And later:

> I got a big family; I got seven kids keeping at my home and very pleasure to you if you can get that for my wife please.

That is from one who knows how to write. To insist that these people sign their cheques is to insist on something impossible because they just cannot do it. They just mark them. They have authorized the priest at the mission to get their family allowance cheques from the post office. That has always worked. The mission books are open to inspection by anybody, and the provincial inspector of schools tells me that he inspects the books regularly and has found them to be in first class order. They keep an account for each child, and if clothing has to be bought it is bought out of the family allowance.

What must be taken into account is that these people do not have banks, they cannot read or write, and an act passed for other parts of Canada just will not work in that part of the country. You are making these people break the law, and they have different ideas about what breaking the law is than have people in other parts of the country. They do not think they are breaking the law by turning in their cheques and having their families go to school. I shall just read excerpts from what another lady writes:

> I am a poor widow and often I go to the post office looking for my family allowance cheque which has not come for many months, and all I get is questionnaires and objections and overpayments, etc. It really looks as if it was a crime to put a child in an orphanage or a boarding school and that I have to be punished for it. I shall do my best once more to answer your questions and that I may finally receive some of the money I need so much.

This is what she had in mind. The regional director sent out this questionnaire to these people. I told him when he was here that it was a waste of time, because they could not read it when they got it. How could they fill it out? The first question is "Name of school or institution" and the next one "List of payments made to school or institution since admission". Those would be made largely by the priest at the mission. Then the next, "Show travelling costs paid to or from school." That might be ascertainable. "Show the cost of clothing bought since admission." Most of them do not keep any accounts under their birch bark bookkeeping system, and there would not be much you could find out about that. Then the next question, "Show details as to dental, medical, optical costs since admission." If that work was done at the school they would have those details. Then, "Books, toys, etc. purchased since admission". If there were any provided they would probably know what they were.

These questions are asked of the priest at the mission. These people bring them in to the priest, because they cannot read or write. I asked Mr. Allen what was the point in asking that kind of question, because the only point in asking a question is to get an accurate answer. If you cannot get an accurate answer there is no use in asking a question. That is what this lady was perturbed about when she said:

> Darlene was admitted at Holy Family school at Ile a la Crosse in September, 1953, and has now been back with me for the summer holidays.

Then she goes through her whole family giving the details of where the children are. She gives that information because she has not had any family allowance cheques for several months.

I dropped in at Buffalo Narrows during Easter. There are many white people there, some of them not too well educated but sufficiently so to answer letters. One of them has 12 children, six of them being at home as they are under school age. His wife told me that they were getting $20 a month in allowances. Another man had five children, with three of them at the Ile a la Crosse school and two at home. It just happens that I saw a letter from this man in the files of Father Gagnon when I dropped in at Ile de la Crosse, and it was a pathetic thing. He was saying how sorry he was that he could not bring the children home at Christmas time because he had caught only 27 boxes of fish since October, and his mink would not be ready for sale for some time. He had sent $3 so that each child would have a dollar at Christmas, and he said he would try to bring them home the next Christmas.

These are the kind of people we are shutting out. I think some consideration should be given to removing this means test and seeing that these people are paid. I do not care whether it is in Ethiopia or wherever else you may find underprivileged children, they are no more underprivileged than the people in this area. If any hon. member is interested I would be glad to have him come with me to visit those people. If he finds that conditions are not as I have stated I will be ready to apologize for anything I have said tonight. These people are at the absolute bottom of the Canadian economic scale. The minister's department is trying to improve the health of these people, and I think the results are indicated by the increase in population, but this work should be coordinated with family allowances.

I have no doubt that the minister will tell me what he told Bishop Dumouchel, that education is a provincial problem. I should like to quote from Bishop Dumouchel's last letter, where he says:

> Mr. Martin comes back with the argument that education is the sole responsibility of the provincial government. This we all know and state that the provincial department takes up this responsibility quite adequately. Teachers' salaries, school supplies and tuition grants are top. But what Mr. Martin overlooks is that the organization at Ile a la Crosse is not a school but a residence which makes it possible for the children to attend school there.

In concluding it might be well to indicate what some of the officials in the department think as to the coverage of the act in this respect. I quote from a letter written by George Carty, executive assistant to the minister, as follows:

> However, I now find that section 18 (c) presupposes that the basic maintenance required by the act is satisfactorily met. In other words, before any special arrangements can be made for the disposition of the allowance cheque, the basic conditions of eligibility must be complied with.

Then on the next page the basis of eligibility is set out as follows:

> That is to say the parent must pay to the school basic maintenance of $5 a month plus the family allowances received on behalf of the particular child concerned.

I can assure you that that cannot be done in that area because these people have not got it. In other words they would have to pay $5 a month plus the family allowance cheque for each particular child. That was the approach taken by the officials of the department in the absence last year of the minister when he was doing such an admirable job in foreign relations in New York. I can assure him that his own work up in this area suffered because we could not get a statement of policy on this matter from his officials. They took the proposition up with the provincial administration, to see if they would increase the allowances at that end, and came to the conclusion that the proposition would be met and these objections in the act overcome if the provincial grant, instead of being given to the school, was given to the individuals themselves, and they in turn would bring it back to the school, and that would satisfy the act.

Mr. Gillis: There is nothing wrong with the act, it is just stupid administration.

Mr. Harrison: That, of course, completely ignores the mentality of people of the Indian race. The moment they get a dollar in their hands they want to spend it. Even if they could read a letter, or if someone interpreted it for them, the fact that they received a letter saying that this money does not belong to them but they must take it to the school, that it belongs to the school, would mean nothing to them. They live for today and let tomorrow take care of itself.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to proceed?

Mr. Harrison: I shall finish very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Harrison: That kind of thinking amazes me. It may be because the civil servants in charge are not familiar with that area. One of the things that was told to me about the qualifications of the present regional director in Regina was that he had better qualifications than any other regional director in Canada. On the basis of the yardstick they use, I think that is right. He is the only graduate in social services.

Mr. Gillis: That is what is wrong with him.

Mr. Harrison: I think my hon. friend is correct. I agree with that. I should like to set the examination for a regional director for Saskatchewan, particularly one who has to administer that northern area if he does not know anything about it. This particular gentleman was sent in, I understand, from Halifax. He is a graduate in social services. If I were setting an examination for that position, I would take him on a trip up to my riding—I have very rugged country in the northern part of Saskatchewan—and I would drop him by parachute in the wildest part of that country with a rifle and 20 rounds of ammunition. If I came back one year later and he was still alive he would be a good man to put in as a regional director, because he would certainly know that country and its problems. He would not be writing to the people, even if he thought they could read, and telling them to go 150 miles on snowshoes to pick up their cheque, sign it and take it to Father Gagnon or Father Bourbonnais, whoever happened to be there, and in that way fulfil the letter of this act before they could get their family allowances. As will be seen from the concern shown by Father Bourbonnais in this little pamphlet, the net result is that 110 children who have been kept all this year by the mission without any family allowances are not going to come back, because of the example of the 20 pupils who stayed home to get their allowances. I think I have said enough, and I have taken advantage of the indulgence of the members of the committee, for which I thank them, and also of the minister. I have no doubt he will make some rebuttal to this. I hope that by the time he gets through something will be done, and that he will not merely say that we have nothing to do with education in the province. We have a responsibility to pay family allowances, in my opinion, to every child in Canada, no holds barred, and particularly to those people about whom I am speaking.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am not sure if I am correct in my opinion that this is the first time a minister has had such expert advice on the floor of the house. I should like to compliment him—and it is not often I compliment a minister—on the very high calibre of the advice he has. I am sure that under the circumstances the opposition can make very little headway.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to say a few words on this item, administration of welfare. I am not going to elaborate on old age security. This group likes to expedite the work of the house, so it organizes itself in order to do that. We have one chief spokesman on each department's estimates, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has aired the views of all members of this group on the question of old age security. I should like to say that we agree with him, and there is no need to repeat what he said.

I should like to supplement what the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra had to say on the qualification clause in the Old Age Security Act. It is even worse than he painted it. I run into cases in trying to establish old age security—or old age pension, as it was known before the act was changed—of men who spent five years out of the country in the armed services fighting a war, and find that time was disallowed for pension purposes. The present minister will find records in his files where I have taken up at least one case during the past five years in regard to that particular question, and as far as I am concerned I never got it straightened out. I just want to make sure that men who served during the last war and in Korea for several years—

Mr. Martin: I assure my hon. friend that time spent in the armed services is not calculated against—

Mr. Gillis: It was.

Mr. Martin: I shall look into it. If the hon. member will meet me tomorrow, we shall settle that in one minute.

Mr. Gillis: I just want to make sure that time spent out of the country is now not held against those who were in the services.

The other point the member for Vancouver-Quadra has raised is one that has been raised a good many times. That is the need, at least in the commonwealth countries, to make our social security legislation reciprocal. I believe that should be done. There are many people in Canada from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. When they reach 70 years of age most of them have nothing else to fall back on except the pension. However, if they leave the country that $40 per month is discontinued. Plenty of these people would like to go back to the old country. The place where you finally like to rest is where you were born. That $40 per month in purchasing power in the old country would mean much more than it would if spent in Canada by such a person in the last years of his life. I believe that some consideration should be given to bringing that pension to people in that category.

I certainly think it is time that the countries of Canada and the United States, which are so closely interlocked and are becoming closer and closer all the time economically, socially and in every other way, should permit people on old age security pensions to have their pensions when they take a trip down south and stay down there for holiday purposes or any other purposes. It is time they got around to doing something on a reciprocal basis between Canada and the United States. I should just like to say this with respect to the matter raised by the hon. member for Meadow Lake. It is a rather amazing story. The test of any legislation is in its administration. The hon. member endeavoured to relieve the director from any blame and tried to make it appear that the act was at fault, but I think what is happening there is a direct violation of the act. Any child of school age who is not in school cannot receive the family allowance.

Mr. Harrison: That does not apply if no school is available in the immediate area.

Mr. Gillis: That does not make any difference. There are no ifs, ands or buts in the legislation. Under the circumstances described by the hon. member I do not think it is necessary to change the act. One director administered the act over a number of years in the only way it can be administered, and then a new man comes in with all the book training but with no practical experience of life that would acquaint him with the kind of situation the hon. member has described.

Do you know what I think is necessary? All that is necessary is for the minister to issue a directive re-establishing the system in force previously, and tell the new man to get ready to find himself a job up in the bush until he becomes acquainted with the facts of life.

Mr. Knowles: Or back in Halifax.

Mr. Gillis: I think if you trace his ancestors you will find he is not a Nova Scotian. I think you will find he comes from some other part of the world. It is a matter of having people in an administrative capacity who know something about the facts of life.

I suggest to the minister that before his estimates are completed he get up and tell the hon. member who raised this question that it is too bad, but that he was at the United Nations doing an important job, that he cannot be every place, which is understandable that while he is away there are far-flung corners in this country of ours that are liable to get out of joint, and that as soon as the estimates are completed he is going to exercise his authority to correct the situation that exists in that particular area.

The money should be paid retroactively. There are 15 months involved. I am looking forward with a great deal of interest to the minister making that kind of statement to the house in his very direct, sympathetic and efficient manner. He should say that this kind of situation cannot exist, and that he is going to clean it up. You know, Mr. Chairman, we have co-operated 100 per cent. We have sat here and just held on to ourselves day after day waiting to get to the minister's estimates.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend co-operates in everything.

Mr. Gillis: There is another angle to the matter of family allowances, the question of the boy or girl going to school after reaching the age of 16. That is the time when in many families it becomes very expensive to get the boy or girl through high school or possibly university. Under the present regulations the family allowance is not payable to any boy or girl over 16, and I believe the time has come when the allowance should be made applicable to any boy or girl continuing his or her education beyond the age prescribed by the act for the payment of the family allowance.

These are the points I wanted to make with respect to family allowances, and also the question of the residence clause in the case of old age security payments. We will have something to say later about other angles of the problem.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, one of the disadvantages of sitting in this corner—

An hon. Member: There are a lot of them.

Mr. Patterson: —is that it seems as though we are more or less beyond the range of vision. I am placed in the position now that, since the first time I rose this afternoon, other hon. members have stolen my thunder.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Patterson: Nevertheless I am going to take two or three moments to refer to several matters in connection with the estimates. I was under the impression that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was very anxious to get these estimates through as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles: That was yesterday.

Mr. Patterson: However, I thought when he spoke in the debate this afternoon he invited an extension of the discussion, because certainly some of the remarks he made were not calculated to soothe the feelings of some of us over here and get us into a very happy frame of mind.

One of the statements he made was that he had no apologies whatsoever to make relative to the provisions that are at present made for the senior citizens of Canada. I do not think we are asking for any apologies, because I believe all of us are perfectly prepared to acknowledge the worth and value of the provisions as far as they go, and we do not want to minimize that fact in the least. He referred as well to the fact that we in Canada—I believe that was the content of the statement—are treating our senior citizens better than any other nation in the world.

I do not think that is the proper way to assess the situation. I do not think we should gauge it by what others are doing. I think the question should be, is it the best that we can do in Canada? With the wealth we have, with our productive capacity, with all the good things we enjoy, is this the best we can do for the senior citizens of our country?

I think if we were to look at it from that viewpoint we would be forced to say that we ought to be able to do better than that, whether or not any other nation is prepared to do so. As I have said, we are not asking for apologies but for recognition of the continuing responsibility of the government with reference to the treatment accorded our senior citizens. We are reminded, of course, that the value of our dollar today is far less than it was a few years ago; therefore I think we would be justified in suggesting to the minister, the department and the government that old age pensions be raised at least to the level of the value of money when they were first instituted.

The other thought I have in connection with the old age security payments has been mentioned by one or two other speakers this evening. I refer to the eligibility of recipients of security payments to receive the money even though they may reside outside of Canada. I placed on the record some time ago a letter received from a senior citizen who had lived in Canada for 40 years or more. He had made his contribution to this country. He had lived here and spent his money here. Now in the declining years of his life, and with not very many more left because he was quite an elderly gentleman, he wanted to return to England to spend his last few years with relatives over there. But because of the regulations as they now exist he could not enjoy the fellowship of his family in the closing years of his life. I suggest that this matter be again given consideration, or perhaps it is under consideration. If it is, I hope the decision will be favourable.

While I am on my feet I will just refer very briefly to the question of our blind friends. Like some of the other members of the house, perhaps most of them, I have received a great number of communications asking for support for the request that some provision be made for our blind friends with regard to guiding allowances. We are all aware, of course, of the additional expense incurred by the blind in this regard, and I think all that should be required is to bring it to the attention of the minister and ask that favourable consideration be given the request. It would be of great assistance to them and it would be an indication of the fact that we are concerned about these people and want to do the very best we can on their behalf.

As the minister said, every member in the house is concerned and interested in the well-being of all these people who are presently the recipients of allowances of various kinds. I believe that, in spite of what the minister said this afternoon, he would still like to do a little bit more for them. So we will just commend these matters to his attention and request that they be given serious, favourable consideration.

Mrs. Fairclough: There is a matter, Mr. Chairman, that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. It is really a three-cornered problem; that is, it concerns his department, the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. I refer to those people who come into this country with children and who eventually qualify for family allowances. I have had cases brought to my attention where people came into the country and were given little or no information with reference to their status for income tax purposes with regard to their children. Subsequently they found out that by reason of one or two months' family allowance payments which they received, they were placed in an unfavourable classification in so far as their statutory exemptions were concerned.

One such case which came to my notice recently concerned a very intelligent individual who recognized the problem and who said that had he been given the information which he understood was now available to new entrants to this country, he would have been in a position to make a more intelligent survey of his income for the year. Once having filed a return, he was no longer in a position to benefit by reason of the deductions which would otherwise have been available to him.

I realize that in so far as the minister's department is concerned, they merely pay the allowances. However, since this matter does concern the three departments, will the minister consult with his colleagues and make sure that those persons who come into the country with children, with the obvious intention of staying in this country, are given all the information that is available with reference to their statutory exemptions for the purpose of taxable income, and the advantages which will accrue to them if they handle these allowances in a certain way. The minister knows what I mean; that is, turning them back to the department.

Mr. Van Horne: I have recently been in communication with the manager of a group of hospitals in the province of Quebec for a religious institution. Apparently in one hospital there are 90 children of unknown parents who are being denied the family allowance merely because their parents are not known. I feel sure the minister would be prepared to recognize that these children are just as much entitled to family allowances as any other children in Canada, and that he would be pleased to take the necessary steps to make sure these children get their family allowances. In many cases these hospitals, these convents or orphanages, care for these children of unknown parents at a tremendous sacrifice to themselves because they have no other means of help apart from the charitable donations that are made to them. For these reasons I think it is most unjust that these children, through no fault of their own, are denied the family allowance.

While I am on my feet I should like to reiterate what I have often said before. If the cost of living in 1945 was taken as the basis for determining the amount of family allowances, then since the cost of living has almost doubled should not family allowances be increased accordingly? This applies not only to family allowances but to old age pensions and all the other pensions as well. When old age pensions came into effect at $20 per month they were sufficient for that time. This principle was recognized in that case, because the pensions were increased to $40, but they should now be over $60 a month and that principle should be carried into effect all along the line. We have failed to recognize the tremendous burden under which our families, especially those in the poorer areas of this country, are attempting to carry on. I assure you that northern New Brunswick is no exception. We have families with numerous children, and the family allowances that are paid go a long way toward helping these families care for and educate their children.

In 1945 and 1946, when family allowances were first introduced, the amount paid went a long way further than it does today, because the cost of living had doubled in the meantime. I feel sure the minister will recognize this. I think he has indicated on previous occasions in the past his willingness and his determination to do everything possible in this regard. However, the fact still remains that nothing is being done, and there is no indication of anything being done along that line at this session.

There is another factor I should like to bring out in regard to the invalids' pension. My stand on that is well known to the minister as well as other members in this house. One fact emerges now which may not have been made clear before. Invalids' pensions are being paid to people who are, as I have often said, completely and permanently disabled or so near dead that nothing else matters. In my riding in particular we have people who are temporarily crippled. We have people with both legs severed. We have other people who are paralysed but who can still use their hands or can talk. In some cases these invalids are fathers with numerous children, and they are being denied the invalids' pension because they do not come within this stupid definition that has been incorporated in the act. I am sure that as time goes on the minister will change these things, but the point is this. Here we are in 1956 at this session of parliament which is about to close—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Van Horne: —with no indication from the government that any steps will be taken to bring about these desirable and needed changes. I feel the minister may wish to comment on this.

Mr. McIvor: I do not think there is one of us in this house who would not like to see old age pensions, family allowances, and blind pensions increased as well as the pensions to handicapped persons. I rise to ask the minister what taxes he would increase in order to raise those pensions? The sales tax hits everybody. I wonder how many in the house would stand for an increase in sales tax; that is the thing that bothers me. I know we would like to have more. I should like to have more for the veterans and for the civil service pensioners, but the Minister of Finance and the minister in charge of this department must have some way of raising the money. That is my question; what taxes would he suggest increasing?

Mr. Zaplitny: I desire to say a word or two in connection with the Disabled Persons Act. I know that is the next item—

Mr. Martin: I just want to say that my hon. friend is quite right, but several other members have already discussed this. I would suggest that we might consider all the remaining items together if that would be the wish of hon. members, with the idea of closing the discussion as quickly as we can.

Mr. Zaplitny: That suits me fine.

The Deputy Chairman: The remainder of the items of the department will be lumped for the purposes of discussion. They will have to be put individually.

Mr. Goode: But not so far as civil defence is concerned.

Mr. Green: Am I to understand that that includes item 281, civil defence?

The Deputy Chairman: No; the remaining items of the department. You notice that the items are marked, "A, department", except 281, which is marked, "B, civil defence".

Mr. Green: Then the items we are now considering are 278, 279 and 280?

The Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Zaplitny: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting for quite some time to make some comments on the administration of the Disabled Persons Act. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has already raised the question but I would point out that it is not particularly in the act itself that the real difficulty lies but, in my opinion, it is in the regulations drawn up under the act. While I would like to approach this question objectively, I find it very difficult to approach objectively a measure of this kind. In my opinion it is a tight-fisted, penurious, miserable, mean kind of act. I do not know of anything on our statute books that is quite so mean as the regulations drawn up under the authority of this act. In order that it may be well known just what the regulations are with respect to determining disability, I should read them into the record. Section 2 (2) of the regulations reads as follows:

> For the purpose of the act and these regulations, a person shall be deemed to be totally and permanently disabled only when—

I ask hon. members to note the word "only". I continue:

> (a) the person is suffering from a major physiological, anatomical or psychological impairment, verified by objective medical findings;

That, of course, must have been drawn up by a Rhodes scholar. I do not think anyone else would have used such words as these. The regulations continue:

> (b) the impairment is likely to continue without substantial improvement during the lifetime of the person and is one to which the concept of cure cannot be applied; and
> (c) as a result of such impairment, the person is severely limited in activities pertaining to self-care and normal living, such as being
> (i) bedridden or chairfast,
> (ii) unable to leave home without being accompanied by another person,
> (iii) normally in need of care and supervision for one or more of such self-care activities as dressing, body hygiene or eating,
> (iv) unable to perform such routine activities as climbing a short stairway or walking a limited distance on a level surface, or
> (v) certified by a qualified physician to be under medical instructions to forbear from activities of the kind mentioned in subparagraph (iv).

Just to make sure, as if that were not enough, subsection 3 continues:

> Notwithstanding subsection (2), a person shall be deemed not to be totally and permanently disabled where, in respect of that person, a favourable rehabilitation prognosis is obtained, or approved therapeutic measures are recommended, by the provincial authority, and the requisite rehabilitation services or therapeutic measures are available.

Well, now, applying that section—

Mr. Knowles: How can you be alive and meet that?

Mr. Zaplitny: That is what the subsection says. When conditions such as these obtain you may as well apply the mirror test. In case the minister does not know what I mean by the mirror test, may I say it is a well-known trick of physicians. A mirror is placed at a person's mouth, and if it does not fog up the person is dead. They could just as well apply that test, because nothing short of that will let him in under this act.

I see these words, and I do not say this with any thought of malice to the doctors or to anyone in particular, but I say the time has certainly come when some action has to be taken. I could bring a whole file of letters, and no doubt many other members on both sides of the house could duplicate that effort. I could read from those letters of tales of woe until the minister would be crying for help before I could finish all the cases that are still hanging fire and those that have been turned down. That is not the kind of thing I want to do. I do not want to raise the question just for the purpose of talking about it.

The minister knows, and hon. members know, that I have raised this matter on a number of occasions, and so have other hon. members. We have been told that the matter is being given sympathetic consideration, or various degrees of consideration, but I say the time has come when something concrete and definite has to be done.

In my opinion, regulations that are as stiff and inflexible as the subsections I have referred to are not expressive of the spirit of the act that was passed by this house. Those of us who were anxious to get the legislation—and some of us raised this question 10 years ago in this house—certainly felt when this act was put through that we had reached the moment when we were going to be able to do something for the thousands of disabled persons in this country. It has been a terrible let-down; it has been a major disappointment to all concerned to find the regulations drawn up in such a way as if the authorities deliberately set out to exclude as many persons as possible, rather than to include as many as possible.

I know there are always marginal cases under any kind of an act and regulations. There is going to be a line drawn somewhere; but if we are going to have a line drawn, let us include inside the act as many of the doubtful or borderline cases as possible, and not exclude them from the provisions of the act. I think the time has come when the officials of the federal department should get in touch with the officials of the provincial governments concerned, because this is one of those fifty-fifty acts, and if not during this session—that is quite unlikely now—certainly at the very beginning of the next session of parliament the minister should be prepared to recommend changes to the house, or if it can be done by changing the regulations alone without changing the act, then have the regulations changed so the people who have been waiting—and many of them are pitiable cases—can be brought in.

I will not take the time of the committee to describe them; they are well known to all. They are really pitiable cases and certainly this committee, this parliament and this nation should hang their heads in shame if we cannot do a better job for our disabled persons than we have done up to this time. I hope this will be the last time it will be necessary to bring this matter up in the house.

Mr. Small: This has to do not with the various cases mentioned this afternoon and tonight; it has to do with the permissible income and regulations that govern most of them. I shall mention one case, but my remarks apply to them all. I appeal to the minister to see if something cannot be done about overhauling the regulations. This is the case of a constituent in my riding who is blind. It arises out of a review of his case by the Ontario department of public welfare, which administers the federal act. He was notified that his allowance was suspended as of January 1, 1956.

He is married and living with his sighted wife, and is permitted an income of $1,560 a year, including his allowance. His wife owns the house they live in through inheritance. She is also employed part-time and works to augment their income, and receives $20 a week when she works. Their assets are her home, as I previously stated, a bank account of $108.15 and bonds valued at $1,700. His income is $40 a month, or $480 a year blind persons allowance. Her income, as I stated, is $20 a week or $1,040 a year, if she is able to work a full year. The government insists that the assets be computed on an immediate government annuity rate, calculated at 5 per cent of the assessed value of the real property and charged against the income of the family.

This amounted to $226.50. The department informed him that his total annual income was $1,512.52, which would permit him a monthly allowance of $3.85. The department also notified him that they had overpaid him by $108.15, and that the $3.85 a month would be suspended and applied against his account of $108.15 until the debt was discharged or until he could refund the $108.15 and be reinstated.

The explanation for their action in assessing the value of their home was that a person who does not own property is required to pay rental, and this equalizes those who own their homes. In other words, those living in rented houses have to pay a certain amount of rent but the man who is living in his own home does not have to pay anything.

This is a means test, and I am sure it does not appeal to the house. I wish to point out that the person who owns a home has to keep that house up and pay taxes, which are probably more expensive than a rental would be. I think that should not be brought into this question of what is called putting on a means test. This individual's wife was assessed on the basis of having worked a whole year which she did not do, but that was not taken into account. Therefore the assessment was not a proper one.

I appeal to the minister to consider this question of the means test. I am not asking for an increase in the allowance, which has been touched on frequently here; but I do think the matter of the means test and permissible income should be re-examined and overhauled, because it does not give a fair deal in the situation I have described. I shall leave this matter with the minister and hope he will give it some attention.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Herridge: Is the minister going to speak?

Mr. Martin: A great many hon. members have asked questions, but I want to be fair to everybody.

Mr. Herridge: I have a question which would mean just one more for the minister to answer. Mr. Chairman, I have been mute on these estimates so far for three reasons. The first is that other hon. members of this group have given expression to my feelings and opinions, and I do not believe in repeating things too often. Second, I have a certain amount of sympathy for the minister; and third, I have been absent.

Mr. Fulton: Why did you come back?

Mr. Herridge: I must say I have been absent on very important business. I have been attending a committee that has been considering the health and welfare of the hon. members of this house. We spent a great deal of time this afternoon making sure that next session they will get ample fruit and vegetables and so on in the parliamentary restaurant.

I must say that most hon. members appreciate that I am a somewhat timid soul, and I have always found myself a bit flustered on these estimates though I do not know why. However, I am going to try to contain myself and prevent myself from panicking by keeping an eye on the minister and my future needs.

Mr. Fulton: Are you afraid you will get an old age pension before you finish?

Mr. Herridge: I rise, Mr. Chairman, to bring one matter to the attention of the minister. I have in my constituency a number of unfortunate disabled persons who have to use orthopedic appliances, and because Spokane is the nearest point where they can obtain the appliances or have them repaired they frequently obtain them there. I want to bring this matter to the minister's attention as I have been requested to do by the manufacturers of these appliances in Spokane and area, and by a number of representative organizations in my district.

Another reason for my mentioning the matter at this time is that I was absent in another committee when the estimates of the Department of National Revenue were under discussion, but these matters are related so I think I am justified in doing it at this point.

The people who wear these orthopedic appliances in some cases are not required to pay customs duty when they purchase them in Spokane or area and bring them into this country. In the case of corrective shoes and that sort of thing they have to be sent across the line in order to be repaired, and when they are returned in a repaired condition they are required to pay a duty on them. I also understand they are required to pay a sales tax on certain of these very necessary artificial aids. Generally speaking these people are in the low income brackets, and I am going to ask the minister if he will use his charm and ability and discuss this matter with the Minister of National Revenue, to see if we cannot avoid charging these people sales tax and customs duty on these very necessary articles.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on the question of the disability pension. I was very glad when this pension was written into law of this country, but I find that the difficulty lies in the interpretation of the words "permanently and totally disabled". I realize there must be a dividing line somewhere, which was set forth in the terms one hon. member discussed a short time ago and those terms are necessarily in some form of legal parlance to describe the disability.

I find that the trouble stems from two sources, and one is in making out the papers. The board that is looking over the papers should have an accurate picture of the condition of the patient. I have had some of these people come to me and I have examined their papers. I found they were answered simply "yes" or "no", and questions such as "Is he totally disabled" were answered with a bare "yes" and no reason was mentioned. In many cases the blame rests with members of my own profession. Simply because a doctor says an individual is disabled is no reason why the board should accept that bald statement.

This gives rise to a great deal of trouble. The forms are filled out with "yes" and "no" all the way down, and usually at the bottom of the form the words "totally disabled" are written in and then someone signs it. The board has to judge an applicant on the basis of the form, which I have already referred to as a penned picture produced by the applicant for the benefit of the board in order that they may pass judgment upon it.

I now come to the other point. The legislation is not very well understood with regard to the two terms "totally and permanently disabled". I am concerned about cases which perhaps could be called borderline. If you called this a helplessness allowance you could speak of these people as being those who are not able to dress themselves, go to the bathroom and up and down stairs and generally take care of themselves. They are absolutely helpless. There is the other type of case where people are totally and permanently disabled, yet they are able to do all those things.

Possibly I could tell the committee about one case I investigated out in the country, where a young man with a wife and one child had suffered a very serious heart condition. He is unable to do any gardening in the little garden they have because he can not hold a garden instrument for any length of time. He is unable to do any work at all. That man is totally and permanently disabled. Despite the fact that he made two applications he did not qualify for helplessness allowance because he was able to dress himself and go to his meals and that sort of thing. Nevertheless that man by any standard is totally and permanently disabled.

I appreciate that it is difficult to try to establish some form of examination or standard whereby these cases can be judged in order to arrive at a proper formula for a person who is totally and permanently disabled, but I have two suggestions to make. I would suggest that greater care should be taken in making out the application papers in order not to make it difficult for the board administering the act, and there should be a little more leeway given in the interpretation of the act. I do not think you should rewrite the qualifications. I thought this over for quite a long time, and I think the only way to remedy the situation is to give more leeway to take in that type of borderline case who cannot qualify for the helplessness allowance but who is totally and permanently disabled.

I would not abuse the act, because I think it is an excellent provision which has done a great deal of good, but that situation seems to be destroying its usefulness. I have no suggestion to make as to what should be written in as to the degree of helplessness necessary in a person. I think the only thing that can be done is to give a little more leeway to the board which considers applications. Where you have a set of papers of the "Yes" and "No" variety—sometimes I blame the doctors, because they are not good writers anyway—there should be a bit more leeway given. We should do the same as we do with the veterans and give the benefit of the doubt. Let the board go back for further information on the case. Possibly the person looking after old age pensions in the county could make a confidential report. You could get a confidential report from the reeve or mayor of the municipality, or you could get a letter from the clergyman or some well known person. The board could get further information in that way.

I know that at the present time there is a lot of trouble in connection with people who are totally disabled but who do not seem to come within the act as it is written at the present time. I suggest that there be further investigation in such cases, and that the board be given power to investigate and also be given a little more leeway to bring in those cases which are really totally and permanently disabled but who do not qualify by reason of being helpless.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, I shall attempt to deal with all the questions that have been asked. I want to thank my hon. friend very much for the helpful contribution he has just made. He has put his finger directly and precisely on the difficulty we have had. I suppose he was able to do that because as a physician he knows the difficulty of arriving at a definition in the particular situation that confronts us. Other countries having this type of legislation have had the same difficulties.

My hon. friend will recall that during the winter we had a meeting of the medical examining boards which was most fruitful. As a result there has been some relaxation in the constant and continuous feature, and as a result since that time there has been an increase of almost 25 per cent in the number of applications granted. All the provinces without exception felt that the first year's experience was important, and we are now assessing the results since the wider interpretation with which all medical counsellors agree.

We are having a meeting of the board in the fall, when we will take a further look at it. I do not know whether my hon. friend has been talking to my deputy minister, but he likely has, and he will realize that their ideas on this matter are very close, and mine also are very strong. This is particularly true in the case of mentally deficient people. Of these cases now being covered I would say that of the 25 per cent perhaps 12 per cent are mentally deficient cases, which I thought would be included from the beginning but which now represent the bulk of those who are enjoying the benefits of the liberalizing policy or the new interpretation which is being given.

I am sure that all hon. members will be interested in learning that since I spoke in this house we have put another 2800 persons on the disability allowance roll, which represents about 800 more than I anticipated would be the case when the act was first discussed. I think the discussion tonight on this particular subject has been most useful, and I am sure it will help those in the provinces and here who have to administer what the hon. member from Lanark has referred to as a very good act and one which we are all anxious to see work out with great satisfaction.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra raised a number of questions. If I did not rise earlier it was not out of disrespect but because I was hoping to deal with all these things collectively. The hon. member raised the question of three months' absence in the case of family allowances and three months' absence in the case of old age security. With regard to three months' absence in the case of family allowances, and having in mind the particular example he mentioned of the Kitsilano boys' band, I must say I was struck with what he said. When we come to look at the regulations I shall certainly keep that in mind. It does seem to me that a child who goes on a journey like that is temporarily absent, and in spirit should not be regarded as being absent. I do not want to make any final commitment, but I shall look at the matter closely.

With regard to the three months' absence in the case of old age security I must say that I do not share my hon. friend's views. However, I am prepared to look at that again, as I have indicated elsewhere I would do. The reason I am prepared to do that is because of the situation the hon. member mentioned of the peninsula adjacent to Vancouver on which people reside. That may create a special situation. All I would want to say now is that these cases should be looked into, and I assure my hon. friend that I will do that.

The three months' rule is an important rule, as I am sure my hon. friend would realize if he were administering the act. The possibility of abuse is very great, but one ought to take into account the fact that in part this is a contributory scheme. I shall be glad, as I am always, to look into these things, particularly at the present time.

My hon. friend referred to the fact that old age pensioners could not qualify under the National Housing Act. Of course that is something that would come under that act, but I am a little surprised that that is the situation. I know of several projects which have been built under the National Housing Act which are occupied by older people.

Mr. Green: They were built by limited dividend corporations.

Mr. Martin: That may be. I shall note carefully what my hon. friend has said and check with my colleague the Minister of Public Works.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South gave me some pretty good advice, which he always does. I want to assure him that notwithstanding the fact I have gone into the situation and notwithstanding my absences elsewhere—with him, by the way—I am going to take a big brush and I assure him that one of the first things I will do tomorrow is to get the hon. member and see whether or not there is some way to deal with this situation.

Mr. Knowles: No wonder there was trouble, with both of you out of the country at the same time.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question which involves collaboration with the Minister of National Revenue. I assure him that I shall see that this is done forthwith.

The hon. member for Hamilton West asked me a question that involves consultation with the Minister of National Revenue, and that I shall certainly take up with him, in respect of family allowance recipients who, not having the benefit of the family allowance for the first year, find themselves affected under certain sections of the Income Tax Act. I want to thank the hon. member for Hamilton West particularly for the reference she made to the two distinguished servants of my department, the two ladies who sit in front of me tonight, who are the first female jewels of the government service to sit on the floor at the same time.

The hon. member for Danforth has brought up a question involving income ceilings. I wonder whether he and I could have a talk about that either tonight or tomorrow and see if there is not some way out of this situation. I think I can say that tonight's discussion has been of very great value, and I am sure it has produced some very good results.

Mr. Green: Could I ask one question arising out of the minister's answer? Has an attempt ever been made to negotiate a reciprocal treaty with the United Kingdom concerning payments to the senior citizens who move from one country to the other?

Mr. Martin: I forgot that. I apologize to my hon. friend. I do not think I forgot many things in my roving picture. We have thought of that a good deal and we have had discussions with the authorities in the United Kingdom. One of our officials was there quite recently at a conference when this matter was discussed. There are great difficulties because of the difference between the various schemes, but I can assure my hon. friend that the matter is receiving our attention. As a matter of fact one of our officials is going next week to a conference in the United States to see whether or not any possibility exists there. In any event, the matter is being canvassed and studiously pursued.

Mr. Barnett: At the suggestion of the minister I agreed last night to defer bringing forward for a few minutes a matter which I had made a pledge to myself that I would bring up some time during this current session. I refer to bringing forward for consideration the need for the guiding allowance without a means test for the blind persons of Canada. I have not previously raised this question during the session except on one occasion on the orders of the day, when I asked whether the minister intended at this session to bring in legislation to provide for this measure. The minister at that time said, in one of his characteristic replies, as recorded on page 4550 of Hansard:

> My hon. friend knows these matters are always under consideration. Much will depend upon the progress of debate here and further consideration.

I do not know what the minister's views are about the progress of debate since that time, or exactly what was involved in that further consideration. However, I recognize that as a result of statements made by the Prime Minister when questions have been asked as to the intentions of the government with regard to bringing forward further legislation this session, it is evident that it is not likely that the minister will have the opportunity of bringing in this legislation, which I am sure he would really like to be doing.

As most members may perhaps be aware from some publicity that has been circulated, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the Canadian Council of the Blind have launched a joint appeal for this one specific improvement in the blind persons legislation in Canada. One of the reasons I in particular wanted to say a few words on this was that I had an opportunity and privilege last fall, on that particular occasion at least, that was enjoyed by no other member of this house, and that was to be able for a few hours one evening to sit in on the national convention of the Canadian Council of the Blind and hear the proceedings at that convention which was being held in Victoria, which is no great distance from my own home.

I should like to say that if on other occasions that convention is being held in some other parts of the country, any hon. member of this house would find it well worth his while to sit in for a time on that convention. I found it rather an inspiring experience to see a convention being conducted by people who are not able to enjoy the privilege of being able to see one another. The chairman appeared to recognize every delegate by his voice, and the convention was being conducted in an orderly and, in fact, in a very ordinary manner. I must say that I was tremendously impressed by the courage of those people who were there. Yet at the same time it was brought home to me, in a manner in which it had not been before, what a disability people who have not the benefit of sight are facing in all the ordinary things that most of us take for granted as we go about our daily business.

For that reason, as I said at the outset of my remarks, I made a pledge to myself—I certainly did not make it to anyone there—that at some time during this session I would make some reference to the need for this particular legislation.

Our discussion during the course of this evening, and particularly since we have had several items under joint discussion, has ranged over rather a wide field, to the need for various forms of pensions and help to those who are partially or completely unable to help themselves, but I feel that this discussion certainly would not have been complete without some reference having been made to what I consider to be a very important case of needed legislation which, in terms of some of the legislation we have had under discussion, would not be very expensive.

Mr. Castleden: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the disability pensions. In recent weeks I ran across a case in my constituency of a lady who was confined to a wheel chair, badly crippled and unable to do even her housework. She had a son about 14 going to school; her husband was working. She was denied the disability pension. Her neighbour, receiving the disability pension, is able to do her housework, does her garden work and comes and visits her quite frequently. My question is, to whom should I appeal for a review of the case? This is a 50-50 proposition between the provincial and federal governments.

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend will let me have the case I shall see that it is reviewed at once.

Mr. Castleden: I shall be glad to let him have it. I did not investigate it fully, but is there any board to which such people can appeal for a review of the case? Is it provincial or federal?

Mr. Martin: The case is examined by a panel of doctors, one representing the provincial and one representing the federal government. Where there is a difference of opinion, a third doctor not in the government service is asked for his opinion. If my hon. friend will let me have the case I shall see that it is expedited and dealt with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Castleden: I thank the minister for that assurance. Should that appeal be made to the provincial authorities?

Mr. Martin: Yes, to the provincial authorities.

Mr. Castleden: But ordinarily that is where a person should go in order to draw the attention of the officers to what is going on?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, it grieves me to spoil the minister's plans for tonight by rising at this late hour, but I have endeavoured to give all other hon. members an opportunity to express their views and offer their suggestions before I undertook to deal with the very important question of old age pensions. We had a good deal of talk about the difficulties with which the old age pensioners are confronted, and then the hon. member for Fort William rose and with a sort of sweep of his hand just wiped out all possibilities of doing anything for these unhappy people by asking what particular tax we would levy in order to raise the money to give old age pensioners the kind of provision to which they surely are entitled.

I should like to refer to the document to which the hon. member for Mackenzie referred last night in what I considered to be a good speech facing facts and plenty of them. I should like to recall to the house that the hon. member referred to the findings of the welfare council of greater Winnipeg. That is not an organization that can be laughed off too easily. The welfare council of greater Winnipeg is a responsible organization of intelligent Canadians facing facts. This is what the hon. member for Mackenzie told us, based upon what we find on page 16 of a work prepared by this same welfare council of greater Winnipeg called "Age and Opportunity." He gave us the following requirements, according to that organization, for an old age pensioner: rent, $20 a month; food, $30 a month; clothing, $10 a month; church, $2 a month; medical, $3 a month; memberships, hobbies, $5 a month; transportation, $4.50 a month; incidentals, $5 a month; laundry, $2 a month, making a total of $83.50, where that person is today getting the magnificent sum of $40 a month.

There is a set of conditions there, Mr. Chairman, which I do not think this house can afford to neglect on this occasion. The minister has told us that what would be required would be a tremendous additional amount of money, and we will agree. But the thing we persist in overlooking in nearly every case is that the goods necessary to provide these needs are right here in Canada. The means of producing them are all right here in Canada, but these goods are not being produced because they are not being bought or they are going without being sold because people have not the money to buy them. That is going on from coast to coast in this nation. We do not seem to be impressed by that fact.

The last time I spoke in this house I pointed out the fact that if the Indians ranging our plains 150 years ago had plenty of buffalo, fish, firewood, fruit on the hills and a few other things, then all Indians were able to get all they needed of those things. It took the white man to come along and find out that the more of these things you produced the poorer you were; the more buffalo you had, the more fish you had, the more wood you had, the more fruit you had, the less you were able to enjoy.

I know that to a great many members this sounds very unrealistic, but why that should be the case is beyond my comprehension.

Surely it ought to be evident that for any nation which is producing $28 billion worth of goods to say that we cannot provide the old age pensioners with $83.50 a month worth of these goods is for us to acknowledge absolute intellectual bankruptcy.

The question is, what can we do about it? I am not prepared to grant there is nothing we can do about this matter. I am not prepared to grant that the money we use to provide these goods must be ground out of an overtaxed people, not by any manner of means. All I wish to do in the minute or two remaining is to point out a bit of information appearing on page 8 of a document prepared by the Bank of Canada entitled "The Story of Canada's Currency", which was printed for the Bank of Canada in 1955. On page 8 of the document the writer tells us about the Hudson's Bay Company tokens. These Hudson's Bay tokens were shaped like coins and made of some sort of compound, of the nature of which I am not just sure. I should like to refer to these particular words:

> These Hudson's Bay Company tokens represented the unit of currency used in the fur trade for many decades. The largest—one "made-beaver"—was equal in value to the skin of an adult male beaver in prime condition. Smaller sizes represented one half, one quarter and one eighth made-beaver. Before these brass tokens came into use, a made-beaver was represented by a stick, a porcupine quill, an ivory disc, a musket ball or anything else agreed upon by trader and trapper.

Note these words particularly.

> The trapper would be handed a number of the units agreed upon, representing the value of his catch, and with these would make his purchases from the store. The tokens were designed by George Simpson McTavish of Albany Fort in 1854.

In the area where I grew up as a small boy the merchants used to use a local currency which they called scrip. Units of scrip were used by them to pay people for produce like butter, eggs and other things of that kind. Then the scrip circulated in the communities, sometimes for months, helping to buy and sell goods. I will not say anything more along this line at the present time, but I think what I have already said indicates how with good will and a determination to do something the provinces and the dominion and the municipalities of the dominion can get together and work out a system whereby our elderly people can buy the goods they need to live on, at least to the extent of $83.50 a month.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Blackmore: No. I thought I made that quite clear. I want to go on with this talk tomorrow.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. Martin: I wonder whether my hon. friend would do me the honour of letting me have a copy of a publication from which he read, which interested me very greatly. It was not the Bank of Canada one, but the other one. If my hon. friend could go on for a few more minutes we might conclude the item. I want him to know that I have followed what he has said with great interest. I know he is very sincere, and I want him to know that what he says is being received by me with the care with which he would want me to receive it.

Mr. Blackmore: The important thing, of course, is not that "it will be considered with care" but that something shall be done. There are just thousands and thousands of old age pensioners in Canada today, who cannot live on the pension. They have to go out and beg for the needs of life in addition to the $40 on which they are trying to live.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, accepting the motion to adjourn, may I suggest another course of action for the moment. Some hon. members in the house would like to make their remarks on the C.B.C. tonight if that were at all possible. I wonder if the committee would agree to sit while the minister makes his statement and one other member speaks after that. The hon. member cannot be here tomorrow. Then tomorrow we shall continue with this particular debate.

Mr. Blackmore: We will adjourn the C.B.C. discussion also, so that first of all we will call this discussion and finish it and then go on with the discussion of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Harris: Quite so.

Mr. Blackmore: So far as I am concerned that is thoroughly satisfactory.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed then, that resolution 278 stands, by agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin: Could we pass the other ones and let that one stand?

The Deputy Chairman: Resolution No. 54, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Harris: I think it was understood that we had passed resolutions Nos. 278 and 279 and we had stopped at 280.

Mr. Martin: No, we were letting 279 and 280 carry.

Mr. Green: Perhaps the minister did not understand that we were considering three of these items at one time, 278, 279 and 280.

Mr. Blackmore: And those three are being stood?

Mr. Martin: No, the old age security one stands, 278.

The Deputy Chairman: If the committee will permit me, I think I have the picture. Resolution No. 278 which is now before the committee and upon which the discussion of these other items has taken place, is to stand. The remaining resolutions under this department, except civil defence, are to be called now and passed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item 278 stands.

Items 279 and 280 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: May I point out to the committee that we have still before us items 278 and 281, and we are now calling resolution 54, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

54. To provide for the requirements of the sound broadcasting service (to amount formerly authorized by Chap. 32, R.S.), $6,250,000.

Mr. McCann: Some few days ago, Mr. Chairman, I tabled the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the year ending March 31, 1956. In the discussion of these estimates I thought it would be of advantage to the house to have that report before hon. members so they might have the operations of the C.B.C. reviewed up to that time. We all understand very well that there is presently in existence, and has been for some time, a commission known as the Fowler commission. Its terms of reference were to review the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, both as to sound radio and television. I think under the circumstances, since that commission has not held all its sittings nor has it a report ready, but that report will be made some time before the next session of parliament, perhaps it might be only fair if we were to refrain from discussing many of the briefs and representations which have been made to the commission so far.

I propose at the beginning of this debate to give a short review with reference to the annual report for the year ended March, 1956, in order that we may have on Hansard a record of the activities of this organization. In its annual report the C.B.C. points out that the continued extension of television coverage and development of the national program service have put an increasingly heavy load on the corporation. The report estimates that for the year which ended last March 31, more than 2 million homes were equipped with television receivers and that television service had been brought within the reach of 80 per cent of the population. By that date the English language service on 6 C.B.C. and 22 privately owned stations was available to 9 million English speaking people. The French service, on two C.B.C. and three private stations, has been available to some 4 million French speaking people.

The wide development both of programs and coverage in the course of the year meant that the rate of operation and expenditures was much higher at the end of the period than at the beginning. The report notes that seven new stations began operations in 1955-56. They were St. John's, Newfoundland; Jonquiere, Quebec; Ottawa; Wingham, Ontario; Barrie, Ontario; North Bay, Ontario; and Lethbridge, Alberta. This brought to 33, 8 C.B.C. and 25 privately owned, the number of television stations operating and affiliated with C.B.C. networks. At the same time, service to the 17 stations which began operation in 1954-55 was maintained for the first full year.

The C.B.C.'s national program service, amounting to between 40 and 45 hours per week in English and between 35 and 40 hours a week in French, was developed for distribution to areas served by C.B.C. stations and to other communities through the co-operation of privately owned affiliates. As of March, 1956, over 55 per cent of the English service and more than 85 per cent of the French was Canadian-produced. At the same time, the report says, the work of the sound broadcasting system was undiminished on the three radio networks, trans-Canada, French and dominion, which broadcast a combined total of 22,356 hours. Some indication of the success of these efforts revealed itself at the annual exhibition of radio and television at Columbus, Ohio, where the C.B.C. again won and shared more awards than any other network.

In television, the 25 privately owned affiliated stations operating at the end of the fiscal year were taking a large proportion of the national television program service. This meant that C.B.C. was making available to each of the English language stations about 100,000 feet of filmed programs each week, and 85,000 feet to the French language stations. The average cost of making these programs available to each private station is approximately $100,000 per year, according to the estimate in the report.

In the realm of programming, C.B.C. reports that once again it was successful at the annual American exhibition of educational radio and television programs, where programs produced by the corporation won six first awards and five honourable mentions. The report also notes that a broadcast called "Birds of the Forest" won the Italian press association prize for documentary radio programs at an exhibition festival in Europe. Several programs are mentioned that are examples of one of C.B.C.'s important functions, the development and recognition of talent. In television "The Concert Hour", as it appears on the English television network, provided an example of what one program can mean in terms of employment. During the 1955-56 season the program provided 1,405 individual engagements or jobs. The greater part of this, 1,004 engagements, represents the engagements required to provide an orchestra for the season. The orchestral performers were all Canadian residents, as well as 22 of the 27 conductors, 61 of the 74 singers, and 26 of the 38 instrumental soloists who appeared during the season.

The C.B.C.'s annual report begins its section on variety programs with the statement that variety continued to come into its own on Canadian television, and that the new opportunities opened up by the medium for this type of entertainment had begun to produce stars of national stature. This is followed by a comment to the effect that the fact some Canadian stars have left to accept work with networks in other countries is welcomed as an indication of this country's maturity in this field.

Later in the report on the variety programming the C.B.C. notes that "Music Hall" on the French television network, an hour-long Sunday night show, succeeded in enlarging its considerable audience despite the fact that it was on at the same time as another famous show, the Ed Sullivan show, on the English network.

The section of the report on drama pointed out the peculiar Canadian institution known as "The Plouffe Family". This is a television extension of the original radio series, written by that well-known author Roger Lemelin. The same cast presents the program on both the C.B.C.'s French and English television networks.

Drama contributed to the success of the Sunday evening series called "Folio", which won an award at the radio and television exhibition at Columbus for its "intelligent and skilful integration of education and entertainment values".

The parallel series in terms of drama on the French television network was "Téléthéâtre" which presented a season made up of such classical plays as "Le Barbier de Seville" by Beaumarchais and "La Double Inconstance" by Marivaux, mixed with outstanding contemporary works.

The C.B.C. reports that during 1955-56 it paid out approximately $10,600,000 for talent, more than 70 per cent of it in direct fees to artists, musicians, singers and actors and nearly $3,000,000 for scripts, performing rights, music and musical arrangements. Of the total of $10,600,000 paid out for talent by C.B.C. in 1955-56, about $6,350,000 was for television talent, while radio talent cost about $4,250,000, including some $98,000 spent by the international service.

These figures do not include a wide range of other talented personnel on the C.B.C.'s regular staff, a range which takes in such creative workers as announcers, producers, program research editors, scenic, graphic and costume designers, news writers, film editors, cameramen and commentators.

Throughout the year a total of 11,135 performers of all types other than those employed regularly on the C.B.C. staff participated in the corporation's programming. Apart from the regular C.B.C. musical groups, the corporation paid more than $150,000 to major Canadian symphony orchestras for broadcasting rights.

The C.B.C. explains that the script department, organized last year, devotes its efforts to the development of improved and continuing relationships with writers. Its section of the report points out that while just over 30 per cent of the C.B.C., produced television plays were written by Canadians in 1955, the situation has improved to the point where it seems likely that in 1956 well over 50 per cent of television dramas will be written by Canadians.

The script bureau of the French network, although it was organized only three months before the end of the fiscal year, reports that it analysed 56 scripts by Canadian authors, nearly all of them newcomers to the field, and drew the attention of producers to ten unpublished works scheduled for performance on television in future months. The French network script organization is receiving manuscripts at the rate of eight or ten a week.

Reporting on the Wednesday night series, one of the examples the report gives is "Architects of Modern Thought," which discussed the influence and ideas of men prominent among world thinkers. Response to this feature was such that C.B.C. published a booklet containing all the talks to fulfil requests from listeners. The report also notes a presentation on the life and times of Joseph Howe presented in two one-and-one-half hour broadcasts on consecutive Wednesday nights. A similar presentation about Sir John A. Macdonald was repeated from a previous season.

Under the heading "Special Programs", the report notes "Christmas Almanac", a five-and-three-quarter hours presentation on Christmas day of a type never before attempted. It was designed to use radio as a means of communication that can bring an entire country together on a special occasion. The mail response showed that many people were impressed by the sense of unity that emerged.

In this same section C.B.C. reports that special coverage of the International boy scout jamboree at Niagara-on-the-Lake was provided by C.B.C. radio and television, and by the C.B.C. international service. Television coverage included production of three inserts for such American series as N.B.C.'s 'Wide, Wide World" and the C.B.S. series, "Let's Take a Trip". During the 1955-56 fiscal year there was also the production of last year's Shakespearean festival at Stratford for "Wide, Wide World".

On the subject of news, the C.B.C. reports that on January 1, 1956, the C.B.C. news service put out its 5,579th national news bulletin in both English and French, marking its 15th anniversary. In radio, the news service prepares 70 newscasts each day from newsrooms in St. John's, Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

During the year television news continued to expand. Now in its fourth year, it produces 13 newscasts each day based on the world-wide collection facilities of the Canadian Press, British United Press, Reuters, Associated Press, United Press and Agence France Presse. C.B.C. reports progress this past year in the development of a nation-wide collection and exchange of spot news-film with seven private stations participating along with the C.B.C. Walter Blackburn, of CFPL and CFPL-TV in London was the first chairman of the Canadian television news film cooperative. Under this arrangement stations cover events in their own areas and, in return, receive 10 minutes of film daily, including C.B.C.'s foreign coverage, for use in their own newscasts.

In widening coverage abroad, negotiations for exchange arrangements were opened with the Australian Broadcasting Corporation, which is scheduled to start T.V. this fall, and an exchange has already started with the Independent television news in England. These supplement agreements with the British Broadcasting Corporation, and with the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System in the United States. Free-lance cameramen gave increasingly better service on Canadian events, which continued to occupy about half of television newscasts.

C.B.C. reports that the talks associated with radio's national news bulletin and news roundup have built up a loyal and appreciative audience. In this section it notes that talks are the simplest and most direct method of communicating the ideas and experiences of individuals, and also of bringing about an exchange of opinion between people many miles apart.

The talks and public affairs section of the report is the longest in the section devoted to programs, and it is in this area that the report notes the greatest number of individual program contributions to the networks from all production points across the country. It is in the area of public affairs that the report mentions two weekly series prepared by the national film board in French, "Regards sur le Canada" and "Passe-partout", and two in English, "Perspective" and "Window on Canada".

In the area described as women's interests, the C.B.C. reports the inauguration of a parallel to radio's "Trans-Canada Matinee" on television. It is a daily program called "Open House". On the French television network the type of viewing provided by "Open House" was presented on several weekly telecasts: "Rêve, réalité," "La Cuisine de la bonne humeur", "Pour elle" and "Michelle Tysseyre".

The report says radio school broadcasts attracted larger audiences than ever before. There was a larger demand for the school broadcast manual for teachers, with 72,000 being distributed for the 1955-56 school year. C.B.C. says that the provincial departments of education also report an increase in the size of the school broadcast audience. C.B.C. explains that the national advisory council on school broadcasting has been actively exploring the classroom potential of television. As a result of encouraging response from teachers as the result of previous experimental series, C.B.C.'s school broadcast department was busy at the end of the fiscal year preparing a further experimental classroom television series to go on the air very shortly.

C.B.C. reported that during its 15th season "Radio-College", which was awarded the Henry Marshall Tory trophy for 1955, maintained its reputation as a university of the air. Four new chronicles on music, famous art institutions throughout the world and religion were added to the previous six. The series on art institutions was produced by the B.B.C. and the French and Italian broadcasting system.

On December 8, 1955 the oldest of the radio farm families associated with the regional farm broadcasts presented each day celebrated their four thousandth broadcast, with the original cast still intact. This was the Craigs of the Ontario farm broadcast. Similar radio families are associated with the regional farm programs in British Columbia, the prairies, and the maritimes.

C.B.C. reports that 1955-56 saw the extension of farm television to all regions. At the beginning of the year the Ontario region of the C.B.C. had its weekly edition of "Country Calendar" and the Vancouver and prairie editions had just got on the air. Since then the Winnipeg show has been extended to a non-connected network of five television affiliates across the prairies; maritime and Newfoundland editions have been initiated in Halifax, and "Les Travaux et les Jours", the French language version, has been started from Montreal.

The section of the report on children's programs states that careful attention is being given to programming for television because of the particular impact which television has on very young people. It reports a large extension in the provision of programming for children, and lists programs covering a variety of interests for youngsters of all ages, scheduled for the most part between 4.30 and 6.00 in the afternoon.

In the area of religious broadcasting the C.B.C. reports attempts to try out new forms of programming for those who cannot be reached through the broadcasting of church services. One example in radio was "The Question Box", on which a panel of clergymen and lay people discussed questions submitted by listeners.

On television, plays were commissioned to mark Thanksgiving, Christmas and holy week.

On the French networks Sunday high mass was televised every Sunday instead of once a month as was done previously. And on radio, French speaking audiences were able to hear sermons or talks of a topical nature including some speeches by His Holiness the Pope, a talk by Cardinal Feltin, Archbishop of Paris, several addresses by Cardinal Leger and addresses given in the diocese by Abbe Pierre.

The section of the C.B.C. report dealing with sports broadcasts refers to coverage of regular events such as the national hockey league, football games in the western conferences and the big four and annual tournaments in golf, track and field, sculling, and so on. There were also such individual events as coverage of Marilyn Bell's English channel swim and Cliff Lumsden's victory in the marathon at the Canadian National Exhibition, radio and television coverage of the Davis cup elimination rounds, and the winter olympics at Cortina D'Ampezzo in Italy.

The engineering section of the report says that during the year an appreciable amount of work was done to improve existing facilities and provide new equipment. At Halifax the television transmitter building was completed on Geizer hill and a new four-storey television studio building neared completion. New television and sound studios were built in Toronto. The second C.B.C.-T.V. French language transmitter went into operation in Ottawa as station CBOFT, to serve the French speaking population in the Ottawa valley, and the combined studio-transmitter building in Ottawa went into service. The English language transmitter for CBOT went over to the permanent antenna at the same time.

In Montreal an audience-participation studio was provided, and a sound studio was converted to a two-camera television studio to cope with the increase in the number of live French language productions originating in Montreal.

The report notes that construction was started in both Toronto and Montreal of new buildings which will house large television and associated service areas. Meanwhile plans were completed to raise both CBFT, Montreal and CBLT, Toronto, to maximum power. New equipment was provided at various locations. A second film camera chain and a third mobile unit camera chain were added at Vancouver, and a second film camera chain was added at Winnipeg. In radio, improved transmitters replaced obsolete equipment at St. John's, Newfoundland, Sydney, Nova Scotia, Quebec city and Ottawa. The fifty-fourth of the C.B.C.'s low-power relay transmitters—unattended installations bringing radio service economically to remote areas—went into operation at Grand Falls.

The report explains that with the tremendous expansion in television more stress was placed on personnel training. The corporation has full-time technical instructors on the establishment at Toronto, Montreal and Halifax whose function is to instruct new staff in television operations and the more experienced staff in improved techniques. C.B.C. experts have visited a number of privately owned stations at such points as Edmonton, Lethbridge, North Bay, Barrie and Moncton, instructing both technical and program staffs in the various phases of television operations.

The corporation has also made available technical bulletins and manuals to these stations. In addition, courses have been held both in Toronto and Montreal which were attended by members of the staffs of Canadian National Telegraphs, Canadian Pacific Communications, and the Bell Telephone Company, as well as by C.B.C. personnel.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to put on the record a brief summary of the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the year ending March, 1956. In doing so I feel it will make a basis for discussion. Later on the debate it is my intention, with reference to the appropriations which we wish to have passed on by parliament, to give in some detail the amount of money that is to be spent and the purposes for which it is to be spent.

However, the hon. member for Eglinton, who has usually acted in the capacity of critic of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's activities is, I think, probably eager to go to his native city tonight, and for that reason I am very happy to give him the opportunity to enter the debate and I shall defer what I have to say further until a later time.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister. There are eight items before the committee in relation to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It has been our practice in other years to take the group of items pertaining to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in order that there might be an ample discussion of general policy in relation to the corporation, and I presume that would meet with the approval of the committee now.

The first of the items is No. 54, a grant of $6,250,000. The second is a statutory item estimated at $17 million, the proceeds of the excise tax both on radio receiving sets and tubes and on television receiving sets and tubes. Items 55 and 56 are for the short-wave broadcasting. Item No. 605 of the supplementary estimates is an item of $12 million, a grant to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Items 606 and 607 are supplementary items in relation to the international short wave service. Those seven items total $37,263,976.

There is an eighth item providing for a supplementary grant to the Fowler royal commission on broadcasting of $170,920. Of those eight items those pertaining to the domestic operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation alone total $35¼ million.

This year we have had no committee of the house reviewing the operations and the report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Early in the session I asked that these particular items of the estimates should be referred to the committee on estimates. That request was refused. I then asked the Prime Minister if the government would agree to the setting up of a special committee on radio broadcasting and television similar to that which was set up during the 1955 session. The Prime Minister rejected that request because the royal commission was sitting. Those requests and answers are to be found at page 2128 of Hansard for March 14 of this session.

I regret that we have not had a committee where these matters could be reviewed in greater detail. It is an important responsibility that parliament takes in voting these large sums of money for any purpose, not the least of all in relation to such important matters as radio broadcasting and television. Whether or not the royal commission is sitting, parliament is still called upon to vote substantial sums of money. For my part I regret that the government denied the opportunity for the detailed type of scrutiny which is possible in committee, and which in my opinion is necessary in the public interest. The direct contact between parliamentary committees and the officials of the corporation is, I think, good for both.

It was on July 26, 1955, a year ago, that in response to repeated requests from the opposition the Minister of National Revenue announced that the government intended to appoint a royal commission to review policy in general in relation to radio broadcasting and television. The commission was not actually appointed and set up by the government until December 2 and did not commence its public hearings until April last. I have expressed regret before at the delay in the appointment of the commission and the commencement of its very important work. I do not intend to comment upon the hearings as such, but shall content myself with observing that we look forward with great interest to receiving the report of this royal commission. The minister has indicated in his remarks that it is expected the report will be available at the next session for review here, and I trust that the house will have a fruitful discussion upon it and its recommendations at that time.

In the meantime let me state—I am putting it briefly under the circumstances—that we of Her Majesty's loyal opposition assert the views that we have set forth in the house on previous occasions in regard to the appointment of an independent regulatory tribunal in the public interest to regulate all forms of radio broadcasting in Canada. I do not need to repeat but I reassert the views which were expressed by us in the debate on July 26, 1955, as found at page 6842 of Hansard.

Similarly the views that we have expressed in regard to government policy in relation to the licensing of stations for television remain as we set them forth a year ago on the same date, to be found at page 6844 of Hansard. We deplore this policy of local monopoly in television broadcasting. We think it has delayed the development of Canadian television and has denied alike to C.B.C. television stations and privately owned stations the benefits and stimulation of Canadian competition. We all know that

United States competition along the full length of the Canadian border has continued.

We of the official opposition are not alone in this view. On September 26, 1954, there was a conference of the Ontario young Liberal association at Vineland. A press report of that meeting in the Globe and Mail of September 27 of that year reads as follows:

> Ontario's young Liberals have called on the federal government to revise its policy on television and permit establishment of private TV stations in cities now under C.B.C. monopoly.
> During debate on TV—one of the warmest issues to face their three-day annual convention—Ben Nobleman of Toronto-Spadina charged that "a lot of misfits in high positions" in C.B.C. television were ruining it. The present monopoly arrangement should be ended and a house cleaning undertaken to remove undesirable elements, he said.
> In this case the Liberal party would show that it believes in free enterprise, Mr. Nobleman contended. There was competition in radio and newspaper fields and it should be extended to television, which has had time to prove itself.
> Keith Davey of Toronto-Eglinton said the C.B.C. monopoly in certain Canadian cities was "rather vicious". He accused the C.B.C. of being asleep at the switch during Marilyn Bell's swim across lake Ontario.
> A resolution asking the policy change passed after a standing vote.

Just as an example, may I point out that recently the C.B.C. has transferred from channel 9 to channel 6 its station CBLT at Toronto, which gives service to an increased number of viewers. However, this transfer leaves the vacated channel exposed to the danger of being occupied by a United States station. The changing of the antenna on the top of the tower in Toronto is costly, amounting to $190,000. But I am drawing attention to the fact that the channel is vacant, which I think is regrettable when there are those who for years have been seeking to be licensed to occupy that channel and to give service to that area. United States competition in that area comes from several stations and is very keen, and I think it is time there was some Canadian competition permitted. I therefore say that we reassert the views we have always expressed in opposition to the government policy of local monopoly in television.

I want to say a word about the financial operations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as indicated in the report which came to hand just a few days ago. I have mentioned that in these various items of the estimates the C.B.C. is asking parliament to provide $35¼ million for its domestic services. This is a record amount to be provided by parliament in any one year.

In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956—here I am examining the actual operations of last year—the C.B.C. showed an excess of income over expenses before providing for depreciation of $282,062 for radio and $87,828 for television, or a total of $369,890. In the report the usual deduction is made as a provision for depreciation in the amount of $568,892 for radio and $1,159,619 for television. In consequence the report shows an excess of expense over income after providing for depreciation of $286,830 for radio and $1,071,791 for television, or a total of $1,358,621.

[Mr. Fleming.]

In other words, last year the C.B.C. did not have a cash deficit on operations, but rather there was an excess of expense over income attributable to the usual charge for depreciation. The corporation still shows on its books an accumulated surplus of over $9 million, which is somewhat reduced from the figure of a year ago. Its liquid position is very good indeed. The statement shows that at March 31, 1956, the corporation held government of Canada bonds amounting to $6½ million and $11½ million in cash.

I have an observation or two to make about two or three of these items and their nature. Item 54 proposes an outright grant of $6,250,000 to the C.B.C. It appears as an item to be voted. This is the same amount that has been available to the C.B.C. over the past five years and, indeed, ever since the recommendations of the Massey report were implemented by legislation. But the amount has been a statutory vote in each of those years, and now the five-year period has expired. Consequently the government is now asking that a one-year grant of the same amount be provided this year. I take it that is simply a stop-gap vote pending the report of the royal commission, and I take it that we may infer and be assured that no new policy will be inaugurated by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation this year pending a review of the whole matter by parliament after the report of the royal commission has been submitted to the house.

The second item is a statutory item. It estimates a revenue of $17 million from the excise tax on radio receiving sets and tubes and television receiving sets and tubes. This is an estimate of revenue on the one hand from this particular tax, and consequently there is the double element of estimate in relation to the item as one to be provided for the corporation. I point out in this respect that the revenue from this tax available to the corporation as revenue has always been underestimated ever since it has been in effect. Indeed, let me remind the house that in 1955 the sale of television sets in Canada reached an all-time record. The sales in 1956 are not quite keeping abreast with those of 1955, but there is a compensating increase in the number of sales of radio receiving sets and tubes.

A year ago the government estimated a revenue of $18 million from this source. Actually the revenue yielded was $22·8 million, an excess of $4,800,000 over the estimate. If the revenue from this source has been underestimated this year to the same extent, it would mean that instead of a revenue of $17 million from this tax available to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, they would have about $21·8 million available from that source. In other words, if the same underestimate is shown this year, the total amount available to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for domestic service under these various items would be $40 million, a very substantial sum indeed.

Item 605 of the supplementary estimates is an outright grant of $12 million toward what is called the anticipated deficit. That, of course, is a deficit on current account. The capital budget of the corporation, which was tabled in the house a few days ago, indicates a contemplated capital expenditure by the corporation this year of $8,948,900. Of that amount $1,764,000 will be in relation to radio broadcasting, and the balance of over $7 million for television.

Last year the house provided a loan of $8½ million to the corporation to cover the capital costs of television installations and to support the development of services. Asking the house at this time to make an outright grant of $12 million, as compared with the loan policy of a year ago, means that the house is being asked to follow a new principle. I want to say that this should not be regarded as any precedent as far as those for whom I endeavour to speak are concerned. It is not to be regarded as anything but a stopgap provision. The idea of a grant, if it is to be put before the house in the light of a departure from principle, so far as we are concerned, is not to be regarded as creating a precedent. In other words, when this problem is presented to the house for some comprehensive solution, as it must be within the next year, we want to make it quite clear that we shall not be regarding this as any precedent to bind members of the house.

The problem presented by the staggering cost of the C.B.C. operations must be faced and grappled with. The cost is developing into these tremendous sums, largely on account of television. Television cost the corporation last year $25 million, twice as much as it did to operate its radio broadcasting services.

As to approaches to the problem, I have only this brief reference to make to the submissions made by the corporation to the royal commission; that in its brief the C.B.C. estimates that the television revenue that will be needed to provide television services will be the equivalent of $15 per television household in Canada. There are two million homes in Canada now equipped with television. In other words the C.B.C. contemplates a requirement of $30 million from that source to provide television services for Canada, and that figure has been emphasized again and again in the brief filed by the corporation before the royal commission. I just mention one or two passages quickly. At page 27 the corporation, referring to previous similar estimates, says:

> We emphasize the scale of $15 per television household per year because it was the basis of the plan as started in 1952, and the rate which the C.B.C. said would be required in the future for a system of the scope and on the conditions of the plan. Also, we believe the scale provides a convenient base for the consideration of different possible future ranges of scope, costs and conditions for the system.

There is frequent reference in the succeeding pages to that basis of estimating the cost of operating television services. On page 35 this sentence appears:

> The C.B.C. estimated and continues to estimate that the $15 figure is the amount necessary to support the system as conceived in 1952.

The brief proceeds to indicate that this cost is likely to increase.

Similarly, the corporation in that brief estimates that the cost of providing radio broadcasting services for Canada to be continued through the years ahead will cost the equivalent of $1 per head of the Canadian population, or $4 per radio home. With a population now of 16 million people, that would mean the present sum of $16 million. The figure for television, at $15 per television household, is $30 million. The total for the two is $46 million per annum, and the corporation warns us that this figure will increase.

Now, I ask the question if the way in which this is put is the flying of a kite to ascertain whether the particular method of financing that is suggested in the brief is acceptable. Is this to be another new tax? Certainly that is the interpretation that was placed upon the brief of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation quite widely throughout Canada, and as it appears to indicate the intention to impose a new tax in these sums it was, I think I may fairly say, pounced upon and quite widely denounced in the editorial columns of the press. I suppose the fact is—in fact I have no doubt the fact is—that the government at the present time has no solution for this very great problem of financing the operations of the C.B.C. and it is hoping very hard that one will be forthcoming in the report of the royal commission.

Sir, I have not time to comment on the programming of the C.B.C. I have sought on other occasions throughout the session to bring before the house protests that reach the ears of members from time to time in regard to various programs. When these are put before the house it is not with any thought of censoring. In a year when the radio committee is not meeting how otherwise can members discharge their duty of bringing protests of the Canadian people to the forum to which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is responsible, namely this Canadian parliament?

In the short time that remains I do wish to mention one thing for which the C.B.C. is responsible. I hold in my hand what is commonly referred to as the house publication of the corporation, the C.B.C. Times for the week of April 29 to May 5. This is the organ that is issued by the corporation itself, and if I recall correctly the evidence given to the committee a year ago by Mr. Dunton its cost is about $75,000 per annum. On page 6 of the issue to which I have referred a letter is printed containing the following statement:

> C.B.C. television, through its shows of the journalistic type, is doing a great deal to deflate the exaggerated respect in which our public figures, businessmen, politicians, publicists and experts of all kinds, have been hitherto held; and this is all to the good.

Now, sir, I do not hold any brief that public men should be held in any higher esteem than they deserve to be held, but I just wonder whether it is a proper use of public funds to publish letters in which C.B.C. television is commended, rightly or wrongly, because it does a great deal to deflate the exaggerated respect in which our public figures of all kinds have hitherto been held.

Mr. McCann: I could not agree with you more.

Mr. Fleming: I think it is well that this should be brought to the attention of the corporation, because that kind of publicity is being issued by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation at public expense.

The news service is a very important matter in the programming of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It subscribes to three services, Canadian Press, British United Press and Reuters, and the television and radio coverage of news is a very important feature of C.B.C. programs. There are rumours floating about that the C.B.C., having developed this news service, is now proposing to sell the service to those who may be interested in purchasing that news service from it. I think the house should be told whether there is any foundation for these rumours in any respect, because if there were any measure of truth in the rumours it would mean that a public subsidy is being provided under which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will be competing with news agencies in the provision of news services, and it seems to me that is not fair to the press. It would be an unfair form of competition.

As to the propriety of such an enterprise on the part of the C.B.C., I should just like to quote what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar had to say in the 1942 committee on radio broadcasting, at page 730. After a review by Major Murray, then general manager of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is reported as saying:

> I have a comment to make on this. I am in agreement with Major Murray. It may surprise some of you to know that. I think there are certain fields in which the government ought not to be the subsidizing agency or a controlling influence. I think the publication of news, the gathering of news and the publication of newspapers is something that ought to be preserved to co-operative organizations that are not in any way controlled by the government, so that we may have an absolutely free press and free public opinion. The moment government steps in to subsidize the gathering of news, suspicion is immediately aroused as to colouring the news, and undoubtedly that might happen any time. I think the co-operative system of gathering news today by the Canadian Press is quite excellent.

Let me say in conclusion that there are two questions I hope the minister will answer in the course of his further statement. The first one obviously is when it is expected that colour television will be available. There was an earlier estimate that was widely publicized that it would become available in the autumn of 1956. I would ask the minister to make an informative statement as to the progress that is being made, and the cost.

The other point is the matter of advertising policy. There has been a good deal of criticism, not least of all before the royal commission, in regard to the advertising policies followed by the corporation, and there has been expression of a great deal of dissatisfaction in some quarters about the way in which the C.B.C. has been handling commercial advertising. I ask the minister to give a report on that subject, indicating what revenues are being received, and to tell the house whether the commercial sponsorships are fully sold and if the rates the C.B.C. is proposing to charge are remaining uniform.

My final observation is this, that I consider the relationship between the corporation and parliament a very important relationship, so important to both parliament and the corporation that it should be kept vital and contact should be kept close. That is why I think the committee sitting annually or almost annually is so necessary and so important.

It is one reason also, sir, why I have argued in the past that the C.B.C. should be required to come to parliament each year for its grants. I do not think it is a sound thing to make grants available to the corporation over a period of years so that it will not have to come back each year to parliament. When the corporation in its brief to the royal commission seems to express the view that it wants to be relieved of the annual grants and to have grants assured to it over a period, I do not think that is a sound point of view for the corporation to be taking. I would deplore and oppose anything that is likely to weaken parliamentary control or make any less clear and vital and strong the contact between the corporation and this house.

I thank the committee.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I just want to assure the hon. gentleman that the question he has asked with reference to colour television will be answered, and when the debate continues I wish to put on the record a statement with reference to finances. When he sees it he may say that it might have been better to put it on the record before he made his speech, but I did not want to take more than half of the time during which he and I were expected to speak tonight. I shall put that on the record, and then there will be an opportunity for people who are interested to compare what the C.B.C.'s appraisal of the financial position is with that of the critic.

Item stands.
