CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

THIRD SESSION—TWENTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT

4-5 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME VI, 1956

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY-NINTH DAY OF JUNE, 1956, TO THE TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY OF JULY, 1956, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

EDMOND CLOUTIER, C.M.G., O.A., D.S.P.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1956

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 29, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ALLEGED IMPROPER ACTION OF MR. SPEAKER

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise both on a question of privilege and of major public importance. In view of the intolerable situation created in this house by the utterly unprecedented actions of the Speaker in improperly impugning the motives of many of the hon. members in a letter, I ask the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Howe) to assure us that the government will deal with this situation in the only way in which it can be dealt with effectively, by taking the necessary steps to dissolve the house and give the people of Canada the earliest possible opportunity to elect a new parliament.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I must say that I rise to support the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) in this matter. I feel very sick at heart over this whole matter, and having had respect for the house and the Chair, I feel that the situation has become quite intolerable and that there is no way out but the election of a new parliament and the assembling of a new group in this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: May I be allowed to say a word of personal explanation? It seems to me the point at issue at the moment is whether or not a person who occupies the office that I have the honour to occupy at the moment is or is not deprived of being able to write personal correspondence. It has been established, I think—if it has not been established, I am prepared to establish it to the satisfaction of all hon. members, I am sure—that I made the comment in a personal letter which was not directed to a newspaper, which was never intended to be published and which I never thought would ever be published—I can assure you of that—and which unfortunately has been published.

Now, because one or two paragraphs of a private letter that I addressed to a man who is a free lance writer appears in a newspaper—a letter addressed to his residence—of course it becomes known that with respect to a certain matter I have an opinion which is at divergence with the opinion held by other hon. members. Now, I submit this to hon. members for their consideration. We had a debate concerning a certain measure over which I had to preside. I think hon. members, if they want to be fair, will agree that the chair during those days was not a bed of roses. Members who are not satisfied with rulings, or with the conduct of the Chair, because the Speaker is the servant of the house, have two recourses provided by our traditional forms of procedure: one, appeals from the Speaker's rulings; two, motions of censure. Both of these two recourses have been taken advantage of.

Now, I cannot participate in debate. I must, however, put questions affecting myself. See Beauchesne's third edition, citation 86 and Bourinot's fourth edition, page 179. I presided over the debate which took place on the motion of censure against myself, and I put the question affecting myself. During that debate I did not speak. Some hon. members here know that before the debate on the motion of censure started I wanted to speak. As a matter of fact I thought I had the right to be heard.

Mr. Winch: You did have the right to be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Well, at that time there was a question as to whether or not I had that right. My program on Sunday before the Monday on which this debate was initiated, as I suggested, was that the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the C.C.F. party speak on the motion of censure and I wanted to take the floor immediately after that; but there was hesitancy as to whether I should do that, or whether I had the right to do it.

I want to tell hon. members this. I have received several letters, some very critical, others commending my attitude during the pipe-line debate. In replying to those letters which I have received, whether of criticism or of commendation, I said several things, and I am sure that if they were all to be published, as this personal letter was, it would indicate one thing, that a man who is accused and has not been able to say his piece is in a very deplorable situation indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The worst criminal in this country, the man accused of spying, is asked before sentence is passed, "Do you have anything to say?" Now, I am not blaming the house; I am not blaming any hon. members; I do not say that you did not provide me with a chance to be heard. But I just say that, in order to ask you to understand what may be my personal position, I am somewhat tense about this. I am not going to say anything further with respect to the event nor as to whether the opinions that have been expressed have been right or wrong, but I want to say this. The fact that I have not been heard—well, as I say, I have been tense about this ever since and I have been looking up authorities.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) just interjected a moment ago, "You had the right to be heard". I am inclined to go along with his view because I have looked at a debate which took place in 1931 when the deputy speaker, Mr. LaVergne, had been attacked by the then member for Labelle, Mr. Bourassa and later rose to speak. Mr. King on a question of privilege indicated that the deputy speaker should not take part in any debate. The debate took place on March 20, 1931, and it will be found in volume I of the debates for 1931, pages 173 to 180. In defence of Mr. LaVergne, in justifying his contention that he had the right to speak if he was attacked, Mr. Bennett said that in exceptional cases he thought the Speaker was warranted in taking the action he did. He was referring to the case of 1927 when Mr. Speaker Lemieux had spoken in the debate in this house and then later he said:

> Obviously the Speaker cannot take part in the debate and preside at the same time.

Then later he said:

> . . . if the deputy speaker is not to participate in debate obviously he should not be attacked. That is fair. How but by participation in debate would he be able to answer attacks made upon him? That, Mr. Speaker, seems to be the crux of the whole matter and it will be found that Sir Robert Borden in discussing the matter of a resolution of the then leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, directed the attention of the house to that particular point. Is it right merely because one of our hon. members has been elected chairman of committees and chairman of the committee of the whole house that he should be deprived of the right to speak to the house?

And then later he said:

> Let us, however, consider what happened the other day when he was attacked in this house.

He is referring to Mr. LaVergne.

> As a member he takes his seat and as one of the deputies of this chamber is he to be silent? May he make reply? Is it right that he should be silent?

Later on he said again:

> Has his acceptance of the position of deputy speaker placed him in a position where he can no longer reply to the attacks which are made upon him?

[Mr. Speaker.]

And he concluded that part of his remarks by saying this:

> I still claim for the deputy speaker, as I would claim for any other member of the house, the right to make any response he thinks adequate to any attack that may be made upon him. In other words, you should not make him a judge unless you treat him as such; and if you enter into controversy with him you must afford him an opportunity to answer the observations directed to him.

At that point Mr. King interjected:

> No one denies that.

Looking further back into the record I find that in 1814, when Mr. Speaker Abbott had a motion of censure moved against him in the United Kingdom, he did take part in the debate soon after Lord Morpeth had moved the motion against him. His speech will be found in Hansard of 1813-14, volume 27, extending from column 475 to column 485, which I would think would be the equivalent of a 40-minute speech.

I am very sorry that part of that letter has been quoted. I may say that, as if I did not have enough trouble so far, I was certainly hoping that no other trouble would arise and I was greatly shocked when I saw that those paragraphs had been taken out of that private letter and put in a newspaper article.

Having said that, that view having been made public, I understand that it might arouse the indignation of some hon. members in this house when someone says that someone distorts the facts for his political ends.

Mr. Drew: Falsifies.

Mr. Speaker: Or falsifies. Of course if you want to use the most prejudicial translation you will use the word "falsifies" but for my purpose the translation would be "distorts".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would Your Honour table the letter?

Mr. Speaker: I will table that letter if the hon. member wishes me to do so. I do not know to what extent I can as this is private correspondence. Would the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) be good enough to take a look at all the correspondence and then if he wants it—I do not table documents—to be circularized I could have mimeographed copies made of the translation of every letter. I might explain what the correspondence is about. The first letter I received from the hon. gentleman was dated May 14, 1956, in which he asked for an interview. Perhaps I should give my own translation and the hon. member can check when I send him the documents. He asked:

> Would you be kind enough to give me an interview of a few minutes at your office in the near future. It has to do with a communication that I want to make to you and which is absolutely foreign to my occupation as a newspaperman. Would it be possible to receive me on Saturday next or on any other Saturday? Please let me know as soon as possible.

I replied to that letter on May 15 in which I said—

Mr. Gardiner: Before you continue, may I be permitted; is it proper for personal correspondence either to be placed on the table or read to this house? Are we going to be put in the position where if we have any personal correspondence at all as members somebody can suggest that it ought to be put on the table or read to this house?

Mr. Speaker: It is simply that I want to make sure and I want hon. members to be sure that, as the editorial seemed to suggest that I did write to the newspaper in order to have certain things published, I have no objection personally to tabling the correspondence. The man who was responsible for the editorial is in Ottawa at the moment. He was in my office last evening and he is in the gallery now. He wrote me a letter of regret as to the procedure in this case which has been published in the newspapers. There is no question about it that the man was not thinking to do any harm because he is just as sorry as anybody can be. I know that he did not want to do me any harm, and that is certain. Two paragraphs have been taken from a private letter in which I told him I would see him on any day between Monday and Friday inclusive. He wrote me back and enclosed a copy of the article which he had written and told me that he would be in Ottawa on Friday, June 29. He arrived last night around five o'clock. At that time I said to him that he had arrived at the right time because of something I wanted to tell him about his editorial. He said, "Well, I am very sorry." The explanation he gave for that was that he had had an experience years ago in Quebec city, where he was a parliamentary correspondent.

This man, I may inform the house, is an elderly man; he is about 75 years of age; and he has had various experiences throughout his long career as a newspaperman. He remembered that the Hon. Mr. Weir—these are the facts that he told me himself; I do not know about them—that the Hon. Mr. Weir, when he was Speaker in the legislature of Quebec, had put someone else in his place, had taken the floor and had taken part in the debate. He thought that, as the member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges, I still had the right to take part in debate, and he saw nothing wrong in taking an excerpt from this letter. That is the explanation of this editorial.

He stressed the point that the Speaker still remains member for the constituency he represents and that, therefore, he is entitled to speak. I say again, it was not my intention, and I did not write to the newspaper. All this correspondence has been addressed to him personally at his residence in the city of Longueuil, and it has been admitted by him. I think that if one reads the explanation that appeared in the Globe and Mail, which I read today, it gives a good account of the facts pertaining to this situation.

Mr. Drew: Before the Acting Prime Minister replies, may I make some comments in regard to what has been said by the Speaker. I direct my remarks to the Acting Prime Minister as the acting head of the government. I do so in the utmost solemnity.

Already, at the suggestion of Mr. Speaker himself, a motion of censure was presented in view of certain discussions that had taken place. When the Speaker said that there was any hesitancy about hearing him, I would point out that no one indicated any unwillingness to hear the Speaker and, in fact, there was every indication that the Speaker felt perfectly free to present to the house any facts he deemed advisable, as evidenced by the proposition he put before the house on one occasion in regard to certain decisions he himself has made.

However, these are irrelevant, so far as the central issue is now concerned. In fact, the question as to whether it was or was not intended that this letter be published is in itself irrelevant, when we recognize the rule of the Speaker in relation to this house. Whether the Speaker is a permanent Speaker, as at Westminster, or a Speaker chosen by a motion of all the members, as is done here, the Speaker, if there is to be any dignity in the proceedings of the house, must command the confidence of the members that the decisions he makes will be impartial decisions within the reasonable bounds of human frailty. Whether it was intended that this letter be published or not is in itself unimportant. We now know that the Speaker, whose impartiality we are expected to respect, holds the opinion that arguments that were made here falsified the facts or, to use the alternative expression the Speaker has used, distorted the facts for political ends.

I would point out that if these words were spoken of any member in this house it would be the duty of the Speaker to call for a retraction immediately. They would not be permitted. Whether or not it was intended that they be published, these were the thoughts of the Speaker, and we know they were the thoughts of the Speaker because, whatever the circumstances were, they have now been given widespread publication in the press.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Leader of the Opposition allow me to indicate that there is a distinction with respect to the word "deliberately"?

Mr. Drew: I did not use the word "deliberately".

Mr. Speaker: No, but the Leader of the Opposition said that if any member of the house were to say of another member that he falsifies or distorts facts for his own political ends that would be an unparliamentary expression and I would ask that it be withdrawn. I had a case the other day when the hon. member for Kootenay East said that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar attempted to distort the facts, and in correcting him I said that the hon. member for Kootenay East should withdraw the expression because he was not allowed to insinuate or impute that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar had made a deliberate attempt to distort the facts. That is the only distinction.

Mr. Drew: I repeat my statement that if these words were spoken in the house a retraction should be demanded. They are words that are not regarded as being a parliamentary expression because the motives of members must not be challenged. That is fundamental to the debates in this house. The Speaker has said that he is sorry the document was published. So are we. But it has been published and unfortunately it is now before the people of Canada that the Speaker, whose role it is to maintain dignity in debate in the house, has used words in relation to what has been said by many hon. members in this house which should not be permitted in orderly debate at any time. It removes from the Speaker any possible suggestion of impartiality.

I point out that the Speaker had a right to speak in two ways. When he suggested the motion of censure he indicated that this would give him an opportunity to speak. No one challenged that right. However, there is another way in which the Speaker is perfectly free to speak, and that is to resign and as a private member express his opinion outside of the house within bounds of decency imposed by himself in any way he sees fit, or to express his opinion in this house under the rules that have been established and which it is his high duty to administer. He is merely the temporary occupant of a chair which is symbolic of the relationship between government and opposition.

Whatever the unhappy circumstances were which resulted in the publication of this communication, the hon. members who disagreed with the procedure which took place have now been told that in the Speaker's opinion they distorted or falsified facts for their political ends. How is it possible for any hon. member to divest himself of that knowledge and to start afresh with any pretence that there is impartiality in the mind of the Speaker? No matter by what process these words became public, the Speaker disclosed what was in his mind. That we now know. For that reason this house can no longer proceed with its deliberations in the manner that it should with a recognition by many of the hon. members that that is the opinion of the Speaker to whose impartiality they must appeal over and over again during the course of debates.

Mr. Speaker, I ask anyone to go back to the Hansard record of what was said during the discussion of the motion that was before the house. It is impossible to find at any point any statements that were made which were not made with full recognition of the solemnity of the occasion and with due regard for the position which the Speaker had occupied until those tragic events occurred. Nowhere in the statements that were made in support of that motion is there a single statement that justifies the implication contained in the words that have now been published.

The Speaker says he is sorry that they were published. They have been published; they are in our knowledge and therefore I submit that for the sake of the people of Canada, whose servants we are, for the sake of the dignity of this House of Commons that is an integral part of our great parliament with its rich traditions, I submit that the responsibility rests now entirely with the government. I ask the government in all earnestness to meet this situation in the only way it can. It is for the government to decide how long we must continue to do the business which is necessary for the passing of the moneys required for the business of the country. We should now have the assurance that when that is done there will be immediate dissolution brought about by the constitutional procedure available to the government and that the people of Canada, with the full knowledge of the facts, then will have an opportunity to elect a new parliament in harmony with the traditions and sentiments of our people.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house has listened to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the leader of the C.C.F.

party. It has listened to your explanation of what happened. The fact that an extract from a private letter written by the Speaker was published is a matter that is unfortunate, but to suggest that parliament should be dissolved because of it is, I think—

Mr. Low: Nonsense.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The leader of the Social Credit party has used the word, so I will adopt it.

The Speaker was elected not by the government but by the House of Commons. He was nominated by the Prime Minister and that nomination was seconded by the Leader of the Opposition. He was elected unanimously by the whole house. This is a situation for the house to consider. The government was elected by a large majority to carry on the Queen's business for the usual period. It has now been in office a little less than three years. Whether or not the government should go to the country is a matter apart from the present dispute and will be settled by the procedure that governs dissolution of parliament under the usual circumstances.

The conduct of the Speaker has been impeached by the Leader of the Opposition. The motion was voted upon and voted down. Whether or not the publishing of an extract from a private letter changes that situation is a matter that must be considered.

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister is away and I would not wish to comment on the situation until he returns. However, I shall report the situation to him and he will make such statements as seem appropriate at that time.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I suggested to you, Mr. Speaker, when you were making your explanation that you might table the correspondence and you were kind enough to forward the original correspondence to me. Having translated it in the few moments at my disposal, I feel that it should be tabled. Expurgated portions of the correspondence have already appeared in the press. In addition to that, in today's press there is a full reference to the statement. The apology, if you will, of Mr. Cinq-Mars is published in detail, and that was prepared in your office last evening.

Under the circumstances, sir, in view of the fact that you refer to hon. members who have entrusted to your custody the rights and prerogatives of parliament and the preservation and maintenance of the honour of every member in this house, irrespective of his position in the house; in view of the fact you have referred in that correspondence to the hon. members whom you represent in your high and dignified position as accusers, and have referred to the arguments that they advanced in parliament as a falsification of the facts for their own political ends, I say that the correspondence should be published. It is not a question of whether or not you, as Speaker of the house, should be able to defend yourself; that is past. What took place is past. What we have before us even today is that, although you are in a position where hon. members have entrusted to you their honour, they are here described by you in correspondence, whether personal or public —it is now public—as having falsified the facts. This is something which, in my opinion, deserves a very complete retraction on your part.

I ask, sir, for the tabling of the correspondence, the letter that you wrote to Mr. Cinq-Mars. The copy is marked "Personal" in lead pencil, but other than that there is no indication of personal correspondence whatever, from the beginning to the end, as I read it.

Mr. Speaker: I have no hesitation whatever in placing this correspondence at the disposal of the house on the understanding, of course, that when you table private correspondence in this house it means it is at the disposal of hon. members who may wish to take a look at it at the table. These are not documents produced by way of a motion. I know that Mr. Cinq-Mars, who has had this correspondence with me, will have no objection whatever because we discussed it last evening.

When the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) says that the letter of regret by Mr. Cinq-Mars was prepared in my office, I must say it was not prepared in my office in my presence. Mr. Cinq-Mars said, what can I do in order to repair whatever damage I may have caused you? I said, go out to my secretary and do whatever you please. I was not there when he dictated this letter. He did that, and he signed it and it was left with me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no such suggestion in my statement. The press reported that it was done in your office, that is all.

Mr. Speaker: So far as I am concerned, I have no hesitation in putting this correspondence in the possession of the Clerk for all hon. members to consult and verify for themselves.

Now, the hon. member for Prince Albert has taken exception to me qualifying my colleagues as "accusers". Well, when you write a letter, and you have several to reply to, and you are writing to a gentleman who is asking you for an interview and you are thanking him for having written a favourable article about you and you comment upon the act, you do not always choose your words. I want to tell you gentlemen that I did not give 24 hours of thought to this letter. It is not something, you know, that I gave considerable meditation to. In the course of a great many letters, I wrote that letter. If I had written it to be publicized, I want to assure hon. members that I would never have included that sentence in it.

If I had had the chance to speak on the motion against myself my presentation would have been an objective one, without taking sides, as far as the arguments which were not concerned with rulings were to be dealt with.

Now, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) says that I should retract.

Mr. Castleden: I cannot see the value of that at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear the remark.

Mr. Castleden: I said, I cannot see the value of that at this time in this situation.

Mr. Speaker: Well, if there is no value in dealing with the request of the hon. member for Prince Albert and to give an explanation of my interpretation of the words, I will not deal with it further. But I want to tell hon. members that ever since I was appointed on November 12, 1953 my resignation has always been at the disposal of the house. If one wishes to move a motion, after 48 hours' notice, stating the reasons why and concluding that the Speaker be removed I will resign immediately. See Beauchesne's third edition, citations 127, and 225 and 46.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have listened to the debate from both sides of the house and have seen what is going on. I think of another situation where the life of an individual was at stake, and the Divine Teacher said, Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I point out that there is nothing before the house. I suggest we proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is nothing before the house. Nevertheless, this matter is one of great importance. I would think that the hon. member for Nanaimo, if he wishes to speak at this moment, should be allowed to do so.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am astonished that the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Howe) takes this situation so lightly as to say there is nothing before the house and to attempt to deny to hon. members the right to speak on a question of this importance where we are charged with deliberate falsification.

Mr. Tucker: On a point of order, this may be important. If it is important, it should be dealt with properly under the rules. It can be dealt with under the rules by notice of motion, in which event everybody can take part in the debate. I object to the people on the other side making the statements they have made without a chance for anyone on this side to answer, and to say why things were dealt with in the fashion they were. That is exactly what the situation is.

If the members on the other side want to carry this thing farther and suggest that you have no right to your private opinions, and for that reason you should be censured; in other words that you should be asked to have no private opinions, then I think we on this side have the right to express our opinions. I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this is important—and I agree it is important—then it should be put before the house properly so that we can all take part in it.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): If you are in any doubt, Mr. Speaker, on account of the point raised by the hon. member for Rosthern, I wish to raise another point of privilege, my own personal point of privilege, because, in this statement that appears here, I, like every other opposition member who took part in the debate on the motion of censure of yourself, have been accused, and lie under the accusation, of having falsified the facts to meet my own political ends.

I suggest to you, sir, that having gone so far you must go farther. You must indicate to this house what members falsified the facts, in what respect they falsified the facts, and if you are unable to do so, sir, then it would seem to me there is only one course open to you and that is the course suggested by the Leader of the Opposition just now. That is the situation we are in today. We all lie under this imputation. It has gone all across the country that, in your opinion, some of us at least falsified the facts in this debate.

I must say, sir, I cannot take too seriously your suggestion that you wrote this letter in a moment of light-hearted carelessness. People do not carelessly make serious accusations of this sort. They are not the sort of things you slip in by accident when you are not thinking. I suggest, sir, you have to go farther now and indicate to this house precisely which members falsified the facts and in what respect they falsified the facts. If you are unable or unwilling to do so, then there is only one course open to you, because this raises the whole question as to whether or not members who have been accused of this can any longer sit under your presidency in the chair.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I hesitated for quite some time to say anything on this question of privilege, but I think we are now beginning to generate some more heat, and I believe it would be well for me to say just a word.

I have listened very carefully to the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition, by the hon. member for Prince Albert, by the leader of the C.C.F., and others. It seems to me there are one or two things that ought to be said that have not been said, and they should be emphasized. What Your Honour wrote in your letter to Mr. Cinq-Mars has been likened by the Leader of the Opposition and others to an hon. member speaking in this house and saying the same thing about other members. It has been suggested that when an hon. member speaks in this house and says something similar to what you wrote in your letter about other hon. members you call on him to retract, and therefore that you should be called on to retract what you wrote in a personal letter.

May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, there is no relationship whatsoever in the two situations? I wonder whether it is possible that the Leader of the Opposition was implying that Your Honour has no right as a private member in this house, and in your capacity of a private member representing a constituency, to write a letter and say in that letter whatever you feel is in your own mind?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Low: I wonder whether the Leader of the Opposition thinks for a moment that other hon. members of this house have not written private opinions about the distortions that took place in the pipe-line debate. I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have expressed my opinion in letters just exactly as I suspect the Leader of the Opposition, the leader of the C.C.F. and others have expressed in letters their private opinions about your partiality, so-called, private opinions about how you possibly leaned over backwards to favour the government, and so on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested here that you have no right to do that. I suggest it is not a sensible piece of accusation to say that you have not that right as a private member representing a constituency. I think you have that right and I think it is your duty on occasion to write to private individuals and to express your private opinion.

Now let me go further. It has been suggested, Mr. Speaker, that it was some sort of crime or sin for you to suggest that certain members of the opposition in speaking in the pipe-line debate distorted facts for their own political purposes. I suggest that practically everything that is done in this house is done with a view to building up one's own particular political ideas and beliefs, every single thing. I might suggest, sir, that the whole course of the pipe-line debate was taken for the purpose of creating a political issue. If the facts were not distorted, certainly they were not completely placed before the house by every hon. member.

The very fact that you, Mr. Speaker, exercised your right to write a letter to a private person and in it expressed your private views certainly should not be seized upon as an excuse for again calling for the dissolution of this house and the holding of an election. I do not see that you have done anything reprehensible at all. It appears to be reprehensible in the minds of those people who are accused, of course, and I do not blame them for protesting under the circumstances, but to make a mountain out of it at this time seems to me to be very foolish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Low: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would your remarks apply if the letter had been signed "Mr. Speaker" or was written as the Speaker of the house?

Mr. Low: I would think that even then he has the right to write a personal letter to anyone in his constituency or anywhere else and express his own private opinion. He is not doing it as the occupant of the chair but as the hon. member for whatever constituency he represents.

I thought I should express those points of view because it seems to me they have been suppressed by what has been said thus far. So far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we want to make it abundantly clear that we feel that any member of this house who represents a constituency—whether or not at times he occupies the chair—must be granted the right to express his own private opinions in private letters and correspondence to anyone outside the house without being called to account for it in this house. If that were not so, then every single one of us would be called to account for the private letters we write and the private opinions we express in those letters and I do not think that is any business of this house at all.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FILING OF STATEMENTS, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. 437 (from the Senate), to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPOSIT, FILING OF STATEMENTS, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. 438 (from the Senate), to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

420 SQUADRON, LONDON—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DISBANDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the apparent shortage of air transport facilities disclosed in the white paper recently issued by the Department of National Defence, would the minister reconsider the disbandment of 420 fighter squadron, London, and re-establish the squadron as a trainee and transport squadron?

I also have a second question. Would not a reorganization along these lines utilize the personnel and airport facilities at London rather than waste them, as now seems apparent?

Hon. R. O. Campney (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I said the other day, each of the auxiliary squadrons was considered from all the angles which I have mentioned on two occasions in the house and the decisions that were taken were taken in the light of those factors. It is my recollection, and I speak subject to correction, that the flying activities of the squadron at London were not very great. If I am wrong I can be corrected in that, but I think it is true. I believe it was felt the activities of those who are air-minded in the London auxiliary—and there are some very good people—could be better tied into the Royal Canadian Air Force organization in the way which is proposed under the revision of duties which has been worked out.

[Mr. Low.]

FREIGHT RATES

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RESCIND RECENT INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of the 7 per cent increase in freight rates scheduled to go into effect on Tuesday next. Has the minister considered the heavy burden such an increase will impose on primary producers and consumers in this country? Will the government use the authority given it under section 53 of the Railway Act to rescind the order of the board of transport commissioners and thus prevent any increase in freight rates at this time?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply that I have just received a copy of the judgment. I have not had an opportunity of reading it and I therefore am not able to express any opinion upon it.

Mr. Argue: In view of the urgency of the question I wonder if the minister will study the judgment and make a reply on Monday?

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give that undertaking but I shall read it as soon as I can.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOISVERT—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Boisvert (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) made a statement to some newspapermen which is published today in the Montreal Gazette. This statement accuses members of the committee on capital punishment of having cast their votes against their personal beliefs. As a member of that committee and speaking for myself I want to say I have given to this extremely important question of abolishing the death penalty very long and cautious study and when I voted to retain capital punishment I voted, as I have always done throughout my life, according to my conscience and according to my conviction which is the conviction of the majority of the people of the province of Quebec. I think it is most unfair for a member of parliament, inside this house or outside of it, to make a statement such as that which appears today in the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if there is any personal imputation that is taken by my hon. friend I shall be glad to withdraw any personal imputation but on general principle I stand on exactly what I said. I will be glad of the opportunity of debating this matter and expressing my views on the floor of the house when the report on capital punishment comes before the House of Commons for discussion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—INQUIRY REGARDING EXPORT PERMITS FOR AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether he is in a position to advise, now that several weeks have gone by since consideration commenced on the part of the cabinet respecting the issue of export permits for fighter and jet aircraft to Israel, whether a decision has been arrived at to allow such export to take place. What is the present position of the matter? When does the minister expect, if a decision has not been made already, that a decision will be arrived at? Urgency seems to be of the essence.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend gave me notice yesterday morning of this question and in reply I would say that individual applications for export permits are considered each on its merits, as has been previously reported to parliament. The specific question of jet aircraft is under consideration by the government and in reaching any decision the views of other countries concerned are and will be taken into account.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question. Have any of the great powers suggested to Canada that it would be in order for Canada to issue export permits? Has there been any indication that such action on the part of Canada would meet with the approval of Great Britain and the United States?

Mr. Martin: I believe my hon. friend will agree readily that in these matters careful consideration should be given to every aspect of the problem. This is a matter of great importance and I do not want to add anything now to what I have said already.

GRAIN

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CLOSING OF ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) perhaps the acting minister can take my question as notice if he is not in a position to answer. Would the minister make a statement in connection with a newspaper article in the British Columbian of June 27 to the effect that the Searle Grain Company might close the elevator because ships could not reach the dock by reason of the fact that the south side of the Fraser river is not dredged sufficiently often to allow ships to proceed to and from the elevator without danger of being caught on a sandbar?

Hon. James Sinclair (Acting Minister of Public Works): I shall draw that matter to the attention of my colleague and I would hope there will be an answer early in the week.

BRIDGES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATE IN COST OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) or in his absence to the minister acting in that capacity. Would the minister comment on an article in the June 27 issue of the British Columbian to the effect that the British Columbia government has made a formal application to Ottawa to have the federal government pay half the construction costs of two lower mainland bridges and the Deas island tunnel? I might say that notice of this question and a copy of the article were sent to the minister's office.

Hon. James Sinclair (Acting Minister of Public Works): I am sure that is a question which the Minister of Public Works would want to answer himself and I shall draw it to his attention.

CANCER

REFERENCE TO SURVEY ON RESULTS OF SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question arising out of an article which appeared in the press of yesterday morning indicating that there would be a government survey on smoking and lung cancer. This seems to be an answer to my request of six years ago and I would ask the minister if this survey will include all uses of tobacco in Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I well remember my hon. friend's interest in the question of smoking. I would not want what I have to say by way of reply to be regarded as either an affirmation or a denial of the position which he took. I simply want to say that Canadian cancer research workers and scientists, along with those of other countries, are engaged in a most important study of cancer generally, and, in this particular instance, of lung cancer. One of the important incidents of the research is an assessment of statistics concerning individuals in a particular group. The particular group referred to are co-operating and will share with the scientists themselves whatever fruitful results ensue.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF STRIKE ON CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, in view of the possibility of a strike by steelworkers in the United States, can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house how long Trans-Canada Pipe Lines will be able to continue to construct their pipe line across this country without obtaining further supplies of pipe?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I presume that in the event of a steel strike the production of plate for pipe for Trans-Canada will be suspended for the duration of the strike. How long the strike will last of course neither my hon. friend nor I can say. Whether the manufacture of pipe will also be suspended depends upon the stockpile of plate at the pipe mills, and that will be a matter to be determined.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): A supplementary question; is the minister undertaking any investigations or action to facilitate the continued construction of this pipe line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The pipe line is being constructed by the present owners of the pipe line and there is no occasion for the minister to make any investigations. The minister has reports on the progress of the line and the last report indicated that pipe had moved into the country to provide about 100 miles of pipe line. That is the only progress report I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): What was the date?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What was the date of what?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Of this last report. I was questioning the minister as to the date of the progress report to which he referred when he said that there was pipe on hand for approximately 100 miles of construction.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As a matter of fact I think I got that word yesterday. If my hon. friend will explain his personal interest in the situation perhaps I—

An hon. Member: He does not have to.

Mr. Fulton: Are we to take it from the minister's last remarks that he regards the pipe line as his personal property and not as something of interest to the public generally?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The pipe line is the personal property of a corporation. It is corporate property.

An hon. Member: Government money.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The government has loaned certain money to the corporation for the purpose of building the pipe line and has taken a mortgage on the pipe line to cover the indebtedness. The government is not responsible directly for the building of the pipe line.

Mr. Fulton: Public money is going into it.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

85. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,145,727.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, when the estimates of my department were before the committee previously I was outlining the position of the aircraft industry. To complete this picture of the work of the current year I should like to review, in less detail, the other principal elements of the defence production program. In the electronics field—one of growing importance to defence—there has been a slight increase in the volume of spending and the present level is likely to continue for some time to come. This is attributable in part to expenditures on the mid-Canada line, but many other developments are involved, since the electronics program relates to a growing range of equipment needs.

Throughout this fiscal year the mid-Canada line will continue to be the largest single item in the program. Construction work on the line, as well as the manufacture and installation of equipment, are proceeding on schedule, which incidentally is a very tight one. This has involved very close co-operation between Canadian contractors and suppliers and the government agencies responsible for the project, and I would like at this time to pay tribute to the way in which industry is tackling the problem in order to ensure that the job will be completed on time.

The construction of the distant early warning line, as you know, is being undertaken and financed by the United States. However, Canadian industry has shared very substantially in this work. There has been close liaison with responsible authorities in the United States and with regard to the construction phase and the provision of electronic equipment Defence Construction Limited and the Department of Defence Production have worked with the United States to ensure that Canadian industry was given a chance to bid wherever it was possible to so arrange.

As you know, the two very large construction contracts were placed in this country, as were important transportation contracts, and a very large proportion of the materials and supplies required under these contracts has come from Canadian suppliers. In addition, the installation of communications equipment required during the construction phase is being carried out by a Canadian company. Wherever delivery schedules and technical factors permitted and where costs were competitive, contracts for electronic and related equipment have been placed in this country.

Among other major electronic projects, the current year will see development work started on an integrated electronic system for the CF-105, combining navigation, flight control and fire control equipment. As the house may realize, electronic systems of immense complexity are needed for navigation and flight control at supersonic speeds and for the extremely precise fire control required to engage targets which may themselves be travelling above the speed of sound. Work is continuing on the CF-100 flight simulator, which is one of the most complex undertaken by a Canadian company. New types of aircraft are creating requirements for new types of simulators but, as the field of flight simulation is such a highly technical one and our requirements are so limited, many factors have to be taken into account in determining where this work should be done. The contract for one of these new simulators, the CS2F Grumman, has been placed and the equipment is being produced in the United Kingdom. As a second project, there is a requirement for simulation of the CL28 maritime reconnaissance aircraft, to be undertaken this year. Large new projects are also in prospect in the area of air defence communications.

From the foregoing it will be appreciated that the over-all impact of this year's defence production program on the Canadian electronics industry will be roughly comparable with that of 1955-56. It is likely that there will be some differences in the distribution of defence work among the numerous firms in the industry. However, it should be recognized that, unlike certain other sectors of our industrial base, of which the aircraft industry is a good example, the electronics industry has a large civilian market for its products and is consequently less dependent, as a whole, on defence orders. On the other hand, it is recognized that certain segments of the industry have developed special facilities and engineering skills that are essential to the continuing defence electronics program and that have little or no civilian application. We are all aware, in this electronic age, that new developments in aircraft and weapons call for new and increasingly complicated electronic control systems, but just what this will mean to Canadian industry in the future is impossible to predict at this time.

The longer manufacturing cycles required for the production of ships mean that shipbuilding programs undertaken in previous years will be continuing throughout the current fiscal year. Work on the 13 destroyer-escorts remaining to be delivered will continue, and it is now expected that final trials will be completed on four of these ships during the year. Progress is being made on all six of the MCB class coastal minesweepers and the lead vessel is scheduled for completion this fall. The second frigate conversion program, involving five ships, is also well under way, and the first two should be completed by next spring. The aircraft carrier Bonaventure is nearing final completion in the United Kingdom, and delivery is expected for the late fall.

In the gun and ammunition programs, some further reduction in activity is now likely. The small arms program will be sustained throughout the coming year by the service needs arising out of the adoption of the FN rifle. The production of heavier calibre weapons and ammunition to meet current requirements may be substantially completed during the current fiscal year, and we have to consider ways of maintaining, as far as possible, the industrial facilities and production skills associated with this work.

In this connection, I should like to refer briefly to the contracts for the three-inch 50 calibre anti-aircraft guns to which reference was made in the report of the Auditor General for the last fiscal year. These contracts were carried out by Sorel Industries Limited in its gun plant at Sorel, Quebec, on behalf of the United States and Canadian governments, and the difference of some $112,000 each in the cost to the two governments provides a good example of the heavy expense of re-establishing a facility to do this type of work.

Apart from minor extras for special equipment required by the Canadian navy, the difference in price was accounted for mainly by three items of expenditure which were considered to apply to Canadian account only, inasmuch as they related to the re-establishment of Canada's only facility for the production of heavy guns urgently required by the armed services at the outbreak of the Korean war. These were plant and staff house rehabilitation expenses totalling some $908,000, or $19,900 per gun; plant maintenance costs, covering partial compensation for the expense of retaining this highly specialized gun facility —which had little or no economic commercial use—during the period from 1945 to 1950, amounting to $35,074 per mount; and the preproduction and learning expenses amounting to $33,158 per gun. These figures represent general overhead costs of the first year's operations which could not properly be absorbed in the relatively small volume of production during that period, bearing in mind that the plant had to be reactivated and staffed from a virtual shutdown condition.

While it is true that the recorded price of guns for Canadian account exceeded the price to the United States government, it should be remembered that the payment of the foregoing costs has resulted in substantial benefits to all subsequent production contracts, including the 105 mm. and 155 mm. howitzers. A further advantage to Canada, which should not be overlooked, is that the United States order for 180 guns, contrasted with Canada's requirement of 46, absorbed approximately four-fifths of the fixed overhead charges relating to the program, and resulted in substantial cost reductions, by reason of increased efficiency over the greater production run, which were shared by both governments.

In summary, whereas, in 1951, we were faced with problems of growth and expansion in our defence production program, we are today encountering problems of maintenance and stabilization. Whereas, in the early years, our task was one of developing sources of supply to meet the demand, we are now more concerned with directing the continuing demand to established supply sources in such a manner as to use our production resources most efficiently and to safeguard their future most effectively.

The Minister of Defence Production is also responsible for a number of crown corporations, most of which are closely related to the defence production program; therefore, some mention of their activities is in order.

Canadian Arsenals Limited, in the current year, will continue to supply ammunition, small arms, instrument, and radar equipment, under contract to the Department of Defence Production, in approximately the same dollar volume as in 1955-56. Ammunition production, covering a wide range of both small arms and larger calibre gun ammunition, will again account for the greater part of the deliveries.

This year will see the first deliveries of both drawn and spiral-wrapped steel cartridge cases. The defence chemical facilities are to be augmented to permit the production of propellants for rockets and mortars, and further improvements will be made in the facilities and technique employed in the filling program. The small arms weapons plant will this fall deliver the first production models of the new FN-C1 rifle, and production will continue thereafter at a rising rate. It might be pointed out that, in addition to its role of defence contractor, Canadian Arsenals Limited, as an agent of the crown, has certain responsibilities for the development and maintenance of government arsenals and the preservation of appropriate skills and techniques.

Expenditures by Defence Construction (1951) Limited during the year ending March 31, 1957, are expected to total in the neighbourhood of $145 million. This is nearly 20 per cent higher than the expenditure figure for last year, largely as a result of the increased volume of work carried over from previous years, but it is well below the peak year of 1952-53. On the other hand, it is estimated that new contracts to be awarded during the year will decline by approximately 10 per cent to $135 million. Work on the mid-Canada line will account for the largest single share of the total expenditure, with the Camp Gagetown program in second place. It is expected that the latter project will be substantially completed by the end of this fiscal year.

Two of the remaining crown corporations operating under direction of the Minister of Defence Production, the Canadian Commercial Corporation and Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, require no appropriation since they are financed by means of a surcharge on the volume of business handled. The annual report of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation indicates a particularly satisfactory operation for the past year, having reduced the total costs of disposal to less than 7 per cent of the proceeds realized. Last, but not least, Polymer Corporation continues to show most encouraging results, having established during the past year new record levels of sales, production and payment of dividends to the crown, after all necessary provision for depreciation and payment of normal income taxes.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Is the new corporation, Northern Ontario Pipe Lines, coming under the Department of Trade and Commerce or under the Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It is under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, departments of government, particularly when we come to the stage of reviewing estimates, should not have their importance judged simply by the amount of money that they ask for to finance their own departmental operations. The Department of Defence Production certainly should not be judged as to its importance by that standard. There are departments of government whose estimates greatly exceed those of this department. This department, for instance, does not compare in its expenditures with the large spending departments like national defence, finance, national health and welfare, public works, post office and others. Indeed, sir, the proposed appropriations this year amount to $22 million and comprise only seven items.

But, sir, the importance of this department is rather to be measured in other terms. First, it is to be measured by the vast powers that the department possesses and that are vested in the minister. I recall to the minds of hon. members the review of those powers in the debate during this same period of the 1955 session, powers that are unparalleled in their extent and on which, indeed, the only legal limit remaining is the limit preserved last year after an epic struggle by the opposition. I refer, of course, to the time limit.

The second factor is the amount of actual spending that this department does. This department has confided to it the expenditure or commitment of vast sums of money on behalf of other departments, in particular the Department of National Defence, that do not enter into its own departmental appropriations. Indeed, since its inception on April 1, 1951, this department has spent or committed a total of approximately $6 billion. Its expenditures, the commitments it undertakes on behalf of other departments, are running now at approximately $1 billion per annum.

The third factor, of course, is the concentration of functions and responsibilities under the present minister, for with this department, the other one he heads and the various crown corporations that are associated with these two departments this situation is like the hub of a wheel. As to the crown companies, there is a list on page 2 of the second volume of the public accounts in which it will be seen that of the 29 crown corporations there enumerated they are responsible to ministers of the government in these numbers: the Minister of Trade and Commerce, eight corporations, the Minister of Defence Production five corporations, the Minister of Transport seven corporations, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources three corporations, the Minister of Finance three corporations, the president of the privy council one corporation, the Minister of National Revenue one corporation, and the Minister of Public Works one corporation.

Lately there has been added a thirtieth crown corporation, namely, Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, bringing to a total of 30 the number of crown corporations. Under the two portfolios which the minister holds, trade and commerce and defence production, 14 out of the 30 are responsible to him, and I am not including in that total the national research council which is also responsible to him.

The fact that so much purchasing is carried on in this department does create a position of unpredecented power so far as the minister is concerned. No other man in Canadian history has had $20 billion to spend as he has since 1939—indeed, few people in all the world at any time.

There are five crown corporations in this particular department and with respect to these crown corporations, as with the other crown corporations in the total of 30 that I have mentioned, I say that there should be a periodic and intensive review by a committee of the house of the operations of each of these crown corporations. At the present time they are much too remote from parliamentary control, and in committee of supply the machinery provided for a review of the operations of a crown corporation or, indeed, the operations of a department of this kind, is most inadequate. The committee of supply is a committee of the whole house. It is a big, unwieldy piece of parliamentary mechanism if parliament is to approach seriously the task of undertaking a detailed review of a department with all the ramifications of the Department of Defence Production and with all the important crown corporations that are associated with it and are responsible to the minister of this department and to the same minister also as the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Sir, what is needed is a more effective way of reviewing the operations of this department and its crown corporations. The committee on estimates has sat for the past two sessions. In each of those two years it has reviewed the estimates of four departments. So far the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Trade and Commerce have escaped the review of that committee, although we did ask at the beginning of this session that one of these departments at any rate should be referred to the committee this year. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this department is one that calls preeminently for a detailed review before a select committee of the house. In 1953 the committee on defence expenditures touched on certain aspects of the operations of this department, but so far as it touched on those operations it merely scratched the surface.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I make a comment? I may say that no department of government has been examined before a committee so closely as the department for which I am responsible. From 1940 to 1953 the committees on war expenditures and defence expenditures sat and considered the department every year. The work of the department was practically the only work considered by that committee on war expenditures.

Mr. Fleming: You will observe that I was not speaking about the war expenditures committee. I was speaking about this Department of Defence Production which has been in existence now for five years. I have drawn attention to the fact that there has not been at any time in that period a detailed review of the operations of that department. I have pointed out that the ramifications of this department are so extensive that this is preeminently a department whose operations ought to be reviewed by a committee in the well established method of review of its estimates.

Now, I was mentioning the fact that in 1953 the committee on defence expenditures had touched at certain points on the operations of this department. It was principally concerned with the expenditures charged to the Department of National Defence. It touched on certain operations of Defence Construction Limited, but so far as a review of the operations of this department is concerned I say that it did not, and could not under the circumstances, do more than scratch the surface.

The minister's statement on Wednesday—

Mr. Dickey: Both the committees in 1951 and in 1952 dealt with the department.

Mr. Fleming: The committee in 1951 sat for only about a month and this department had only come into existence at that time, so my friend is not going to pretend there was any review of the operations of this department at that time. So far as 1952 was concerned, the concern of the committee at that time was the direct expenditure on war materials and equipment. This department did not come in, except at a few odd points, in the review by that committee. So I say, Mr. Chairman, that the time is ripe and I think there should have been such a review this year. But certainly the time is ripe when there should be a detailed review of the operations of this department in a committee where there would be an effective opportunity for reviewing the business of the department, its administration and its operation in the fullest detail. This is not possible, as everyone must recognize, in this big, clumsy committee of supply.

The minister's statement on Wednesday touched on one question. He concentrated on aircraft production and procurement, admittedly a very important subject. In his statement this morning he has briefly delivered certain observations in regard to electronics and gun production and about the five crown corporations.

Now, sir, our first responsibility must be to ask ourselves, as a committee, how closely are we to assume that this department has estimated in putting before the house its request for appropriations totalling $22 million? As this department is not asking for sums comparable with those for which it was asking three or four years ago, any margin of error or excess in estimating is naturally correspondingly reduced. But I had occasion to look back, Mr. Chairman, to try to reckon the degree of accuracy that has characterized the estimating done in this department since its inception. I will give the committee the round figures. I find that for the fiscal year 1951-52, the department asked for and obtained a vote of $115 million and it expended $31 million. For the fiscal year 1952-53, it asked for and obtained $123 million and expended $89 million. For the fiscal year 1953-54, it asked for and obtained $73 million and expended $48 million. For the fiscal year 1954-55, it asked for and obtained $40 million and expended $19 million. We have not yet received the actual expenditures for the fiscal year 1955-56.

If we take these first four years of the life of the department in aggregate, we find that the department asked for and obtained votes totalling $353 million and it actually expended—that surely is the best test of the actual needs—$187 million.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, that statement is not accurate because in those votes a considerable amount was for revotes. You are counting the same money twice.

Mr. Fleming: Now, those are the figures of the actual votes; those are the figures of the actual expenditures. I have a comment to make upon them if the minister will just bide his time. Those are the moneys the house was called upon to vote to date and those are the figures of the actual expenditures from government records. When the house is asked to vote moneys—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): It was not all new money, though.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, those are the votes year by year that the house was asked to vote.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): But I am pointing out that a considerable part of the money was a revote from the previous years.

Mr. Fleming: It does not matter about the revote. You can measure, surely, the accuracy of estimating by what the department asked for each year and what it expended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the bulk of the difference is in the figure on capital assistance. The next item accounting for some of the difference is the figure for Canadian Arsenals, but the great bulk of the difference between what was asked for and what was found to be necessary was in the figure on capital assistance. This year, of course, the figure on capital assistance is down somewhat from last year. We wish to have, in the case of each item, a statement of the amount actually expended last year, and that has not been available as yet. We will wish to know, with respect to each item, what in detail is the best calculation of requirement.

There are important questions that arise, and will arise, in the course of a review of the administration and operations of this department. The first question that naturally arises is as to the administration of the Defence Production Act itself. In the light of the extended debate that was held last year in reference to the time extension of the minister's wide powers under that act, I wish to ask how many orders have been made under that act and ask for their listing or classification under the various sections of the act. In other words, what orders have been issued under each of the sections of the act conferring powers upon the government or minister?

I pass over, in the second place, the subject of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line and its relationship to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines in view of the announcement by the minister this morning that that corporation is going to be associated with him in his capacity as Minister of Trade and Commerce. We can come to that when the estimates of that department are before the committee of supply.

The third question that arises naturally in view of the discussion in other years is the relationship of the department with national defence. Are those relationships precisely the same as in earlier years?

Fourth, the minister has not made any comment upon the revolving fund in the department. In the annual report of the department there are certain financial statements to be found on pages 53 and 58 concerning the revolving fund. There is available in this department first of all under section 16 $100 million, and under another vote in 1951 a further $50 million, or an aggregate of $150 million as a revolving fund. All hon. members will appreciate the difficulties presented in enforcing the strict rule of parliamentary control in the case of revolving funds. The Auditor General has been questioned in the public accounts committee and in other committees concerning revolving funds in other departments. The turnover of that fund many times, of course, does permit the use of the same funds many times over, and I think it only right and proper that this committee should ask for a much more extensive review and report of the operations of the revolving fund in this department than is contained in the annual report of the department.

There is another matter to which I have referred on other occasions. It is the matter of the distribution of purchases in the department. As the discussion proceeds there will be opportunity to develop this subject in its wider context, but while the committee has noted the statement of the minister of Wednesday last to the effect that the percentage of total purchases from the United States has been greatly reduced from the original 25 per cent in the first year of operations of this department to 2 per cent last year, one must, in looking at the figures contained on pages 46 and 47 of the 1955 annual report of the department, express again regret that the department did not find it possible to make in the United Kingdom more of the purchases that it was unable to make in Canada and in that way assist the United Kingdom with its dollar problem in order that it might in turn purchase more of our products in this country.

Hon. members will see by looking in the annual report, on the pages I have mentioned, that the net value of defence orders placed in the United States by this department in the period from April 1, 1951, to December 31, 1955, a period of 4¾ years, aggregated $545,340,000, and the value of actual expenditures on defence orders placed in the United States by the department was $572,219,000.

I turn now to the purchases in the United Kingdom. In the same period the net value of Canadian defence orders placed in the United Kingdom by this department was $163,490,000, and the value of expenditures on Canadian government defence orders placed in the United Kingdom by this department was $126,441,000. It was a very small percentage indeed of the total of purchases made in the United States.

Now, I come to two matters in concluding these remarks, Mr. Chairman. First, I refer to the basis of purchases. The annual report of the department contains this sentence on page 24:

> With the increase in Canada's industrial defence potential it has been possible to purchase more goods in Canada, to increase the number of cases in which contracts are placed on the basis of competitive tender, and to move from cost plus to target price or negotiated firm price contracts in those fields in which Canadian firms have gained more operating experience.

Now, that is an interesting statement, Mr. Chairman, and we shall certainly wish to have much more elaborate information on the subject. Therefore, I ask that we be given detailed information on the number and value and proportion out of the total of contracts placed on competitive tender and the numbers and amounts and percentages of those placed on a cost plus basis, or a target price basis, or negotiated firm price basis.

Now, sir, I come in conclusion to one other matter. I referred already to the fact that the minister heads two departments and that 14 crown corporations report to him. He has many other burdens as well, including that of Acting Prime Minister at the present time. In this house on June 14 I referred to a matter which relates to the fact that the minister is one of the executors of the estate of the late Sir James Dunn. My remarks are to be found at pages 5031 and 5032 of Hansard.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I made comment on that in the newspapers.

Mr. Fleming: In restrained and temperate terms I referred in the house to that subject and I dealt with it strictly on the basis of principle. I want to make it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that it was not a personal matter on my part. I spoke for Her Majesty's loyal opposition. I dealt with the matter as a question of principle. There was nothing personal as relates to the minister himself. Although the debate went on for some time the minister did not choose to enter it, but on the following day he made a statement to the press outside the house in which he did not deal with the principle that I had raised, but directed at myself aspersions and defamatory statements. I hope that the two weeks have been a sufficient cooling-off period.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My hon. friend speaks about the remarks made outside the house?

Mr. Fleming: I ask the minister to take back what he said about me.

Mr. Sinclair: I thought it was an accurate statement of fact.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fleming: I ask the minister to take back those personal remarks.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I said nothing that is unparliamentary or anything else. As I remember my statement—would you like me to repeat it?

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I was asked quite casually by a reporter what I was going to do about your remarks and—

Mr. Fleming: That is not the part I refer to.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What is the part?

Mr. Fleming: The personal remarks the minister made about me. He is quite entitled, of course, to deal with the subject. I am not finding fault with what the minister says about that at all. The minister is perfectly at liberty to deal with the subject of his own plans in relation to the executorship or to anything like that. What I refer to are the personal remarks that he directed toward me. They were defamatory remarks, and I ask that those remarks be taken back.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, as I remember what I said, I said that of the 263 members of the House of Commons the hon. member is the last one I would ask to instruct me on ethics. Does my hon. friend object to that?

Mr. Fleming: Yes.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Who else of the 263 would he pick out to succeed himself?

Mr. Fleming: This is not such a funny matter. When remarks like these are made outside the house I think it is best that hon. members, when they have things to say about a question of principle that arises in the house, should make the remarks in the house. This minister made such a remark and he also went on to make a further remark about myself.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): What was that?

Mr. Fleming: It was on the subject of ethics.

Mr. Sinclair: Let us have that, too.

Mr. Fleming: The minister knows quite well what he said.

Mr. Sinclair: Put it on the record.

Mr. Fleming: Why should I put it on the record?

Mr. Sinclair: Then you will find that the feeling is unanimous.

Mr. Fleming: The minister knows what he said. I think the matter should be dealt with in the way I have suggested, and I simply ask the minister to take back what he said about me. I think that would be the fair way to dispose of it.

Mr. Sinclair: It is so accurate.

Mr. Fleming: I am addressing my remarks through the Chair to the Minister of Defence Production, if the Minister of Fisheries does not mind.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I try to be scrupulously fair to everyone. After studying the operations of the hon. member for the past six weeks I have nothing to take back.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fulton: Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of what the minister has just said, and in view of the way in which the remarks of the hon. member for Eglinton were greeted on the other side, I think the matter requires further discussion. The situation which arises out of the fact that the Minister of Defence Production, who is also the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has accepted an executorship of the estate of Sir James Dunn is a most unusual one and is one that requires to be dealt with on the basis of principle. It involves the question of a conflict of interest between the role of an individual in his capacity as Minister of Defense Production and the role of that same person in his capacity as a private citizen and as an executor of this particular estate.

In what I have to say I am not for the moment going so far as to suggest that no person, simply because he happens to be a cabinet minister, can accept an executorship of the estate of a friend; I certainly would not for a moment present that as a general proposition. I think in these matters each case has to be judged on its own circumstances. I am putting this to the minister and asking him to accept that it is put on the basis of principle, as something that requires discussion and decision on that basis, whether or not the minister feels that we interpret correctly the principles that are applied here. I ask him to accept that in our view it is a matter of principle, one that requires decision, and he should review the matter on that basis and allow us to discuss it on that basis, because his is not a normal situation.

The estate through its share holdings controls the operation and fate of one of the largest companies in Canada and at the present time certainly one of the most important, the Algoma Steel Corporation, which as the minister knows, and everybody knows —

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, is my hon. friend suggesting that the shares are vested in the executors? The Algoma Steel Corporation is operated by the board of directors of Algoma Steel Corporation. The executors have no right to exercise control through shares. My hon. friend is a lawyer and he knows that as well as I do.

Mr. Fulton: I do not accept for a moment the minister's statement of the position. Does the minister mean to suggest that the executors who control the largest single block of shares, if my information is correct, have no say as to the appointment of the board of directors and thus as to the decisions made?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Certainly not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: This must be an extremely unusual company. I did not want to put this matter on a personal basis, so perhaps the minister will allow me to say this with a smile; that knowing the character and personality of the Minister of Defence Production I think I can fairly say he is not an individual who fails to make his weight felt in any business or organization with which he is connected.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I may say, Mr. Chairman, that after I found out I had been appointed executor and after I learned the reason why Sir James wished me to be an executor, I consulted a firm of lawyers which I think command the respect of my hon. friend. I received a report from them and I was assured that, if I confined my work as I stated I intended to do to them and to the other shareholders, there could be no possible conflict. My hon. friend can make what he likes of that but if he would like to see the report from the lawyers I would be glad to show it to him. Their reputation is just as high as that of my hon. friend or anyone in his group.

Mr. Fulton: I am sure that may very well be so. It would be interesting to see the letter and it would be equally interesting to know the thoughts in the mind of the minister when he asked for an opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He must have been in doubt.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Of course I was.

Mr. Fulton: I think there may properly be a difference of opinion in this matter and that is one of the points I intended to deal with. According to press reports—and I am reading now from one which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on April 21, 1956—the minister said:

> Asked today about rumors that he would withdraw—

That is, withdraw from the executorship.

> —Mr. Howe said he had been asked by Sir James to serve as an executor in order that he might help ensure the holdings are disposed of in the public interest.
>
> That would be his only responsibility, Mr. Howe said. He would not play any part in handling tax payments or other financial arrangements apart from property disposal.

I assume it was that statement of the position the minister was referring to when he said he had an opinion from these solicitors that if he confined his activities to those matters there would be no conflict of interest. I do not know what the minister's legal advice might have been in specific terms but it certainly is a proposition I have never heard suggested that you can have a split personality as an executor.

An executor in my understanding—and my hon. friends who practice law in Ontario can tell me if the law here is any different from that in my own province, and I do not believe it is—an executor cannot accept only a limited executorship. He is an executor for all purposes and he is jointly responsible with his co-executors for any decisions that are arrived at and is bound to an equal extent with his co-executors by the actions of the executors; therefore for the minister to say he intends only to concern himself with the matter of the eventual disposition of the property and not to take any part in or accept responsibility for any valuations or tax payments—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I did not say that I did not accept any responsibility. I said I would be taking no part. It was understood by my co-executors that I would take no part. Of course, an executor takes the responsibility for what happens to the property for which he is the executor and I share that responsibility with four other executors.

Mr. Fulton: Exactly.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, don't worry about it.

Mr. Fulton: I stated the proposition that the minister cannot split his personality or limit his responsibility as an executor. As I said, the minister is not a person who is in the habit of controlling his actions and expressions, his words and conduct, in such a way that they do not have a very great influence on those with whom he is associated.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You are giving your opinion now, are you?

Mr. Fulton: I am giving my opinion based upon observations and based upon facts.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at one o-clock I was dealing with the position of the Minister of Defence Production and the conflict of interests between his position as minister and his position as an executor of the estate of Sir James Dunn in the light of the fact that the estate controls, through its shareholdings, the Algoma Steel Company and its affiliated or subordinated companies. Before one o'clock, in the few minutes I had been speaking, the minister indicated pretty clearly that he felt it was entirely inappropriate for us to raise this matter and to question his position. I regret to say that in so far as his personal relationships are concerned I regard this as a matter which has to be discussed in the House of Commons because there is too important a principle involved to let it go by.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): May I ask my hon. friend what reference it has to the estimates of the Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Fulton: I intend to show that.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Would it not be a good idea to show that now?

Mr. Fulton: I mention it now on the estimates of this department because the policies adopted and the practices followed by this department will have a most important and immediate bearing upon the welfare of the company to which I have referred, namely the Algoma Steel Company. The minister cannot, and I hope will not, try to pretend that the welfare and indeed the income and revenues of that company are not going to be affected by the policies of both departments of which he is minister. I shall refer to this in somewhat greater detail during the course of my remarks.

I had assumed that it was only going to be necessary to state the principles which we in this party believe to be applicable to a situation of this kind and outline the conflict and leave it at that, and that we might then leave it to the judgment of the minister or, if he refused to change his course after having reflected on the matter, to the judgment of the country. But unfortunately, or fortunately perhaps, the minister had already raised some questions as to the legal basis upon which I rest the case which I am making and I shall therefore deal with that particular aspect of the matter at once.

The minister has said outside the house, and as I understand it he has repeated it in the house, in justification of his position that the only role he intends to pursue as executor and trustee of this estate is one with respect to the ultimate disposition of the assets. As he says, his duty will be simply to ensure that they are disposed of in the national interest and that in that exclusive role he will be serving, not only the national interest but also the wishes of the testator, his personal friend. With the motives of that position I of course have no quarrel but I do have most serious disagreement with the minister, both as to whether he should have undertaken the duty of executor and trustee in the light of the issues involved and also as to whether an executor can be a limited executor in the sense which the minister prescribes for himself. Some question was raised as to whether I was on sound ground in saying that the minister cannot limit his executorship and I should like to refer to Widdifield on Executors' Accounts, a Canadian authority, published in 1944. At page 37 of the fourth edition I find the following extract under the chapter headed "Duty of an Executor—Realizing Assets":

> The first duty of a trustee, whether an executor, an administrator or a guardian, is to acquaint himself, as soon as possible, with the nature and circumstances of the trust property; to make a complete inventory thereof; to obtain, where possible, the possession or control of the trust property to himself, and, subject to the provisions of the will, get in the trust money invested on insufficient or hazardous security: Underhill on Trusts, 8th ed., 222.
>
> Persons who become trustees are bound to inquire of what the trust property consists and look into the trust documents and papers to ascertain the condition of the estate: Hallows v. Lloyd, 39 Ch. D. 691.

That is a statement of the general principle applicable to executors and trustees. There then follow in that chapter a number of detailed authorities. The minister has told us that he has a letter from a solicitor in Toronto whose authority and knowledge I cannot question even if I would, because I do not know who he is. The minister has said that the effect of that letter is that he could—I hope I am stating fairly the effect of the minister's statement—that he could in fact be a limited executor and that there is no conflict of interest between his position as executor acting in that limited capacity and his position as minister.

As I say, I do not accept for a moment the principle that the minister as executor can divorce himself from responsibility for any and all of the actions, responsibilities and liabilities of the executors as a whole. In case the question may be raised that an executor is not bound and therefore is not liable or responsible for the decisions of his co-executors or co-trustees unless he has knowledge of them, I should like to refer to another passage in Widdifield. My contention is that the minister cannot take that position because his duty as executor and trustee is to have knowledge of all the actions and decisions of and dispositions made by his co-trustees. If he fails to have such knowledge, not only is he guilty of a breach of his duty as trustee but he would not be relieved from liability simply because he had refused to acquire that knowledge. In support of that I would cite Widdifield at page 339 as follows:

> A trustee who does nothing, accepts without enquiry what is said by his co-executor, and is satisfied with any explanation given by him, does not act "honestly" within the meaning of the act.

The act referred to there is the Trustee Act. Then certain authorities are quoted in support of that proposition. Even if he wishes, the minister cannot personally evade his responsibility by failing to acquire knowledge of the acts or decisions of his co-trustees in every field of their responsibility. Secondly, if he should refuse to acquire that knowledge he is not acting honestly as trustee. I use the word "honestly" in the sense in which it is used in the textbook.

The simple proposition is that the minister, however much he may wish to, cannot accept an executorship in a limited capacity. His only course is to accept it and be responsible for and bound by and interested in every one of the duties and liabilities of an executor, or to renounce entirely. Up to date the minister has stated that he does not intend to renounce, therefore in my submission there is an immediate conflict of duty and interest between the minister as executor and the minister as minister of two departments of this government and as a senior member of the government as a whole.

The first area of conflict is in the matter of the evaluation of the estate assets and settlement of succession duties, and payment of income taxes on the revenue from the property before there is final distribution. This is one of the largest, if not the largest, estates in the history of Canada. As such it is going to be liable for very substantial succession duties, duties owing to and exigible by the Department of National Revenue, duties which it is the obligation of this government, exercised in this case through the Minister of National Revenue, to assess and collect at the largest amount properly assessable and collectible as against this estate.

As executor and trustee, however, Mr. C. D. Howe is under the obligation of negotiating with the Department of National Revenue, one of the departments of this government, to ensure that the duties assessed and collected are the minimum which can properly be held to be due on this estate.

Sir, the very statement of the position—a department of government whose duty it is to collect the maximum properly collectible, and an executor whose duty it is to see that the smallest amount properly payable is in fact assessed and paid—the statement of that position reveals at once the conflict of interest.

Secondly, there is a conflict of interest in that one of the executors of the estate is also the Minister of Defence Production and Minister of Trade and Commerce of this government. It is an inescapable fact that the policies of those two departments and the practices followed by those departments in the exercise of those policies are going to have an immediate bearing and effect upon the welfare, the revenues and the incomes of the estate of which he is an executor.

The Department of Defence Production, as the agent in its capacity described earlier by the hon. member for Eglinton, the purchasing agent particularly for the defence department and some of the other departments of government, is through its policies going to have a very direct bearing upon the future of the steel industry and the related industries of Canada. As Minister of Trade and Commerce—and I shall deal with this in more detail later—but particularly as the minister responsible for the trans-Canada pipe line and other related aspects of the economy of Canada, his policies and the policies of that department under him are going to have a bearing upon the future conduct and welfare of the Algoma Steel Company and therefore of the estate of which he is an executor.

These facts have to be stated. Every increase, sir, in the value of the shares of the Algoma Steel, from the day after the day of Sir James Dunn's death until duties are paid, is going to have a bearing upon the ability of that estate to pay succession duties and the ease, if you like, with which they are paid. In other words, an increase in the value of the shares after the death will represent a profit to the estate which can be used, in part at any rate, towards the payment of duties when they are realized without depreciating or lessening the value of the estate as it may be determined to have been at the date of death.

The policies of two departments of government are going to have an effect upon the value of those shares every day and from day to day. Those are facts which the minister cannot escape. I have no compunction or regret in stating the facts, however much the minister may resent my doing so. They are facts that have to be stated in order that their implications may be understood, because they are demonstrations of the extent to which there is a direct conflict of interests and of the extent to which the minister's position as executor of this estate and as minister of these two departments is improper.

The third area of conflict, related to the other two, is of course the fact that the affairs of the company, and therefore of the estate, and the affairs of the steel industry in general, are affected by the pipe-line bill which the minister has just jammed through this parliament.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am going to ask the hon. member—and I think perhaps I have intentionally given him considerable latitude—not to pursue that particular line of thought further. Previously a speaker on this same item of the estimates ascertained which of the present minister's departments the pipe-line bill came under and voluntarily, I think, and willingly immediately dropped that line of thought and discussion, indicating that it would come up under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think that what has been done for one member should be done in the case of another, and I would ask the hon. member for Kamloops not to follow that particular line of thought further.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I think I am the member to whom you refer. I think it is a different situation altogether. I indicated that I had a number of questions to ask at the appropriate time, concerning the Northern Ontario Pipe Line company, and in particular what has been done since the enactment of the bill. That relates to administration. In view of what was said this morning, that will properly come under the other department, but what my hon. friend from Kamloops is now saying is not to open up that subject at all. He is simply alluding to a situation that has arisen which bears directly upon the point of conflict of interests. The two things are quite different, as I think you will realize if the member proceeds.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not arguing whether or not there is a conflict of interests as between the government and an estate which might be connected with the pipe-line bill. I did not object to the allusion. I asked the hon. member for Kamloops—and I think he indicated his assent by nodding his head—not to proceed further because, quite frankly, what I am trying to head off is other members following a similar line of thought and perhaps discussing at some length under this department the crown corporation which doubtless will be discussed at great length under another department, and I do not think the committee of the whole would want to discuss the same thing twice.

Mr. Fulton: I think I can accommodate myself to your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, without in any way weakening my argument. I have stated the fact and I do not think it requires any elaboration. The principle is equally applicable to that situation, that is, the pipe-line situation, as it is to the whole area of the Department of Defence Production. Having referred to the situation, I can then leave it there.

These conflicts exist. The potential areas of conflict exist. I call them potential, but in fact the situation cannot continue without an actual conflict arising. It is useless for the minister to say that by raising these matters we are bringing his morals or his personal honesty or integrity into the question. He may be the most—

Mr. Harris: He is.

Mr. Fulton: He may be the most able, and most honest of men, a man of fullest integrity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear. We know he is.

Mr. Fulton: —as I say, he may be, but he cannot occupy those two positions without a fundamental moral conflict arising, and if he wants to preserve his reputation for integrity and honesty then it is up to him to resolve that conflict, because that is the situation in which he is placed and from which he cannot escape.

I believe, sir, that the people of Canada should not have their government or any member of it placed in a position where these questions and these sorts of conflict arise so that questions must arise and be asked as to how the situation can be permitted to continue. For it cannot continue without either an abdication of responsibility and duty on the part of the minister in his private capacity as executor or, on the other hand, disadvantageous results accruing to the general interests of the country which the minister represents in his official capacity as minister. That situation, sir, is not a tenable one, not one which should be imposed upon the people of the country or their interests by any man however able, however honest, however much he may have succeeded in doing in the past.

The minister says, however, that he has accepted this executorship, and I understand that at the moment at any rate he says he is going to continue in it because he regards it first as a patriotic duty and, second, because it is an undertaking, a position he was asked to accept by a friend. With the dictates of friendship and the acceptance of the obligations imposed by friendship I have no quarrel as a general proposition. I stated at the outset that I am not seeking to lay down a general proposition that no minister of the crown can accept the executorship of the estate of a friend. I said that every case has to be judged upon its particular circumstances, and this case unquestionably is one where the circumstances raise the questions that I am now raising.

The minister may have felt that he was under obligation to a friend but, sir, I suggest, indeed I state as a fact, that the minister is under a higher obligation. He is under an obligation to the government of which he is a member and to the country which that government is called upon to serve, and where he finds his inclinations as the result of friendship and his duty as a member of the government in conflict I suggest to you, sir, without reservation, that the higher duty is that towards the government and the country, and that this must override even the obligations of friendship.

As for the patriotic duty, the minister says that he is anxious to accept this executorship in order to be able to ensure that the assets, which are of importance to the welfare of this nation, are disposed of in the national interest. The very acceptance of that proposition substantiates my point that an estate controlling an industry of this national importance must inevitably have its welfare, its revenues and its income affected by the policies of the government of which the minister is a member. On the one hand the very fact that the disposal of it involves considerations of the national interest indicates its size and its ramifications; on the other we have a minister of the government whose duties, as he has accepted them, also in their ramifications extend into almost every facet of our economy.

But it is to me a strange confession of impotence, which this government has never been willing to make before, that in order to influence or determine the disposition of a vast industry so essential to the national welfare as this one, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has to accept the executorship of the estate. Does the minister seriously mean to say that this government as such, with him there, Minister of Trade and Commerce, Minister of Defence Production, controller of steel and all his other powers, could not determine the disposition of this company without his being an executor of the estate? Of course it could, and the argument he uses there is but the most absurd of rationalizations in an attempt to justify what is an impossible position.

I realize that in these remarks I have been discussing a matter of principle. It is a matter of principle, this question of the conflict of interest between the private capacities of ministers and their public duties, and it does affect the very structure and foundation of our government. These principles, principles we talk about in the House of Commons, may not be important to the minister personally. They may be regarded by him as a nuisance. He may have the view, and it does achieve results, that it is what you do that counts, not how you do it, and that therefore these matters are but of secondary importance and when they get in his way they are to be brushed aside.

But these principles, although they may not be important to the minister personally, are important to the system under which the government of this country and the government of every democratic country works. They are fundamental to the system. They are an integral part of the system and the system cannot be preserved, cannot work and will not continue into the future as a vital, effective system unless these principles are observed and maintained. These principles are not only fundamental and vital to the system but they are also fundamental and vital to the people who are the beneficiaries of this system of government founded upon the principles that I have been discussing.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Finally, sir, I say again that it is the minister's duty, however inconvenient he finds these principles and their observance, to resolve the conflict of interest by ending that conflict in whichever way he wants, but in my view he has to make the decision and to end it. I only trust that he himself will do so and that if he does not see fit to do so the Prime Minister will insist that it be done, and that he will, by ending the conflict, show respect for our system and the principles upon which it is founded.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to support the argument advanced by the hon. member for Kamloops. A year ago my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, presented to the house bill 379, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. While the bill did not pass it did result in the Leader of the Opposition, the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre all making very interesting contributions to the discussion. The bill was very simple. Its main provision was in these words:

> No person who is a director of a company incorporated under the Companies Act or under any other public general act of Canada, or incorporated by a local or private act of Canada, shall be eligible to be a member of the Queen's privy council for Canada and a minister of the crown.

The member for Winnipeg North Centre did not make any reference to a member of the cabinet being an executor but I think the spirit of the discussion which took place at that time should have been observed by all members of the cabinet. I think that we all appreciate the position in which the minister found himself when an old and trusted friend made this sort of request, but those who seek public office have to be prepared to make sacrifices. One of my best friends passed away while the pipe line debate was on. The invitation to be present at the funeral was one that I found very difficult to turn down, but I had been elected by 50,000 people to represent their interests in parliament and much as I sympathized with the relatives of my very close friend I felt obliged to say that I could not go west to attend the funeral.

I am sure that the late Sir James Dunn would have understood the position of his very good friend if the minister in charge of this department had said: In the event that I am no longer a minister of the crown when you pass away I shall, of course, be prepared to discharge my obligations as an executor but should I be a minister of the crown then in the interests of the estate, in the interests of the people of Canada I feel that I should not be placed in this impossible position.

I find that on July 20 last year, near the end of the session, the Leader of the Opposition found occasion to raise this very important question because, as hon. members will recall, the Minister of National Revenue was involved in an estate in connection with his duties as a director of a trust company. It seems hard to understand why, although we discussed that question on July 20, the Minister of National Revenue had resigned his position and yet did not inform us. I submit that that was a typical disregard for parliament of which this government, which has been in office so long, has been guilty on so many occasions. I think that when the Leader of the Opposition raised this question it would have been a very easy matter for the Minister of National Revenue to have risen and stated: While I insist that I have not abused my position as a minister, in view of the public criticism and to protect the good name of parliament and parliamentary institutions, I have resigned. But the minister did not show us that courtesy.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member, I think, will sympathize with me if I ask him if he will come back to the Departmnt of Defence Production.

Mr. Nicholson: Very well, Mr. Chairman. I submit that the discussion we had a year ago, with reference to a cabinet minister who had disregarded the traditions which have been accepted in Great Britain for so many years, is a matter that we should have before us now. The point of view of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he presented his bill last year is, I think, relevant. He referred to a discussion which took place here away back in 1921 when the Liberals were in the opposition, and when Mr. McMaster had this to say as reported at page 586 of Hansard of March 4, 1921:

> I say that no man who is a minister of the crown in this country has any time left to fulfil the duties of a director. That is my first proposition, and I think it is a proposition which will appeal as a reasonable one to members of this house. We have the best of authority for the statement that no man can serve two masters. Either he will have to neglect his duty as a minister or he will have to neglect his duty as a director, if he holds both positions at one and the same time.

Instead of the word "director" I am sure that if Mr. McMaster were discussing it he would substitute the word "executor".

Then, at page 587 of the same volume Mr. McMaster went on to say:

> Now, we should be, and I trust we all are, jealous for the good name of this house. We are told by authority, almost as great as the authority I have just quoted, that we are to "abstain from the very appearance of evil". Years ago Tennyson wrote about "The fierce light that beats upon the throne".
>
> Well, I do not think that light is comparable to the fierce light that beats upon men who enter parliament at this time of the world's history. I do not think that I am using the language of extravagance when I say that all governmental institutions are on trial and are being subjected to criticism which is not only strong but often bitter and often unjust.

An hon. Member: Get back to defence production.

Mr. Nicholson: I am sure the hon. member who just interrupted will have the greatest respect for his former leader, Mr. Mackenzie King, who took part in the debate and shared the views of Mr. McMaster on this important question. I think the point Mr. McMaster raised is true, that a minister is busy enough performing his duties as a minister without being asked to be responsible as an executor of what is, I understand, the largest estate that has ever been built up by a single person in Canadian history. I find in the telephone directory—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): That is not true, incidentally.

Mr. Nicholson: The minister says it is not true, but it is one of the largest. My information that it is the largest comes from one newspaper, but if the minister will tell us of a larger estate that will be of interest. I find that the minister is responsible to the parliament of Canada for Atomic Energy of Canada; Canadian Arsenals; Canadian Commercial Corporation; Crown Assets Disposal Corporation; Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited; T. C. A.; Polymer Corporation and Trade and Commerce. Surely there is enough work in the Department of Trade and Commerce to keep any ordinary person busy for all the hours that there are in the days and in the years.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion last year which resulted in the Minister of National Revenue giving up a connection with a corporation with which he had very sincere and close connections, this Minister of Defence Production should not place his colleagues in the position in which they are now placed. I refer again to the part the Prime Minister took last year when this matter was before parliament, as indicated on page 6451 of Hansard for July 20, 1955. The Prime Minister of Canada said that when he was asked to take a cabinet portfolio, there was not any question about what his course of action should be. He said:

> I had felt that there would have been no possibility of conflict of interest in the way I discharged my duties as minister, when I became one, and those other connections, but I did not want to be exposed to any unfair criticism, which is unfortunately frequently the lot of those who do attempt to serve their fellow citizens in public life.

Having set that example himself as the leader of the government, I cannot understand any member of parliament considering accepting a cabinet position without matching the example set by the Prime Minister. As the hon. member for Kamloops pointed out, the corporation with which the minister is now associated in such an intimate position is one corporation that benefits very directly from the policies of the government. The Algoma Steel is one of the very important beneficiaries of the decisions made by the minister in his capacity as Minister of Defence Production or in some of the other capacities in connection with other responsibilities. I feel that in order to maintain the good name of parliament, which is receiving so much criticism at this particular time, the minister should make his choice. He should either give up his post as minister of the crown or give up his connection as executor looking after one of the largest personal estates which has been accumulated in Canadian history.

Before I sit down I also want to express the hope that the minister, who apparently receives very little criticism as a result of his decisions as Minister of Defence Production, would use similar ideals and similar policies in dealing with some of the other departments, more particularly the department which affects the people I represent, the department which looks after the marketing of farm products. I think in due course we will have a discussion of that. I wish he would carry over to his other departments the idea that those who perform essential services should be paid on a cost plus basis.

Mr. Dickey: I do not want to take any lengthy part in this discussion, Mr. Chairman, but I do want to say a word or two. First of all, I want to deal with the implication, which I think was very unwarranted and improper, contained in the final portion of the remarks made by the hon. member for Kamloops. He very clearly implied that he considered what had occurred indicated that the Minister of Defence Production is not personally concerned about the principles with which the hon. member for Kamloops was dealing and which he was trying to explain and expose. That is, on the facts, a completely unwarranted imputation and I am sure that if the hon. member for Kamloops had realized what the facts are that have been explained to him, and to the house, he would certainly agree. What is the position? The position is that the Minister of Defence Production has explained he was asked to accept this executorship for a particular purpose by his late friend. He then secured the opinion of counsel, an opinion which he asked for and which was to guide him as to whether or not there would be any impropriety in his accepting this trust. He explained to the committee that the opinion of counsel he had engaged was that there would be no conflict of interest which would require him to refuse to accept the responsibilities that he had been requested to accept.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the parliamentary assistant the letter and also the opinion that was given?

Mr. Dickey: No, I have not the opinion. The opinion was to the Minister of Defence Production. The point I am making, and which I am sure the hon. member will appreciate, is that this was an honourable and proper approach to the question of principle with which the hon. member for Kamloops was trying to deal.

Any Canadian citizen who is in doubt about his rights under the law has the proper recourse of going to a reputable firm of solicitors, requesting their advice, getting their advice and acting upon it. Now, that advice may, in the opinion of some other people, be wrong, but it is quite improper and quite unreasonable for the hon. member to impute, as he did, that what has occurred indicates any lack of concern on the part of the Minister of Defence Production for the principles which are involved. I submit it is clear that he acted as any honourable and sensible Canadian would act under similar circumstances, and that his position is protected in so far as that is concerned by the actions which he took.

Now, let us look at the matter of principle. First of all, I think I should put on the record something which will perhaps be presumed but should, I think, be definitely stated, and that is that the acceptance of an executorship is a fiduciary capacity; that accepting it does not create any personal interest of any kind in a person who acts as such executor or trustee; that he, as an executor or trustee, has no personal interest in the assets of the estate which he accepts, or anything of that kind; that this is purely a fiduciary capacity which carries no personal interest of any kind in any shares or in any other asset which may be in the estate.

Mr. Fulton: Will the parliamentary assistant not agree with me that once having accepted, the trustee is under the personal obligation to discharge the terms of the trust, and in so discharging them to fulfil his duty to the estate? His duty to the estate is a fiduciary one, but he is under a personal obligation to discharge it.

Mr. Dickey: I will deal with that. The point I was making, so that it would be clear on the record, is that there is no personal advantage or interest to the Minister of Defence Production involved. That is the first thing. The second arises out of the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie. He drew in the position with respect to directors. I want to state it clearly so that it will be shown on the record. No trustee or executor of an estate of this kind becomes a director, or has any connection with a company like the Algoma Steel of a directorship nature. The direction of the company remains, as it always was, in the duly elected members of the board of directors, and that the only duty or authority of executors is to deal with the assets of the estate, and if they happen to be shares in one or more companies, the trustees do not in any sense become connected with those companies in the kind of way, or in the kind of association that I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie was trying to indicate.

Let me deal as briefly as I can with the question of the principle that the hon. member raised. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member should have gone a little more deeply into a number of principles and understood and appreciated them better before he took the attitude that he has taken. He quoted a number of references from a particular work and he made the general exposition of the responsibilities of an executor. With that I have no particular quarrel.

What the hon. member overlooks, and what any person who tries to argue the same position that the hon. member tried to establish will overlook, is that the acceptance of a fiduciary relationship or capacity of this kind is one that can only be taken by personal acceptance. As the hon. member knows, the appointment of a certain person as an executor or a trustee under a will does not mean that that person has to become an executor or trustee and accept the responsibility. What the minister has said is that he, after having taken competent legal advice, decided that as he had been assured that he was not going to place himself in a position where there would be a conflict of interest he was prepared to accept the responsibility which had been offered to him. He was accepting that responsibility fully but, with the knowledge and consent of the others who were to act in a similar capacity with him, his activities in that capacity were to be very strictly limited, and limited to the particular purpose which had been set out by the person who had named him an executor and indicated his desire that he should act in that particular capacity and in that capacity only. The position, as stated by the minister, is that he realizes he has a full, joint responsibility with the other executors for the manner in which this estate is administered, but that he is voluntarily limiting his own activities in that position to the particular purpose for which he was asked to act and in which he accepts to act.

Mr. Fulton: My point is, he is saying that but he cannot do it.

Mr. Dickey: That may be the hon. member's opinion but it is not the legal position. What is the position? The position is simply this: If this estate is not properly administered and if a creditor of the estate, or if one of the beneficiaries who are the real owners of all of the assets of the estate, or if some person in that capacity complains that the estate has not been properly administered and brings an action in that respect, the Minister of Defence Production will be equally responsible with all the others to answer to that action. However, he has voluntarily restricted his activities in this position to the responsibility that he has been particularly singled out and requested to assume and that is understood by the other executors and by everybody interested in the estate. The hon. member says he cannot do that. I suggest that he clearly can do that. For example, to go to a field that is a little more familiar, let us look at what is the position of directors of a company. They are in a fiduciary position with respect to the interests of the company. If a question arises for decision before that board of directors in which a director has a personal interest contrary to the interests of the company or where there is any conflict he does not cease to act as a director; all he does is disclose to his co-directors that he has a personal interest in this matter and that in so far as any decision with respect to it is concerned he will take no part in it and will not vote on the motion resolving question.

That is a case which is clearly on all fours with the position of an executor who accepts full responsibility with his other executors but who voluntarily limits his participation in the administration of that estate to the particular point that he has been requested to act upon. I assume from what the hon. member said he does not suggest for a moment that the fact the Minister of Defence Production has accepted the responsibility of remaining an executor of this estate, to take no other part in the administration except to see that the disposal of the assets is undertaken in the national interest, would constitute a conflict of interest which would justify their complaining of his acting in that capacity.

I am not going to deal with the various points raised by the hon. member as potential areas of conflict because my submission is that there is no conflict by reason of the fact the minister clearly stated at the time he accepted the responsibility of the executorship that he was voluntarily limiting his participation in the administration of the estate to that one specific and limited field.

The fact is, the Minister of Defence Production is taking that position and in view of that position he is not accepting any executor's fees or any emolument of any kind from the estate. Therefore the position is that he has no personal interest in the assets, he has voluntarily put aside from himself any activity connected with the estate or with any of the matters the hon. member has raised with the exception of the particular responsibility that has been clearly stated and which I submit to this committee is obviously not one which involves any conflict of interest with his public duties.

Mr. Campbell: I wonder if the parliamentary assistant to the minister would answer a question. What would be the position of the minister, for instance, if the Department of Defence Production wanted a supply of steel? Steel might be in short supply and the Algoma Steel Corporation might say, "We will give you the steel but we will jack up the price". Would the minister not be in a position between the two forces that might be detrimental to him and to the country?

Mr. Dickey: Not at all, Mr. Chairman, because he has no voice in the management of the Algoma Steel Corporation at all, even acting as an executor with full authority; but certainly in accepting an executorship under the circumstances outlined there is not the slightest possible conflict.

Mr. Campbell: But he is putting himself in a very dangerous position.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. member who has just resumed his seat a question. The hon. member has claimed that the minister plans to abstain from certain aspects of the operation of the estate where there might be a conflict of interest. I wonder if the hon. member knows the position the minister will take concerning abstaining from his ministerial duties and some of the operations of his department which in some way or another will affect the steel industry of Canada and the multitude of other interests involved in this estate.

Mr. Dickey: Well, Mr. Chairman, the situation is that the minister announced publicly his intention with respect to his activities with regard to the estate at the time he accepted the responsibility. In so far as his ministerial duties are concerned I can assure the hon. member and the committee that the minister will continue to perform his ministerial responsibilities in the outstanding manner he has always performed them in the past.

Mr. Fulton: That does not answer the question.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Might I ask if perhaps the minister would care to announce his intentions in this respect at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Peel.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I am certain the minister would like to give an answer to the point I raised.

Mr. Pallett: Mr. Chairman, I had some other remarks to make concerning this department but since the speech was made by the senior member for Halifax I think there are certain suggestions contained in that speech which might be dealt with at this time.

The law in Nova Scotia may be different from the law in Ontario; I do not know. But I was always under the impression that the duty of a trustee was to carry out the business of a trust exactly as he would carry out his own business, and that to my mind is the fundamental role of trust. In accepting a trust a man must accept that fundamental role and if he does carry out the business exactly as his own then he must take every means to limit the liability of this trust and increase the profits of it. That is the proper function of a trustee. At the same time it is the proper function of a minister to ensure that the very best interests of the country and the government are carried out in all aspects.

It seems to me there is a head-on collision between those two interests and I think that head-on collision was recognized by the minister when he sought legal advice. The very fact that he asked for the opinion suggests, to me at least, there was some doubt in his mind; and if there is doubt I suggest that it should be resolved in favour of the ministerial position and a resignation from the other so that no doubt can be cast on the position of this minister, or any minister of this government, whoever he may be. His position as minister and his position in the government are much higher than a mere personal interest. There is a standard to which we have looked in the past in relation to governments in this country; they must at all times be above reproach. The very fact that there must have been doubt in the minister's own mind of itself casts some shadow. To suggest, as did the senior member for Halifax, that the majority shareholders do not call the tune in a company—after all, you have to be over 21 years old before you are elected a member of parliament.

An hon. Member: No mention of I.Q.

Mr. Lesage: Is the hon. member 21?

Mr. Pallett: The minister of northern affairs interrupts and says that I am not 21.

Mr. Lesage: You have the brains of a seven year old.

Mr. Pallett: My six year old boy shows more intelligence than some people across the way. But that the majority shareholder of a company does not call the tune is a suggestion we are being asked to accept today. The directors of a company are elected annually. The annual meeting of this company has just been held, and in anticipation that dividends would be declared or that there would be a stock split the shares went up in the neighbourhood of $10 per share. Apparently that did not happen and they went down again.

At the annual meeting of a company the directors report, and they are either allowed to retain office or are removed at the will of the shareholders. The majority shareholder controls who are elected as directors. That must go on the record, and that must be taken as demonstrating that the majority shareholder in a company does in fact control it. For the senior member for Halifax to suggest to us that that is not the position is to ask us to stretch our imaginations just a little bit too far.

When listening to the hon. member I had occasion to reflect upon his statement that the minister should ask for an opinion on a question of principle. That is a serious statement to make about his own minister, that he is not able in his own mind to formulate an opinion on a question of principle. The minister did ask for an opinion after he learned he was to be appointed executor, and I give him full marks for doing so. But to suggest that he would have to ask for an opinion when a principle is involved is for the parliamentary assistant to cast some reflection upon the minister. I suggest that the minister deal with him accordingly in due course.

The parliamentary assistant suggests that the fact that you are named an executor does not mean you assume the full responsibilities of an executor. You do not, provided you renounce. But when you sign the application form you sign an affidavit that you will faithfully administer the assets of the estate. You do not agree to faithfully administer this part or some other part, you swear you will faithfully administer the estate.

As the hon. member for Kamloops has said, in this particular instance the minister found himself in a position perhaps not of his own choosing. He was faced with the conflict between carrying out a duty for a friend, a friend who had built up a large steel industry in this country, a friend who had many other interests in the country, a friend who in the conduct of affairs in the company had not shown too much regard for individual shareholders when declaring dividends, a friend who wanted his friend to carry out the affairs of the estate in the best interests of the company, and carrying out the best interests of this country. The minister can best carry out the best interests of this country as Minister of Defence Production and his other portfolio without having any conflict, without having to resolve in his own mind which is right.

What happens if there is a labour dispute? Supposing the steel strike in the United States extended to Canada; what would be the situation then? The minister would then be in the position of acting as the controller or owner who would call the shots as owner and not from labour's viewpoint, and he would also be in the position of a minister of the government whose function it is to protect labour in this country. How would he resolve that question? There would be a very definite and marked conflict.

I think we have every sympathy for him. I do not envy the position in which he finds himself. I think it is a soul-searching decision which he has to make. About a year ago the Minister of National Revenue was called upon to make a similar decision, and I give him full marks for making it in the right way, no doubt at some personal expense and loss to himself. The Minister of Defence Production has stated that he is not accepting any remuneration from this estate, so there will be no loss incurred. The minister would not be walking out and asking some stranger to be appointed in his place, as there are four other executors of this estate. I leave it to him; his duty to the country is higher than his duty to any individual.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, during the remarks of the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Defence Production the remark was made that in this instance there is no conflict of interest. That raises the question of what constitutes a conflict of interest in so far as a minister of the crown is concerned. The parliamentary assistant drew attention to the fact that the minister had consulted a legal firm and received an opinion. I submit that in matters of this sort where questions of parliamentary government are concerned an examination of the precedents and parliamentary practice would be a better guide.

There is a body of opinion which serves as a guide for all commonwealth parliaments. We have had an instance or two in this house in other years where there have been conflicts of interest affecting cabinet ministers. This is a point which deserves serious consideration. Ministers of the crown are charged with heavy responsibility which we and the people of the country recognize. They have a responsibility for the welfare of the country as a whole.

Over the years the problem of conflict of interest has arisen in the mother of parliaments at Westminster and has been resolved. Statements have been made at different times by prime ministers with regard to what cabinet ministers should do in instances where there was or appeared to be a conflict between their public duties and their private interests.

In this particular case that is before us, though it differs from the problems which have arisen in other instances—that is, it differs from the directorships and it differs from the holding of shares in companies—nevertheless there is an analogy to be drawn from the decisions arrived in the past in relation to those two matters. There are numerous instances within fairly recent times in the house at Westminster of this question of conflict of interest.

The standard work on cabinet government by Ivor Jennings devotes a portion of a chapter to this very problem, and I think the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Defence Production might very well have applied his mind to this before making his statement in the house. Members might be interested in what Professor Ivor Jennings says on this particular question, and I propose to quote from pages 99 and 100 of the book called "Cabinet Government". In 1913 one of the startling cases that occurred in England dealt with the question of shares in the Marconi company. There was an extensive debate. People like Lloyd George were involved. The prime minister of the day, Mr. Asquith, dealt at some length with that exceedingly difficult problem and laid down the following propositions. Some of these, of course, do not apply directly to the point at issue, but I suggest that by analogy the inference may be drawn. Here is what he said:

> The first . . . and the most obvious is that ministers ought not to enter into any transaction whereby their private pecuniary interest might, even conceivably, come into conflict with their public duty. . . . Again, no minister is justified under any circumstances in using official information, information that has come to him as a minister, for his own private profit or for that of his friends. Further, no minister ought to allow or to put himself into a position to be tempted to use his official influence in support of any scheme or in furtherance of any contract in regard to which he has an undisclosed private interest. . . . Again, no minister ought to accept from persons who are in negotiation with or seeking to enter into contractual or proprietary or pecuniary relations with the state any kind of favour. . . . I will add a further proposition, which I am not sure has been completely formulated, though it has no doubt been adumbrated in the course of these debates, and that is that ministers should scrupulously avoid speculative investments in securities as to which, from their special means of early or confidential information, they have or may have an advantage over other people in anticipating market changes.

Then Professor Jennings goes on to make this comment:

> These he stated as "rules of obligation". He added that there were certain "rules of prudence" which had never been formulated and which could hardly be put on precise or universal terms. "One of those rules is that in these matters such persons should carefully avoid all transactions which can give colour or countenance to the belief that they are doing anything which the rules of obligation forbid."

In 1937 Sir John Simon, one of the most distinguished members of the bar of England and of the House of Commons at that time, speaking on behalf of the Prime Minister in a debate which dealt with conflict of interest, used these words:

> In the first place, it is plain that in no circumstances must a man who holds the position of a minister ever allow himself to be in such a situation that his public duty will conflict with his private interests. . . . The second principle is that no man should allow himself to occupy any portion of the time which he is bound to devote to his public duties, and pursuing any private interest whatever, whether it is in playing golf or in the nature of business. The third principle is that inasmuch as the secrets of the government are specially in charge of cabinet ministers, no minister, and particularly, no cabinet minister, must in any circumstances put himself in a position where he is not able to be the complete guardian of those secrets in that there is any possibility of any private interests being served through a knowledge of those secrets.

I do not propose speaking at length on this subject, but I thought it wise to draw attention to this body of opinion that has been built up in England and which is worthy of note in any parliament. The position of cabinet minister is such an important position that parliaments and the public have generally recognized that the interest of the state takes precedence over any other interest a cabinet minister might have, and it is important to bear that in mind. It is important to review that from time to time.

The practice in England, from what I have read about it, is that the Prime Minister takes an interest in the matters in which members of his cabinet may be privately interested, and ensures that there shall be no actual or apparent conflict of interest between their public duty and anything that concerns them privately. That is a fundamental principle with regard to cabinet government.

I think in this particular instance before us the Minister of Defence Production has to examine his position very carefully and consider whether or not a conflict of interest might arise. If there is any possibility that a conflict of interest might arise, I should think his duty would be to divest himself of any obligations that would result in any conflict of that nature. If all ministers of the crown kept before them this fundamental principle there would not be any shadow of suspicion in the minds of the public with regard to anything that was being done by ministers of the crown as such. The feeling would be that they were devoting their whole time and their whole attention to the welfare of the country at large, and that they were not permitting anything in the nature of their own private interests or the private interests of friends of theirs to interfere with their public duty. It is on that basis that I think the minister should consider his present situation.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): Mr. Chairman, ordinarily back here I think we feel a great desire to take part in debates and we find that on a great many occasions we do not seem to have the opportunity. I must say that today I approach this particular task with considerable reluctance. I should like to borrow an expression that is often used by the hon. member for York-Humber, that I approach this job more in sorrow than in anger.

There is a rule, I think, or legal principle that testators cannot rule succeeding generations from the grave. As a matter of fact our laws have been designed to ensure that that does not happen. We have heard of estates being tied up for the lives in being and 21 years thereafter to ensure that no matter how much certain people wished to carry out what they thought were the testator's wishes, there was a restriction upon their position.

I have listened today to the senior member for Halifax and the minister, and it seems to me that they are trying to convey to the house that there is some type of overriding moral obligation on the minister to the late Sir James Dunn. I do not feel that there is either a legal obligation or a moral obligation. I would rather imagine that the testator, had he known the real and true position in which he was putting the minister today, would not have inserted his name as one of the executors and trustees of his estate. I might say that there is a provision for the renunciation of the duties that fall upon an executor or trustee, but that renunciation must be before or at the time of the application for probate.

I say to the senior member for Halifax, as the hon. member for Peel has said, that once the oath is taken the duties are not divisible. Once the oath is taken the responsibilities are there, and I do not feel that you can divide your job as executor and trustee of an estate. I listened to the senior member for Halifax talk about who runs the company and about the directors, and I want to tell him it is very elementary that in actual fact the operations of a company are controlled by the shareholders.

Mr. Richardson: Not at all.

Mr. Hamilton (York West): We will have the opportunity to hear from the corporation experts on the other side of the house. The ultimate authority for the operation of a company rests with the controlling shareholders. I wonder whether the minister is a shareholder. I do not think there is any doubt that under the devolution of estates act upon the death of a testator the full benefit of the shares goes to the executors and trustees. There may be a mechanical requirement, an application for transmission of the shares, but I would assume that in this case even that has been done. I would say that at that time not only are the shares vested in theory but they are vested in fact, and I would not doubt that at this very moment the controlling block of shares in the Algoma Steel Corporation and the share certificates that represent that control read in the names of the executors and trustees of the estate of Sir James Dunn. I would say that in that case the minister is the actual owner of shares in that company.

We have heard a lot about people being directors of companies. We have even asked in this house that a member of the treasury benches resign his office as a director, and I would not doubt that he only owned one share. Here is a case where the shares are vested in a minister who has the right to elect and remove directors and to control the fortunes of this company.

We are not the only people who feel this way about the matter. I am looking at an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune. I am not going to read it, Mr. Chairman, but it points out how ridiculous this situation is. It indicates the position that would arise if the Steel Company of Canada should suggest that now that the minister is controlling some phases of the operation of Algoma he might also be interested in becoming a director of Stelco. We can see how ridiculous that situation would be.

There is no doubt that in addition to the legal arguments that have been made there is a grave problem of principle. This problem might easily be overcome without any sacrifice of the prestige or the position the minister holds by a simple renunciation at this time of his position as executor of this estate.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, before dealing with one aspect of this problem with which the committee is now engaged I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant if in the will there is any limitation on the appointment of the minister as an executor.

Mr. Dickey: My understanding was that the reason the minister's name was placed in the will as an executor was stated in the will, and that he was to perform the functions indicated.

Mr. Michener: He was named as one of the five executors without any special or limited duties?

Mr. Dickey: By a separate codicil, not in the will itself where the other four are named.

Mr. Michener: I submit if there is any limitation or special provision which differentiates his position as an executor from that of the other four it would be relevant to have that clearly on the record so the limitations of that position would be clear to the committee. I am not proposing to speak about the minister's responsibilities as an executor. They have been discussed at length. It is clear what an executor's responsibilities are. It is also clear that the estate has the controlling votes with respect to the corporation in question, the Algoma Steel Company, and that the controlling votes have the power to elect the board of directors. Whether or not the executors are directors, they have the power to name directors at the annual meeting each year, and perhaps the power to recall directors in the course of the year if the bylaws so provide.

But I should like to call the attention of the committee to the other role which the minister has been occupying for a great many years and is engaged in at the present time, in order to point up the possibilities of conflict, whether or not in fact they arise.

It seems to me that the standard of conduct of a minister was sufficiently defined in the debate last year. I recall that a great many definitions by statesmen of the past and present were put on the record. We have heard today from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, so there is no need to repeat the discussion of the standard of conduct. It really amounts to this, that the important thing is to avoid even the appearance of conflict in the discharge of public duties.

The matter I wish to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, is the position in which the minister stands with a number of commercial corporations which are agencies of the crown. There are in fact 14, as has been said today, that are responsible directly to this minister, five of them in his capacity as Minister of Defence Production and the others in his capacity as Minister of Trade and Commerce. One might take two or three of them at random to see the scope of the activities of these corporations and how their affairs might impinge on the affairs of some commercial corporation like Algoma Steel. One might very well begin with the Canadian Commercial Corporation. I have its report here for the year ending March 31, 1956. On page 5 the report states:

> The purposes of the corporation are to assist in the development of trade between Canada and other nations; to assist in the disposal of goods and commodities that are available for export from Canada; and, when requested, to act for the Minister of Defence Production and others in the manner provided by statutes of Canada.

That is the minister whose estimates we are now considering. That corporation carries on very extensive operations. Its balance sheets are set forth in the report, showing assets of $147 million at the end of the fiscal year 1956, and also recording its transactions for the year.

Then the next corporation that I think is worth while considering in this connection is Defence Construction (1951) Limited, whose annual report for 1956 has just been received by the members. This corporation, as its name indicates, does work for the national defence department and it sets out in its report the contracts it has awarded during the year under review. On page 5 the report sets out that 773 new contracts were awarded which, together with change orders issued, had a total value of $143 million. That was a sizeable volume of business, and it is business of a character which undoubtedly brings it into business relationship with the steel companies, including Algoma. These contracts are for the navy, army, air force, and so on.

Now, there is a place where the minister, though not a director of the corporation, is the ministerial head of the corporation and responsible to parliament for a very large commercial operation. If a minister in that position saw fit to do so he could have a very profound effect on the affairs of a corporation in which his interests on the other side, as a private citizen, are involved by reason of his executorship.

That is the kind of situation in which the potential is there and which these rules of conduct and the standard of ministerial integrity are designed to prevent. None of us, so far as I am aware, today have made any charge or suggestion of impropriety, but the impropriety is that this possibility of conflict should be allowed to continue.

Another corporation whose report I have here is Canadian Arsenals Limited, another corporation responsible to the minister as Minister of Defence Production. On the first page of this report I see that it states:

> This year marks the 10th anniversary of Canadian Arsenals Limited which was established in the year 1945, by letters patent, under part I of the Companies Act, 1934: The company:—
>
> (a) produces warlike stores and equipment to the order of the Department of Defence Production. Such stores and equipment may be for the Canadian fighting forces, members of NATO—

And so on. The volume of business transacted by this corporation is also of a very high order.

Those are only three of the five corporations that report to and are under the direction of the Minister of Defence Production. Then there are, as I say, nine more corporations reporting to the same individual in his capacity as Minister of Trade and Commerce, including Atomic Energy of Canada which carries on a very substantial operation and uses many of the products of Algoma. There is Canadian Patent and Development Limited, which seems to be more or less in a field by itself; Eldorado Aviation Limited; Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited; export credits; northern transportation; Trans-Canada Air Lines and more recently the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

So it is evident, I think, that of all the members of the government the Minister of Defence Production, by reason of his great authority and activity in the commercial field in the manufacture and procurement of supplies of all kinds for defence purposes, occupies a role which least of all should have any conflict of interest or the possibility of any conflict of interest with private commercial activities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not intend to cover any portion of the arguments that have been advanced, but I do intend to ask two questions both of which arise out of the explanation made by the parliamentary assistant to the minister during the course of his remarks this afternoon. I began by a reference that I believe summarizes the general attitude of parliaments in the British tradition to the need for ministers of the crown at all times to act in such a way that their conduct is in keeping with the proprieties of parliamentary traditions, and also in their conduct at all times to appear to keep within the limitations that the traditions of the past have imposed upon all who hold the high and honourable position of minister of the crown.

Sir Winston Churchill, as prime minister, enunciated the principles which in his opinion should at all times govern. Those principles are set forth in the British House of Commons Hansard of February 25, 1952. They represent the attitude of a man who was fond of describing himself as a House of Commons man. Because the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce also chose a few months ago to describe himself as a House of Commons man as well, I am sure the suggestions of the then prime minister of Britain will appeal to him. These suggestions regarding the general principles that govern ministers were circulated amongst the ministers and are as follows; I am going to read only those that are pertinent:

> 1. It is a principle of public life that ministers must so order their affairs that no conflict arises, or appears to arise, between their private interests and their public duties.
>
> 2. Such a conflict may arise if a minister takes an active part in any undertaking which may have contractual or other relations with a government department, more particularly with his own department. It may arise, not only if the minister has a financial interest in such an undertaking, but also if he is actively associated with any body, even of a philanthrophic character, which might have negotiations or other dealings with the government or be involved in disputes with it. Furthermore ministers should be free to give full attention to their official duties, and they should not engage in other activities which might be thought to distract their attention from those duties.

In accepting these two general principles I suggest this. It is difficult to understand why the minister persists with such persistency and stubbornness in holding a position as an executor of Sir James Dunn's estate which, however honourable his conduct may be, none the less does permit of a suggestion of a major clash of interest.

The hon. member for Halifax says there is no conflict. I cannot follow him in that. On the one hand there is the position of the minister as executor of one of the largest estates that has ever been administered in this country, an estate that is conservatively valued at over $60 million, in respect of which the Canadian people will, through the medium of taxation, take a very large portion in succession duties. On the other hand the minister, however much he circumscribes his activities, cannot but unconsciously affect the amount of taxation which will be levied against that estate. It is all right; that in no way ascribes anything dishonourable to him. I follow the course in parliament of not casting aspersions of personal impropriety against those who oppose me or those on the opposite side. I think parliament must be above those considerations, and I try to follow that, sir.

Mr. Martin: And particularly in this instance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In all instances.

Mr. Martin: Particularly in this one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I ever rise—and I hope the time never comes that I do—to ascribe to those who oppose me personal wrongdoing, or make that suggestion, it will be more than a suggestion.

I mention that because I felt rather keenly the remarks the minister made to the press regarding the hon. member for Eglinton following a reference to this question in the House of Commons. The minister ascribed to the hon. member for Eglinton what I do not believe should be ascribed to any hon. member inside or outside of the house. I do not intend to quote the words because I do not intend to have those words, unfair as they are to the hon. member for Eglinton, inscribed in the records of the House of Commons and embalmed there for future generations to look at.

However much the minister may wish to dissociate himself from that conflict of interest, it is there. It cannot be removed by the mere say-so of the parliamentary assistant. The minister said he received counsel's advice on this question. The mere fact that he sought counsel's advice indicates that he had in his own mind—

Mr. Dickey: Indicates ordinary prudence in a matter of this kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ordinary prudence? He had in his own mind some grave doubt as to whether or not what he was about to assume in respect to an executorship would have the result of causing a conflict of interest which would be incompatible with either the discharge of his high responsibility as a minister of the crown or his responsibility under the will as an executor.

Mr. Dickey: It was a perfectly proper matter on which to get a legal opinion.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not arguing about whether it was perfectly proper to ask counsel for the advice.

Mr. Dickey: Yes, you are.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact we lawyers would not have a profession unless people sought our opinions.

Mr. Harris: We could not afford to be here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, now, as a matter of fact I could not agree more than I do with the Minister of Finance in that connection; but certainly the extent to which our opinions are sought after we come here does have a very diminishing effect on our incomes in the profession. However, in order to find out whether or not the advice given is apprehended within the criticism that has been offered here this afternoon I intend to ask these two questions. I ask first that the letter from the minister to his counsel, which will set out the questions that were placed before the counsel for opinion, be tabled in the house. Second, I ask that counsel's opinion be tabled. After all, it is so easy to say that counsel's opinion was secured on the question as to whether or not there would be a clash of interest.

As a matter of fact counsel, in order to give that opinion, would have to consider not only legal principles but would also have to consider the principles that have been followed in parliaments which follow British traditions in respect to this matter. That is the first suggestion I make. Let us have the letter asking for the opinion, and also let us have the opinion; for unless we have both of them, merely the ex parte statement on the part of the parliamentary assistant that we have counsel's opinion—

Mr. Dickey: No, the minister's statement; the minister was the one who originally said he had sought a legal opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The opinion of counsel quoted as a buttress and support for the contention that there is no clash of interest should be produced so that each of us may judge as to whether or not the point that has been raised here this afternoon is effectual. Without it the mere say-so on the part of the parliamentary assistant that the opinion was secured by the minister is meaningless. We want to find out what questions were asked and what evidence was placed before counsel in order that we may learn whether or not counsel was giving support to the proposition advanced by either the minister or the parliamentary assistant.

Secondly, the contention is that there is very little interest; after all, it is merely the estate's interest in Algoma Steel. Would the minister advise the number of common shares held by the estate of Sir James Dunn in Algoma Steel? Those are simple questions, and they would go a long way toward clarifying the atmosphere.

Certainly it is passing strange that the opinion of counsel should have been secured by the minister if in the innermost recesses of his mind he had not entertained considerable doubt concerning the propriety of accepting a position with an estate the major assets of which are in a company which, directly or indirectly, has contracts with the Department of Defence Production. In addition to that the estate has an interest in keeping to a minimum the amount of taxation which will be levied against the estate, and it is the responsibility of the executors to preserve that interest.

No doubt there is an explanation, though it has not been forthcoming, of why it should have been necessary to place the minister in an invidious position, one that is difficult to justify; for if we are to maintain our parliamentary position one of the major means of achieving that end is that in our business and personal relationships we must abdicate many of those things which would bring us monetary returns. We must give them up as part of the ransom we pay for the opportunity of public service.

When I hear men in the public service being criticized I always think back to one principle, and it is this. How many men in the House of Commons who are making their contributions would, outside of the house, make much greater returns were it not for the fact that in their hearts and souls they have a desire for public service, to enter public life. All of us must resign ourselves to having less of the material benefits of life. All of us have to make that sacrifice, and because we do that an unwritten law exists which has for its authority generations of parliamentary government. That unwritten law is that not only must we be actually above suspicion in any way but our actions must have that appearance as well.

I believe the answers to the two questions I have asked will go a long way toward clarifying the situation, for until replies to these two simple questions are given all we do is meet a declaration of principle, whether answered by the parliamentary assistant or the minister, by the simple statement that there is no clash of interest. I suggest that the minister place before parliament the opinion he received. He is using the opinion as the explanation of his conduct. Let us see the opinion and the basis upon which it was given.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, earlier in the afternoon I had occasion to ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Defence Production what the minister's attitude might be toward his ministerial responsibility in connection with the problem we are now discussing. I received a rather unsatisfactory answer from the parliamentary assistant and no answer from the minister. I assume the parliamentary assistant has been carrying the ball for the minister in this respect.

I thought it would be interesting to check very quickly into some of the expenditures shown in the public accounts for last year that might be involved in this connection. Unfortunately I was handicapped by not having a list of the companies over which the minister will have some control in his capacity as executor of this estate. As a very minor example, and to show how far down the line this sort of thing can go, I would point out that last year the Department of National Defence, for which the Department of Defence Production procures supplies, equipment and services, is charged with over $100,000 for payments to Canada Steamship Lines Limited. Canada Steamship Lines Limited is one of the major holdings in the Dunn estate—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):— through an intercorporate structure.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I see that the minister shakes his head. Would he like to deny that the Dunn estate and Sir James Dunn had any connection with Canada Steamship Lines Limited?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Indirectly the Dunn estate may have an interest but the shares in question are owned by Algoma Steel Corporation.

Mr. Fulton: Exactly.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): There we are again. The minister shakes his head and then says that indirectly Canada Steamship Lines Limited is controlled by the Dunn estate. That is the type of thing which makes it so difficult to follow these matters through. We receive one answer in one breath and a completely contradictory answer in the next breath. We have established, however, by the minister's own words just now, the fact that this estate of which he is an executor has a very substantial interest in Canada Steamship Lines Limited. We have established from the accounts of the government for the year ending March 31, 1955, which are the latest available, that the government through the Department of National Defence under the control of the Department of Defence Production is a major customer of Canada Steamship Lines Limited. I think this reduces to its essential principle the conflict of interest which exists here.

This is not the biggest conflict of interest by any manner of means, Mr. Chairman. If we had a list of the multitude of companies in which this estate is involved we could take that list and the thousands and thousands of companies with which the Department of National Defence has had some connection, and could show in case after case that there was close correlation between the two.

It seems impossible to me that a man fulfilling his responsibilities as conscientiously as I know the minister will fulfil them as executor of this estate would not come into conflict with his responsibilities as Minister of Defence Production. I lay no claim to high legal knowledge, any more than is in the possession of the average businessman, but I think anyone who has had anything to do with the settlement of an estate or the work of an executor knows that one of the fundamental responsibilities of an executor is to maximize the amount to be realized from that estate, to make it as great as the executor possibly can make it. On the other hand, the responsibility of a conscientious minister is to minimize the expenditures of his department and of the government. I realize, of course, that the minister is not one of those who is known as having an interest in minimizing the expenses of his department or of the government as a whole, but that—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On a question of personal privilege, I have been a minister of the government for 21 years and it has been said in this debate that I have spent more government money than any other man who ever lived in Canada. If every little twerp—excuse me—some one who is just out of kindergarten can get up here and slander me as he likes, I do not like it. I think my hon. friend had better withdraw his statement that I have not spent this country's money carefully.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I do not know to whom the minister was referring when he said just out of kindergarten, but I know it was not to me.

An hon. Member: Have you not graduated yet?

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Undoubtedly the minister was carried away by his feelings at the moment and I quite understand and excuse him. However, I have no intention of changing or withdrawing any words unless—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Go right ahead; no one expects you to do anything decent. You have never bothered about decency since you have been in this parliament; the official snooper of the opposition.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have no intention of withdrawing words.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, are there no terms of decency to be imposed by the Chair in this house?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not too certain to what the hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring. I heard statements from both sides of the house both of which were in the nature of a negative. I do not pretend to be able to quote them word for word. The hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace said something to the effect that the minister was not famous for his spending of the funds of the country with care. In his reply the hon. minister stated something to the effect that the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace was not famous for decency, for doing the decent thing, or something to that effect. If I may say so quite frankly to both sides of the house, I am not called upon to express an opinion as to the courtesy of either expression, but I do not think either one of them went so far as to justify an interruption by the Chair.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As I was saying when the minister made his interjection, I have no intention of withdrawing, unless you so direct, remarks which are perfectly parliamentary and which have been borne out time and again in this house by the minister's own observations and the minister's own answers. When I speak about minimizing the expenditures of this government I am reminded of a French expression which I think is quite adequate, bon père de famille. That is a person who is careful, a person who is cautious, a person who examines expenditures in detail before making them, and above all a person who has a frugal attitude toward money he is expending. I suggest that the minister's rather famous observation of two or three years ago, "What's a million dollars?" hardly indicates a person who is going to be noted for care in the expenditure of public funds.

A few minutes ago the minister said rather proudly—I forget his exact words—that he had spent more money than anyone else in the history of this country. I admit that immediately. I admit also that in many ways and at many times the minister has done a job which has brought great credit to himself and great benefit to Canada. But that has not necessarily made him immune from criticism nor is the minister, because he has a satisfactory record in some respects, necessarily perfect in all respects.

I think as the years have gone by the hon. and venerable gentleman has come perhaps to have great confidence in himself, but that is a confidence which some of us do not always share. I underline the word "always" because I think we should be left in this house—

Mr. Sinclair: Even the gallery does not like it.

An hon. Member: One of your playmates.

An hon. Member: Calling for mother.

An hon. Member: Probably a taxpayer.

An hon. Member: A taxpayer crying protest.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Someone has pointed out that may very well be a taxpayer crying in protest, or it may be a visiting member of the Port Arthur Liberal association.

An hon. Member: The Canadian public.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): No matter what the minister thinks I believe we on this side should be privileged to examine his actions, to go into them with some care, to question him about them if we do not agree, and to criticize him on occasion. That seems to be the major point of difference between the Minister of Defence Production and ourselves. He objects to criticism of any sort.

Returning to the argument which I was making before, and which seemed to cause the minister some concern, the argument is that if anyone will take the areas of economic interest which have come to the minister as executor of the Dunn estate and compare those areas of specific economic and business interests with the suppliers of this federal government, from whom the Minister of National Defence is purchasing supplies, equipment and services, they will find that there is a close correlation between these two fields. In the matter of two or three minutes between the time I came into this house with the volumes of these public accounts—and I went to my office to get them—and the time I got up to speak, I was able to find one of those areas of conflict, and it is a comparatively small one, just over $100,000. Incidentally I was also able to get the minister to contradict himself in the first few minutes of his speech, but that was a by-product and has nothing to do with this particular argument.

As long as those areas of conflict continue —and they will continue as long as the minister holds this executorship—I do not think that we can have the same confidence in his ministerial decisions.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Don't worry about that, smart boy. I don't care whether or not you have confidence.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, it might be a good idea to remind the minister of one of the basic principles of debate in this house, which is that all remarks are directed to the Chair. I remember that on a previous occasion he called the Speaker of this house "junior"; now he is calling you a smart boy.

Mr. Sinclair: Not to the Chair in committee, but to the Speaker of the house.

Mr. Fulton: Certainly in committee.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I enjoy these interruptions. They show how little the members of the cabinet know about the rules of the house.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I will say that this is the most intelligent speech we have had on this subject from the other side.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): This afternoon the senior member for Halifax, had I taken his words as they were intended to impress me and had I no other knowledge of the subject, would have left me with the feeling that the minister was almost a ghost in connection with the executorship of this estate. He had chosen to renounce all his rights, he had chosen to renounce his control over the details of the administration of the estate, and he was only to come in at the very end as a sort of guiding light or spiritual adviser to the executors after everything else had been taken care of.

I must say that the arguments which have been made since that time, which have been from a legal point of view, have satisfied me of the very great responsibilities of the minister in connection with this estate and his obligation to carry out those responsibilities by a very active connection with the detailed administration of the estate. I know he has a lawyer's opinion that indicates that he does not need to follow through on these matters, but I suggest to you that we would not even have lawyers if all of them were always in agreement. I wonder how much trust or confidence can be placed in this one opinion which, as far as I know, has not actually been read into the records of this house, nor has the source itself been defined.

I have some other observations on the first item of this department, but before entering upon those I shall resume my seat so that anyone else who wishes to touch on this specific matter will have an opportunity to do so and so that the debate may be kept together.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not intend to pursue the question that has been before the house during the earlier part of the afternoon, because as I have listened to the discussion I have felt that it has been very adequately covered by my colleagues on this side of the house. I am not discontinuing the discussion at this time because my feelings are any less intense on the matter. I should like to support to the full the statements in regard to this point of principle that has been raised by the other members who have taken part in the discussion.

Before I came to the House of Commons, as a private citizen I was of the opinion that anyone who assumed the position of minister of the crown did so with a sense of responsibility and a sense of humility, as becomes a servant of the public; and I still think anyone who carries out the high responsibility of service to Her Majesty should do so with singleness of purpose and without allowing any other outside interests to interfere or overlap in that peculiar responsibility in a democratic country.

Now I want to give some attention to certain aspects that could be properly discussed under this first item of the departmental estimates before the house at the present time. I want to deal in the first instance with Canada's aircraft production program; second, with the guided missile program, and finally I have some comments to make on the development of our radar screen in general with particular reference to the D.E.W. line development, which is the last aspect of the three-line radar screen to be undertaken in the defence of Canada and the whole North American continent.

The minister, in his statement in introducing the estimates, spent some considerable time on the progress of our aircraft production industry. It was encouraging to note that certain aspects of the program undertaken in the build-up just before, during and after the Korean crisis have now reached completion. He mentioned specifically the Harvard program and the T-33 program as having been completed and the CF-100 Canadian all-weather jet fighter program as well under control at the present time.

I must admit at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that following the drastic decline in our aircraft industry at the end of world war II we have made a fair degree of recovery. At the peak period of production during world war II the aircraft industry in Canada, largely devoted to military production of course, was employing some 120,000 Canadians. I remember receiving some correspondence from a friend of mine, a lady some 65 years of age at that time, and she enclosed a photograph of herself in overalls. During those emergency days she had been called into the aircraft industry and was working on the Mosquito assembly line. Underneath the picture she had written: "I build 'em and you fly 'em."

That was the sort of spirit manifested by Canadians during world war II which made it possible to achieve such a tremendous output in a relatively short time after years of delay by the government in building up a sufficient defence industry in this country. It was the spirit of the people, as demonstrated in that particular incident, that made it possible to achieve such a remarkable level of production in a relatively short time. But by 1946 the aircraft industry had almost completely melted away, with the total number of employees being some 6,000, a tremendous drop from such a high employment level.

The minister told us that the industry has come back in the Canadian economy so that now it occupies ninth place in factory value and is in third place so far as employment of Canadian labour is concerned. In the 10-year interval since 1946 we have recovered to a large extent the ground that was lost through the rather hasty, unwise demobilization of the industry that took place in the immediate post-war years.

It is not necessary this afternoon to discuss in detail the mistakes that were made in the hasty build-up. During the years I have been a member of the house these mistakes and errors in judgment have been pointed out on many occasions. For example, there has been reference to the CF-100 program. After it was realized that we had not made the world safe for democracy and that it was going to be necessary to have some continuing defence measures we moved rather rapidly to produce an aircraft that would be suitable to carry out an essentially defensive role, and the CF-100, or the XF-100 as it was originally called, was gradually put into production.

After many setbacks and mistakes in judgment, which I suppose could have been expected in developing an aircraft of this type from scratch, the CF-100 is now in service in Canada carrying out a basic fighter defence role, and we are informed that it will continue to serve adequately in that capacity for at least one or two years more. In fact it has to serve for the next one or two years, because according to the information we are able to obtain its successor, the CF-105, will not be off the assembly line or in production until two years hence.

I give that brief survey of the history of the CF-100 because I sometimes feel that, with respect to the program under way at the present time, we are heading into some of the same mistakes that dogged our footsteps in our first effort at producing an all-Canadian military aircraft. It was originally expected that the CF-100 would be in demand by the R.A.F. and some of the other allied countries which did not have a modern all-weather jet interceptor available or even in process of production at that time. As it turned out, the CF-100 was never sought by any other country and the total demand for the Canadian all-weather fighter came from our own Royal Canadian Air Force. Today in military or aircraft production—I can almost use the words interchangeably, because by the very nature of the circumstances aircraft production and the stimulus to aircraft production have been pretty closely tied to the demands of defence and military activities—we are gradually shifting the emphasis toward the CF-105 delta wing interceptor and the CL28 anti-submarine or coastal reconnaissance aircraft which is being developed from the Bristol Britannia.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, the house must proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILL

NIAGARA LOWER ARCH BRIDGE COMPANY LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 434, respecting Niagara Lower Arch Bridge Company Limited—Mr. Houck—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: This bill comes to the committee from the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, where one amendment was made.

On clause 1—Declaratory.

Mr. Michener: Would the chairman inform the committee what amendment was made? My copy does not show it.

The Deputy Chairman: In the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee, clause 2 of the bill was amended by adding the word "sale" immediately after the words "provided that such". The clause then would read: "Provided that such sale, assignment, transfer or conveyance shall have been first approved—"

Mr. Michener: This, I take it, is a non-contentious bill and I do not know that it needs any explanation to the committee. The bridge in question is one with which members, I think, may be familiar. It crosses the Niagara river in the city of Niagara Falls, Ontario, to Niagara Falls, New York, and is one of two bridges in that locality, the other being called the Rainbow bridge or honeymoon bridge which is closer to the falls than this by about a mile and a quarter.

This bridge, unlike most of the bridges in the Niagara district, is a privately-operated bridge, being operated by the company described in this bill and a corresponding company on the United States side. The Rainbow bridge is operated by a semi-public commission appointed by the government, as is the Peace bridge at the top of the Niagara river. The only other bridge which spans the Niagara in this district is the one at Lewiston.

As the bill indicates, the purpose is to clear up the authority of the private company which operates the bridge to dispose of its assets, including its franchise, and there appears to be no reason why they should not have the full authority to carry out whatever plans they may have. The bill seems to be limited to that one specific objective, and there seems to be no objection to it.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The business reserved for the private and public bills hour having been disposed of, the house will resume consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

85. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,145,727.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, continuing the discussion that was interrupted at five o'clock, I was making the point that the new developments in our Canadian aircraft industry emphasize the CF-105, the delta wing fighter, plus the CL28, the Britannia coastal reconnaissance aircraft. While these, as military types are meeting a fundamental and primary need in Canada, there is a possibility that we are going to repeat the same mistake that caused some bitter discussion in this house about the CF-100 program. I should like to suggest that mistake was a failure to integrate our military and civilian needs in our Canadian aircraft production policy.

I said previously that by the very nature of things, and it is a matter of record, the military demands for aircraft have been largely responsible for the periods of rapid development in the aircraft industry in all parts of the world. The aircraft is a relatively new invention which came into its own during world war I, made comparatively slight progress between world wars I and II, and has come into its own as a means of transportation since the end of world war II largely as a result of the stimulus during that world conflict.

However, Canada has a very unique opportunity. Perhaps Canada, the U.S.S.R. and the United States are unique in this respect, in that their civilian transport needs provide a real basis for rapid and widespread development of aircraft production. Canada particularly, as an underdeveloped, youthful nation, has an almost unlimited demand for air transportation.

During recent months our shortsightedness in this regard has become increasingly evident. With the demand that has arisen in connection with the development of the north, arising from the construction of the distant early warning radar screen there, we have been made painfully aware of the fact that we have not geared our domestic aircraft industry to supply our own civilian domestic needs. As I look at the program for aircraft development outlined in the annual report of the department, as I examine any other reports that are available, such as the reports of the Department of National Defence, for example, I see no evidence that an attempt is being made to overcome this earlier deficiency in our aircraft program.

Admittedly it is difficult to develop a fighter aircraft that has flexibility of function. The Mosquito aircraft to which I referred, which became the jack of all trades during world war II, was perhaps unique in this respect. So far as the CF-105 delta fighter is concerned, which is being designed for the exclusive purpose of bringing Canada up to date in her fighter defence role, I can readily see there is no possibility of adapting it to civilian uses. That, however, does not remove the possibility—

The Deputy Chairman: On a point of order, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but in his own interest I think I should point out to other hon. members in the house who sit in his locality that at this end of the chamber we are getting very loud noises from the loud speakers, and it is not very clear.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is impossible to adapt the CF-100 and the CF-105 to civilian uses. However, there must be some way in which the resources of Avro Canada, which has built up such extensive facilities in a relatively short period of time, can supplement its purely military function with some kind of civilian function so we can have a more balanced production level.

The minister referred to the necessity of holding back on the production of the CF-100 until such time as the CF-105 comes into production, and that has been the story down through recent years as a valiant attempt has been made to keep in a fully operational state the excellent production facilities, the engineering skills and the engineering personnel that have been developed by Avro Canada. I recall there was an early experiment in this regard as Avro became reactivated after the war, and Canada went so far as to produce a flying prototype of a jet liner, the first jet liner to fly, in anticipation of the jet transport age which is now upon us.

I can recall, for example, the general manager of Avro Canada at that time, a Mr. Walter Deisher, speaking before the Empire Club in Toronto back in 1946, expressing high hopes that Canada would be ahead in the pioneering of the jet age. That was a very visionary approach to the future of aircraft production in Canada, and I felt it was an approach that was heading in the right direction when you think of the nature of our Canadian geography and the peculiar transportation needs that we have on this continent. However, for inexplicable reasons, after the jet liner prototype was produced and had flown successfully, the whole project was dropped, after an expenditure of some $8 million had been made.

I recall at that time, too, that there was some statement to the effect that T.C.A. would be requiring this jet liner, though no specific orders came from T.C.A. The only order forthcoming came from a United States company, the National Airlines of the United States of America. Because the project was dropped that order, of course, could not be filled. That was an attempt to integrate military and civilian needs, and so far as I can see it was definitely the type of aircraft program that Canada required. We have suffered because of our failure to continue development along that line.

Today all the major air lines in all the countries of the world are on the threshold of moving into jet liner transport. We have heard of the tremendous strides Russia has made in this regard. The first appearance of the Russian jet transport aircraft in connection with the visit of Khrushchev and Bulganin to England brought some rather surprised comments from the aircraft experts of the western world. Trans-Canada Air Lines itself is now thinking in terms of a shift to jet planes, and I understand that rather substantial orders, involving the expenditure of some $35 million, have been placed for the DC-8 jet liner. This is money that could have very well been poured into the development of our own Canadian aircraft industry.

In regard to the CL28, which is a version of the Bristol Britannia, it seems to me that in the production of this aircraft it would be much easier to tie in military needs with civilian needs. The Bristol Britannia aircraft is an outstanding turbo-prop aircraft. In fact it is one of the more efficient and more popular aircraft in production at the present time. I believe Canadian Pacific Air Lines are going to adapt the Bristol Britannia turbo-prop jet aircraft to meet their needs in the interim period before the turbo-jet transports become fully operational. On the basis of the statistics that are available they have chosen the Bristol Britannia because, in comparison with other similar aircraft available, in terms of pay load, fuel costs per mile, fuel costs per pay load unit and general operational proficiency, the Britannia 310, the Bristol Britannia, is far ahead of any other similar types.

I must confess that I have never had an opportunity to look into this situation in detail, but looking at it from a common sense, layman's standpoint it would appear to me that Canada, with her rapidly growing need for transport aircraft of this type, by going into the production of the CL28 might easily adjust the production line of Canadair to have both a military and a civilian operation.

There is another aircraft company in this country which does not come directly under the minister's purview but which during world war II played a most important role in providing military aircraft for use by Canadian air force personnel. I refer to the de Havilland company. They have a nicely balanced civilian-military operation in that they are producing the Otter and the Beaver which are being used—the Otter particularly—in increasingly large numbers by the United States air force. They also are the main stand-bys as light transports in northern Canada. That is the sort of program that will produce the most efficient and effective type of aircraft industry in this country, and it would avoid the mistakes involved in our earlier programs, the initial production of the CF-100, and so forth, which resulted in the expenditure of large sums of money which would have been quite unnecessary if the whole scheme had been carefully thought out beforehand. I believe my colleague the hon. member for York West will deal with this more comprehensively.

I wish now to move on to the guided missile program that has been referred to by the minister in his comments and in various reports. It would appear that Canada is undertaking some research in the realm of guided missiles, one of the most costly military programs in the modern military scheme of things. In the white paper on defence, at page 35, there is a sentence which reads:

> In 1950 it was decided to undertake a practical but experimental Canadian project. The prime purpose of the project was to build up within the board's staff—

That is the defence research board.

> —and throughout Canadian industry a team of scientists and engineers capable of developing and producing guided missiles in this country, while familiarizing officers of the Canadian services with problems and techniques involved in using such weapons.

I presume that program gave birth to the "Velvet Glove" missile. There was newspaper comment to the effect that the "Velvet Glove" missile had been completely successful but it was being abandoned because it was not up to the standards of similar missiles under development in the United States. I would just like to refer to the double talk involved in that excerpt from the white paper which I read a moment ago. The sentence reads:

> . . . it was decided to undertake a practical but experimental Canadian project.

The words "practical but experimental" are used there but obviously the word "practical" is redundant because after an expenditure of several million dollars this particular missile was discarded as being of an entirely experimental nature, and it will never reach the practical level because it has been decided by those concerned that it is inferior to other available missiles.

I do not know how far Canada can go in competing in this extremely expensive program of dabbling in guided missiles research. When the secretary for defence in the United States, Mr. Wilson, first took office he came to the conclusion it was a project that was much too expensive for that country with its tremendous financial resources to tackle, and he was of the opinion that the whole thing should be scrapped as visionary and in the realm of the Buck Rogers scheme of things. His advisers have since been able to persuade him that the scheme is not visionary but very practical and extremely necessary, and some $2 billion have been provided for research in this particular field of defence production and development.

I do not think Canada can compete with that sort of money; we do not have $2 billion to devote to research of this kind, and I hope the minister and the officials concerned will not become embroiled further in throwing money down the drain in this regard. I repeat that this sentence containing the words "practical but experimental" is double talk. The "Velvet Glove" missile was intended to be practical but it did not turn out to be as practical as was intended, so it was passed off as being merely an experimental project. I do not think Canada has the resources to throw away on that type of research development, particularly when we have an ally, a neighbour on the North American continent, who is as anxious as we are to see that this continent is properly defended and is doing outstanding work in this field.

From time to time it has been pointed out by the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Defence Production that the share of Canada and the United States in a program of this kind has to be apportioned on a co-ordinated basis. We have been informed that Canada's defence role is just that; it is defensive. It is not offensive but defensive. We have agreed that with our resources the essential function of Canada, in the air in particular, is to provide the necessary fighters to meet any attack that might come across the northern regions. I have been interested to note that at the commonwealth prime ministers' conference all the prime ministers concerned have come to the conclusion that we in North America are very vulnerable in this regard and that an enemy who might contemplate attacking this continent from the north would certainly consider Canada as the primary target.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but he has exceeded his time.

Mr. Dinsdale: I started at 5.15 p.m., Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: I am glad the hon. member brought that up. I have been looking for several days for an opportunity to mention this to the committee. The hon. member spoke before five o'clock and we recognized him again after five. The chairman and I have proposed always to do that: where in committee of the whole a member was interrupted, to recognize him more or less as a matter of course or right after we resumed, whether it is later that day or the following day. But if we are going to continue to do that it will be necessary for us to add the two times together for the purpose of one speech. Otherwise, of course, we would be permitting one hon. member to make two consecutive speeches, which would hardly be fair to the committee.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, just following up what has been said by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, I think the minister might elaborate a bit on the guided missile program for Canada. He touched upon it in the course of his remarks, but I think much more should be said about it because of the complexity of the issue involved and the fact that other countries have moved into this field on a much more elaborate scale than Canada. I think it is important for us to find out exactly what we are doing and what we can expect to accomplish with the limited funds at our disposal. I appreciate the fact that it is important to have people trained in this particular field.

We are informed that the guided missile is the weapon of the future, that it will not be many years before the bomber will be outmoded and the intercontinental guided missile the ultimate weapon. In the few years remaining before that development is complete guided missiles with a shorter range are considered to be desirable, and it is important to know just what we can do along this line and whether or not it would be better to work more closely in co-operation with the United States or adopt some of their developments along that line.

The report of the Department of Defence Production for the year ending December, 1955, does not say a great deal about guided missiles. I find just one paragraph on page 16, which indicates that during 1955 a guided missile called "Velvet Glove" was produced to a limited extent for service trials by the Royal Canadian Air Force. From that valuable experience was gained. The paragraph continues:

> A fully developed missile production complex has thus been added to the defence production base. Although it appears that the "Velvet Glove" will be superseded by another air to air guided missile in the operational requirements of the air force, the benefits gained from this program will facilitate the development of production in Canada of the new equipment.

Is the guided missile which is superseding the "Velvet Glove" well advanced in its development or has it been outmoded by developments elsewhere? There was an article in the Financial Post of April 28 of this year which cast some doubts on the matter. It referred to an air to air missile called the "Sparrow", which I presume is the one that is superseding the "Velvet Glove". The article indicates that some difficulty has arisen in connection with that development. I wonder if the minister would give us a little more information on this program.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend wishes me to comment on the missile program. Some two or three years ago an appropriation was made by the Department of National Defence to undertake an experimental project in the field of guided missiles. The project was to be an air to air missile. By undertaking that work we sort of joined the club of those who were attacking the same problem. This allowed us to exchange information with the United Kingdom and the United States regarding the missile program. Several air to air missiles were under development at that time, I would think as many as ten different missiles. We had one, I think there were five or six in the United States and certainly two or three in the United Kingdom.

We proceeded to develop the "Velvet Glove" and we brought it to the stage where firing tests were made. By that time we had to choose whether to go into production with the "Velvet Glove" or whether there was a better missile. Obviously the fact that we had developed a missile was no reason to proceed with its full-scale production if there was a better or more appropriate missile in production elsewhere. We found by that time that the United States had adopted the "Sparrow" missile for a similar project. The project we had in mind was armament for a supersonic plane. Thorough investigation of all projects of a similar kind indicated that the "Sparrow II" was an appropriate weapon for the CF-105. We have therefore made arrangements to undertake production of the "Sparrow II" missile as the weapon for the CF-105 aircraft.

Comment has been made that we lost money spent in the development. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that if we are to be held to account for every miss we make in a design and development program the position will become hopeless. We would just have to give up design and development work. We in Canada have been exceedingly fortunate in this connection. I do not know of any country with the record we have. We undertook to design an all-weather fighter plane, and we did so successfully. We undertook to develop a jet engine, and we did so and built it in great numbers. We found both the aircraft and engine to be the equal of anything produced within that power range before or since. That was a very lucky stab, in my opinion. In fact I made a little bet with a man associated with one of the projects when we were starting both programs. I offered ten to one that both those programs would not come off and I paid up later on.

Just look at the results in England. A number of planes have been developed there and brought to the stage of prototypes, but few have survived to go into quantity production. I would think the average would be about one in six or one in eight. The proportion in the United States is similar. I made a trip two years ago to look over the aircraft testing at Muroc lake and I think they had some five or six aircraft of the type of the CF-100, of which only two have survived.

We must expect that some of the developments undertaken by the government will be casualties, but the attitude of the opposition seems to be that if we spend money we must produce a weapon and the weapon must be successful or a crime has been committed against the taxpayer. My hon. friend referred to our first attempt at building a jet liner. It is true we had the manufacturing capacity and we wished to keep a nucleus staff working at Malton. Therefore we undertook to produce a jet passenger plane. We brought it to the prototype stage; and while it is true it flew, there was everything wrong with it. It had to carry sand bags in the tail to fly properly.

Mr. Dinsdale: Not according to reports.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I get my reports and the hon. member gets his. I have to trust mine and I am sure his are not accurate. Nevertheless, we spend the money allocated to us for specific projects, and we get reports which we believe are accurate. It so happened that the Comet was being developed at the time, and although the Comet did not come into production until two or three years later there was nothing encouraging about the results of that prototype at Avro on which we had spent $6·6 million.

There was a demand for warplanes. We had developed the CF-100 in the meantime. It was coming into production, and all the floor space at Malton was needed for that project. I may say that as Minister of Defence Production I was very happy indeed to call it a day with the jet transport. After the second world war we had a similar situation at Canadair, and we also needed transport planes. The result was that we developed there a plane which is known as the North Star in Canada and the Argonaut in England. We had the usual production and starting up troubles. What was the result? We fought the 1949 election on the question of whether or not the North Star and the Argonaut were good planes. It is not much encouragement, it seems to me, for this country to undertake design and development of its own equipment if, in the event that we do not produce the best product coming out at that time, we are to be attacked politically in this house.

That is the position with the "Velvet Glove". It was not the best air to air missile of its day. We are choosing the best with which to go into production. I have no apologies to make for the "Velvet Glove". We created manufacturing facilities and trained a considerable number of men in the manufacture of components for an air to air missile. What we call the learning curve has been brought up to a point, and that fact will be a saving as we get into production on the "Sparrow II".

Mr. Churchill: The minister has given us a good account of what has been going on. I think he has not been quite fair to the opposition to suggest that just because ill fate attends some of the efforts of the Department of Defence Production, we think it is all wrong. That is not so. We realize that a certain amount of experimentation is necessary, and it is quite true that in the United States and the United Kingdom a great deal of experimentation has been carried out and they have had to drop certain projects. I was reading just the other day about their aircraft program in the United Kingdom, where the government admitted that too many projects had been attempted and they are now concentrating on much more limited numbers.

That is inevitable, I presume, in any of these fields, but there is one point with which the minister did not deal. When we are critical of a project such as the guided missile it is because we have this in mind. The guided missile is being produced for a very definite purpose, that is defence. At what stage are we going to be ready to provide that defence? If we are constantly in a stage of experimentation we have nothing on the production line to turn over to the air force, hence the criticism that we are prepared to offer to a program that is constantly in a state of experiment and not in a state of production. It is the defence of the country that is of major concern, and the earlier our aircraft are provided with a suitable guided missile that will assist that defence the better. But if, from year to year, we are to be told that the experiment is going on, that we tried the "Velvet Glove" a few years ago and it is not very satisfactory, that now we are trying the "Sparrow" and next year it will be some other type of guided missile, in the interval what has the air force got?

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

It seems to me that a program of experiment and design has to go along hand in hand with one of production of a recognized suitable missile. It may be from time to time, if the United Kingdom or the United States has devised a missile that is satisfactory, that should be procured for our air force until such time as experiments in Canada prove that there is a superior type available and that production can be commenced immediately.

The same holds true of aircraft. We have dealt with that on other occasions. Now, referring again to guided missiles, there is the whole field of ground to air guided missiles. Are we entering into that field, or are we going to rely upon the experience of the United Kingdom and the United States? Somewhere or other the minister has to draw the line. As the member for Brandon-Souris has pointed out, the guided missile program is extraordinarily expensive. How much of Canada's money should be put into that? Or are we going to draw on the experience of these other larger and wealthier countries? I should like the minister to say whether they are intending to do anything on the ground to air guided missiles.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact this debate should take place on the estimates of the Department of National Defence. The Department of Defence Production does not decide military programs; it has no money other than that vote in the estimates before us today, totalling about $22 million, I think. We take up projects that are chosen by the air force and for which the air force is willing to provide a budgetary encumbrance, and we proceed to develop the weapon designated by the air force. It has been suggested that we are experimenting with the "Sparrow II". That is not the situation. We are arranging to produce the "Sparrow II". The "Sparrow II" is a proven weapon, and we shall go into production on a proven weapon.

I cannot say just what the defence research board is experimenting with. That is outside my purview. We procure for the defence research board as instructed, but we do not go inside their laboratories officially to know what they are doing. As far as I know, no one has an operational ground to air missile except the United States, which has the Nike. The Nike is the only proven ground to air missile today. I understand that the military view is that the Nike would not be of much assistance to us here in Canada.

Therefore, to the best of my knowledge we are doing nothing important on a ground to air missile.

Mr. Churchill: Why do you say the Nike will be of no use to us in Canada?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): We have not the large centres of population that are adapted to protection by the Nike. The Nike is a very expensive weapon, calling for a very expensive installation. To warrant that there must be a very considerable concentration of population.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the Nike not designed to destroy intercontinental ballistic missiles or strategic bombers?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): No. My hon. friend has been reading detective stories.

Mr. Dinsdale: No, I have been reading Russian reports, and I would well advise that the minister give some attention to that point. For example, I have in my hands a report of last January which is fairly authoritative. It comes from the Alsop brothers, who seem to have pipe lines into high level military circles in the United States. It is most impressive the way their forecasts or their comments finally come true. On January 3 of this year the Alsop brothers said:

> Last Thursday Marshal Bulganin grimly boasted to the meeting of the supreme Soviet in Moscow that the Soviet armed forces would soon have an intercontinental ballistic missile, or ICBM in current Pentagon jargon.

That is not from Buck Rogers; that is from very responsible journalistic commentators. The article goes on to say:

> The truth is that the Soviets have quite regularly telegraphed their weapons development punches boasting about each new weapon as soon as they were confident they had solved the design problem and were preparing for a test. For instance Vyacheslav Molotov told another Moscow audience that the Soviets already possessed an A-bomb just about a year before the first Soviet A-bomb test in September, 1949.

Apparently it is reports of that kind from responsible sources that caused Mr. Wilson to change his mind with regard to his attitude toward the missile program in the United States. I understand that weapons like the Nike and even more advanced types are designed to destroy bombers and ICBM weapons far beyond the range of built-up areas, because once the bomber or this more deadly weapon, the ICBM, got through to a built-up area, defence would be useless inasmuch as the lethal power of thermonuclear weapons is such that total destruction would be the effect in any case. Therefore I would say the Nike would have some important strategic value in our Canadian defence set-up.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the minister if there is not continuous consultation with the United States counterpart of defence production. Are we not coordinating? Do we not consult as to sharing the financial responsibility and so forth, or do we make our own suggestions and proceed without reference to anything they are doing south of the line?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There is constant consultation. I think Canada is aware of everything the United States is undertaking in the way of production, just as the United States is familiar with what we are undertaking here. Teams go back and forth between production plants constantly. There is no difficulty about that. My difficulty is to follow the imagination of my hon. friend when he talks about intercontinental ballistic weapons as in being and the fact that the Nike will shoot them down, both of which are fantastic suggestions.

Mr. Dinsdale: Our whole defence program is fantastic and out of date if the minister says that, because by a combination of the CF-105 and air to air guided missiles we contemplate meeting any possible offence from the air for the next ten years, or until such time as we have ground to air missiles that will meet the threat of weapons contemplated not by me but by responsible commentators such as the Alsop brothers.

I have followed them closely for years. Members of the house have to depend for information on sources such as that because we have difficulty getting inside information from government sources. I follow as carefully as I can these news commentators on international affairs. I read the second paragraph concerning the Soviet prophecy regarding the development of the A-bomb which was scoffed at at the time but which became an actuality within a year. Based on that pattern, Stewart and Joseph Alsop expect that within a year from last January there will actually be ICBM missiles in production.

Just after the last war I remember there was a scramble for the German scientists who had done advanced research in this particular field during the war. The minister says I am dabbling in fantastic dreams. As a night fighter overseas I remember that we had to cope with the V-2, and I think the minister knows as well as I do that the V-2, which was actually in operation in 1945, was something from Buck Rogers' dreams of the future because it was a substratospheric weapon. Perhaps it was not intercontinental but it was certainly an intercountry ballistics missile. It was completely indestructible by any known defence measures. All we could do was sight the point of take-off by spotting the rocket discharge and give a radio reference, with the hope that an intruder force would be able to move in soon enough to destroy the launching sites.

The Germans had the V-2, the earliest equivalent of an ICBM weapon, in 1945, and the only improvements necessary on the V-2 are a hydrogen warhead, which is now available, greater range and greater accuracy. Those are the only improvements necessary. Russia was successful in getting most of these German scientists who had developed both the V-2 and V-1. That was ten years ago. Therefore I defend myself in the strongest terms possible and say that this is not a pipe dream. It is a cold and hard factual reality, and we should be giving some attention to it.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As I have said, I think we had both better depend on military intelligence, and I do not have it in my possession except as I get it from my colleague the Minister of National Defence. I have had the privilege of visiting rocket experimental stations in the United States. I have seen the Nike shoot down planes, and I saw what the situation was at that time. I do not know what it is today, but certainly there is no military intelligence indicating that there is an intercontinental ballistics weapon in being or likely to be in being for some years. I think I can state that quite accurately. However, as I said before, I am not qualified to discuss the defence of Canada. That is the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Dinsdale: There should be co-ordination.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, we co-ordinate in that I build nothing except as my colleague gives me the money to pay for it, but I think I am qualified to discuss war production in Canada during the fiscal year under review, and if we can get back to that subject I think we will make progress. In the meantime, it is six o'clock.

Mr. Michener: Before the minister closes—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Michener: —would he tell us the arrangements with regard to the production of the "Sparrow"? Is it on licence from the United States or—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Michener: Well, we will leave that until next day.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, July 2, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DOMINION DAY

89TH ANNIVERSARY OF CONFEDERATION

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, today Canadians are celebrating the 89th anniversary of the birthday of Canadian confederation. I should like to suggest that we follow precedents established in recent years when the house happened to be in session on this day and stand and sing together "O Canada" and "God Save the Queen".

Whereupon the members of the house rose and sang

O Canada
and
God Save the Queen

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT IN TENDERING RESIGNATION

Mr. Speaker: I should like to make a statement to the house. On Friday last the Leader of the Opposition rose on a question of privilege in connection with the publication in a newspaper of two paragraphs extracted from a private letter that I wrote to a free lance writer who occasionally contributes an article to the Montreal newspaper La Patrie. Notwithstanding the fact, a well-known fact, easy to verify by those who do not know that Mr. Cinq-Mars, the author of the article in question, is only a free lance writer, the Ottawa Journal in an editorial which appeared in Saturday's edition said I wrote to the "editor" of the newspaper La Patrie.

On Friday last the Leader of the Opposition contended that if the expression "my accusers falsified the facts for their own political ends" was used in the house it would be the duty of the Speaker to call for a retraction immediately. In its Saturday editorial the Ottawa Journal supported the contention of the Leader of the Opposition in this regard. My view, well-supported, I think, that the expression would be unparliamentary only if it read "my accusers deliberately falsified the facts", was completely disregarded. I had referred to a recent case at page 5382 of Hansard of June 26, 1956. The hon. member for Kootenay East said this:

> The leader of the C.C.F. party, answering an interjection by myself, at the time he was attempting to distort the facts as he has in the past, saying that we were responsible for the breaking of the rules—

The hon. member for The Battlefords (Mr. Campbell) rose on a point of order and asked that the expression be withdrawn. I ruled that the hon. member should indicate that:

> . . . he had no intention whatever of accusing the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar of deliberately distorting the facts in this house.

On June 4 last while the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) was speaking, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) rose on a question of privilege and said, as reported at page 4651 of Hansard:

> The hon. member for Acadia, Mr. Speaker, has just made two remarks which are a grave offence against privilege and a falsification of the fact.

And he was not asked to withdraw.

On May 30, 1956, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) as reported at page 4462 of Hansard said the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) had deliberately deceived him. I asked the hon. member for Selkirk:

> . . . because he knows it is against the rules to say that an hon. member of this house has deliberately deceived another hon. member, to take the corrective steps.

On February 16, 1956, as reported at page 1268 of Hansard, while the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Ellis) was speaking the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) rose on a question of privilege and said:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I suppose nobody should pay any attention to the ravings of the hon. gentleman opposite, but after all, when he deliberately misrepresents what I said, I suggest that I should draw that fact to the attention of the house.

I ruled that the hon. member for Rosthern:

> . . . should not indicate that the hon. member for Regina City is deliberately misrepresenting what he said.

And Mr. Speaker Macdonald made rulings also to the same effect. Some of his rulings appear in Hansard, volume I, 1952-53, at pages 271, 759 and 760. Therefore I maintain that the expression I used, namely "my accusers falsified the facts", is not an unparliamentary expression. It contains no charge of dishonesty or of insincerity. During the debate on the unanimous report of the committee on procedure adopted at the last session, several hon. members expressed the view that as long as there were no accusations of insincerity or dishonesty, strong language should go unchecked. During this session I have taken into account the remarks that were then made.

At page 5990 of Hansard, volume VI, 1955, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had this to say on the subject:

> We do not want to turn parliament into an afternoon society meeting. If we have strong opinions we want to express them. We do not want to engage in personalities as such, but if we allow our rules or Speakers' decisions to place members of parliament in the position where if they use a strong expression they have to withdraw it parliament will become nothing but a mere debating society.
>
> After all, strong men have strong opinions. I think our trend in the last 15 or 20 years has been to reduce the standard of debate in parliament by the insistence on the letter of decorum. We do not carry our ill feelings outside of the House of Commons, and the things that we say, as long as they do not impute personal wrongdoing or lack of integrity, should be permitted in the House of Commons.

Notwithstanding what has happened during the pipe-line debate and the motion of censure that followed, no hon. member had ever suggested that I should resign. I may say, however, that I intended to resign more than once during that period for the purpose of regaining my full freedom of speech both in and outside this house. I had received communications and I had an exchange of views with some of the 35 members who had voted in favour of the motion of censure on Friday, June 8 last. It appeared to me that time might bring about a situation by virtue of which it might be possible for me to carry on at least until the prorogation of this session. When paragraphs of a private letter of mine were published in a newspaper I knew I had to take immediately the course I had in mind to follow.

In public life all men have had the experience of being quoted when they spoke off the record, or of being misquoted. I realize, however, that if the accident happens to one who is occupying my position, the house to which I am responsible—and I am responsible to the house alone—may ask for an account of the incident. That was done last Friday. It appeared to me that the hon. members of the opposition exaggerated the importance of the incident and since they were accusing me of improper conduct and of having used unparliamentary language I felt that the traditional parliamentary recourse in such cases should be taken, a recourse which I think is a protection for the house and for the Chair, namely that a motion dealing with the accusations should be placed on the order paper, debated and decided. It was said in the press that my language at that point was confusing. Here is what I said, as reported at page 5514 of Hansard of June 29, 1956:

> I want to tell hon. members that ever since I was appointed on November 12, 1953 my resignation has always been at the disposal of the house. If one wishes to move a motion, after 48 hours' notice, stating the reasons why and concluding that the Speaker be removed I will resign immediately.

Later, in my office, I inserted the references to the citations of Beauchesne's third edition, citations 127, 225 and 46. For the insertion of these references it has been said by the parliamentary correspondent of the Montreal Gazette, in an article appearing on the editorial page for Monday, July 2, 1956:

> He is open to attack for tampering with Hansard.

All Speakers have inserted the references to the authorities interspersed with their remarks, whether in Hansard or in the Journals because, indeed, it is their duty to do so. Standing order 12 states:

> In explaining a point of order or practice, he shall state the standing order or authority applicable to the case.

When I said "If one wishes to move a motion" some understood that as soon as the notice of motion appeared on the order paper I would resign. Once a motion is moved it is in the possession of the house and must be disposed of. Citation 322 of Beauchesne's third edition says:

> Every matter is determined in the House of Commons upon a question put by the Speaker on a proposition submitted by a member and resolved either in the affirmative or negative as the case may be. A motion is a proposal made by one member, in accordance with certain well established rules, that the house do something or order something to be done, or express an opinion with regard to some matter or thing. The proposal is not a motion until it has been actually moved.

Now, I thought that I was entitled to have the house judge my actions. I have been in public life since 1945. My strongest critics have said that until the pipe-line debate I had acquired a good reputation as Speaker of this house. I have a family, friends and a constituency. For their sakes, as well as for my political future, I thought that I was entitled to get the judgment of the house on the incident referred to last Friday. Otherwise, notwithstanding the fact that I had admittedly a good record until the pipe-line debate and that the motion of censure arising out of the pipe-line debate was defeated by the house by a vote of 109 against 35, would it not appear, if I were to resign now without a judgment of the house, that because a newspaperman published extracts of a private letter of mine, I have done worse than anything I might have been accused of before?

Now, last Friday the Leader of the Opposition, speaking about the above-mentioned paragraphs that were published, concluded by asking the Acting Prime Minister to dissolve the house. I do not wish my actions to be part of the many considerations which must be weighed before such a grave decision is taken. Furthermore, I am anxious to regain my full freedom of speech. I realize that the Prime Minister is away. Were I to resign today the house would have to adjourn immediately. The Senate being adjourned for three weeks, it would have to be called back in session and the presence of His Excellency the Governor General or his deputy would be required for the approval of the new Speaker.

I place now my resignation before the house to take effect at the pleasure of the house. I would wish that it be accepted as soon as possible.

This is my farewell speech. I shall always remember with pleasure my term of office as Speaker. I have enjoyed every moment of it, even the most difficult parts, because I know that deep down in their hearts members understood certainly much more perhaps than they were indicating.

In private I had conversations and exchanges of views and I know that, notwithstanding what has happened, I retain in this house the friendship of many more members than one would like perhaps to believe. I must have enjoyed every moment of it. I have never been avoidably absent since I became Speaker. I have been in this house every sitting day since November 12, 1953.

Now, I have no animosity whatever against anyone. Throughout my term of office, I assure you, I have never acted, nor have I ever been motivated, by any other interests but the best interests of the house itself. Never was I motivated by any partisan feelings; and my conscience is perfectly clear. Had it not been as clear as it is, I do not think I could have gone through all the difficulties that came my way in the past month.

Now, I thank you very much for the privilege and the honour that you have given me of serving you as Speaker of the house and I want to assure you that as long as I live I shall never forget this honour that you have given me and this kind gesture on your part. Unintentionally I might have done something wrong or I might have done something offensive to hon. members. I want to ask them—and I do say this is the last favour, if I may be deserving of a last favour—that, if I have done something offensive or anything wrong to any hon. member, an act of oblivion will be passed. Gentlemen, thank you very much.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all moved by your remarks. I appreciate your forbearance in not pressing the matter you have raised in the absence of the Prime Minister. As we all know, the Prime Minister is in London attending to Her Majesty's business, and I think it is a courtesy observed by all commonwealth parliaments not to raise difficulties affecting the office of the Prime Minister in his absence.

I sincerely hope that hon. members will be prepared to consider your statement and not raise the matter of the office of Speaker until the Prime Minister is in his seat, which I hope will be next Monday. I telephoned him this morning, and I find he hopes to be able to leave London next Friday evening at the conclusion of the final session of the imperial conference. When he arrives here on Monday he, as leader of the House of Commons, will deal with the matter that the Speaker has raised at this time.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): I believe that the Liberal government has crucified one of the finest men that was ever here. One of the finest young men who ever walked into the House of Commons has been put on the cross and crucified by this government.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You will pay for that.

Mr. Ferguson: I will not pay for it; you cannot make me pay for it.

TRADE

BRITISH CARIBBEAN AREA—LESSENING OF RESTRICTIONS

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I take pleasure in announcing a trade development in the British Caribbean which will further assist Canadian exports to that area. We have now been informed that the British Caribbean countries will place apples, leaf tobacco, chemical fertilizers and calcium carbide under world open general licence effective today, July 2, 1956. This means that these products will henceforth be permitted import from Canada without restrictions. These products are of importance to many Canadian exporters. With this further liberalization, a large proportion of our exports to the area are now completely free of restriction.

Hon. members will appreciate that we have over the years maintained close and continuing consultations with British Caribbean countries and the United Kingdom with the object of developing our trade with that area to the greatest possible extent. In these circumstances this additional measure of trade liberalization is especially welcome and will serve to strengthen further the close and traditional commercial ties which exist between those countries and Canada. In 1955 Canadian exports to the area amounted to $42 million. These exports are increasing this year. With the new federation which is emerging in the British Caribbean we look forward to a further expansion of mutually advantageous trade.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN SCHOOL TRUSTEES—INTERVIEW WITH CABINET

Motion No. 87—Mr. Knight:

For a copy of all correspondence during 1956 between the Prime Minister or the government and the Canadian school trustees association, relating to a request for an interview with the cabinet by a delegation from the association to discuss school finance in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER APPOINTMENTS

Motion No. 88—Mr. Robinson (Bruce):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents, dated from January 1, 1954 to date, in the possession of the Department of Transport, with respect to the appointment of lighthouse keepers at (a) Port Stanley; (b) Port Dalhousie; (c) Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Mr. Marler: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the adoption of the motion subject to the usual reservation with regard to privileged correspondence.

Mr. Robinson (Bruce): Do I understand "privileged correspondence" to refer to correspondence between members of the department?

Mr. Marler: Yes, correspondence between officials or members of the department would be regarded as privileged.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the remarks made by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHTS OF CANADIANS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps he may wish to take the question as notice. By what authority is the United States air force forbidding Canadian civilians employed by them at Newfoundland bases to participate in Canadian political activities, as reported in the Sunday Herald, St. John's, Newfoundland, under date of July 1, 1956? Is this not an improper interference with the rights of Canadian citizens by a foreign power?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall take the question as notice.

FREIGHT RATES

ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING REQUEST FOR RESCINDING OF RECENT INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked the Minister of Transport if the government would consider rescinding the order of the board of transport commissioners allowing a 7 per cent increase in freight rates. I wonder whether he has a reply at this time.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that since last Friday I have had the opportunity of reading the order to which the hon. gentleman has just referred, and I should like merely to read one paragraph from it, although there are quite a number in the order. This, as hon. members will recall, is the order of the board of transport commissioners which was rendered on Monday, June 18, 1956, and it reads in part as follows:

And whereas the board has also concluded—on the basic principles of its uniform accounting and cost finding regulations applicable to the two major railways of Canada from January 1, 1956—that, inter alia, after making due allowance for the factors of potential increases in traffic volume and potential savings in operating expenses, the prospective net rail earnings of these applicant companies during the period from July 1, 1956, to the date of determination of the application herein following the adjourned hearing in September next, will be pro rata in principle, well within the limits which the board has heretofore found allowable in its judgments in general revenue cases in recent years, and that the interim increases hereby authorized which the board considers to be an irreducible minimum, will not enable the railways to recoup the said wage increases to non-operating employees incurred retroactively for the period prior to July 1 next, or any portion for any period of any operating wage increases now pending final settlement between the railways and their operating employees.

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to go into all of the relevant considerations which are set forth in the order but I may say that I have not the intention of recommending to the governor in council that, pursuant to section 53 of the Railway Act, that order to which I have just referred should be varied or rescinded.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether I might ask a supplementary question. Has the minister considered the request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that agricultural products be exempt from any interim increase?

Mr. Marler: No, I have not considered that request. I think the hon. gentleman should realize that those who are not satisfied with the order have a right of appeal under the Railway Act and that, at the hearing to take place in September, there will be an opportunity for all those interested to present their viewpoints with regard to the rate increases which appear to be contemplated.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE MONEY—REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT BY HARRY J. LONG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether he has any observation to make on a statement by Harry J. Long of Toronto, president of the National House Builders Association, to the effect that unless the government eases its tight money policy with respect to N.H.A. mortgages the end result will be unemployment in the building industry, higher house prices and damage to the economy. Has the minister given final consideration to this question, and does the government intend to see that interest is reduced to the end that the potentialities that are set forth by Mr. Long will not be achieved in this country?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last week I indicated that I would make a statement on this matter either on the orders of the day some day or on my estimates. I am in the course of preparing that statement. I would suit the convenience of hon. members but I think it is rather long for the orders of the day. However, I shall be glad to say something about this matter shortly. In the meantime, I may say that I have not seen the particular statement to which my hon. friend refers.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REGISTRATION, CERTIFICATES, ETC.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 349, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this bill is largely of a technical character. Some clauses are the correction of errors which crept into the framing of the Canada Shipping Act of 1934. Other clauses bring certain older provisions, which were carried over from the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894, into line with modern marine practice. Ocean-going vessels of modern construction will benefit from the proposed amendment to the tonnage regulations, while operators of small coasting vessels in our domestic trade will find it easier to comply with requirements as to certificates of those in charge of the navigation and of engines. The crews of certain commercial vessels, which at present have very little protection in the matter of safety precautions, will be accorded greater protection. The vast and ever-growing pleasure-boating public will have some protection against the foolhardy and irresponsible minority.

Finally, our thousands of miles of coastline, including the shores of the great lakes, will be protected against pollution by indiscriminate disposal of waste oil from ships.

I do not intend to go into the details of the bill, but I deem it necessary at this stage to make a brief explanation of its main features.

First, then, concerning those clauses having to do with registry of ships. As hon. members are well aware, registration of ships is an important feature in maritime practice. The whole of part I of the Canada Shipping Act, comprising some 113 sections, is devoted to it. A ship's certificate of registry is her identity certificate, her passport in her journeyings to and fro in the commerce of the world. The particulars set out in the certificate are accepted without question by government officials of foreign countries; the tonnage as shown is accepted wherever the ship may go as the basis for port charges, and the other sundry charges which a ship must meet when she enters port. Registry is not only evidence of a ship's right to fly her national flag, but also establishes ownership title and gives the shipowner the right to invoke certain provisions regarding limitation of liability.

The procedures of registration are not onerous, when they involve property amounting to hundreds of thousands, sometimes millions, of dollars in one vessel, but we feel they are hardly necessary in the case of very small vessels which never leave our own shores.

At present only vessels of less than 10 tons net tonnage are exempt from registry. The purpose of clause 2 of the bill is to increase this figure to 15 tons of net tonnage. On the other hand, the proposed amendment does not deprive a person of the privilege of registering a smaller vessel if he wishes to take this trouble, in order to obtain any of the benefits that flow from registration.

Clause 3 of the bill, proposing a new section of the act, may look somewhat formidable, but its purpose can be simply explained. Tonnage measurement is a vital part of registry procedure. Since most port charges are made on the net tonnage of the ship, the efforts of naval architects have always been directed to the design of ships with low net tonnage and high carrying capacity. As now provided in section 94 and in the seventh schedule, the net tonnage is arrived at by first measuring all the enclosed spaces in the ship to get the gross tonnage, then making certain deductions. One of the deductions is for the space required for the propelling power, and section 95 of the act lays down the rule governing the allowance that may be made on this account.

The United Kingdom government have already amended the British merchant shipping acts to bring this feature into line with modern construction, so that ship owners might reap a proportionate benefit in reduction of net tonnage, when modern machinery allows them to devote less space to the propelling power. They consulted us before doing so, and we undertook to take similar action in Canada at an appropriate time. If we do not, ships registered in Canada are at a disadvantage regarding tonnage, as compared with ships registered in the United Kingdom and elsewhere.

Clause 6 is designed to be of assistance to the fishing industry. In recent years it has been difficult to get fully certificated engineering personnel for fishing vessels and we have had to meet the situation by granting temporary permits in many cases.

There are quite a number of men available, who have reasonably good understanding of the duties required for certain types of engine room work, but apparently there is a shortage of men available who can pass the examination as fourth class engineers. Moreover, it does not appear necessary that the same requirements in this respect should apply to fishing vessels as to passenger or cargo vessels. Accordingly, this amendment, while maintaining the qualifications required for the chief engineer on fishing vessels, will provide for some relaxation in regard to the qualifications of additional engineering personnel, by creating a new category of watchkeeping engineer on a motor-driven fishing vessel for which modified standards will be established. Clause 8 is consequential upon clause 6 of the bill.

The department's sympathy with the difficulties experienced by the good mariners in our small domestic traders is evident in the amendments suggested in clauses 7 and 9 of the bill. Section 116 of the act sets out the grades and classes of certificates as master of a steamship of under 150 tons in the home trade, inland waters and minor waters of Canada. Such a certificate may be obtained without prior service as mate, and does not call for the same standard of navigational and other technical knowledge as in the case of large vessels. When the existing provision was made, the vessels for which it was intended were all well under 150 tons gross. But of late years it has been found that the vessels, which are often constructed by the owner-masters themselves, without benefit of naval architectural assistance, have exceeded this critical tonnage quite considerably. We are of the opinion that this class of certificate should now be made available for vessels of up to 350 tons gross, and that holders of existing certificates should be granted the wider privilege. This will be accomplished by clause 7 of the bill.

Section 119 provides for certificates of service, which may be obtained by those seamen who may have lived their lives in small vessels on our coasts and in the St. Lawrence and who have demonstrated in a practical way their ability to command their own vessels, but who are handicapped by the lack of basic education. When the existing provision was made a time limit was included, and it was thought that the time provided would suffice to allow all interested seamen to become properly certificated. In this regard it appears that sufficient allowance was not made for the natural reluctance of the practical seaman, particularly when he is no longer young, to subject himself to any kind of examination, even the simple oral one which is all that is required in this instance. The amendment proposed in clause 9 of the bill gives the provision a continuing effect and widens its scope. It is hoped that in time, by a process of persuasion and education, all our domestic shipmasters will eventually become properly certificated under the act.

Clause 11 of the bill provides yet another concession to the small commercial vessel operator in a proposed amendment to section 128 of the act. This widens the scope of the temporary engineer's certificate which may be issued on the basis of practical training without the added requirement of technical training.

Clauses 12 to 17 of the bill have to do with licensed pilots. The first, which will permit temporary licences to be issued for a season of navigation or any other desirable period, is obvious, but hon. members may wish an explanation of the proposed amendments to sections 354, 356 and 357 of the act.

The previous wording was reasonable enough in the old days when a ship had no communications with the shore and pilots remained on station outside a port waiting for the arrival of ships. Nowadays it is the practice for an incoming ship to radio in her expected time of arrival, and then a pilot goes out to meet her. The proposed wording is in line with modern practice.

A proposed amendment to subsection 3 of section 354 makes it an offence to act as a pilot without a licence or to employ an unlicensed pilot, in an established pilotage district. The change in the heading preceding section 354 will give this protection to pilots in all districts, whether or not the payment of pilotage dues is compulsory.

Such sanctions against the use of unlicensed pilots have long been a feature of pilotage laws in the United Kingdom, and are considered reasonable. Hon. members will understand that the proposed provisions do not affect the right of the master of a ship to do without a pilot. However, if he employs a pilot—that is, any person other than a member of his own crew—that person must hold a licence issued by the pilotage authority of the district.

Clauses 18 to 24 of the bill deal with safety measures which fall within the purview of steamship inspection. The amendments to sections 477 to 479 accord to the crews of non-self-propelled vessels and of vessels such as dredges, a certain measure of protection which they have not hitherto enjoyed, when they go more than 15 miles from land.

The amendment to subsection 3 of section 494 places sealing vessels in the same general category as fishing vessels and whaling vessels for the purposes of part VII of the act. This is important for the province of Newfoundland.

Clause 25 of the bill proposes a new part VIIA, entitled "Oil Pollution". In 1954 Canada was represented at an international conference on pollution of the sea by oil. The convention which resulted, and which is set out in clause 29 of the bill as a proposed fourteenth schedule to the act, is the first concrete attempt by the leading shipping nations of the world to stop dumping of waste oil from ships on the high seas. Certain zones of the oceans are set out where the dumping of waste oil will be prohibited. A fifty mile prohibited zone along the North American coast line will protect Canada in this regard. Provision is also made for the setting up of reception facilities at large ports where waste oil may be disposed of without contravening regulations. Hon. members will no doubt be aware of the very great concern which has been occasioned, particularly in the United Kingdom and western Europe, by the destruction of sea birds and the spoiling of the beaches by oil dumped from ships, perhaps far out at sea.

The problem has not yet reached serious proportions in this country, but prevention will be easier than cure. Accordingly, the government intends to ratify the convention. The new section 495A is proposed so that the necessary regulations may be made to implement the convention, and also to apply similar protective measures for the waters of the great lakes which are not covered by the convention. Officials of the department have been studying the problem as it exists on the great lakes and have discussed with our American friends the possibility of their taking parallel action at the appropriate time.

The convention as presently drafted and our proposed legislation do not provide a final and complete answer to this problem. In fact, we would have preferred to see an international agreement forbidding any pollution of the sea by oil from ships. This was the first major attempt to deal with this problem on an internationally agreed basis that has shown any measure of success. As may have been expected, at the international conference widely varying points of view were presented, with the result that the final convention represents to some extent a compromise between these varying points of view. It does, however, go some distance toward meeting the objective of complete prevention which we hope can be achieved in due course.

Clause 27 also merits a full explanation. This would amend that section of the act which applies to the operation of small boats and, in particular, pleasure boats. Since the end of the war there has been a huge increase in the amount of pleasure boating in Canada; a great deal of this has taken place in the field of power boats and has, of course, been greatly accelerated by the development of the outboard motor. There are, for example, over 36,000 power boats registered in Canada on the great lakes with engines of 10 horsepower or more and we believe an even greater number of lower power.

The department has been in receipt of many representations asking it to take further action to deal with this growing problem from the point of view of public safety. It is admitted that many power boat operators are reasonable persons who are familiar with marine traffic rules, but it is also quite apparent that a great many others may be irresponsible or foolhardy or at least completely lacking in knowledge or observance of the elementary rules of marine safety and marine traffic.

We have attempted to deal with this problem in several ways. The minor waters navigation regulations forbid excessive speed or dangerous operation of motor boats, but they are not sufficiently comprehensive in that there are large concentrations of these boats outside the minor waters. The requirement that boats equipped with engines of 10 h.p. or more be licensed has also been a useful step but it is not enough in itself, dealing as it does with the boat and not with the operator. It is clear from our experience, from our consultation with the R.C.M.P., who are charged with enforcement of these matters, and from the representations we have received that something more must be done.

We have made extensive distribution of literature and a special pamphlet entitled "Safety at Sea", but regardless of this the problem continues to grow. We have reached the conclusion that two further steps should now be taken. The first of these is to amend this section so that it relates not only to the minor waters but to all waters of Canada. The second is to make direct use of the well proven experience in the field of motor vehicles and develop a system of licensing for operators of power boats.

The objective will be to ensure that the department has a direct contact with the boat operator and that he has in his hands some information regarding the rules of marine safety and marine traffic and some knowledge of these rules as well. The regulations for this purpose are in the formative stage at the present time and it is intended to take a gradual approach to this problem in consultation with the R.C.M.P., with various private organizations interested in boat operations and possibly local or provincial authorities.

It is not intended to create hardship for the individual who is willing to familiarize himself with the rules of marine safety and marine traffic, nor to impose any financial penalty on him in obtaining a licence, but it is intended to establish some method by which we can encourage his knowledge of this field and ensure that he does not disregard the elementary precautions which should be observed by the operators of small pleasure boats, not just in their own interest but in the interest of those around them.

This concludes the statement which I intended to make at this stage. Before resuming my seat I wish to state to the house that it is intended after second reading to move that this bill be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

[Mr. Langlois (Gaspe).]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the comprehensive remarks of the parliamentary assistant with regard to this piece of legislation, this bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act. I suppose that those of us who have a connection with the sea are more interested but I think we all appreciate that this act must be brought up to date from year to year as the shipping nations of the world modernize their fleets and plans. We understand also that in the efforts of officials and others who are connected with such plans there is a natural tendency to grab more power in order to carry out efficiently the operations of their departments. Having said that, I think we should remember that we must be constantly on guard to preserve the rights of small operators and others who must be protected from the natural plans of the bureaucrats.

This legislation comes to us from the other place where it was dealt with most extensively. We have the value of their report of their considerations in their standing committee on transport and communications. I think this is one job that has been done by the other place which indicates that there is still some worth in their operations. They considered the bill extensively, went into the details and made quite a few worth while changes.

In going through the reports I note some of those who took an active part in the consideration of this legislation. In connection with that part having to do with fishermen and the administration of shipping, an active part was taken by two hon. members of that place from the maritimes who have extensive family backgrounds connected with the sea. Then with regard to the constitutional aspects of the bill there were two constitutional lawyers of note—there may have been more—who added considerably to the discussion on this legislation.

I think it must be realized that in the consideration of this legislation those members of the other place included more experts than we might have available here. They took their time with the legislation and except for one small matter of controversy to which I shall refer later I think they brought forth a fairly good piece of legislation.

I think it can be said that this bill divides itself into two general parts. As the parliamentary assistant pointed out, there are the routine clauses which modernize and bring up to date in various ways the shipping act itself. This is made necessary by changing conditions in the world and the plans of other nations. It is made necessary also because of the growth of traffic on the great lakes necessitating new certifications for mates, engineers and pilots. It is made necessary by the more extensive use of pleasure craft. All these matters have been dealt with in fairly good fashion.

I do not have anything more on that aspect of it except to say that I hope that when we get into committee we will have some expert advice and also some specific treatment of these changes which are necessary and important but which have to be appreciated from the standpoint of the small operators, the fishermen and those who might be put out of business or affected in their daily lives.

The second part of this bill has interested me the most and I think it was the cause of some controversy in the other place. It ratifies the convention on oil pollution, that is the Canadian action which was taken at the convention two years ago. This raises a most interesting constitutional problem and I do not think we should pass over it too quickly. Unfortunately I do not have the background to discuss the intricate legal points involved, but in my reading of the activities in the other place and by some quick research I am of the opinion that this is being handled in a unique way.

It is not the first time that this method has been used, but I understand that of the two general types it is the less common. In most cases, if I have my words correct, the treaties or conventions that have been signed on behalf of Canada are brought back to parliament and, through active legislation and statute, are put into force by law. But this method—and it is the one that caused comment—is to incorporate into one of our acts or statutes the exact treaty, convention and other points that are necessary for its enforcement here. I am not saying for one minute that this is wrong, because I do not know. I realize there have been parliamentary legal experts on it who have given it considerable thought, but we remember the legislation in the 1930's that dealt extensively with this problem and we remember that it was necessary to go to the privy council in 1937 to receive a final opinion on the treaty-making powers and the necessary legislative and executive action thereto.

I mention this because I hope that we shall consider it extensively in committee. It is interesting. Probably the lawyers are the ones who are more prone to indicate a knowledge of this, but we have to be careful to make certain that this is being done in the best way possible.

That is all I have to say on second reading. As I say, I appreciate the fact that our shipping act is being modernized to some extent. We have in Canada little enough interest in the sea, in shipping and in our future plans, and if this action today helps in any small way to further the cause it is agreeable to me, and I am pleased to see it.

The second point that I mentioned, regarding the constitutional aspect of it, is important, and we should not forget it. It is probably the only point that has a principle involved in it; so I suppose that it is the one aspect of the bill which we should be discussing extensively here now on second reading; but I shall be interested in following it when it reaches the committee stage, and we shall watch for all these small points that may have been overlooked. We hope that by this legislation we shall have modernized and increased our shipping laws and in that way we shall be able to take our place in the competitive world in much better fashion.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): My remarks will be quite brief, but I must say that we are very much interested in this bill, which without doubt does something to improve the shipping act in the light of modern conditions and circumstances.

I noted that the members of the other place gave a great deal of consideration to the suggested amendments, and without any question there are a good number of the members over there who have experience of the sea and have some knowledge of the technical and administrative problems with which this bill deals.

I myself read the bill. I listened carefully to the excellent explanation of the purpose of the bill given by the parliamentary assistant and I was particularly pleased that when he concluded he said that it was the intention to send the bill to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I am sure that will provide an opportunity to get a great deal of information on certain aspects of the bill that some of us inland people would not have unless the bill went to the committee.

I might say, though, that I am interested in the bill because I know the problems of small tug-boat operators, persons operating small vessels of 15 tons and under, and as a long-time member of a yacht club I am fully aware of the new conditions arising with respect to small pleasure craft because of the great increase in their numbers in recent years.

I was very much interested in the suggested amendments and the explanation given by the parliamentary assistant with respect to certificates for mates and certain classes of engineers who will be on these boats of small tonnage. I thought that at the present time it seemed most sensible, from my own personal experience on the lakes on which I reside.

I was also particularly interested in the proposals in connection with small craft operated by outboard motors of ten or more horsepower. I remember when the act was amended some years ago to require that the craft be licensed or registered. I know some of the difficulties that the R.C.M.P. have found in administering the act because of the great increase in the number of these vessels and because of the numbers of people who will use these boats without any knowledge of the rules of the road, as far as the water is concerned, and without any knowledge of the safety precautions required. I think that is one aspect that has to be emphasized very strongly, and more strongly all the time, across this country.

I am very glad to notice that the bill provides for the extension of this section of the act from minor waters to all waters. I remember the time when the amendment was before the house. I could not see how it could be effective, because minor waters are only a certain group of waters, and I should say the majority of these small craft are to be found on other types of waters. I judge that that amendment has been proposed as a result of experience. I think that the proposal to license gradually the operators of these small craft is sound and is a good one.

I am very pleased that the parliamentary assistant indicated it is not the intention of the department to rush into this suddenly. I find that people co-operate usually very well if they have an opportunity to understand what the department is attempting to do. I noted that he mentioned it was the intention of the department to implement this phase of the legislation gradually. I would suggest that the department would be well advised to get the list of all the yacht and launch clubs throughout the country and keep them informed of the changes in the legislation and ask for their suggestions and their experience. I think that would assist the department by getting the co-operation of even the smaller yacht and launch clubs all across Canada which exist on the seaboard and on our inland lakes and minor waters. It will make for an easier administration of the act and make for a better understanding of the department's intentions and, I am sure, will improve the relationship of the department's officials with the organizations concerned. I am not suggesting it is not good now but, in the administration of this type of legislation, through that co-operation, I think you will find that the general public interested in this type of craft will be quite willing to extend their co-operation because they know it is in the long run for the public good and for their own good.

That is all I have to say at this time. When we meet in committee, there are a number of questions I should like to ask. Like the member who preceded me, I am not competent to talk about the section on oil pollution—it is a constitutional and technical section—but we know that when we get into committee we shall have the opportunity to get the minister or his assistant and his officials to explain in detail all that this implies. We possibly will have an opportunity to give them our views as the result of our experience, and when the bill returns to the house it will receive the consideration that is justified and necessary so that when it does pass all the little kinks will have been ironed out.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word about this measure. I think that Bill No. 349, an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, will be of interest to all members of the house. The statement just made by the parliamentary assistant was a worth-while one, but it was indeed difficult to follow all the points that the parliamentary assistant brought out. However, he indicated in his remarks that the bill was going to be sent to a committee and that will give us time to go into his remarks more thoroughly. I am glad that the parliamentary assistant has indicated that the bill is going to a committee because there are some of us—I know this applies to myself—who are not too familiar with the conduct of ships at sea and those practices which are necessary in the best interests of the sailors themselves and the shipping industry as a whole.

I am sure that when the bill goes before the committee we will be able to have the advice of those people who are conversant with these matters, and the minister will be able to explain the different parts of the bill to us. The bill is a rather extensive one. There are 29 sections amending different parts of the act, and their consideration will require expert advice from the officials who appear before the committee. There is one part dealing with the international convention for the prevention of pollution of the sea by oil. That too is something about which we will have to get advice from the experts, those people who are immediately concerned with this type of pollution and the advantage that its prevention will mean to the shipping industry as a whole. Then there are also the appendices to deal with.

It is useless for me to carry the debate any further at this time because, as I say, I am not too conversant with the details of operations of this type. When the bill is before the committee we will be able to get the opinions of those who are more intimately acquainted with these matters. As far as I am concerned, I will leave the matter until the bill is before committee.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take much of the time of the house at this stage in discussing Bill No. 349. I do feel, however, that as far as those of us who live in the maritimes are concerned this bill is really important. With those parts of the bill that refer to the operation of larger boats I think most of us will agree wholeheartedly, but as far as the province of Newfoundland is concerned, where for many years small boat operators, particularly small motorboats, have been operating around the coast and bays of Newfoundland, the bill will need some clarification. I agree with the parliamentary assistant in the decision to refer the bill to the appropriate committee.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, like those who have preceded me I do not intend to take a great deal of time on the second reading of the bill. First I should like to say that I am pleased that the bill is to go to the standing committee where it can be discussed in detail. I appreciated the explanation given by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport, and I might also say that I found some reading I did of the proceedings in the other place to be of considerable interest. I agree with some of the remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), with respect to the approach that should be taken in the development of regulations covering the operation of smaller vessels of various kinds, both fishing and pleasure craft. However, I should like to add one or two things to what he said in that connection.

As I understand it, the purpose of some of the proposed changes is to assist people to increase their own safety by acquiring some additional knowledge of the rules of the sea and so on. While I think that is a good thing, I hope that the Department of Transport does not feel that through taking steps of this kind they are going to be able to forget about the provision of the improved marine rescue facilities that are required in various parts of Canada at the present time. I believe that the development of safety consciousness and of appropriate regulations to ensure that people will take better care of themselves should go hand in hand with the development of more adequate rescue services than we have had heretofore.

Apart from that, one of my main interests in the bill has to do with the addition of the new part VIIA which concerns the matter of oil pollution. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) may recall that quite recently I drew his attention to a problem existing in my own constituency with regard to oil pollution caused by ocean-going cargo vessels. Therefore I think that if the legislation before us now will meet the problem that has been created it is something which we should welcome and which, as far as I am concerned, I intend to support in principle at least.

I hope that some of the finer constitutional points that may be involved in our discussion in the committee will not cause us to overlook the essential value of protecting the people who live on our seacoasts from the dangers and the damage that can come from oil pollution. I think that the coast of British Columbia is perhaps an area where this type of legislation will be of particular value because in that province we have quite a large number of one-industry ports, some of which are in rather isolated parts of the coast but nevertheless quite a substantial tonnage of ocean-going freight moves through them during the course of each year.

In these places there are no local harbour authorities, no local bodies, with the power to make regulations and exercise control. I know that in my own constituency we have one board of harbour commissioners, that at Port Alberni. It has authority over the harbour there, but apart from that there are a number of other ports of call out of which quite substantial tonnages of ocean-going freight are shipped every year. Ocean-going vessels come to those ports directly from the sea and at times nuisances have been created which have been of considerable inconvenience to the residents of the area concerned.

So far as I am concerned, I feel that the implementation of the treaty respecting oil pollution on the seas is a forward step. I notice that the committee of the other place made one or two fairly important changes in the bill. One of them in particular had to do with the original proposal for the licensing of mates of fishing vessels, and because considerable objection apparently was raised to the proposal in the original bill a change was made.

I was rather interested to notice that all the opposition which came from the fishing industry to date appeared to have come from the maritime area rather than from the coast of British Columbia. That is not to say, however, that the development of a program with respect to improved seamanship and the requirement of an adequate knowledge of navigation and so on is not something which could not be brought forward in British Columbia. I do not know whether or not we may have progressed further in that direction on our coast. Nevertheless, when we get into committee I think we might perhaps have some little review as to the pros and cons of that situation on which Their Honours in the other place acted to change the bill as it was originally drafted. I think that is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, except that I shall be looking forward to the study that will take place in the committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Marler moved that the bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, AMOUNT OF LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 19, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Indian Act to provide for a number of changes in connection with the administration of the act; and to provide further that the Minister of Finance may from time to time advance to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums of money as the minister may require for loans to Indians under section 69 of the act;

The total amount of outstanding advances under the said section not to exceed at any one time one million dollars in lieu of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars as at present.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the resolution that is before the committee is one whereby it is deemed expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Indian Act to provide for a number of changes in connection with the administration of the act and also to provide for a revolving fund as therein set out. I should like for a short time to deal with the Indian Act and to make certain suggestions as to its amendment which the experience of administration has, in my opinion, made necessary. In the administration of the act I believe that the first consideration should be that the rights of Indians under treaties should be maintained and guaranteed to all Indians and for all time. Indeed, when treaties were entered into, particularly so far as those treaties are concerned that affect the Indians of the western plains, an agreement was made at that time by Lieutenant Governor Morris, while in the course of negotiating one or more of these treaties, in these words:

The ear of the Queen's government will always be open to hear the complaints of her Indian people, and she will deal with her servants that do not do their duty in a proper manner.

Also the general principles connected with the administration were set out by Lieutenant Governor Morris when he negotiated with the Indians at Fort Carlton. I think that was in 1876: I quote from the general principles then enunciated:

I see the Queen's councillors taking the Indians by the hand saying we are brothers, we will lift you up, we will teach you, if you will learn, the cunning of the white man. All along that road I see Indians gathering, I see gardens growing and houses building; I see them receiving money from the Queen's commissioners to purchase clothing for their children; at the same time I see them enjoying their hunting and fishing as before, I see them retaining their own mode of living with the Queen's gift, in addition.

Those were the general principles upon which these treaties were signed. Personally I knew one of the signors, one of the chiefs—namely the chief of the Mistawasis Indians—who was a boy at the time that treaty was made at Fort Carlton. I remember with what forcefulness and eloquence he pressed for that justice which was promised and relied upon the assurance that in the administration of the Indian Act the promises of 1876 would be carried out in their entirety. For the benefit of the minister I say this. I believe that in the last year or so changes have been made which have been beneficial. I refer to changes to provide for certain types of technical training, to allow for Indians to adopt mining and prospecting. I believe that the changes in this regard have been most beneficial and that the ambit of the changes already made should be materially increased and expanded in so far as vocational training is concerned. I believe that progressive programs of technical training, within the limitations of the native ability of the Indian, deserve as far as possible to be expanded and extended.

In general with regard to administration I should like to say this. I feel that, to too great an extent, there has been a desire on the part of the administration to expand the powers of the minister. When this bill is introduced, I hope there will be no changes to increase his power at the expense of the governor in council. I have seen a draft of the sections of the bill which were submitted to the Indian representatives who met some months ago. If some of those sections are to be adopted, I say that indeed the power of the minister will be extended and that the centralization of authority in the minister will result in detrimental effects in so far as the administration of Indian affairs is concerned. Instead of centralizing power in the minister I believe that there should be more and more an expansion of the rights of Indians to their own self-government. One of the things that might be achieved in that connection is to give more Indians an opportunity to be installed in administrative positions not only in the field in the reserves but in the administration of the department here in Ottawa. While saying that, I also say that if changes are ever made whereby the minister receives further powers, I feel that provision should be made in the act to allow for appeals to the courts against administrative orders which affect the individual rights of Indians themselves. In other words, where the minister acts in a manner, administratively speaking, that has the result of determining the rights of an individual, or of a band, his decision in that regard should be subject to an appeal to the courts to the end that no one in this day and age have the right to determine the rights and privileges of peoples of other races without those persons having an appeal to the courts. All over the world coloured races are demanding that they shall no longer be subservient to the white races. In our country, the major subject of complaint on the part of Indians is that they are placed in an inferior position. There are 150,000 of them in this country, and 2,500 of them served during the past war, most of them voluntarily. Education is coming to them in larger measure though not in a sufficient way having regard to the potentialities of those people. Certainly, they have the right to demand that they shall not be subject to the ipse dixit of the minister, and their rights determined without having the right to appeal to the courts.

I mention that because Indians object very strongly to being placed in a position of being not second-class citizens but second-class people, to whom the courts of law in large measure against arbitrary and unjust actions on the part of the administrators are not open. In that connection, I should like some provision made whereby Indians would have an assured right of appeal against any orders or convictions made against them by the summary courts of criminal jurisdiction in our country. I think of an example that arose the other day. An Indian becomes intoxicated and pleads guilty to the charge. There is no reason whatever why, under those circumstances, a person should receive a jail sentence for a first offence. He is sentenced to two months in jail. He is a married man living on the reserve. He is sent away to serve his term at a time when he is just about to commence upon his farming operations. I believe when sentences of imprisonment for petty offences such as that are pronounced against Indians the department should see to it that there is an appeal in order to assure a reasonable equality of sentences and thereby deny any perversion of justice.

In that connection, I point out another subject of complaint. When a treaty Indian commits an offence he is subject to a summary conviction trial before a justice of the peace appointed by the department of Indian affairs. However honourable such persons may be, none the less they have not that freedom from external influence which our courts should have and to which every Canadian, whether white or Indian, should be entitled. In other words, I believe that the section of the act that today makes possible the appointment of justices of the peace by the department of Indian affairs, or by the governor in council, should be removed, and Indians should be tried in the ordinary courts before magistrates who have the necessary ability and also the experience to assure that inequality and inequity in the present system would be reasonably removed. After all, when an Indian serves a term in jail the effect on his health is detrimental; it stays with him sometimes for years. A jail sentence of two months should not be imposed upon Indians for the simple offence of being intoxicated.

I believe, too, that in so far as these minor offences are concerned, such as are provided for in the Indian Act, a fine should be sufficient. Provision might well be made in the Indian Act so that instead of there being a default, except in a limited number of cases, the Indian would be able to make payment of his fine in instalments to the end that imprisonment and its stigma would not be impressed upon him.

Now, sir, having said that, I feel that the resolution in question, which constitutes apparently in part a series of amendments based on the experience of the last few years, is premature, and that before the Indians in Canada can properly receive that consideration to which they should be entitled the law should be brought up to date and the Indian Act made an instrument of justice for the Indians of our country rather than in some cases, as it is, an agency of tyranny in its present form. I believe the first thing that should be done is to appoint a royal commission which would meet in all parts of Canada at appointed times and places so that the Indian's point of view might be placed before the Canadian people as a whole rather than through the narrow conduit pipe of the administrative services within the department itself. There are tremendous problems at stake in the administration of the Indian. These problems will never be met by a piecemeal haphazard amendment of the act from time to time. They can only be met by viewing the problem in the national sense through the medium of a royal commission of men and women who have some knowledge of Indian affairs so that recommendations may be made for the amendment of the act which will remove many of the inequalities and injustices of the present.

We have royal commissions appointed on everything else. Why not a royal commission on Indian affairs? If a royal commission were appointed, Indians would feel free to appear through representatives from each of their bands to place before that commission their demands, their requirements and their suggestions for the improvement of the act. A number of commissions have sat within the last three years on the question of band membership. Those commissions were one-man commissions. They sat in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and in Ontario in one or two cases. They consisted of a commissioner whose authority it was to hear evidence regarding the challenged rights of certain persons on the reserves to be considered as Indians. I am not going into the particulars of the number of sittings that took place but there were 17 of these commissions and they sat in 1954.

Under the provisions of the Indian Act as it now stands, these commissions did not examine the questions with which they were charged and had the responsibility to undertake by anything approaching the laws of evidence. They proceeded on the basis of the sheerest hearsay in many cases. Their purpose was to ascertain whether or not certain individuals on the reserves whose status was challenged were or were not Indians. I took no part personally in any one of these but I was present when two of the commissioners sat, and what passed as evidence was a denial of every principle that should be in effect if the rights of individuals are to be protected. It is true there was a right to appeal for a review by the minister and also by a district or county court judge, as the case might be, but here was the kind of evidence I heard.

Mr. Pickersgill: The appeal is not to the minister but to the registrar.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is right; I am speaking without the act before me. This is an example of the kind of evidence that was given: Someone would turn up who was called to give evidence concerning party A who was challenged as not being an Indian. He might say, "My grandmother told me when I was a boy that A's grandfather was a white man". Well, Mr. Chairman, that type of hearsay evidence could not but arouse feelings of intense antagonism among the Indian tribes on reservations where the commissions sat. The commissions had the power by way of evidence to determine whether A, B or C as the case might be was indeed an Indian within the meaning of the act. I know of nothing that has taken place on Indian reservations or among Indians within the last 25 or 30 years that aroused such intense feelings of antagonism and animosity as between band presidents.

The minister might say, "Well, the Indians asked for this." It is indeed one of the few things the Indians asked for that they ever got, but it is one of those things that naturally provide a short-cut in the determination as to whether or not a person is indeed an Indian; but in the manner in which it was administered under the law passed by this house it had the effect of creating feelings of antipathy, arousing false motives on the part of those who would benefit by having reduced the number of people on a reserve entitled to be called Indians. There were jealousies, ancient antipathies and fears. There were all the motives that cause men to act differently than normal men and women. All these things brought about a state of disagreement and ill-feeling that should never have been permitted to take place.

Even at this late date I am asking the minister whether it would not be in the interests of amity and good spirit on these reservations if whatever was done by these commissions should be entirely obliterated. Whatever the findings were—whether or not the findings were correct as regards certain individuals being entitled to be considered as members of the band—the manner in which the commissioners sat and the sittings of the commissions themselves brought about a situation that was a negation of the kind of tranquility that should be established and fostered on reserves, and brought about a feeling of hostility that will only be obliterated in possibly one or more generations. I say that because I believe even now the minister should realize the situation has arisen everywhere in this country and should endeavour as far as possible to remove the adverse effects which the commission system brought into being. After all, there are three, four or five hon. members of this house—my friend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is one and I am another—who have been honoured by appointment as chiefs of Indian tribes. The Indians come to us and ask us to present their views before parliament. They have no direct representation. As a matter of fact, I have often thought that the only way in which our 150,000 Indian people in Canada who have no representation in parliament could receive representation would be through the appointment to the Senate of one or more of their outstanding leaders to the end that their problems will receive that consideration which only direct representation in parliament, either in the Senate or in the House of Commons, will permit.

I therefore sum up the views I have endeavoured to place before the committee. In the first place, a royal commission should be appointed. Second, the powers of the minister which permit of the arbitrary exercise of rights determining individual privileges and rights on reservations should be subject to an appeal to the courts. If the orders that are made by the minister determining the rights of individuals are worth while and have a sound basis, there should be no fear of having the courts review them when and if any Indian feels he is aggrieved thereby.

Third, the provisions concerning the appointment of a justice of the peace to try infractions under the Indian Act should be removed from the statutes and those Indians should be permitted trial before regular magistrates in the several provinces in this country. Surely we do not have to have a system that denies one group of people in this country, the Indian population, the right to be tried for summary conviction before the same courts that try all the other people in Canada. The Indians should not be restricted to trial before justices of the peace who indirectly owe their appointments to the Indian department. We should have reached the stage in our development where no judicial officer should directly or indirectly find himself in the position where he has to act both as judge and as interested party.

Fourth, I suggest that the provisions for commissions to investigate the rights of Indians to be on reserves and be considered as Indians should be entirely obliterated and the band list as determined by the Indian reservation residents themselves should be accepted as the basis for future determination as to qualifications for Indians after this date.

These are but three or four suggestions which I have to offer. I couple them with the need for a pronounced expansion in the vocational training of Indians. They have done amazingly well under the plans brought into being by the minister in connection with prospecting for minerals. They have caught on to this and many of them are receiving large wages, far beyond what they could have ever hoped for in other activities. They have a natural aptitude for the outdoors and a natural ability to do those things in the outdoors which a prospector must do.

Then what about provisions to raise the standards of Indians on the reservations? I suggest that there should be provision in the act for a trained welfare worker on every reserve to the end that residents on the reserve would receive the benefit of instructions which only a person such as that could give, thereby bringing about improved economic conditions.

From that item arises one other, the amounts furnished today to indigent Indians for upkeep, food and relief assistance. According to the information I have this allowance is at the starvation level of some $7.75 per month. This is something which should be altered. Today Indians are removed from the time when they could provide their livelihood by hunting and fishing. The white man has made that almost impossible and for that reason indigent Indians and those unable to take care of themselves should be assured of at least a reasonable living, something that is not possible under the allowances paid today.

The objective of the Indian department should be a wider expansion of local self-government on the reserves. Give to the chiefs and their councillors allowances in keeping with their responsibilities. I have not the latest figures, but I know of no change in that regard, and I understand that the chief today receives $25 a year while the councillors receive $15 a year each.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister indicates that those are the rates still being paid. Those rates go back to 1870 or 1875 and they are ridiculous in the light of conditions today. There can be no justification for not extending them. Indians I have met contend that the chiefs are entitled to at least $12.50 per month and councillors $8 per month. They ought to be repaid in some small degree for the energy they display and the ability they exercise in solving the day-to-day problems of the reserve. After all, our purpose is to give them the opportunity to rise to a position of honourable, effective and dignified citizenship. By that I do not mean that we should grant to them all citizenship because there is disagreement among them. They fear that if they become citizens of Canada—

Mr. Pickersgill: They are citizens of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They fear that if they vote as citizens of Canada—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. gentleman but he has exceeded his time limit.

Indian Act

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, as one of those in this country who point with such pride to our economic prosperity, it is with a feeling of some embarrassment that I find it necessary to rise and make a plea for Canada's most impoverished citizens. At the outset I should like to say that I support the proposed legislation with one or two reservations which I shall make known later. When we are enjoying such prosperity in this country I feel it is rather embarrassing that we have to admit that we have approximately 150,000 people who have been and still are being relegated to a role of unimportance within the economy of the country. It is embarrassing to admit that living conditions such as we find on Indian reserves across this country do exist. We have to admit also that we are still unprepared to accept these people as anything but second-class citizens.

I had hoped for the last three years that there would be a new approach to the whole Indian problem. I had hopes that the present minister would go to great lengths to revise and improve the existing Indian Act. Certainly he knows the problem because he has admitted it on many occasions. A prime example of that admission will be found in the Indian News of January of this year. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is pointing out the problem that exists, and he goes on to say:

> —there are only two ways in which we can carry on in this country in the future. One way is by the Indians living off in a corner by themselves and having as little to do with the rest of us as possible, and the other is by our getting together and working together and living together as brothers, and as equals, to make this a better country for all of us.

That is a most worthy admission on the part of the minister. When the minister was speaking to the delegation of Indian representatives here in Ottawa he said that something should be done about the conditions which exist. He went on to discuss the purpose of the conference at which changes in the Indian Act were to be considered, and he continued:

> Now nothing we are going to suggest, nothing I am going to put before you, is different from the principles of the old act.

I think that was most unfortunate.

Mr. Pickersgill: By the old act of course I meant the act of 1951.

Mr. Bryson: That may be; nevertheless I think events have proved that nothing fundamentally different was arrived at at that conference.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, yes, it was.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Bryson: As I said at the beginning, if we are not to have a new act or a new approach to the old act, then we are left with no choice but to support the legislation before us with one or two reservations. It was unfortunate the other day that the minister was reluctant to discuss the administrative changes referred to in the first part of the resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I am not in the slightest degree reluctant to discuss the administrative changes. I should like awfully much to get this resolution passed so that all hon. members can see what is proposed and so that we can discuss it intelligently.

Mr. Bryson: That is the very point I am trying to make. While I am in favour of the proposal covered by this resolution, I think its success or failure hinges entirely upon the administrative changes which we presume the minister is going to propose. To suggest that the increase that is mentioned is going in any way to benefit the Indians without any change in the administration is, I feel, a complete delusion. I hope that when the bill is at the proper stage we shall have some indication of what that change in administration is going to be.

I was rather amazed when I tried to find out on what basic information this house is asked to subscribe something in the neighbourhood of one million dollars to increase loans to Indians under the act. Why are we being asked to do that? Apparently we are unable to find out very much authentic information through the questions that have been asked in this house, so we must try to make up our own minds as to the necessity for this increase. Certainly if we believe some of the stories we read in the press and hear over the radio as to what conditions are regarding our Indians generally, we have no alternative but to believe that conditions are not what they should be. I should like to read one or two excerpts from some of the press clippings from local newspapers that have appeared over the past month or two. According to one, Mr. Gordon Robertson, commissioner of the territories, said on Friday, May 4, before the royal commission on broadcasting:

> The fur trade was the most depressed industry in Canada and the average annual income of the natives was less than $800.

The other day the hon. member for Mackenzie River mentioned the figure of $400. Again, an item appeared in my own constituency paper of January, as follows:

> Needy Indian families on the Fishing lake reserve, southeast of here, are more warmly dressed as the result of an appeal for clothing and deer skins made by Corporal Gordon Crawford of the local R.C.M.P. detachment.

He requested that local people bring old clothing and deer skins to a central depot for distribution. Again, we have a report of April 11, as follows:

Federal officials have begun an investigation of living conditions of 400 Indians at the Roseau river reservation about 60 miles south of Winnipeg.

An Indian affairs branch official said that the investigation followed recent Winnipeg reports that the Indians are living in three houses and 17 log cabins there.

It goes on to point out the very serious conditions that exist. Then possibly one of the most shocking items appeared in the Star-Phoenix a month or so ago, when an Indian was arraigned in court on a very serious charge. The judge in that case, Mr. Justice G. E. Taylor, took a grave view of the conditions under which Indians of the Saulteaux reserve, north of Cochin, are living. He said:

It is shocking indeed to find that such conditions can continue to exist anywhere in Canada.

J. N. Conroy, Q.C., then described the conditions that exist:

Mr. Conroy described their reserve as an area of "hills, sand and stones, not capable of cultivation". Its people, he said, "can neither read or write. They have no schools. They know nothing of religion, or the customs or morals of civilization. "They are a race apart—" . . .

Whilst I have said I am in favour of this increase, I should like something more than newspaper reports as a justification for parliament passing this request that the minister has placed before it. So, because of that interest and because of my curiosity, I asked for certain returns, and from those returns I hoped to get a clear picture of the need for this increase. About a month ago I asked what the cash income was, thinking that possibly if I could get some answer as to the cash income of Indians across this country, it would give some indication of the economic condition in which they find themselves. I asked for the cash income each year since 1951 from the sale of grain, livestock and other products. The answer I got from the department was:

There are no official records kept of the total income of Indians. Statistics are, however, maintained for reserves on which the "permission to sell" section of the act is invoked with respect to farm produce. These figures would not necessarily be an accurate reflection of the total income of the Indians concerned.

I thought that was rather strange, because we are able to find out the income of every other group in this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member mind if I interrupted him? I had meant—and I apologize to him—to say a word to him about the answer filed to that question. I did not wish him to think there was any desire not to give information. After considering as much information as we had available in my department, I felt it would be entirely misleading to give it.

There was another objection too. With these Indians who are given permission to sell certain things—permission is still required under the act, and I rather regret to say it is—their number is so small that if you gave it for individual reservations you would be almost disclosing the affairs of individual Indians in a way that I do not think we would do for other people in the community. But I think if the hon. gentleman wanted to get some kind of estimate such as the bureau of statistics makes, it might be possible to get something of that sort that would be sufficiently generalized so as not to disclose people's private affairs and so as to give a fairly reasonable picture, but my department does not have statistics of that sort.

Mr. Bryson: I think it would be to the advantage of those of us in this house who are interested if we could get a compilation of the income of these people, when we are asked to subscribe considerable amounts of money for their welfare. Then I investigated a little further, and I understood from reading section 69 of the act that in many cases this money was primarily going to be used for furthering farming and agricultural activities of the different reserves.

Mr. Pickersgill: For loans.

Mr. Bryson: So I undertook to ask a few questions relevant to that, because I am very much concerned about this question of supervision. I am not an expert on Indians, although I have lived near them all my life, but I know they must have supervision. After all, you do not send out even skilled workers without supervision of some kind, somebody to see that the plan is carried out. It is unfortunate, in my estimation, that the department expects these people, who are still in many cases very primitive, to go out and attempt to do the kind of job that is going to make their operation an economic possibility. So I asked a question relevant to supervision. I asked:

How many persons are presently employed as farm instructors by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, Indian affairs branch?

These farm instructors are the people who are going to make or break the scheme the minister envisages in this section. The answer was:

The Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration does not employ farm instructors as such. In areas where the chief occupation of the Indian population is agriculture, farming instruction is given by Indian agency assistants who also perform administrative and other functions.

Then I asked how many part-time instructors there were. There was no answer to that. Then I asked:

On what reservations are these instructors presently engaged?

There was no answer to that. Nor was there any answer to the question:

What salary do these farm instructors receive?

It was very evasive from start to finish. I took the little bulletin that is put out by the department regarding the census of Indians, and I found a very amazing revelation. There are 100 Indian agency assistants looking after 151,558 Indians. That is one Indian agency instructor for every 1,500 Indians. There are 608 bands, 87 superintendents, and so on, or one superintendent for every seven bands.

The point I am trying to make is that I feel that if this money is going to be used to the best advantage when there is very close the best advantage when there is very close administration on the reserves. Two years ago I drew the attention of the minister to a particular situation, and I want to mention it now because it has a very great bearing on this matter. I find from a return that the reservation I have in mind was in receipt of some $3,900 by way of a loan out of the original amount of $350,000.

I should like to ask this question. What benefit did these Indians actually get from that loan? I have been unable to get any information at all in that regard. However, I should like to read an excerpt from a letter written to me two months ago, and the part I wish to read has to do with conditions existing on this reserve in spite of the loan they received. A man who lives near the reserve wrote me and this is what he had to say:

I think this has been the worst time we have had with the Indians coming to the house to get warm on their way to the reserve. I keep a diary and on looking it over I find this. On the last four days we have had no less than 30 Indians . . .

These Indians came in there to try to get warm around the stove. Then he went on to say that he saw the Indian agent and the Indian agent shrugged his shoulders and said, "Throw them out." That is the kind of situation that exists on that reserve. Therefore I ask this further question relative to that condition. On that reserve there are 183 Indians and they have 348 acres of cultivated land. There you have 183 Indians trying to eke out an existence on 348 acres of land, without any supervision whatsoever.

[Mr. Bryson.]

The minister challenged my statement two years ago when I said there was no supervision on that reserve. I received a return from him pointing out that the Indian agent had visited the reserve three times during the summer. The fact of the matter is, as appears from the return that I received, that the Indian agent visited the reserve in April before seeding. Then he came back early in August before harvest and came back again in November. He always came when there was actually no need for him to come. He came there before the crop had been sowed. He came back before it was harvested, and he came back after it was harvested.

Here is a situation where we have people trying to exist on less than two acres of cultivated land each, and it is not good enough. We go to great lengths to provide money for the Colombo plan for economic aid. I feel that we in this country need a Colombo plan for our own Indians. If we are going to talk about economic aid in other parts of the world, I think we should investigate the proposition of establishing a Colombo plan with respect to our own Indians here at home.

I referred to our Indians as being second class citizens. In my area of the country a great many farmers who have land to be cleared and broken go to an operator and say they will give him the first crop clear if he will clear the trees off the land, break it and sow it at his own expense, and there are many takers. In some cases, if it costs $40 or $50 an acre to clear it, they will take the first crop and half of the second crop. But what happens on the Indian reserve when there is land to be broken? The officials of the department solicit farmers from the surrounding areas to come and bid on clearing and breaking the land, and you give them three-quarters of the crop for five years for doing it. I do not think that is giving the Indian very much of a break.

Then I should like to refer to something that I understand by the grapevine is going to take place, and I hope this is not true. I referred to this reserve where there are 183 Indians trying to operate 348 cultivated acres. They also have 1,500 acres of leased land. I know the land very well. It is on the shore of a lake and is mostly rock and trees.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member means land leased to non-Indians?

Mr. Bryson: It is part of the reserve.

Mr. Pickersgill: Land leased for the Indians.

Mr. Bryson: Yes, it is part of the reserve. I understand by the grapevine that the department is going to take 100 head of heifers, breeding stock, to the reserve this spring.

I hope that is not true, because these people have no haying machinery whatsoever. They have no facilities to look after such a herd of cattle, and they will end up without any cattle or anything else. All they will have will be the companionship of some of the cows next winter. I hope the minister will advise me as to the truth of that story.

In this very informative little magazine I also read something about housing conditions on reserves. I was rather amused at the story, because the first thing I read was that hammers and saws on almost every reserve in Canada were singing a song of better housing. It sounds very interesting when you read it, but when you investigate the proposition what do you find? I am just going to take two provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I find that in Saskatchewan we have 67 Indian reservations and last year there were 62 new homes built, or something less than one home per reservation. There are 18,750 Indians on the 67 reserves, so that means one new house for each 300 Indians. In Alberta there are 47 reserves and there were 130 houses built or 2·7 houses per reserve, with about 300 Indians on each reserve.

I come back to the first point I made about supervision. We need, not only more but better Indian agents. I am sure the minister is a good enough administrator to realize that changes are necessary in that regard if we are going to have better conditions among our Indians. It is going to cost more money, and I think the people of Canada will be prepared to grant more money for this worthy cause. In my opinion we in this country stand condemned of the greatest crime in our history so far as our treatment of our Indians is concerned. I think it is time that our Indian policy was established on the principle that the Canadian Indian is a respectable individual. That is the only policy the government has not tried up to this time, and that is why we have failed so completely and miserably to even come close to finding a solution to the problem.

We are placing a great deal of emphasis on education, but I should like to say that only when we make a concerted attack at the root of the problem are we going to make any progress in education. First of all we must establish a decent economic existence for these impoverished people before we talk about interesting them in education. However, adequate educational facilities must be provided in conjunction with such a program.

I said something about the minister being a good administrator, and I hope he will prove to be a good administrator in future so far as Indian affairs are concerned. Certainly if we take as our yardstick the progress in Indian welfare that has been made to date I doubt whether among the 19 members of the cabinet a worse administrator could have been found. I hope the minister will do something to better conditions as we find them. I should like to ask the minister this question. We are stuck with this Indian problem, and nobody knows it better than he does. The Indian, by the minister's own admission, is not a dying race by any stretch of the imagination; he is increasing.

We must face this problem. I should like to see the minister take one of these reserves in western Canada and set it up as an experimental station in order to see what can be done to give these people a decent economic existence. I think he is going to be obliged to abandon many of these reserves. The Indians themselves asked for land which was not suitable for agriculture. They asked for land that was situated near lakes where they could fish, but there is no longer fish in the lakes. I should therefore like to see the minister take one of these reserves that has possibilities, set it up under proper supervision as an experimental station, and see what can be done. Certainly it is going to cost money, but I think it will be worth it. Otherwise, we shall be obliged to abandon completely the reserves we have because these people are increasing in numbers and are becoming more impoverished as time goes on.

I should like to see the administration divided between the province, as much as possible, and the central government. When you are dealing with people scattered through the ten provinces, local conditions and provincial conditions are different. I think it would be to the advantage of all concerned if the administration of this problem were shared between the province, as much as possible, and the federal authority. I feel that the Indian problem will not solve itself. We made the problem, and we must accept the major responsibility for solving it.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, in all I say today I want the minister and every other member in the chamber to realize that I fully appreciate the fact that in dealing with the Indian problem you are dealing with a major problem. It is a matter about which it is extremely easy to find fault but exceedingly difficult to prescribe a remedy and produce results. I have spent my life within two miles of the Blood Indian reservation. The Blood Indian reservation is one of the finest reservations in Canada, and the Blood Indians are one of the finest tribes in Canada, if not the finest. I say that without reservation, and not because they happen to be in my constituency.

I have greatly appreciated what has been said by the hon. member for Prince Albert and the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort. Everything those hon. members said was true, valuable and pertinent; and everything those two said must be met head on, with no sidestepping whatsoever, because they are picturing facts just as they are. The speech given the other night by the hon. member for Mackenzie River was again an exceedingly valuable one that must be met head on.

Ever since we started dealing with Indians, or rather ever since our forefathers did so, I think there has been a failure to realize a most important fact, namely that the Indian population of the Dominion of Canada is potentially a magnificent asset or a dreadful liability. Whether it is going to become a magnificent asset or a formidable responsibility rests upon us who are charged with the responsibility of administering the act under which the Indians are supposed to try to live. There is no doubt that our Indian population—and I say this as a result of my observations of the Indians—as far as I have met them—consists of splendid men and splendid women in potentiality. If they are given a chance such as that which we demand for our own children and our fellows, they will measure up in a highly commendable way.

Up to the present time, as I have seen ourselves in action in respect of Indians—and while I was sitting in the committee on the Indian Act I kept thinking of this over and over again—the first thing we always think about when we think about Indians is how to save money. We try to put the dollar sign on every single thing we think and say about Indians when as a matter of fact the first thing we ought to be thinking about is Indians, how to make them the great people the Creator intended they should be, and the magnificent people they were before the white man came to this country. Let the dollar sign take care of itself. We have been altogether too niggardly in the past. We should be treating our Indian population as a sort of big business in Canada.

It is easy for us to hear men like the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort, whom I honour because of his contribution this afternoon and the careful study he has devoted to this problem—it is easy to hear him speak about the Indians consisting of 150,000 or more, but it is extremely difficult for us to realize what 150,000 people would look like if you had them all close together where you could get a good look at them; how much it would take to feed, clothe, shelter and educate them; and how many resources and what kind of resources they would require to have access to if they were to supply these things themselves. I refer to the feeding, clothing, sheltering and educating.

With us it is largely a matter of money, as I have already indicated. I know that we are faced with serious financial difficulties in this nation, but we are not faced with any difficulties in connection with producing food, clothing, shelter, the means of educating or of giving hospitalization. We are not faced with that problem at all. Let us not forget that fact for one minute. If we are worried about money, it is likely to be our own fault. The Indians cannot do a thing about that money question. They are helpless. Today they can do very little about producing, because in that respect they are likewise largely helpless.

Having said these things, I want the minister not to feel that I am finding fault with the way in which he is administering the Indian department. I believe the minister has approached this problem with just as great sincerity, resourcefulness and initiative as did the present Minister of Finance; and I doubt that the country ever had a finer minister in charge of Indian problems than the present Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree with that statement.

Mr. Blackmore: We must face these things. It is just little Canadianism for me, because I happen to be in the opposition, to fail to appreciate the efforts which are being put forth by the people who are in the government. I must put myself in a position such as that in which I would be if I occupied their position. I may say that I am really very glad that I do not occupy the position in which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration happens to find himself with regard to nearly anything he has to deal with in his department.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have at least one friend.

Mr. Blackmore: You have at least someone who appreciates the problems you face and who is ready to give you credit for the things you do when you are trying to do what is right.

Mr. Benidickson: I would join with the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. Hansell: Another friend.

Mr. Blackmore: There are several principles which I think must be laid down. I found when I was on the Indian Act committee there were a good many who did not agree with me; but after the thinking I have done, which may not be of the very highest type, and after the experience I have had with Indians—and I have been on plenty of reservations—I have come to the conclusion that the things I am going to lay down are principles which are essential in dealing with the Indian problem.

I would say the first thing, Mr. Speaker—and I believe the minister agrees with all these things; I hope he will not think there is any criticism implied—we must do is to keep the reservation inviolate. Every reservation in this Dominion of Canada must be kept at least as good as it is now, and retained that way for generations yet to come. It must be improved if possible and wherever possible, but it must not be allowed to deteriorate.

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort spoke of the increase in the population. It is true the Indians are increasing in numbers; we want them to do so. We are providing them with family allowances and old age pensions to encourage them to do so. We should be providing them with greater family allowances and old age pensions to encourage them to do so, because as far as I know Indians will be loyal and true to this nation, which is a great deal more than you can say about a whole lot of the questionable characters we have been dragging into this country in droves in the last 15 or 20 years, people who would rather cut our throats than say hello to us, only they do it in a sneaking underhand way, behind the curtain or in the dark. Therefore I say we want the Indian population to increase. They are great people.

Now, then, if the Indian population increases—and it is increasing on the reservation in my constituency, the Blood Indian reservation—why have we not added to the acreage in that reservation in conformity with the increase in the population? Why did we make the reservation in the beginning the size it was then? Had the size of the reservation any relation whatsoever to the number of Indians which it was contemplated would be expected to maintain themselves on the reservation? If not, then certainly it was an oversight. Should we not in a very broad way fit the size of a reservation to the population of the Indians who are required to live on that reservation? Wherever it is found that the size of a reservation is not in conformity with the number of Indians who have to keep themselves on that reservation we had better look into the matter with the determination to make the reservation larger or more productive. I say that is the first great principle.

We should increase the productivity of the reservation by such things as wood lots, fish ponds, pasture lands and game. A lot of people I have talked to gasped when I talked about a thing like that. Well, how in the name of common sense do you suppose an Indian gets his wood with which to keep himself warm? Seventy-five years ago there was wood all over the place and in every water course, where he could help himself and get all the wood he wanted; there were ponies running all over the range that he could use. Well, today he cannot find any place where he can go and get a bit of firewood for his home without being warned off by a white holder of the property.

Why have we not looked into the matter of planting wood lots and maintaining them where an Indian on the reservation has not a wood lot and where wood is at a premium? How do you think Indians can afford to buy coal the way we can? Where are they going to get the money to pay for the coal? For instance, in my own riding time and again I have seen the Indians struggling along. When I think of how much it costs my family for coal to keep ourselves warm and what we have to spend on food and clothing and every other thing that we need to live, I often say to my wife I do not see how on earth the Indians live at all.

I do not wish to elaborate or take too much time on the matters I have mentioned, but they are matters that ought to be taken care of. The Indians used to be able to go fishing all over the place 75 years ago. When they signed the treaties in the west in 1877 they could fish anywhere; they could take prairie chicken and other game birds anywhere, and, as I have said, they could get firewood anywhere. They could pick fruit in abundance, on every hillside, and a little while before that there were buffalo in abundance, and deer. There was a wide variety of game, and there were rabbits on pretty nearly every reservation. You can go across the average reservation today almost without seeing a sign of any of these things. What are the Indians living on?

I would like to elaborate on the remarks of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort. It would be a very fine thing for the minister if he could possibly select a reservation somewhere, if he feels they are satisfactory, and then take the number of white men that would correspond to the number of Indians that he would expect could make a living there, put the white men there and see if they could live where Indians are trying to live, with no more access to productive capacity than the Indians have.

In the reservation in my constituency there is plenty of room for wood lots and plenty of room for fish ponds. Until the St. Mary dam was built I do not believe we ever thought of increasing the number of fish in the streams in which the Indians used to fish. We took no steps so far as I know. I hope the minister is doing that, and I am sure he will do it after I get through talking. We took no steps to increase their pasture facilities. Wherever I go the white men around are just simply straining to get in on the Indian reservations and rent their lands for pasture. It is good that they do, because in many instances the Indians have not the cattle to pasture on the land. But the main thing is that they never take any thought of improving the pasturing on their lands. Something should be done to renew the pasture.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not mind my interrupting for just a second? I know he will be glad to hear that I anticipated what he was going to say, and we did make an arrangement with the provincial government to get quite a bit more land added to the Stony-Sarcee reserve west of Calgary for precisely those purposes.

Mr. Blackmore: I want the minister to get up and tell us every one of the things he is doing, because that would help us to appreciate them. I hope he goes not only on the Stony reserve but I hope he considers every reserve. The only reserve I know of in which there appears to be sufficient pasture is the reserve of the Indians near Gleichen, Alberta. I have been over a good many of the reservations, too.

Again, in the Waterton national park, during the last few years, we have had a preserve in which we have buffalo. It is just surprising how happily these buffalo live and how they thrive and grow and reproduce. The thought has come to me many times, why could we not establish—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: I may have used the wrong word.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no.

Mr. Blackmore: If I did, I beg your pardon. After all, the important thing is that these buffalo are growing in numbers. Why should we not have buffalo paddocks in a great number of places where the Indians could go and shoot buffalo as their fathers did? Why have we not taken care of a matter of that kind?

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall have to leave that to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Blackmore: But remember, it will take quite a bit of money and it will take someone to look after the buffalo. In the hills a part of which form part of the Waterton park where the buffalo are now roaming there would be ample space for thousands of buffalo. I do not know why it could not be put to such good use, considering the fact that we do not know what to do with our surplus wheat when we produce it, and a great many other things we produce in abundance. I do not know why we could not put some of these lands into valuable use for the sake of our Indians.

As I said a moment ago there is a great deal of land which we are taking over and finding unsuitable for farming. I do not see one valid reason why we should not build pastures, as the Minister of Agriculture has done under the P.F.R.A., in which we could allow the Indians to participate. I just throw that out as a suggestion. If we are afraid to give them the land outright we might lease it to them over a considerable length of time. We are now overproducing all across the country, and I do not see why we should not let the Indians benefit by some of the land we are using.

There is another very important matter. I do not wish to do any harm to any hon. member who served with me on the committee examining the Indian Act, but during our sittings there seemed to be a feeling that what we wanted to do was to get the Indians off the reserves, wash our hands of them and dust our trousers and say, "That's that". As I said when I first spoke, we must treat these reservations, shall I say, as sanctuaries to which the Indians can return.

If we were to take the Indian boys and girls and give them the finest education and training that we might give to white youth and they were to go into ordinary society, they would be under a tremendous disadvantage in the average community purely because of personal characteristics. Can you imagine how popular an Indian doctor would be? Can you imagine what success an Indian dentist or an Indian school teacher or lawyer would have? I know there are some who succeed but when you think of how many white people fail, with all their advantages, you would not be surprised to find that a great many of these people would fail, not because they were incompetent in their profession but simply because the white people would not want to go to an Indian.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Blackmore: Well, I have had a certain amount of experience in these matters, and I am certainly not hurting the Indian; I am boosting him up and my hon. friend should be glad of that. He puts himself up as a great defender of Indians and an advocate of their welfare, but I want this to be understood. As far as I can see, if you trained the average Indian to the very highest degree he would still be under a serious disadvantage in open competition with white people among whom he hoped to dwell. In an age when unemployment is so common and jobs are so hard to get we must not imagine that just because we train these Indian boys and girls they are going to be successful. Many an Indian who had fine personal qualifications himself might have a child who would not have those qualifications. This happens among white people with great frequency. If the father of that child should have left the reserve and established himself independently, his children who did not inherit the qualifications they would need in order to live off a reserve would have to be able to go back in time of need. I think this is a matter that must not be disregarded.

For the reason I have just given I think we have to safeguard the band membership of Indians. I do not think we can afford to leave it entirely to the bands of Indians to determine whether Indians are going to be on reserves. If people have Indian blood in their veins, even if it is only one-twelfth or one-sixteenth, they may be parents of children who will have all the characteristics of full-blooded Indians. These children will likely have to go back to a reservation and claim the right of the reservation to which they should belong. I think provision must be made for this sort of case looking to the future, if we are to approach this problem in a realistic way with a long range view.

Certain things have been said by various men and certain things have been said by the minister which have caused the Indians much concern. The Indians fear he wants to get them off the reservations. For instance, the minister has used the expression "integrating the Indian with the white population". Throughout his life the Indian has been taught to suspect everything the double-tongued white man said; therefore when the double-tongued white man says "integrate the Indian with the white population" the Indian concludes that means taking him off the reserve, putting him in open competition with the white man and taking away the treaty privileges his forefathers were promised.

As far as integration is concerned I think it must be as a result of self motivation on the part of the Indians; it must be by teaching the boys and girls that they can succeed very well off the reserves.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, quite.

Mr. Blackmore: No pressure must be put on them in any way, shape or form. When they integrate a good many of them will intermarry. I know of a good many combinations which are apparently quite successful, where Indians and white people have married. If they do that of their own free will and choice it is fine, and I believe they will eventually become white people; but let us have the instigation and pressure come from them and not from us.

There is another matter to which I wish to devote some attention and that is the preservation of the native religion, history and culture. The Indians have a great culture, a great history and a great religion. The ancestors of our Indians created those magnificent pieces of architecture we find down in Central America. It was not second rate citizens who produced those great works, and no doubt they were created by people of the same blood and with the same ability as our Indians. The Indians have a great history and they should know about it, because it will inspire them. They had a great religion, or they would not have produced those great works; and they should know about it. Whether or not they choose to follow their native religion ought to be a matter of their personal choice, but I believe they should know about all these things.

There is another matter which I think deserves some attention, and that is the matter of choosing the band council. Formerly in all the reservations and among all the bands the Indians who led the bands were people who had a hereditary right to do so, and the Indians were led by those who came from great families. We are now trying to introduce on many of the reservations the idea that the Indians should elect their representatives rather than select those whose heredity would qualify them for the position.

That poses a difficult problem, as the minister knows only too well, but my judgment is that the Indians themselves should be the judges as to whether they will choose as their band council those hereditary leaders or whether they will choose others whom they may consider better fitted for the task. Great care ought to be exercised in this matter.

Having visited the Indian reserve in my own constituency the minister will remember how far it is from one end of that reserve to the other. Just imagine—the minister will get the picture immediately—a meeting called just north of Cardston at which the Indians are going to elect a band council. How many of the Indians who dwell down near Lethbridge are going to be able to attend that meeting? How many of them are going to be able to afford it? There will also be many Indians to the north and west who will be unable to attend the meeting, and the result will be that a great percentage of the Indians will not be able to attend. Who will be the people who will select members for the council? It will be a little group of Indians who live within three or four miles of the area just north of Cardston. That is the kind of thing which needs to be given much thought in managing Indians.

It was either the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort or the hon. member for Prince Albert who suggested that the Indians believed that if they got the franchise they would have to give up their treaty rights. The Indians in my constituency have that idea. They are fearful that if they vote they will disqualify themselves from getting their treaty rights. That shows there should be no relationship between an Indian voting and his being independent on the reserve and enjoying his treaty rights. If we feel that the Indian has reached the point where he can safely vote, let us give him the vote regardless of whether he is a treaty Indian or not. Let there be no strings attached.

This was emphasized by the hon. member for Mackenzie, who gave a very fine talk on this matter. When the Indian becomes qualified for a job he should have a job to go to. In fact, I am beginning to think that we must adopt that attitude toward white people as well. When boys or girls are qualified for jobs I submit it is the duty of the government to see that they get jobs, even if it is necessary to create a new industry in order to provide such. I know that will be looked upon as rather extreme, but there is nothing more disheartening to a boy or girl coming out of university than to be unable to get a job no matter where he or she may go to try. If the Indians are going to be given education and training, jobs must be waiting for them when they have completed that education and training. I cannot see any way of escaping that conclusion if we are going to create among the Indians a sound morale.

The same thing is true of the goods they produce, the fish, the lumber, the furs and wheat. It is one thing for white men to compete with each other for a share of the world's markets, but it is another thing altogether for the Indian to do that. He does not possess anything like the facilities with which to force his way into world markets that the white man has.

I think that will constitute the main portion of what I have to say. There are two other matters which I think need attention, one having to do with liquor. I find a great deal of apprehension existing in the minds of the older men, those from about 45 years of age upward, regarding liquor. They want to keep liquor away from their youth.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my duty to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. McLeod: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this subject at this time, but after listening to the well-prepared discourses we have heard this afternoon I feel that I have a story which I should tell in connection with the Indians in the territory which I am fortunate to represent. Incidentally, the reserve of these Indians is located within half a mile of my own home in the town of Enderby. We have heard in this debate calls for a royal commission, and we have heard details of the situation of the Indians in Saskatchewan and Alberta. We have heard the splendid plea by the hon. member for Lethbridge for the alleviation of distress among the Indians.

After listening to the details of the hardships suffered by many Indians I am beginning to think that the Indians in British Columbia are living in a pretty good part of the country. Of course I know that, and I have always preached that British Columbia is the garden of Eden. After listening to the details of the plight of the Indians in Saskatchewan and Alberta I am beginning to believe that is more and more the fact. I was surprised to hear that throughout the reserves in Saskatchewan there has been on an average one new house built per reserve during the past year. I have never gone through the reserve counting the houses, but I know that within two miles of Enderby there have been at least 25 houses built on the reserve during the past two years. They are scattered much farther afield than that. They are not just congregated in one place as a showpiece for the reserve. You can drive through the reserve and see the new houses.

As I listened to the pleas made for legislation and departmental action I wondered whether that was the answer. It appears to me that the problem is to find some way of integrating the Indian into the life of the local community. I do not mean to take the Indian off the reserve, I mean to make him acceptable to the community life of the white people in the areas adjacent to the reserve. I must admit that this is a local problem and its solution depends entirely upon the leaders in the white community who might be interested in the welfare of the Indian.

There is no doubt that the person best able to provide that leadership is the Indian agent. I will go further and say that it is the responsibility of the department of Indian affairs to see that we have Indian agents able to give that leadership. I think we have perhaps not the only agent of that nature but certainly a young man with great vision. I refer to Mr. Hett who is stationed at Vernon. He is certainly doing a mighty fine job in building up morale among the Indians of that area and getting the co-operation of the white community in assisting him in integrating the Indian into the life of the various communities.

Of course the place to start is with the young, and the Indians are no different than the white people in that respect. Sometimes old fellows—I am not excepting some of us in the house—are not amenable to change, but if we can get this across to the young generation it will be an easy matter to instil in them a different outlook and viewpoint.

For many generations we have looked upon the Indian as a second class citizen. I attach no blame for that feeling to either the Indian or the white man, but we must get rid of that stigma, if you want to call it that, and try to make the Indian a first class citizen. In my area we have no separate Indian schools. The Indian children attend the local public schools in Vernon, Enderby, Armstrong, Salmon Arm and I believe every place I could mention. They are not even in separate classrooms. They are free to mingle in their classes, in their sports and in their studies with the white children on a common ground and on a common basis.

It may be that there are many white people, who are not prepared to accept the Indians as an equal but in most cases, especially among children, you find no difference. We also find that the Indians have their bright students and their average students and some who are not even average, but the brighter students are certainly encouraged to go on to higher education, and we have them in the vocational schools and nurses' training schools, and we even have one or two students in the university. So a start has been made in that direction toward encouraging Indians to seek higher education.

We have had no trouble in placing educated Indians in employment. I will go further and say that we have found no trouble among the Indians in regard to earning a living in the local mills and in the woods and in the various jobs open to them in the white community. There is only one complaint I have. There is one large mill in my town that will not hire Indians, for the reason that they will work only two or three days or a week and then go away. For that reason this particular man will not accept Indians, except possibly on a casual day to day labour basis. However, in the main we have Indians working in the mills and in the bush, earning a good deal of money on a scale equal to white people and building up very good homes for themselves on the reserves.

There is one other thing I should like to mention at this time. I spoke of the Indian agent giving leadership to the community or to the Indians on the reserve. Of course he cannot handle that by himself. The only way he can do that is by enlisting the support of people in the white community who are prepared to give some of their time and devote some effort to this work. I just want to tell you a little experience I had last summer. Mr Hett, the agent from Vernon, was anxious to get something started on the reserve, and a special meeting was called in our city hall. At that meeting we had the mounted police detachment—only two of them, by the way—I was at it, and also various other people of the community interested in trying to evolve some way to benefit and give a little lift to life on the reserve.

Of course at a meeting such as that there are always various ideas put forth, and at this one there were several. As a result we had some of the women and men from the town of Enderby who were prepared to devote one night a week or one night a month, as was required, to meet with the Indians and try to educate them into better ways of living. As a result we had a homemakers' club organized on the reserve. By the way, they have a very nice community hall less than half a mile from the limits of our city, and they meet there once a month. Different women from the town of Enderby attend these meetings and give hints and lessons on various phases of homemaking.

In a very short time results have been noticeable. When one drives along the roads through the reserve one sees that the washing on the line, for instance, is a little whiter than it used to be. One sees some brightly coloured curtains hanging at the windows, and one notices some painting and decorating being done on the houses. Inside the houses one will find action being taken in painting and decorating these homes. That is the result of the spirit that has been engendered in that community through the leadership of the people of Enderby.

We all know that sport is one of the greatest ways to level off the thinking of people. In that community we have Indians on the baseball clubs and on the hockey teams. Since I left there I have noted that a boxing club has been organized in our little town. The corporal of the mounted police has offered his services to give lessons and supervise this club. I understand that among the membership are many Indian youths.

This is something that can be done by local effort; and you can build up the spirit that desires to see the Indian brought up to the standard or integrated into the white man's way of life. I think you can talk about legislation from now till doomsday but you cannot legislate these things for the Indians. They have to come through joint effort and through some encouragement from the white people. Leadership must come from the Indian agent and the white people of the communities surrounding the reserves. There are perhaps many other things I could mention, but my whole aim is to stress the point that I doubt very much whether legislation is the answer to this problem. That is the message I tried to convey to the meeting which, as I have said, was held last fall. It is up to us to remove that feeling of inferiority from the Indian and give him to understand that he will be accepted into the circles of the white man.

We have heard a little about drinking. In our province the Indians are allowed into the beer parlours. They get tight on occasion. I doubt if they get any tighter or act any worse than some of our white men. At the same time, I have not been too happy about legislation giving the Indians the right to enter beer parlours and to have liquor freely. The problem in giving liquor to Indians is that it is just one more means by which they get rid of their money, which is not too plentiful.

Many are heads of families. I happen to know quite well a family with 14 children. They have a new house, but I will grant you that it is not big enough for 14 children. The head of this household is working and makes from $10 to $12 per day. All the children of school age are attending school. They are very well dressed, too. However, with $10 or $12 per day the wife finds it difficult to provide school lunches and properly look after these 14 children, of whom I think ten are of school age. That is a problem that would be just as much a problem for a white person. However, I must say that, of the Indians of whom I have knowledge or acquaintance, they seem to be making progress in what I think is the proper way.

I would again emphasize what has been done in this area where leadership has come from the Indian agent, and it seems to be the only one we have heard about. I would say it is up to the Indian affairs branch to see that we have more of this type of Indian agent. That is where the responsibility of the department lies. I think that is something that should be studied and considered. I have no doubt that it is being given consideration, and that possibly the officials of the department know a whole lot more about what is being done in Vernon and my area generally than I do. However, this is something that should be publicized for it does show, rather than through legislation or reserve improvement, one way in which the Indian can be made part of the community life and accepted on a par with the white man of this country.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 439, to amend the Indian Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND APPLICATION, MAKE CHANGES IN ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act to extend the application of the act, and to provide further for certain changes in consequence thereof and also in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, as the resolution indicates, this bill is designed to extend the application of certain provisions of the act to certain persons or groups of persons who are not at present able to benefit from it. These extensions in turn call for certain consequential amendments, and in addition the bill will deal with other amendments of an administrative nature.

The principal amendment proposed has to do with the making of an election to continue as a participant after retirement under part II of the act, which provides the supplementary death benefits. It is proposed to provide a year in advance of retirement in which an election may be made in addition to the present very limited period of 3 days following retirement. A provision is also proposed which would validate elections which could not be accepted in the past since they were made just prior to retirement. Many hon. members are aware of this problem, which is a rather complicated one, and I would suggest that any detailed discussion should be deferred until there has been an opportunity to study the amending bill.

Another major amendment proposed would repeal those provisions in the act which would have come into force on August 1, 1957, and which would have restricted the augmenting of pension credits through employment after the age of 65 on and after that date.

The other amendments proposed will, I think, commend themselves to the house as relatively minor in nature and, as I mentioned previously, relate primarily to the elimination of administrative problems. The most important of these would require that re-employed former contributors under the act on again becoming contributors would be treated like all new employees and would become participants under the supplementary death benefit scheme under part II of the act, regardless of the fact that they had elected not to participate when the death benefit scheme was introduced in the house a year or two ago.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I think that there should be general approval of the purpose expressed in regard to the amendments mentioned in the statement just given to the committee. However, I would strongly urge that the opportunity be taken to deal with a subject which goes much farther than the amendments now proposed and involves an improvement that I think is greatly needed in connection with the Public Service Superannuation Act. I mention that because while we are in the committee stage we are simply dealing with the desirability of introducing a measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act and to extend its application. For that reason it would be possible to redraft the bill, if it is in final drafted form, to include any suggestions that may be made. So it is appropriate on a motion of this kind to indicate the nature of amendments not already mentioned but which, in the opinion of many hon. members, could and should be included.

In the statement just made it has been indicated that the legislation is designed to extend the application of the present act to certain people to whom it does not now apply. It is also intended to provide a wider opportunity for election under the act. It seems that the remainder of the amendments are largely for the purpose of facilitating administration.

I believe the time is long overdue in Canada for an amendment to the act which will recognize the severe hardship being suffered by many former civil servants, members of the armed forces, former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others whose pensions were fixed at a time that the dollar was worth a great deal more than it is today. What I have to say does not of course apply to the disability pensions for service veterans, because consideration is given to them under another act.

I would point out, however, that it must be well known to all hon. members that there are men and women who gave long years of faithful service either in the civil service of Canada, as members of the armed forces, as members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or in the related services, whose pensions today, with the present value of the dollar, are hopelessly inadequate to meet the minimum demands of decent living. When this subject has been discussed on other occasions there has been some tendency to suggest that the amount paid was in the nature of a contract. There is the suggestion that it would be a practical impossibility to review the whole field of pension payments in these categories. I suggest, however, that we should consider the reasons for which these pensions were established.

It is recognized that those in the civil service, in the armed forces, in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and in other similar services are not paid as much as people of similar skill, devotion to their task and general ability might earn in private occupations. The pension has been regarded as something that will make it possible for them to live in modest decency in the years of their retirement after the active period of their service. Actually the date of retirement may be a fairly early one. For that reason we must consider this matter as an obligation of justice. Their pensions were fixed at a time when doubtless, in many cases, they were adequate to meet the demands of the principle upon which they had been established. It seems to me that this is a question of justice to those who have served their country well. In making the suggestion that there should be a review and that there should be amendments to the superannuation act at this time, I am not making any suggestion that is impractical or that is in any way beyond the ordinary considerations of government.

I would point out that similar consideration has been given to this problem in both the United Kingdom and the United States. To take the United Kingdom, where the parliamentary system is similar to our own and where the form of service may be more similar, I would point out that there have been a number of acts increasing the pensions payable to people in the categories I have mentioned as well as to others.

As evidence of this I merely give the fact that in 1920 an act was passed known as the Pensions (Increase) Act, 1920. Again there was the Pensions (Increase) Act of 1924. Then there was the Pensions (Increase) Act of 1944. Later there was the Pensions (Increase) Act of 1947. Later still there was the Pensions (Increase) Act of 1956, which came into effect on April 1 this year. In the Pensions (Increase) Act of 1956 the increase of pension embraced 20 different categories. It would perhaps naturally embrace a wider number of categories in the United Kingdom than it would here in any event, because of the fact that with a single government there, a number of services that would fall under the provincial governments in this country fall under the central government there.

The amounts of the increases have varied. This year they have varied in accordance with the amount of the pension payable, and it is not a rigid pattern. At the time this bill was before the House of Commons in the United Kingdom I find the statement of the financial secretary to the treasury, Mr. Henry Brooke, as reported at page 585 of British Hansard for February 23 of this year. During the course of those remarks he had this to say:

> What we have to do is to take into account a total body of about 600,000 pensioners, who have retired after different kinds of services, with different kinds of pension, at different times over the past 30 years and more. What matters is to do justice, as far as possible, among all those individuals. One has to discard the idea of a simple, new scheme as soon as one discovers that whatever scheme of that kind one can devise, it will do justice that is too rough to be called justice at all.

Mr. Brooks then went on to explain the system that was being adopted, and later in the same day he explained:

> The fact is that the earlier acts have given a much greater percentage increase the smaller the pension.

That practice has generally been followed. Nevertheless there has been a general review in the United Kingdom of the whole problem of pensions fixed years ago, at a time when the value of money was a great deal more than it is today in terms of the same units. That bill passed this year was one of a long series, as I have indicated. It shows that it is an accepted part of their practice in the United Kingdom to attempt to deal with this subject on the basis of justice which relates to the duty to give to those who have served the country in various capacities a minimum decent living standard in keeping with their place in the community.

I would point out that this principle has been accepted by three different parties in Britain. It was accepted by the Conservative government which passed the act this year; by the coalition government in 1944; by a Labour government since then; and in earlier years by a Liberal government. Therefore in the United Kingdom no argument is presented that any cold, contractual basis should limit the amount payable to those elderly citizens who have given fine service to the country and whose pensions were intended to give them a minimum decent standard of living.

Mr. Chairman, as I have a few more remarks to make, although not extended ones, it might perhaps be well if—

The Chairman: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to proceed?

Mr. Drew: I think it would perhaps be just as well, Mr. Chairman, if we called it six o'clock and I continued briefly at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Drew: At six o'clock I was speaking on the efforts that have been made in the United Kingdom to deal with the problem of pensions to civil servants, to members of the armed forces and others on the basis of the changing value of money, and I had given references to the acts which had been passed there to deal with that tremendously important problem. I did so merely to indicate that this is not a theoretical suggestion in any way, and I proposed that the act here be amended to take care of the situation with which we are confronted in this country.

I would like also to point out that in the United States which it is true has a different form of government, they have dealt with this same problem and on different occasions have made changes to bring the pensions in some way into balance with the changing value of money. In doing so they have recognized that this is not something which can be regarded merely as a contract for a fixed amount of money, but that what we have in mind is a decent living standard for people who have served their country in one public capacity or another. In 1930 they passed an act which provided for an increase of annuities and again, in 1955, they made certain changes in the earlier statute. I quote from page 4750 of what is described as the United States code, congressional and administrative news, which covers the laws passed in the United States during 1955. I see that at page 4750 it says:

> As will be seen from the schedule, the formula favours the low-annuity individual who most needs the increase.

Nevertheless, I find that in the United States laws, as well as in the laws passed in the United Kingdom, an attempt has been made to examine the whole situation and find, on the basis of justice, what would be a fair, decent and reasonable minimum standard for those who are dependent upon the pensions paid in this way.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when we find in the United Kingdom, which is under a similar system to our own, and in the United States, which is under a different system but which is so close to us geographically that they have dealt with this subject in the way they have, we should be prepared to deal with it here. I think it must be known to many hon. members that there are many people, who gave long years of devoted service, who are living in the most severely restricted conditions today and in fact are living in conditions that we should not feel to be satisfactory for those who have given long years of public service. I do think that in the amendments now proposed some steps should be taken to deal with this subject. I believe that as a first step a uniform percentage increase should be agreed upon. However, I think it is essential that the whole subject be examined both in regard to the time at which the pensions were granted and the years of service that were given.

Even a uniform percentage would deal to some extent only with the problem with which we are confronted. Many of the people now with no other resources than the pensions of this kind which they receive had those pensions established at a time when the dollar was worth a great deal more than twice which it is worth today. Others received their pensions at a later date. It would seem that there are variable factors which must be taken into consideration.

I do not wish to leave the impression that I am in any way suggesting we should hand over the responsibility for examining things of this kind to bodies other than representative bodies of this parliament; but we all know that there are occasions when a royal commission, which can proceed without any problem of the period during which parliament is sitting or otherwise, can perform services which are extremely helpful. Those who sometimes speak in critical terms of royal commissions forget how many useful achievements there are which can be directly attributed to the recommendations of royal commissions in this country.

The same is true in the United Kingdom; the same is true in each of the nations of the commonwealth which has a similar parliamentary system. It would seem to me that in this case it is not only desirable and expedient that a measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act be introduced for the purposes mentioned earlier in the discussion today, but also that this amending bill make some immediate provision for the people who are in dire need at this time in the face of the very real measure of inflation which has taken place here and elsewhere.

Then I suggest that this whole problem be examined by a royal commission, which could sit without interruption and could examine the scale of pensions that were granted at different times and make recommendations to us as to the way in which this very real and very human problem could be dealt with.

The suggestion is sometimes made that we abdicate our responsibilities when a royal commission is appointed to inquire into matters of this kind. That certainly is not so. A royal commission can only make recommendations, nothing more. It is then for parliament to decide what will be done in regard to the recommendations made. In this case the advantages of a royal commission would be that it could start its sittings as soon as it had been appointed, and could continue to hear evidence and examine the various aspects of this problem and then be prepared to make an appropriate recommendation which could be given due consideration whenever the next session of this parliament or a succeeding parliament meets.

In any event, whatever course is adopted I do wish to emphasize this fact which I am sure is known to many hon. members. There are many devoted public servants of other years who are living under most unsatisfactory conditions today because the pensions which were established in those earlier days are so inadequate for their requirements now.

I have made these recommendations at a time when the bill is not finally before us. It is open to the government to reconsider the exact wording of the bill that will be brought forward following this resolution. In view of the fact that this has been dealt with on numerous occasions over succeeding years by the parliament of the United Kingdom, and in view of the fact that it has been dealt with under similar principles by the congress of the United States, where living conditions are in many ways similar to our own, I urge that justice be done to those senior members of our civil service, our armed forces, our Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other similar servants so we may have the feeling that those who serve Canada well are at least receiving justice in this way.

May I suggest, without any thought other than the fact that the problem of maintaining the strength of this or any other country depends so much upon the civil service and the other services I have mentioned, that perhaps this is the day when we might most appropriately consider our responsibility to those who can only look to us for the measure of justice to which they are entitled.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is absent in his constituency.

An hon. Member: We do not share your sorrow.

Mr. Nicholson: He is observing the birthday of our country in his constituency. I am sure the members of all parties appreciate the outstanding work the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has done throughout the years with a view to improving working conditions for civil servants generally. He has done a great deal for them and for superannuated civil servants.

Mr. McIlraith: He has not done anything for them; not a thing.

Mr. Nicholson: In the first place I want to associate myself with the Leader of the Opposition in paying tribute to the quality of the civil service generally. I think the Minister of Finance particularly must be constantly aware of the problem of securing and retaining in the public service the best available people in the country in view of the tremendous competition offered by private enterprise.

I have before me a sessional paper which gives the names of the lawyers who have been employed by government departments and the legal fees and expenses paid to them. This return runs to over 100 pages, and I cannot but contrast the fees paid to a very few lawyers across the country with the salaries we pay to the lawyers who are in the cabinet or who serve with various government departments. I am sure the Minister of Finance himself finds it embarrassing at times to be negotiating with some of the top people in the Canadian financial world and to have to admit that the Minister of Finance receives an amount which is very small compared with the returns offered by the large financial corporations in this country.

I realize I cannot go too far in pressing this. Last year when the superintendent of insurance had performed an outstanding piece of work I suggested that when increases were being considered he should be kept in mind for an increase. One of the daily papers which circulates in my constituency drew attention to the salary he was receiving. Certainly it is not too easy to explain to farmers who are hard pressed why a farmer member should be advocating higher salaries for people who to them appear to be receiving fairly adequate salaries, but I think we should all agree that working in the public service of a country like Canada should rate high, and that those who are asked to make a career in various government departments should be given salaries while they are working and pensions when they are too old to work which will compare favourably with the returns which are available in other sectors of our economy.

I would like to stress particularly the point which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has made again and again concerning the large number of civil servants who have been forced to retire on pensions which might have appeared adequate when they started with the civil service 30, 40 or 50 years ago but are quite inadequate today. I am not like some members of parliament who stay in plush Ottawa hotels when they come here; my returns do not allow that. On three different occasions I have had a room in the homes of retired civil servants. I think it would be a good thing if more members of parliament would place themselves in positions where they can observe retired civil servants living in the city of Ottawa.

An hon. Member: You retire and we will all be satisfied.

Mr. Nicholson: I did not hear that. Would the hon. member stand up? I would appreciate having him say it so I can hear it.

When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre discussed this question on April 16, 1953, he pointed out that of the 10,572 retired civil servants, 1,468 were on a pension of less than $60 a month and there were 312 on a pension of less than $20 a month. The figures for widows of civil servants, who numbered 5,123, showed that more than half or 2,766 were on a pension of less than $40 a month, and 942 were on a pension of less than $20 a month.

There is a new Minister of Finance since the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre discussed this question; Mr. Abbott was the minister at that time. I am sure the present Minister of Finance will want to give careful consideration to the representations I am making before the bill is finally presented.

I notice that when Bill No. 334 was before the banking and commerce committee in April of 1953, Mr. Whitehouse, president of the Civil Service Federation of Canada, was called as a witness. In answer to a question as to what other countries had done about the position of retired civil servants who were caught by inflation he was able to advise the committee that in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, the United States and some parts of Canada something had been done. Later, upon being questioned, he admitted that Saskatchewan was the one part of Canada where some provision had been made so that retired civil servants who found themselves with pensions of $40 or $60 a month would be put in a better position.

I submit that this is a domestic problem that the Minister of Finance and his experts can solve without any serious repercussions on our economy. It is very annoying for this large group of our retired civil servants to read articles in newspapers such as the one which appeared in the Toronto Telegram on June 27 of this year. This is a story written by Arnold Agnew from Ottawa and it is headed: "3 Months' Profits Hit $728,000,000—See Huge Surplus". The articles reads:

> Corporation profits soared to an estimated $728 million in the first three months of this year, an increase of 28 per cent over the same period last year, dominion bureau of statistics figures show.
>
> The increase in profits before taxes amounts to $158 million. Income tax liabilities for the first quarter were estimated at $321 million, an increase of 23 per cent over last year.
>
> The figures bolster predictions that the dominion treasury will find itself with a huge surplus at the end of the year.

Then the last dominion bureau of statistics weekly bulletin had this to say about the gross national product:

> Canada's gross national product rose during the first quarter of 1956 to a level equal to an annual rate of $28·3 billion, about 6 per cent above the annual average for last year and nearly 11·7 per cent above last year's first-quarter level. The quarter's rise reflected mainly a further rise in the physical volume of production. The output gain was concentrated in mining, forestry, construction, transportation and other service groups; manufacturing was little changed from the last 1955 quarter.

If the gross national product can go up 11·7 per cent in the first quarter of this year as compared with last year, and if corporation profits can go up 28 per cent for the first quarter of this year as compared with the first quarter of last year, I see no reason why the Minister of Finance cannot before proceeding with this legislation review the matter and bring in the necessary provision so that the large number of civil servants who retired on the assumption that the bond of the government of Canada was as good as gold and that the cheque they would receive in the evening of their lives would be adequate, should have further consideration.

On April 16, 1953, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when discussing this matter pointed out what had been done in the United States in 1948, when an act of congress was passed which increased the pensions of retired employees by 25 per cent or $300 a year, whichever was the lesser figure. If the United States in 1948 could provide either an increase of 25 per cent or $300 a year, whichever was the lesser, I am sure we could do the same thing in 1956. In 1952 a further increase was granted by another act of congress. As an example of how those two pieces of legislation worked out, a superannuant who was receiving $1,000 per year was increased in 1948 to $1,250 and in 1952 to $1,565.50. I ask hon. members to remember those figures, an increase of over 50 per cent since 1948. The figure for 1948, $1,000, increased to $1,250 and to $1,565 in 1952. I think the same thing is physically possible on the Canadian scene.

I might mention in passing that apparently it is not too wise a political move for any member of parliament to cast reflections upon these most reasonable representations. I notice that one of the few members who was critical was the former member for Regina, Dr. McCusker. It is significant that he did not come back to Ottawa after the election. Of course there were other factors involved, but I think the fact that he was not able to make out a good case when this bill was before the house indicated that it would have been better for him if he had kept quiet.

Some time ago the Department of Labour produced an interesting study having to do with older workers. I think at this stage the minister should be prepared to give consideration to the large number of people who have retired but who are unable to have that standard of living which the economy of Canada could provide for all its citizens. The statistical branch of the Bank of Canada has presented some alarming information with regard to consumer credit in Canada. Since the beginning of 1951 when these figures were first compiled up to the end of 1955 the increase has been most alarming.

It is only natural that in the Canadian economy when there is such a wide variety of goods in our stores and when there are such a large number of people who are not getting salaries or pensions large enough to buy those goods, many would be encouraged to go into debt. We certainly are not going to be able to solve the economic problems of Canada by encouraging our pensioners or those who are not on pensions to go in debt to the storekeeper, to the finance company or to the bank in order to get consumer goods.

I find that in the United States there is a great deal of concern about this same trend. Large numbers of people are unable to pay for the things they want out of their current wages or pensions and are going into debt. I notice the total mortgage and consumer debt in 1955 stood at 46·8 per cent of the disposable income, a rise of 5 per cent over 1954. It is pointed out that in 1929, a wild year by older standards, the percentage was only 31·4 per cent. It would appear from this increase in the United States and Canada that the Minister of Finance and the experts in his department should give careful consideration to this large sector of our Canadian people whose wages or pensions prevent them from having their share of the goods which are available.

To be specific, I feel that the minister should be prepared to bring up to date the figures given on April 16 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. At that time there were 1,052 retired civil servants who were finding it impossible to enjoy the standard of living to which they thought they would be entitled upon finishing their work and going on pension. I submit that provisions should be made similar to those which have been made by the United States, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia, the province of Saskatchewan and a good number of private organizations in Canada.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary at this stage of this measure to say too much because we do not know what there will be in the bill. I understand the minister made no statement to introduce the resolution.

Mr. Harris: My parliamentary assistant did.

Mr. Low: I think it would be more desirable to have the bill in our hands before we make too extended remarks about it. However, I should like to add a word to the comments which have been placed before the committee by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Mackenzie.

It is only parliament which in the final analysis can provide a just measure of security for our civil service both by way of salary and superannuation. As has been said, they look to us, and I think it is essential that we give the most earnest consideration to the position in which civil servants find themselves and do what we can, not only to attract the best possible men and women to the service but to see to it that the level of their salaries and superannuation is such as will give them the measure of security to which they are entitled.

I have been somewhat critical of some of the competitions which have been advertised and notices of which we find so frequently in our mail boxes. In my judgment the salary schedule is ridiculously low in many cases when one considers the qualifications and experience required before a person can qualify for the position.

There was a time when it could be said that it was desirable to get a fat civil service job, but I am afraid now there are very few such, except perhaps at the top, and even then they are not too fat. I am afraid that we are not competing successfully with private industry. I think we are going to lose such people to private industry, and unless we become much more realistic about both salary schedules and superannuation arrangements we shall find ourselves very largely with second rate people in the civil service.

Now I should like to say just a word about the matter raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie, about the retired civil servant who found himself ten or 15 years ago on what was then considered a fairly good level of superannuation, one which he thought would provide him with some security for the rest of his life. Since then the value of the Canadian dollar has been allowed to decline seriously until its value is little more than 50 per cent of what it was in 1939. As a consequence the superannuant finds himself in the position that he has not half enough to take care of his needs during his declining years.

Now he is in a desperate position. It was not his fault that the dollar lost its purchasing value. He therefore can say, "I looked ahead; I did the very best I could to provide myself with security for my old age. I put up dollars that would purchase a dollar's worth, but I got back dollars that will purchase only 50 cents worth. Consequently I have to look somewhere for justice. I have to do something to supplement this meagre income; otherwise I simply cannot live." Many of them cannot find work. They are told they are too old to work.

May I point out there are two sides to this whole question. There is the humanitarian side. We owe it to those old civil servants, who gave the best years of their lives to the public service, to see to it that the dollars they get back under their superannuation schemes are equal in purchasing value to the dollars they put in. I think that is only right. That is the humanitarian side, because they need the security they have purchased. It is not their fault that they are not getting it. Somebody else has fallen down; the managers of our system and of our money policy.

There is another side to it, and that is the business side. From the point of view of stabilizing our economy it would be desirable to make provision for these retired civil servants to have a better scale of pensions right now. It can be done; there is no question about it. I draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that last year we produced in this country $26,600 million worth of goods and services. In the course of producing that quantity of goods and services we distributed to the people of Canada over $24 billion worth of purchasing power in all forms. There was a deficiency, and that deficiency was made up very largely by the people of Canada running charge accounts, buying on instalment credit and borrowing from the banks or the personal loan companies and so on in the form of cash personal loans in order to satisfy their present needs and wants. We forced the people of Canada to borrow to the extent of $2,600 million last year in all those forms I mentioned, just in order that they could consume what they laboured so hard to produce.

That situation is more or less true each year. It would be a better stabilizer to our whole economy if the incomes of the people of Canada were more nearly equal to the value of the goods and services we produced, if we could see to it that purchasing power gets into their hands so they could buy what we produce without forcing them to go to the loan sharks to do it. We are forcing them to do that. Many of them are paying as much as 24 per cent a year to get the purchasing power with which to buy the goods and services that go begging for sale. That is not a good sign. That is not a stable, sound economy. I say that, entirely aside from the humanitarian aspect of this whole business, the Minister of Finance ought to see to it that these retired civil servants are given a better show for the dollars they put up to buy their superannuation. When he does, then our economy is going to be much more stable, we are going to bring our purchasing power more nearly into balance with our production, and our economy will be stronger and better for it.

So I suggest to the minister that what was said by the hon. member for Mackenzie is perfectly true. Canada can afford it. Canada cannot afford not to see that its old retired civil servants get a decent show. There is no reason in this world why they should continue to subsist on dollars that will buy only 50 cents' worth. I say it is high time that we in this parliament gave them justice; and only we can give them justice. I am going to leave it at that until the bill comes in.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I should like to say a few words on the Public Service Superannuation Act. As you know, Mr. Chairman, we in Canada have the most loyal and efficient public servants of any country in this world. We have been blessed by the fact that throughout the years, whatever government has been in power, we have had a wonderful staff of civil servants throughout the country. That places us in the position of having to deal with them fairly, equitably and most generously. I have always said that in any country the best employer should be the government, and I am proud to say that the government of Canada has the reputation of being the best employer in this country.

I have no quarrel with the superannuation act as it stands today; and no doubt unless conditions change gravely those who have been receiving pensions for the past few years and for many years to come will have an adequate superannuation. But my plea, as it has been for many years in the past, is for those who had already begun to receive pensions before 1950, and for those who receive small pensions in any case.

Dealing with those persons who received pensions before, say, 1950, it is true that many of those pensions are substantial. But in any event those pensions, as has been stated, do not provide the expected results for those who contributed for some 30 or 35 years before they were put on their pensions. I would say that even for these people a small percentage, at least, of increase should be allowed in any plan affecting pensions already in force.

But my real plea is for those who have low pensions. Low pensions arise for many reasons, one of the main reasons being the fact that the people were on low salaries before the war years, and pensions based on those low salaries are very low indeed in 1956. Many people are suffering real hardships because of those pensions. But there are other people who are suffering and who will suffer because of low pensions. They are the people who have had to retire on account of sickness after a few years in the civil service. They are the people whose positions are abolished through no fault of their own. There are also the people who, because of certain unfortunate conditions of life, have to retire before they have completed 35 years of service.

If the pensions of any in these groups are below what is enough to provide them with a normal existence, with the result that they become a charge on others in the community or have to live a very meagre existence, then I say it is the duty and responsibility of parliament to see that those who were our former employees receive some additional benefits. This is not something that can be settled without proper study. I think the whole matter should be studied by whatever authority the government chooses, but it should be a body of qualified people who have had experience.

All these conditions I have mentioned previously should be studied, the conditions of life of the people who have low pensions, the conditions of life of the people who have retired because of illness or because of the abolition of positions. These conditions should be studied so the government and parliament will be able to see to it that those who were formerly employees of this country do not suffer for the lack of suitable pensions.

The answer is always given that those not formerly civil servants who are depending on pension or investment plans do not receive bonuses, but the conditions are different. Any person who joins the public service must come under the pension plan. He has to contribute to the plan. The government is already a partner in the plan, and much more than an equal partner so far as contributions are concerned. In the past few years the government has contributed $125 million or more to subsidize the fund. We have accepted the principle that we are backing the fund. If we can accept that principle, then I think we can also accept the principle that this time we are going to create a fund once and for all to support those who have been let down by the changes in salaries and the new plan of superannuation introduced some years ago.

I therefore urge that the Minister of Finance give this matter a great deal more attention than it has been given in the past. I think it is a matter of justice, a matter of fairness, a matter of equity, and it is also a question of being humanitarian. I hope the day will come when we can say there is nothing wrong with the conditions of employment of civil servants in this country.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, the discussion on the resolution stage preceding the introduction of a bill gives one the opportunity to make suggestions as to what should be included in the bill, and this evening I should like to deal with two points. In the first place, there is the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, which has also been dealt with by spokesmen from each of the other parties.

I believe the time has come when the government should take some action. I remember it being raised first in the session of 1949, I think it was, and every year since that time the same thing has been pointed out to the government. However, we have been brushed aside each year primarily with the argument that a contract had been made, that these civil servants knew what they were doing when they paid into the superannuation fund, and that the contract could not be changed now.

I submit that is not an answer to this problem. It has been found to be no answer in the United Kingdom, the United States, some of the Canadian provinces and in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway and many other private firms. I have here a letter from the superannuated federal civil servants organization of Vancouver written this year after checking the situation in other countries and with other organizations. They have this to say:

> All countries that we have been able to contact have increased superannuation benefits to all those who were retired on the basis of pre-inflation salary rates, on humanitarian grounds. Two we might mention, namely, Great Britain and the United States, have given several increases to this class, and as recently as October 1, 1955, the United States have provided its fourth increase to the amount of 12 per cent to those receiving $150 per month or less and 8 per cent to those over $150.

I believe the organizations representing civil servants now in the service have urged from time to time that something be done to assist the superannuated civil servants, and surely the time has come to do something about it. Members of parliament have improved their own position on more than one occasion since this need was first pointed out, yet nothing has been done to help those retired civil servants. It really gets down to the basis of what it costs to live; and it costs a man who retired ten years ago, or his widow, just as much to live as it costs a civil servant retiring in 1956. I hope that in this bill or in other legislation the minister will make some provision to meet this situation.

The other point I should like to draw to the minister's attention has to do with the position of a widow who happens to be more than 20 years younger than her husband. Section 13, subsection 4, deals with that situation and reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, the amount of any annual allowance to which the widow of a contributor may be entitled under this act shall, if the age of the contributor exceeded that of his widow by 20 or more years, be reduced by an amount determined in accordance with the regulations.

I suggest that a provision of a little different type should be placed in the act to cover that situation. When a civil servant has been married for a period of 25 years, let us say, it does seem to me pretty severe treatment, when he dies and his widow happens to be over 20 years younger, that her pension should be reduced. Surely the way to go at it would be to say that if he had been married for 10 years or 15 years, then the widow would receive the full amount payable to other widows. But this section is so worded that if the man happens to marry a woman over 20 years his junior she cannot qualify for the full widow's pension.

I suggest to the minister that is unfair and should be remedied. I have no doubt that there would be a comparatively small number of cases which would come under that provision, but I happen to have run across one where the widow, although she was over 20 years younger than the civil servant, was nearly 60 when he died and she has had her pension cut drastically as a result of that particular section. Apparently they did not realize that there was any such provision in the act, and kept on making payments expecting that in the event of his death the widow would get the same payment as any other widow. I hope the minister will look into that particular situation as well and that perhaps something can be done about it at this present session.

Mr. McIvor: I should like to ask the minister a question. If these superannuated civil servants are not now getting enough to live on, can they claim benefit under the act passed last week under the sponsorship of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, in the main I endorse the requests that have been made by members in all parts of the house. I also look forward with eager anticipation to the introduction of the bill which we all, I am sure, hope will offer some measure of relief to these people in need. However, at this point, I should like to emphasize the point that simply an interim award, welcome and necessary though it may be, is not to my mind at least a solution to the problem.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has over a goodly number of years helped to emphasize to the government and to the public at large the dire need in which many of our retired civil servants live, in that he has called for the production of returns showing the vast number who are obliged to live on incomes that are below the level of decency. However, I also have in mind the various references that have been made from time to time in this house by the hon. member for Winnipeg South—I regret that he is not here this evening—in which he has attempted to show the government that it must bear the responsibility for the decreasing purchasing power of the pensioner's income.

I realize full well that in private industry the worker working for a company pays a share of his wages; that the company usually matches that share; that this money is laid aside in a pension fund; and that the pension payments purchase a definite and fixed retirement allowance. Maybe not too much can easily be done with this matter. A year ago—it is almost exactly a year ago, Mr. Chairman—I asked the Minister of Finance whether any research had been done on the subject of ensuring to pensioners a pension commensurate in its purchasing power with the pension they had been purchasing through their working years. The minister's reply was to the effect that if he knew the answer to that question, he would be the most renowned minister of finance in the world. However, I should like to point out to the Minister of Finance that there are in the world places where there is recognition of the decline or rise in the value or the purchasing power of the pension dollar. Other governments have made attempts to meet the situation.

As I said before, maybe not too much can immediately be done with the pensions of those other than civil servants. However, at this time I should like to point out to the government that even toward these people the government has a responsibility because the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar—hence the standard of living that the pension will provide—is a direct result of the monetary and fiscal powers of the government of the Dominion of Canada. I therefore feel that even in that case they cannot shirk their responsibility.

However, when we come to speak of the superannuated civil servants, I am unwilling to agree with the hon. member for Ottawa East when he calls this government a model employer in the Dominion of Canada. I think nowadays it is one of the worst employers in the Dominion of Canada. I feel that it is only the public spiritedness of the civil servants that enables us to carry on the proper functions of government in Canada. One has only to look at the salary offerings of the civil service commission in order to realize that the government of the day is not by any means a model employer in Canada.

However, I see little need for this government not being able to tie the superannuation allowance to retired civil servants to the actual cost of living. I think that in the case of civil servants, the whole idea of a certain percentage of wages being deducted and the government matching the contribution is unnecessary and is a needless exercise of government red tape and expenditure. I have known of various pension schemes that depend for their reliability on the government guarantee. If governments in Canada can do that with respect to other pension schemes—I have in mind the teachers' pension schemes in several provinces in Canada, where the contribution of the government consists only of a guarantee to maintain the solvency of the fund—I feel that this government, because it is a continuing institution and not like any private company, apt to disappear from the scene or its solvency to disappear, could adopt the principle that it will pay to its retired civil servants a superannuation allowance that bears some relationship to wages actually being paid from year to year in the particular line of employment from which the civil servant was retired.

I think this procedure would save an immense amount of money. I believe the minister will be obliged to agree that the present civil service retirement scheme is a matter of bookkeeping entry only. The civil servant receives 5 per cent or 6 per cent less salary and the government matches the contribution. However, the money is retained by the government anyway. I therefore see no need for these deductions and these contributions. Let the government contribution be a certain fixed percentage of the wages for that type of position for the year in question. If that were done I think the government, at least for those retired people who were its former employees, would be meeting the difficulty of the fluctuating purchasing value of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, according to the statement of the parliamentary assistant this afternoon the purpose of the legislation to be brought into the house is to extend certain provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act to persons not already included under the act. Along with the other members who have spoken today, I support that desirable objective. Recent amendments that have been made to the act generally have had the same purpose, namely to make provision for those who have been inadvertently omitted from the benefits or discriminated against.

I rise tonight to bring a specific type of omission to the minister's attention. We have had some correspondence on this matter, but I rise at this time because I feel that we have not been able to adequately communicate by means of letters, and I believe that if we can talk through the Chair man to man across the chamber we might come to a better understanding of the point I have in mind.

One of the problems with the Public Service Superannuation Act was the inability in earlier times of employees moving from another type of employment to the public service to carry their benefits with them. Some time ago that defect was remedied by a suitable amendment which comes in section 5 (1)(b)(iii)(B) of the superannuation act, which says:

> Subject to this act, the following service may be counted by a contributor as pensionable service for the purposes of this act, namely,.... any period of service in pensionable employment immediately prior to becoming employed in the public service, if he elects, within one year of becoming a contributor under this act, to pay for that service.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that that was a very important feature to introduce into the Public Service Superannuation Act. Obviously it placed this particular benefit of the public service in a more attractive light before those who were interested in serving Canada this way. Certainly it made it possible to attract more qualified people, people with experience acquired in various private activities, various private industries in this country, into the public service. However, the point I wish to raise, Mr. Chairman, deals with an omission that I feel is inadvertent but at the same time is a very important omission in the act.

The problem has come to my attention because of a specific instance, but I am not going to deal with any specific instances tonight. I want to deal with the broad general principle and category. According to the interpretation of the section I have read which allows pensionable benefits from other periods of occupation to be carried over into the public service, this provision does not include Canadians who have interrupted their work experience in order to pursue some form of study. I have had specific rulings from the chief of the superannuation branch in this regard, who lays emphasis on the fact that because the former period of occupation in other than the public service was interrupted by a period of study it eliminates the person concerned from the benefits of this part of section 5.

In other words the emphasis is placed on the words "immediately prior to becoming employed in the public service". I feel that the difficulty arises from a lack of communication, from a lack of understanding of the problem, and I have had that feeling confirmed by a letter I received from the Minister of Finance on May 4. In this letter the Minister of Finance points out that section 5 to which I have referred broadens the scope of application of the superannuation act to this particular category with which I am dealing. He points out the benefits arising from it. Perhaps I had better quote it so we can have the words on the record. The letter says:

> The introduction of the principle of making it possible to count service with another employer was done on the grounds that a person should not be penalized on entering the federal civil service by giving it up completely.

This is benefits from previous employment. I continue:

> The section in the act to which you refer—

That is section 5.

> —makes it possible for such a person to pick up this service. This is a particularly important factor in the case of persons over the age of 30 to 35 who would have very little prospect of serving the period of 35 years in the federal civil service which would provide the maximum pension and who would otherwise feel that they were giving up too much to leave their other employment.

I agree entirely with that. I think it is a very desirable objective. The minister continues:

> If one were to go beyond that criterion and permit the counting of time spent gaining experience which improved the qualifications of an individual, it is hard to know where the dividing line could be drawn. While you suggest postgraduate training of university graduates, others would suggest other occupations where the employment did not qualify as pensionable employment yet it improves that employee's qualifications.

That is the end of the quotation. Here, Mr. Chairman, I feel is where I fail to communicate with the minister because he uses the the words, "others would suggest other occupations". Now, I do not think I have to point out that a student at the graduate level who is pursuing a course of studies cannot be regarded as being in a remunerative occupation. He is not occupied in the normal sense of the word; he has no employment. As a matter of fact, because of the lack of suitable adequate financial support in this country, because of our deficiency in bursaries and scholarships, most students pursuing graduate work find that they have to finance on the proverbial shoestring. They have to borrow and go into debt in order to pursue their particular line of interest and, unfortunately, many of them have to take advantage of the more generous bursaries and scholarships offered across the line. They carry on their graduate studies there and are inevitably drawn into the more lucrative job opportunities and are lost to Canada.

I think this use of the word "occupation" by the minister suggests a fundamental misunderstanding of the point I raised. I do not think it can be supported that a student is gainfully employed. In some respects the minister recognizes this point, because I understand there are provisions in the act—I cannot quote the particular section—which make it possible for a person already employed in the public service to obtain leave of absence for further study, for further instruction in his particular professional category. He is not penalized in any way shape or form for that period during which he is absent from his duties as a civil servant and is operating as a student. It is recognized that he is not employed; he is improving his qualifications so he might better serve as a servant of the public when he returns to his position.

The narrow interpretation of the act which disqualifies students who have come from any occupation other than the public service is a particularly discriminatory one to students who are moving from the teaching field into the public service and in order to do so have to continue studies of some kind. I say that because it is a well known fact that teachers are in a depressed salary category right across this country. A good many students who because of the scholarship and bursary deficiencies have to interrupt their work leading toward a Ph.D. and who take on teaching responsibilities in order to get sufficient funds to complete the work are further discouraged because of this unfortunate narrow interpretation of the act. They teach for three, four or five years, until they have raised the necessary funds, and they contribute to the teachers' pension scheme during that time. Then they are able to carry on for an additional two or three years in order to complete their Ph.D. and finally they are in a position to offer themselves to the public service. Because of this interpretation they do not get the benefit of the period of service they have put in as teachers, and it means just one more further discrimination against the teaching profession in this country which is already discriminated against from a salary standpoint.

I consider this is a very important point, and it can be dealt with quite simply by merely specifying that bona fide graduate students—and it is easy to get certification from the universities concerned—should be regarded as moving directly from previous employment to the public service without having their period of study counted as an intervening occupational period. I say it is important because Canada is in the position where she must offer every encouragement to her young people to qualify themselves to the utmost in the various professional areas of service in Canada. We have it drummed into us continually from various sources that we are short of trained personnel, that we need Canadians with the highest qualifications. I would suggest that if we ceased to discriminate against students in this way and to deny them the benefits which should be given under the section that has been under discussion during these few moments, it would assist immeasurably in encouraging these students to return to Canada and offer themselves for service here particularly in the public service, rather than staying south of the line and offering themselves for service where the lucrative attraction is much greater.

We talk about the loss of our trained personnel; we talk about the loss of Canadian brains to the United States labour market. I would suggest, just as strongly as I can, that this is one respect in which we might encourage our young people to serve in Canada. It does not establish any precedents that will make it impossible to draw the line. I am speaking only of genuine graduate students who can easily be vouched for by the institutions in which they are pursuing their studies and a simple amendment, even a simple change in the interpretation of section 5, would meet the situation quite adequately. I leave it before the minister for his attention.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Harris thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 440, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO TRANSFER OF CONTRACT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Postmaster General) moved the second reading of Bill No. 351, to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. T. A. M. Kirk (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give sanction to a practice whereby the Postmaster General has transferred a contract from the actual contractor to another person at the request of the former, when the action was in the public interest and did not entail any additional cost.

As hon. members are no doubt aware, this policy has been followed for a great many years. Recently the Department of Justice expressed the opinion that the Post Office Act in its present form does not provide for this long established practice.

It is considered desirable to continue the practice, which has been found to be most satisfactory from the standpoint of a minimum disruption of service, the elimination of costly temporary arrangements, and the time and expense involved in the invitation of tenders. The proposed legislation is simply intended to remove a doubt as to the legality of a long established practice.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a bill which directly concerns a matter of principle, the principle being whether or not a service required by the government which is normally made the subject of tender should under certain circumstances be removed from that class and placed in a class where it is awarded at the discretion of the minister.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it is good, right and proper as a basic principle that a contract for rural mail delivery should be made the subject of a tender in one instance it requires very special consideration, far more than has been advanced today, to justify that same contract being placed otherwise by ministerial discretion at some other point in its life.

The parliamentary assistant to the Postmaster General has set forth briefly certain advantages which he suggests will accrue from the proposed practice. As I remember them they were, first, a minimum disruption of service; second, elimination of costly temporary arrangements, and third, a saving of time and expense involved in calling for tenders. I shall deal subsequently with these stated advantages.

He did not tell us the type of circumstances under which this amendment might become operative. From a study of the existing practice I have been able to find that a typical circumstance, and a usual one, would be where the contract holder had died and it was desired to transfer the contract to his widow or to other members of his family; or where a contractor had sold out and was intending to move and it was necessary to carry on the mail contract when he no longer wished to do so; or where a contractor had defaulted, the sureties he had been asked to provide at the time of entering into the contract were carrying on and it was desired to give the contract to someone who had been acting as courier on the route. I think those represent the major cases in which this particular piece of legislation would become operative.

We must remember that there is a break in the method of handling rural mail contracts. Those under $1,000 are handled without the calling of tenders at any point. They can be awarded in the first instance at the discretion of the government. Contracts having a value of over $1,000 must in the first instance be made the basis of tender. According to the present practice of the department, which was amended I think two years ago, once a contract for over $1,000 has been awarded—and such a contract cannot be for a greater period than four years—at the end of any contract period it may be renewed, not once but as often as the department deems advisable, without the necessity of calling for further tenders.

During the life of such contract or any four-year period the department may renegotiate the amount being paid without the necessity of throwing it open for tender or for referring it in any way to public consideration. There are certain restraining influences upon that renegotiation, but they are not too stringent and it is quite conceivable that once a person is seized of a mail contract he could continue to hold it without it ever becoming available for public tender for probably 15, 20 or more years, and that during that period the remuneration under the contract could be increased every two or three years so that at the end of the period the remuneration paid would bear surprisingly little resemblance to what was paid when the contract was originally entered into.

That casts a certain light upon some of the possible advantages to anyone who might be unscrupulous enough to misuse this proposed piece of legislation. A contract properly tendered for in the first instance and awarded to the lowest bidder might become available at the end of a one or two-year period, and it would be quite within the prerogative of the department to seek out someone whom they wished to favour and place the contract with him. After all, the original contractor has opened it by wishing to get rid of it; the man he has sought out would presumably wish to have the contract, which would meet the second requirement, and since he would be the government's choice—there are many reasons which might dictate that choice, some admittedly legitimate and others open to some question—all the requirements of this particular piece of legislation would be met.

Those who have followed the course of history in Canada since confederation—and this practice has been in operation since confederation—are aware that for some of the very reasons I have outlined the practice has been constantly away from leaving discretion in the hands of the government in the awarding of contracts, and moving the awarding of contracts to an impartial tender basis. In the flush years of government, if a government ever has any flush years—I think of the earlier years of the government—before the tender system comes into general usage the pork barrel is a most important factor in government operations. We in this party are happy to see the pork barrel removed from the operations of government wherever possible. We have no desire whatsoever to be a party to its reintroduction or to legislation which will continue that type of operation which might be susceptible to pork barrel policies.

By no manner or means am I making light of the job being done by the rural mail carriers of this country. There are thousands and thousands of these men from coast to coast. Whilst any letter carrier has a difficult job, I think the rural mail carrier has perhaps the most demanding job in the entire postal service. Most of us see him in operation during the summer months when it is a rather pleasant sort of occupation. The roads are fairly good; the weather is nice; he gets over his route in perhaps a matter of a few hours; and the work is not too onerous. Few of us —because the weather, if nothing else, would make it impossible—see these men under more difficult circumstances, when they really earn more than their pay.

Our climatic conditions in Canada are not of the best the year round, but the mail must go on the year round. The result is that these men, who perhaps in the summer are able to deliver their mail by car, are called upon in the wintertime to deliver it by horse and sleigh, by dog team and even sometimes on foot. It was only a few weeks ago that I was reading of the retirement of one of the rural mail carriers, and I read that one of his proudest boasts had been that he had carried the mail without, I think, missing a day for a period of something over 20 years. During that time it had been necessary on more than one occasion to take his bags from the sleigh in the wintertime and slog through on foot. It had been necessary on one or two occasions to spend 15 to 20 hours making a trip which under normal summer conditions would have been made in three or four hours. But that mail had gone through, and that man was typical of the men who serve this country.

Because we have sympathy and understanding for the men who are doing this job, we do not necessarily—nor, indeed, I think, should we—support a measure which has nothing to do with the way this work is carried on, which has nothing to do with the individual rural mail carrier himself, but which purely on the basis of expediency perpetuates a practice which, I suggest, has been wrong in the past and, because it has been wrong in the past, will not by legislation be made right in the future.

What are some of the weaknesses of this proposed course of action? Here is one. When the tenders are called for a rural mail route, there may be three, four, five or more people who will tender for that route. Under this plan the second lowest tenderer or any of those other people who evinced interest in it will have no opportunity whatsoever by right to be offered the contract if the man who is awarded it in the first instance decides to step out from under it and ask the government to transfer it elsewhere. It seems to me that if a group of men are interested enough in operating a rural mail route to tender for it, they should be among the very first to be consulted and considered if that route is going to be transferred from the man who originally was awarded the contract.

Again, as I have pointed out in passing previously, this legislation puts a great deal of power in the hands of the department and in the hands of the department's local representatives, because to all intents and purposes once a contract for rural mail delivery has been awarded, it makes a closed corporation out of that contract. Once that contract has been awarded there is no obligation whatsoever on the government at any point to open that contract for tender again.

Rural mail contracts are, most of us would feel, very personal. Usually the man who tenders for them carries the mail himself. If he does not do so, the mail is carried under his very close personal supervision. This is not a business in the way in which we think of most businesses, that is, largely impersonal. The rural mail route is a small and, in most cases, a part-time operation, and it is something in which there is a close liaison and a close understanding between the person who carries the mail and the people who receive it.

Yet here again we are asked that the impersonal operation of a contract-letting system by tender be replaced by the very personal and possibly improper, under certain circumstances, direction of the government. Let there be no doubt about it; that is all this legislation is intended to do. It is intended to legalize the government placing rural mail contracts wherever they wish to do so, if and when the original holder does not wish to carry on the contract. As I have already pointed out, once that contract is awarded it can go on indefinitely with the new person or through as many new hands as the government wishes to push it. The amount payable for it can be increased time and time again, although, of course, there must be certain intervals which elapse.

In case anyone thinks this is a small matter and that there are only a few of these transfers being made, I point out that it is well known that in the period from October 1, 1953, to September 30, 1954, which is a 12-month period, there were 303 transfers of contracts under $1,000 and 162 transfers of contracts over $1,000. That is a pretty sizeable slice of government business to have floating around the country and left to the personal discretion of the Postmaster General, because in the final analysis it is his responsibility.

There may be some basic justification for this measure in the advantages which were put forward by the parliamentary assistant, but I suggest that those same advantages could be obtained without this legislation merely by making it possible for a contract to be continued temporarily on arrangements such as this until such time as tenders for a new contract could be called. When the bill is in committee we shall have certain suggestions to make in that regard, which are not proper now but which will be proper at that time.

Certainly we are desirous of co-operating with the department in working out the best possible rural mail service, the most satisfactory type of service, and that with a minimum of interruption. Let me just summarize my observations by saying that, despite this, we have no desire to be a party to anything which is capable of being turned into government largesse and personal benefit to certain individuals selected by any minister of the crown.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace began his remarks by saying that there is a principle involved in the amendment the government is seeking here. I should like to emphasize another principle which I also think is important, and that is that at all times we should adhere to the principle of ordinary common sense. After all, these tenders are let for a four-year period, as I understand the situation, and they are not renewed except by tender at the end of each four-year period.

I feel that for the government to open these routes to public tender once every four years is enough and should be adequate. If it is a lucrative occupation for someone to have entered into, I am sure that at the end of the four-year period there should be adequate competition. In fact we have heard many complaints in the house that the government has been awarding these tenders to people who were overly anxious to obtain awards and who later on found themselves in difficulty.

In my opinion far more of the rural mail carriers are underpaid than are overpaid. I believe that has been the feeling of the Post Office Department. I have only a limited number of these routes in my riding. However, I should like to compare my attitude on this matter with my attitude to what happens every time one of these little sub-post offices changes hands. There will be a widow operating a little groceteria netting her possibly $60 or $70 a month, and in our suburban areas we have many of these little corner stores with sub-post offices for the purpose of augmenting the income of the owner of the store. They probably make $15, $20, $25 or $30 a month from the sub-post office, and they render a service selling postage stamps and what have you to the immediate community. Yet when this lady wants to sell her place of business she cannot assure the future purchaser that he will have the same rights she has. The little enterprise involving the post office has to be submitted to the Post Office Department in Ottawa, and the new purchaser of the business has no assurance or guarantee whatsoever that he will be left with this little favour or concession, as he may consider it at the time. There have been a lot of complaints reach my ears that these matters also should not have to be resubmitted to the Post Office Department every time the business changes hands.

I feel that we may be making much ado about nothing. Surely if we are interested in efficiency of government we will realize that it costs money to call for tenders. We are all in favour of the calling of tenders at the proper time and on the proper occasions, but surely it should be sufficient if tenders for these routes are called at the expiration of each and every term.

I notice that it is not mandatory but optional on the part of the minister. I have every confidence that if the minister noticed that racketeering was taking place; that the franchises, if you wish to call them that, were being sold for exorbitant amounts, or that any money consideration was involved that was out of line with reasonableness, he would exercise his option and would call for tenders. Therefore I think this is one case where we should follow the principle of common sense and give the Postmaster General reasonable leeway to the extent of four years. I do not think we will go wrong by so doing.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, this group does not look with too much favour upon this measure. In his statement the parliamentary assistant said this has been a long established practice and that they are now writing it into the law. That statement may change the picture a little, but on the other hand it only goes to show that the minister has been doing something that evidently he has had no legal right to do. However, there is the principle stated by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, and it does seem to me an open matter for political patronage purposes. We do not like to talk that way but it does appear to us to have that possibility.

The parliamentary assistant can correct me if I am not right in my thinking, but it does occur to me that the applicants for most of these positions are recommended by the various Legion branches throughout the country, or if they are not recommended then the man's service record does have a bearing in the final decision respecting these positions. That being so, this measure could reasonably interfere with that procedure; because as the bill reads the person to take the place of the carrier if he cannot complete his contract is to be recommended by the man who holds the contract. There is nothing to say that he is necessarily going to recommend a returned man. It may be that there is a principle being followed that sometimes these contracts remain within the family. We have no objection to that. But that could still be done even though the remainder of the term were open to competition.

There is another point, though I do not know whether it is worth while to mention it. There is the possibility that if a mail carrier or one under contract should "get in bad" with the inspector or with some of those on the mail route, he may feel that he is forced to resign and might even recommend someone who is worse than he is. That possibility should not exist. I do not think the cost can be so great. It is a matter of opening the competition to anyone else who desires to take the contract for the remainder of the contract period.

It seems to me that this is the thin edge of the wedge that could lead to a similar procedure in other matters. It could lead to a similar procedure in other civil service positions, even those not under contract for four years. What is the difference in principle? Is the time the difference? Suppose there is a civil servant who decides to quit his job. Why has he not a right to recommend someone to take his position? Even though it is for more than four years, the principle is the same. It is only the time element that is different. It appears to me to be the thin edge of the wedge in opening up this matter to rather unsatisfactory possibilities. As the matter now stands, I am afraid we cannot support the bill.

Mr. G. W. Montgomery (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before the bill goes to committee I should like to say a few words. I was not here at the resolution stage. For that reason, through you, I should like to say to the parliamentary assistant and his departmental officials that I think the departmental officials in my area in New Brunswick deserve a great deal of credit for the perpetual following up of demands that we made for two post offices which were granted to us and completed last year, one at Plaster Rock and one at Woodstock. The one at Plaster Rock I am extremely proud of. I think it is too bad that the late postmaster general did not live long enough to see these two buildings, as he took a great deal of personal interest in getting them for us. For a long time there has been a need for them.

I felt that I should like to say that at this stage. I should also like to say that while I have not had too much trouble with regard to postal matters, there are quite a few rural mail routes in my area and we run into some quite perplexing difficulties. I want to compliment the officials in my own area for being extremely co-operative in working out those difficulties.

After looking at this particular amendment, I am wondering whether such a recommendation would be asked for or would even be suggested by those officials. The amendment looks very innocent on its face. I think the ground has been well covered by other hon. members who have spoken ahead of me. But I do not read the act as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier) reads it. According to my understanding—and I am sure this is right; if it is not, I know the parliamentary assistant will correct me—these contracts do not come up for tender at the end of every four years, or they need not come up for tender. If a mail courier is doing a good job the local officials in the area may recommend that he be continued without any tenders being called at all. As I understand the act, his contract may be renewed for another four years. As the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace stated, that procedure may go on from term to term, as long as he is satisfactory to the department and satisfactory to the people whom he is serving.

But there is involved here a principle which has been fairly well covered. From my experience in the last three or four years I do not like this idea of opening a loophole in the law which has otherwise been a good one, namely the tender system, subject to renewal for the remainder of the term of the contract. If I may, I should like to narrow this matter down and point out to the parliamentary assistant to the Postmaster General that what we are doing here is this. We are permitting political patronage to creep in.

The Minister of Finance may laugh, but I have already experienced some of this. It has been creeping in during the last year and a half; and if it were not for the good work and the good judgment of the area officials, of which I am sure the Postmaster General knows, there would have been more. He is being bothered considerably more than he used to be bothered. There is an opportunity here to work for political patronage. That is something that was almost unheard of under the old system. Like the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, I should like any amendments to steer away from that sort of thing.

I do not say that just because I happen to be in the opposition. Some day I might have to deal with it otherwise, and I would be tickled to death to be able to say that the department handles this matter, that there is only one ground, namely satisfaction, and that everybody may put in his recommendations but not political ones.

As has been suggested, when we get to the committee stage I should like to see the committee study the amendment. I have no objection to this temporary arrangement for the carrying out of the contract, but I should like to see that particular contract come up for tender at the end of the term. I do not think I need say any more at this stage, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: May I move the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the hon. gentleman wishes to speak on second reading?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

On motion of Mr. Herridge the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue with this debate. Then we shall take second reading of Bill No. 212, to amend the Telegraphs Act, and then second reading of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 3, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO TELEVISION SERIES "THIS IS OTTAWA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue, in relation to the program of C.B.C. television broadcasts, which I understand is to commence this evening and run over the next six weeks on the subject "This is Ottawa", reviewing the history of the Ottawa area, if he thinks it is proper that this series should omit any participation by the Governor General or the mayor and any scenes pertaining to Rideau Hall or Earnscliffe while including scenes of Laurier house, the dominion bureau of statistics and other buildings?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Well, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the hon. member for Eglinton is much more familiar with the proposed program than I am. I know nothing about it except what I have seen in the newspapers and heard announced on television; therefore I cannot give an opinion that is worth anything with reference to what is to be on the program or the nature of it. I am not consulted about programs.

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister look into this in relation to the fact that apparently there is to be no participation by the Governor General nor any scenes pertaining to Rideau Hall or Earnscliffe, and no place in it for the mayor of Ottawa.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Speaker, I shall refer the matter to the C.B.C. and when I get a report from them I will announce it in the house.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF STRIKE ON CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister say whether Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited has control of sufficient steel at this time to ensure completion of the western section of the pipe lines, or would a prolonged strike in the United States make it impossible to complete the line?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will admit that my hon. friend in his efforts to stop the building of the pipe line has had an assist from the steel strike in the United States; nevertheless, unless it is a very prolonged strike, I think the line will still be built.

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF SPEED OF BOATS IN MINOR WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which I communicated to him earlier this day. Would the minister consider amending the regulations respecting the navigation of minor waters so that some measure of control could be maintained over freighters and tugs which do not observe the proper speed limit, and thereby do much damage to fishing boats and their floats?

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question, but I have not had sufficient opportunity since his call earlier this morning to make the inquiries necessary for me to form an opinion as to whether or not it is desirable to make any change.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—PRESS REPORT OF CANCELLATION OF DELIVERY OF PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in position to make a statement about a report carried by the United Press that Canada has clamped down on the delivery of jet planes to Israel, and that this is causing a great deal of concern in view of the delivery of Russian planes and weapons to Egypt?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in Canada's policy with reference to shipping airplanes to Israel. The matter has been under consideration for some time; it is still under consideration, and until a decision is arrived at the situation will remain unchanged.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR PARTICIPATION IN MOSQUITO CONTROL IN FRASER VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Could the minister advise the house what decision has been reached relative to the request made by the municipalities that the Indian affairs branch co-operate in the program of mosquito control in the Fraser valley?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) and Senator Reid have made urgent and pressing representations to me on this subject and I hope a decision will be reached in the near future.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO TRANSFER OF CONTRACT

The house resumed, from Monday, July 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Lapointe) for the second reading of Bill No. 351, to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have read the remarks of the genial parliamentary assistant and others who spoke last night in this debate, and I find that I misheard one or two of them. There is no necessity for me to take up the time of the house in continuing the debate now. I shall have certain questions to ask when we get into committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—Transfer of contract.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister one or two questions in connection with this matter, particularly in view of the fact that he has stated that this amendment merely legalizes what has been done over a period of years. I should like to ask him how many cases there have been during the last five years, year by year, where transfers have been made from the holders of contracts during the period of the contracts, in each case what was the remuneration given or provided for under the tender; and was there any increase in the amount paid in respect of the contract in consequence of the assignment, transfer or substitution of another person in the place of the original tenderer? If the parliamentary assistant could give that information it would pretty well cover the situation.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Chairman, I have not the figures for the five-year period, but for the year ending September 30, 1954, there were 303 transfers made of contracts under $1,000 and 162 of contracts over $1,000. In no case was there any increase in the price. That is one of the conditions of the amendment.

Mr. Hahn: I have learned that the minister has received from time to time certain requests respecting an extension of letter boxes in certain towns from which rural routes emanate. I was wondering whether or not any consideration has been given to the thought that in such areas and towns where we have a number of rural routes operating from a central office and they have no letter carrier system, letter carrier boxes be placed in those towns and it be embodied in the contract that it include the picking up of letters from those boxes to be taken to the central post office for delivery.

Mr. Lapointe: If I understood properly the question of the hon. member for New Westminster, I think he refers to letter boxes for the receipt of letters being mailed. Is that correct?

Mr. Hahn: Yes.

Mr. Lapointe: Generally speaking the policy is that the letter boxes are installed in areas where there is a letter carrier service, and they are not installed where there is no letter carrier service and where people go to the post office anyway. There are exceptions to these rules when the exigencies of the service, if I may use that expression, make it justifiable. As a rule, a rural mail contractor who does the delivery to the rural mail boxes on that route will usually have included as part of his contract the picking up of the mail in that letter box. Of course if in so doing he increases the length of his route, he should be compensated accordingly.

Mr. Hahn: The question resolves itself in this way, however, in so far as certain of these towns from which rural routes emanate are concerned. Some of them are quite large, but they are not large enough for a letter carrier system. The suggestion is made that the outlying districts might have letter receiving boxes, so that when the rural route carrier comes by, he merely stops, picks up the mail and takes it to the post office, thereby saving citizens a long walk from the outskirts of the town into the post office for that particular purpose.

Mr. Lapointe: I know that is done in some areas. As applications are made at various localities, they are studied in order to find out whether such a service can be given without increasing the cost of the contract or the length of the route the contractor would have to cover.

Mr. Herridge: This slight amendment simply requests something that apparently the department has been practising for years, and I have noticed it being done; but I have noticed also on one or two occasions that a contract was transferred to someone who, in the opinion of the people in the district, was not nearly as capable or as responsible as the original contractor.

My question is this. What does the department do to make certain that a person to whom a contract is transferred has satisfactory equipment, has the capacity and the ability, and has the same bonding as the original contractor?

In addition, in order to avoid the minister having to rise twice, I am going to ask another question. Do the inspectors emphasize what is the responsibility of a person who signs a bond for one of these contractors? I remember speaking to an aged clergyman in my district once when there was some possibility of the contractor failing in his obligation, and when he realized what he might be responsible for he nearly had a heart attack. He did not understand what he had signed. I think something should be done to inform the person who signs a bond what are his responsibilities.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): The departmental officials study the case of the individual to whom the contract may be transferred just as carefully as they do the case of the original contractor. It is up to the departmental officials to be satisfied that he is capable and can supply the necessary equipment, the bondsman and so on.

Mr. Herridge: That process is all gone through again?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Yes. As far as the bond is concerned, I do not know about your friend the aged clergyman, but I would hate to think he would sign a bond without having read it very carefully. Attached to each contract is a bond, of which I have a copy here, and I think he can tell from this that he is responsible for operating the route should the original contractor default in any way.

Mr. Herridge: I think the department has run into several cases of that sort where people have signed these bonds. I believe something should be done to draw to the attention of the person who signs the bond what they are responsible for and not just leave it to them to read the fine print in the contract.

Mr. Montgomery: I should like to ask a question or two. Does this clause apply to any contracts other than rural carrier contracts and, if so, what other contracts?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): This section applies to any contract. It says:

> The Postmaster General may . . . substitute another person for the contractor under any contract for the conveyance of mail . . .

That would include rural routes, suburban services, side services, stage services, city services and so on; any contract for the conveyance of mail.

Mr. Montgomery: I was looking at this from the standpoint of the rural carriers. What is the average cost of calling for tenders where you have to post notices for three weeks, when a contract runs out?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): At the moment I do not know what is the actual cost of the calling of the tenders, but I certainly could find that out and let the hon. member know. However, I can say that the cost of the contracts that were transferred during the last year that we transferred contracts was considerably less than the amounts we were receiving in the form of tenders that were called for the new contracts.

Mr. Montgomery: In transferring a contract from one rural mail route contractor to another contractor when the term of the contract runs out, has it been the practice of the department to make the arrangements without calling for tenders?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): No When a contract is transferred it is transferred because in some cases the original contractor has died and his estate wishes to have it transferred to the son or widow, or in other cases because the contractor may have moved from the village or may have sold his store or farm; but when the four-year term has expired and the contract runs out, tenders are then called.

Mr. Montgomery: That is the point. It looks to me as though the last two lines of the section permit a change in that principle. If the minister or the parliamentary assistant can assure the house that there is no intention under this bill to renew a contract with the party with which the arrangement has been made without calling tenders, then I would be quite happy with it.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I am sorry; I must have misunderstood the first part of your question. The latter part of this amendment says:

. . . and the provisions of this act apply to the person so substituted as though he were the original contractor.

You will remember that when you were speaking last night you said that the system we have been following for some time had been very satisfactory and you hated to see it changed. You may not have used those exact words but I believe that was the gist of your comments. As reported at page 5594 of Hansard you said this:

—which has otherwise been a good one, namely the tender system, subject to renewal for the remainder of the term of the contract.

What we are really asking for is this. We are asking through this amendment to be permitted to carry on what has been done ever since confederation. The amendment is being introduced as I mentioned last night, owing to some question having arisen in the mind of one of the legal experts in the Department of Justice, who questioned whether the act was worded in such a way that we did have permission to do that, even though in the contract which every contractor signs there is section 27, which says:

The said contractor shall not have it in his power to transfer his interest in this contract without the special written sanction of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Montgomery: That fairly well answers the question, except that to my mind this act leaves it open, under section 31. That will be new. I presume that now you are going to introduce an amendment, you will make the present section 31 subsection 1 and this amendment will be subsection 2. So we will say under subsection 1 of section 31 as it is now the department may renew a contract without calling for tenders if they consider it in the interests of the service, and the service provided has been satisfactory.

When this bill is passed do you consider that you will have the power to do that? We will say that A gives up a contract; he dies or he moves away and you arrange that the contract is taken over by B. B carries it on for the remainder of the term, whether it is two years, three years or whatever it may be. At the end of the term of that contract do you feel that, under this act, you will be able to renew that contract under section 31 as it now stands, without calling for tenders? I think you can. If so, and if the department has that in mind, I should like to ask the minister to consider an amendment.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): The transferee has exactly the same rights as the original contractor.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): As far as I am personally concerned, I should like to say that I do not like this amendment. It seems to me that it leaves it open to something; I was going to use the word "skulduggery" but I suppose that "indiscretion" would be the better word. It appears to me that when a person has a contract and then, for some reason or another, decides to forgo that contract and so advises the department and makes a recommendation, the department may or may not act upon that recommendation. But at the end of that four-year period when tenders would ordinarily be called, this puts the others in that community who desire to tender on that contract in an extremely embarrassing position.

It is embarrassing to this extent. They are at a great disadvantage to start with because this other fellow already has the advantage of having concluded that former contract. It goes almost without saying that when tenders are finally called, the government would favour the one who had the contract. In that sense it does not leave itself open to a free and competitive form of tender. When the department receive these new tenders they look them over, but they do not necessarily have to take the lowest tender. They look them over and say, "Well, now, this fellow has been carrying on for the last four years under the original contract, and we see no reason why he should not be given the new contract". People who are tendering under those conditions are at a very decided disadvantage.

I cannot see, either, why the department should not call for tenders when the original contractor decides to terminate his contract. There is no great expense attached to it. It is a routine procedure with the department, and surely it would take no time and practically no expense to call for tenders again. This would leave it open to everybody, and everybody would have an equal opportunity. I say again that the man who is recommended by the original contractor has a decided advantage over all the other tenderers when the four-year period is up and tenders are called again. The very fact he has given some service may lead the department to say, "Well, his services have been satisfactory and we do not know anything about this other fellow, so we will let him carry on for another four years."

I do not think that should be permitted. It seems to me the department itself should be very eager to get out of that position where doubt is cast upon the department in this regard. I think they should call for tenders and give everybody an equal and fair opportunity to offer their services and have no embarrassment attached to it.

Mr. Knight: On the same point exactly, Mr. Chairman, it has occurred to me to ask if under this act there could be collusion between the former contractor and someone to whom he desired to give that contract. I mean, almost at the expiry of the old contract the original contractor could make an arrangement with his friend, and so long as that person was satisfactory to the department he would be allowed to carry on. It seems to me if tenders were called it would avoid a great deal of the criticism of the hon. member who has just spoken.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): If the original contractor requests a transfer, and if the transfer is made it is only made if the departmental officials who have checked on the matter feel he is capable of carrying on and giving good service. Then if at the end of the contract period he is giving good service and there are no undue complaints in the area, it is automatically renewed.

So far as the part about calling for tenders is concerned, I may say that the contract is always awarded to the lowest tenderer, except in a rare case when on checking the department finds he is not capable of carrying out the contract. I know of a case that happened in my own riding. A gentleman tendered for the contract and said he could carry it out. He said he had a car, but the departmental officials found that while he had a car, unfortunately it was minus wheels, a starter and a generator. He had no credit with which to get a car and he could not get any bondsmen. He did submit a tender.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is it a fact that the department always accepts the lowest bid? I do not think that is so, because there may be a situation where a man puts in a bid when he knows he is not going to make very much out of the mail contract. It may be that he has another business and he may say, "Well, I will have enough people coming to my store that it will more than offset any loss I have on the delivery of mail." In that case his bid may be very low. I do not think it is always the practice of the department to accept the lowest bid.

Then there is another case. Suppose the original contractor recommends someone who is not satisfactory to the minister or to the department, then tenders would have to be called. Why does the department not call for tenders in the first place? I would think there would be many instances where that would occur. I do not think the department is going to save itself much trouble, and I can see where this would lead to a lot of dissatisfaction and questionable practices. I do not think it should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): The contract is awarded to the lowest tenderer if he is capable of performing the work; that always happens. I gave an extreme case that occurred in my constituency. If a man believes people will cut in he tenders low and the contract is awarded to him. As far as the system itself is concerned, as I mentioned two or three times this system has been in vogue since 1867, since confederation, and we have had a lot less trouble by using this method. Those of us who represent rural or partially rural constituencies realize it is very difficult to find people who are interested. Sometimes a local contractor has to give it up and through a personal friendship he is able to find someone to carry it on. Sometimes we call for tenders in these rural areas and we receive no tenders, and we have to call for tenders two or three times.

To return to your main point, the tender is awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. Knight: Is there any reason why the original contractor has anything to do with who his successor shall be, except that I think you stated that it saved trouble for the department? What is the idea of having the original contractor interested in his successor?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I think a brief answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is that very frequently the original contractor may have served for some years; he has equipment and he knows the route and sometimes through a personal friendship he is able to make an arrangement and transfer his equipment to someone who is willing to carry on.

Mr. Knight: From what you state I gather it is virtually a family contract which would exclude others.

Mr. Jones: Does the original contractor contact the department before making the transfer, or does he just quit the job and say that he is leaving. What obligation does he have toward the department, if any? He has to make application to the department for the transfer and I think he makes his recommendation. What does the excuse have to be; sickness or bankruptcy or just his whim to give it up? Has he any responsibility?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): In the vast majority of cases the contractor has died and his route is transferred to the widow. Most of the cases are like that. There are also cases where the man sells his farm or business and wants to move away, or perhaps for some other reason. There are very few cases where the man wants to give it up because of some whim.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, these mail carriers become more than mere mail carriers, they become part of the community and do a great many favours for people other than just carrying the mail. In the case of a person moving away or quitting his job or dying and a new man taking over, I think that should be by contract and the lowest tenderer should get it providing his qualifications are all right. I have known some cases where in advertising for a mail carrier, the qualifications were probably equal and the prices came within $10 to $15 of each other, whoever handled the patronage for the Liberal government in the area got the job.

An hon. Member: And it should have been a Conservative.

Mr. Hodgson: As far as contracts are concerned, if a man is doing his job satisfactorily I do not think the job should be put up for tender when the four-year term is up. That man should have a renewal without any tender whatsoever until such time as he wants to quit himself or until he is too old to carry on. Putting these things up for tender every four years creates a lot of ill feeling within the area, and frequently you get a carrier who is not as good as the previous one. This keeps it within the patronage system, when you renew the contract of a man who is capable and doing the job well.

In my riding last year there was one mail carrier's route put up for tender for no reason at all. He had a petition signed by every box holder on the route, which was sent to the department, but despite this his job went up for tender and was given to another man for the sake of $10. Probably the other man knew how much to tender less than the other fellow; I don't know about that. I think the more you get away from contracted jobs the better it will be for the mail service, the post office department and everyone concerned; but in the case of a new man coming on or a new route being established, then it should be handled by tender.

Mr. Montgomery: Mr. Chairman, the point involved here is, I think, a point of principle. I object to the last two lines of the bill because I am satisfied, as the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) has said, that some person can get a mail contract who has never tendered.

I am quite in sympathy with the department making arrangements to carry on for the remainder of a term; I think that is good business. As I said last night, I think it is good business to retain the tender system because it has worked very well; but under these two lines in this bill you are inserting the thin edge of the wedge whereby the tender system may disappear.

This is designed to make legal what the department has been doing in the past. As I understand it, the department had not been going beyond making arrangements for the remainder of a contract term. I would be quite willing to have that done; but when that term runs out then I think tenders should be called for that particular contract, because a new person is entering the field and I do not think it is in the interests of the public to handle it in any other way. I think it is putting too much responsibility on the district superintendent or whoever looks after this.

I believe there would be far less fault found if you were to open it to tenders and give the people a chance. As I understand it, it does not cost very much to call for tenders. If we cut out the last two lines of this bill I think the department will have succeeded in accomplishing under this bill what they desire. In other words they will be legalizing the things they have been doing, which I am quite in favour of them doing.

This bill goes further than that. This bill is going to interfere with the principle of permitting a new carrier to get his job under the old tender system. It permits me or someone else to take over from some other person, keep the job for a few months under an arrangement with the department, and have that contract continued from four years to twenty years, with a raise in pay every period under section 33 as amended in 1953, and keep it to myself as long as I render good service.

That may work all right, but we are taking away from the people the right to have a chance to get that job, and I do not agree with that. I am going to suggest, therefore, that the minister consider an amendment, unless he is able to point out to me that the last two lines are important. I move:

That clause 1 of Bill No. 351 be amended by striking out all the words after the word "agree" in line eleven, and in lieu thereof add the following:

"but such substitution shall be only for the remainder of the term of the contract."

Mr. Jones: In view of the answer given by the parliamentary assistant just now, it seems to me that where one of these cases arises through the death of the contractor, provision should be made in the bill to take care of such a situation. The clause reads in part:

—that no additional expenditure is involved, substitute another person for the contractor for the conveyance of mail, if the contractor and the person to be so substituted agree.

If one of the parties is dead how can he agree? I think that is where the trouble would start.

Mr. Lapointe: The answer is that it is usually some member of the family of the deceased who is ready to take over.

Mr. Jones: It does not say so.

Mr. Lapointe: That is done in order that the contract may remain within the estate. There is generally a member of the family who is willing to take over the contract.

Mr. Jones: That should be stated in the bill.

Mr. Lapointe: It is not necessary.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): In my submission this is a bad bill, in that the government is now practically doing away altogether with the calling of tenders. In the case of almost any contract, if the original contractor does not wish to renew at the end of four years all he has to do within the last two months of the term of the contract is to say that he is going to give up the contract and is recommending so and so. That will be done in a great many cases and the government will not have to call tenders for any of these rural mail routes. The government is just leaving this thing wide open to patronage and everything else.

I think that is a terrible thing to have happen and I do not think this bill should be allowed to pass. The government will be put in the position of having to call tenders for only a few contracts, because in many cases within two months of the expiration of the contract, if the original contractor does not want to carry on he will simply recommend somebody else. No tenders will be called for the new contract, and the same thing can be done time after time. There will be no need for the department to call for tenders and we will be going back to the patronage system. I am not saying they will do that, but I do contend that this would add to that type of practice.

Mr. Lapointe: I think the answer to my hon. friend is to be found in the figures given by the parliamentary assistant in connection with transfers. The transfers in that one year represent only 3·6 per cent of all rural mail contracts; in other words, the change of contract from one person to another represents only 3·6 per cent of all contracts. I have no doubt that the hon. member is familiar with the manner in which these contractors do their work. I am sure he knows how these contractors handle their responsibilities, and he knows perfectly well that most of the contractors make this a personal job. They give most of their time to it. On reading Hansard I noticed that during the course of the debate one hon. member made reference to the long and reliable service which is given by some of these rural mail contractors. I think the same condition exists in all our rural communities, and those of us who represent rural communities are aware of that.

It may be that a contractor has been doing this work for many years and has rendered good service to the public. In many cases it is the contractor's only occupation. As was mentioned, in the case of the death of a contractor, in many cases the only people who are familiar with the work are the contractor's family, who very often have done the work for the contractor. By making this transfer a continuity of efficiency in the handling of rural mail is possible. There is nothing new in the practice which this amendment seeks to legalize. As was mentioned before, it has been done ever since confederation, and all we are doing is making sure that the act provides for the continuation of this practice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What created the doubt in the legal interpretation of the section?

Mr. Lapointe: My understanding is that it arose following the revision of the Post Office Act in 1952. I believe the treasury suggested that those amendments did not provide for this.

At this point I should like to refer to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. I regret to say that it is not possible for the government to accept this amendment. One point which should not be forgotten is that when such transfer is made, the department must make sure that the person who takes over the execution of the contract for the remainder of the period is bound by the Post Office Act in the same manner as the original contractor. In other words, he must be under the authority of the Postmaster General in the same manner as was the original contractor. That is done by the very lines which my friend wants to delete from the clause, which read:

—and the provisions of this act apply to the person so substituted as though he were the original contractor.

If those words were deleted there would be no binding contract between the new contractor and the Postmaster General. There would be nothing which would bring the new contractor under the Post Office Act. That is the sole reason for those words being put in the clause. It is quite true, as the hon. member mentioned, that by putting the new person in the same position as the original contractor he is given the same rights, but if we delete those words we take away the authority of the Post Office Act over the new person.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister accept the amendment of the hon. member if it were added to the section rather than deleting all the words after "agreement"?

Mr. Lapointe: I do not think I would accept it. As I have said, the purpose of this amendment to this section is purely to enable us to continue legally what has been the practice and what has been found to be the most efficient way of proceeding with the transfer of these contracts. I did not quite get the wording suggested by the hon. member who has just spoken, but I think I know what he had in mind. In fact I could have thought of a wording which would have been simpler and would have effected the same thing he wants to accomplish, but it would not suit the purpose of the department at this time.

Mr. MacLean: I agree that the objection taken to the amendment by the minister may be fairly valid for the reason he gave; nevertheless I do not see how the minister could have any objection to the purpose of the amendment if it were changed slightly to accommodate both the minister's point of view and that of the hon. member moving the amendment.

As I see it, if I interpret the bill correctly it means that a transferee who is asked to complete a contract and who, according to the last two lines of this bill, will be in the same position as the original contractor is, in fact, in a better position than the original contractor in some regards, because the original contractor, if he got the contract by being the lowest tenderer, ran a certain risk. He had to tender fairly low in order to get it or run the risk of not getting it if he made his tender a little higher.

The person substituting may be doing so at a time when the contract has been in force long enough to allow the minister to increase the rate of pay. It would appear, if I interpret this correctly, that there is a minimum time during which the service must be performed before an individual is eligible for an increase in pay. Before a contract is transferred the original contractor may serve practically all of that required interval, and then somebody else substitutes and almost immediately becomes eligible for an increase in pay. If I am not right I should like to have it pointed out to me what in the act prevents that.

Mr. Lapointe: He has to wait two years.

Mr. MacLean: The minister, I believe, said he would have to wait two years. I read through the act rather quickly, I must admit, but I failed to see where that is so if, as it says here, the person who is substituting is in exactly the same position as though he were the original contractor.

Second, the minister said that this practice has applied recently to only 3 per cent of the contracts let. He gives that as an assurance that it would not become a general practice in the future. It would seem to me, if this practice was carried out in 3 per cent of the cases when, it turns out, it was not even legal, after we legalize it the practice may become more widespread. After all, if this bill is passed the rural mail carrier—I am thinking of him especially—is in the position that his contract becomes almost part of his estate, because as long as he gives satisfactory service it will be extended indefinitely.

I think that is a good policy if a man is giving satisfaction. But when he wants to give up his contract all he has to do is give it up short of the date of termination, and then he has the privilege of recommending a successor to himself. Then that successor in turn is in the same position as the original contractor. As long as he gives good service he can carry it on for the rest of his working life if he wants to. In that way the mail contracts can be handed on from generation to generation without ever being put up for tender.

It seems to me that while at the present time it may not be a practice that will apply generally, nevertheless we are making it legal for a practice to creep in whereby mail contracts are something to be inherited, not to be won by submitting the lowest tender.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the minister one more question. What will happen in this case? I know of an instance where a man took over a contract for a year or two from an original contractor. According to the usual practice in the past, tenders had been called because the term of the original contract had expired for that mail route, but a contract had not been awarded. What happens in a case like that, if this legislation goes through?

Mr. Lapointe: I am afraid I do not quite understand the hon. member's question. Tenders had been asked?

Mr. Herridge: Tenders had been called but the contract has not been awarded.

Mr. Lapointe: Not awarded, for what reasons?

Mr. Herridge: Not yet awarded.

Mr. Lapointe: I did not quite get the question.

Mr. Herridge: Will the person who bid on that contract, who was the man who took over the original contract, automatically continue the contract when this passes?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, he would continue while the process of calling for tenders and awarding a new contract was taking place. He would continue executing the contract, but if there were a lower tender than his, then the contract would be transferred to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. MacKenzie: I have been very closely associated with rural mail problems for a number of years. I do not know how it works in other districts, but I am honest when I say that in western Ontario there has been no political activity of any kind in the Post Office Department.

An hon. Member: You are lucky.

Mr. MacKenzie: I think that is pretty general. The hon. member said the contract should be tendered for every four years, or at least when the contractor resigns or wishes to leave his contract. I have been opposed to the tender system ever since I have had any interest in the rural mail carriers' problems. There is no other employee handling Her Majesty's mail that has to do this work by public tender. I think the public tender system is very vicious, and I believe the amendment that was made in 1953 did something to equalize the pay of the rural mail carriers and has done a good deal to restore some confidence and equity among the rural mail people themselves.

Under the 1953 amendment a tender can be called and an adjustment in pay can be made after two years, or only once during the life of the contract. That situation is not very equitable, because since the 1953 amendment a rural mail carrier who may only be a year or a year and a half from the expiration of the contract may apply for an increase in pay but he cannot have any further adjustment during that period, and he must renew before he can ask for another increase. Consequently he cannot ask for another increase for two more years. Therefore the situation at the present time is that it is possible for one person to get an increase in pay in a little over two years while another person would have to wait probably four years. Of course I appreciate that would be taken care of after everybody had renewed and all were in the same boat.

However, to come back to the tender system again, I think the quicker we get away from that system and adopt some other system the better it will be. I am not going to suggest for a minute that the matter should be left entirely in the hands of the Post Office Department and whatever government may be in power at the time, because a lot of political patronage could creep in under those conditions. Nevertheless I do think that the public tender system should be done away with at an early date. The awarding of contracts, rather than being done by public tender, could come under the civil service commission or some other body. Under the present system a person can apply by public tender and ask for an increase in two years' time, and it it quite possible that somebody who wanted to get a particular route could tender at much below the regular price accepted across the board and then ask for an increase in two years and under the present act have his pay increased by the officials to the average across the board.

I cannot see any danger in this amendment. As the Postmaster General has said, it is just making something legal that has been done for a long time. Finally, may I say that to my knowledge I am quite certain that in Ontario particularly there has not been any political patronage.

Mr. Michener: As the last hon. member has said, the purpose of this clause is to make legal what has been done for a long time. The amendment is to assure that it does not make legal anything more than that. I think the minister is quite prepared to accept the amendment if it does not destroy the effect of the section, whereby the substituted contractor is put in the same legal position as the retiring contractor. I have an amendment which the hon. member who moved the original amendment might agree to have substituted, or which I shall move as an amendment to the amendment.

The Chairman: Order. May I say to the hon. member that we have an amendment before the committee. Do I understand that the hon. member who moved the previous amendment is requesting that he be allowed to withdraw it?

Mr. Montgomery: Yes, I would be willing to do that.

The Chairman: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. Michener: In place of the amendment which has been withdrawn I move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Montgomery):

That clause 1 of Bill 351 be amended by adding after the last word the following words: "until the expiration of the term of the contract."

The minister will appreciate that this leaves the section intact. It has the effect of putting the substituted contractor in the legal position of the retiring contractor during the unexpired term of the contract but does not carry it beyond that, as the section would if it were left as it is. If the minister is prepared to accept the amendment, I shall say no more. If not, I should like to say a few words.

Mr. Lapointe: I quite agree that the amendment as worded by the hon. member for St. Paul's would have the exact effect that the member who proposed the previous amendment wanted to achieve. In fact, when I was answering the remarks of the hon. member for Prince Albert I said I could have thought of an amendment which would have attained his end and would have been more simple. However, I regret to say that we cannot accept the amendment, and there is one reason I want to mention which has not been mentioned up to now.

It has been the experience of the department that in most cases the transferee, the new contractor, the person who is willing to take over the contract, will not accept the transfer of the contract and assume the obligations of the original contractor unless he is put in the position of having all the rights of the original contractor. He will not take over for a short period of only six months, eight months or even two years without having some assurance that if he performs his work satisfactorily he will have the same privileges as the original contractor. Therefore when such a situation arises the department has to enter into temporary arrangements. The officials of the department go into the locality and try to find someone who is willing to carry on for the balance of the contract.

It is all very nice to say that the sureties under the original contract are bound, but it may be that they are not in a position to carry out their obligation. There is quite a bit of difference between being able to enforce a contract in so far as the persons who signed as sureties are concerned and making sure that the people get good service which, after all, is what we have in mind. Therefore we have to go about and make temporary arrangements, and it has been the experience over quite some years, I might say without exception, that these temporary arrangements are very costly to the department precisely because the person who is willing to enter into such arrangements knows that the duration will be very short. Therefore very often the balance of the contract will have to be executed at twice the cost of the original contract or what it would be if we simply transferred the contract as has been the practice in the past. We try to avoid these temporary arrangements as much as possible because of the high, uneconomic cost of such operations.

Mr. Michener: In view of the minister's unwillingness to accept the amendment, and I thought from his earlier remarks that he would, I should like to say a word or two about this section. The minister has referred to 3½ per cent of the contracts being transferred by this substitution method in the course of a year. As I understand it, these are four-year contracts, and if that is the case does that not mean that 12 per cent or more of the contracts in force are affected? In any event, it seems to me that if there is a diffidence on the part of some new contractor to come in and fill the unexpired term the proper course, if it is not worth while for the person to do that, is to call for a new contract in the usual way.

Let there be no mistake that the effect of this section, as has been said, is to make it unnecessary to call for tenders. A man can come into a mail delivery contract by substitution under this clause and at the end of the unexpired term his contract can be renewed just as though he had been the original contractor. He could go on then for a number of terms and serve in this capacity without ever having tendered.

This change would make it possible, if it were desired to do so, to bring about a situation in which a good proportion of the contractors in the country were serving without ever having tendered as required by the act. If it is desired to abolish the tender system, why not do it and amend that provision of the act? Let us not approach it through any back door. I think it is clear that this is a back door which could be used for the purpose of permitting a man to enter as a substitute first without having to tender, and then permitting the renewing of the contract without him having to tender, and that process could go on indefinitely.

On that account, as has been stated already, I object to this clause, as do many of us, and shall oppose it unless the amendment is put in which keeps the tender system or brings it into effect when the unexpired term of the present contract is up for renewal.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in support of what the minister has just said. I presume hon. members who have spoken are thinking in terms of the situations that arise on the mainland where the mail contractor carries the mail from the train to the post office; in other words, he brings the mail from the post office to the train, takes the incoming mail and brings it back. I do not know how lucrative these jobs are on the mainland and how much competition there is for them, but I can assure hon. members that in my province they are not very lucrative and that it is extremely difficult to get people to take them at all.

In Newfoundland, of course, we have an entirely different situation because most of our people live in communities scattered around the coast line, and the mail is brought by a coastal boat. You therefore have three kinds of contractors. You have one contractor who meets the ship at the wharf at the port of call and carries the mail from the wharf to the post office. He had previously brought the mail down to the wharf when the steamer entered the harbour. He picks up the incoming mail and carries it back.

That is one type. Then you have another situation where a carrier brings the mail from one settlement to the port of call. That is an extremely difficult situation. If the port of call, for instance, is A and the community is B which is, say, 10 miles away, the courier in community B very often has no idea at all when the coastal ship will arrive at the port of call A. He must take the mail there in time to catch the ship. That very often means that he must go several hours ahead of time, because after six o'clock the telegraph offices are closed, and he does not know whether or not that ship is going to come during the night. Hence he is obliged to take the mail there. The situation may develop that he is obliged to stay there all night. He may decide after twelve o'clock that the ship in not coming and, instead of paying his board and lodging there, go back to his own community B.

That means that the next day, weather permitting, he must come back again and pick up the mail the ship has landed after the ship is in. Hence it is an expensive proposition because it means that the courier, who is a fisherman, must lose a day's fishing sometimes. It means that he may get stormbound while at the port of call and be obliged to pay board and lodging overnight. It means all sorts of expenses that are not considered at all when these contracts are drawn up.

Then you have the third situation in which the mail is landed at a certain central port of call and you have a contractor who carries that mail around a circuit, calling at five or six different communities, probably travelling a distance of 40 or 50 miles. That is the most difficult situation of all because it involves all sorts of expenses, maintenance and vagaries of wind and weather which it is almost impossible to take into account at all, with the result that people who undertake these contracts soon find that they are losing money and they get out of them as quickly as they can.

I have had some cases in which we have not been able to get a postal service at all because we have not been able to find anybody who would carry the mail for what the post office considered a proper rate or a remunerative rate, considering the revenue which the service would yield.

As I said, some hon. members have expressed fear of patronage, but from my own experience I see very few opportunities for patronage in my province. The way the thing works there is that when a service is under contract, the regional supervisor or one of the local officials is the man who is obliged to search around and find out from the postmaster or some other people in the community who is willing to perform the service and for what price; and he is obliged to do a great deal of searching. When he has found somebody who is competent, with the necessary equipment such as a boat and so on—there is probably only one; there is probably nobody else interested—then he advises the authorities here in Ottawa who in turn advise the minister, and a contract is drawn up on that basis.

Very often the service is postponed and the contract is turned down because they cannot get a contractor to do the job for what the department is prepared to pay. In actual practice in my province I would say there is hardly any possibility of patronage. It is so difficult to get people to perform this service that if this amendment were carried, it would make the situation even worse and would cause hardship, particularly in my own riding.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, the bill now introduced by the Postmaster General is, I feel, quite dangerous.

In explaining the matter a while ago, the minister gave an example where, on the death of a rural mail carrier, this measure would allow the department to let the contract or the unexpired portion of the contract to anyone it chose. The minister pointed out, for instance, that the members of the deceased contractor's family could very well carry on with the work since they were already in possession of the necessary equipment.

Still, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the contract being no longer valid from the time of the demise of the contract holder, the minister should call for new tenders. It could be possible, in this way, to bring about substantial savings. It is possible that some people would submit lower tenders. In the method we are asked to approve today, there is some danger that attempts be made to use political influence, which would be bad for the department and those who intend to tender.

Let us suppose, for instance, that someone signs a contract and dies the next day, It seems to me that the contract should automatically become void and that new tenders should be called so that those who had tendered on the original contract and whose tender had not been accepted could tender again. It seems to me that the department would save money by calling new tenders. If contracts are awarded for a period of four years, I think it would be very important that new tenders be called.

I am afraid that the minister's refusal to accept the amendment submitted by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Michener) implies that the department has in mind some purpose about which the house cannot obtain any information. I do not want to suggest that the minister is harbouring some ulterior motive, but I believe that several members realize the danger which would attend the practice now contemplated, and we want to warn the department against this bill.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, to answer briefly the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne), I would point out and repeat that we are not introducing a new practice; we are only putting into the act what has been the practice followed by all governments since confederation.

Mr. Dufresne: It is admittedly dangerous.

Mr. Lapointe: That it has been dangerous —I never heard the hon. member for Quebec West or his colleagues on the other side of the house complain about it so far. However, it must be realized that it is very hard to establish a general rule and to have it applied with equity to all cases because, as was pointed out by one of the hon. members from Newfoundland who spoke before my hon. friend, conditions vary in various parts of the country, in various ridings of the same province. While it is quite possible that in some places a swarm of interested tenderers answer every call for tenders for a new contract, in some other places it is quite impossible to find any tenderer at all. As a matter of fact, I know some cases in my own riding where for three years the department called for tenders and was compelled every time to make temporary arrangements because nobody was interested in this particular contract.

Now, another factor to be considered when the hon. member refers to the saving of money is that, according to the experience of the department for the past few years, every time we have called for new tenders, the contract has been awarded at a higher price than that paid to the former contractor. Moreover, as I pointed out just now, in answer to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Paul's, when temporary arrangements have to be made for a limited period, the cost is often doubled, because nobody wants to accept a temporary contract with the department, and to get the necessary material and equipment without being sure of keeping this contract for a long enough period so that, far from saving any money, this procedure would increase operation costs.

Mr. Dufresne: Would the hon. minister answer another question? For instance, as he was explaining just now, when a rural mail carrier dies and the department wants the contract taken over by some other person appointed by the Post Office Department, does the department award the contract to the new incumbent at exactly the same price as to the former contractor?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, this is one of the conditions of the transfer; the new appointee must assume the discharge of the contract for the remaining period on exactly the same terms as those provided in the former contract.

Mr. Dufresne: I am satisfied with these explanations.

(Text):

Mr. Michener: I should like to ask the minister a question as to the application of this section. We have heard about the rural conditions, but I imagine from earlier answers that this section applies to some fairly substantial contracts in the cities. I am not just sure where the mainland begins, but I think perhaps Toronto is on the mainland. I understand that Prince Edward Island is not on the mainland, but wherever it may be what would be the annual value of the largest contract which could be dealt with under this substitution method? What would be the annual value of the largest contract for the conveyance of mail?

Mr. Lapointe: My understanding is that the largest firm contract for a definite period of time in an urban area is in Montreal, and that contract is for around $1 million. I have not the exact figures here.

Mr. Michener: Is that per year?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes.

Mr. Michener: Would it be possible for a contractor to hold more than one contract under the act?

Mr. Lapointe: Oh, yes, a contractor is not limited to tendering on only one contract. The fact that he has already executed a contract with the department does not prohibit him entering into a second contract.

Mr. Michener: Then in effect, Mr. Chairman, as I understand the answer a contract for around $1 million a year which is held by A could be transferred to B, with the consent of A and the minister, without any calling for tenders and from there on could be held by B in perpetuity without B having tendered for it. It seems to me that illustrates the danger of instituting a system by which contractors may be allowed, particularly where large sums of money of as much as $1 million are involved, to transfer their contract to another person.

While I am on my feet I should like to record another weakness of the section. As I understand the minister, this section has been used where the contractor has died and it is desired to make some family arrangement by which his apparatus can be used to complete the contract for the unexpired term. As the section now reads the contractor who has died must agree before the substitution can be made.

Mr. Lapointe: Every contract ties down the estate of the contractor. He contracts for himself and for his heirs.

Mr. Michener: I have looked in the act to see whether or not the definition of "contractor" includes his heirs and assigns but I see nothing to that effect.

Mr. Marler: It is elementary, is it not?

Mr. Lapointe: It is in the contract itself. Briefly, that clause says that the Dominion of Canada enters into a contract with... hereinafter called the contractor, his heirs, executors and administrators of the one part.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the interpretation the minister has given, this section should avoid breaking the law as it has been broken in the past and as I am afraid it will be broken in the future, because if this section is passed the law will be that the minister may substitute any person for the contractor under any contract for the conveyance of mail if the contractor and the person to be substituted agree. There is no mention of heirs, executors and administrators in the statute.

Mr. Lapointe: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that the legal expert of the Department of Justice finds that the clause is sufficient to meet the point raised by the hon. member. Of course, as he knows, free legal advice is worth what you pay for it, but that is the only kind I can get.

Mr. Michener: Mine is free too, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, without the amendment this bill leaves wide open another avenue of the patronage system. That is, when a man dies or quits his contract the patronage man in that little area can say, "Well, John Brown is going to finish out his term," and at the end of the term, whenever the four-year term is up, it will not be advertised at all and the contract can be renewed to that same man.

The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and the hon. member for Lambton-Kent said there was no patronage in their areas in the Post Office Department.

Mr. MacKenzie: That is right.

Mr. Hodgson: Do you know the reason for that? It is because you are a Liberal member. If you were a Conservative member in a riding you would very soon see that there is lots of patronage used.

Mr. MacKenzie: Don't be silly.

Mr. Hodgson: I am talking about my own riding, and I think I know my own riding better than the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, last evening on second reading I attempted to be as reasonable as I possibly could in looking at the request. I endorsed it on the understanding that I now realize only I had, that this was to fulfil only the unexpired portion of a contract and that at the end of that time tenders would be called.

At this time I fail to see any reasonableness in the minister's unwillingness to accept the amendment, which would merely ensure that at least once in the lifetime of every one of these office holders he would have to submit himself to a public competition, to bids. I see nothing wrong with that. I do not think anyone should be permitted to inherit a job. We do not have that in ordinary employment and I do not think we should have it in this type of employment either.

Some hon. members have mentioned the difficulties involved in getting any mail carriers at all in certain areas. There may well be areas of Canada where mail carriers are underpaid and others where they may be overpaid; and to have the occasional, at least a once in a lifetime, tender for each of these positions might serve a very useful purpose. It might bring those that are paid too much into line and in those areas where they are unable to get anyone to volunteer to take the position it might serve as a useful tool to convince the hierarchy in the Post Office Department that a higher rate of remuneration is necessary in that area. I fail to see any reasonable argument that the minister has put forth for his refusal to accept this amendment, unless he is willing to abolish the whole idea of calling for tenders, in which case the method now in vogue would have to disappear anyway.

The minister spoke of the difficulties in making temporary arrangements. That is no argument at all, because acceptance of the amendment would not add one single temporary arrangement to the deal. If there was no one willing to take over for the unexpired portion the minister would have to call for tenders in any event, and there would be no such thing as a temporary arrangement any more than is the case now. I feel very keenly that tenders should be called for, not necessarily at the beginning of a man's service but at least within a reasonable time; and I think it should be, as the amendment proposes, at the end of the contract period.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I want to say this one additional word. It has been suggested by various speakers that if this amendment carried no public tenders would be called at all and it would be a matter of perpetuity. Of course it does not work out that way, because what they are asking for has been in operation for many years and there have been a lot of public tenders called within the past few years, every year as a matter of fact. The main reason for that is that, in the rural districts particularly, carriers are underpaid and there are very few people who are willing to take over contracts on the present terms. Consequently there are many public tenders called.

I do not know if the minister has this information, but I wonder how many public tenders have been called for mail contracts, let us say within the last year?

Mr. Lapointe: I think the number of tenders called was roughly 1,500 in the last year.

Mr. MacKenzie: Fifteen hundred in the last year?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, roughly.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, on that point, the minister says approximately 1,500 tenders were called in the past year. Could he give us a breakdown as to how many of those were for new routes and how many were cases where a four-year contract had run out and tenders were being called again.

Mr. Lapointe: I am sorry but I do not have that figure. I have the number of tenders called for contracts but I do not know whether they were new routes or renewals or transfers for the unexpired portions of four-year periods. I do not have that breakdown, but I might be able to give it to the hon. member when we are discussing my estimates.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): May I point out this is most interesting. The parliamentary assistant took up from my remarks last night the fact that 162 contracts over $1,000 had been transferred in a 12-month period, and he read that into the record again today. The minister came down and had this all worked out to a decimal point, 3·6 per cent of the total number of contracts for that period, but he cannot tell us how many contracts expired at the end of a four-year period and were renewed by means of calling for tenders.

I will suggest right here and now, Mr. Chairman, that the minister probably is not anxious to bring that information into the house because if he did it would show that very few, if any, of these contracts are recalled for tender at the end of the four-year period, and that the department has been using this system of transferring contracts from one individual to another in order to pacify certain individuals in certain parts of the country and that is why they are so anxious to hang on to it. I believe that is very obvious. If the minister were on top of his department, if he had any real intention of helping this house by having adequate information available for us when we wish to discuss a measure of this nature, he would have come here with a decent set of statistics.

We have asked only three or four questions relating to statistics in the course of the afternoon. What has happened? The minister says, "I think the biggest contract is one in Montreal for about $1 million." He did not know the answer to that. We asked him how many contracts were called for tenders in a given 12-month period and he replied, "I think there were about 1,500." He does not know the answer to that. We asked him how many of those were contracts for new routes and how many represented contracts which had expired and were being called for tenders again, and he does not even think about that nor attempt to answer it.

These are important matters in connection with an item of this kind, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest it is highly improper for a minister to come to this committee without complete information concerning the type of operation that is affected by a piece of legislation.

I am quite sincere in saying that. If a minister is going to come here and ask us to deal with legislation which affects himself and which has to do with the mail service of this country from one end to the other, I submit it is improper and unfair and unrealistic and unbusinesslike to ask us to do that on the high plane of a purely legalistic basis without any relation whatsoever to any facts. Every time we have asked for facts we have been given the answer "I do not know, but I think" or "I do not know at all." Having said that and just to sum—

Mr. Lapointe: By way of introduction?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): No, by way of introducing something which I feel should be brought to the attention of the minister and which I hope he will take to heart in an attempt to rectify this sort of practice in the future. When the estimates of the Post Office Department were before the estimates committee the departmental officials were present. We know from experience that they had all the facts available. You could ask those officials for the information you wanted and they were able to pop up with it. Each one came in with a stack of books. The minister is in exactly the same position today. He could have in front of him as many officials as he wished and they could have their books and records. Why he did not do it, I do not know.

By way of conclusion rather than by way of introduction, it does seem to me that the minister has demonstrated clearly this afternoon that he will not accept any amendment to the bill before the committee that would cause tenders to be called for when letting these contracts. As I understand it, we have taken the position that in the event of inability for whatever reason of a man to carry on a rural mail contract, certain temporary problems are presented. We are in sympathy with those problems and we understand what those problems mean. We say to the minister that he can place that contract where he wishes for the duration of the contract, provided of course that it is not placed at a higher rate.

However, if it was proper that tenders should have been called for the original contract, then we submit that it is proper that tenders should be called when the contract passes to a new holder. We feel that the proper time for that is when the four years of the contract have run out and the contract comes up for consideration. The minister has refused to give any consideration to such a course of action. As someone has pointed out, he has refused to give any adequate reasons.

His first reason is that disruption occurs when the original contract holder cannot carry on. We are prepared to go along with the minister on that. But there would be no disruption two months, six months or two years after that had happened. There would be plenty of time in which to call for tenders.

The minister has said, "We are not prepared to do this. We want the privilege once a contract has been let of getting our hands on it if we possibly can and placing it with someone we designate." It might very well have been that in the initial stages of this debate we considered these contracts as minor and involving perhaps $3,000 or $5,000; but as was brought out by the hon. member for St. Paul's, we find now that in some cases these contracts are quite sizeable. There is only one place that I know of where the department is operating its own mail conveyance system, and that is in Windsor. That is being carried on on an experimental basis and I believe consideration is being given to installing an experimental system in Ottawa. But in major centres like Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton and right down the line we find contracts of $50,000, $100,000, $300,000 and even $1,000,000. Any of those contracts are capable of being transferred under this legislation.

We are offering an amendment which would bring these things out in the open and offer people a decent chance to tender. The government would then be doing its business in the way it should be done. Personally I think it is most regrettable that the government refuses flatly to follow a proper and legitimate course of action and attempts to hang on to the old system. It may be sanctified because it has been in operation since confederation, but it is not necessarily the sanctification of purity. Anything which will permit a $1,000,000 contract to lie around for the government to handle at its discretion is something to which this party is not going to agree.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace will admit that in putting forward his views in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's he may possibly have exaggerated. I think upon reading his own remarks the hon. member will find that he stated that the minister has refused to give information to the committee. That is a statement which the hon. member knows to be both untrue and unfair. If there is any hon. member who is in position to know what information has been available from the Post Office Department it is the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace. The hon. member made more use of those facilities than any hon. member when the estimates of the Post Office Department were before the estimates committee, of which the hon. member was a member.

The hon. member will recall that I told the members of the committee that the officers of the department were there and that any information they wanted would be available and they could put any questions they wanted. I told the members of the committee that we would make everything as available as possible, and that whatever information was desired would be given. That was done. When the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace accuses the minister of withholding information he is making a statement which is both unfair and untrue.

With regard to the propriety of the behaviour of the Postmaster General, I suggest that the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace should be the last one to make a remark of that kind in this house.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): In view of the minister's remarks would he tell us, first of all, the exact amount of the largest contract which has been let under this system; second, exactly how many contracts were called for tender in connection with this section in any 12-month period ending in the last year; and third, how many of those contracts represented new routes and how many of those were contracts which had expired at the end of four years and were being recalled.

Mr. Lapointe: I repeat that I do not have all these detailed statistics.

An hon. Member: You should have.

Mr. Lapointe: I wonder whether I might be permitted to speak.

An hon. Member: I said, "You should have."

Mr. Lapointe: This is the kind of information that is asked for and is always given on estimates. I am not in a position to furnish detailed statistics about every operation of the Post Office Department, and I do not pretend to be able to do so. If I spent my time trying to secure these statistics I would not be doing the rest of the work of the department that I am called upon to do. These statistics are available and will be given to to the hon. member, but the hon. member has no right to say we are withholding information from him, and he knows it.

Mr. Dufresne: Why not give it this afternoon? It is in connection with the bill.

Mr. Lapointe: For the simple reason that it is impossible to foresee, as far as I am concerned—and I plead guilty if I am not capable of doing so—what type of detailed information might be asked concerning the whole operation of a department. That is what the discussion on estimates is for; that is what the estimates committee sat for at the demand of the opposition, and that was what was done before the estimates committee. When my estimates come back before the house I shall have that information and I shall be pleased to give it.

Mr. Michener: With respect to this section and its effect, I should like to ask the minister how many contracts in the Toronto area have been the subject of substitution under the practice which this section will approve, who are the contractors and what is the value of the contracts? If the minister has the information here, I shall be glad to have it; if not, I shall be glad to have it when it is available.

Mr. Lapointe: I shall endeavour to get the information.

Mr. Michener: I should be glad if the minister would take the greater Toronto area and indicate what contracts have been subject to the practice which this section will authorize for the future.

Mr. Lapointe: I shall get the information but I venture to say that would be very limited, because this applies mainly to rural mail contracts—not necessarily but, in effect, mainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought the minister gave me that information for one year. He must have it before him.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I gave it for a one-year period for the contracts in all Canada, but I did not have it broken down by postal districts.

Mr. Knight: I have a question which I asked the minister before but which he probably missed. He will not have to look up any statistics to answer this one. Is there any logical reason, except inconvenience to the department—I think that was the expression that he himself used—in a case requiring a substitution to be made for a contractor under an existing contract, why at the expiry of that contract tenders should not then be called for the further duration of such contract? What is the reason? Is there any reason outside of the inconvenience the minister has already mentioned?

Mr. Lapointe: I did add that in such a case temporary arrangements have to be made to ensure the continuity of the service, and that these are very costly. They are much more costly than the regular contracts, so that purely from the economic point of view it is not a good practice.

Second, very often we cannot find a person with whom to make these temporary arrangements. I wish hon. members would believe me when I make the statement that there are areas in this country where nobody is interested in getting these contracts and the department has great difficulty in finding people capable of giving the good service that we wish to maintain.

Mr. Knight: I think the minister misunderstands me. I am assuming that the temporary arrangements have been made and have been in operation perhaps for a year or two. Then the date of expiry of the initial contract arrives. What is the logical reason why contracts should not be continued?

Mr. Lapointe: That is not a transfer but a temporary arrangement which has been made. Then at the expiration of that temporary arrangement tenders are called.

Mr. Montgomery: I did not quite get the minister's last answer. If it is as I thought it was, that is fine. Did I understand the minister to say that at the termination of a contract entered into by arrangement, tenders will be called?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, if it is a temporary arrangement. Here is the point. I think I can clear up what my hon. friend has in mind. If the contract is transferred—

Mr. Montgomery: That is not temporary?

Mr. Lapointe: That is not a temporary arrangement. If the contractor ceases to execute his contract for one reason or another and there is no transfer, then we make a temporary arrangement with someone to ensure that, right from the date, the service continues, and that temporary arrangement may be for the balance of the contract or for a period of only one year if the contract had been in effect for only a short time. At the expiration of this temporary arrangement, tenders are asked.

Mr. Montgomery: The minister says it is expensive to enter into temporary arrangements. It is not an expensive arrangement to call for tenders. To call for tenders you have only to post a notice for three weeks. I presume that four or five weeks is the longest period between the time the contract comes up and tenders are opened or a contract awarded. I should like to know if I am wrong in that. I should like to have some idea of how long it takes.

Here is the point that seems objectionable. Let us say that Mr. A, who has a contract, has decided he is going to give up his contract. Invariably one of two things happens. Either he has his successor selected or he does not care who gets it. Supposing he has his successor selected, then the arrangements have been practically made between the two of them, and it has just to be either confirmed or disapproved by the department.

I should like to know who is going to decide in that triangle whether or not it is in the interests of the public to permit the second contractor, the man selected by the first contractor, to have that contract. It says here that the Postmaster General may do this, but I quite understand that the Postmaster General has to depend upon his advisers and he gets the best advice he can. I want to say right here that so far as my area is concerned better departmental officials could not have been selected. I have all the confidence in the world in them, but I believe that this very legislation is going to create a bigger problem for them than if the tender system were retained. I am satisfied of that.

Then there is another point. This is a country in which people should have a chance to tender on these things. If it is good business in the Department of Public Works or any other department to let contracts by tender, then it is good business in this department, and I cannot agree with the hon. member across the way who said that he was against the tender system. Nobody can decide what I can do a job for better than I can myself if I have the equipment and am capable of doing it, and I think that is why the Post Office Department has operated so efficiently in the past. You have to give the Post Office Department credit for carrying out a big job and doing it economically, but it is because of the tender system in a great many instances that the service has been given at a price in the past. I agree that in many instances people do take carrier routes for less than they think they should get for them after they have them, but nobody forced it on them.

It is also a fact that once a tender comes up then regardless of who gets the contract there is no kick in the community if the man provides the service. There is another question here. Suppose A has assigned his contract to B and B starts driving the mail route and the people in that community are not very happy with the service he is giving. I should like the minister to answer this question if he can. How are you going to get the new contractor, the man who never had to tender, out of the job? How are you going to substitute for him? How are you going to handle that? That is the problem that bothers me.

Mr. Lapointe: In the case mentioned he would be handled, to use my hon. friend's expression, in the same manner as the original contractor would have been had his service suddenly become unsatisfactory. The general practice is that the people in the community complain to the postal authorities in the district. An investigation is then made and if it is found that the man is not executing his contract according to its terms and is not giving proper service he may be reprimanded if the matter is not serious or if it is serious the Postmaster General has the authority to cancel the contract in the same manner as he would with the original contractor.

Mr. Dufresne: And then call for tenders.

Mr. Lapointe: And then he would call for tenders.

Mr. Montgomery: The minister was asked to provide certain information and I understood he said he would give it to the members who had asked for it. I should like to have that information placed on Hansard if it can be done so that it will be available to everybody.

Mr. Lapointe: I will do that on the estimates.

Mr. Jones: The information given us this afternoon has to my mind changed the whole picture regarding the bill. We are now told that the contracts may be anything between $1,000 and $1 million. Obviously what applies to a $1,000 or $2,000 family contract or a small rural route would not apply to a $1 million contract. Therefore it seems to me that if the minister cannot accept the two or three excellent amendments suggested by the official opposition he should consider placing a limitation of $3,000 or $4,000 on the operations of this bill so that over and above that all contracts will automatically have to go to tender. I think there should be a limit if he will not accept the amendment suggested by the official opposition, and I ask the minister to consider placing such a limitation on the operation of the bill. In the meantime I suggest that we report progress and tackle the problem again after he has had time to think about the matter.

Mr. Dufresne: There is one thing I think we should make clear. A few minutes ago the minister said that all information was available from the various officials of his department. I agree that whenever we ask for information from the officials we are bound to get it and do get it, but all the information asked for this afternoon by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace or even by the hon. member for St. Paul's is absolutely in connection with this bill. We are being asked this afternoon to adopt a bill when we have not got the information necessary to study the bill. All the information sought is in connection with the bill. The minister claims that we can get all this information and no doubt we can, but I ask the minister to postpone third reading of the bill until members of the opposition have the privilege of getting the information they require.

Mr. Barnett: I find myself interested in the question raised by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. Like him I had thought in terms of the sort of contracts that arise from time to time in my own district. They are mostly quite small contracts and very often the conditions are such as other hon. members have been describing. The difficulty is to find somebody willing to take on the contract rather than the reverse being the case. But when large contracts in urban areas are involved it certainly puts a different light on the matter as far as I am concerned. I think that the minister should either agree to what the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary has suggested with respect to some limiting figure being placed on the application of this section or he should at least give some indication to the committee that the invariable practice of the department with regard to these large contracts has been and will continue to be to call for tenders. Personally I am not familiar with the practice of the department in those circumstances, but as this matter has come up I for one would like to have some further explanation and discussion of this aspect of the question before the section carries.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): May I also say that having been informed of the tremendous amount of money involved in these contracts I am of the opinion that this information only adds further to what I said previously about this being a very poor practice. The minister says that all he is asking is that a practice which has been in operation since 1867 be legalized. In effect what he is asking us to do is to legalize a thoroughly bad practice, and I think that is evident to all members of the committee. When you consider that contracts ranging from $1,000 to $1 million are involved, then surely there should be no objection by the minister to calling for tenders. If it has been the practice of the department simply to let these contracts on recommendation, then that in my opinion throws an entirely different light on the situation and only magnifies the problem with which we are faced.

I agree with the suggestion made by the member for Okanagan Boundary. If the minister will not do anything else, surely he should put a limit on contracts let in the fashion which he says has been the practice ever since 1867. That is a long time for a thorough bad practice to be kept in force in this country, and certainly we should not be asked to legalize such a terribly bad practice.

Mr. Bell: The minister put something on the record that I think should be cleared up. He suggested, and there is something in his suggestion, that the main reason he wished this amendment to be adopted in this form was that it was difficult to renegotiate contracts if they expired for various reasons towards the end of the four year term. In other words, if it were necessary to renegotiate in the last few months he might have difficulty in getting a new contractor to fill out the balance of the four year term if he could not promise him something more after the final expiry date. I suggest that the word "may" in the proposed new clause takes care of that and that the only weak defence that has been made is not valid because if a contract did fall through in the final few months the minister could at that time, if he wished, renegotiate a completely new contract. I therefore think there has not been even one small defence made this afternoon for this clause.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the minister that, in all fairness, he should endeavour to obtain the answers to these questions which have been asked. I have been listening to them very carefully, and I think that all of them have to do with the subject dealt with in this bill. The minister has one of his officials before him. If that official does not have the information that is sought, the usual course would be for the minister to summon some other official who can give him those answers. I suggest to the minister that he should move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day. By this evening he could have obtained the necessary information and then the difficulty will be overcome. But he really is putting the members on this side of the house who are dealing with this bill in an impossible position when he simply refuses to answer questions—

Mr. Lapointe: I did not refuse.

Mr. Green: —and says that they could have been asked in the estimates committee or that they can be asked when the estimates come up for discussion later on in the session. That is not the practice in this house, as the minister and all the rest of us very well know. Here we are dealing with a bill to amend the Post Office Act in one particular regard. It is an aspect of the Post Office Act in one particular regard. It is an aspect of the Post Office Act which has always aroused great interest. I have never yet failed to see a debate arise when rural mail was under discussion. There are many members in this house who are vitally interested. I urge upon the minister that he take time out now to get the answers to these questions. In the meantime let us get on with some of the other business that is before the house.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon the minister took umbrage at my having remarked that he refused to answer certain questions. In the course of his subsequent remarks—and I took down his words—in stating that he was open, and wanted to give us this information and everything else, he then went ahead to say that he did not have some of this information and he said, "I do not intend to" give this information to the house. Those were the minister's words. Those five words are the key to the situation, when the minister said, "I do not intend to". Those remarks are on Hansard. I see the minister looks at me questioningly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not recall having said that I did not intend to give information to the house. The whole purpose of my remarks was just the opposite. I would be most surprised to find that I used those words.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Chairman, I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that he specifically used those words.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. McIlraith: Put them in context.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): The minister left us very specifically with the feeling—

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, may I move that the committee rise and report progress?

The Deputy Chairman: And ask leave to sit again when?

Mr. Harris: Later this day.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Lapointe moves that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Mr. Dufresne: Does that mean that the minister will give us the information we asked for this afternoon?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to intervene. The motion having been put, I am afraid it is not debatable. It is, of course, votable. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall the committee have leave to sit again? Later this day.

TELEGRAPHS ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING CONTROL OF SUBMARINE CABLE INSTALLATIONS

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 212, to amend the Telegraphs Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the present bill, as is said in the explanatory note, is to provide for the control of submarine cables terminating in or passing through Canadian territory, excluding, however, submarine cables wholly under fresh water. My remarks, Mr. Speaker, will bear only on those that are affected by the bill, although I fully understand that in ordinary parlance the word "cable" would have a very extensive meaning.

I think it would facilitate the discussion of this measure if I were to set forth the pertinent facts so that the purposes the government has in mind may be clearly understood.

The part of the Telegraphs Act which deals with what the act calls "marine electric telegraph companies" and which prescribes the formalities to be followed by a company that desires to construct a telegraph wire or cable to connect any province with any other province of Canada or to extend beyond the limits of any province, was originally enacted in 1875. Section II of the original enactment—38 Victoria, chapter 26—provided that until (a) the company had submitted to the governor in council a plan and survey of the proposed site and location of the cable and its approaches at the shore and of its stations, offices and accommodations on land and of all the intended works thereto appertaining; and until (b) such plan, site and location had been approved by the governor in council; and until (c) such conditions as he thought fit for the public good to impose touching the said telegraph and works had been complied with, the company might not exercise any of the powers conferred upon it by the act.

Though more than 75 years have elapsed since the Telegraphs Act was first enacted by parliament, there has been no substantial change in the language of the section to which I have just referred, and consequently no change in the formalities that must be observed by a company which wishes to lay and operate a submarine cable. I think hon. members will agree that it does not often happen that an enactment remains unchanged in substance for such a long time. The fact that there has been no change in the formalities to be followed is, I believe, explained by the way in which improvements in the general field of communications have developed.

When the act was passed originally in 1875 a submarine cable had a very limited capacity. In fact, it seems that at that time a cable usually carried two simplex circuits, each capable of transmitting about 26 words per minute. As the years passed improvements were made in the quality of cable construction and it was found possible gradually to increase the capacity of cables, but I should like to point out that the increase was not extraordinary if judged by present-day standards. In fact, the ultimate appeared to have been reached in 1923 with the installation of what is called a nonloaded cable which, with the adding of repeaters, carried six circuits with a total speed of 252 words per minute. This is equal to 42 words per minute per circuit.

I think I should add that the older cables also were improved by various means so that their capacity with two circuits is now about 84 words per minute. Loaded cables were first introduced across the Atlantic in the mid-1920's and they made it possible to increase the number of circuits in the cable and also the total speed of the cable to as much as 500 words per minute. I mention these facts in order to point out that despite the improvements which have been developed the capacity of a cable was such that, of itself, it imposed an economic limitation on the number of cables that might be laid and consequently upon the number of additional circuits that might be established to compete with those which had been previously laid.

A further limitation upon the laying of new cables resulted from the development of wireless telegraphy or radio. As hon. members know, improvements in this field of radio have made it possible, in a relatively recent period, to use radio both for the transmission of telegraph signals and also for telephone conversations. In fact, since the expansion of this form of communication began in earnest only two new trans-Atlantic cables have been laid.

About 1950 a new technique was adopted to increase cable capacity and in that year the first submerged repeater to be placed in operation on a trans-Atlantic cable was installed at a distance of about 170 miles from Newfoundland in a cable laid in 1881. There is no unanimity apparently among technical men as to the extent to which repeaters will increase the speed of a cable. Some believe they will double the speed and others that they will treble it. No doubt the rate of increase depends upon a number of factors such as the nature of the cable, the distance from the shore, the kind of repeater, and so on.

I regret that it has seemed necessary to deal with these somewhat technical matters which, at first sight, seem perhaps not to be entirely relevant to the bill in order to stress one point in particular, and that is through improvements, installed in the cable itself or elsewhere, the capacity of most if not all of the trans-Atlantic cables has been increased over that which they originally had when the formalities prescribed by the Telegraphs Act were accomplished and when the requested approval of the governor in council was given. In stressing this point, I express no criticism of the action of any company in increasing the capacity of one or more of its cables, because the Telegraphs Act does not seem to prohibit it from doing so.

However, I must admit some concern that as the act now stands, once the requested permission to land the cable has been granted its capacity may be changed, perhaps quite substantially, without either the knowledge or consent of the government. Perhaps if the change in the capacity of a cable were to remain within the range I have indicated there might not be cause for great concern or for legislative action. However, the progress of science has gone much further and the development of coaxial cables with built-in repeaters, and their use for trans-oceanic communication, have completely changed the whole situation.

Hon. members will appreciate the significance of this development from the fact that the new trans-Atlantic telephone cable which is now being laid between Newfoundland and Scotland, and which is expected to come into operation later this year, will have a capacity equal to about 40 times the capacity of all existing trans-Atlantic cables. In this project two cables are being laid, one in each direction, and the transmission of each of these cables is at present expected to have a capacity of at least 800 telegraph circuits at 60 words per minute each. I say that the new cable is at present expected to have a capacity of 800 telegraph circuits, but the estimated total number has increased over the original figure and it is possible that at a later date it may be increased further.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that in speaking of the capacity of the trans-Atlantic telephone cable, and expessing it in terms of the number of circuits as I have just done, I want to make it clear that its primary purpose is for telephone and not for telegraphic purposes. I have merely used the number of telegraph circuits in order to emphasize the word-carrying capacity, so to speak, of these modern coaxial cables in relation to those that have already been laid and are now in operation. But I think the most important point to be stressed in that connection is that the introduction of the coaxial cable with the built-in repeaters has completely revolutionized the whole picture of trans-oceanic communications. I hope that hon. members have appreciated the fact that this trans-Atlantic telephone project, in effect, involves the laying of two cables that have 40 times the capacity of all the other cables that are already in existence. I think that in those circumstances hon. members will appreciate the necessity of amending the Telegraphs Act in order to meet the situation.

At first sight, it might appear as if section 22—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Before the minister commences the second part of his speech, I might point out to hon. members that it is now five o'clock and the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Mr. Marler: I have only two or three minutes more, and if I had consent perhaps I could finish my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): With unanimous consent, the minister will continue.

Mr. Marler: Thank you. I was just saying that at first sight it may appear as if the provisions of section 22 of the Telegraphs Act give the governor in council all the authority that is required, and that by the simple expedient of either granting or withholding approval on plans, site and location of the cable, the government may permit or may prevent the laying of new cables. In fact, however, the matter cannot be resolved in such a simple way; first, because the problem does not always arise in a way that admits of a yes or no solution; and, second, because under the present act there is no continuing control or regulation of the actions of a company with regard to the cable itself.

I should like to emphasize that if one reads section 22 of the Telegraphs Act, it will be found that what is contemplated seems to refer to actions that must be taken and completed before the cable comes into operation. In a word, they do not appear to be of the continuing character that would prevail and continue after the landing permit has been granted and the cable comes into operation. The problem, moreover, is complicated by the fact that most of the trans-Atlantic cables that are landed at some point in Canada serve primarily for the transmission of messages between the United States and the continent of Europe, or for what may be called through traffic.

The cables comprise two segments, one from Europe to Canada and the other from Canada to the United States, but they do serve also, although to a much lesser extent, for the transmission of messages originating in or destined for Canada. This is a complication because in a given case there might be no objection whatever to granting permission for a cable to carry through traffic, while there might be very real and valid objections to the provisions of facilities additional to those already established to meet Canadian requirements. Or alternatively, it might appear desirable to limit the number of circuits to be opened in Canada. The present act does not appear to contemplate the attaching to the landing permit of conditions of a continuing nature and therefore does not seem to provide for revocation of the landing permit if the conditions are not observed.

The government believes that by establishing a licensing system it will be in a better position to deal more flexibly with applications for permission to land cables, to control the opening of circuits into Canada, and to regulate increases in the capacity of cables; and the amendment before the house has been drafted with these objects in mind.

There is one further point I wish to mention and that is the routing of messages originating in Canada. I am sure that hon. members share the feeling I have that it would be desirable if this business were routed to the cable heads in Canada over facilities located in Canada and owned and operated by Canadians. This would have the obvious effect of giving Canadians the maximum benefits to be derived from the business which they themselves originated.

Of course, I appreciate, just as I am sure hon. members do, that it would not always be possible for this to be achieved and that sometimes there would be reasons, such as the interruption of communications, overloading of facilities or other circumstance which might make it desirable in order to avoid delay that the traffic be carried over facilities in the United States; but in a general sense I think that Canadian traffic ought to move to the cable head by means of Canadian facilities. I feel sure the various companies operating cable facilities share this view and that so far as this is not now being done they will co-operate in helping us to achieve this objective; but I think I should point out that the proposed licensing system would enable us to exercise some measure of control over the routing of traffic originating in Canada.

I trust that with these explanations the bill will commend itself to the members of this house. May I add that if the bill receives second reading I shall then move that it be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know it is not the intention that any of these bills shall be called, although I speak subject to correction, and if that is so we might stand them all at one time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If any hon. member of the house so desires, the public bills must be called one at a time but if there is unanimous consent we can revert to the business interrupted at five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): There being unanimous consent, the business reserved for private and public bills is considered as disposed of and the house will revert to the business interrupted at five o'clock.

TELEGRAPHS ACT

AMENDMENT CONCERNING CONTROL OF SUBMARINE CABLE INSTALLATIONS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Marler for the second reading of Bill No. 212, to amend the Telegraphs Act.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill is to go to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines there is no necessity to discuss it at any length at the present stage. I believe the minister is wise in referring it to that standing committee for several reasons. One is that there would appear to be some features about this activity which can be fully understood only after they have been explained by the experts and then I take it there may be some people who will be affected by this amendment who might wish to be heard before the committee and, of course, if the bill were dealt with in the house without being referred to the committee there would be no opportunity for such representations to be made.

We in the official opposition are curious about some aspects of this particular bill and while we are not opposing it at this stage we are reserving our right to do so in the event that the examination by the committee reveals the bill has features which in our opinion would justify opposition to it in the subsequent stages.

The minister opened his remarks today by pointing out that the Telegraphs Act has been in effect almost without amendment since 1875, a period of over 80 years. When he said that, it struck me as being rather strange that the bill having been so good originally and having been so good for over 80 years it should now be necessary to amend it and not by the usual type of amendment but merely by giving the government the power to license. In other words, here is another case in which we are establishing a licensing system to be fastened on the long suffering people of Canada. Apparently, judging from the minister's remarks, the main reason for taking this licensing power is to be able to limit the number of circuits. Evidently the government feels there are or may be too many cables and on that account there must be some power given to restrict them by licensing.

That would sound more reasonable if it were not for the fact the government itself is in the business in the shape of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation, a crown company set up in 1949. It was set up at that time to take over external telecommunications but the minister of transport of that day on more than one occasion in the course of the discussion pointed out that it was not intended to give this crown company a monopoly. He may have been stretching his argument a bit but I find that at page 394 of Hansard for September 30, 1949, Mr. Chevrier had this to say:

> It was asked whether the bill would create a monopoly. My reply is no, the bill will not create a monopoly.

And then he repeated that on the next page. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) had been referring to the possibility of the crown company being given a monopoly and Mr. Chevrier replied:

> In any event, whether it is or is not the case, the Anglo-American Cable Company and Commercial Cable Company are in direct competition with both Cable and Wireless, Limited and Canadian Marconi Company, Limited,...

The latter two companies were taken over by Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation.

> . . . so there is no danger of a monopoly. From what I understand, in the international field exclusive of the commonwealth field there are telecommunication services, both wireless and cable, that are quite strong and quite competitive in these services.

The minister was questioned further about that when the bill went before the committee in 1949, and at page 10 of the proceedings of the committee of November 8, 1949, we find this:

> Some suggestion was made during the debate concerning monopoly. I will not go into that now because there are some technical officers here who will be able to do that. I do not think this nationalization will create a monopoly in any sense because there is a considerable amount of competition as it is now.
>
> Mr. McLure: May I ask the minister one question?
>
> Hon. Mr. Chevrier: Yes.
>
> Mr. McLure: Will this create a monopoly?
>
> Hon. Mr. Chevrier: It will not, in so far as Canada is concerned.

We had that very definite statement by the minister in 1949. Even at that time there was some concern because there had been an agreement between various nations in the commonwealth with regard to telecommunications. In the very committee proceedings to which I have referred Mr. W. C. Connelly, superintendent of radio, Department of Transport, placed before the committee a memorandum relative to the subject under discussion. The memorandum points out that there had been an agreement reached between commonwealth countries for a reduction in the rates and that in that agreement the governments had agreed:

(a) to maintain the policy of concentrating overseas telegraph traffic on the systems of Cable and Wireless Limited and its associates;

That was one of the companies taken over by the Canadian crown company.

(b) to use their best endeavours to stop the circulation of traffic over foreign services using circuitous routes, and to resist the routing of traffic through foreign organizations not established in their respective territories where the Cable and Wireless Limited system has a suitable route which can carry the traffic;

I would point out the next two clauses.

(c) to continue the policy of resisting the authorization or opening of new circuits which would be detrimental to Cable and Wireless Limited or its associates in the British empire;

(d) to afford Cable and Wireless Limited and its associated companies overseas the opportunity of taking over on reasonable terms any external commercial wireless telegraph transmission services in the extra-European system at present operated by governments where or if such services compete with the companies' services;

That memorandum seems to be fairly clear as to the real objective in 1949 being to get a monopoly in external telecommunications services, and one wonders whether the amendment brought in today is not the next step to obtain that objective of a monopoly. There are other companies in the field which have been established for almost as long as the Telegraphs Act has been on the statute books of Canada and those companies are in a position to extend their services by way of additional circuits or to modernize their services. It may be that the real purpose of this bill is to force them out of business in Canada.

That brings up the question of whether the Canadian people are entitled to the benefits which would follow from fair competition, and I think that should receive the careful consideration of the standing committee. Any company operating under the Telegraphs Act is subject to drastic control, apart from the licensing control which the minister is now seeking to initiate. Such a company must obtain a charter from this parliament, and I believe they all have done so. Such a company must obtain a charter authorizing it to construct its cables.

[Mr. Green.]

That control is set out in many sections of the act. The minister referred only to section 22. That section, in referring to any company coming under the Telegraphs Act, reads:

The company shall not exercise any of the powers by this part conferred until

(a) the company has submitted to the governor in council, a plan and survey of the proposed site and location of such telegraph and its approaches at the shore, and of its stations, offices and accommodations on land and of all the intended works thereto appertaining,

(b) such plan, site and location have been approved by the governor in council, and

(c) such conditions as he thinks fit for the public good to impose touching the said telegraph and works, have been complied with.

That latter clause (c) gives the governor in council very wide powers. Section 24 provides:

(1) Before commencing the construction of any such telegraph or work mentioned in section 23, or of any buoy or seamark connected therewith, the company shall deposit, at the Department of Transport, a plan thereof, for the approval of the minister.

(2) In cases of emergency, for repairs to any work previously constructed or laid, the plan thereof shall be so deposited as speedily as may be after the commencement of the work.

Then section 25:

(1) The work shall not be constructed otherwise than in accordance with the plan as approved by the minister.

The section goes on to give the minister the power to remove the work if it has not been so constructed. Then section 26 provides for the use of lights and signals on ships used in connection with the work. Section 28 reads:

The minister may, at any time, at the expense of the company, cause to be made a survey and examination of any such work, buoy or sea-mark, or of the site thereof.

Section 29 gives the minister the right to recover any expense to which he is put by reason of checking the works of a company.

All these companies are also subject to control by the board of transport commissioners. As I read the act, the rates which they charge are subject to the approval of the board of transport commissioners. Section 31 reads:

(1) The company shall transmit all messages

(a) in the order in which they are received or in such order as the board of transport commissioners for Canada may require or direct, and

(b) at such rates as may be determined from time to time by the said board for the different classes of messages, or hours of the day or night during which such messages are transmitted, without discrimination within each class.

Section 32 provides:

The company may charge for the transmission of messages, and may demand and collect in advance such rates of payment therefor as are fixed by by-law of the company as its tariff rates and approved by the board of transport commissioners for Canada.

—giving the board of transport commissioners what appears to be full supervision of the activities of the company in the way of the charging of rates.

Now the minister proposes that there should in addition be a licensing control. He has given us no details of how that control is to be carried out. There is some suggestion that the crown company, Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, has a great deal to say in all these matters. Whilst, strictly speaking, the jurisdiction is given by statute to the Department of Transport, we hear rumours that the Department of Transport gets its advice from this crown company, which is certainly a competitor of the private companies.

We should be told in the committee whether the position is to be that the crown company is in effect to recommend the terms of the regulations and is to be the enforcing body. If that should come about, then we would have exactly the same position that has caused so much trouble in the radio field in Canada.

We should also be told in the committee whether this licensing control is to apply to existing companies already in the field or only to companies that enter it from now on. I take it from what the minister has said today that there is not much doubt that his intention is to cover all companies, no matter how long they have been in the business.

Does it also mean that all new outlets, all new circuits, are to be reserved to Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation? That would have the result in the long run of putting the other companies out of business and creating a government monopoly. I believe that there is no such cable landing licence law in the United Kingdom and also that, whilst there is a law of that nature in the United States, it is not as far-reaching as the one now proposed by the minister. These details, too, we shall require in the committee.

I submit that we cannot be too careful in making changes at this time. On the surface they seem to be innocuous, but where we have had a business established for so many years and carried on in a satisfactory manner there should not be drastic changes made without very good reason, and in this particular case the fact that there is this crown corporation, with its officers no doubt anxious for more power and out to build their own empire, I think, makes it all the more necessary that we should be cautious before agreeing to make changes of this kind.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have been generally aware that some of the technological changes to which the minister referred in introducing this bill have been taking place. It just so happens that the main terminus for the Pacific cable is in my constituency, and I know, from conversations I have had, the results of some of those changes, as far as Banfield station is concerned. I also had the opportunity of seeing one or two of the installations in the province of Newfoundland when I paid a visit to that province. So I can readily appreciate that the time may very well have come when some changes to the existing legislation are necessary and desirable.

Quite rightly this bill is going before the committee, where we can hear some of the technical explanations involved given to us. I do not intend to attempt to discuss it at any length at this stage. I think I should make clear, however, that, as far as those in this group are concerned, we consider telecommunication by submarine cable to lie very clearly in the field which one can regard as a public utility service, and it is desirable that such services should be provided either under some appropriate form of public ownership or under public control, and that will be the point of view from which we shall approach the consideration of this measure when it reaches the committee stage.

Just how adequate the measure that the minister is now proposing will appear to us when we enter into that detailed discussion in the committee, of course, I do not feel I can say at this moment, but I feel I should indicate that, generally speaking, as far as I have been able to understand the bill, we are sympathetic to the purposes it is designed to achieve. The only qualms I have heard expressed about the bill, as a matter of fact, from the members of the group to which I belong in the house have come from my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Cameron), who happens to have some of the poles that travel from the Banfield station crossing a piece of property he happens to own, and he is hoping that this bill will not interfere with the present rental arrangement he has with regard to those poles.

Probably the application of this bill and its effect are going to be more widespread on the Atlantic coast than on the Pacific because of the large-scale activities that the minister mentioned of the transmission of messages between the United States and Europe and because, of course, of the larger centres of population in eastern Canada from which communications overseas travel. Nevertheless, I shall be looking forward with great interest to the study which this bill will receive in committee, as I know will those of my colleagues who also sit on that committee.

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): We in this group welcome the statement of the minister that he intends to refer this to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, because it is only through that committee that we feel the bill itself will get the consideration it properly warrants.

There is one factor in the bill against which, I feel, we must guard, and it was brought out to a degree by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) when he suggested that this is another licensing bill. I feel that possibly its objective is to limit the field of communications to government-owned enterprises. We in this group cannot go along with what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) just suggested with respect to communications when he said that they should be handled by a public utility and therefore should come under public ownership. Rather, we consider that where we have technological advances such as the minister described the Canadian public certainly should receive the advantages of this technological progress, and we cannot support the bill if it is the intention to stop the progress in the field of communications in giving us all the good that we can expect from a healthy competitive system and not just a government protected operation.

We look forward to the government being in this public utility field only for the purpose of operating a cable where other private enterprises are not prepared to give service at a reasonable rate. The minister is sending the bill to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and I am sure that there he and his officials will be able to explain more fully the purpose behind the bill and possibly allay our fears concerning it. I hope that is so because I cannot see this group being in harmony with the setting up of a monopoly that would not give us the full advantage of the technological advances I spoke of earlier.

Mr. L. T. Stick (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, it may be new to some members of the house but the first cable was laid between Europe and a place in my riding called Heart's Content many years ago. We in Newfoundland had cable companies before you had a Telegraphs Act in Canada. The first company that laid that cable was called the Anglo Newfoundland Telegraph Company. Since then we have had Western Union, which has eight or nine cables coming into my home town of Bay Roberts, and we have the Commercial Cable Company.

Reference was made this afternoon by the minister to the first telephone cable laid between Clarenville and Scotland. I understand that the return cable from Scotland to Newfoundland will be under process of laying in a few days. All the companies I have named, with the exception of the last one, the telephone cable company, have been operating under charters from the government of Newfoundland for many years, and I think the terms of their charters are confirmed in the terms of union between Canada and Newfoundland. Unless this amendment affects the charters already granted, which I understand are included in the terms of union, and the operations of these companies, I cannot see how a monopoly can take place.

I rise to speak on this bill because it is a very important measure as far as our province is concerned. As long as there is no interference with the charters under which these companies operate in Newfoundland, I have no objection to the bill, but if this amendment in any way infringes upon these charters or curtails the operations of these companies I am afraid I shall have to oppose it.

This is very important for us in Newfoundland. I was at the laying of the trans-Atlantic cable last year. It is a very expensive undertaking. It is something which has been badly needed between Europe and America, and I understand that when the laying of the cable is completed some 30 telephone communications will be handled simultaneously. The traffic in communications between Europe and America is growing all the time. I am very glad that the minister is sending the bill to the committee so that these cable companies which have operated in Newfoundland for many years can make their representations to the committee and, if necessary, safeguard any of the rights they already possess. On that understanding I am in favour of the amendment provided it does not interfere with the operations of these cable companies which we had in Newfoundland long before you had a telegraphs act in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister speaks now, he will conclude the debate.

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to attempt to deal with all the remarks that have been made but I should like to say one or two words before the debate concludes. In my remarks on the bill and in dealing with the history, so to speak, of the cables that now exist, and referring particularly to the trans-Atlantic telephone cable which is now in process of being laid, I particularly wished to stress the fact that technological developments, if I may call them by that name, have completely changed the picture from the time when the Telegraphs Act was adopted, when the word-carrying capacity of a cable was distinctly limited, to the present time when we have cables of the nature of the trans-Atlantic telephone cable, a coaxial cable incorporating in it repeaters at intervals of approximately 40 miles apart, which has expressed in terms of telegraph circuits, as many as 800 circuits capable of carrying 60 words per minute each.

I cannot help thinking that this technological development makes it necessary for us to introduce legislation of the kind that is embodied in the bill now before the house. May I say to those who seemed to think that in the bill is the means of establishing a monopoly in favour of Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation that it would not be necessary to adopt this legislation if the government had any such purpose in mind because, as I thought I made clear in my earlier remarks, by the simple process of saying no to all applications in the future to land cables it would follow that there could be no other cables added to those that now exist. Therefore if that had been the purpose it would not have been necessary to introduce this legislation in order to create the monopoly, to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) referred. There is no intention, just as I may say there was no intention in 1949, of creating a monopoly in favour of C.O.T.C.

I had the occasion quite recently to read the debate at that time and to go over the evidence that was given by my predecessor. I do not think anything has happened in the meantime which would in any way invalidate the statements he made at that time.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra expressed the fear that C.O.T.C. would be the regulatory body. I may say at once that no such thought has ever crossed the minds of those who have drafted the legislation or the officials of my own department. I should like to correct any impression that may exist that C.O.T.C. was our sole adviser in the matter of telecommunications. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra well knows, there is a telecommunications division in the Department of Transport staffed with most competent officials, and when we need advice on matters in this particular field quite frankly it is not necessary for us to go outside the department itself. Consequently I can set at rest the doubts he may have in mind that C.O.T.C. would be the regulatory body either to enact or to administer the regulations which it is contemplated will be made if this legislation is adopted.

The next point was whether this legislation applies to existing companies. The answer to that question, of course, is that it is intended to apply to all companies operating cables, and it is not intended that it would merely apply to the operation of cables that might hereafter be laid.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) also referred to legislation in the United Kingdom. My information on that subject is that in the United Kingdom, under the Telegraphs Act, the Postmaster General is empowered to grant written licences on such pecuniary or other terms as he may deem proper, either generally or in any individual case to any company, person or body to transmit telegrams. My understanding is that at the present time there are no licences in force for the cables from Canada to the United Kingdom and that they are, if you like, so to speak on the sufferance of the Postmaster General. That is not the situation in Canada. I am not suggesting that the situation should be that all other cables should cease to exist. Far from it. If we wanted to create a monopoly, as my hon. friend fears, we certainly would not have proceeded to do it in this way.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that this is a technical measure and that there are many associated questions of a technical nature. It was my thought, in referring it to the committee, that hon. members would have an opportunity of obtaining such additional information as they needed in order to come to the conclusion, I hope, that the legislation is sound and that it deals with a situation that has developed since the advent of the coaxial cable.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Marler moved that the bill be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 418, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has moved the second reading of Bill No. 418, to amend the Income Tax Act. This cannot be a repetition of the budget debate nor, as the Speaker said on June 29, 1955, can the debate on second reading of the income tax amending bill be in itself a miniature budget debate. Had the rule been otherwise, there are many things that one would have wished to discuss at this time including questions as to the credit restrictions and other matters of a financial or fiscal nature which are calling for attention on the part of the house at this present time.

It is not always easy, Mr. Speaker, to define the principle of the annual income tax amending bill. It is an annual bill and, in this respect, it presents an annual problem. In fact, the income tax amending bill is almost always just a collection of individual amendments, some related to each other and some quite heterogeneous. I suppose as close as we can come to the principle of such a bill, Mr. Speaker, would be to say this, that the Income Tax Act should be reviewed and amended with a view to correcting injustices, weaknesses and oppressive effects.

It is desirable that there should be a periodical parliamentary review not only of what the government may consider each year to be necessary amendments to the Income Tax Act but of the Income Tax Act as a whole. When this act was first brought before the house to succeed the old Income War Tax Act, it will be remembered that the bill was referred to the banking and commerce committee and that that committee undertook a review of that legislation. That review was perhaps not as extensive as some would have wished it to be, but at any rate the matter came before one of the select committees of the house.

There are many people who consider that, when they submit proposals to the Minister of Finance or the government's financial authorities in relation to needed amendments to the act, those matters automatically come before the house. Hon. members, of course, well know that they do not necessarily come before the house at all. They do not come before the house unless the government chooses to bring them before the house in the income tax amending bill. I do not intend to repeat at length what I said on this subject last year as reported at page 5436 of Hansard of June 29, but I think that from time to time public hearings ought to be conducted by a select committee of the house—and I think the banking and commerce committee is eminently suited for that purpose—at which time the committee could review the entire act and receive representations by interested bodies which have a case to make with regard to any features of the act, any shortcomings in it or the administration of the act.

My next comment relates to the language in which our income tax legislation is couched. To an ever-increasing degree our income tax legislation becomes more complicated. The problem of interpretation of our tax legislation is becoming ever increasingly intensified. The act abounds in abstruse provisions, complicated sections, subsections, clauses, subclauses and provisos. It is written in terms that challenge the intelligence and understanding of specialists both of the legal and the accounting professions, and in many cases the co-operation of both is required in the interpretation of the provisions of the act. It is an unhappy paradox that the Income Tax Act, which most directly affects most people, is written in terms most difficult for them to understand. It may not be possible to go as far as one would wish to go in couching legislation on this subject in simple terms, but at any rate a serious effort ought to be made to do so.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the resolution preceding the introduction of the bill was perhaps the briefest that we have had. Certainly only three short resolutions were put before the committee of ways and means. The only three subjects which touched on the balance of ways and means and therefore found their way into the resolutions were proposals in relation to employees' profit-sharing plans, deduction of expenses of persons attending conventions, and depletion allowances. Those are all the matters of which the house was given advance information in the resolutions. Hence this year we approach a bill on which little information has been given at the preceding resolution stage.

I wish to submit to the house, Mr. Speaker, that our income taxes are too high. The minister has proposed no reductions in income tax this year. In the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1956 the government collected in personal income taxes $1,180 million.

In the fiscal year which commenced April 1, 1956, the minister has forecast that he will collect $1,265 million in personal income taxes. Similarly, under this same measure, the minister announced that collection last year from the corporation tax amounted to $1,035 million and forecast he would collect from the corporation tax this year $1,315 million.

Thus, it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that out of expected revenues of $4,763 million in the present fiscal year, including $360 million of non-tax revenues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) expects to collect 26·5 per cent of his total revenue by means of personal income taxes and 28 per cent by means of the tax on corporations. In other words, sir, we are here dealing with a statute, the Income Tax Act, under which the minister this year proposes to collect 54·5 per cent of his total expected revenues, including those from non-tax sources.

This leads me to make a comment, sir, on what we now know of the fiscal results of the first two months of the present fiscal year. We have the figures already for the months of April and May. The minister, in his budget speech, indicated that he is basing his budget forecast on a gross national product of "about $28 billion". We now know that in the first quarter of 1956 the gross national product was running at the rate of $28·3 billion or perhaps a little more than the minister took into account at the time he made his budget forecast. The dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin of June 21, 1956, contains this paragraph:

> The rise in Canada's gross national product which has been going on for a year-and-a-half continued into the first quarter of 1956, with the increase in the value of production from the fourth quarter amounting to close to 3 per cent after allowing for seasonal factors. This recent increase has raised the level of gross national product to an annual rate of $28·3 billion or about 6 per cent above the annual average for the year 1955 as a whole, and 11·7 per cent above the first quarter one year ago. The continued advance in the first three months of this year was mainly a reflection of a further rise in the physical volume of production, with prices on average showing only a small increase.

It is quite evident, Mr. Speaker, that if taxes continue at the present rate and if the gross national product is thus to increase, unless the spending machine is just to be turned loose, a very big surplus for the present fiscal year is now assured.

Look at the results of the first two months of the present fiscal year. In the months of April and May, 1956, revenues amounted to $780,500,000 and expenditures to $506,300,000, so that in those two months the minister had a surplus of $274,200,000. Now, we have been told often that you must not count surpluses before the end of the fiscal year, and that is quite true. We are aware as well that there are certain expenditures that bulk larger in the closing months of the fiscal year than they do in the earlier months. But surely it is a fair test to apply the results of the first two months of the fiscal year to those of the previous year.

In those two corresponding months of 1955, namely, April and May, the revenues that were collected in the treasury were $611,300,000 and expenditures were $474,700,000. The surplus for those two months was accordingly $136,600,000. You will see, then, that while expenditures advanced this year in the two months from $474,700,000 to $506,300,000, revenues showed a very much larger increase from $611,300,000 to $780,500,000. The surplus for the two months increased from $136,600,000 in 1955 to $274,200,000 this year. The surplus thus practically doubled for the two months. It is quite evident that given a continuation of the present high rates of taxation, a continuation of the present high gross national product without any deliberate turning loose of the government's spending machine, a very large surplus is assured for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1957.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that in view of these unchallengeable facts a reduction in the rate of income tax ought to be made now and ought to be made under the present measure. The government, in my submission, has no business, has no right, to go on exacting this very high rate of taxation when the end result is going to be a huge surplus of revenues over expenditures.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I had reached the point just prior to the dinner adjournment where I had submitted to the house that there ought to be a reduction in the income tax at this time. The failure of the present bill to make any provision for a reduction in the income tax must be measured against a background which is pressing on the attention of thinking Canadians these days with increasing seriousness.

Canada is suffering today from a lack of risk capital. In the first three months of 1956 Canada suffered a substantial current deficit which has been described in the daily bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics of June 15 as follows:

> Canada's current deficit from transactions in goods and services with other countries rose to a new peak for the first quarter of $345 million. This compares with $174 million in the first quarter last year and $255 million in the fourth quarter. This is about the same size as the highest quarterly deficit yet to appear which occurred in the second quarter of 1951. In relative terms too, the deficit is much higher than last year when it averaged almost 12 per cent of current receipts. At 25 per cent of current receipts it now represents almost the same proportion of current receipts as in 1930.
>
> The new factor contributing to the large deficit was the massive size of the import balance on commodity account which amounted to $190 million. The deficit from all other current transactions of $155 million was slightly less than in the corresponding quarter last year. Until recently the principal elements in the current deficit in the past few years have originated in these "invisible" transactions in the absence of surpluses on commodity account. But since the fourth quarter of 1955 the appearance of a large import balance on commodity account has contributed greatly to the over-all current deficit and in this year it has been the major element for the first time since early in 1951.

That commodity trade deficit, Mr. Speaker, has reached very alarming proportions. In the entire year 1955, Canada had an over-all trade deficit on commodity account of $360 million, and in our trade with the United States alone Canada sustained a trading deficit of $840 million. In the first quarter of 1956, on commodity trading account, Canada sustained an over-all deficit of $190 million and in our commodity trade with the United States a deficit of $400 million. That was in the first quarter of this year; our deficit on commodity trading account with the United States was half what it was in the entire year of 1955 when this tremendous deficit of $840 million was incurred in our commodity trading account with the United States.

How is this deficit being paid? How is it being financed? It is being financed, Mr. Speaker, by borrowing capital from abroad and in effect as a nation we are going into debt by importing capital in order to pay for a current deficit in our trade. We are buying so much more from the United States than we are selling to her that we are paying for the difference, we are meeting the deficit, by borrowing in the form of imported capital.

As many distinguished and thoughtful Canadians are pointing out today, the most pressing need in our whole national program of investment so far as the source of capital for that program is concerned is of more Canadian capital for that purpose. Some leading Canadians have stressed this in recent days. For instance, at the conference of the investment dealers' association of Canada held last month at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, this note was sounded by several leaders in the industrial life of this country. Mr. Thomas W. Eadie, the president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, speaking of the tremendous need of capital for expansion in the next 25 years, said:

> I see no reason why the major part of this vast sum should not be obtained from Canadian sources.

Mr. W. J. Bennett, the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, speaking of the need for capital to finance development in the future, said:

> I hope that a substantial part of this financing will be supplied by Canadian investment houses.

The report in summary concludes:

> All speakers during the two days of business sessions predicted a big year ahead for Canada, a busy time for the investment business, and stressed the need for Canadians to invest in their country's growth.

Sir, where is the capital coming from Canadian sources to invest in this country's growth? There is only one source and that is in savings; the savings of the people or the profits of enterprise, either corporate or personal.

The amount of capital that is going to be available in these forms depends on how much is left in the hands of those who earn after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) has taken his tax cut out of those earnings. If we refer to the recent publication of the dominion bureau of statistics, national accounts, income and expenditure for the first quarter of 1956, we see on page 13 some interesting figures with regard to total personal savings.

In the year 1953 the total personal savings in Canada amounted to $1,588 million. In 1954 that figure had dropped substantially to $965 million. In the year 1955 it had risen somewhat to $1,312 million. In the first quarter of 1956 it was just $209 million. Now, that happens to be a little more than in the first quarter of 1955 but it is substantially less than the quarterly average for 1955 and correspondingly less than the quarterly average in some of those preceding years to which I have referred. Therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, the need of creating Canadian capital, having regard to the needs of developing the resources of this country, is more pressing than ever before. If Canadian capital is to take a fair share and part in the development of the resources of this country it can come about only through the means of savings and they depend entirely on how much the Minister of Finance is going to leave of the earnings of people of this country after he has taken his tax cut.

Canadians have a high standard of living; they spend quite freely. Then where will they save? There is no relief in this bill from the present too high rate of income tax in this country. It is inevitable that we shall continue to lack Canadian capital as long as we have in this country the present crushing burden of income taxation. A reduction in the rate of income tax is very badly needed at the present time but none has been forthcoming and apparently Canadians for this purpose must await the election exigencies of the government.

I would like to conclude what I said on second reading of the bill, sir, by pointing to ten matters which should have been dealt with in the income tax amending bill this year but which have escaped attention on the part of the government.

The first, of course, is the fact that there are no tax reductions; I have already dealt with that.

The second is that no provision has been made for increases in the exemptions. These exemptions of $2,000 for married persons and $1,000 for single persons have been in effect now for a very long time. Similarly, the exemptions of $150 for a dependent child under 16 years of age and $400 for a dependent child of greater age have been in effect for a very long time now. Those exemptions go back to the days when the Canadian dollar had some real value but they do not fit the situation today, and the Minister of Finance might well address his efforts and his thinking to the necessity for granting reductions in taxation by taking that first step of proposing to the house an increase in the present exemptions. We were reminded by a very distinguished Canadian tax authority just a fortnight ago that the man who was earning $5,000 before the war must make $10,480 today or his financial position has deteriorated. That was the statement of Mr. J. Harvey Perry, director of the Canadian Tax Foundation to a joint convention of the General Accountants Association of Canada and the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario on June 16. He added:

> Most people are working as hard as they can but it doesn't seem reasonable that 30 per cent or 40 per cent of every dollar they earn goes to government—it's discouraging.

So I submit that the minister should have proposed an increase in these exemptions.

Third, this bill proposes no definition of capital gains. I do not intend to go into this or other subjects at length, but I do wish to mention this subject. It has already had some discussion at an earlier stage in the present session. I simply wish to assert that very definitely a definition of capital gains is urgently needed in the Income Tax Act. It is a striking fact that our Income Tax Act contains no definition of "income" and similarly it contains no definition of what are capital gains. The income tax appeal board and the courts are now dealing with some very difficult cases in regard to what constitutes a capital gain as distinguished from income. The old judicial definitions are no longer adequate to protect from taxation under this statute gains which are of the nature of capital and should not be classified under modern conditions as income. I simply leave this subject with the quotation of the final sentence of a very brilliant discourse by Mr. H. Heward Stikeman, Q.C., on a recent occasion when speaking on the subject "The Vanishing Capital Gain". After indicating the number of rules that anyone must now observe if he hopes to preserve the capital nature of a gain, concluded:

> Only by some legislative act can the uncertainty which now exists be removed.

The minister had a golden opportunity this year to bring in an amendment to give an adequate definition to capital gains but he has taken no step in that regard.

Fourth, the minister has not proposed any increase in the present $20,000 limit set by section 39 of the Income Tax Act as the figure up to which corporate income is taxed at the lower 20 per cent rate instead of the 47 per cent rate. This figure of $20,000 as the maximum of corporate income for this purpose was set some years ago and it is high time, having regard to modern conditions and the depreciation of the dollar in the interval, that the maximum was substantially increased.

The fifth matter is the subject of contributions for pension purposes by recognized groups of self-employed. This is not a new subject, as it has been discussed regularly at each of the last three sessions to my personal knowledge, but again the minister has not devoted a syllable to the subject in either his resolutions or his budget speech. Here is a problem urgently crying for redress. Under section 11 of the act it is permissible for employer and employees to provide for approved pension plans and to deduct their contributions to such plans from their taxable income. But in the case of the self-employed members of professional and other groups, there is no provision in our law today even where the group is clearly defined to enable them to enjoy similar benefits under the Income Tax Act.

This has been the subject of effective representations to the minister or his predecessor by a number of leading national professional and other groups such as the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Dental Association, the national labour bodies of this country, the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada, and many others, in concert. It is to be noted that remedial steps in this regard have been taken in the United Kingdom where an intensive study was applied by a royal commission to the problem, but here in Canada we continue to await some action on the part of the government. I am renewing the pleas which I made, and which others have made on previous occasions, that the government propose amendments to the act which will make it possible for well-defined groups of self-employed persons to enjoy the benefits now extended to employers and employees under the act in relation to contributions to pension schemes.

The sixth matter is the position of the tax-exempt spouse. I mention this briefly as I spoke on it previously on June 29, 1955, as reported on page 5436 of Hansard of that day. This matter was the subject of representations made to the minister by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in February, 1955, and the following was their proposal:

When the income of a wife is over $250 but below $1,000, the excess of her income is in effect added to the income of her husband through a reduction of his marital exemption. If the income of the wife is composed of dividends, the 20 per cent tax credit is lost. Accordingly, it is recommended by the executive council that in such cases the husband be allowed the 20 per cent tax credit on that portion of the dividends received by his wife on which he has to pay tax.

I submit that that is a sound recommendation, but it has received no recognition from the minister in the two budgets he has brought into this house since those representations were made to him. I say that the present measure is lacking in that it continues to ignore this problem.

The seventh problem relates to alimony or maintenance payments, and here a glaring injustice and inequality exists, one that has claimed the attention of the income tax appeal board as well as groups associated with social problems. Section 11 (1) (l) of the act permits the deduction by a taxpayer of an amount paid in these terms:

(l) an amount paid by the taxpayer in the year pursuant to a decree, order or judgment of a competent tribunal in an action or proceeding for divorce or judicial separation or pursuant to a written separation agreement as alimony or other allowance payable on a periodic basis for the maintenance of the recipient thereof, children of the marriage, or both the recipient and children of the marriage, if he is living apart from the spouse or former spouse to whom he is required to make the payment.

The inadequacy of that definition has become more apparent during the past year than ever before. I am sure it has been brought to the attention of the minister and yet nothing has been done in the present bill to cope with it.

In the province of Ontario—I am sure the situation obtains in other provinces as well—if a payment is made by a husband toward the support of a wife, under a judgment of the Supreme Court of Ontario in an action or proceeding for divorce, then the amount may be deducted by the husband from his taxable income. But, if the money is being paid pursuant to an order made in the family court by a judge of that court acting with magisterial power under the Deserted Wives and Children's Maintenance Act, the payment that he so makes is not deductible by him from taxable income. Having regard to the fact that there are so many orders made in these cases in the family courts, you have some appreciation, Mr. Speaker, of the extent of the problem and the injustice that is created in such a multiplicity of cases.

That is one aspect of the problem. There is another. Last October a case came before the income tax appeal board and was adjudicated upon there by Mr. Commissioner Fordham. In a judgment that he handed down on October 12, 1955, he is quoted in the press as pointing out that the law now allows deduction of alimony payments only where there is a judicial separation or divorce; otherwise, alimony is not deductible, and in Ontario there is no such thing as judicial separation. His judgment proceeded to draw attention to the weaknesses of the present act and the injustices created by the definition that I have quoted.

For my part, I had assumed that, when that matter came to the public attention in such a direct way in the judgment of Mr. Commissioner Fordham, the Department of Finance would have taken note of the problem and we should have had before us now some new definition of alimony so that the injustice now so apparent might be remedied; but the present bill is silent on this subject as well.

Mrs. Fairclough: He said that it was an obvious oversight in the drafting of the act.

Mr. Fleming: My hon. friend from Hamilton West reminds me that Mr. Commissioner Fordham referred to this matter as an obvious oversight in the drafting of the law. These were his words:

This matter reveals for the first time, where the board is concerned, what appears to be a remarkable and unfortunate oversight in the drafting of (the law).

Although alimony, as such, is clearly deductible by the payer when a court has made an award of alimony in a decree, order or judgment for divorce, or a husband and wife have executed a separation agreement providing for the payment of alimony, . . . (the law) does not take cognizance of an action for alimony alone.

The matter is one that would appear to merit early consideration by parliament, as the fact that the appellant's wife sued for alimony alone and not for a divorce as well, presents an extraordinary ground for having to refuse the husband the right to deduct the amounts of any alimony payments from his taxable income.

This is a palpable and manifest injustice, and only parliament can correct it. It is not something that occurred to the members of this house when that definition was first introduced into the Income Tax Act. It surprised me not a little, in the face of that clear exposition of the problem by Mr. Commissioner Fordham as long ago as last October, that the subject has not been deemed by the Minister of Finance worthy of redress.

The eighth matter in which this bill is lamentably lacking is the want of clarification of foreign exchange transactions. This matter has been before the department actively within the past year, and yet the subject is ignored in the present bill.

The ninth matter I should like to mention briefly is the subject of the so-called "nil" assessments. It is an extraordinary fact that, in the cases where the notice of assessment is issued showing the word "nil" in defining the amount remaining to be paid, it has been held that that is not an assessment at all. I am sure that must shock the sensibilities of most people. When they receive their notice of assessment—and most of them, I have no doubt, come in this form—and the word "nil" simply appears under the heading "balance payable", most people would certainly conclude that that was an assessment. It appears on a notice of assessment; but the courts have ruled on various occasions that that so-called "nil" assessment is no assessment at all, and therefore any correcting assessment at a later date becomes the original assessment.

This situation has left many persons and many business enterprises up in the air, in a condition of uncertainty as to their tax position, and it is creating much difficulty and suspense. Surely this is something that calls for redress, and yet it likewise has escaped attention on the part of the minister in the present bill. This has important results, of course, as all hon. members will appreciate, in determining the date under various provisions of the Income Tax Act from which time runs. I think it shocks the sensibilities of most members to find that a nil assessment is no assessment at all. That is something that calls for redress. In view of the finding of the courts, redress must come from parliament; yet the government offers parliament no opportunity in that regard this year.

The tenth and final matter that I should like to mention relates to an injustice that exists under section 116 (4) of the act and has been drawn to the attention of the government already on behalf of the Canadian Bar Association. Let me interject here that in selecting these ten subjects I am not suggesting for one minute that they exhaust the shortcomings in the present measure or the list of subjects urgently calling for redress in our income tax legislation; but, time being short and some of these other subjects having been touched on before, I shall not go beyond this last of my group of ten. Section 116 (4) provides:

> The minister may, if he considers it advisable in a particular case, accept security for payment of taxes by way of mortgage or other charge of any kind whatsoever on property of the taxpayer or any other person or by way of guarantee from other persons.

Here is an actual situation that has arisen. A mortgage was taken by the minister and registered as a second mortgage. There was already a valid first mortgage registered against the property of the taxpayer. The first mortgage having fallen into arrears, the first mortgagee sought to enforce his security. He sought to take foreclosure proceedings but he found that, while he could foreclose the owner of the equity of redemption, he had no power to take action to bring about a foreclosure of the second mortgage held by the minister. It may possibly be that he will have the right to sell under his power of sale, and in that way wipe out the second mortgage held by the minister. That may be a debatable point; I am not expressing any opinion on that subject at the moment; but the fact is that, if the first mortgagee in that case wishes to take the normal proceeding of foreclosure, he has no way at all of bringing about foreclosure on that second mortgage held by the minister. That is something that calls for redress. It is not fair, and that subject, although known to the minister and his department, has escaped all attention in the present bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, while the bill may look long in terms of bulk, and while many of its provisions are remedial in form and intent and will certainly have support on that basis, nevertheless there are many shortcomings in the bill. There are many injustices in our income tax legislation crying for redress which it lay within the power of the minister to propose in this measure but which have escaped the attention of the minister and of the department. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the day is not far removed when some minister of finance will have the courage to grapple with these problems and bring forward legislative proposals for the redress of them.

Mr. A. M. Nicholson (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have very little in common with the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). He said a number of things which I cannot accept. He complains about the income tax in Canada being too high. He says that Canadians have a high standard of living. I think it is a mistake to make general statements of that sort. Some Canadians have a very high standard of living. A great many Canadians have a standard that is not high enough.

Mr. Fleming: I think the hon. member will agree that I was speaking about national standards in relation to national needs of capital and national needs of saving, and it was a matter of comparing them with other countries.

Mr. Nicholson: I think the suggestion of the hon. member that we should be giving relief to the people who are fortunate enough to be paying income tax is not the type of suggestion that should be made seriously at this particular time. It is true that the over-all Canadian economy is very buoyant. The hon. member for Eglinton referred to the last national accounts which have come to us, and while he was concerned about the slight drop in savings I think he might have mentioned that personal disposable income is up over 10 per cent for the first quarter of 1956 compared with the same period a year ago.

At the supper hour I received in the mail the Carrot River Observer. There is a publisher's note intimating that although he has been a newspaper publisher for 13 years and has been in Carrot River for eight years the last issue of the Observer will come out about the middle of July. The editor is leaving for the city to take a secretarial course for the next ten months. This points up the crisis that confronts agriculture. The people who have been supporting this newspaper derive their livelihood from agriculture, and there is no future for a newspaper in a farming community if the farmers are in the position that farmers all across Canada now find themselves. That should be a matter of some concern to us.

I should like to draw the attention of the house and particularly that of the member for Eglinton to the recent bureau of statistics paper on the distribution of non-farm income in Canada for 1954. A year ago I used a similar paper that dealt with income for the year 1951 and at that time a number of hon. members said: "Oh yes, but the position now is a good deal brighter than it was in 1951." What is the position in 1954? For the purposes of this study the family is defined as follows:

> . . . a group of individuals sharing a common dwelling unit and related by blood, marriage or adoption. Thus, all relatives living together were considered to comprise one family unit whatever the degree of family relationship . . .

Then there is the following with respect to the definition of an individual:

> "Individuals" in tables 14 to 23 are defined as all persons aged 14 and over receiving income in 1954 and whose major source of income was from sources other than farming or military pay.

This leaves out of consideration the 20 per cent of the Canadian people who are engaged in agriculture and who are in a depressed condition as has been pointed out before. But here we have the non-farm people. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) does not consider that a single person earning under $1,000 a year should have to pay income tax. I think it would be a logical conclusion that for a single person $1,000 is the minimum that a citizen should have if he or she is going to be able to get a fair share of Canadian income. But what percentage of Canadian individuals are getting less than $1,000 a year? We have a breakdown here according to regions. In the Atlantic provinces 54 per cent of individuals are getting less than $1,000. In Quebec the position is better in that there are 38.4 per cent who are getting less than $1,000. In Ontario the figure is 36.7 per cent, in the prairie provinces 42.2 per cent and in British Columbia 49.5 per cent.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that with percentages of individuals getting less than $1,000 a year ranging from 36 per cent in Ontario to 54 per cent in the Atlantic provinces we should be worrying about this large sector of the Canadian economy rather than the fortunate Canadian citizens who are able to pay income tax. Let us look at the next group, the families, and I am going to refer to the percentages of families in Canada who are receiving less than $2,000 a year. In the Atlantic provinces 39·8 per cent are receiving less than $2,000 a year. In Quebec the figure is 16·6 per cent, in Ontario 9·8 per cent, in the prairie provinces 17·1 per cent and in British Columbia 17 per cent.

In a country as prosperous as Canada I am sure this is a matter of real concern to the Minister of Finance who should be regarded as the individual who is trying to see that the fiscal policy adopted is such that the 15 million people who live in Canada may have a fair share of the wealth produced by the activity of all our people and that the people in the different regions should, as a result of the fiscal policy, be able to do something about their general position.

In addition to the figures I have given regarding the position of Canadians generally, which I am sure is a very different position from that which the member for Eglinton has in mind, I should like to refer to the Bank of Canada statistical summary for April of this year and in particular to the report on consumer credit outstanding. At the end of the last quarter of 1951 charge accounts in stores stood at $283 million, and at the end of the last quarter of 1955 they were $376 million. Then we come to instalment accounts with retail dealers. For 1951 the figure was $123 million and by the end of the last quarter of 1955 it was up to $377 million. For finance companies this amount has jumped from $186 million to $610 million. Totalling all these, for charge accounts, retail dealers and finance companies the amount has increased from $309 million to $987 million. Those of us who remember the disastrous depression that occurred in the thirties and the crash that occurred in the late twenties should remember that one of the warning signals that was so obvious then was the disturbing increase in credit buying and the percentage of the expendable income that had to go to pay interest on debts which were mounting. The total for these selected items is shown as being $973 million at the end of December, 1951. That figure at the end of 1955 stood at $2,193 million. I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that with this large group of Canadian people who are not getting enough to pay income tax, the minister should not be unduly concerned about the fact that some Canadians are worrying about their corporation profits. The last report on corporation profits that I received from the bureau deals with the last quarter of 1955. It says this:

> Corporation profits after taxes in the fourth quarter of 1955 rose an estimated $153 million or 53 per cent from $291 million in 1954 to $444 million in 1955. Cumulative profits after taxes for the 12 months of 1955 increased an estimated $426 million, or 35 per cent, over the corresponding period of the previous year, from $1,230 million in 1954 to $1,656 million in 1955.

The last taxation statistics supplied by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) give us some interesting tables with regard to Canadians who pay income tax. I wish hon. members would keep in mind these figures which I gave and which show that in the maritime provinces 54 per cent of the individuals received less than $1,000. When it comes to those who pay income tax there is an interesting table showing the breakdown according to occupations. Medical doctors head the list with an average income of $11,200. Consulting engineers come next with $10,200. Lawyers and notaries are down a little bit with $9,900; accountants, $8,000; dentists, $7,400 and so on down the list. At the bottom of the list come nurses with $1,800. If you average out the incomes that are given by those who pay income taxes, you will find an average of $3,143. There is another breakdown giving the percentage of our people in these various categories.

Before the minister hastens to give relief to those who are paying income tax, I think it is imperative that he evolve a fiscal policy so that, some way or other the large number of Canadians who have never paid income tax may be placed in a position where they have ways of spending money so that we do not have in the maritimes, for example, 33 per cent of individuals under $500 and in Quebec 22 per cent under $500. The minister must do something about the situation where 90 farmers out of 100 in Canada do not receive a taxable income. I submit that he has machinery available so that assistance can be given.

I hope he will not take too seriously the 10 suggestions made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming). I was not able to estimate what reduction in the federal revenue would result if these proposals were acted upon. I am not going to make any suggestions to the minister as to where he should cut down. At one point the hon. member for Eglinton complained about the amount of money the people of Canada are paying in taxes. In view of the fact that the official opposition makes that criticism so often and never suggests a five-cent piece that could be saved in connection with the discussion of any particular estimate, I think it is not too constructive to suggest that the people of Canada are complaining about the taxes they are paying. I think the people of Canada want to be satisfied that the taxes they are paying are being spent wisely. I think they want to be satisfied that the old people and the young will get more favourable consideration than they are now receiving. I am not even going to press for the proposal that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has made so frequently, namely that the 3 per cent floor relationship to the deductibility of medical expenses for income tax purposes should be included. This matter has been discussed and while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a very good case, it has been turned down. I am not going to press for this small percentage of Canadian people having relief in this particular connection.

I find that a year ago, when this matter was before us, I made some study of the position of the people who are paying large amounts in corporation taxes and personal income taxes. I find that the taxpayer who has an income of $100,000 a year is really asked to make a substantial payment to the income tax authorities. But I think most people will agree that if you are in that fortunate position where you have a taxable income of $100,000, you would not worry so much about how much you had to pay so long as you had a sizeable amount left. It appears to me that with $163 per day for 300 days in the year left for yourself, you should not complain too much. I find that a taxpayer who has an income of $200,000 a year, although he pays a large amount in dollars, has left $261 a day. I find that a taxpayer in a higher bracket still, one with $400,000 a year income, has left $419.38 per day. I therefore submit that, in planning for the future, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) should keep in mind the fact that no nation can long survive with one group of people as prosperous as are one section of the Canadian people while such a large number of the Canadian people have not been able to get in a position—as single people or as married individuals—where they are able to pay income tax of any sizeable amount.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take much time on the bill that is before us, but I think there are some things that ought to be said at this stage in the hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) will give them his earnest consideration and that perhaps, by the time we get to the discussion of the bill in committee, he will be prepared to give consideration to one or two proposals that I intend to make. I am glad to have the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) here to hear what I have to say on one feature of the bill because he is charged with the responsibility of administering the Income Tax Act while the minister is charged with the responsibility of dealing with financial policy as reflected in it. Now, I do not wish in anything I say to cast a reflection on either minister, but I am going to be somewhat critical of the attitude of some of the people who do administer the act. I am going to speak now in general terms.

This Bill No. 418, as I see it, is divided into two main parts. As I look at them, there are the general provisions that are there for the purpose of giving relief, if we wish to put it that way, to certain groups of taxpayers in this country, or perhaps it would be better to say to make the Income Tax Act in its application generally more fair. I think that the Income Tax Act is the fairest tax vehicle we have. I think the income tax itself is the fairest tax because it can be applied specifically according to ability to pay and it does not place a heavy burden or a heavier burden upon the poor than upon the rich, not by any means. It is one tax that is hard to hand on. For that reason I support the idea of the income tax, but I do think that all our efforts should be directed towards making its application as fair and just as can possibly be.

Unfortunately, I think that is not done in many instances today. I refer now particularly to the administration of the Income Tax Act, particularly in relation to the farmer taxpayer. I am not going to criticize for a moment some of the things that have already been discussed in this house in another debate such as the net worth statement and all that sort of thing. I am going to talk about the habit of the income tax department of leaving assessments too long and then expecting the farmer taxpayer to feel happy about having to dig up three or four times the amount of tax he thinks he ought to have to pay, and on top of that a penalty or penalties and then to try to put him out of business because he cannot pay immediately when the demand is made.

I have in mind as an illustration of the thing against which I am complaining, the case of a farmer in western Canada who very faithfully, year after year, put in his income tax returns. He thought, according to his own best calculations, he was paying fair taxes. This went on for years without any complaints or amended assessments coming in from the income tax branch. After several years this man was stunned, almost, to receive from the department of income tax a demand for a very large sum of back taxes. They sent inspectors in to see him. They went over his books most carefully and they did not charge him with having wilfully neglected to pay his fair taxes. They did not suggest at any time the man had withheld taxes. But what they did do was to go back over quite a period of years and assess this man $30,000 of extra taxes, and penalties on top of it, for not having paid.

This man finally said, "Well, all I can do is try to liquidate some of my assets in order to pay." He did start to liquidate and he reduced the arrears and at the same time kept up his current taxes, by something like $18,000. Then, suddenly the department placed the matter in the hands of the exchequer court and got a judgment against him, in spite of the fact every year he had paid $3,000 or $4,000 on these arrears in addition to his current taxes. The exchequer court ruled in favour of the income tax branch and handed down a judgment against the taxpayer. While it is true that they have not yet asked the sheriff to execute the judgment by means of seizures, yet that judgment is hanging over the taxpayer's head. He is not in a position at the moment to liquidate some of his assets because they are tied up in very large holdings and large holdings just do not sell every day or sell easily without being sold at a sacrifice price. The branch, however, is hounding the man and threatening to have the sheriff make a seizure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment that is not justice. The man is doing all he can. It has not been proven at any stage that he has wilfully or deliberately attempted to defraud the government of taxes. He is paying as much as he can. He has offered to continue reducing the liability by $3,000 or $4,000 each year in addition to his current taxes, to get it cleaned up. But no, sir, what they want to do is kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. They want to destroy his chance of paying that off by forcing him to sell his assets now at a sacrifice price. This does not give him a chance at all to pay off and to stay in business so he will continue to be a taxpayer. I have seen not only this case but other similar cases and they do not spell justice. It looks to me as though it is shortsightedness on the part of the officials. I am sure that this case would not be brought to the attention of the minister. I believe that if it were he would take steps to have it corrected. But when we are dealing with the income tax people in these cases they say to us: Now look, we would like to be able to do something on this but we are bound by the act and the regulations under it. This is quite true; they are helpless.

I am, therefore, going to appeal in a general way, not on a specific case but in a general way, to the minister. While we are amending the Income Tax Act, let us make certain that we are doing it in such a manner that the administration of the act can be just to every section of Canadian society. I think that is our responsibility. I think we should always keep in mind that it is far better to have a taxpayer in business continuing to pay taxes than to force him out of business through seizures, judgments and whatnot, and perhaps prevent him from continuing to be a taxpayer. This does not help our situation in Canada one particle. It just shows the rigidity and inhumanity of some of our income tax regulations and the terms of the act. I am going to leave it at that for the moment with the appeal that the government give very serious consideration to that sort of thing to see if they cannot bring in changes in the administration of the act so we can find justice.

The second part of the act in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, is one which permits the federal government to enter into their proposed new tax transfer agreements with the provinces. Those have been negotiated now for quite some time. We think that there are several clauses which should be written in much more general terms than they are. I realize that I would be out of order in referring to specific clauses, and I do not intend to, but in a general way, in this part of the act we think that there are several clauses that are now written in such rigid terms as to hamstring the provinces in their negotiations with the federal government. In view of the fact that no definite arrangements have yet been arrived at between the provinces and the dominion as to these tax transfer arrangements, it looks to me as though—

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, may I just interrupt my hon. friend for a moment. It was not our intention to proceed with any of those clauses dealing with that particular problem until later.

Mr. Low: I am glad to have that assurance; it just bears out what I was going to say by way of conclusion to this part of my remarks. If you did proceed with them as they are presently written then it might be necessary for the government to come back with another bill amending the Income Tax Act, because the provinces may not agree to the terms under which they are at present written. I just draw that to the attention of the minister for the moment and ask him and his colleagues to look it over most carefully, especially sections 8 and 9, and see if it would not be possible either to leave them over until after the dominion-provincial conference is held or to write them in much more general terms in order to make provision for any changes that might take place in the negotiations when the provinces and the dominion get together.

Aside from those things, Mr. Speaker, I have little which I think should be said at this time.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on second reading of this bill but a few things have come up during the course of this debate on which I should like to comment.

In the first place I should say that under date of June 14, when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) introduced his estimates in this house, I made some remarks which grew out of representations made in the estimates committee and at that time in commenting on my remarks the Minister of National Revenue told me that I appeared to be in the right church but was probably in the wrong pew. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest I am probably in the right pew tonight and I would like to say my prayers all over again, if I may.

There are a few matters on which I should like to remark. First of all I would like to support the plea made by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) on behalf of self-employed persons who contribute to pension funds on their own behalf. In that regard I draw attention not only to those persons who are in one of the recognized professions but also to those persons who are engaged in business on their own behalf or in partnership. I would like to draw attention to the fact that frequently these people, under extreme hardship to themselves, manage to make contributions to a recognized pension scheme, a scheme which would ordinarily be recognized by the government, had they been employed by others, as an approved or accepted pension scheme or, in the terms of the new bill which is before us, a registered pension scheme and would probably be permitted to deduct from their taxable income the contributions which they make toward the annuity or pension they hope to receive when they are past earning years.

These people have no such relief under the law and I think I could do no better than to refer the minister again to the remarks made by the hon. member for Eglinton and to those which I made previously on the estimates of the Minister of National Revenue and to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) to seriously consider this matter. It is a matter with which I am sure he is familiar; he has had representations made to him by the Canadian tax foundation, the bar association and others, and I trust it will not be too long before he will recognize the just claim of these people.

In the case of consideration of tax returns and appeals made from the assessments pertinent thereto by the income tax department, there are many things that attract the attention of taxpayers.

I recall late last autumn—I think it was in November—reading of a case which had come before the income tax appeal board where a man had supported his mother who was a semi-invalid and had claimed, because of supporting her in a self-contained domestic establishment, the usual $2,000 tax exemption. Then he married and his wife came to live with him and his mother continued to live there and because of the mother's delicate condition of health the wife continued her employment. What transpired was really something that should attract the attention of the Department of Finance because apparently it does not attract the attention of the Department of National Revenue.

This case came before Mr. Commissioner Fisher and in his judgment he pointed out that before marriage the man had been entitled to an exemption on taxable income of $2,000 and his fiancee on her own account had been entitled to an exemption of $1,000. However, after marriage although the wife was still entitled to an exemption of $1,000 by reason of earning more than her statutory exemption, the husband was allowed an exemption of only $1,400. In other words, he was exactly in the same position. He was supporting his mother in the same domestic establishment but his statutory exemption for her was automatically cut from $2,000 to $1,400.

In his judgment Mr. Fisher explained that that is the situation which prevails according to the provisions of the law. Mr. Fisher dwelt upon this matter at some length and pointed out that the evidence showed the man was in receipt of a very modest income and in his unmarried state he came under a section of the Income Tax Act—and I am quoting from a portion of Mr. Fisher's judgment—which says:

> . . . $2,000 may be deducted by a taxpayer who is: "An unmarried person or a married person not supporting his spouse who maintained a self-contained domestic establishment and actually supported therein a person wholly dependent upon him and connected with him by blood relationship or marriage or adoption."

However, his status changed immediately when he married and instead of having some provision for the income which his wife would have to her credit he found his own statutory exemption was cut by $600.

Then time went on and the mother suffered a severe stroke which left her partly paralysed. The medical expenses mounted and finally they came to the place where, far from the husband supporting his wife, the wife was contributing to the support of her husband and his mother by reason of the illness. Therefore, in his 1953 income tax return this clerk—for such he was—claimed he was not supporting his wife, that she was in fact partly supporting him and therefore he was entitled to the $2,000 deduction. She was paying for the clothes, lodging and food for both but no relief could be given under the act. A report of this judgment appeared in the newspapers and the headline which drew attention to it read, "Couple better off unwed, admits tax board."

Had this woman gone to live with this man in a common-law union and had he continued to support his mother as he had before, he would have been able to claim $2,000 exemption, she could have claimed $1,000 exemption and they would not have suffered financially. But that is not the way we live in Canada. We have respect for our institutions and we have respect for the sanctity of human relations. It seems to me that it is a sorry condition which imposes a penalty on people for observing the moral status which we hope is incumbent upon all of us. I ask the minister to consider the situation which produces these results.

Speaking of marital relations, I should like to refer once more to a matter which was raised earlier this evening by the hon. member for Eglinton, who brought to light again a matter which I brought before this house on June 14 and previously in the committee. This case is known as No. 289 and was heard by the income tax appeal board. It had to do with the payment of alimony by a taxpayer in Ontario under a judgment by the court for the payment of a specific sum. I do not think I can do better than read into the record the words which I read previously. Inasmuch as the current bill gives no recognition to this problem I am taking the liberty of putting these words once more on the record. In giving his judgment Mr. Fordham had this to say:

> Much to the taxpayer's surprise, however, the minister disallowed such deductions—

That is, alimony deductions.

> —and ruled that they did not come within the purview of the provision set out above.

That was under section 11 (1) (j).

> At the hearing, it became plain that this was because the word "alimony" did not appear after "divorce" in the fourth line of paragraph (j) above. An appeal to the board duly followed.

Then the pertinent words are the following:

> The matter reveals for the first time, where the board is concerned, what appears to be a remarkable and unfortunate oversight or omission in the drafting of the foregoing enactment. Although alimony, as such, is clearly deductible by the payer when a court has made an award of alimony in a decree, order or judgment for divorce, or a husband and wife have executed a separation agreement providing for the payment of alimony, subsection (1) (j) does not take cognizance of an action for alimony alone. No reference to such a proceeding is to be found in its wording. Hence, the unfortunate appellant cannot have the relief that is ordinarily afforded to those obligated to pay alimony periodically. The words "judicial separation" do not assist him, as the Ontario courts are without jurisdiction to entertain actions for judicial separation.

I am not a lawyer and I recall quite well that when I quoted those words previously the minister expressed some surprise and shook his head at hearing my quotation. However, I have inquired into the matter since then and I understand that there is no such thing legally as a judicial separation in the courts of Ontario. I thought that probably somebody had made a mistake when the minister shook his head on the previous occasion and I tried to find out just what the situation was. The legal niceties escape me, I admit, but I find that Mr. Fordham was quite correct and that there is actually no such thing in Ontario.

It would seem to me that in the drafting of this act those who had charge of the wording overlooked the fact that Ontario was in this position. It seems to me that because of that persons in Ontario who are caught under these provisions are at a disadvantage as compared with persons in other provinces. I once more ask the minister if he will please do something about this situation. It seems to me to be grossly unfair that a man who accepts responsibility of caring for the family he has undertaken to care for should not have the advantage of deducting from his taxable income the money which he expends in this way. Those persons who go through the normal course of divorce proceedings and are thereby free to engage in other marital connections in the future are placed in a different position from this woman, who has no desire to do other than live apart and is thus circumscribed by the law from having the advantage of deducting for income tax purposes her living expenses.

There are a couple of other things which I feel constrained to put before the house on this occasion because previously I inadvertently got into the wrong pew. One is the matter of rental income which accrues to the benefit of an individual through the hands of an executor or trustee. Once more I bring this matter to the attention of the minister and the house because it is only a short time ago that the minister in bringing down some of his regulations—it escapes me whether it was in the budget or subsequently—exempted from surtax on investment income revenue derived from rental property. Under the conditions set out for estates and trusts in the T3 form under the section headed "Tax on Income in Hands of Executor or Trustee" appears a note reading as follows:

> Rental income from real property and income from a business or farm operated by the executor or trustee are not subject to surtax in his hands.

Yet when these funds eventually are reported by the beneficiary as income he pays a surtax as investment income, largely by reason of the fact that there is no other place to record this income on the ordinary T1 form other than income received as investment income from estates and trusts.

As I said on a former occasion, the courts have several times, and almost invariably, ruled that income should not change its character by reason of passing from a source through a trustee to a beneficiary. Yet under our own income tax law, regardless of the law set out, the regulations in effect in the income tax department prohibit the taxpayer from claiming this income as earned income despite the fact that persons who have rental income on their own account and who receive it first-hand are able to claim it as earned income.

I recognize that this is a fairly recent concession of the department, that is, the concession given to the individual to claim rental income as earned income, and it may mean that the minister has not yet got around to allowing this same concession where the funds come to the individual through an estate or trust. But once more—this time I am in the right pew—I ask the minister to seriously consider this matter and to bring in the necessary amendment to the act if it requires that or, if not—and the latter is my view—simply instruct the department to make the necessary correction to the T1 form, which will place the income from revenue, even though coming to the taxpayer through an estate or trust, in the earned income bracket.

I suggest to the minister that it is as simple as that: a change in the printing of the T1 form. I do not believe it is a matter that requires an amendment to the act. The minister himself brought in this amendment a few years ago, and I think it is merely an oversight that could be readily rectified by changing the T3 and T1 forms so that the two categories of income, that is, from dividends or other investments and from rental income, be reported separately and be reported by the ultimate beneficiary in two separate brackets on his own income tax return. I ask the minister seriously if he will look into that matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) will permit me, I should like to ask the house for a little assistance. We are on the second reading of a bill and we are supposed to be discussing the principle of the bill. I realize that this bill is a collection of disconnected amendments dealing with such subjects as railway companies, oil companies, solicitor-client privilege, pensions funds and so on, and may not be said to have any specific principle, but I must ask the house not to use this bill as a vehicle for every conceivable form of criticism or suggestion of and to the Departments of National Revenue and Finance, because there are a great many aspects of our taxation which are not included in this bill. The last thing I want to do is to make it difficult for any member to put forward his views, but I think perhaps at this time I should say that there may come a time when it will be necessary to say, "That is a little beyond the scope of this bill."

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): I think it has been the custom of those who have preceded me to talk not about the particular clauses in this bill but about the particular clauses which are not in this bill and which should be. Before you pronounced your admonition, Mr. Speaker, I was going to do the same thing. I think I shall venture, in view of your kind remarks at the conclusion, to do just that, and I hope that the warning will have some effect upon my more immediate or less immediate neighbours. Of course, one has to draw the line somewhere.

There are one or two things about which I am disappointed in this act in that they are not mentioned in the act. One has to do with charitable donations. I think that what I am going to speak about can be defined as charitable donations. This is perhaps particularly applicable to my own province of Saskatchewan, where we at least think, whatever may be the opinion of those in other provinces, that we have adhered to our program of humanities first and that we are in the lead in proportion to our population in the providing of decent living conditions for our older citizens. To do that costs money. We have to receive gifts—and I consider them charitable donations—in order to get the first payment for these propositions. Service clubs, churches and people who interest themselves in this sort of thing go out and ask people for money. The very first question they are asked is, "Are these payments deductible as charitable donations?" We have to tell them that under the present law they are not.

I was very much astonished that when this was mentioned the other day here in the house, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott)—I hope he did not mean it; I hope he was joking—said, "Why don't you just give it as a church subscription, and then it would be automatically deducted." As far as I am concerned, for me to do that would be dishonest. I do not know what it would be for my hon. friend. If I give a donation on the basis of a private payment for the building of an old people's home, I do not think that that is, after all, a church subscription. I know that that sort of thing is done. However, I have said enough about that, but I think that those payments should be deductible. I cannot see any difference between those and regular charitable donations.

Another matter about which I should like to say a word is the ceiling upon the old age pension payments. Of course, members and, I think, most of the public, are aware that we have to pay extra tax, as we should, to provide ourselves and others with old age pensions: 2 per cent extra on the taxable income. In other words, if I have a taxable income of $1,000, I pay 2 per cent extra or $20 extra for old age pension purposes. If I have $2,000 income, I pay 2 per cent or $40. If I have $3,000 taxable income, I pay 2 per cent extra or $60. But then—and it is a strange thing to me—at that point the schedule ceases to exist. From then on, irrespective of the size of my taxable income, I pay $60 only.

To me there is no justice in that; there could not be to one who thinks of things as I do. If a man has a taxable income of $10,000 or $15,000, he has to contribute only $60 from the wealth with which he has been blessed to help pay for the pensions of those who are not so able. I think something should be done about that. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris) should let that scale slide. I am thinking of a sliding scale. Let it slide. Let it keep on sliding.

Another thing I want to bring up is the matter of corporation profits. I have to confess to having two small investments in Canadian corporations and they bring me in a total of approximately $40 a year. I discover that at the end of the year I am allowed to deduct one-fifth of that $40 not from the amount of money upon which my income tax is based, but from the actual tax itself after the tax is computed. I can see no reason or justice in that. I can see no reason why I should be allowed to deduct $8 from the actual amount of tax which I otherwise would have had to pay if I did not have these investments. I know that what I am going to say now has been disputed. I do not think it has been disputed in this house because I know it can not be disputed. I do not know what the exact figures are but let us say that a man has an income somewhere between $10,000 and $11,000. I see the minister is getting ready to interrupt. He has heard this mathematical formula before.

Mr. McCann: We have heard it every year.

Mr. Knight: You are going to hear it a lot more and as far as I am concerned the people throughout the country are going to keep on hearing it too. May I say to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) that audiences are so aghast when they hear this that they simply do not believe that even this Liberal government could perpetrate such a thing.

Mr. Argue: They will from now on.

Mr. Knight: It is a fact that if a man is working as a doctor, a top mechanic or whatever you like, earns somewhere between $10,000 and $11,000 by so working and has a wife and a couple of children if he is a normal man, he discovers that he has to pay income tax of about $1,600. I say "about". I am getting away from pure mathematics. But if that same man were in the position where he had never done a tap of work in his life but had an income of between $10,000 and $11,000 a year from investments in Canadian corporations his income tax would be exactly nil. That is a word that has been introduced by the member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and this is another nil. The amount of income tax he would pay would be exactly nil except for the aforesaid $60 that he would have to pay on account of the old age pension. If the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue, who was good enough to interject, can deny that statement, let them get up and deny it now.

Mr. McCann: Do you take into account that the income he has has probably come from corporations which pay 47 per cent on it before he ever gets it?

Mr. Knight: I am very well aware of the argument that the corporation funds have already been taxed in the hands of the corporation. That is that old thing I have heard so often before.

Mr. McCann: So is yours old.

Mr. Knight: The minister will tell me that it is double taxation but the government is not so particular about double taxation being perpetrated in certain other directions which, if I had the time, I could mention here. But what I have stated is largely, if not mathematically, accurate and true. It is true, and to me it is a disgrace and a blot on our national life. Any government that can perpetrate that sort of thing or that would believe that sort of thing is right has an attitude towards things and people in which I cannot share. I know the argument is put forward that we want to encourage Canadian investment. There are other ways. We do not have to encourage it to that extent, to that degree or by that method.

As I have said, the people do not believe it. I said it once before in an election campaign and somebody wrote a letter to the Star-Phoenix and said: "This man Knight should not be allowed to go around telling lies. The thing is impossible, the thing is ridiculous. Of course anybody with an income of $10,000 has to pay a proportionate amount to the national treasury." Well, I countered that statement. I took an income tax form and went down to my hon. friend's department. I told them that I wanted the income tax form filled out in the name of Brown, Smith, Jones or whatever you like. They said, "What are the conditions?" I gave them the conditions. I gave them a hypothetical case. I put the income at $11,000 or $12,000 and said that the man had a wife and two children and was such and such an age. I told them I wanted to know what his income tax would be.

They asked from where the man derived his income. I gave them the names of certain Canadian corporations. I said, "I want you to fill that out and fill it out right because I am going to ask you to sign it when you have finished." The man laughed. I presume he knew what I was after. However, he did his work. I will say that for him. He filled it out and he said that the man would ordinarily pay income tax of $1,600 or $1,700 but because of the fact that he derived his income from dividends from Canadian corporations solely the only thing he would have to pay would be $60 towards the old age pension inasmuch he would have an exemption of 20 per cent or $2,000 on the $10,000 he received in dividends. I said, "Would you please fill that out and sign it?" He did so. I then went and took a quarter page in the paper as a paid advertisement, and they did not call me a liar after that.

I suggest that the minister look into that matter. It is iniquitous, unfair and unjust, no matter how you look at it. The Minister of National Revenue was talking about double taxation. I wish we could get some proper definition of what they are now beginning to call under the act, and I am referring to the act, "registered pension funds" because there is a considerable amount of confusion in that regard. I receive letters about it all the time and I am sure that other members do too. Let us take what used to be my own profession, teaching. Here we have a superannuation fund which we create. The province of Saskatchewan puts in so much, we put in so much and so on, and after a while you get a pension. In their innocence these people said that it would be fine if anybody wanted to pay in more than the amount that was called for. It would be a form of extra saving, and a lot of people put in a little extra money, $1,000 or $1,500, over the course of a good many years. But when they come to take the money out it is a different proposition. You take it out and you pay income tax on it.

We paid income tax on the money as we earned it, but when we put it in the fund it suddenly became engulfed in this lack of definition of what is properly a registered pension fund. Is it a savings bank? Is it a benevolent society, or what is it? Before we are through it may be a small loan company. At any rate, there is some doubt about the matter. When you go to take out your money and get back the money you put in you are told you have to pay income tax on it for the second time. That is what I meant when I reminded the Minister of National Revenue that in some cases they do not worry too much about double taxation.

The same question has arisen with regard to other provisions and other societies of one sort and another. I think the last letter I had was from a group of firemen in the city of Saskatoon. Because of some little technicality the department had decided that they were not operating what is called a registered pension fund.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) referred to the need of people who do not pay income tax at all. I should like to say a word or two on behalf of those who have sufficient income to just pay income tax, and I shall be brief. I do not want to shut somebody else off. I shall simply say that I think these income tax exemptions should be raised in view of our present prosperity. We hear a great deal about it from the government side. We hear about the increase in the gross national product, how well we are doing, how our surpluses are climbing. I think this is probably a direction in which these smaller people should get some help. I am all for the income tax. I think it is a good, fair and just method of taxation. However, I think there are some people now paying income tax who should not be paying it at all.

There is another thing I wish to mention and with this I conclude. I hope that this bill will provide for this point. The minister can inform me whether or not it does so. I am thinking particularly of farmers. I am not so clear about the matter of labour unions. I have not studied the matter. I am thinking of the business of conventions. Certainly I think that people who are gathered together in farm unions should be allowed to deduct the expenses of their conventions. I see the minister nodding his head although that does not appear in Hansard. I am asking the minister now whether it is true that, by a clause in this bill, from now on those farmers who attend farm union conventions will be allowed to deduct their expenses for income tax purposes?

Mr. Harris: There is one provision which may not be as wide as my hon. friend has suggested. However, there is a provision. We can discuss it in committee of the whole.

Mr. Knight: When we come to committee of the whole I also want to ask my hon. friend what the situation is with regard to labour unions in the matter of attending conventions. I want to know whether that will come under the same heading.

Mr. Harris: It does.

Mr. Knight: With those few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I think I will leave the matter until the committee stage.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to remain within the confines of this bill. Although you may think that I am somewhat remotely within the confines of it, I think that I am within the terms of the bill, at least as much as were some hon. members who have spoken previously. I was afraid that my friend the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight), having been a high school principal for many years and being an educationalist, was perhaps going to steal or, shall I say,—

Mr. Argue: Borrow?

Mr. Hansell: —expropriate some of my material.

Mr. Argue: He wants good material.

Mr. Hansell: I want to bring to the minister's attention something that is lacking in respect of this income tax bill. After all, we always have an income tax bill which in the main revamps the income tax system of the country. I refer now to the fact that there is no exemption whatsoever for the taxpayer who supports a son or daughter who is going to university. A change was made in the Income Tax Act some years ago and at that time I was certainly under the impression that exemptions were allowed on behalf of income tax payers who supported their young people as they went through university. However, my eyes were opened when I found that it was necessary for me to support my young lad. It is a strange thing to me that this matter has escaped me over the years but, according to the Income Tax Act, if an income tax payer claims exemption for himself and his wife, he cannot claim exemption for a son or a daughter who is dependent upon him for his or her university education. To me that is a serious matter. A farmer, for instance, might raise hogs, cattle or something else. He is allowed to write off certain operating expenses as he raises those hogs and cattle. But here is a man who raises a family. It is granted that he gets the family allowance while his children are young. But the moment they come of age where they wear bigger shoes, eat like a horse, wear men's clothes and when the young daughters are obliged to wear more expensive clothes, he cannot claim exemption for them. It is all right if they are forced onto the labour market and earn their own living, but if they want to go forward to a higher school of learning such as a university and prepare to be an engineer or a doctor, the old man must foot the bill. I maintain that is not fair or right. I assert that the Income Tax Act should be amended in order to allow an exemption for a young man or a young woman going to university. Otherwise only the people who are in the higher income brackets will be able to afford to put their young people through university. People with moderate incomes just cannot afford to put a young man or young woman through university.

I calculate that it takes about $1,000 a year, even though the young man or the young woman may earn a certain amount of money during summer vacations. It costs a great deal to put a young man or young woman through university. There is the matter of clothes to wear and certain upkeep including board, fraternity fees, tuition and books. It costs a great deal of money. As a matter of fact, if the young person is not earning an income, we are allowed $400 exemption for him or her but we are allowed that anyway when they get to a certain age, provided they are still going to school. But as soon as they graduate from high school and want to go to university we are then allowed the same exemption of only $400. That simply means this, Mr. Speaker. As soon as they arrive at the age where they are able to go to university, then there is no exemption from the income tax at all and no assistance whatsoever. I believe that the minister should take that matter into consideration and permit the $1,000 income tax exemption that is allowed. Here is where the discrepancy comes in. If a man does not have a wife, and manages to get along without one, he can send his boy to university and claim $1,000 exemption.

Mr. McCann: Where would he get the boy if he has no wife?

Mr. Hansell: But if he is married and has a wife to look after the home, he cannot claim that exemption. If he has a housekeeper to look after his home, he can claim exemption for her if he happens to be a widower, but he cannot claim exemption for his son. You cannot claim more than $1,000 for either a wife, a housekeeper or a son or daughter who is going to university. Now, that seems to me to be unfair. It seems to me to be ridiculous. I would ask the minister to give some real consideration to the amendment of the Income Tax Act so that some further exemption could be allowed to the people who are putting their sons and daughters through university.

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): The minister whose bill we are discussing has been quite frank in his acknowledgement about the rate of income tax and taxation generally in Canada. He, like everyone else, appreciates that we are living in an age of high taxation and has expressed himself from time to time as being concerned with relief from that high rate of taxation. He is equally frank, I think, in introducing this bill by saying that this does not to any extent relieve the Canadian payers of income tax from taxation. I think the major relief from taxation referred to in the budget is in another field.

Now, the problem of the rate of taxation is one that is frequently discussed and presented to the government. I think the words used by the Canadian Tax Foundation express about as succinctly as possible what I have in mind. They say:

> The growth of social welfare expenses and defence spending has brought about in the past 15 years an unprecedented level of expenditures in relation to national income, and rates of taxation are very high today by previous peacetime standards.

Now, that is undoubtedly so, and apparently in the view of the government is to remain so at least for another year. In bringing in a bill of this kind it seems to me that, without dealing with the rate of taxation at great length or without dealing with the rate at all, there are a number of amendments by way of exemption and alteration which could be made which would improve the taxation system and give an incentive here and a disincentive, if I may use such a horrible word, in other places, or increase the social justice, if you like, of the tax system. I suppose the minister, in bringing forward most of these amendments, is making some corrections of one kind or another, removing an anomaly here and giving an incentive there. From that point of view one cannot complain too greatly about the contents of the bill. As has been said by other speakers, the complaint is rather about what is omitted from than what is contained in the bill. There are a great many moderate incentive provisions which have been suggested from time to time, which would not be costly and which would not affect the over-all rates but would achieve a very definite end in themselves.

I know this applies not only to the field of trade and commerce in the broad sense, that is the economy in the sense of its industrial progress, but also in the personal field to the individual in his daily occupation. We have had two or three specific examples of the kind of thing that might have been considered. I realize that the use of the income tax in the larger field of providing incentive in trade is a very important one and could be the subject of a very lengthy debate. I think, however, perhaps this is not the appropriate bill upon which to enter that field. I just illustrate the kind of thing I mean by drawing the minister's attention to the effect of taxation in certain fields as presented by the tax foundation recently in making a presentation to the royal commission. They dealt with the effect of taxation on the development of natural resources, for example; on fixed capital expenditure; on exports and so on over the broad field of the economy. As I say, that might better be discussed at another time, although it is of prime importance and deserves the attention of this house, particularly in some of the fields which have been brought to the attention of the house this session. For example, there is the encouragement of Canadians to invest on equal terms with foreign investors in the development of their own country.

I shall refer briefly to the incentives which affect the individual more directly, two or three of them. Before giving an example of that, I should like to say that this bill might very properly be brought before a committee because there are a good many minor matters which will only be incorporated in legislation of this kind and discussed fully in a special committee such as the committee on banking and commerce. There is not much opportunity in the committee of the whole house to move minor amendments to try to patch up various inconsistencies and injustices of the present tax law. The suggestion which has been made to refer the bill to a committee seems to me to have a great deal of merit, just to deal with what I might call incidentals, odds and ends of amendments which have escaped the minister's attention.

The first example I wish to bring to his attention is that of the allowance made for children. There is a case where our tax system seems to compare unfavourably with tax systems elsewhere. As recently as last May a public comparison was made of our attitude in this respect with that of the United Kingdom as shown by the new income tax tables made effective in Britain at that time. When compared to those in this country they showed that although income taxes are higher there than they are here, they grant much more consideration to parents than Canadian income tax laws do.

The Globe and Mail of May 4, in its editorial, had this to say in one paragraph:

> Taking family allowances (paid in both countries) into account, it can be seen that at every level from $2,000 a year—$40 a week—up, British parents enjoy a substantially greater advantage in relation to non-parents than do their Canadian counterparts. Westminster, in short, would appear to have more respect for the family life, and its accompanying expenses, than Ottawa.

An example of that, I think, is the way allowances for children and the family allowance can operate where a child is born towards the end of the year. A father who pays taxes and has been blessed with another child in December is allowed the exemption of $150 from his taxable income.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Michener: Since I cannot conclude now, I shall continue at another time.

Mr. Harris: May I interrupt? I had hoped we would be able to finish second reading tonight. If my hon. friend was not going to be too long, and he never is, I wonder if we could let him continue and then dispose of the motion.

Mr. Barnett: I do not want to hold up the bill, but I did have a few things I wished to say on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Harris: Well, I did not realize my hon. friend had anything to add. Would it not be possible for him to say what he has to say tonight?

Mr. Barnett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not care whether I say it now or at the committee stage but my only concern is whether I might be ruled out of order at the committee stage in what I had to say.

Mr. Harris: Well, we will try it at the committee stage then.

Mr. Barnett: If the minister gave us a certain latitude on clause 1 I would be glad to make my comments there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Michener: My remarks could be deferred until the first clause is considered in committee and I would be content. I do not wish to become the cause for holding a lot of members beyond the normal hour. If the minister would be satisfied with that, I could say what I have to say just as well on the first item.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, there is no nominal first item here, as everyone knows, but I think we could agree at this time that when the bill is in committee of the whole we should hear the hon. member for St. Paul's and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

On clause 1—

The Chairman: Shall this clause carry?

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

EGGS—IMPORTS FROM POLAND

Question No. 522—Mr. Dufresne:

1. Was a quantity of eggs recently received in Montreal from Poland?
2. If so, from what place in Poland and what was the exact quantity?
3. What is the point of destination for this shipment?
4. What price was paid?
5. By whom were such eggs bought?
6. Who issued the import permit or permits and on what dates?
7. To what company or companies?
8. What company or companies purchased such eggs, and who are the directors of such company or companies?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

1. The latest figures available from the bureau of statistics are up to April 30, 1956, and they have no information of such a shipment. We learn from the trade, however, that there was a shipment of 10,000 cases imported from Poland.

2. No information.

3. Unloaded at Montreal.

4 and 5. Information not available.

6. No import permit required.

7. It is not customary to reveal the details of a private business transaction where no government funds are involved.

8. Answered by No. 7.

EGGS—IMPORTS FROM COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Question No. 534—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many cases of eggs have been imported from the U.S.S.R., Poland, Czechoslovakia or other countries behind the iron curtain, year by year, since the 1st day of January, 1951?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

January 1, 1951, to April 30, 1956—none. Statistics not yet available for the month of May. It has been ascertained from the trade, however, that a shipment of 10,000 cases were imported from Poland during the month of May.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 4, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Second and final report of standing committee on external affairs.—Mr. Boisvert.

STARRED QUESTION

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION—F. P. BRAIS, Q.C.

Question No. 57—Mr. Fulton:

1. Did the Department of Citizenship and Immigration or any other department or agency of the government retain Mr. F. P. Brais, Q.C., to investigate and/or prosecute cases of wrongdoing in connection with the admission of immigrants from Italy or elsewhere?
2. If so, when was he first retained, and how long did his services continue?
3. What is the full amount of his daily retainer, and what total has been paid over to him during this period?
4. What have been the results to date in terms of numbers of (a) prosecutions; (b) convictions; (c) acquittals; (d) discharges from government service, and what were the names and positions of the persons proceeded against or discharged in each case?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is that the services of Hon. F. P. Brais, Q.C., were retained by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) for the purpose of counselling in prosecutions in Montreal in connection with the admission of Italian immigrants to Canada.

The answer to the second part is that the services of Mr. Brais were retained in November, 1954, and are still continuing.

The answer to the third part is that the question of payment of accounts is one which is of special interest to the Minister of Justice, and I imagine also to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Harris). It can be mentioned, however, that no account has been submitted as yet by Mr. Brais and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration will know how much is payable to Mr. Brais only after his account has been received and taxed in the Department of Justice.

The answer to the fourth part is that Mr. B. A. Corbo and Mr. M. E. Lattoni were charged and the preliminary hearing was held in Montreal over a period of more than 12 days. The hearing will be resumed in September, 1956, and the department has now completed its case at this hearing.

There was some additional information about this matter given to the committee on estimates which will be found in the minutes of proceedings of the committee for last year.

Mr. Dufresne: Does the minister mean to say that Mr. Brais has not rendered any account to the department since 1954?

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer is that in respect to this matter about which I am answering the question there has been no account received from Mr. Brais.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FEDERAL SUBSIDY PAYMENTS TO INDUSTRIES

Question No. 536—Mr. Thatcher:

1. During the past fiscal year, what was the total amount of money paid out by the federal government in grants or subsidies to all industries, including agriculture?
2. What was the amount of each subsidy or grant, and the specific purpose thereof?

FEDERAL LOANS

Question No. 540—Mr. Thatcher:

1. What federal departments, branches, boards and agencies grant loans?
2. To what particular category of Canadians does each loan money?
3. How much money was loaned by each such department, branch, board and agency during the past fiscal year?
4. What was the profit or loss to each of them during the past fiscal year?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

POST OFFICE, FOXDALE, SASK.

Motion No. 86—Mr. Diefenbaker:

For a copy of all letters and telegrams since 1st January, 1955, which passed between the Postmaster General and any person or persons regarding the change in the location of the post office at Foxdale, Saskatchewan, and the appointment of a postmaster.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: On resolution 92, the Department of External Affairs. Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, I should have corrected Hansard, but in fact I did not say "External Affairs" last evening. I said "Secretary of State."

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

407. Departmental administration, $244,775.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find this vote on page 66 of the blue book of estimates. Shall this item carry?

Mr. Pallett: The Secretary of State has tabled a report in accordance with the custom, which report is effective March 31, 1955. Before we get into the estimates, I wonder whether the minister would bring us up to date with the report as of March 31, 1956, so that we may have the current position of the department to deal with.

Mr. Pinard: I have here the page proofs of the report as of March 31, 1956, but it has not been tabled yet. I cannot possibly give my hon. friend all the information contained in it. It has not been tabled yet.

Mr. Dufresne: Why not postpone study of the estimates until we have the information we need?

Mr. Pallett: It is rather difficult to deal with a department without having obtained the particular information in respect to each section of it before we come into the house, the only information we have being based on figures in a report over a year old. In the course of the discussion of the estimates, any statements we make may be predicted on this report that is a year old, and anything that is out of line must have the sympathy of the house in that regard. Surely the minister might be able to make at least an oral statement if he is unable to offer a written one, so as to bring us up to date on the general picture of his department before we begin study of the estimates.

Mr. Pinard: This is not a department where there can be very serious changes in policy. If there is any information additional to what is contained in the report already tabled that my hon. friend would like to obtain, I would be pleased to give it to him. There is not very much except additional statistics, for instance, in the patent division, how many further applications have been filed and dealt with. It follows the form of the other report, and there is not very much to be added to the report this year except statistics. If there are any that my hon. friend would wish to obtain, I should be very pleased to give them to him.

Mr. Pallett: I wonder whether the minister can tell me how many companies were incorporated in the period ended March 31, 1956.

Mr. Pinard: I can say to my hon. friend that during the fiscal year 1955-56 letters patent were granted incorporating 847 companies under part I and 36 corporations without share capital under part II of the Companies Act.

Mr. Pallett: The first comment I should like to make is with respect to the matter of company incorporations. For the year ended March 31, 1954, the report indicates there were 840 companies incorporated, for the year ended March 31, 1955 exactly the same number, 840, and this year there are only 847. It seems to me that these figures are out of line with the apparent growth of the country. I think you will find that the number of incorporations under provincial charters has increased considerably each year, and it seems to indicate that there may be something wrong with the policy of the department in regard to the creation of corporations or some fundamental defect that prevents companies from being incorporated under this department.

At the expense of repeating myself, may I say that it is significant that in the last year there has only been an increase of seven companies over the year before in a country that is supposed to be expanding and growing as this country is supposed to be doing. Along the same line, I wonder whether the Secretary of State has adopted any particular policies in this regard. There is one question I should like to ask him. What steps, if any, are taken in his department or are contemplated by the department with respect to companies incorporated under dominion charters to ensure that there can be full participation by Canadians in those companies? Are there any requirements contemplated by the department that will make holdings available to Canadians in any company thus created, or rather is it the case that most of these companies created under his department are wholly owned outside Canada? Are they merely incorporated here with a few nominal Canadian directors, perhaps even a majority of the directors but with the majority of the holdings outside the country?

If that is the case, are any steps being taken by his department to ensure that Canadians will have a full opportunity to participate as shareholders in these companies? A very revealing observation was made in the banking and commerce committee just last week about the nature of the shareholdings in finance companies. It was a most revealing observation in that practically every finance company operating in Canada was shown to be wholly owned or almost wholly owned outside this country. I think there is a responsibility on the minister's doorstep to take cognizance of this situation and, if he sees fit, to take the necessary steps.

There is another subject I should like to mention that is not exactly related to companies. It has to do with the recognition of Canadians for valuable services to their country in all fields of endeavour. Every country in the world has some method of recognizing contributions to the country through some form or other of honorary award. It is a recognition that does not necessarily involve the expenditure of money but it is a recognition of their service and their value to the country. We have our wartime awards, decorations for bravery and the like.

Now that we hope to encourage development in this country, I think that one way of encouraging it is to take these people who have given of their time, ability and energy and give them some form of recognition. That matter is directly within the minister's department. I leave that suggestion with him for his consideration. It certainly does not involve the expenditure of money but it involves the expenditure of considerable thought on his part. These people are entitled to that recognition. They have served their country well in their particular field and they should have some special recognition. That is the only way, in the long run, in which you are going to get people to expend their energies for service rather than for money, namely to let them know that after a lifetime of devoted duty in their particular field they will be honoured by their country. In these times we hear of shortages of people in certain fields. We hear that industry attracts young graduates from universities so that people are not available in the university teaching field. If these institutions are not able to pay these people the money in direct competition with industry and the like, governments are charged with giving them something which is perhaps much more valuable to them than money and which at the same time will encourage them in the direction of their energies for the benefit of this country.

Another question I should like to direct to the minister has to do with the civil service. I wonder whether the minister would tell us during the course of the consideration of the estimates—

Mr. Pinard: On that question may I say that there is, of course, a special item that deals with the civil service commission. I would much prefer it if my hon. friend would deal with the matter when that item is called. There is a separate item for the civil service commission. I think it would be preferable if he would wait until that item is called.

Mr. Pallett: I shall be very happy to do that, Mr. Chairman. I wonder whether the minister would tell us when the report of the commission on patents and trade marks is going to be available?

Mr. Pinard: Again, there is an item that provides for the payment of $20,000 in connection with the Ilsley commission which is investigating the patent and trade mark legislation. I would prefer it if the question were asked of me when the item is considered. It is the last item of the estimates of the Secretary of State department. It is vote 414. An amount of $20,000 is provided in the estimates for that very purpose. I could possibly also mention to my hon. friend that some time ago—I think it was at the end of April—I gave an indication that the report will probably be completed at the beginning of next spring. I was later informed that in respect of the copyright and industrial design legislation the report might be finished by the spring of 1957. The report on patents should be finished shortly after the one on copyright and industrial designs. The commission has considered the possibility of presenting separate reports. Instead of forcing parliament to wait until the full report is completed, it might be possible that a report will first be supplied on copyright and industrial design and then the final report on patents would be submitted.

Mr. Pallett: I have one comment to make. As the minister may recall, last year he said that he expected this report in about a year. It looks now as though it may be a year or may not be a year.

Now, the history of this particular section of his department has shown that there is a very real need for a certain revision. We are asked to revote money each year, and I gather that up to the end of 1956 the estimated expenditure will be about $45,000, for a commission that cannot tell the minister when it will report or what its findings will be. It seems to me it is time for the minister to start telling the commission to bring in its findings and get a little action in this regard. If patents and copyrights are important, and if their relationship to the field of industrial development in this country is important, I think the minister should exert his influence to see that this commission does get busy. This is not the first time that this matter has been brought up in the house. It has been brought up over the last number of years. Each year the house has been content with the answer, "Well, we know the difficulty and we are attempting to deal with it; we finally have a commission and the commission has promised us the report will be in within a year."

Mr. Pinard: They said, "We hope".

Mr. Pallett: Yes. I urge, as strongly as I am able, that the minister exert pressure on the commission to report soon.

I have one final point to make before I sit down. In reading the memoirs of a former vice-president of the United States I noticed that he said when he became vice-president he was like a man who went on an adventure and was never heard from again. I think the Secretary of State is in great danger of being put in the same position. A man is made Secretary of State and that is the last he is heard from. I hope the minister will take that to heart. I think one very recent illustration was our July 1 holiday, Dominion day. This is a field in which the Secretary of State should have been concerned. He should have made sure that Canadians across this country knew what Dominion day meant. I think, with the greatest respect, that the full significance of the day was not brought home to them. When we come back next year, if he is still here, I hope the Secretary of State will accept the responsibility for these intangibles, if you will, that are in his department and that is one of them. Then we, in Canada, will know exactly what Dominion day means.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are just two matters on which I wish to secure information, and one arises out of the remarks made by the hon. member who just resumed his seat, the recognition of Canadians in a manner in keeping with the democratic traditions. I remember so well some years ago when the Right Hon. Mr. King introduced the measure for the creation of the Canada medal. This was to be a decoration awarded to Canadians, and one that would meet the democratic ideal while at the same time setting apart those Canadians who received it as persons who had made important and significant contributions to Canada. But for some reason or other the Canada medal, like the Canada Council seems to have been conceived and brought into existence by legislation and then placed in moth balls. I should like to ascertain from the minister why it is that Canadians are not receiving this decoration. What is holding it back? What is the nature of the revulsion on the part of the government against recommending Canadians for this decoration? When does the minister expect that the first of those to be honoured with this distinctively Canadian order of merit, if I may use that expression, will receive it; for certainly as yet we have never been able to secure any information on this? I feel it would be a very fine thing for Canada if Canadians could have that decoration. I can think of those in the arts, in literature, in science and in other walks of life to whom this decoration, while of no monetary value, would be a significant one because of the honour it would bring to them by being singled out for the award.

That is the first thing I should like to hear from the minister. Then, I should like to know something about the Great Seal of Canada. I would like to know from him at what stage the words, "Dominion of Canada" were removed from the seal and in place of the word "Dominion" the designation that now appears on the Great Seal that was recently brought into effect was placed there. My recollection is the designation is now "Queen of Canada". Has there been anything in the nature of an order in council passed to remove the description of this country as the Dominion of Canada? Incidentally, the only knowledge I have of the rather devious means adopted to remove this designation was first through the telephone book and then afterwards in one or two statutes.

It is interesting to note that as one reads the debates at the time of confederation and throughout the years this country was invariably described as the Dominion of Canada without any suggestion of subservience whatsoever in that designation. The Statute of Westminster refers to the various dominions, and it has not been amended in any way.

Mr. Pinard: Is it not a fact that the statute says, "A dominion known as Canada"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, that is what it says.

Mr. Pinard: Not "a country known as—".

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister can answer me in a moment. I am going to continue. Throughout the years, by all of Canada's leading parliamentarians, until the year 1945 or 1946, the reference in Hansard to Canada was invariably "The Dominion of Canada". I remember so well when the Prime Minister made his maiden speech in this house in 1941. He referred to this country as the Dominion of Canada, quoting at the same time the description of this country as it appears in the British North America Act. How many submissions were made to Her Majesty before the present Great Seal was decided on? Did any of those submissions include the description "Dominion of Canada"? At what time in our history did the Great Seal cease to have any reference to Canada as the Dominion of Canada?

Those are two matters that I should like the minister to enlighten the house and country on, for I feel that there has been much too much change made in this connection without parliament being given the right to decide the question. There are some ministers of the crown—I think of two in particular—who whenever they speak in this house refer to this country as the Dominion of Canada. They are colleagues of the minister. I should like the minister to explain this change which has taken place so surreptitiously in recent years. I think possibly he will clarify everything when he advises how many alternatives for the Great Seal were submitted to Her Majesty. I seem to remember that when the Great Seal was brought into being reference was made, either by the minister or by some other minister of the cabinet, to the effect that it represented a final decision on the part of Her Majesty after certain alternative Great Seals had been submitted.

These are but two matters at the moment upon which I think the minister could be of considerable assistance to the thinking of our country if he were to enlarge upon them.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, since the Secretary of State is the official channel through whom suggestions and recommendations by members of this house and others are made to Her Majesty or to her personal representative for her gracious consideration, I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to make two suggestions for the consideration of the government and Her Majesty. All hon. members of this house, and indeed I hope all citizens of this Dominion of Canada, are of course aware that Her Majesty is the Queen of Canada and the head of the government. However, the awareness of this fact tends to fade in the minds of the public, and indeed I think possibly in the minds of some members of the house, owing to the fact that most of us are not privileged to see Her Majesty in person, save on very rare occasions, except by means of television, newsreels and so on.

If the suggestion had been made 50 years ago that Her Majesty should take up residence for some part of the year in this country or indeed in other dominions it would have been considered impossible, but because of greatly improved transportation facilities in the world and speed with which one can travel from one part of the world to another, or perhaps it would be better to say from one part of the commonwealth to another, there is no reason that I can see why Her Majesty might not give consideration to spending some time in the Kingdom of Canada or possibly I should say in the Dominion of Canada.

I realize that because of her official duties in the United Kingdom it would be impossible for Her Majesty to do this for any great length of time, and it is also possible that other members of the commonwealth such as our sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand might also request Her Majesty to take up residence there for certain periods of time, but I think it might very well be suggested, and I hope the government will give consideration to recommending this to Her Majesty, that Her Majesty should come in person to this country and officially open each new parliament every four years and at the same time take up residence here for possibly three, four or five months. I can see no reason why this could not be done.

It would keep alive an awareness in the minds of our people that the keystone of our system of government is the crown. By having Her Majesty here in person for even a brief period of three or four months every four or five years the importance of our constitutional monarchy would be impressed, not only upon the minds of the people of this country but upon the minds of our neighbours to the south. I think this would be a very wise thing to do.

The second matter which I wish to mention and which is related to the first concerns the appointment of Her Majesty's personal representatives. In the near future Her Majesty will no doubt be appointing a personal representative other than the present incumbent and I think this matter might well be considered before any such appointment takes place. I do not think for one moment that it would be advisable, as we have done in the past, to continue to have Her Majesty's representatives appointed exclusively from the United Kingdom. I think we have outgrown that, shall I say, but on the other hand I do not think it would be wise to have Her Majesty appoint a Canadian on every occasion. While it may not be so at the present time the fact is that in the future, and we must look to the future in considering these matters, such a practice might lead to appointments of a purely political nature and that would do little less than to create a lack of respect for this very high office, the highest in the land. I think that is something which should be considered. We have seen in similar circumstances that on occasion criticism has been directed at the other place for just such practices.

What would the alternative be? My suggestion, which I believe is concurred in by other members of this house, is one which I think should be considered and carefully explored. I suggest that there should be an exchange of governors general with other members of the commonwealth. I think most of us, indeed I would hope all of us who are members of this house, will agree that the British commonwealth is a fine institution, is a fine example to other countries in the world and is something that should be preserved. Anything that we can do to help keep closer the ties between members of the commonwealth should be encouraged at all times.

There is little doubt in my mind that if we were to exchange governors general with other members of the commonwealth it would bring home to the people of Canada the fact that we are members of this great institution. It would also bring home that fact to the people of other countries in the world. They would thus see that there is some tangible relationship between the members of the commonwealth. How often have members of this house been asked by their friends from the south or from other countries just what is our commonwealth. We are told that we have different parliaments but many people do not know the relationship that really exists. They tell us that we have no common defence system, nor any common foreign policy. The stock answer is, "We have the crown as a common symbol". That is a little difficult for other people to understand sometimes because they fail to realize the relationship between the commonwealth countries. Sometimes other countries get a different and mistaken apprehension of the real bonds of culture and friendship that exist between the members of the commonwealth. I think it would help a great deal to show, both to ourselves at home and to our friends in other countries, that there is a definite link between the members of the commonwealth, if we did have an exchange of governors general.

Of course, if this were the case, any person that Her Majesty chose to appoint as her personal representative in one of the commonwealth countries would be clearly above any question of local politics, which is, of course, something not only to be desired but absolutely necessary with this very high office.

In addition to that, of course, as all members know, at the present time the only members of the commonwealth that have governors general are Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Other members of the commonwealth, such as India, Pakistan and Ceylon, at the present time do not have a personal representative of Her Majesty. But there are other countries which are presently part of the empire and not yet members of the commonwealth that will become members of the commonwealth—countries such as Nigeria, the Gold Coast and at some time in the future, no doubt, the West Indies.

If such an arrangement were made whereby members of the commonwealth exchanged governors general, it would certainly point an example to all countries of the world and show that we in the commonwealth do have respect for equality of race, creed and colour. I hope it might even encourage countries such as India or Pakistan to reconsider coming back into a somewhat closer relationship with the commonwealth than at present.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

I realize that this is something that might seem a little strange at first in Canada if we possibly had a governor general of a different colour or even a different religion than ourselves. If the commonwealth is to lead the way in the world—I know it is a trite expression and I hesitate to use it, but it is a good one—towards the future brotherhood of man, and if we are going to live on in peace with each other in the world, we have to accept these things. I think this would show the people in other countries that we in the commonwealth mean it.

That is all I have to say at this time. I hope very sincerely that these matters have been and will continue to be kept under consideration by the government.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): For several years now the suggestion has been advanced in this house that we should have as a governor general somebody from another part of the commonwealth. However, there are very obvious difficulties, and these difficulties have been created in no small measure by the government.

Consider what would happen if we had as a governor general somebody from India, Ceylon, Pakistan or Nigeria. However would he get past the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration? It simply cannot be done, because the laws of this country are such that these people would not fit into Canada. They could not assimilate themselves in the slightest way. The climate would affect them adversely, for one thing. Therefore, though we in this party would favour such a project, there would have to be either a change in the ministry or a change in the regulations and laws of this country. From my point of view, what ought to happen is a change in the ministry, and certainly a change in the rules and laws because, as they are now administered, they are at the best an aberration and at the worst complete stupidity.

The difficulty in getting somebody from India, Pakistan, Ceylon or, as the hon. member for Oxford suggests, from Nigeria is obviously too great for the present minister of immigration to contemplate, no matter how much we should like to see a governor general coming from some other part of the commonwealth. I myself am not too addicted to the idea of always having someone from the United Kingdom come here to represent Her Majesty; still less am I addicted to the idea of some Canadian politician, past or possibly present, occupying the same high office. It is one that ought to be outside the bounds of political controversy, and I hope that is remembered in the future.

However, there is a question I should like the minister to answer now at this particular stage. I wonder whether he can give the committee details of the latest report of the custodian of enemy property.

Mr. Pinard: The report of the custodian, which was tabled a few months ago, does indicate that the work of the office is proceeding rapidly now and that the fund still in the hands of the custodian has now reached a figure of $8,334,430. That is the fund which the office of the custodian has acquired as a result of the seizure of enemy property under the act.

There is also the office administration account, which discloses that there is still in the fund for the office administration account the sum of $4,165,878. I mention these figures because they should indicate quite a substantial reduction in so far as the fund and the vested assets of the custodian are concerned. The figures have been reduced greatly. Although it is difficult to say when they will have disposed of the whole of the assets seized, it is hoped that the work can be completed in a not far distant future.

I might also mention that there has been, as the result of what I have already indicated, a reduction in personnel. The custodian's office, which as of December 31, 1954, had a personnel of 50, has reduced its personnel now to 44. During the year 1955, two members of the custodian's office retired under the Civil Service Superannuation Act; two were transferred to other departments of the civil service; one member resigned; and one died. Furthermore, on November 9, 1955—and that is what I wanted to allude to—11 members were given notice that their services would not be required after December 31, 1955, which does indicate that the operations are proceeding in such a way as to justify the thought that the operations might be completed in the not far distant future.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Can the minister tell me how many claims are still outstanding and against what ex-enemy countries?

Mr. Pinard: These claims, as my hon. friend knows, are dealt with by the war claims commission. I might say that the total amount of the claims paid to June 30 of this year is $5,068,000. That figure concerns claims against Germany, Hungary, Italy and Japan. The total amount of the claims outstanding is still $136,700,000, approximately, but the greater proportion of this large amount is for claims resulting from loss of property which alone represent the very large figure of $136,358,144. That does not, of course, answer completely the question asked as to how many claims are left to be dealt with, but I will try to get that information. I find I have it now. There are still in process 1,536 claims, 1,501 of which are claims from civilians, and then there are 35 claims for maltreatment from prisoners of war or their representatives. I might also indicate that the total number of claims was 13,982 out of which 4,193 have been disallowed and 8,253 have been paid.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to ask the minister a question which has already been raised in connection with the commission set up under the Inquiries Act to investigate the Patent Act and the Copyright Act. Can the minister give the committee any information as to the terms of reference of the commission? I should also like to have him give information with respect to whether or not the commission makes any investigation of the actions of companies involved in any misuse or manipulation of the Copyright Act and the Patent Act for the purpose of setting up monopolies in this country. I realize it is well known that through the Department of Justice many prosecutions have taken place under the Combines Investigation Act, but I think most of us are quite concerned about monopolies being formed in this country and the ineffectiveness of the Combines Investigation Act. Can the minister inform the committee how many cases that have been prosecuted by the Department of Justice have involved the manipulation or misuse of the Copyright Act or the Patent Act?

Mr. Pinard: I think this information could only be supplied by my colleague, the Minister of Justice. I am not in a position to say how many prosecutions have been instituted by the Department of Justice under the Combines Investigation Act even if some of them did concern the operations of the patent division, but I will try to obtain the information and see whether I can furnish it to my hon. friend.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can the minister give us the terms of reference of the commission?

Mr. Pinard: I think the terms of reference will cover what my hon. friend has in mind. They do allow the commission to deal with organizations which would pool patents of invention, for instance, in order to organize a combine. I definitely think that the terms of reference are wide enough to cover that, and by just reading the first paragraph of those terms I think my hon. friend will see that they do cover that. The first paragraph reads as follows:

> That a commission of inquiry be established under the authority of part I of the Inquiries Act, to inquire as to whether federal legislation relating in any way to patents of invention, industrial designs, copyright and trade-marks affords reasonable incentives to invention and research, to the development of literary and artistic talent, to creativeness, and to making available to the Canadian public scientific, technical, literary and artistic creations and their applications, adaptations and uses, in a manner and on terms adequately safeguarding the paramount public interest, the whole in the light of present day economic conditions, scientific, technical and industrial developments, trade practices and any other relevant factors or circumstances, including practices under or related to the said legislation and any relevant international convention to which Canada is a party; to submit to the governor in council a report on its findings . . .

In other words, I definitely think that what my hon. friend has in mind is fully covered by the terms of reference. If the commission is to inquire whether federal legislation relating in any way to patents of invention affords reasonable incentive to invention and research, to the development of literary and artistic talent, etc., in a manner and on terms adequately safeguarding the paramount public interest, I do think this covers what my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Can the minister state how many of these cases have been referred by the commission to the Department of Justice for review or investigation?

Mr. Pinard: I do not think the commission has yet referred any of these cases, if they have found them in existence, to the Department of Justice. Whether they have found anything of that kind will be disclosed in their report. In their report they might make recommendations to that effect but until such time as the report has been completed I do not think the commission would do that. They would inquire whether what my hon. friend has in mind exists and then in their report would make recommendations.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I have to go to a committee right away but before I do I have one last question. Would the minister be good enough to state why there is a reduction of $15,000 in the appropriation for the commission this year?

Mr. Pinard: I am told that the commission simply informed us that they expect to complete their report by next spring and they do not think that the rest of the work to be done requires as much in the way of expenditure as the preceding work did. In other words, most of the evidence has already been submitted and the rest of the work is of a nature that does not justify the expenditure of more than is being requested.

[Mr. Pinard.]

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I take it that this will not be a continuing commission with its work continuing over the years.

Mr. Pinard: Oh no, that is not what the terms of reference disclose. They indicate that a report will be submitted which will contain their recommendations. As it says at the end of the reference, they will submit a report of their findings to the governor general in council with any recommendations that may appear advisable for changes in the said legislation. In other words, it is not a continuing commission. It is a commission of inquiry and when the inquiry has been completed it will submit its report.

Mr. Hansell: Since the minister is now answering questions, I should like to ask him two. They are in reference to a matter about which I was in touch with him some weeks ago. He will recall that I was inquiring of his department with respect to the registration of a certain pension society. I understand that pension societies and companies can register with the department of the Secretary of State. My particular questions are these. When such a society or company is registered, is it obligatory upon them to file with his department an annual financial statement of their affairs? My second question is this. If an annual statement is filed with his department, is that statement open to public scrutiny?

Mr. Pinard: There is a special act—the Pension Fund Societies Act—which deals with the conditions of incorporation. The only thing I recall at the moment of the conditions mentioned in the act is that they may register with the department of the Secretary of State. I shall be obliged to look into the matter in order to see whether they must file an annual statement and whether or not it is open to the public for examination. I shall have to look into the matter and I will try to give an answer a little later.

Mr. Hansell: All right. I will not take up any more time now but I will say this. In the case of a pension society, I believe that any member or any person contributing to that pension fund should have made available to him the annual statement as filed in the Secretary of State's department.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I listened with much interest and attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Pallett) about a way of recognizing, through the Secretary of State, acts of bravery performed by worthy Canadians during the year.

For instance, last fall in the city of Verdun, near Montreal, some children nearly lost their lives in an unfortunate fire. We then learned that they had been saved through the heroic action of a milkman by the name of Chipman. However, during the weeks that followed this rescue, newspapers seemed to question the identity of the rescuer and even wondered whether the rescue had actually been made by the man named Chipman or by someone else. I understand however that the Secretary of State did not investigate the matter too closely and that just the same the George Medal for bravery was awarded to milkman Chipman. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard) might be able to let us know what reports were made to his office on that occasion, and where matters now stand with regard to the person named Chipman, of Verdun.

That was the first matter I intended to raise.

In the second place, I thank the hon. member for Peel for bringing up this matter of the recognition of acts of bravery. It is very interesting to note that the Secretary of State grants awards to people for acts of bravery and I congratulate the department. However, I wonder—and I should like to stress that point—whether it would not be possible also to recognize the obvious talent of some people who are active in other fields. Many Canadians, throughout the country, and regardless of language or religion, have, each in his own field, made important contributions and rendered great services to the Canadian nation.

I may perhaps be allowed to insist particularly, this afternoon, on the worthy contribution made to Canadian literature generally and perhaps to French-Canadian literature especially, by an obviously gifted young man, a remarkable author who, by the way, was born and raised in the constituency which I have the honour to represent here. Because of this talent and of the personal qualities so characteristic of the man, he had become prominent not only in French Canada but throughout this country. The merits of Mr. Roger Lemelin, well known writer, have been recognized not only by the city of Quebec from whom he has received, only a short time ago, a certificate of honorary citizenship, but also by France. Flattering tributes have also come to him from the United States. At the present time all Canadians are privileged to appreciate the remarkable talents of this young man of whom we are so proud and whose work is carried over the airwaves in both the English and the French languages.

He is the author of that remarkable book called "Au pied de la pente douce" (The Town Below) and of that other one to which I have particular reference and which has already been translated into several languages, "The Plouffe Family" which is carried every day on Canadian television stations.

Mr. Chairman, I should like at this time to speak on behalf, not only of Canadians of the province of Quebec, but of all Canadians in general, so that the department of the Secretary of State may give recognition to the undeniable value of this fellow citizen, who is a credit to his family and his small Quebec home, as well as to the whole people of Canada.

Roger Lemelin is my fellow citizen and I believe that this well-known, very popular and highly esteemed author's competence and contribution to Canada's cultural development should be given official recognition. That would certainly be looked upon favourably all across the country.

Mr. Chairman, I should now like to state my personal opinion on a question raised a few minutes ago by two members of different political affiliations and which has not received unanimous approval. I shall state a third point of view as regards the appointment of the governor general of Canada.

I believe we should be proud that a few years ago Canada which, after all, is an adult and autonomous nation, appointed for the first time a Canadian as governor general of Canada. I would not suggest that we should go out and seek in other countries of the commonwealth for people of unquestioned merit to assume the duties of governor general of our country. Rather do I feel that we should stick to the present procedure and appoint an English-speaking Canadian whose successor would, in turn, be a French-speaking Canadian.

I believe that somebody has already proposed that the next governor general of French language be the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. St. Laurent). I have no objection and I would even approve the choice immediately if the right hon. Prime Minister decides to tender his resignation as Prime Minister of Canada, and I say this jocularly.

I believe that we should proceed in that connection according to the same principle which prevails in the House of Commons. We recognize that there are two official languages in Canada. The fact is asserted in the British North America Act. We recognize that principle in the House of Commons by appointing alternately, for each parliament, a French-speaking Speaker and an English-speaking Speaker.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the few remarks I have made today in the house should be taken into consideration and that serious thought be given to the possibility of appointing, when the mandate of His Excellency the Governor General expires, a French-speaking Canadian to that honorary office.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks I wished to make this afternoon, perhaps contrary to what I usually do, I did not criticize. I hope that those few remarks will be taken into serious consideration by the hon. the Secretary of State and by the government of which he is a minister.

Mr. Girard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put a few questions to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard).

Last year, in this house, I put on the record some figures taken out of the public accounts about the representation of French-speaking Canadians within the federal civil service. This year, I understand that the hon. Secretary of State who now has jurisdiction over the civil service commission has himself ordered an inquiry such as I urged last year, and I wanted to know whether his department had made that inquiry.

To a question which I put to him a few months ago, he answered that in fact he had ordered such an inquiry and that, after waiting a few weeks—

Mr. Pinard: Would the hon. member allow me a question? Is he saying at this time that I personally ordered an inquiry along the lines he has indicated, or whether such an inquiry has been ordered by the civil service commission. I would like to keep the record straight. This information was requested by the civil service commission, not by myself.

Mr. Girard: I believe that, in his answer to the house, the hon. Secretary of State said that the inquiry had been ordered by the civil service commission, but that the commission was under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Pinard: I understand but the civil service commission is an altogether independent organization of which I am simply the spokesman in the House of Commons.

Mr. Girard: As spokesman for the civil service commission, is the hon. Secretary of State now in a position to give us the figures brought about by this inquiry?

Mr. Dufresne: Did the hon. Secretary of State ask the civil service commission to investigate this matter?

Mr. Girard: Yes, the investigation took place, because the minister replied in this house that he had the figures in hand. When giving me those figures, would the Secretary of State tell us, if possible, on what basis that inquiry was made as to the proportion of bilingual civil servants in the different departments, so that we may know what this representation can mean? I would say this. If, in an inquiry on bilingual civil servants, you put together telephone operators, elevator men and engineers, you do not get, of course, a true picture of bilingual representation. I mean that you do not get the true representation in certain executive positions. Did the department, for instance, get any figures as to the number of those who get over $5,000 a year, which might indicate a bilingual representation of "X"?

Then, could the minister tell us first whether his department has been able to find out, say for the last ten years, what has been the percentage of the progress or of the set-back, as the case may be, experienced by bilingualism in the civil service in general, and secondly by the French-Canadian representation in the civil service?

Here are the figures I arrived at last year on the basis of the public accounts report. By looking up the number of French-speaking employees earning over $5,000 a year, I found out that these employees held 13 per cent of the executive positions. Yet these employees are practically the only bilingual employees in the country. I would like to ask the minister if there has been any progress or otherwise since last year? Can he tell us if his department has taken any steps to promote bilingualism in our Canadian nation and especially in the federal civil service? What has he done personally to encourage such a move? Are there any associations, any movements or any places where, thanks to the government, classes are held for employees who need to be bilingual?

The general feeling prevalent amongst most French-Canadians is that, instead of something positive being done, the problem is dealt with as it arises. There is another impression abroad too, and that is that the government is content to deal with these problems only when they are acute and that nothing active or positive is being done in order to promote bilingualism. And yet bilingualism provides a bond of goodwill between the two great races which share in the destinies of this fine country of ours.

I would therefore like the minister to tell me what he plans to do in the various departments in order to promote bilingualism. I see that bilingual French-speaking employees are paid the same salary as English-speaking employees, who speak only one language. As a matter of fact, here, in this parliament, the same salary is paid bilingual stenographers as is paid unilingual ones. There would seem to be an opportunity here of promoting real national unity in this country.

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I know that there were other matters which intervened and denied the minister the opportunity of answering the questions which I directed to him some time ago. I will add to those questions as part of the general picture, so he may answer them all at once. I should like to know who are the members of the awards co-ordination committee. How often does this committee sit, and has it made any recommendations for the award of the Canada medal that have not been acted upon by the government in a recommendation to Her Majesty? Furthermore, in regard to the Canada medal I should like to ask the minister whether or not the medal was produced. Has it been minted, if that is the proper expression? In what numbers has it been minted and where are those medals being kept? This mystery deserves to be dissipated because I remember, as does the minister, the degree of enthusiasm with which the former prime minister produced this decoration which was to be peculiar to Canada and one which was to be awarded with much care. Surely, that degree of care does not make necessary the entire denial to all the population of this most worthy decoration.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the scarcest decoration in the world.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is non-existent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, that is a proper description of it. It is almost a collector's item. That is how scarce it is. We should find out where those medals are, because certainly many worthy Canadians will be interested to know that the worthiness of this decoration is apparently dependent upon its not being awarded.

The other question I asked the minister had to do with the use of the word "Dominion" and its removal from the Great Seal.

Mr. Pinard: Did it exist? Does my hon. friend know whether it actually existed on the Great Seal?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I saw the actual Great Seal. The minister can answer when he rises. There has been a movement, Mr. Chairman, in the direction of chiselling away the use of "Dominion". I saw an example of it in the dominion bureau of statistics building in this city, that magnificent structure, the proper description of which, according to the statute is the dominion bureau of statistics. But, on the two pillars in front of the building the word "Dominion", which is the official title under the statute, has not been added. It simply says "Bureau of Statistics Building", although when you get inside the building you find on the walls it is described on the armorial bearings on the permanent structure as "The Dominion Bureau of Statistics". I would ask the minister to enlarge on the reason why the expression "Dominion of Canada" is being avoided by this government, and on the basis of what legislative enactment of parliament is it being done?

Following that, I should like to direct the minister's attention to one other matter, but since it is not connected with the two questions I have asked him I would appreciate very much if he would enlarge on the matters and give the country the benefit of his knowledge in connection therewith.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I wish first of all to say that no doubt the gifted way in which the hon. member gave the benefit of his knowledge of these matters will be appreciated, and I have listened to his remarks with great interest.

He asked a question concerning the Canada medal, to which he also made allusion a few minutes ago. During his remarks he marvelled at the preciousness of that decoration which has not been awarded to anyone since it has been created. If I am not mistaken, the Canada medal was established in October, 1943, by order in council P.C. 7964. I am not in a position to say whether or not the medal has been minted. I think I heard remarks last year to that effect made by someone in this house, but I have not been able to ascertain whether in fact this medal has been minted by the Royal Canadian Mint. One thing appears to be sure, namely, that no award of this medal was ever made, at least to my knowledge, to anyone. Whether or not the enthusiasm to which my hon. friend referred, which was in the mind of the then prime minister when he created it, was shared by the members of this government I do not know. But the fact remains that no such medal was awarded to anyone to my knowledge.

The hon. member also made reference to the Great Seal of Canada which he says—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on, will he say who the members of the awards co-ordination committee are and whether they recommended anyone for this medal?

Mr. Pinard: No, I may say immediately no recommendation was made by the awards co-ordination committee for the awarding of the Canada medal. The committee's chairman is my deputy minister and the members of the awards co-ordination committee are representatives from at least two or three departments of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who are they?

Mr. Pinard: There is the under secretary of state as chairman; there is a representative of the governor general; there are three representatives of the Department of National Defence; there is a representative of the Department of Labour and of the Department of Transport; and also a representative of the dominion archivist; but they are not necessarily the same people. There is a representative from each of those departments who is not necessarily always the same. This group forms the awards co-ordinating committee which sits on no fixed dates but whenever there are enough requests for decorations to justify a sitting of the committee to take place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did it last sit?

Mr. Pinard: It did sit quite recently, if I am not mistaken, a few weeks ago.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): How often has it sat altogether?

Mr. Pinard: A number of times, but I cannot possibly say how often.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): With very negative results, I take it.

[Mr. Pinard.]

Mr. Pinard: Not necessarily. I think in quite a few cases quite a few representations and recommendations were made and in most cases they were followed.

The hon. member for Prince Albert also referred to the Great Seal of Canada and mentioned the fact, if I understood him correctly, that the expression "The Dominion of Canada" had disappeared from the Great Seal of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not say that. I asked if it had, and if there had been any change?

Mr. Pinard: The inscription on the former Great Seal of Canada was as follows, and it was in Latin: "George VI, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith. Georgius VI" and then the initials "D. Gratia Mag.", which I unfortunately cannot translate. It would be magnae—I am not sure. "Brit."

Mr. Diefenbaker: What are those letters?

Mr. Pinard: M-a-g. I will ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did know at one time, but I have forgotten.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That must be some language other than Latin; otherwise the minister of citizenship would certainly be able to clear it up.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an abbreviation and I forget what it abbreviates.

Mr. Pinard: The English words I quoted were a translation of what I am now trying to read and cannot because I have just the abbreviations. I would have to read what they mean one by one, and unfortunately I cannot translate them at the moment.

It has been said that the Great Seal does not contain the words "Dominion of Canada". The previous seal contained a reference to British dominions beyond the seas. I have a copy of a print taken from that seal. The hon. member also said that there seems to be a growing practice of doing away with the word "dominion". I would refer him to the British North America Act but I realize also that the opinion I hold may not be shared by my hon. friend. Section 3 reads:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's most honourable privy council, to declare by proclamation that, on and after a day therein appointed, not being more than six months after the passing of this act, the provinces of Canada, of Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick shall form and be one dominion under the name of Canada.

If I remember correctly the Prime Minister said at one time that it should be possible to designate our country as the Dominion of Canada or as Canada. In my opinion either expression could be used, but whether or not this country should be designated as the Dominion of Canada or as Canada would be left to the appreciation of the person concerned.

The hon. member for Prince Albert inquired as to what alternative submissions had been made to Her Majesty in connection with the Great Seal. I may tell him that only one submission was made containing a recommendation that the words now contained in the new Great Seal of Canada be used. In other words, the design and inscription were the result of that one recommendation and submission made to Her Majesty.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I think I should answer some questions asked by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne) and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Girard). I should reply first to the remarks made by the hon. member for Quebec West about the George Medal awarded a few months ago to Mr. Edward Chipman. If I remember rightly, the Canada Gazette announced in December 1955 that such a decoration had been awarded. Moreover, if again my memory serves me well, the award of the George Medal had been recommended following an act of bravery on the part of Mr. Chipman in a fire that occurred in December 1954. Since the question was raised by the hon. member for Quebec West, I take this opportunity to inform the house that a decision has been made in this matter, and that it will be made known in the Canada Gazette of this forthcoming Saturday.

(Text):

Possibly I should continue my remarks in English for the benefit of those who might be interested in this matter and who might not be able to follow exactly what I am saying in French. This medal was awarded in December, 1955 as the result of a recommendation made to Her Majesty. Hon. members will recall that after the medal was awarded certain allegations were made in the press that the act of bravery which had been performed by the recipient of the medal was not of a degree to justify the awarding of the medal. Because of that controversy the recipient of the medal has asked permission to have the award cancelled, and has so informed the chairman of the awards co-ordination committee. I can say now that Her Majesty has graciously agreed to have the award cancelled and the notice will appear in the Canada Gazette of this week reading as follows:

The Queen has been graciously pleased at the request of Mr. Edward C. Chipman, Verdun, P.Q., to cancel the award of the George Medal to Mr. Chipman, of which notice was published in the Canada Gazette of December 17, 1955.

I can assure the house that the matter was investigated fully and considered in all its aspects. While controversy in regard to a matter of this kind is of course perfectly legitimate and helpful in my opinion it should not be prolonged because it would tend to discredit this very high decoration. As far as I am concerned I would think the fact that the intended recipient of the medal has asked to have the award cancelled does not necessarily indicate that he did not perform an act of bravery. No doubt because of the controversy and the other circumstances he decided that he ought to ask permission to have the award cancelled. The allegations made in the newspapers at the time were that the act of bravery in which he participated might not have been of a degree which justified the awarding of such a high decoration.

I might mention incidentally that this is not the highest decoration awarded to civilians; the highest is the George Cross. When this matter was being discussed by the newspapers it was said that the decoration that had been awarded was the highest that could be awarded to a civilian.

I do not think anything more need be said, nor would it be helpful. In my opinion it would simply help to discredit this medal which is held in such high esteem by the nations of the commonwealth.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe has referred to the problem of bilingualism—and I am stressing those words "problem of bilingualism"—which is of great concern to him, for which I give him great credit. It is a problem which I myself consider of the highest import. I must say that, since I first entered this Canadian parliament, I have always taken every possible step to have such a bilingual group as would reflect great credit not only on the province of Quebec, but on the French-speaking minority that he and I, as well as several others, represent in this house.

First of all, I would like to say a few words in connection with his remarks about an inquiry that is supposed to have been directed by the civil service commission. I do say "directed by the civil service commission" because this is the information contained in the answer I gave at the time. The civil service commission, which is a definitely independent organization, had decided for reasons it had considered necessary, to inquire and attempt to determine what was the position in relation to bilingualism in the province of Quebec as well as in the remainder of the country. Following a request by my hon. friend, I informed him of the answer supplied by the civil service commission, and from which the hon. member probably inferred that most departments had not been able to give an adequate reply. I then pointed out that the answer of the civil service commission, which I was endorsing, indicated that it was difficult to determine the degree of bilingualism among employees of the commission. Some of these with English-sounding names nevertheless speak excellent French and, in some cases, even do not know English. The opposite is also true. Some with French-sounding names do not speak French.

There is also that extremely difficult and arduous matter of analysing the degree of bilingualism of an employee of the civil service commission. It is undoubtedly for that reason that only an inadequate answer can be given on the matter, for it is practically impossible to give an accurate reply.

I remember the comments that were made at the time by some newspapermen who blamed me for endorsing that reply which, according to them, was not satisfactory. I wish to repeat that, in my view, it is extremely difficult to determine the degree of bilingualism of a federal civil servant. I would be very glad for suggestions, not only from my hon. friend but from anyone else in this house, as to how investigators should go about determining which civil servants are genuinely bilingual. In very many cases bilingual candidates occupy a position where they need not be bilingual. On the other hand, there are cases where employees who claim to be bilingual are not so at all. That is why it is very difficult to give exact and adequate information on this matter.

Just as my hon. friend, I am convinced that bilingualism is making notable headway in this country. I agree with him that there is still room for improvement. Some time ago, the hon. member introduced in the house a bill containing certain suggestions. At that time, I opposed the bill as it was drafted but I clearly stated that I approved it in principle. By what means the suggestions made in that bill could be implemented that remains to be seen. Personally, I believe, as my hon. friend, that bilingual employees should receive not a preferential but a different treatment, on account of that extra qualification, and that they should therefore be given preference over any non-bilingual candidate to a civil service position. Some system might be devised to achieve that end. Following the introduction of my hon. friend's bill,—indeed I had done so before that—I discussed the matter at some length with representatives of the civil service commission and I asked them to suggest as soon as possible some amendments to the civil service regulations so as to do justice to the employees concerned.

As I pointed out a moment ago, the commission is an independent organization, but I really hope to be able to convince it to bring about certain changes along the lines I have indicated.

Mr. Girard: Will the minister allow me a question?

Mr. Pinard: Of course.

Mr. Girard: The minister stated a while ago, in his answer, that it was no easy matter to determine the degree of bilingualism of a civil servant. But would it not be possible for a candidate to demonstrate his ability by submitting to a test? Does the civil service commission not have several classes of examinations which are meant to determine whether a candidate is really qualified? Could not something along those lines be brought about to determine whether such and such a candidate is bilingual or not? Examinations are not drawn up to determine whether a candidate is bilingual, but merely to find out whether he is competent.

Mr. Pinard: I think I have answered that. The linguistic knowledge of the candidate is assessed but it is not the subject of a separate examination. Perhaps there should be an examination to determine in the first place the extent of bilingualism of a candidate but I must point out that this qualification is taken into account and is part of the examination. The suggestion made by the hon. member that a separate examination be held to determine to what extent each candidate is bilingual may be an excellent one. I take note of it and I am very glad that the hon. member made it.

As I pointed out a moment ago, I asked the civil service commissioners to make a study of this matter and to draft amendments to be made to the regulations with a view to correcting a situation which, to my mind, is not satisfactory at the present time. It is not satisfactory because it is difficult to arrive at definite conclusions. As soon as I receive those suggestions, I shall make the necessary recommendations to the government and the civil service commission.

(Text):

Mr. Jones: I should like to refer again to the custodian of enemy property. I need hardly remind the minister of the disgust and dissatisfaction that we felt in British Columbia when the government moved the Japanese inland and in its panic turned over their properties to be sold at a fraction of their value. The Japanese and the public of British Columbia have never been satisfied that these people got a fair deal. I am satisfied to this day that they got a rotten deal, caused by the panic of the government during the war.

For that reason we have had stories of the wealth these people lost, the property they lost and the businesses they lost. In order to try to get at the facts I would ask the minister to give me four figures if at all possible; that is, first of all, the total amount of claims made by Japanese in British Columbia, the total amount paid on those claims, the amount of the claims refused and the amount of the claims still outstanding. I think if we get those four figures we will have the answer to the dissatisfaction that is still rampant among the people who know the Japanese, live with them and in many cases have dealings with them. I hope the minister can give me those figures.

Mr. Pinard: I shall try to obtain those figures. Some of them would be contained in the report of the royal commission that considered this problem at the time, but I will try to get more precise and definite figures from the custodian's office and inform my hon. friend accordingly.

Mr. Jones: I tried to get those four figures and I could not. If the minister would kindly undertake to give me those figures at a later date I would be very pleased.

Mr. Pinard: I will certainly do that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I return once more to one of the questions I asked the minister. Before doing so, however, I want to say to the minister that I like the courteous way in which he answers questions. This type of examination of estimates brings out information without unnecessary heat, and I do say to the minister that the manner in which he answers questions deserves commendation. I very seldom say things like that, but when a minister acts as he has acted today they deserve to be said. That does not mean, sir, that I agree with some of his conclusions.

Mr. Pinard: Beware of the Greeks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He rather brushed aside the action of the government in trying to get rid of the word "dominion" in every possible way, for what reason I do not know. The minister explained that according to the preamble of the British North America Act it was possible to say that this country was the Dominion of Canada or Canada. The fact is that for over 80 years tradition everywhere in our country has resulted in it being described as the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Pinard: We also say province of Saskatchewan. We also say province of Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I come back to an example I mentioned a while ago having to do with the bureau of statistics. According to chapter 257 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and this has not been changed by parliament, "bureau" means the dominion bureau of statistics, and the act is an act respecting the dominion bureau of statistics. Yet some tinkerer has altered that title on the front of the dominion bureau of statistics building to "bureau of statistics". It is this tinkering outside of parliament to which I object. If these changes are to made, let them be made by the representatives of the people of Canada, not by administrators, cabinet ministers and others behind the back of parliament. Having said that, I wish now to make reference to another matter.

Mr. Pinard: I do not think there was any alteration or change made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes.

Mr. Pinard: Not on the building to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The building should be the dominion bureau of statistics building.

Mr. Pickersgill: Maybe it should be, but it never was. You said it had been altered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Here again we have that customary deviation or perhaps I should say uncustomary deviation from the facts in which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration so often engages.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege is that the hon. gentleman said I had deviated from the facts, or he referred to a customary deviation from the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Uncustomary.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not objecting to him saying that at all, but I do think if he does say it that I am entitled to be told in what respect I have deviated. I should like to put this question to him because I think we can clear this up at once. He said the title on the building was altered. The building is a new building, and I do not believe there was ever any alteration made in the title. I believe it has always had the same title in the few years since it was built. This is an example of the hon. gentleman's customary deviation from the facts, not mine.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, that is an example of the kind of hairsplitting that used to be engaged in by the "school-men" in the middle ages.

Mr. Pickersgill: Anybody who talks about "Dominion of Canada" is hairsplitting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, the proper description is "dominion bureau of statistics" according to the statute, and the building should be the dominion bureau of statistics building. In spite of that these tinkerers, who are forever chiselling at Canada's relationship within the commonwealth—

Mr. Pinard: I do not think so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —have removed "dominion" in the description of that building, though when you come inside the building where there is less permanence the building is described in painted letters as "dominion bureau of statistics". But outside on the plaque it is "bureau of statistics".

An hon. Member: Splitting hairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having said that, I say that what many Canadians object to is that these changes, like the telephone book changes and the like, are all made outside of parliament. If they are to be made, let them be made by the representatives of the people openly and aboveboard instead of in a subterranean manner by administrative order or direction.

Mr. McCann: Give the flag another wave.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, that is a typical statement of the hon. gentleman. It is not a question of the flag, it is a question of tradition. It is a question of things being done in a parliamentary way instead of underground and by devious methods. It is against this latter practice that I raise my voice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Childish.

Mr. Pinard: May I ask a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have apparently touched a sore point.

Mr. Pinard: May I ask what this has to do with these estimates?

Mr. Rowe: Ask the fellow behind you.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order I should like to know by what right we discuss matters relating to the Department of Trade and Commerce on the Secretary of State's estimates. If the right is being granted to the hon. member to discuss trade and commerce estimates now, can the rest of us discuss any item of trade and commerce estimates we wish at this point?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member just came in within the last few minutes. The discussion this afternoon has been in his absence.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not right. That is contrary to the fact. Your own members will tell you I have been talking with them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I saw the hon. gentleman come in and he did not hear the earlier discussion. I was using this example in support of my argument that the word "dominion" is gradually being removed by other than parliamentary means, and this was but an example. I was not discussing the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. If my hon. friend had been here—no doubt he was unavoidably absent for other reasons—he would have been aware of the ground upon which the reference was made.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I think I must insist on pursuing the subject. First of all, the hon. member has made a foul accusation as to where I have been this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McIlraith: I have been in the chamber practically since 2.30 this afternoon, as the members of his own party will tell him if he will take the trouble to ask them. I have been talking with several of them. I do not want the hon. member to get away with putting a misrepresentation like that on Hansard. Having stated that question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask you to make a ruling on the point of order. I shall abide by the ruling, too, unlike the hon. member.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I make it quite clear that I have just come in. I did not hear the previous debate, but I have been advised as to its tenor by the clerks at the head of the table. I may say that I have been in the chair long enough to say that I do not think any foul accusation was made by the hon. member for Prince Albert sufficient to require a retraction. As I understand it, the question of the use of the word "dominion" and its connotation in connection with decorations and other matters has come up under the estimates of the Secretary of State, and perhaps not unnaturally.

I am not going to rule that the references are out of order. Of course if the hon. member for Prince Albert were to proceed to a critical discussion of the administration of the dominion bureau of statistics, the shoe might be on the other foot. I believe the hon. member and all other members of the committee can carry on the type of discussion which has been carried on without the necessity of interference from the chair.

I am going to suggest to the hon. member for Prince Albert that he has made his reference or his allusion. I am not going to rule out of order on these estimates a discussion as to the use of the word "dominion" or its non-use by any department of government, because perhaps that matter would be brought to the attention of the government through the department of the Secretary of State. So far I do not think we have exceeded the wide rules which we usually try to apply in connection with discussion of the estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, first I want to say to my friend the hon. member for Ottawa West that there was not any foul accusation. I simply said that he was not here at the time and therefore did not understand how this reference came to be made.

Mr. McIlraith: Why did you misstate the facts?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Far from my endeavouring to foul him, Mr. Chairman, may I say that he succeeded in doing that himself. I did not have anything like that in mind at all.

Mr. McIlraith: Why did you misstate the facts?

Mr. Rowe: He did not do that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend is unnecessarily touchy. I never had anything in mind to harm him. I said, "no doubt unavoidably". It turned out that it was unavoidable, that he was at some committee meeting.

Mr. McIlraith: He was not at a committee meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely his conscience should not prick him like that.

Mr. Rowe: He said he was not at a committee meeting, so it was not unavoidable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I withdraw the word "unavoidable" and say "avoidable". There is one other thing I want to bring to the attention of the minister now. There is provision for a report to him by the committee on the use of parliament hill. I do not know exactly what the nature of that committee is, what it reports on or the nature of the subjects with which it deals. However, I feel that in general it will deal with such matters as are concerned or connected with parliament hill.

I should like to ask the minister whether this committee has made any report in connection with a structure on parliament hill which I believe, more than anything else, is one of the great traditional buildings on this hill. I refer to the old Supreme Court of Canada building, for it was in that building that some of the great parliamentarians of Canada, including prime ministers, appeared as counsel. I think of Edward Blake—

Mr. Pinard: Yes; but that would be under the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will terminate my remarks. As I say, I think of Edward Blake, Sir John Thompson, Sir Robert Borden, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and Louis St. Laurent, all prime ministers of Canada who appeared from time to time and made their distinguished names in that building. I should like to ask the minister whether or not the perpetuation or the preservation of that building, great in history—actually the place where our constitution received its major interpretation—should not be a matter of concern, and whether it should not be maintained as part and parcel of those things worth preserving and deserving to be preserved as part of our history, our tradition, and our past.

Indeed, in so far as the constitution is concerned all our future was made in that building. In that place these five outstanding lawyers, four of whom afterwards became prime ministers of Canada and Edward Blake, the leader of the Liberal party in the 1880's and one of Canada's most outstanding lawyers if not the most outstanding one, made their reputation and shaped Canada's future. Has consideration been given by this committee to the need of preserving this building as one of our great and ancient heritages for the benefit of this and future generations?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I must inform the hon. gentleman that this committee is concerned simply with the use of parliament hill and has nothing to do except with regard to ceremonies to be held on parliament hill. The matter to which he has referred is under the authority of the Minister of Public Works.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I think it is probably appropriate that in this week in which we have celebrated Dominion Day as the 89th birthday of this great nation, we should now be discussing in this house matters of tradition and honour. In that regard I should like to draw the attention of the minister and the members of this house to what to me seems a great oversight.

Earlier this afternoon members of this house spoke of a Canada Medal. I believe some questions were asked with reference to the Canada Council. But recognition for services rendered and work done in Canada has over the years been accorded to Canadian citizens by the government or other bodies in Great Britain. It is true that these particular honours have been valued very highly. There have been practically uncountable awards of C.B.E.'s, O.B.E.'s and M.B.E.'s, though I hear now that there will be no more of these awarded except to members of the armed forces. One outstanding Canadian is the holder of that great and noble award, the Order of Merit. We have a few who have been made Companions of Honour, and the George Medal has been awarded both to military personnel and civilians.

All these things have added, in their own way, to the character of this nation and its outstanding citizens. Other countries honour their outstanding citizens. I speak now in terms of those who have made names for themselves in the artistic world. While our great neighbour to the south possibly is inclined to reward them in a monetary way —something which is no doubt to their satisfaction—and also with some adulation, which may not be completely to their satisfaction, it seems to me that Canada does nothing for its outstanding sons and daughters. Those who have made names for themselves all too frequently wear foreign decorations, without even the recognition of the United Kingdom and certainly with no recognition from Canada. In fact it would seem the only thing Canada does for its outstanding artists is to feed them to the United States market.

There are a great many persons who come to mind, musicians, painters, sculptors, dramatists, writers and others, and a great many actors and actresses who have made names for themselves not only in the United States but abroad. We have young people who find it impossible to acquire recognition in this country, and certainly impossible to make a living here in their chosen field. They go either to the country to the south or to Europe. Of course, that is for them to decide; but there are great people who stay in Canada, who do wonderful work and pile up for this country great honour and prestige.

One of these great men has just recently been accorded a rare honour. I refer to Dr. Healey Willan, the most famous organist and composer on this continent and one of the greatest in the world. A week or so ago he received from the Archbishop of Canterbury the rare Lambeth degree of doctor of music. He was the only composer not resident in the United Kingdom who was asked to write a homage anthem for the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II. We all, as Canadians, I know rejoice in this recognition of a beloved, outstanding Canadian, but I should like to ask the minister if he does not think it is about time that Canada did something for its distinguished citizens.

I am sure that a few years ago Canadians generally thought when the government of this country refused, on behalf of its distinguished citizens, to accept any titles, something would take the place of that recognition of their services. When it was said that the Canada Medal would be awarded under specific circumstances we all believed it. Now it would seem that either through neglect or design this Canada Medal has faded into the fairy tale realm and there is little or no hope of it being awarded or of anything being suggested to take its place. It fills me with great sorrow, Mr. Chairman, when I see persons of the calibre of the great Dr. Willan, who are not recognized in any respect by their own nation.

I trust that the minister will not treat my remarks lightly but will suggest to his colleague that something be done, and soon, to give suitable recognition of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Michener: I should like to address a few remarks to the minister in his capacity as spokeman for the chief electoral officer.

The Deputy Chairman: I am not going to rule the hon. member out of order, because we are on the departmental item, but if he is going to ask some questions may I point out that there is a separate item under the chief electoral officer and at that time I understand the appropriate officials will be available.

Mr. Michener: My remarks are general. I am not looking for information but I am hoping to give some.

Mr. Pinard: Even if they are general, I cannot see how they could relate to the department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Michener: I am quite prepared, if the minister wishes, to make my remarks when those estimates are being considered, which I take it will be—

The Deputy Chairman: Following the departmental estimates.

Mr. Pallett: I have one question arising out of the discussion this afternoon. Can the minister inform the house if there is actually in existence an approved design for the Canada Medal and if so where it is?

Mr. Pinard: I recall rather faintly that at the time a design was approved. I have even been informed that some time ago some of these medals would have been minted. I cannot give more information than I have; that is all I can give.

Mr. Pallett: Do I understand that there is presently no approved design that could be examined by any member of this house, or no copy of the medal that could be seen?

Mr. Pinard: I think this design appeared in the press some time ago. Perhaps my hon. friend could get some information from the officers of the Royal Canadian Mint.

Mr. Pallett: This question is not asked without foundation. I have made some inquiries, and I am directing my question to the minister who is responsible.

Mr. Pinard: I shall try to look up that and give the information later.

Mr. Regier: I was pleased to have the minister give the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary the assurance that he will be supplied with information concerning the claims of Canadian citizens of Japanese origin. Quite a number of us regretted the hasty manner in which the assets of these Canadians were seized by the custodian of enemy property. All of us, I am sure, regretted the manner in which those assets were disposed of. As a result of those proceedings many of these Canadians applied for compensation. They applied for redress of their grievances. They claimed they had been very shamefully dealt with, and a goodly number of them received further compensation as a result of a commission that was later set up to investigate these claims.

On the whole the findings of this commission were nothing more nor less than a whitewash of the actions of the custodian of enemy property. However, some of these Canadians did receive awards on their claims. When the minister supplies the information I hope he will also be able to supply us with information as to what action was taken against those Canadians who so shamefully possessed themselves of property belonging to their fellow Canadians. What I have in mind, for example, is that some of this furniture was placed in a large warehouse. The warehouse was broken into, and when it came time to sell the furniture it had all disappeared.

There are actually a number of cases where Canadian citizens obtained property at prices that everyone knew to be away out of line. Were any prosecutions launched against those people who collaborated with one another to deprive their fellow Canadian citizens of what they owned? I have in mind even such things as forest holdings. Was any legal action taken against anyone for any of the proceedings in those years?

Mr. Pinard: I shall try to obtain this information, which would possibly be available from the Department of Justice, as to whether any prosecutions were launched. I know the matter was fully investigated by a royal commission at the time, and a number of complaints were made afterwards which were then analysed. I do not think I can add very much to what the report contained at the time, but I shall try to obtain information as to whether any legal action was taken by the Department of Justice and inform my hon. friend.

While I am on my feet I would like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Macleod. The Pension Fund Societies Act, section 16, reads as follows:

> Every society formed under this act shall at all times when thereunto required by the governor in council or by either house of parliament make a full return of their property and of their receipts and expenditure for such period and with such details and other information as the governor in council or either house of parliament requires.

I am informed that none of these societies has yet been required to report according to the provisions of this section.

Mr. Pallett: In the first item of the details on page 501 I note that last year there was a confidential messenger at $2,760. This year none is mentioned in the estimates. Can the minister tell us what the functions that confidential messenger performed that are now no longer required to be performed?

Mr. Pinard: At one time there was a messenger of my department in the Montreal office, and the position was abolished.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the Chipman case. I noticed the minister showed some reluctance to discuss that case. I personally do not take that view. I think we should discuss public business here. If this is not the place to discuss it I do not know where we should discuss it. It would appear to me that whether it was through slackness in the minister's department, or where it was, the Governor General, because I presume he was involved, and certainly Her Majesty were put in an embarrassing position.

The minister has told us the award was cancelled at the request of the potential recipient himself. What was the statement of the potential recipient, a man who perhaps has made history by refusing the Queen's medal? What did he say as to his particular unworthiness, if indeed he admitted that in this particular case? In other words, what was his reason for refusing the medal? Was it fear of attendant publicity?

Mr. Pinard: I think the recipient of that award, who has asked permission to have it cancelled, would be the proper person to indicate why he did that. I suggested before, in dealing with these matters which affect the royal prerogative, I did not think it was in keeping with the high regard in which these decorations are held to speculate as to the reasons which justified the cancellation of the award in this case. All I can say is that the matter was fully investigated and the recipient himself, in order to avoid further controversy, thought it advisable to ask permission to have the award cancelled.

Mr. Knight: The minister says the matter was fully investigated. I think this is a case of too little and too late. It seems to me that the time for a thorough investigation into the matter was when the request came from somebody or other that representations should be made to Her Majesty through the Governor General. I would like to know who it was that initiated those proceedings, who it was that recommended to the minister or to his department, for I presume it would go through that channel, that such a request should be made to Her Majesty through His Excellency. On whose recommendation was the whole thing initiated?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I should give any more information on that. Whoever makes a recommendation or a representation for the awarding of a decoration of that nature, we consider that information and the matter itself as confidential. The same thing applies to recommendations made by the awards co-ordination committee which considers these requests. The same thing applies to the nature of the recommendation that is then made by the Governor General as well as by the minister in charge of the department.

I do not think my hon. friend should ask for more information than that. I am speaking in a way which I think would indicate that. I would not deny that there is a responsibility somewhere. I am not going to say what was the recommendation or what was the nature of the investigation. All I can say is that it was fully investigated and the recipient of the award decided that, in view of the controversy that had arisen, he would ask permission to have the award cancelled. This request of his was transmitted through the Governor General to Her Majesty, who acceded to the request.

I would think in all sincerity that it would be better to avoid speculation as to what were the reasons which justified the action on his part and the recommendation on the part of the awards co-ordination committee. I do not think it would serve a useful purpose. I am not going to say the action was taken lightly, either. I simply followed the request made by the recipient of the medal and transmitted his request through the proper channel.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Is the minister satisfied that the medal should have been awarded?

Mr. Pinard: I do not think I should be called upon to answer that question.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Surely there must be some responsibility somewhere, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pinard: There was quite a controversy in the press. Allegations were made. I had the matter fully analysed by the awards co-ordination committee, and I took the recommendation and transmitted it as it was, the recommendation being that the request made by Mr. Chipman be acceded to.

Mr. Knight: The minister is talking about speculation. I deny that there is speculation. I am interested in facts, not speculation. I am elected here as an opposition member, and I think it is my business to look into these things. It is the responsibility of the department in which I am interested.

Mr. Pinard: I take full responsibility for everything done.

Mr. Knight: The minister does?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Knight: I do not think the minister has fully answered my question in regard to the investigation which took place. When did it take place? Did it take place when the recommendation was made to the department by the minister that the representation should be made to Her Majesty through the Governor General, or did it take place afterward, when there was some doubt as to whether or not the man would accept the award? Surely before the event rather than after the event was the time the department should have made a full and thorough investigation, and not put Her Majesty and His Excellency in the peculiar position of having been requested to make an award and then come along later and say, "Would it please Your Majesty to cancel the award." The thing is ridiculous.

Mr. Pinard: The matter was investigated when the recommendation was first made by the awards co-ordination committee. The recommendation was based on information received from what we considered to be trustworthy sources. I do not think there could be an investigation of the kind that might be undertaken by the Department of Justice, but the investigation was as careful as it could be. After that investigation had been made there was a recommendation for the award of the medal. The second investigation and recommendation were made by the awards co-ordination committee for cancellation, and that second recommendation I transmitted through the ordinary channels to Her Majesty.

Mr. Knight: If an investigation was made previous to the event, then the answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North must be in the affirmative. The hon. member asked whether it was the opinion of the minister, who is responsible for the department, that an award should have been granted. The minister did not answer that.

Mr. Pinard: I said before that I take full responsibility for what happened on the two occasions.

Mr. Knight: If the minister is prepared to take full responsibility I suppose that is all we can do about the matter. The minister admits the department was wrong.

Mr. Herridge: The deputy ministers did not know what they were doing; possibly they were not capable of assessing bravery.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask whether this colossal travesty on the Queen resulted from evidence given under oath? Was evidence taken under oath in support of the application? What is the general system that is followed? I asked the minister a while ago about the committee, and as I remember he said he was the chairman.

Mr. Pinard: I did not give a list of the members, but it is made up of representatives of three or four departments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could the minister give the names of the members of the committee that made this recommendation?

Mr. Pinard: I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This was a serious mistake and it would seem to indicate that there was a slip-up somewhere, a failure on the part of the committee to investigate properly. When the minister is replying would he indicate if there have been other similar incidents?

Mr. Pinard: There have been quite a few cases where cancellations have taken place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But I am referring to cancellations because of mistakes in the awards. Were those cancellations of the type that occurred in the case of Sir Roger Casement who had received certain decorations, including a knighthood, and then became a convicted traitor? An order in council was passed after his conviction removing from him the honours which His Majesty had conferred during the days when he was an administrator of the government of Great Britain and before he launched on a career which ended in his death on the scaffold for treason. In addition to those cases where there have been cancellations because of treasonable activities on the part of the recipients, have there been cases where due to a lack of investigation in peacetime, decorations have been cancelled? If so, would the minister indicate those in his reply?

Mr. Pinard: I never said that this cancellation was made because there had been a lack of investigation. I simply said that the matter was investigated by the awards co-ordination committee, which acted on what it considered to be trustworthy and reliable information upon which to base its recommendations. Afterward representations were made, an investigation was launched and the committee came to the conclusion that they ought to agree to the request made by the recipient to have the award cancelled.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who were the members of the committee which made the award and of the committee which recommended the cancellation?

Mr. Pinard: The same members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who were they?

Mr. Pinard: The undersecretary of state as chairman, and there was a representative of the Governor General, of the Department of National Defence, of the Department of Labour, of the Department of Transport and of the dominion archivist. I do not actually have the names.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister was chairman.

Mr. Pinard: The undersecretary of state.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely you can get the names?

Mr. Pinard: I said that I would get the names.

Mr. Philpott: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that some hon. members on the other side are trying to make a mountain out of a molehill in dealing with this obvious mistake. The gentleman who received this award from this government through a mistake which has now been rescinded in the only common sense way in which it could be done has also for the same act of alleged heroism received the Louis Pasteur medal and the Quebec safety league medal, and has been nominated for the humane society medal. Every one of those agencies which grant those very cherished awards has machinery for checking its awards. It seems to me that this whole publicity simply proves that even if you take reasonable precautions you can make a mistake from time to time, such as happened this week in London when Her Majesty was inveigled into interviewing a fake holder of the Victoria Cross.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Secretary of State if it is the policy of the awards committee or of the department or of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police not to award medals to members of the R.C.M.P. for outstanding bravery in the performance of their duties?

Mr. Pinard: No, I cannot say that there is any such policy. If a request has been made and if a person is entitled to a decoration, surely there would be no objection because he was a member of the R.C.M.P.

Mr. Regier: I understand that some time ago a request was made by various people and organizations, including some members of this house, that an award be given to Corporal Johnstone of British Columbia who in thwarting a bank hold-up absorbed eight of the bandits' shots and in all likelihood saved the lives of a goodly number of people. Instead of an award being granted to him there was great publicity over the fact that he had received a promotion.

Upon investigation I find that he was not given any award at all and that the promotion he received was something he was in line for in any event. The minister admitted to me that he would have received this promotion within six months. It meant an increase of only $25 in his salary, so all the man received by way of award was $150 or six months at $25 per month. To the people of British Columbia that was an insult to the bravery and devotion to duty displayed by this man. If they were going to give him only $150 they should not have bothered giving him anything. The public might have organized and given some recognition of this man's services in the maintenance of law and order.

Mr. Pinard: What I can say is that the R.C.M.P. officer to whom my hon. friend refers may have been deserving of the decoration if he fell within the application of the cases where this award is made, in other words if he performed an act of heroism in saving or attempting to save a human life. But I was informed that the case was never referred to the awards co-ordination committee.

[Mr. Philpott.]

Mr. Regier: In that case I must put on record that the member for Burnaby-Richmond has been getting some cheap publicity, because he appeared on the scene of the accident almost as soon as the police were there. He went on the air and announced to all and sundry that he would see to it that a recommendation would be made that this man be suitably rewarded by a decoration granted by the government. I think that is one of the cheapest political tactics I have ever seen a Liberal member resort to.

Item agreed to.

410. Bureau for translations, $1,162,016.

Mr. Pallett: This item should not go by without some comment. In the minister's report for the year ended March 31, 1955, under "Important publications" on page 29, it says:

> The bureau was called upon to translate several lengthy books and documents, of a scientific nature for the most part, for specialized agencies. Among these are the following:
> "The Key to the Devonian Tetracols",
> "Pisciculture and Biology",
> "Outline of the Yalsutal Economy",
> "Veterinary Medicine",
> "The Cephalopods in the Swedish Cretaceous System",
> "Type and Origin of Chromite Deposits" . . .

These are under the general heading, "Important publications". I wonder whether the minister would enlarge on the translations of these books and tell us for whom they were prepared and particularly to whom they were important.

Mr. Pinard: The bureau for translations, according to the act, is servicing the departments of government and translates whatever publications are referred to the bureau by the different departments. Whether the actual publications to which my hon. friend has referred are important and to whom they are important are matters that were decided solely by the departments concerned.

Mr. Pallett: Am I correct in understanding that these are translations only for other departments?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Pallett: No outside organizations?

Mr. Pinard: No, they are simply done for the departments.

Mr. Small: Under translations you have an appropriation of quite a large amount. I have not added it up. Last year there were about 106 translators, and this year you have 193. Then in your supplementary estimates you have provision for 20 more translators. Are they additions to the staff?

Mr. Pinard: Yes. I might say this regarding these new appointments. In so far as the main estimates are concerned, there are eight new positions. Two of these positions are simply transfers of two translators from the Senate to the bureau for translations; they are not new positions. In other words, they existed under the administration of the Senate and they were transferred, according to the act, to the bureau for translations. There are six positions requested owing to normal increase in work as a result of the requests received from different departments.

In the supplementary estimates there are 20 new positions, which are required as follows. There are six new positions created in the pool to translate publications from English to French, with a view to helping the simultaneous issue of English and French versions of federal publications when this is requested by departments of government. There are also ten positions in a number of departmental divisions in order to meet the increased demand for translation from English to French and from French to English. There are also four positions in the foreign languages division for Russian translation, which has greatly increased recently, and to provide the Department of External Affairs with interpreters for visits of Russian officials to Canada.

I mention this information in regard to the bureau for translations, but I repeat that this bureau is simply servicing the departments according to their needs. The needs have been such that consideration was given to increasing the staff according to the figures I have just given.

Mr. Knight: I should like to ask the minister whether the bureau for translations lends some of its men to the Department of National Revenue in connection with the censorship of foreign language books, or does the Department of National Revenue have its own translators employed on that work?

Mr. Pinard: The only thing that is done as far as our department is concerned is that they have translators who work on the premises in each department when they are asked to do so, but I again say that their work is distributed by the superintendent of translations, that is, the work that is being received from each department. It varies each year. There has been an accumulation of work during recent months and during recent years which justifies the superintendent in asking for further assistance.

Mr. Knight: Are these people connected with the production of Hansard in any way, in doing the translation from one official language to another?

Mr. Pinard: Yes. The debates branch refers to the bureau for translating the work to be done.

Item agreed to.

704. Bureau for translations—further amount required, $62,700.

The Deputy Chairman: There is a supplementary item, 704, for bureau for translations. Shall this item carry?

Item agreed to.

413. Copyright and industrial designs division, including a contribution of $2,100 to the union office for the protection of literary and artistic works, $26,385.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I expect that I should know what this is, but I wonder whether the minister would explain to me what that contribution to the union office for the protection of literary and artistic works is.

Mr. Pinard: This is a contribution made by Canada to the union office for the protection of literary and artistic works. This union has been in existence for quite some time. Canada is a member of the union, and the contribution is a yearly one decided by the union itself. This year there has been a small increase.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Is it an international organization?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, it is an international organization. This year the contribution of Canada, as the contribution of other members, has been increased, and we have agreed because the increase was overdue. It is the result of additional expenditures in the office of the union.

Item agreed to.

Special—

414. To provide for special expenditure in connection with a commission under the Inquiries Act to inquire into the working of the Patent Act, the Copyright Act, the Industrial Designs Act and other related legislation, $20,000.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Could the minister tell us about the progress of the royal commission on patents and copyrights? I see that the vote is much less than last year. Does this mean that the commission has almost finished its work?

Mr. Pinard: As I have already said, the commission expects to complete its work in the course of next year. I was given the impression last year that they might have a chance of finishing this year, but they will not. It is expected that they will complete their work probably in the summer of 1957.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Perhaps the minister could tell us whether that includes trade marks and copyrights.

Mr. Pinard: It includes everything.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is an item about which I am a little curious, in the public accounts for the year 1955, for the Secretary of State, on page XX—5. It shows an item of $11,880 for secretarial services of A. M. Laidlaw. This was about half the amount that was expended during that year. Can the minister tell us who Mr. Laidlaw is, what his work entailed, and whether this amount is for one year or is it a backlog to pay for services for several years? It is such a large amount that I think we should have some information.

Mr. Pinard: I will get the information in a moment. Mr. Laidlaw is secretary of the Ilsley commission. I am just trying to obtain the information with respect to whether that covers only his yearly salary. I am informed that it does.

Mr. Nesbitt: Do I gather from the minister's remarks that is his salary for the year, or does it include salary plus expenses or something of that nature?

Mr. Pinard: He is paid on a per diem basis and that is only his salary. I have now been informed that it also takes care of the payment of his stenographer, and that makes the difference. That includes the payment of the salary of his secretary.

Mr. Nesbitt: In other words, while the figure of $11,880 is shown in the public accounts to be for secretarial services of Mr. A. M. Laidlaw it actually includes Mr. Laidlaw's salary plus the salary of his secretary as well?

Mr. Pinard: Yes.

Mr. Nesbitt: How often does this commission sit and how long—

Mr. Pinard: I am also informed that the figure includes his travelling expenses whenever he has to travel for any reason whatever in connection with the work of the commission.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not wish to pursue the matter any further, but I wonder whether at some future time the minister could give us information breaking down the amount into salary, travelling expenses and his secretary's salary.

Mr. Pinard: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Small: Reverting to item 412, last year there was considerable complaint about the issuing of patents. Is there any improvement this year with respect to the backlog? Has it been cleaned up?

Mr. Pinard: I think it may be useful for me to give certain information on that point, and I am pleased that the hon. member has raised the question. The situation has improved to some extent. Although the backlog of applications has increased to a certain extent this year, this is due to the great increase in the number of applications for patents. As of April 1, 1956, there were pending in the patent office 72,608 cases, an increase of 2,892 over last year. I might say that last year the backlog of cases amounted to 69,716. Applications received this year have reached a figure of 21,048, of which 14,505 applications have been allowed and 3,651 have been abandoned, leaving 2,892 which have been added to the pending cases in the department.

This would look as if the situation has further deteriorated, but it has not, because it is important to note this fact. The waiting period for an application to be examined has been cut down by a considerable margin. As an example, where there were over 15,000 applications which were two and a half years old and not processed in any way on April 1, 1955, there are only 8,575 such applications in the office at the present time. The department expects that by the end of the year it will be possible to reduce the waiting period to two and a half years. I may say that in the United States the delay is longer than that. It is about three and a half years there before the application for a patent is dealt with and a patent awarded or the application rejected.

It may also be of interest to my hon. friend to note this fact. More than 90 per cent of the applications for patents come from non-Canadian applicants. Over 70 per cent come from the United States and quite a proportion from the United Kingdom, France and other countries. About 5 per cent to 6 per cent of these applications originate from Canadian applicants. I mention this fact because it may be of interest to note this point. Since it takes approximately three and a half years to process an application in the United States, applicants are not anxious to have their applications dealt with in Canada before they are dealt with in the United States, and in many cases all they do here is to mark time until the application in the United States has been disposed of.

The result has been an increase in the backlog, which has been quite considerable; but it is not a situation that can be corrected because, as I said before, over 90 per cent of these applications come from non-Canadian residents. In other words, these applications come from other countries. I am told the situation is the same with respect to the United Kingdom. An applicant for a Canadian patent will wait until such time as his application in the United Kingdom has been disposed of.

I do not know if I make myself clear, but I want to say that it is not in reality a real backlog of Canadian applications. Ninety per cent of these 72,000 applications are applications made by non-residents, and there is not very much we can do about it. If we were to say that we would try to process them more rapidly, then the applicant, being interested in having his application dealt with only when the corresponding application has been dealt with in the other country, would use every possible procedure to delay it, and as a request or an application for a patent for an invention can be amended as often as one wishes the result is that the delay is something we cannot do very much about. I want to mention this because in spite of this condition we find that this year we have cut down by a considerable amount the period of delay between the time the application is made and the time it is dealt with.

I also want to say that I have taken up this matter with both the civil service commission and treasury board in order to try to obtain assistance, and I did get some assistance. From April to June of this year we expect that we will have added nine new engineers and eight technical officers to the staff, with the result that the situation will again improve. I mention that because it has been very difficult to obtain assistance. The problem is not only one of salary but of a scarcity of engineers, not being able to secure enough engineers.

The civil service commission and treasury board have agreed to accept our recommendation that technical officers be appointed who are now examiners in order to do that job, and these technical officers do not need to be graduate officers. All they have to have is three years of engineering study, or be bachelors of science. Then they are accepted as assistants to patent examiners. For the first time I think we have made real progress in increasing the staff to an extent that will, I hope, enable the applications to be dealt with more rapidly.

I mention this with the reservation I have made before, namely that the situation is largely due to the fact that the applicants, being also applicants for patents in foreign countries, do not insist on having their applications dealt with in Canada before they are dealt with in the country of origin.

Mr. Small: It is an improvement over last year, the fact that you have increased your staff. That seemed to be the difficulty last year. There was also another complaint or request that was made by the commissioner who said that there was insufficient space for him to do his work properly. Has that situation been improved?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, I can say that situation has been improved also. The Queen's printer has vacated space which it is expected the patent division will now use. I do not think the problem of space exists now. This move will take place in about two months.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I think the picture could be clearer if the minister at some time could tell us what is the average delay between the filing of the applications and the first reports on cases. It is a fact that after the first report has been filed the case is really out of the hands of the patent office and delays are due mainly to replies to be made by the applicants themselves. Still I would be interested if the minister could give us at some time a picture as to the average delay between the filing of the application and the first report of the examiner, because after that his department has no control over any delay.

Mr. Pinard: With the experience my hon. friend has in these matters I think he knows as well as I do that I cannot give a definite answer to that question. This report varies according to practically each case. The first report is never made in the same manner and at the same time. It depends on each application, which is dealt with on its merits. There is no fixed date at which a first report can be made.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I do not mean that. I mean how long does it take a case to reach an examiner for examination? There must be an average. I am sure the commissioner would know that.

Mr. Pinard: I can say this. I have already said that before the report is actually made it takes about two and a half years. It was more than that before. Of course there can be an exchange of information before that. Before the actual final report is made it takes two and a half years.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I am not talking about the final report. I am talking about the first report. When does the examiner get the case?

Mr. Pinard: I do not know what my hon. friend would call the exchange of correspondence between the agent of the applicant and the department. If one of these letters can be called a report, there are a number of reports made, as my hon. friend well knows, and I know he knows.

Supply—Secretary of State

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I am trying to be helpful to the minister and I hope he takes this question properly, because I am going to tell him that it does not take so long to get the first report from the examiner. The average is much closer to eight or nine months, when it is up to the attorney to answer the patent office's report. The average attorney, as he just said, may wait from a month to six months to reply or obtain further delay. I am trying to justify the position of the patent office by stating the fact that the examiners now are in a position to answer within eight or nine months after an application is filed, in most classes of subjects.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, I agree with that. That has cut the margin to two and a half years before the procedure is completed.

Item agreed to.

Office of the chief electoral officer—

57. Salaries and expenses of office, $68,645.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members will find this item on page 11, with the details commencing at page 142.

Mr. Michener: Mr. Chairman, I have a problem I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. It relates to the conflict between voting days and days of religious observance. The hon. member for Spadina was personally involved in this problem in the by-election in Spadina for which he was nominated, and he himself would have raised it today had he not been unavoidably absent. However, it affects all hon. members in some degree and it certainly affects my constituents, because I have a number of constituents of the Jewish faith, which is the principal religious faith outside of the Christian faiths.

I think the problem was pointed up by the regrettable—if I may use that word—event in connection with the last by-election when, as I recall it, the election writs were issued for September 26 which turned out to be one of the principal Jewish religious days, namely the day of atonement. In the case of two by-elections I believe a new date was fixed, October 24.

It seems to me that is a matter which could very simply be avoided in the future, and I have two suggestions to make to the minister. We of course successfully avoid having elections on Sunday.

Mr. Pinard: I agree with that.

Mr. Michener: It is an extension of that principle which might be applied by an amendment to section 21 of the Canada Elections Act to provide that neither a general election nor a by-election may be called or held on specified holy days regarded as such by the people of the Christian faith or the Jewish faith. I mention only those faiths. It may be that when this matter came to be dealt with some further inquiry might be made to see whether there were others who were entitled to have their religious observances respected. I cannot think of any offhand. Certainly one does not suggest that all days of religious observance should be excluded. However, I think a calendar could easily be prepared and be inserted in the act which would meet the reasonable requirements which were overlooked in the instances I have cited.

Another approach to the question would be that which has been adopted in some of the states of the union. I cite the legislation in California. I have a copy of the 1955 assembly bill No. 1760. The bill provides that one who will be unable to go to his polling place on election day by reason of the fact that the tenets of his religion require his attendance at church or religious services on that day or otherwise prevent him from attending at the polls will be classified as an absent voter as defined in the act, and he is entitled to vote at other polls. There they vote by mail, actually. But making an advance poll available would be a solution. Similar legislation is found in some of the other states such as Michigan and Minnesota.

I daresay the problem has been dealt with in many places in different ways. I rather prefer the idea of a calendar, because the solution of using an advance poll would prevent the people involved from taking part in the normal activities of election day and one would not want to deprive anybody of those pleasures.

I therefore commend this problem to the minister. I know he has been thinking about it. I notice that there is no legislation on the matter this session. However, I think it is worthy of notice, particularly as it has come to our attention notably and I hope he will find a solution along one or other of these lines, or something which is perhaps even better which he may devise.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to say a few words while we are discussing this item of the estimates concerning the continuing problem, under our present election act, of the number of Canadian citizens who still find themselves disfranchised on election day. As the minister will recall, earlier this session my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre introduced one proposal which was designed to meet a part of this problem. The minister did not see fit to accept the particular proposal contained in that bill. However, so far as I am concerned even if he had agreed to the proposal for a wider application of the principle of advance polls, there would still remain, in at least certain sections of Canada, quite a substantial number of the electorate who would find themselves completely disfranchised through no fault of their own.

I am thinking particularly of those sections of our population who are engaged in some of the primary production industries, fishermen, loggers and people of that kind, who normally work in some of the more isolated parts of the country. Many of them have a place of residence in one place and are normally working in another. I think perhaps I can best illustrate the problem by referring to a specific situation which arises in the coastal areas of British Columbia whenever an election is held during the summer; June, July or August, whenever it may come. Under the provisions of the act enumeration of the electors takes place at a certain time, and for the purposes of the forthcoming election the people who are then enumerated are the voters at a certain polling area. Then under certain circumstances they may suddenly find that this no longer is their place of residence. This happens, for example, when we have a fire season closure of the coastal areas in British Columbia. At such time virtually the whole population of our large logging camps, which may amount to 400 or 500 working people, are forced to leave that place of residence where they were enumerated and return to some larger centre such as Vancouver, thus finding that on election day they have no opportunity whatever of casting their ballots. That situation, of course, also applies to a large percentage of the fishermen on the coast of British Columbia if the election takes place during the fishing season.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time I have raised this problem in the house. It is one, so far as I am concerned, that should be dealt with in some satisfactory way. Actually the only feasible way I have been able to think of for dealing with it would be by the introduction into our election act of the absentee vote. I realize there may be a great many practical difficulties in the way of the introduction of the absentee vote into our federal elections act, particularly if it were to have application across the whole country. However, I do feel it could be written into the act in a form that would apply at least within the boundaries of a given province. Then if any resident of British Columbia found himself on election day in some other constituency in British Columbia, an arrangement could be worked out whereby he would be entitled to go in a polling place in the area in which he found himself and cast a ballot for a candidate in the constituency where he had been enumerated.

I believe that would be a practical proposition. I think possibly it could be done in such a way that the principle of the absentee ballot could apply in any province where such a provision was already in the provincial election act, and where people would be accustomed to exercising their ballot in that manner.

I know, and probably the minister does, that we have had that principle in the election act of British Columbia for a good many years. Apart from the rather unhappy period when we had the single transferable vote in our provincial election act, the absentee ballot has functioned satisfactorily so far as I have been able to learn. I bring this matter up because I do feel it is something to which the minister and the chief electoral officer should be giving serious consideration.

The number of people who may be disfranchised can vary materially from election to election. Under certain conditions hundreds or thousands of Canadian citizens in a province like British Columbia could be disfranchised through no fault of their own. If one of the logging camps I have mentioned closes down, it means the living accommodation and the cook houses close down as well. These men, whether or not they have any desire to stay in order to exercise their franchise, are compelled to leave. I feel that is a situation which certainly warrants much more serious consideration than it appears to have received up to the present time.

Mr. Pallett: There are three points only that I should like to mention to the Secretary of State on the matter of elections. I would leave them with him for his consideration. The first point relates to the hours of polling set out in the election act. I know that the act was before a committee and was not changed, but I think any act should be the subject of study and revision. There was a member of that committee, who has now gone to the other place, who was rather outspoken about any change at all being made.

I suggest to the minister that the polls should not close at six o'clock but at seven o'clock, whether it be standard or daylight saving time. I feel this would give an opportunity to many people to vote who by reason of not being able to get home, particularly in suburban ridings of the city, cannot cast their ballots. I understand that time for voting is provided in the act, but very often that is hard to get. Many of the provinces have adopted a freer advance poll than is provided for in the federal act. Some have gone so far as to say that if you are going to leave your riding for any reason you may vote at an advance poll.

I would suggest that serious consideration be given to that. After all, it is a person's right to vote, but he also has the necessity of making a living. You have the right and duty to vote as opposed to the necessity of making a living. A man must make a living, but he may wish to exercise his right to vote. I think the problem would be resolved if some provision could be made for allowing anyone who is out of his riding on election day to vote at an advance poll.

My next suggestion, sir, is this. There are many people who are physically unable to vote on election day. I refer to those who are inmates of hospitals, old people's homes and similar institutions.

This may be an unusual suggestion but I have no doubt it has been made before in this house, that some provision be made for a sort of travelling poll under supervision so that inmates of hospitals—

Mr. Pinard: It does exist under section 45.

Mr. Pallett: It is not observed in all constituencies nor in all areas. If the provision is there and is not being carried out, then I would direct the discrepancy to the minister and say that it is not being carried out in all areas where there are hospitals, and many inmates of hospitals are being effectively deprived of the opportunity of voting. I would bring it to the minister's attention.

I have only one further question to direct to the minister, sir. Does he expect that the chief electoral officer will be a little busier than usual this year?

Mr. Marler: The hon. member would be scared by that, I should think.

Mr. Monteith: Before this item carries, will the minister explain what the commissionaire services at $7,365 for 1956-57 are to cover?

Mr. Pinard: They were formerly paid by the Department of Justice, and it has now been decided to have them paid by the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Monteith: Just exactly what are they?

Mr. Pinard: They are the corps of commissionaires who are on duty on election day after hours or rather, they look after the building occupied by the chief electoral officer after office hours when the need exists. They were formerly paid out of the appropriation of the Department of Justice. They are now paid by the chief electoral officer.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Pallett.]

Civil service commission—

84. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $2,599,117.

Mr. Brooks: This item appears on page 15 of the book of estimates and has to do with the civil service commission. I know there are some hon. members who wish to say something on this item, and I do not think it should be put through so quickly.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to speak on item 84?

Mr. Brooks: I would not mind saying a few words.

The Chairman: I understand that item 337 is carried.

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Royal on item 84.

Mr. Brooks: It is item 84 that I was interested in. Is that the one you are calling?

The Chairman: For the information of hon. members, this item deals with the civil service commission. It appears on page 15 and the details commence at page 165.

Mr. Brooks: I want to call attention to what I thought was a discrepancy or an anomalous situation in connection with some of the advertisements of competitions sent out by the civil service commission. I have noted this at different times, but I noted it particularly the other day when I received two of those notices in the same mail. I refer to competition No. 56-745, labour legislation analyst. The initial salary is $3,180, which can go up to $3,780. The qualifications for this particular position are graduation from a university of recognized standing, preferably with specialization in English history or political science. In the same mail I received notice of competition No. 56-378 for a geological lapidary technician. The initial salary is $4,050 and the maximum is $4,500. The qualifications are elementary school education with additional credits for further academic training.

The point I wish to make is that in one instance they were asking for a college graduate who must know something about labour laws and who specialized in English history or political science. The initial salary is $3,180. In the second instance, competition No. 56-378, the initial salary is $4,050. All the qualifications required are an elementary school education.

As I say, it seems to me there is a great discrepancy between the salaries for these two positions. One requires simply an elementary education and the other a college education. Is there any co-ordination among the different departments in the matter of establishing salaries for these different positions? It does seem to me that a situation like this is very poor encouragement to sending boys and girls to college, when a boy with an elementary education can start in with an initial salary of nearly $1,000 above that of a boy with a college education.

Mr. Pinard: Whether there would be a real co-ordinating agency of some kind in the civil service commission which would deal with these differences in salaries suggested at different times I do not know, but there is a study made of salaries paid by the different departments to different categories of civil servants. I know that is a fact because it often happens that I myself raise the point with the commission as to why this salary is paid to a civil servant in one department and that salary is paid to another in some other department. I say that there is always careful study given to that by the commission and I am sure also by the treasury board. If my hon. friend would like to send me the copies of the notices I shall be pleased to look into it and see what the answer would be to his question.

Mr. Brooks: It is six o'clock. Perhaps the information can be given to me when the item comes up again.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Tomorrow we shall continue with these estimates and then take those of mines and technical surveys and veterans affairs.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

SHELLFISH—SANITARY QUALITY PROTECTION

Question No. 535—Mr. Robichaud:

What protection is offered the consumer of shellfish in respect to sanitary quality?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

The sanitary quality of shellfish offered for sale in Canada is safeguarded by the efforts of several agencies.

Among the major responsibilities of the public health engineering division of the Department of National Health and Welfare are:

the certification of approved shellfish producers; the supervision of processing plants to ensure compliance with acceptable standards; and the vigilant surveillance of producing areas with respect to sanitary conditions likely to affect the bacteriological quality of the water overlaying the shellfish beds.

The weekly reports on tests made on shellfish from key areas are carefully scrutinized and action is taken to have areas closed if this is warranted. Samples for these tests are collected by the Department of Fisheries and tested by the laboratory of hygiene of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

All these measures form part of a program designed for the protection of the consumer of Canadian shellfish here and in the United States. The Canadian consumer of shellfish imported from the United States is similarly protected by a rigid control program maintained by the producing states and supervised by the United States department of health, education and welfare under an agreement between that department and the Canadian Department of National Health and Welfare covering mutually acceptable control measures.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

407. Departmental administration, $244,775.

408. Companies division, $91,500.

409. Trade marks division, including a contribution of $3,800 to the international office for the protection of industrial property, $176,360.

410. Bureau of translations, $1,162,016.

704. Bureau for translations—further amount required, $62,700.

Patent and copyright office—

411. Administration division, $127,225.

412. Patent division, $1,209,633.

413. Copyright and industrial designs division, including a contribution of $2,100 to the union office for the protection of literary and artistic works, $26,385.

Special—

414. To provide for special expenditure in connection with a commission under the Inquiries Act to inquire into the working of the Patent Act, the Copyright Act, the Industrial Designs Act and other related legislation, $20,000.

Office of the chief electoral officer—

57. Salaries and expenses of office, $68,645.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 5, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION FOLLOWING INCIDENT AT POZNAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, arising out of the situation in Poznan, Poland. Will the Canadian government give consideration to an immediate communication with the Polish government to signify its disapproval of tyrannical or barbarous punishment being imposed upon those who participated in the Poznan incident and to ask for mercy on their behalf? I wish to ask also whether the Canadian government has given any consideration to joining with the United States in this regard, to the end that justice will be tempered with mercy.

Hon. Roch Pinard (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I shall take this question as notice and refer the matter to him.

NEWFOUNDLAND—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHTS OF CANADIANS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Roch Pinard (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), and in my absence on Monday, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) asked the following question:

> By what authority is the United States air force forbidding Canadian civilians employed by them at Newfoundland bases to participate in Canadian political activities, as reported in the Sunday Herald, St. John's, Newfoundland, under date of July 1, 1956? Is this not an improper interference with the rights of Canadian citizens by a foreign power?

Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to that question, which will no doubt be also of interest to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill).

The Department of External Affairs has made inquiries and has learned that the United States northeast air command, on its own initiative, sent a letter to its Canadian employees on May 12, 1956, informing them that the provisions of the Canadian Civil Service Act regarding participation of civil servants in federal and provincial elections would be applied in principle to Canadian civilian employees of northeast air command.

The government is satisfied that the action of northeast air command, although inappropriate, was well-intentioned. After discussion between the United States and Canadian authorities, it was decided that northeast air command would rescind the instruction to Canadian employees regarding political activities.

GRAIN

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED CLOSING OF ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): On June 29, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) requested a statement about dredging in the Fraser river adjacent to the dock operated by the Searle Grain Company.

This elevator and wharf are leased by the New Westminster harbour commissioners to the Searle Grain Company Limited. Under the terms of the lease the lessor, that is, the New Westminster harbour commissioners, has assumed certain responsibilities to endeavour to have maintained at all times adequate and sufficient depth of water in the berths and in the channel to and from the main channel of the Fraser river, to enable ocean-going vessels to enter, lie at and depart from the usual loading berths.

The present lease expires August 31, 1956, and discussions are being conducted between officials of the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport, the lessor and the lessee with regard to the respective responsibilities for the cost of future dredging.

BRIDGES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT ON FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN COST OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): On June 29, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) asked for comment on a report that the British Columbia government has made a formal application to Ottawa to have the federal government pay half the construction costs of two lower mainland bridges and the Deas island tunnel.

The situation is this. In a letter dated June 12, the minister of highways for the province of British Columbia wrote me, and I quote from his letter, as follows:

> ...You will note a change from Langley Prairie to the city of Vancouver via the Deas island tunnel and the Oak street bridge, then across Burrard inlet via the second narrows bridge and the upper levels highway. This request has been placed before you at the instructions of my government. I would appreciate it if you would let me know forthwith if this could be included in schedule "A" and if not if we were able to know immediately then we could forward to you a further revised schedule "A" for your consideration.

On June 25 I replied and dealt with that part of Mr. Gaglardi's letter as follows:

> The revision from Langley Prairie to Horseshoe Bay I do not feel meets with the intent of the agreement in providing the shortest practical route. As recently as February 23, 1956, at your request, we approved of a revision in location between Abbotsford and the Pattullo bridge and this location with extension to the eastern boundary of the city of Vancouver, as presently designated, is the most direct and therefore most appropriate in keeping with the spirit of the Trans-Canada Highway Act. In addition, under P.C. 1277 of March 7, 1952, as prior construction, we have paid $577,795 on the Pattullo bridge. Under these circumstances, I feel that the route from Langley Prairie to Vancouver should remain as in the present schedule "A".

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STATEMENT RESPECTING TELEVISION SERIES "THIS IS OTTAWA"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question asked on Tuesday, July 3, by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) regarding the C.B.C. television series "This is Ottawa", I am informed by the C.B.C. that the purpose of the series was to provide a visual impression of some of the varied aspects of Ottawa in its role as the national capital. Having regard to the limited number of program periods available, six periods of one-half hour each, it could not be considered and, in fact, was not planned as an historical review or a definitive documentary of the city of Ottawa.

The six programs are intended to deal with six different aspects of Ottawa as the national capital, an introduction to the national capital, Ottawa as an historic centre, as a diplomatic centre, as a centre of government research, as a cultural centre and as the home of parliament. I am informed that those connected with the planning and production of the series experienced great difficulty in resolving the multitude of choices available in a city such as Ottawa and that programming and technical considerations as well as the convenience of the persons associated with each program of necessity had to be taken into account in choosing the locale to be related to the program.

I am informed that it was a matter of regret to the planners of this particular series that the mayor of Ottawa was unable, owing to a conflicting commitment, to accept an invitation to participate in the first program of the series dealing with the introduction to the national capital. I am further informed that limitations on the length of the series together with program and technical considerations made it impossible to include all the outstanding national sites such as Rideau Hall and Earnscliffe that the planner would have liked to include had not such limitations prevailed.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the minister or the C.B.C., who have furnished this statement to him, do not think there was just as much reason to include Earnscliffe, the home of the first prime minister of this country, or the home of the late Sir Robert Borden, as there was to include Laurier house in a television production of this kind?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Speaker, personally I would agree that the hon. gentleman's contention is quite valid but, as explained, the limitations involved in a series of six programs precluded their taking these particular items into account.

Mr. Fleming: They did not preclude them from including Laurier house.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Is the C.B.C. going to follow the very excellent program on Sunday night, having to do with the Charlottetown conference leading up to confederation, with other aspects of the confederation conferences and of Canadian history? I think it was one of the best programs I have ever seen and the impersonations of Sir John A. Macdonald and the other figures were quite remarkable. I think they are to be congratulated.

Mr. McCann: I agree with the hon. gentleman that it was an excellent program. I saw it myself, but whether or not they are planning further programs along that line I am not informed.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

NATIONAL GALLERY—FURTHER PURCHASES OF LIECHTENSTEIN PAINTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the national gallery negotiating with the Prince of Liechtenstein with regard to any further picture or pictures? If so, is it contemplated that such purchases will be made with public or with private funds?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that there are some conversations going on but I do not think at the present time they could be described as negotiations.

AIR TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF LANGLEY AS SECONDARY AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport possibly the acting minister would care to take this question as notice. In view of the controversy raised by the residents of White Rock, British Columbia, over the choice of White Rock site as a secondary airport to Vancouver international, and in view of public concern over frequent air crashes on this continent, what consideration if any is being given the use of Langley airport for that purpose?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to call the question to the attention of the Minister of Transport.

EGGS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BASIC PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had a question to direct to the Minister of Agriculture, but I see that he is not in his seat. I wonder whether I might direct it to his parliamentary assistant. Has any consideration been given by the government to meet the request of the Saskatchewan poultry association that the basic price of 38 cents per dozen for grade A large eggs be increased to meet the increased cost of production? If so, could the minister give assurance that any price increase will go to the producer?

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as to the question asked by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, may I say that I have not seen the request that the Saskatchewan poultry association has sent down. As the hon. member knows, the price for eggs at the present time is above the floor price. But any request that has come from this association will receive every consideration from our department.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Civil service commission—

84. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $2,599,117.

Mr. Pinard: Before we proceed again with the estimates of the civil service commission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to correct the information I gave to the hon. member for Oxford yesterday concerning an item in the public accounts concerning a sum of $11,880, paid to Mr. A. M. Laidlaw for secretarial services. I then informed him that this amount of $11,880 comprised secretarial services and the payment of salary of his secretary. I now find that the sum comprises only the total amount of fees at the rate of $60 per day paid to Mr. Laidlaw for his services as secretary to the Ilsley commission for the financial year 1954-55. I might add that the commission has not hired the services of a counsel and Mr. Laidlaw also gives advice to the commission as counsel. I would think that the fee paid to him is quite reasonable on these assumptions.

While I am giving this information, I should like also to answer a question asked of me by the hon. member for Royal concerning notices which were issued by the civil service commission in which he found that the salaries offered for the two positions were not, in his estimation, justified. In other words, one of the salaries appeared to be too high in view of the qualifications that were required, and in the other case the salary was much lower than, in his estimation, it should have been. At the same time, he asked me whether there was a co-ordination agency of some kind in the civil service commission to deal with the different salaries paid for different positions in the different departments of government.

I am now informed that the civil service commission is responsible for co-ordinating the salaries of the different positions as between departments, and is responsible for assuring that the salaries paid throughout the service are equitable and uniform, based upon the duties and responsibilities of the positions involved. In this case the technical position advertised was that of geological lapidary technician, competition No. 56-378, and that is a supervisory position. The qualifications require supervisory ability. The appointee must be skilled in the particular activity and make thin sections of the most difficult type including radioactive ores; he must direct and supervise the preparation of ores and rocks for study under reflected light; check thin sections under a miscroscope; improve, and develop new techniques; consult with and give advice to members of the scientific staff. The qualifications, as a result, require a number of years of experience in this or related work and evidence of ability to perform the highly specialized work involved.

In the other case, the position advertised was that of a labour legislation analyst. In this case it is a junior position on the technical staff and it is indicated that the duties of the appointee are to note criticisms, to summarize legislative decisions; to prepare reports and correspondence and articles. The incumbent of this position is not required to exercise supervision and no prior experience is required. The position calls for those who have specialized in particular academic fields, and for those who have some knowledge of labour legislation and labour problems. In other words, it may be true that, in spite of the fact that one has to be a graduate of a university and gets a smaller salary, he has to accomplish minor functions, while in the case of this geological technician, although there is no need for graduation from a university but simply an elementary school education, he has to have highly technical qualifications, which justifies the fact there is a higher salary offered.

Mr. Hahn: Before the item carries, I have an observation to which I feel the minister should give some thought, with respect to an item on page 167, office stationery, supplies and equipment. I note that for the ensuing year the expenditure on office stationery, supplies and equipment is to be $98,000, which is a decrease of $12,000 from last year. I am very happy to see that consideration is being given to decreasing the expenditures on stationery. I raise the question because frequently we receive through the mail certain envelopes which I am sure are quite costly, much more so than the smaller ones.

I hold in my hand a large brown envelope addressed to Mr. Ernest G. Hansell, M.P., Box 417, Vulcan, Alberta. The postal date on it is 30,11,55, which would be the 30th day of the 11th month, which would be November, 1955. In the envelope sent out by the civil service commission there were three paltry sheets. It would have been much simpler to have folded these sheets and put them in a much smaller envelope. I am satisfied that these envelopes cost a great deal more than ones one-third the size. I make this statement because this is not a single instance. I have another envelope in my hand which is postmarked the same date, 30,11,55, and addressed to the same gentleman. It contains four sheets of paper which indicate that certain civil service positions are vacant, and which we would ask the people of Canada to apply for so that the positions would be adequately looked after. I am satisfied that all hon. members get these envelopes from time to time. I have another one postmarked 5,12,55, which is the fifth day of December, 1955. In this instance the envelope contains four sheets.

In this morning's mail I received an envelope addressed to myself dated the 4th day of this month. It is another large envelope. I might say that in between times we have received many others as well. I am just picking these out because I was able to lay my hands on them. In this particular envelope there is an advertisement for a particular job with respect to engineers and architects. It applies to only one particular position. I realize that we do have to spend money to send these advertisements all over the country, but I am wondering whether we have reached the same stage in this country that the United States of America found itself in just a short time ago when they found it necessary to set up the Hoover commission to examine into the paper work that was being done in that country. I feel that the department of the Secretary of State is at least showing good business sense by reducing the expenditures on the paper work that it has to do. I am not singling out this particular department by bringing this to the attention of the government, but it is not an uncommon thing to find that we are so much bound up by red tape in reports of different kinds that we are spending many times more than we should necessarily spend on paper work. I am satisfied that this in itself could well develop into a fine patronage program. I am also satisfied that that is probably not so in the minister's department because the expenditure involved in this department is so small that it would not lend itself greatly to that purpose. I would ask that not only his department but every department of government examine more closely into expenditures in so far as paper work is concerned and see whether or not it would be desirous to set up not a commission but an inquiry board or a firm that makes it its business to examine into better methods of administering in order to do away with the colossal expenditure on paper in this country. The paper industry is an important one in Canada; it is an important industry in my riding. I do not think, however, it should necessarily be subsidized by the Canadian people when we find there are so many countries desirous of obtaining paper.

I might just illustrate to the minister the fact that industry does have this same difficulty and that it is recognized from time to time. I understand there was a certain firm in the United States that examined into its paper work. In the railway committee this year I inquired of Donald Gordon if we were doing anything in this respect in the railway business and he indicated to me the railway had given it some thought and not only that but they had revised their filing system at the suggestion of experts. Perhaps this question should be examined to see if any improvement could be made in the government.

The government of the United States is the only one that is carrying out this type of work, to the best of my knowledge. They found, for instance, that for each federal government employee they issued 25,000 pieces of paper per year. They compared that with certain industries and I must admit some of the industries were worse than the government in this respect. One industry issued 34,000 pieces of paper per employee per year, another one issued 56,000 and a third issued 64,000. Perhaps we do not issue too many pieces of paper per employee per year in the government but I do say we are spending too much money for paper work when we continue to send out bulletins in envelopes of this size.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, about the civil service commission I wish to make a few brief comments, and I shall also take the liberty of addressing one or two questions to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pinard).

If I remember well, in September of last year, I think, Mr. Bland, the then chairman of the civil service commission, retired and was replaced by Mr. Nelson, the present incumbent, who, I am told, has all the qualifications and knowledge required for such a high post. He is being assisted by a compatriot of mine from the province of Quebec, Mr. Alexandre Boudreau, also a member of the commission. In view of the importance of this organization, I wonder whether or not the department intends to fill as soon as possible the vacancy created by the retirement of Mr. Bland.

I understand that Messrs. Boudreau and Nelson are not on too friendly terms, with consequent inconvenience in the first place to themselves, and perhaps more particularly to the commission itself.

As things now stand at the civil service commission, I sense a danger, because those who have to deal with the various commissioners must of necessity meet them individually, since they are not together, and the danger I sense is that we are human as are also members of the commission, and because the party now in power is so mighty, numerically, we can well fear that pressures be exerted individually on the commissioners in favour of some applicant who has taken part in competition for any position in the civil service.

I am also informed that, since Easter 1951, there has not been a full meeting of the commission. I am going to repeat this, as the hon. Secretary of State's attention was directed elsewhere. As I said, I am informed —and have every reason to believe that the information is reliable—that the commission has not held a plenary sitting since Easter 1951; I mean that there has been no recorded official meeting attended by the secretary of the commission.

I submit these few remarks to the hon. Secretary of State, because I trust he will give the matter his best attention and will correct this anomaly which, to my mind, is deplorable and should not be.

As to the appointment of the third commissioner, I think, if I remember rightly, that it was the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) who, last year, suggested the appointment of a woman commissioner. Nobody objected to this suggestion, and I believe that the government tried, by various means, to find a woman who would accept this appointment.

However, may I be permitted to submit to the house that this commission cannot be efficient unless it is fully staffed at the executive level, unless all its members are present, unless they meet periodically and unless proper records are kept of the proceedings at their meetings. Should the government experience any difficulty in finding a woman to fill the post now vacant within the commission, I suggest that this appointment be made in any event without further delay, in the interests of the commission, to begin with, and of all its employees.

I have nothing more to add on this point, Mr. Chairman. I have directed these remarks to the Secretary of State who will no doubt take them into serious consideration.

Before concluding, I would like to ask whether it would not be possible—this is a mere suggestion—to bring under the civil service commission all the stenographers at present employed in the House of Commons. Everybody knows that, for the last few years, House of Commons stenographers are employed, just as we are, for the best part of the year. In 1955 the session lasted eight months; the year before it had lasted seven. This year it will certainly run into its eighth month. If, after a close study of the matter, it could be decided to bring these women and girls under the civil service commission in order to give them stable employment, for which they would be paid on an annual basis, I think it would prove to be a great help to a number of them.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to answer briefly some of the points raised by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dufresne).

He raised a number of them. If I remember rightly he began by referring to the allegedly strained relations which exist—or so he was told—between the present two members of the commission, Messrs. Nelson and Alexandre Boudreau.

I must say that, since July 1, 1954, that is to say from the time I was first called upon as a cabinet minister to concern myself more directly with the work of the commission, I have had no occasion to observe that such a state of affairs did, in fact, exist. I am obviously not in a position to say whether there are any personal differences between them that could justify such a statement. However, as far as I am concerned, I have always found among them a desire to cooperate, and I had on various occasions the opportunity of seeing them together and of working with them. I have always been on excellent terms with the members of the commission.

The hon. member also mentioned the vacancy that has existed since the retirement of Mr. Bland, the former chairman of the commission.

Indeed, it is important that the commission be at its full establishment although two members constitute a quorum for its sittings. Besides, that is a wish which I expressed myself on various occasions, a wish that I would like to implement at the earliest possible moment. I may add that that is a position the government will have to take in due course and that, when a decision is made, I shall announce it to the house. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has already indicated, in January, that the government intended to appoint a lady to fill the position of third commissioner. I feel confident that the government will make this appointment within a few months. We shall then have a full commission that will be able to carry out its work more efficiently.

The hon. member for Quebec West also stated that the commission or the commissioners had not met formally, so to speak, since 1951. That may be because of the fact that the commissioners, who were in the habit of keeping minutes of their meetings, decided to do without these minutes for reasons best known to themselves, which they however explained to me, and also for reasons of economy. They thought it advisable to act on that decision but they still keep, I am sure, a rather complete summary of their meetings. I must also point out to my hon. friend that they meet as soon as a problem arises and as often as is warranted by circumstances. Moreover, there is no doubt that they call on each other, that they see each other, and work together, even though this coming together does not take the form of an official meeting.

As for the last suggestion of my hon. friend concerning the stenographers of the House of Commons, I believe that problem is the sole concern of the House of Commons itself. That would more properly come under the estimates of the Speaker of this house.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to leave the minister under the impression that relations are strained between Mr. Nelson and Mr. Boudreau. Besides, I did not make that statement. I am sure the minister understood that. I merely reported what has been told to me and I have no doubt that my information is correct, but I repeat that I did not make that statement myself.

However, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the members of the commission hold an important position, one which should require their presence twelve months a year.

Far be it from me to criticize the only French-speaking member of the commission, Mr. Alexandre Boudreau, whose ability is fully recognized. However I know that, when he was sent on a special mission to Cambodia, Mr. Boudreau had to be away nearly a whole year, I believe. Unfortunately he was not replaced during his absence, and it might be interesting to know who took over the work and duties assigned to him.

The minister told us that, on the basis of a statement of the prime minister, he was confident that, perhaps within the next few months, a woman would be appointed a member of the civil service commission. I hope that it will be possible to bring this about very shortly, within a few weeks at the very utmost, since I feel that it is absolutely essential that this vacancy be filled at the earliest possible moment. I would still like to know, however, if the minister has enough information at this time to tell us whether this new woman member of the commission will be chosen from among the present personnel of this body, and if she has shown herself to be competent in this regard.

The minister also referred to what I have called official meetings of the commission. He told us that, according to the information at his disposal, the course taken had been chosen for reasons of economy. I frankly believe that whoever gave him that information is quite irresponsible. To my mind it is not possible to save any money by refusing to have the secretary present at these official meetings of the commission. I will even go so far as to suggest that these meetings should be held periodically.

As to the stenographers of the House of Commons, whom I mentioned just now, I thank the hon. minister for his information. They are, no doubt, under the jurisdiction of the house itself, and I shall be pleased to raise the point during the discussion concerning the Speaker's estimates.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few very brief observations following the supplementary remarks just made by the hon. member for Quebec West.

First of all, so far as the absence of the French-speaking commissioner, Mr. Boudreau, is concerned, which extended from November 1954 until May 1955, I must point out to my hon. friend that, during this period, Mr. Boudreau carried out some work of great value for the United Nations, which should be recognized. His absence was, nevertheless, made up for by one of the most competent French-speaking officials of the commission, the assistant director of the classification division, Mr. George Gauthier, who replaced him and rendered valuable services to the commission. On many occasions, I had the opportunity to have talks with him, which were highly profitable to both of us. I think he too deserves congratulations for the excellent job he accomplished in the absence of commissioner Boudreau.

The hon. member for Quebec West also asked for information concerning the woman who will eventually be appointed commissioner, to fill the existing vacancy. I must say, in this regard no decision has yet been taken which would allow me to answer his question constructively.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, just a word about Mr. Boudreau's journey. I have always recognized Mr. Boudreau's ability, and the fact that the government entrusted him with this mission at the United Nations really proves his competency. I merely sought to shed some light on the situation. I thank the minister for the information he gave me concerning Mr. Gauthier. There is no doubt that, if he is from the province of Quebec, and if it was considered advisable that he should replace Mr. Boudreau, he must have had all the required qualifications, and it was a pleasure for me to hear the minister pay him such an eloquent tribute.

(Text):

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, there is one aspect of the work of the civil service commission about which I should like to say a few words. I am rather amused when I hear arguments put forth from time to time by various members of the house in which they hurl such charges as patronage and so on at the government so far as appointments to the civil service are concerned. I think I can say fairly honestly that in the province of British Columbia a federal civil service position is one of the lowliest of positions to which a wage earner can aspire. It is only those people who have a socal consciousness, who are willing to put aside their selfish interests, who are willing to serve the community rather than acquire any money for themselves, who are willing to work for the federal government.

As an aside, I should like to recommend to the civil service commission that an application for a position with the federal government that is accompanied by a recommendation from the local member of parliament should be automatically ruled out because in my opinion any would-be civil servant who does not hold the necessary qualifications for the position and needs the support of a local politician should be automatically disqualified.

I am not one to condone waste on the part of any department of the government, and that also includes the civil service. Like the hon. member for New Westminster, who has already spoken, I was a little surprised this morning when I received this huge, impressive looking envelope containing only three or four sheets of paper all of which could have been enclosed quite adequately in a much smaller envelope or might not even have needed an envelope at all but only my name on the outside of the folder.

I want to speak about one aspect of the civil service commission that has for some time now, at least to those of us in the west, seemed most unrealistic, and that is its failure to recognize the salaries that are available to men of ability with qualifications in fields other than the civil service. Just as one example, I hold in my hand an advertisement by the civil service commission asking for applicants for the position of superintendent of schools at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories. The salary offered is $5,330 to $5,970 per annum. I have in my other hand a copy of the latest issue of the B. C. Teacher wherein they publish the salary scales obtaining for the province of British Columbia. I see that the city of Vancouver offers a teacher with similar qualifications, but without having to assume any responsibility of supervision or superintending whatsoever, a salary as high as $6,200 a year. New Westminster offers $5,900 a year. In Burnaby they are offered a possible $6,050 a year. I could go on further. In West Vancouver they are offering $6,200 a year. This is for the ordinary classroom teacher. The civil service commission attempts to obtain a superintendent of schools at $5,330. We can well imagine what sort of applicant they are likely to get. I see that the commission itself recognizes the utter ridiculousness of the situation because under the qualifications they call for a provincial first-class teaching certificate. In other words, the civil service commission is quite prepared to send a man who has a first-class teacher's certificate up into that part of Canada to be a superintendent of schools and to be superior to the principals there who may have their Bachelor's degree, their Master's degree or possibly even their Doctor's degree and are likely to know one hundred times as much about the profession as does the so-called federal civil servant, the superintendent of schools.

[Mr. Regier.]

I have another circular here in which an assistant superintendant of schools at Fort Smith is called for at a salary of $4,750 a year. Some of our primary teachers in western Canada receive that salary without any degree whatsoever. Then I have another one here calling for a current affairs officer for the Department of National Defence, a most responsible position, where a man is supposed to be responsible for the supplying of reliable information for the education of members of our armed services—adults—in Canada. They call for graduation from a university, majoring in history, economics or geography. They call for a number of years' experience in the writing of articles and the editing of manuscripts. They are offering the magnificent sum of $4,750 which again, I submit, is most unrealistic.

Economists are called for by the Department of Agriculture. In information circular No. 56-18 the terms of employment are given. Salaries begin at $3,300 per annum. Surely any economist who is willing to work for $3,300 a year must be either completely self-effacing or a worthless fellow who has been thrown into the discard heap by all the other possible employers throughout Canada.

Then we have an advertisement—and I find this advertisement all the time; I receive one of them almost every week—calling for a librarian, at a salary of $3,030. They call for a Bachelor's degree in library science. Anyone with a Bachelor's degree in library science can go to almost any one of our urban school boards and receive a salary that is much in excess of that.

Then in order to educate the members of the Canadian armed forces, they call for a staff training officer at Halifax, Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Vancouver. There is one position, grade 3, with the salary of $4,360. The qualifications are graduation from a university of recognized standing; responsible work experience, part of which must have been in a supervisory capacity; ability to organize, conduct and develop courses of instruction and group discussion; ability to deal with senior officers. I could go on.

I see here that electrical engineers are called for and are being offered $6,840 per annum whereas I understand that an electrical engineer worth his salt is worth $18,000 in private industry any day. However, I think this is one of the best of them all. They call for customs excise officers in Quebec—where it may be a good salary; I do not now—and also in British Columbia at a salary of $215 a month.

Mr. Dufresne: It is not any better in Quebec than it is any place else.

Mr. Regier: It is not a decent salary even in the province of Quebec; thank you. No decent, self-respecting individual who has a family to look after is going to consider a salary of $215 a month. You cannot maintain a household these days on that salary. I am not surprised when we find complaints against the manner of service offered by the civil servants of Canada when that is what the commission thinks is an adequate remuneration.

Then they call for information and records engineers and offer a salary up to $4,620 a year. Many people completely unskilled in any profession at all in western Canada earn that much in a year. Another position advertised is that of hospital nursing assistant. The salary offered is $1,920 a year. For ward clerks they offer $1,800 a year. A waitress working in any cafe in eastern Canada, if she includes the tips she gets, would not consider looking at a salary like that. It used to be an honour throughout Canada to be an employee of the government of Canada. It is no longer so today. I realize the civil service commission is not entirely to blame but I do feel in the relationships the civil service commission's recommendations play a very important part.

Here I find the Canadian pension commission is asking for doctors for $6,700 a year. I doubt very much whether you can find an honest, reputable doctor in Canada who will admit that he earns only $6,700 a year. We must remember one thing in connection with these young people. When they apply for these positions, we at least hope that they intend to make a lifetime career in the public service. When we offer a doctor $6,700 a year I submit that we are not inviting him in any way shape or form to make the public service a career. I see lawyers being called for by the department of the Minister of Justice and being offered $5,700 a year. An LL.B. degree from a university is not sufficient; oh, no. They must have been admitted to the bar. They must have had experience. Yet they are being offered less than $500 a month. Miners in British Columbia earn that kind of money. You do not need a university degree or you do not need to be admitted to the bar and to have served a period of apprenticeship to merit that type of salary.

I see that a lecturer in civil engineering is called for. He has not only to be a civil engineer but he must be able to lecture in civil engineering. He is being offered less than $400 a month; the salary offered is $4,620 a year. Then I see that they are asking for a lecturer in economics. Not only must he be an able economist himself but he must be able to lecture to others in economics. The salary offered is $4,620 a year. I have others here. I see that a dental surgeon is being called for. I should not say that one is being called for. I see there are vacancies at Quebec city, Moose Factory, Sioux Lookout, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Regina, Calgary, Prince Rupert, Chilliwack, Vancouver, Fort Smith and Aklavik. This shows what is happening as a result of the unrealistic attitude taken by the civil service commission. They need not one dental surgeon but they have vacancies in six different places in Canada at the same time.

Now, this is one particular occupation about which I have had a lot of complaints. The Indians of Canada are not receiving the dental care with which the minister would like to supply them and the main reason, I am informed, is the inadequacy of the salaries being offered to dental surgeons. We see evidence of that when they list vacancies at 12 different places in Canada at one and the same time. The commission is offering a salary of $6,300 a year. I realize that since the time some of these figures I have read into the records were published there has been an increase for most of the civil servants in Canada, if not all. However, I am confident that even with the increase the relative position of these people as opposed to those in private enterprise or those who enlist for service in municipal and other governmental institutions in Canada will show that the federal service is becoming a beggar's job indeed. It is only the loyalty of those people that causes them to continue to serve.

There is one more advertisement I want to put on the record and it is for a lecturer in chemistry at the Royal Military College, Kingston. He is offered the magnificent sum of $4,950 per annum. It is not surprising, Mr. Chairman, that so many of these forms give evidence of the desperate situation in which the civil service commission finds itself. These advertisements list not only the salary but the benefits as well. They make a big noise about the other benefits the servant will receive, such as three weeks' annual holidays; sick leave; contributory superannuation; optional hospital and medical insurance plan and low cost term insurance. These things are not news to the average young man walking into the post office in New Westminster. Since we have no post office in Burnaby, I cannot mention that.

A young man walks in and reads these advertisements. He sees all these other benefits, but he finds nothing exceptional in them. Out west these things are no longer mentioned in advertisements for employees. They are accepted as the natural benefits that employees receive. Almost anyone working for a worthwhile organization, anyone belonging to a union, enjoys these benefits and more than those listed here. I realize there may be places where they are an added lure with which to get the innocent into the civil service. However, I feel the time is long overdue in Canada when we must once again make the remuneration of civil servants such that other people in Canada will want to apply for a position in the civil service. This should be an occupation that is looked upon, not with pity, but in a manner that would foster in the young people of Canada a desire to serve the community at large in the knowledge that if they did serve the community at large they would be well rewarded or rewarded at least as well as the average person who does not work for the community at large but in his own more immediate interest.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, everything that has been said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam regarding the western provinces also applies to my province of Quebec.

Mr. Bell: I wonder if the minister is in a position to say what changes are being made in the civil service commission offices in the maritimes. Specifically, I should like to know why it was necessary to move the office from Saint John to Moncton. I should like to know what plans are being made for Halifax. Will the office remain there? I should like to know also if any other changes are contemplated.

Mr. Pinard: I have just been informed, and the hon. gentleman will probably be pleased to hear, that there are no further changes contemplated in that section of his province. Those changes that have taken place were for the purpose of trying to centralize the work of the commission in one office instead of having offices which did not serve the purposes the commission must keep in mind.

Mr. Bell: Do I have my information correct, then, that the main office for the maritimes now will be in Moncton, and they will keep sub-offices in Saint John and Halifax?

Mr. Pinard: That is correct, yes.

Mr. Carter: I should like to say a few words about the civil service commission. Like my friend the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I too studied the civil service notices that have been issued for various competitions. It seems to me that the civil service commission is tending to defeat its own ends in many ways. I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that the salaries offered are small when compared with the qualifications that are required. The argument has been put forward that civil service salaries are small in comparison with industrial salaries because of the security factor. This argument does not hold up, because so far as I can see today the civil servant does not have any more security than he would have in industrial life.

I know of two gentlemen in my own riding who were civil servants before confederation. In accordance with the terms of union, they were taken into the federal civil service, but their positions were washed out. They were operators of a bait depot. The department leased the bait depots to private interests and those jobs were washed out. I believe these people had had 10 years' service and had been looking forward to superannuation, but the job disappeared and their security disappeared along with it. The security factor, therefore, is not an argument in favour of low salaries.

The other thing I should like to point out is that the qualifications that are listed often make such great demands that it narrows the number of people who apply. There are a good many people who are capable, who are honest people and who are modest. They read these qualifications and say, "Well, I am not good enough for that, so I will not apply." They do not apply because they do not feel they have the qualifications listed and it is no use for them to do so. What happens then? Some person who is not nearly so modest will apply, and when the competition is run you get a number of people who are, perhaps, inferior to the people who would have applied if the qualifications listed had not made such high demands.

The other point that occurs to me in connection with this problem is that the application forms for civil service positions require almost a person's biography. He has to list all his previous jobs for the last 10 years and I believe that, too, defeats the purpose the commission had in mind because very often the applicant is a jack-of-all-trades. He has certain qualities which do not enable him to keep the job he has, so he flits from one job to another. He may fill out the whole back of the sheet with the 10 or 12 different positions that he has had within the past 10 years, and he gets credit for that and also for his experience, and very often it is the wrong kind of experience that he gets credit for. I would suggest that the commission revise these forms and also the requirements they ask for when they advertise these positions.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the Secretary of State a question. I presume that civil servants throughout Canada have a standard lunch hour. Do any of the officials in any of the departments consider that they have some control over what the civil servant does during his or her lunch hour, or is the civil servant in question entirely free to do what he or she wishes at that time?

Mr. Pinard: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the only answer I can give is that I have just been informed the civil service commission feels that during the lunch hour civil servants should be considered as persons who are in a position to eat their meals quietly and to digest them properly so that they should not be obliged to report and say what they are going to eat and at what time they are going to eat. They are perfectly free in that lunch hour.

Mr. Herridge: The time is entirely at their own disposal?

Mr. Pinard: Oh, yes.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent from the chamber for a few minutes. Perhaps the minister has some observations to make with respect to the use of envelopes that I raised earlier. I do want to pose another question that he might reply to at the same time. I have been informed that the minister did not give an answer to my question about the envelopes but he might care to say something about it. According to the details, the expenditure on office stationery, supplies and equipment is down from $110,000 to $98,000. Where does the department expect to make the saving?

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry, I did not hear the number of the item.

Mr. Hahn: The details of the item appear on page 167 under "Office stationery, supplies and equipment."

Mr. Pinard: Yes, $9,000.

Mr. Hahn: It is down from $110,000 last year.

Mr. Pinard: Yes. That is the one to which my hon. friend made reference a few minutes ago. I gather he said he was pleased to see a reduction in the use of office stationery. Then, he added, in spite of that he felt there should be more economies in the civil service commission and that they should not use a very large envelope to send out what could be contained in a smaller envelope. I must admit that to a certain extent I share that view, and as much economy as possible should be practised. All I can say is that I shall draw the attention of the commission to what the hon. member has said. I am sure that his remarks have been appreciated and that precautions will be taken not to spoil paper in this department any more than in any other department of government.

Mr. Hahn: May I make a further recommendation that may be acceptable to the department? I appreciate their acceptance of my views in this respect up to now. Instead of putting the material in envelopes it should be folded and put through the mail much in the same manner as other literature we receive today.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Girard: Mr. Chairman, in November 1954, the Canadian Press reported that the bureau of statistics had decided to take a census which would likely be carried out in 1956. I believe that such census is now under way or just about completed. The same report added that, on this census, which is now being taken, if my information is correct, the matters of racial descent, mother tongue or religion are disregarded. It was explained at the time that this was being done to save money. There is a definite tendency to eliminate from our statistics certain items which are particularly useful to minorities.

On the 1951 census, the population of British descent was divided in four different groups: English, Scotch and others. In 1951, only one total figure was recorded for the whole population of British origin. As I say, this change favours a particular group. Since 1951, there has been no survey of racial origins in county subdivisions. A cross-check—

Mr. Pinard: If the hon. member will allow me to interrupt him, I should like to ask him a question. If his remarks concern the current census I might point out that this matter comes directly under the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Obviously, the appointment of some census officers had to be made indirectly through the civil service commission. However, I believe that the hon. member's remarks bear on the census itself and should be directed to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

At any rate, I would not be in a position to answer because that is a matter with which I am not familiar and which is the exclusive concern of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Girard: All these matters are the exclusive responsibility of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, that is correct.

(Text):

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, there is another matter that I should like to bring before the civil service commission that slipped my mind when I was speaking a few minutes ago. I refer to the matter of semi-staff post offices in Newfoundland. In Newfoundland we have very few staff and semi-staff post offices, probably not more that 20 or 30. For purposes of morale among the postal staff it is desirable that there be promotions. When a person has served faithfully in a small office and a vacancy occurs in an office that is a little larger and pays a little better salary there should be an opportunity to promote a person from the smaller office to the larger office, from the smaller salary to the larger salary. That does not happen, and the reason it does not happen is that a ruling was made by the civil service commission. I brought this to their attention last year in the case of one of my post offices. There were several people who applied for the vacancy who were also experienced postmasters. They had spent several years in the service. The civil service commission ruled that the post office vacancy had to be filled from the patrons of that post office. Instead of promoting a person who had served faithfully for 10 or 12 years, instead of giving him something to look forward to in the service, they took somebody from the community with no experience whatever and placed him in charge of that post office. That seems to me to be not only undesirable but senseless, but it is the ruling that the civil service commission made. It is one that is detrimental to the postal service in Newfoundland. I would ask the civil service commission to revise their rulings in the matter.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman. I have one or two questions I should like to ask concerning these estimates. Some little time ago when we were discussing the estimates of the Department of Fisheries I raised the matter of the compulsory retirement of fishery patrolmen, on the Pacific coast at least, at the age of 65. The consideration of the estimates of that department was interrupted before that matter had received any final consideration and I would therefore like to ask now whether that situation exists because of a ruling or general policy established by the civil service commission or whether it is something that lies entirely within the discretion of the Department of Fisheries itself. I wonder if the minister could give me an answer to that question.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I have just been informed that this is entirely a matter of departmental administration. The age of retirement in these cases depends entirely on the policy of the department concerned.

Mr. Barnett: I have one other question which is entirely unrelated. I notice on page 167 of the details of the estimates there is an item concerning memberships in personnel organizations in the amount of $600, an increase of $100 from last year. I wonder if the minister could explain to the committee just what that item involves, what personnel organizations the civil service commission belongs to and the purpose of that membership?

Mr. Pinard: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am informed that this item listed as memberships in personnel organizations which has been increased by $100 this year provides membership in the civil service assembly, the American society of public administration and the national office management association. These are associations with which the civil service commission maintains close relationships throughout the entire year.

Mr. Barnett: This item pays for the membership of official representatives of the civil service commission?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, in these organizations.

Item agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—

337. Departmental administration, $518,347.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman, I believe the printing of Hansard comes under the department of public printing and stationery and I would like to transmit to the minister one request that has been made the subject of a number of resolutions recently passed by several organizations in the Fraser valley. What these people are asking for is that free subscriptions to Hansard in either French or English be supplied to every high school in the Dominion of Canada. I may be wrong but I understand that the public libraries of Canada receive Hansard at the present time.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, 31 libraries in Canada automatically receive Hansard without asking for it on a regular basis, and the other librarians must ask for Hansard to be sent to them before they receive it.

Mr. Regier: I realize there may be some libraries which would not be interested in the proceedings of the Canadian parliament and therefore it might be advisable to make them ask for it. However, all the high schools in Canada do teach government and in all of the high schools we find that at least some of the students—and I hope the number is growing—are interested in what occurs in the Canadian House of Commons. Not only would supplying Hansard to them be a means of federal aid to education, but since the government is willing to spend $1,750 million a year for the defence department for the maintenance of our so-called way of life this would also give high school students an opportunity to find out for themselves exactly how our government operates.

I realize that a great many hon. members of this house are supplying high schools in their own constituencies with copies of Hansard. However, we get only 16 complimentary copies and we are asked to mail in our complimentary subscription list. I may be more fortunate than other hon. members because there are only five high schools in my riding and I have placed them all on my complimentary mailing list. I can very easily, however, find 16 extremely interested individuals who would like to be placed on my complimentary mailing list and I do not think it should be up to me to supply the high schools in my riding with complimentary copies of Hansard. I think the government of Canada should supply such subscriptions in the interest of the maintenance and the development of our democratic form of government.

Mr. Bryson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support what has just been said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam with respect to supplying copies of Hansard to high schools throughout the country. In my own riding there are approximately 40 high schools and they write to me requesting copies of Hansard. I think it is something that should be of interest to all of us, to see that the high schools are supplied because they are showing a great interest in the affairs of the country. I believe this is something to which the minister should give further consideration.

Mr. Pinard: Well, Mr. Chairman, this request appears to me to be quite reasonable. Actually, the universities and colleges do receive Hansard and although the cost of Hansard is only $3 per year it would appear to me that if we can supply free copies to Canadian universities and colleges the request is reasonable in relation to high schools. The distribution of publications is regulated by an order in council at the moment. I will look into the matter and see what can be done about it.

Mr. Hansell: Would the minister care to tell us what the total subscription is to Hansard throughout Canada and what revenue is derived therefrom?

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry but I do not appear to be able to obtain that information immediately but I will try to secure it for my hon. friend. I can say at the moment that roughly 12,000 copies of Hansard are printed every day, but as far as the rest of the information is concerned I shall endeavour to obtain it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Regier: Since the minister gave such a kind and sympathetic answer to the request I made, I for one should like to express for the record my appreciation of the capable and efficient manner in which Hansard is compiled. Almost without fail it is in our mail at 11 o'clock on the following day. I think that is a record worthy of commendation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, concerning the distribution of Hansard, would the minister inform us as to the time element involved in mailing Hansard to outside points? We receive it here very quickly but there is a considerable delay in Hansard going through the mail to points elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Pinard: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that Hansard is put in the mail to all points in Canada the very same day after it has been printed except on very rare occasions when this cannot be done because of late sittings or other extraordinary circumstances.

Mr. Barnett: While we are on this subject, could the minister give an indication of what the circulation of the new cumulative index of Hansard is?

Mr. Pinard: We print 1,000 copies. As the hon. member knows, this has just been initiated. It just began this year, and it is not used outside yet except to a certain extent. Steps are being taken so that all those who receive Hansard are informed of the existence of that index, which will be sent to everyone just as soon as that can be done.

Mr. Barnett: Do I understand the minister to say that the plan is that as soon as arrangements can be completed it will be included with the subscription to Hansard?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, the index will be sent to subscribers as well.

Mr. Barnett: That is the point I was wondering about.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Before we finish with these items, I may be allowed to revert to the items concerning the Department of the Secretary of State, to put on record, as a result of a question that was asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert, the list of those members of the awards co-ordination committee who were sitting when the award was made to Mr. Chipman to which I referred yesterday. The list is as follows: The chairman was the under secretary of state, as I have indicated, and the other members were as follows:

Mr. J. F. Delaute, secretary to the Governor General (administrative),

Rear-Admiral H. S. Rayner, (navy), Department of National Defence,

Air Commodore C. H. Greenway, (air force), Department of National Defence, Colonel R. B. McDougall, (army), Department of National Defence,

Mr. K. Lamb, dominion archivist,

Mr. D. McGreer, Department of External Affairs,

Captain F. S. Slocombe, Department of Transport,

Mr. J. H. Curry, Department of Labour,

Mr. H. Measures, Department of the Secretary of State,

Miss A. M. Mosley, Department of the Secretary of State, secretary.

Mr. Pallett: There is one question arising out of the minister's answer. I understood yesterday that he said that the personnel changed from time to time. Is that correct?

Mr. Pinard: Those were the persons present when this award was considered, but it happens at times that one or another member of this committee may be replaced by somebody else of his department.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

Administration services—

209. Departmental administration, $510,190.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find this vote on page 42 of the blue book of estimates and the details commencing on page 278. Shall the item carry?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): In the past two years, at the request of some members of the committee, the estimates of the dominion coal board were taken up first. Although the matter of the estimates of the dominion coal board is still very important, I would suggest that we follow the items as printed in the book this year.

The year 1955, with a mineral production figure close to $1,800 million has proven a new all-time record year for Canada. In the last few years the estimates of total production have all fallen short and proven to be on the low side, and the $2 billion mark at which the industry has been aiming and hoped to reach by 1960 will probably be reached this year.

Numerous new mining properties with good production potential continue to emerge right across Canada. At the turn of the year, no less than 60 mine shafts were being sunk in Canada on properties in advanced stage of exploration or development. Of particular significance is Canada's fast increasing production of iron ore, petroleum and uranium. Our iron ore production jumped spectacularly from 7·3 million tons in 1954 to 17·3 million tons in 1955. Indications are that the production of iron ore in 1956 will be greatly increased.

The search for uranium ores and the proving up of properties still held the spotlight in 1955. Special contracts signed with the Eldorado Mining and Refining Company on the closing date of March 31 last, as well as letters of intent to sign contracts, involve a total of over $700 million for the purchase of uranium precipitates. As these contracts call for delivery before March 31, 1962, we may well expect increasingly high production figures.

Petroleum still topped the list in Canada in 1955, with a production figure of over $300 million, an increase of $59 million over the 1954 production. Most of the petroleum output is from Alberta, but it is noteworthy indeed that both Manitoba and Saskatchewan doubled their production in 1955 over the previous year.

The search for and the development of minerals involves a very high element of risk, and the work of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is intended, by research and by the development of new methods and techniques and by improved mapping, to reduce as far as possible that element of risk. The mineral industry, by its production of new wealth, provides a very important stimulus to the whole economy of the nation. The benefits of this production of new wealth extend right into every household in Canada. Because of the hardships and the high element of risk involved, the industry attracts people who have the qualities of adventure, persistence and resourcefulness. I am pleased to state that the relationship between the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the mineral industry has been excellent.

Following our custom of recent years, the department has prepared another summary of activities for the year 1955, which is in the hands of hon. members, as is our annual report. I trust that this summary of activities has proven useful, and I would invite comments from hon. members. Someone usually asks the cost of the production of the summary. I am told it cost $240 to produce it this year.

I should like for a few minutes to review the organization and the work of the various branches of the department and the divisions of those branches, as related to the amounts of money requested in the estimates for this year.

The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys exists primarily to aid the growth of the mining industry in Canada and to provide the necessary surveys for exploration and development of our natural resources. It is fundamentally an investigative department, and for purposes of administration is divided into five branches as follows:

1. Surveys and mapping branch, with a hydrographic regional office in Victoria, B.C.

2. The geological survey of Canada, with five regional offices, namely, in Vancouver, Yellowknife, Whitehorse, Calgary and Sydney.

3. The mines branch, with a regional fuels division in Alberta.

4. The geographical branch.

5. The dominion observatory in Ottawa and the dominion astrophysical observatory in Victoria, B.C., with other substations.

I should like to deal first with the surveys and mapping branch. One of the divisions of its responsibilities is air photography. Before the last war there were great stretches of country, particularly in the north, that had no maps whatever, or if they had maps they were only based on traverses along a river where a traveller had made some rough sketches. Air photography has changed this completely. Originally the flying was mainly done by the R.C.A.F., but the appropriations as now provided by this department call for contract flying of areas selected according to their greatest need for both military and civilian purposes. In the fiscal year ended March, 1956, this department expects to spend its appropriation of $1,250,000 and a supplementary estimate of $550,000 for this purpose and for the present fiscal year we are requesting $1,500,000.

In order to get maps during the war, the north was covered by a trimetrogon system of pictures which consists of one vertical and two lateral oblique photographs taken at the same time. These pictures allowed the preparation of general maps on the scale of 1 inch to 8 miles. These were satisfactory for air navigation and reconnaissance investigations of the geology and mineral deposits, but too limited in accuracy for more detailed study. Consequently, all areas that were covered in a preliminary way by trimetrogon photographs are now gradually being covered by vertical photography. Much of the flying is done at about 30,000 feet to give wider coverage with less flying than at lower levels. Lower flying will be required in some areas for greater details of topography or for special purposes. All this is arranged through an interdepartmental committee on air photography of which the deputy minister of this department is chairman. Under favourable weather conditions it will be possible to have the whole of Canada, exclusive of the Arctic islands, covered by vertical photography by the end of 1957. There will be a continuing need for further photography taken at various heights to meet special requirements, such as forest inventory, geology, power development, defence projects, flood control and others.

I come now to the geodetic survey. In order to place map sheets in their proper relationship to one another and in their proper place in reference to longitude and latitude, it is necessary that a triangulation net of points be fixed in reference to one another. Also, in order that the surveyed altitude of various points may have true relations to one another and to the datum at sea level, their elevations must be determined with precision. Formerly, in fixing triangulation points, the geodetic survey built signalling towers and, by a rather slow process of observing angles between stations, built up a triangulation net in which all points of observations were accurately determined. Following the war this older method was replaced, in the north particularly, by modern electronic methods. By these it is possible to measure lines 300 miles in length with a precision of 20 feet.

This work by the geodetic survey has been done in conjunction with the R.C.A.F., and has become a model for geodetic work for all undeveloped parts of the world. It has allowed us in a few years to extend a triangulation net for accurate mapping from southern Manitoba to the Arctic and across the Arctic islands to Labrador where it will be joined to a net from the St. Lawrence area. This work has already occupied five field seasons, and several more will be required to complete it. Necessarily, expenditures for such surveys are heavy, but in relation to former slower and more laborious methods the unit cost per square mile is very much less. In fact, the work that is being done would be impossible by the older methods owing to the remoteness and isolation of most of the areas that are now being covered.

For the work of the geodetic survey for the coming year we are asking for $567,786, an increase of $12,848 over the previous year. The geodetic survey has 52 permanent employees of which the technical staff, highly skilled in surveying methods and in mathematics, numbers 30. The chief of this division is also the head of the Canadian section of the international boundary commission which is responsible for the surveying and maintenance of all international boundary lines and monuments. For this fiscal year it is estimated that $58,060 will be needed for this purpose, a decrease of $3,021 from the previous year.

Next I will deal with the topographical survey branch. The actual physical features shown on our maps by contour lines result from the work of the topographical survey. This division uses the precise elevations and the fixed points established by the geodetic survey.

In the preparation of maps, air photographs are used extensively. During and since the war great progress has been made in using various types of plotting instruments to transfer information from air photographs to a map surface.

The work of the topographer in secondary triangulation and in obtaining field data has been greatly speeded up by the use of helicopters. These are used most effectively in country relatively free of timber. They have also proven very efficient in extensive mapping we have done in the Yukon, in the Northwest Territories and in Labrador. In fact, their use is essential if map making is to keep pace with the demands of the mineral industry and for other purposes. The use of helicopters with supporting aircraft is very expensive, but the unit cost per square mile has been greatly reduced by the greater amount of country covered in one season. There has been as much as a tenfold increase for a single field party over older methods and better results are obtained. For the topographical survey for the present fiscal year we are asking for $1,690,232, a decrease of $27,833 from the previous year.

The next division is legal surveys and aeronautical charts. Legal surveys are necessary for land subdivision and are carried out under the direction of the surveyor general. They are done by this department as a service to other departments such as northern affairs and national resources and for the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Provincial boundary surveys are carried out in conjunction with the various provinces. Necessarily, legal surveys need to be done with accuracy and by well qualified land surveyors. We have found difficulty in maintaining an adequate staff to meet the demands that are being made on us because there is a great attraction for this type of surveyor in private enterprise owing to Canada's rapid expansion.

This division is also responsible for the production of Canadian aeronautical charts according to a world standard set by international agreement, and it co-operates with the Department of Transport in the publication of the Canada Air Pilot.

The division also prepares descriptions of the electoral districts of Canada according to the Representation Act and issues the electoral maps. For the provincial and territorial boundary surveys we are asking for $50,725 for this fiscal year, a decrease of $3,725 from the previous year.

The next division is the Canadian hydrographic service. Our hydrographic service performs a very important function in charting our coasts and our inland waters, measuring tidal currents and levels, and issuing charts and tables for shipping. We have three major vessels on the Pacific coast and four on the eastern coast. Also, for the past several years we have chartered two boats for northern work on the east coast, and we have other smaller boats on inland waters, including the great lakes and Great Slave lake. In fact, we use about sixteen boats in all in our work in making soundings for charts. Here again, newer sonic methods are replacing older techniques and fixation of points is being done electronically rather than by direct shore observation. Not only have such methods greatly increased the amount of work one ship can do in a season, but this work can be done out of the sight of land in such areas as the gulf of St. Lawrence and in weather when visibility is low. For our work in the north we are building a modern ship specially designed for Arctic work. It was launched two or three weeks ago and is expected to be commissioned this autumn. This vessel the Baffin will cost about $4 million and will be equipped, as I have said, with the very latest implements and also will be served by helicopters.

For the work of the hydrographic service we are asking $3,478,652 for this fiscal year. This is a decrease of $1,023,484 from the previous year, largely resulting from less payments on the construction of our new ship, the Baffin.

Map Compilation and Reproduction:

In the surveys and mapping branch we maintain a division for the compilation and printing of maps. This means we have a drafting staff, and much photographic and other equipment necessary for this work. Last year we distributed about one million maps. We have eight map-printing presses, and in addition a very considerable number of our maps are printed by the army survey establishment of the Department of National Defence which works in collaboration with our topographic survey in the preparation of maps for military requirements.

For this fiscal year we are asking for $962,386 for map compilation and reproduction, an increase of $450.

The use of the helicopter and of new techniques has speeded up surveying to a marked extent. Because of this, the acquisition of data for map compilation is exceeding the capacity of our production facilities. Thus, it may soon be necessary to expand our map compilation and reproduction division, although this expansion will likely have to await completion of our new buildings on Booth street.

Geological survey of Canada:

The members of this house are perhaps more familiar with the work of our geological survey and our mines branch than with the other surveys of which I have just spoken. For this reason, I will deal only briefly with these services. These two branches give the most direct aid to the mineral industry in its exploratory and development stages.

The geological survey sends 75 to 90 parties to the field each year, and members can see the distribution last year from the map in the summary of activities for 1955. We have sent about the same number to the field this season; although their distribution has varied, each province will receive our attention.

One project which we are undertaking this summer is of special interest. In 1952 we covered an area of 57,000 square miles by a reconnaissance helicopter operation in the district of Keewatin, west of Hudson bay. The objective of this was to differentiate between rock formations favourable and unfavourable for prospecting. So successful was this operation that we did an adjoining area of 67,000 square miles in 1954. In 1955 we undertook another operation of similar size in the Thelon river area. All these airborne operations were done in areas in the north where the working season is short and each of which areas by ordinary means might have taken us 25 years to complete. We now have gained a considerable knowledge of the prospects for minerals in an area of 191,000 square miles north of the 60th parallel of latitude and between Hudson bay and Great Slave lake.

In addition, in 1955 we undertook a still more ambitious program by helicopter and supporting planes of an area in the Queen Elizabeth islands in the far north. This was our Operation Franklin, named after the great explorer. The personnel for this operation consisted of 30 men, of whom 11 were geologists. Two of the largest helicopters in commercial operation were used. Reports not yet released will give indication of the mineral value of this area mostly in relation to petroleum and coal. This operation alone cost approximately $294,000 but we believe it has yielded very important results.

In 1956 a further helicopter operation by the geological survey is being undertaken in northern British Columbia to obtain information along a possible road from Stewart at the head of Portland canal via Telegraph creek and Dease lake to the Cassiar area where important mineral discoveries including asbestos are being developed. The results of this operation have a direct application to geological conditions in the Yukon and hence should ultimately prove beneficial to the Yukon as well as British Columbia.

Our success in using helicopters has been good with our geological parties as with other surveys. For two years we have used helicopters in mountainous areas in British Columbia where the topography was so rugged that ground methods were impracticable. The results so obtained make us confident our new operation can be quite successful. The cost of that particular operation is expected to be approximately $170,000.

This year we expect to have two geological parties in the Yukon, four in the Northwest Territories, 12 in British Columbia, six in Alberta, one of which will operate partly in British Columbia, five in Saskatchewan, five in Manitoba, eight in Ontario, five in Quebec (excluding Labrador), two in Labrador and Ungava, eight in New Brunswick, five in Nova Scotia, one in Prince Edward Island and three in Newfoundland. In addition, we have a number of parties on various assignments not confined to one province. The total is about 75, which is five more than the previous year owing to the fact that an unusually large number of geologists are employed on our northern helicopter projects in 1956.

Perhaps it is well to remind hon. members at this time that the geological survey maintains the inventory of radioactive deposits under authority of the atomic energy control board.

Since 1949, there exists a national advisory committee on research in the geological sciences. The chairman of the committee is the director of the geological survey of Canada. The committee includes representatives of the federal government, the provinces, the universities and the mineral industry.

It has a threefold purpose: To co-ordinate geological research in Canada; to suggest research projects that should receive attention; and to aid in having these projects undertaken.

Grants are allocated, on the recommendation of the committee, for stimulation and support of fundamental geological research in Canadian universities.

Last year 14 grants were awarded in 8 universities at a cost slightly exceeding $24,000. This year, instead of a $25,000 allocation, we are asking for $40,000 to support geological research projects in Canadian universities.

The appropriations requested for the geological survey for the fiscal year are $2,483,954, a decrease of $14,683.

Mines Branch:

The mines branch performs a number of functions related to the mining industry and also in relation to projects dealing with metals and alloys in which industry and the armed services are concerned.

Mineral Dressing and Process Metallurgy Division:

This division, as the name implies, deals with methods of recovering metals from their ores. The work includes test milling on samples submitted, and research on the best methods of recovery. A wide variety of investigations are undertaken to improve recovery or to provide flow sheets for a new mill where a new ore body is being developed.

Industrial Minerals Division:

The industrial minerals division does a similar type of work for the non-metals. Ordinarily the non-metals are not so valuable for a unit amount as are the metals. Consequently there is greater need to help small enterprises which have not the technical facilities to do their own investigations in establishing new processes for use of some of the more common but highly important substances like salt, gypsum, limestone, or some of the less common substances like kyanite for refractories. A great many non-metallic minerals are constantly under study, and in this division water analyses for industrial use are undertaken.

Fuels Division:

This division has maintained a very considerable program of investigation in connection with coal in co-operation with the dominion coal board. It also does research on evaluating other fuels. Work on the coal-fired gas turbine engine in conjunction with Professor Mordell of McGill University has continued. Certain modifications and adjustments needed for the heat exchanger have been determined as a result of work done to date. These were carried out and the turbine is now being evaluated by test runs. The runs are being made over a sufficient length of time to determine the efficiency.

This experiment has had to be continued for a much longer time than was anticipated when it began five years ago. The $50,000 requested in our estimates will bring our expenditures to $600,000. The experiment is at a critical stage, and in order to get further trial runs and a comprehensive report so that a complete evaluation may be made, we have asked for an additional $50,000 in our supplementary estimates. I believe the Minister of Finance has already done that.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What is the total spent on that project to date?

Mr. Prudham: These estimates, when approved, will bring it up to $600,000 plus another $50,000 in the supplementaries. The decision as to our future operations will be dependent on the evaluation of what the results so far have been for the money spent. A final report, we hope, will be made by the end of 1956. The fuels division plans to hold a symposium on the project in conjunction with McGill University some time this autumn, and they hope to acquaint private industry with the possible practical application of the experiment.

In our work on coal in Alberta we are co-operating with the Alberta research council. The council has built a research laboratory on the campus of the University of Alberta in Edmonton, and two or three of our officers will work in this building in direct co-operation with Alberta research employees.

Physical Metallurgy Division:

The work of the physical metallurgy division has greatly expanded due to the need for metallurgical investigations connected with atomic energy. The work of this division has had to do with the development of satisfactory alloys for special uses, as in the aircraft industry, and the testing of parts to gain knowledge of the behaviour of metals under various conditions.

The Deputy Chairman: I must point out that the minister has spoken for thirty minutes. With the consent of the committee, he may complete his statement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prudham: We maintain a mineral resources division which keeps an inventory of reserves of ore in mineral deposits, and compiles and publishes information relating to the economic phases of the industry. The members of this division, under the supervision of the director general of scientific services, administer the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. They also serve on an interdepartmental committee with officials of the Department of Finance and National Revenue in relation to mine taxation problems.

Radioactivity Division:

In the radioactivity division the work is again one of the methods of processing ores, but it is largely of a chemical nature since leaching is commonly used in the treatment of radioactive minerals. The new developments in the lake Athabaska area in Saskatchewan and in the Blind river and Bancroft areas in Ontario have been spectacular in the varieties of ore bodies discovered and in the tonnages disclosed. For all these properties, milling and recovery practices have had to be established. The work of this division has contributed greatly to the success in making Canada a very important producer of uranium, especially in the work of developing methods of producing metal from low grade ore.

For mineral resources investigations, research, and acquisition of new equipment for the whole of the mines branch, we are asking $3,205,355. This is a decrease of $75,996 from the previous year.

Geographical Branch:

The geographical branch, established in 1947, carries out a number of projects in northern Canada directly related to air photo interpretation of terrain. Key areas are selected for study, and from the interpretations made from air photographs of these it is possible to make interpretations in other areas. This work is mainly for the joint intelligence bureau of national defence.

Studies of various cities are being made for the civil defence division of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Also a compilation is made of the information relating to the distribution of ice conditions in northern Canada and in the gulf of St. Lawrence. This information is valuable to the Department of Transport in relation to navigation.

Work on the atlas of Canada has been under way for a number of years. I believe the last time I stood before this committee I thought that it would be completed this year, but that has not been possible. We have made considerable progress, but because of the priority of other projects the work on the atlas has lagged somewhat.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): When will it be finished now?

Mr. Prudham: It will take at least one more year, and my guess is it will take longer than that. Our expenditures for the geographical branch are expected to be $283,386 for the present fiscal year.

Dominion Observatories:

The dominion observatories in Ottawa and Victoria, B.C., are maintained by this department. Observations of stars are essential to the maintenance of a time service. This is given with a precision that is essential for longitude determination, as well as public use. The investigations carried out by two field stations at Meanook and Newbrook in northern Alberta are in relation to the rate of meteor travel in the high atmosphere. This is a subject of interest to national defence in connection with the use of high velocity projectiles. We maintain a terrestrial magnetism section at Ottawa, and through this the declination of the compass is given to our other surveys for each map sheet issued. The information collected by this section is of practical value in making aeromagnetic maps for airborne magnetometers such as are in use by our geological survey and by private interests.

Magnetic stations are maintained for observations at Agincourt, Ontario, Meanook, Alberta; Baker lake and Resolute bay, Northwest Territories. We also continue to carry out observations of gravity, and the force of gravity at many points in Canada has been determined. This is of practical application in many ways, one of which is in pipe-line construction. This is of great value as basic information in making gravity maps used as an aid to prospecting.

Seismic records are kept at the dominion observatory at Ottawa and in a more recently established station at our Victoria observatory. In all, we have 12 seismic recording stations from Halifax to the west coast.

The work of the astrophysical observatory in Victoria is concerned primarily with scientific studies relating to the composition and character of the stars, planets and interstellar materials and the application of the results to terrestrial physics.

For the dominion observatories we are asking for $814,250, an increase of $75,727 over the previous year. This increase is largely connected with our activities for the geophysical year during which world-wide observations by many countries will be correlated. The basic studies for the geophysical year are related to the influence of the sun on the upper atmosphere and hence our studies are primarily related to this objective. However magnetic observations are very important because of the fact that the north magnetic pole is in Canadian territory and our scientists will have an important part in these investigations.

The Explosives Act is administered by this department, which deals with the licensing, handling and storage of explosives, of which 132,824,000 pounds were produced for commercial purposes in Canada in 1955. The expenditures for this, including a small testing laboratory maintained in Ottawa, are expected to be $107,865 for this fiscal year, an increase of $9,525. A new explosives factory at Seven Islands is now in operation and another factory is under construction at North Bay, and these will involve additional inspection services.

This department, as I have said, administers the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which was extended by parliament recently at the same rate for the years 1957 and 1958. As hon. members are aware, the amount paid is based on a formula in relation to the cost of producing an ounce of gold. Our estimated expenditures for this fiscal year are $16,431,915, exclusive of the emergency gold mining assistance. This compares with our estimate of $17,263,091 for the previous year, a decrease of $831,176.

At present the permanent staff of our department numbers 1,929, of whom 1,754 are in Ottawa. It is housed in many buildings widely scattered in this city. This for many years has impeded efficiency and caused difficulties in administration. Plans are under way for the construction of permanent buildings to house the larger part of our staff in the vicinity of our Booth street buildings now occupied by the mines branch. A chemical and radioactivity laboratory is now under construction. A geological survey building and an administration building are planned for early construction. For these buildings, including $135,000 for improvements to the heating plant, $2,852,000 has been placed in this year's estimates of the Department of Public Works.

In the near future we wish to construct a surveys and mapping building to bring together the various surveys and map compilation and reproduction division. The cost of this whole program is expected to be of the order of $12 million to $15 million. Also, for the current year provision is being made through the Department of Public Works for $200,000 for a wharf for our hydrographic ships at Victoria, British Columbia.

This statement, Mr. Chairman, is only an outline of some of the many activities of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

[Mr. Prudham.]

Our relationships with the mining industry are cordial and on a co-operative basis. Our surveys and investigations are undertaken in consultation with provincial authorities under whose jurisdiction the mineral resources are administered. In this way duplication of effort is avoided, and provincial and federal projects are complementary to one another.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for the detailed statement he has given to the committee in connection with the estimates and the administration of his department. Since it is my intention to deal very briefly, of course, with the development of the natural resources in my province of Quebec, I am sure the minister will allow me to continue my remarks in my mother tongue.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I take part in the discussion of the estimates of the Mines and Technical Surveys department in order to show briefly the great development of our natural resources, especially in the province of Quebec.

My province, I daresay, is unquestionably the province of Canada where, during these last few years, progress in that field has been the greatest, not to say the most fantastic. Boundless new areas, which a few years ago were outside civilization, have been opened up. They hold priceless wealth which is being developed for the benefit of the province where it is to be found and which provides Canada and the whole world with a practically inexhaustible source of ores of all kinds, thus contributing to our economic expansion and to Canadian prosperity. The huge mining development that has taken place in the Ungava district is unequalled in the history both of the province of Quebec and of our great country.

Several hundred million tons of iron ore have already been discovered and this ore is being mined at growing pace.

This vast territory, now opened up to civilization and international trade, has, in many ways, brought wealth to the province of Quebec.

Thanks to the excellent credit position which our province enjoys abroad, American capital, now mainly controlled by Canadians, is greatly contributing to our prosperity.

Since these important iron fields were first developed, the province of Quebec has known, and will know, ever-increasing expansion and prosperity.

Thousands of new jobs have been created, which brings a much needed security to many Canadian homes.

Factories of all kinds have been added to others already existing, and it appears that before long, considering the huge projects now under way, a territory heretofore ignored will become the Eden of a large number of Canadians.

Several new cities are going up in hitherto scarcely known areas, and will provide homes, full employment and security to thousands of our fellow citizens, whose contribution to their provinces and to their country will play a prominent part in the useful development of our territory.

New income sources, for the individuals as well as for the governments will contribute to the development, the greatness and the prosperity of Canada. Such an improved and secure income for individuals will relieve the burden weighing already too heavily upon governments, owing to the repeated requests for assistance to those affected by chronic or acute unemployment.

Governments increasing their income through the development of such natural resources, the authorities will then be in a position to divert to the welfare of the people the surpluses accumulated annually.

We can never be too thankful to divine Providence for endowing our province with such untold wealth which allows us to play towards humanity the part, the providential part, assigned to us.

The presence of this wealth in our soil is not a result of mere fate or coincidence; this wealth was placed there to insure the happiness of our people and to allow our people to make it available to others.

Research already initiated must be continued. The developments which we are given to witness at the present time must expand unceasingly for the benefit of our people.

I take this opportunity to pay a warm tribute and express sincere thanks to those who preside over the destinies of the province of Quebec and who are the fortunate ones responsible for this gigantic development of our resources.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): This is quite a surprise to me.

Mr. Dufresne: That I should be congratulating the government?

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Yes.

Mr. Dufresne: It would be a greater surprise if it were the hon. member for Portneuf who should be doing it.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Oh, no! I have done it before.

Mr. Dufresne: Their vision, their devotion to those after whose interests they look, the sacrifices they have willingly undergone and the immense contribution they have made so far towards the exploration and development of our mineral resources have given Quebec pride of place in this field, a position which it is proud to occupy.

I mentioned, in particular, what is now happening in northern Quebec, but it should be kept in mind that, in the district of Chibougamau, in the peninsula of Gaspe and in many another area of that province, the development of our natural wealth has advanced as never before.

Canada has the privilege to have huge riches under its soil. And how many more still lie there unknown to us, waiting for the patriotism and the money of a few men to discover and put them at the disposal of our great land.

I therefore urge all Canadians who possess capital resolutely to invest a great part of it so as to create a more beautiful and greater Canada, that may hold its own among the nations of the commonwealth. The department concerned must carry on its surveys so that, instead of remaining unused, our natural resources may promote the happiness and prosperity of this country and contribute also, perhaps, to the raising of the living standards of other countries to which we could extend these benefits.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude by thanking once more the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys for the brilliant introductory speech he made a moment ago, as well as for the information he was so kind as to communicate to the house with regard to his department.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I followed with great interest the minister's remarks concerning the increase in mining production and petroleum production, and the information he gave us about the research being undertaken by the department and the activities of various branches, but I am going to take the opportunity presented by the first item of these estimates to refer to another question which we in this group consider of some importance.

This group is interested in an accurate recording of Canadian history of exploration and geography and the complete protection of Canada's sovereign rights. Now, I have always been interested in geography, and particularly in the history of the exploration of the Canadian Arctic. I must say the tempo of my interest was somewhat increased last year as the result of a conversation with an officer of the Royal Canadian Air Force who had been serving in the Arctic and who was himself very concerned about the maintenance of Canadian sovereignty and the apparent ignorance of certain United States army personnel concerning Canadian rights in the Arctic.

I am going to say a few words this afternoon about what I will term the forgotten expedition. Last year I placed a question on the order paper asking for a definition of the land area that is considered to be within the jurisdiction of Canada north of the mainland of this country and later, at the suggestion of certain people, I withdrew that question. As a result, apparently there was a radio news report and a constituent of mine, Dr. L. E. Borden, who was a member of the first Canadian Arctic expedition, contacted me because this report disturbed him very much indeed as it indicated there was some uncertainty on the part of this government as to our territorial rights in the Arctic and when they were established.

On investigating this situation I found there were good sound grounds for Dr. Borden's concern. In fact, on checking what books I could find and various reports and articles published by scientific societies, I found what I considered an amazing situation. I found first of all in the Canadian Geographic Journal, 1935, volume 10, an article by W. Eggleston entitled "Canada's Northernmost Island." There was no mention whatever therein of the cruise of the Neptune in 1903 and 1904 under Commander A. P. Low, which was the first Canadian Arctic expedition.

Then I found in a book published by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys an article entitled "The Canadian Arctic—1951". While there is a brief mention of this expedition there is no mention made of Commander Low taking possession of Ellesmere, Southampton and other islands on behalf of the Dominion of Canada. I obtained a copy of the periodical Arctic, which is the journal of the Arctic Institute of North America, volume 8, No. 1, 1955, and I found there an article entitled "Northern Ellesmere Island" by G. Hattersley Smith, and again no mention is made of Canada's first Arctic expedition although this article was written particularly to list and deal with all the expeditions to the Canadian Arctic. Then I was amazed to find in the Canadian Geographic Journal of June, 1956, an article by Andrew Taylor entitled "Our Polar Islands—The Queen Elizabeths" which again overlooks Canada's first Arctic expedition.

At any rate I was cheered later by information given to me by the minister. Knowing I was interested in this question the minister directed my attention to a book published by his department in December of last year entitled "Geographical Discovery and Exploration in the Queen Elizabeth Islands". In this booklet for the first time—and I have gone through the department's records for many years past—we find an adequate reference to the cruise of the Neptune in 1903 and 1904, and I want to acknowledge the assistance I received from the minister in this respect. I think this article was included for the first time as the result of the minister's interest in this question when the uncertainties were unfolded last year.

On page 111 I find chapter 7 dealing with Canadian expeditions, and there it says:

> Early in 1903, the government of Canada decided to send a vessel "to patrol the waters of Hudson bay and those adjacent to the eastern Arctic islands". The expedition was placed under command of a geologist, A. P. Low, and the government chartered the Neptune, the "largest and most powerful ship of the Newfoundland sealing fleet", for this purpose.

Then it goes on to deal quite extensively with certain aspects of this expedition, and I must say I am very pleased to see this expedition noticed for the first time for many years in a government publication. Commander Low commanded the first Canadian expedition to the Arctic on instructions from the minister of marine of that day; I think it was Hon. Mr. Prefontaine. On his return he published a report of over 350 pages which contains a great deal of interesting information on the physical features of the Arctic islands, Eskimos, the geology of the area, the flora and fauna, the possibilities of navigation of Hudson bay for the taking of wheat from Fort Churchill, whaling, an historical summary of preceding expeditions, and his report also contains other interesting matters.

I understand there are only a few copies of this report in existence, including one that I found in the library, which obviously belonged to Captain J. E. Bernier, and one, I understand, in the possession of the department. So far as I can find there are no other records of this expedition, except four or five small leather-bound notebooks in the geological section of the minister's department, which contain some brief and fragmentary pencilled notes by Commander Low. I want to thank the minister for having had these notebooks looked up and for informing me that they were available and that I might read them. I saw one or two interesting items in them. They are very sketchy and obviously only the remnants of Commander Low's notebooks. There is a note for September 4 to October 3, 1903:

> Gears stored under coal. Burned 600 pounds coal today. Average 7·5 knots. Must be careful of our coal now half gone.

I thought that was a remarkable 24-hours steaming at 7·5 knots in those days. I noticed that on June 22, 1904, there were some notes on an illness suffered by Dr. L. E. Borden, who was the surgeon and botanist. Apparently there are no other records, diaries, proclamations, expense accounts or other information available in connection with this expedition. The Minister of Transport has very kindly had the records of the Department of Transport searched; the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had the records of his department searched, and the dominion archivist has searched the dominion archives. So far as I know there are no records available of this expedition other than the ones I have mentioned.

Before proceeding I wish to quote briefly from Commander Low's report of his expedition, "The Cruise of the Neptune, 1903-04", which is prefaced by some remarks by Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, K.C., minister of marine and fisheries. This is dated at Ottawa, September 8, 1905. It says in part:

> I have great pleasure in calling attention to the valuable work of the scientific staff of the expedition. Dr. L. E. Borden, by his skill and attention, kept everybody in a good general state of health, and in addition rendered great assistance in the collection of specimens and data relating to ethnology, botany and zoology.

He goes on to give the order in council giving authority for the expedition, and so on. I would just like to say a word or two about Dr. L. E. Borden, who happens to be a personal friend, and I know he also is a long-time personal friend of our chairman, who I am sure would support any complimentary remarks I have to make about Dr. Borden.

Mr. Prudham: May I ask my hon. friend for his address?

Mr. Herridge: When I am reading from a letter I shall give it to the minister. I might say that Dr. L. E. Borden graduated from Dalhousie in arts and medicine, had an interneship in Victoria hospital, and was surgeon and botanist for the cruise of the Neptune. He came to Nelson in 1908 and commenced the practice of medicine. He held the rank of major in the first and second world wars. He represented the Nelson constituency in the provincial legislature from 1928 to 1933. He has been active in many community organizations, and has had a long-time interest in mining and prospecting organizations. I think at one time he was president of the miners' and prospectors' organization of the Kootenays. He is respected and highly thought of by all who know him and, I must say, particularly by the veterans he served continuously from 1914 until 1947, when he retired from active practice.

Dr. Borden was present when Commander Low took possession of Ellesmere and Southampton islands, and has copies of both proclamations, diaries, samples of Eskimo art and carvings. He is, so far as I know, the only survivor of the expedition. I am going to say at this time that I have tried to get a copy of the proclamations concerning the taking of possession of these islands in the name of the Queen and of Canada. So far as I can find out there is not a copy of those proclamations in any department of government. I think it is quite safe to say on that account that the government has lost the title deeds to the Arctic.

I understand that when Commander Low took possession of these islands—and Dr. Borden has pictures of the crew raising the flag and taking the salute—there was a copy. Commander Low wrote three copies, one for his purpose, one to be delivered to the dominion government, and one now in the possession of Dr. Borden. I am just going to put the proclamations on the record for the information of the minister and those interested in this history. This is the proclamation in connection with taking possession of the island of Southampton:

> In the name of our gracious sovereign King Edward VII and on behalf of the government of Canada, I renew and take possession of this island of Southampton for the use and property of the Dominion of Canada. God save the King.
>
> A. P. Low
> 23/6/04

Then he said:

> Having raised the dominion ensign on the cairn and recited the above in the presence of the crew we gave three cheers for the King.

Then I have a copy of one of the three original proclamations which was given to me by Dr. Borden. This proclamation reads:

> In the name of King Edward VII, and on behalf of the government of the Dominion of Canada, I have this day taken possession of the island of Ellesmereland and all the smaller islands adjoining it.
>
> And in token of such formal possession have caused the flag of the Dominion of Canada to be hoisted upon the land of Ellesmereland: and have deposited a copy of this document, sealed in a metal box, in a cairn erected on the conspicuous headland of Cape Isabella.

A. P. Low,
Officer in charge of dominion expedition to Hudson bay and northward.

On board
Dominion steamship Neptune
Smith sound.
11 August, 1904.

I have had some very interesting correspondence with Dr. Borden and I am going to quote briefly from a few of his letters. I might mention at this time that Dr. Borden, for health reasons, has left Nelson and now resides in Victoria. He has been there for about a year. His address is 1315 Monterey avenue, Victoria, B.C. He has this to say in writing about his personal experiences:

From my diary of August 10, 1904:—

He is quoting his own diary.

"This is truly historic ground." The next day we landed and deposited the proclamation as per A. P. Low's report on page 48, paragraph 1 of the "Cruise of the Neptune". I am probably the only living person who witnessed this ceremony of taking formal possession of Ellesmere as I also witnessed on June 23, 1904, Commander Low take formal possession of Southampton island in Hudson bay.

The time of the event of taking possession of Ellesmere which occurred to us of the expedition is of great importance and cannot well be forgotten as the midnight sun was shining in all its glory and we had just had a miraculous escape from death the day before when the Neptune struck a submerged reef.

Then in another letter he mentions some quite interesting facts. He has this to say:

As surgeon for the expedition I was asked by the government to make a report on the health of the Eskimo, especially noting tuberculosis, syphilis and cancer. As far as I know this was the first report ever submitted to the dominion government on the health of the Eskimo. I reported that I had found tuberculosis not prevalent but cases of both chest and bone; that syphilis was present but only, as far as I could find, in the tertiary stage; and as for cancer, after examining Eskimo of all ages in winter encampments and on a voyage of over 10,000 miles in summer at every port of call I never found a case and I may note that a good many years afterward I noticed in a report from a doctor at Aklavik that he had never seen a case. And just for the record may I draw your attention to the fact that Dr. Sweitzer of Lamberene in Africa reports that he has never found a case of cancer in a native.

As botanist I was supposed and did go ashore every time a boat went off to look for specimens. I have, therefore, a very particular cause to remember all landings and events that took place are still very fresh in my memory . . .

Dr. Borden was the first Canadian to botanize the Arctic on behalf of the government of Canada. Commander Low made a great contribution to our knowledge of the Arctic as commander of this first Canadian expedition, and he also reported quite fully in his book on the possibilities for navigation in Hudson bay. Incidentally, he was also the first man to discover iron ore in Ungava. I happened to pick that up out of a book I was checking in connection with my investigation. I wondered whether Canada had recognized the work of Commander Low, and I am glad to know that a mountain in the Rockies on the Alberta-British Columbia boundary, located at latitude 51 degrees, 43 minutes, longitude 116 degrees, 48 minutes, was named in his honour in 1920.

I think it is most unfortunate that so little is known about this expedition. For instance, I find that Pierre Berton in his book, "The Mysterious North", on page 203 states that Captain Joseph Bernier, the bluff Canadian mariner and explorer, in a series of voyages during the early part of the century took possession of the Arctic for Canada. Evidently Mr. Berton, who is very well informed on Canadian history, particularly Arctic history, like the majority of other Canadians has never heard that Commander Low took possession of this area for Canada in 1904.

I made some other investigations. Apparently our university students, our high school students and our public school students have been completely misinformed to date on the history of Canadian exploration in the Arctic because of the failure to recognize this expedition and the lack of information concerning it.

I am going to make two or three suggestions before I sit down. I suggest that a copy of Commander Low's report—I understand there are two copies in existence here—his fragmentary diaries and any other papers that can be located be turned over to Dr. Kaye Lamb, our dominion archivist. I know that when it comes to ferreting out records concerning history Dr. Lamb has the eyes of a fox terrier, the nose of a retriever and the tenacity of a bulldog, and I think it would be most appropriate to give him the job of collecting this information and putting it in a safe place for future generations of Canadians.

My second suggestion is that advantage be taken of the fact that Dr. L. E. Borden, as the only known survivor of the expedition and, as I mentioned before, as the man who was the surgeon and botanist, has diaries, other notes, photographs, Eskimo art and recollections that would be invaluable in completing the records of the history of this first expedition into the Canadian Arctic. I hope the minister will find it convenient to arrange for the appropriate official of his department to visit Dr. Borden and take advantage of the treasure of knowledge that he is able to supply the department and the archives.

Mr. Prudham: I will certainly do that.

Mr. Herridge: My third suggestion is that there is a splendid opportunity here for several organizations that have completely overlooked this expedition. To tell you the honest truth, I am amazed that the records of the Arctic institute were not more complete. I suggest that any one of the three following organizations have an opportunity to write a more or less popular edition of the history of our first Canadian expedition so that our university people, our high school children, the children in our public schools, Canadians generally and the members of the United States defence forces will have a proper knowledge of Canadian rights and sovereignty in the Arctic and when these regions were taken by Canada. I suggest that here is an opportunity for the Arctic Institute of Canada, the Canadian Geographical Society or the Canadian Historical Society. Any one of them is quite capable of using its magazine and other facilities to bring to the attention of the Canadian public this page in Canadian history which has been overlooked for many years. In my opinion every effort should be made through some such method as I have suggested to properly inform Canadians on this important question.

I also suggest that it would be a splendid gesture on the part of the Canadian board on geographical names to recognize the work done by Dr. L. E. Borden as surgeon and botanist, the first Canadian to botanize the Arctic, and for all his work in connection with this expedition, by naming some physical feature in Canada after him.

Finally I want to say that the Canadian Arctic belongs to Canada, and at this time it is most appropriate that we do not hesitate to emphasize our sovereign rights in that area and fully inform Canadians of the interesting history of that period.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words on this occasion, though I do not intend to take too long. I noted what the minister said when he commenced his remarks about preferring to have the coal problem dealt with when the item comes up. However, it is very possible I will not be here on that occasion; therefore I should like to say something about the coal situation generally in Canada at this time. I can assure him that if I should happen to be here then I will not repeat what I am about to say now.

First of all, I think the very distressing condition in which the coal industry finds itself hardly needs mention by me. I am not blaming anyone particularly for that because there are a number of factors entering into the problem. Probably the minister is not to blame in any particular instance but I think that the federal government, having in mind the over-all picture, could do a little more than is being done, and I will try to indicate what that is as I go along.

To emphasize the point I raised a moment ago about the alarming and distressing position in which the coal mining industry finds itself today, I should like to refer to the coal board report, page 10. This is the 1955 edition of the annual report, so it is right up to date. Under the heading "Developments in the Coal Situation and Current Outlook" it states:

> The production of Canadian coal mines in 1954-55, amounting to 14·7 million tons, showed a decrease of 1·1 million tons from the total for 1953-54. This loss was borne by the Alberta and British Columbia fields and more than offset gains in those of Saskatchewan and the maritimes.

Then down further on the page we find this:

> The full plight of the Canadian coal industry becomes manifest when it is considered that over the past four fiscal years the annual production has fallen by 3·8 million tons or 20·3 per cent, imports by 7·6 million tons or 29·4 per cent, and over-all consumption by 9·1 million tons or 21·1 per cent.
>
> The decline in coal mining has occurred despite progressive and substantial increases in the financial assistance extended to it by the federal government. Subvention payments have risen from $4·6 million in 1951-52 to $11·3 million in 1954-55 and in the latter year exceeded those in 1953-54 by $1·5 million.
>
> The Alberta and British Columbia fields, more especially the former, have suffered most of the aforenoted reduction in Canadian coal output. The present prospects for this segment of the industry are bleak. The bituminous mines, which used to supply about 70 per cent of their output to the railways, chiefly from their underground operations, have suffered further serious losses in this market.

I read that to you, Mr. Chairman, and to members of this committee in order to give the members of this house who represent all parts of Canada the facts regarding the distressing situation in which the coal industry finds itself. The situation is not peculiar to the western Canadian provinces. The same thing is true in the maritimes but to a lesser extent, and probably there is some reason for that. As I said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, it is true that there is probably some reason for the decline in the coal industry, particularly in western Canada, where we have had the development of oil and gas. Oil has not taken too great a toll of the production of coal, but gas has taken some. But at the moment, particularly at the time at which this report was issued by the coal board, gas did not affect materially the production of coal; and by the statement I have read you can see that the production of coal has steadily declined.

To give you a more specific picture with regard to the decline of coal production let me further refer to the dominion coal board's report. At page 28, under the heading "Production", this is stated:

> The output of Canadian coal mines during the fiscal year under review showed a reduction of $1,040,000 tons or 6·6 per cent in comparison with the total of 1953-54, and of 3,776,000 or 20·3 per cent as compared to the production of 1951-52. Most of this loss was borne by the Alberta fields.

That makes two occasions within a matter of a few pages in this report on which the board has pointed out that the coal industry in western Canada, and particularly in the province of Alberta, has been receiving very bad setbacks. As I say, that is not because of overuse in other parts of Canada of natural gas. It is true that the gas, when it comes down to Ontario, will affect to some extent the coal consumption in Ontario and in the province of Quebec. But there again it is not going to affect the production of coal in western Canada and in the maritimes as much as some would think, because very little coal from the other parts of Canada is used in those two central provinces anyway. We therefore cannot blame the situation on the use of fuel oil or gas, except of course to the extent that fuel oil particularly is being imported from the United States.

In this report we have the production figures for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta bituminous, Alberta subbituminous, British Columbia and Yukon. Let me give the total figure for 1953-54 which amounted to 15,803,000 tons. For 1954-55 it was 14,770,000 tons. That is the production for Canada. From the same report I want to give you the amount of coal which was imported into Canada from the United States; and may I say in passing that I think this is where our solution can be found. As to imports of bituminous coal, the total for 1954-55 was 15,639,000 tons. For anthracite the total was 2,504,000 tons. Those two figures make a total of 18,143,000 tons. You will notice there is a difference there of 3,373,000 tons of coal; that is, 3,373,000 more tons of coal were shipped into Canada than were produced in Canada.

When you consider that every year, according to the report, the production of coal has been dropping—since 1951-52 particularly—it seems to me that the federal government and the provinces also are going to be obliged to do something to see that this industry is kept alive. I think every member in this house has on other occasions pointed out that the coal industry is vital to Canada from the standpoint of defence, if for no other reason. We are getting a gas line brought down to Ontario from which the Ontario people are going to derive a great advantage. But I must point out also that a gas line is most vulnerable from the standpoint of attack when the enemy come to invade this country, if they ever do.

We must be cautious that we do not destroy one of the greatest industries in Canada. In fact I do not think the time will ever come when you can completely do away with the coal mining industry and the need for coal. It might be reduced to some extent, but it certainly will never be done away with.

In his speech this afternoon the minister pointed out that a considerable amount of research has been done with regard to the coal-fired turbine. I think it is his hope and the hope of all of us that when that turbine is developed there might be some relief for our declining coal production. We have now spent—I think this is what the minister said; he will correct me if I am wrong—or by the end of the year will have spent something like $600,000—

Mr. Prudham: $650,000.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): —or $650,000 in the development of this new gas turbine engine. That is a tremendous amount of money, but that development has been going on for about four or five years. I can well recall that when the members of the house visited the plant at Montreal their hopes were raised that this machine was going to come into use in a year or two years at the most. We have been waiting now for many years longer than that, and there is no immediate prospect of that happening in the near future or of it being of assistance to the coal mining industry. We cannot, therefore, place too great hopes in that direction for immediate relief at least.

Then there are the experiments being conducted by the federal government in close co-operation with the provinces, particularly the province of Alberta, in connection with the development of electricity through the use of steam produced by coal. That is probably going to assist coal production to some extent, particularly when the coal fields are in close proximity to the place where electricity is to be developed and when that electricity can be used for the development of industry. However, that, too, is a long way off, and we cannot put our immediate hopes in that direction if we wish to find a permanent solution for this declining coal industry.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that in this country we do not hesitate to go to great lengths to assist other lagging industry. My mind goes to the gold mining industry. There is never any objection in this house, or very little, particularly from the members from central Canada, when it comes to assisting the gold mining industry. I just want to put on the record something about the subsidies which have been paid to that industry. I am not overlooking the fact, either, that there have been subsidies paid to the coal industry as well, and I have already so indicated. It should be recalled that there are only about 23,000 people, I think it is, employed in the gold mining industry, and that is a very small number of people compared to the thousands and thousands who are employed in the coal industry. Our coal industry, however, is gradually going down and unemployment is resulting in Alberta from that fact. A year ago the provincial government allotted over $100,000 to reallocate and rehabilitate the miners who had been thrown out of employment because our coal industry was declining so rapidly.

But the gold industry is not declining quite so quickly. In 1948 we paid $10,546,000 in gold mining assistance; in 1949, $12,569,000; 1950, $9,015,000; 1951, $10,750,000; 1952, $10,852,000; 1953, $14,625,000; 1954, $14 million; 1955, $10 million. It is estimated that in 1956 we will pay $11 million. This will make a total of $103,357,000 for that nine-year period. The coal industry, as I indicated, in 1951-52 received $4·6 million and in 1954-55, $11·3 million. When you compare the two you find that the gold mining industry, which employs a comparatively few people compared with the coal industry, has been assisted to a far greater extent than the coal industry.

Mr. Prudham: I am sure my hon. friend has been misinformed. I think the numbers employed in the two industries are approximately equal.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I would ask the minister to put the exact figures on record, if he would, because my information is that there are only about 23,000 miners employed in the gold mining industry. That does not include their families, but I think there would be many times more than that employed in the coal industry. Of course I would agree with the minister that the number employed in the coal industry has been reduced tremendously in the last year because of reduced production and the closing of mines. As I indicated a moment ago, Alberta had to devote $100,000 to the rehabilitation of miners in that province and in order that they may move to other places. I would say that the number employed in the coal industry has reduced very rapidly from 1951 or 1948. It has been decreasing so rapidly we should be alarmed in this house lest the industry disappear entirely. Hon. members are aware of the fact that you just cannot train a miner overnight. If we were called upon to increase our coal production in case of emergency, we just could not do it because we would not have the qualified miners at hand to go back into those mines. We should, therefore, look very carefully at that aspect of it.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, as I have suggested before and as others have suggested, particularly the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that we should have a national fuel policy. You will recall that the federal government, particularly the Prime Minister, was not hesitant about declaring that we should have a national gas policy for Canada when there was some thought that gas from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba might be shipped south to the United States and deprive Ontario and Quebec of that cheap fuel for the development of the industries in those two central provinces. The government then came out most hastily and said no, sir; we shall have a national gas policy in Canada and an all-Canadian pipe line.

Why can we not show some of that same concern and anxiety for the coal industry and establish a national fuel policy for Canada? As indicated a few moments ago, we are importing from the United States 3,373,000 tons of coal more than we produce in all Canada. I think that is where our solution lies. Some may say that I am trying to cut off imports from the United States, and if you are going to do it in one thing you should do it in another. Make no mistake about it; the manufacturing industries which are established in the central provinces do that very thing. They have great protection from the tariffs of this country which allow only limited amounts of the goods they are manufacturing to come in from the United States.

I think it would not be unfair at all for the Canadian government to say, we shall reduce the imports of coal from the United States at least to the point where there is some semblance of equality between the amount shipped in from the United States and the amount we produce in this country. I am going to say, as I said last year, that if we would only reduce imports from the United States by one million tons, which would not affect imports from the United States to any great extent, we would be able to give this dying Canadian coal industry a greatly needed shot in the arm. If we were to curtail imports from the United States by two million tons it would do a lot toward re-establishing our industry, regardless of the fact that gas is going to be used in Ontario and Quebec. If we would curtail the importation of coal from the United States to the extent of four million tons, I am sure that our industry would be put back on its feet again.

Then what would be the over-all situation? I do not think it would be unfair at all. I do not think anyone could accuse me of being against the United States coal or fuel oil industry in endeavouring to get a market in Canada for some of our own production. I say, what would be the over-all picture then? Instead of a production of 14,770,000 tons in Canada we would have 18,770,000 tons. Instead of 18,183,000 tons coming in from the United States we would have 14,143,000 tons.

I am going to say that while we would be producing in Canada about 3½ million or 4 million tons more than we would be importing, it would be a healthy condition for this country. We should not be importing more coal from the United States than we produce in Canada when we have practically 7 per cent of the world's known supply of coal in this country, and particularly when our own coal mines are being closed down and our miners thrown out of work all across the country. That is true of the maritimes and western Canada as well. If that were done it would give our mines a needed shot in the arm, if I may use that expression.

I say to the minister I recognize immediately that the government has given the coal industry quite a lot of money in the way of subventions, but not nearly as much as the gold mining industry has been receiving. I do not believe the minister would be able to raise subventions sufficiently high to offset the tremendous amount of coal that is coming in from the United States. I think a limit has to be put on the importation of coal into this country. If that were done the subvention on coal would not have to be raised too much.

Mr. Prudham: How would you do it; how would you limit it?

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): It would be very easy to put a limit on the maximum amount of coal that could be shipped into this country. I do not see any difficulty at all. The United States puts a limit on the amount of agricultural products that can be shipped from Canada into the United States. Why can we not put a limit on the amount of coal shipped into Canada from the United States?

Mr. Enfield: To what extent will the steel mills in Canada accept coal from Alberta, from the point of view of quantity?

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): There is a remark on that in the coal board's report, if I could just lay my hands on it. They speak about that. On page 11 I find the following:

> The main hope for new outlets for western coal lies in the field of increased thermal power generation.

No, that is not it. They mention it, but I just cannot lay my hands on it. They mention the fact that one of the hopes for an increased production of western coal lies in the amount supplied to industrial plants in Ontario. I think the importation of gas into Ontario and Quebec from Alberta will have some effect on that. I say to the minister that although we are giving a generous amount in subventions, I do not think that is going to be the solution of our coal problem. It does seem to me that we have to do something about the importation of this coal into Canada, at least to the amount necessary to keep our mines going and to give our employees a decent standard of living. If we did that it would be the solution of our coal problem.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just spoken mentioned that he possibly will not be here when the coal item comes up. I have had the figures of the number of employees in the gold mining industry supplied to me. In 1954, 18,479 people were employed in the gold mining industry and in 1953, the year for which the figures are supplied here, 18,291 were employed in the coal industry.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What about 1948 and 1949? I referred to the production of coal in those years.

Mr. Prudham: I have not those figures.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I think it would be fair to say that during the last 10 years many more coal miners than gold miners were employed. Would it be a fair statement to say that at least twice as many were employed?

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take any more of the time of this committee than is necessary, but I hope I will be permitted to make a few comments concerning the activities of the department and its personnel. There are also one or two things which I would like to bring to the attention of the minister, the officers of his department and hon. members who, I am sure, are all interested in this very important sector of the government.

At the outset I wish to congratulate the minister on the high efficiency with which he directs the affairs of his ministry. I also wish to congratulate each and every one in the department on the excellent work done during the past year. More particularly I want to pay a tribute to the engineers, the surveyors, the geologists and other experts of the department and their helpers whose work in the field or at headquarters has proven to be so valuable to the orderly development of our mineral and other natural resources.

They have been working in co-operation with other provincial or private scientific research parties and with the prospectors and mine developers, and with them they share much of the credit for this extraordinary development which has taken place in northern Canada during the last 15 or 20 years. Without the work of all, this tremendous sweep of waste land to the north could not have become productive regions dotted with wealth-producing communities.

I am also pleased to see that the minister has again authorized the publication of a pamphlet summarizing the activities of his department for the year 1955. Everyone who is acquainted with this pamphlet agrees that it is an excellent publication and that it should be continued.

I wish to put on record short extracts from some of the letters I have received commenting on this booklet. The committee will be pleased to hear what the industry thinks of this department. The first letter is from F. J. O'Connell, general manager of Sigma Mines (Quebec) Limited. I quote:

> We were very pleased to receive Summary of Activities, 1954 for the department of mines. We have reviewed this thoroughly, find it most informative and are amazed at the number of activities carried on under the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

The next letter is from the manager of Elder Mines Limited, and reads as follows:

> I particularly liked the Summary of Activities of 1954, published by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. I think they did a very thorough job and are to be congratulated in turning out this publication.

Another letter comes from the manager of Stadacona Mines Limited, and reads as follows:

> The Summary of Activities, 1954, acquaints the reader with the scope of the department of mines and the various services performed. It is gratifying to note that the geological survey is expanding so rapidly and that they are employing more aircraft in their operations.

The last one I wish to put on record is from the manager of the Lamaque Mining Company Limited, and it reads as follows:

> The Summary of Activities of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for 1954 is a very well prepared booklet and it was interesting to note the modern methods which this department is now using not only to increase the speed at which geological studied areas are being mapped but it also shows the very desirable trend in increasing efficiency of the work of this department. We note that the "New Quebec-Labrador, Quebec" areas were covered by a total of ten field parties and that only the province of British Columbia exceeded this number of field parties. This suggests that the department realize the importance of the possible mineral deposits in our province.

This booklet, Mr. Chairman, is published in English and in French. It is well presented, and it certainly makes it easier for whoever wishes to acquaint himself with the activities of the department or intends to discuss its estimates. What I like most about this pamphlet is that it gives concise information on the main accomplishments in every one of the five branches into which the department is divided.

For instance, if we look at the map on page 2 we are immediately aware of the number and diversity of the locations across the country which were visited by hydrographic, topographical and geodetic field survey parties during the course of last season's operations. Also on pages 22 and 23, at a glance we are informed of the different locations visited by the field parties of the geological survey branch during the summer of 1955. The whole pamphlet is very informative, and again I express the hope that its publication will be continued.

Despite the long association of mining with Canada, it was only about 55 years ago that it actually became a large industry in this country. During those 55 years, the number and importance of the mines have increased to the point where, for 1955, the value of their output has been more than $1,500 million. Canada has become one of the world's greatest producers of minerals. There is every reason to believe that in this country of ours during the next ten years we shall see an even greater expansion in our mining industry than we enjoyed during the past decade, and we know that was the most active decade we ever had.

There are two more items concerning which I would like to say a few words before closing these remarks. The first item has to do with radioactivity surveys; the other has to do with gold. Concerning the radioactivity surveys I wish to learn from the minister if we have made any progress. In the summary of activities for 1950 and 1951 we were informed as follows, and I quote from page 21 of the 1950 report:

> In co-operation with the national research council and with the crown-owned Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited, work was commenced on the development of an airborne radioactive detector that may be used to locate deposits of radioactive substances from an aircraft. It may thus soon be possible to make both magnetic and radioactivity surveys at the same time. Considerable further research work is needed, however, before any claims for effective application are justified.

The following year, as reported at page 22 of the 1951 report, it was stated:

An airborne detector of radioactivity was carried in the same plane as the magnetometer, and radioactivity surveys were made at the same time as the magnetic. So far, however, this instrument has not been shown to be useful as a geological tool. When the anomalies noted are better understood the instrument may prove to be valuable for prospecting for uranium deposits.

Can the minister tell the committee if the geophysics section of his department has made any progress as far as this method of survey is concerned? Can we expect that the geological survey branch will be able to issue maps containing this kind of information?

The last item with which I wish to deal is gold. The mines branch of the department is continually engaged in activities concerned with all phases of the mining and metal industries. In every one of the annual reports we read that the different divisions of this branch are carrying on research work of all kinds. In the case of the industrial minerals the branch is always directing much of its efforts to research relating to the development, utilization and conservation of our mineral resources. In a pamphlet published during the month of March 1956 by the Canadian metal mining association I note the following:

Research Into Extended Commercial Uses of Gold.

Following a resolution sent to this association by the Quebec metal mining association, the executive committee of the board have under consideration a proposal that the possibility of research into more extensive commercial uses of gold be examined.

This question has been raised previously, and for the guidance of our board we are anxious to obtain as much information as possible concerning previous investigations and their results.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, I require only two or three minutes in order to conclude.

The Deputy Chairman: If the committee consents the hon. member may continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dumas: The idea I would like to leave with the experts in the mines branch is this. There must be ways of using gold for industrial purposes other than for tooth fillings and jewellery. This idea is not new, but I wish to bring it to light again and maybe something will come out of it. In the past the mines branch has done excellently in helping the gold mines with their problems; maybe this time it can find some new outlets for the metal.

[Mr. Dumas.]

In closing my remarks I wish to say that we recognize that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is doing immensely well in its endeavour to keep abreast of the varied requirements of the industry for its services. However, I am sure that in the near future the different branches of the department will need more personnel, and it is not an exaggeration to foresee the necessity of a much greater number of field parties for summer operations. All this will necessitate an increased budget, and I hope it will be granted so we will never be lagging behind in the development of our natural resources.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is six o'clock. I have been given to understand that by arrangement it is desired to report progress for the purpose of reverting to motions. Is it agreed that I report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS ON AND AFTER MONDAY, JULY 16

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may have permission to revert to motions I would move:

That on Monday, July 16, 1956, and on every sitting day thereafter until the end of this session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock, a.m., and that the provisions of standing order 2 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—
Administration services—
209. Departmental administration, $510,190.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Michener: Although the minister has made a comprehensive statement, there are one or two suggestions and questions I should like to address to him. We have had a reasonably full discussion of the problems of the gold mining industry and they have been disposed of for this session, and I shall not say any more on that score. There are one or two aspects of mining taxation to which

I think the minister might give some thought with a view to a conference with the Minister of Finance in the general interests of the best use of taxation to encourage mining.

The immense growth in the value of Canada's metal mine production, from $42 million in 1907 to $763 million in 1954, has not come about simply because there was ore available. We have had provisions in our fiscal arrangements for realistic depletion allowances, non-taxation of capital gains—though that seems to have got into an area of uncertainty—freedom from income tax for the first three years of a new mine's production, and important permissible deductions from taxable income of expenditure made for mining exploration and development.

There are aspects of these last two which I should like to mention. The three-year tax-free period to permit a mine to recover some of the capital costs of constructing its mill and installing its mining plant, under the present legislation, is a continuous period. I am not sure whether such instances have arisen, but one has come to my attention which might well arise, where through no fault of the management of the mine the three-year period has begun to run and production has been interrupted. It might be interrupted for a number of causes beyond the control of the operators—acts of God and the King's enemies, as they are usually described—such as unusual storms or prolonged strikes. A variety of things could interrupt the intended benefits of the three-year period for a very considerable time, to the detriment of the mine, and the mine would lose the opportunity to recover the capital costs which this tax-free period was intended to permit it to recover.

I suggest to the minister that he consider with the Minister of Finance the desirability of giving the Department of National Revenue authority to permit the suspension of the running of the period in those cases so the benefit is not lost. That is not an important or far-reaching matter, but it seems to me that it would be a desirable precaution against that contingency. In the Income Tax Act, which this house has under consideration, there is a provision, and I shall use the words, if I may, of the Ontario mining association in describing this problem—

Section 21, subsection 4 of the bill . . .

That is Bill No. 418.

. . . sets up a new subsection (8a) which provides that where an oil or mining corporation acquires the property of an oil corporation, it may deduct the undistributed exploration expense incurred by the predecessor corporation. This simply permits the said oil or mining corporation to adopt the same practice with respect to deferred items of this kind in the predecessor company as it follows with respect to its own current development expenses.

The anomaly existing is that while the mining company is empowered to do this with respect to a predecessor oil company which it may acquire, it is not authorized to take similar action in the event that it acquires a predecessor mining company.

Mr. Harris: I wonder whether we could divert the discussion to myself. I think it is well known to my hon. friend, and if it is not I say it now, that we intend to amend the act to provide for what he is now saying.

Mr. Michener: I am glad to have that information.

Mr. Harris: I should say that I gave a copy of the amendment to a representative of his party the other day.

Mr. Michener: I am glad to hear that mining companies will be assimilated in all respects to oil companies by that amendment.

The geological survey is, of course, a great implement of assistance to the mining industry. In our federal system we have both the federal department of mines and the provincial departments of mines carrying on surveys. I should be glad if the minister would indicate how far there is liaison and co-operation between the federal mines department and the provincial departments, to bring about an integration of the work of the two levels of government. I expect that it is done, but I would be interested to know how close that co-operation is.

Another question which interests me is one that may perhaps be difficult to answer, but I am concerned to know how far we have got with these great surveys. They have been going on for a number of years. Each year parties go into the field, come back and make their reports, and gradually the possible mineral areas are being covered. Could the minister give us an indication of the proportion of the favourable area of Canada that has not yet been the subject of geological survey of the kind that he regards as satisfactory for the areas needing survey?

A further question relates to the use of the information which results from these surveys. These reports and maps and the findings of the geological parties which go out through Canada are of great value. They give direction and lead to prospectors, mining companies and others interested in the development of our mineral resources. It is, of course, of the utmost importance that the information should be made available generally to all at the same time so there is no possibility of advance information or favouritism in the publication of this information. I should like the minister, if he would, to outline to the committee the method that is followed to assure that this valuable information resulting from public surveys is made available to all at the same time.

Having posed those questions, I shall break off here to give the minister an opportunity to deal with them.

Mr. Gillis: I know it has been customary for the minister to keep his discussion of the coal industry until we have reached that item, but now that he has permitted some discussion on this item I think it is only logical that we should follow through with it. I understand that the chairman of the coal board is away attending a conference at the present time, and it is rather uncertain when he will get back. As far as I am concerned, I am particularly interested in the problem of coal, and under the present circumstances I think it requires discussion at this time.

I too should like to say that since the present minister has taken over the department there has been more order and sanity in its administration. I remember when it was just an orphan, and any discussions we had in the house were rather uncertain and very ambiguous. The minister has done a good job in preparing his reports. At least it is quite clear what the department is doing section by section, and while it is not going ahead as fast in some respects as we would like, nevertheless it is moving forward and not backward.

I listened to the hon. member for Bow River. The subject of coal is not a new one to him or me, because we have been discussing it for a long time in the house. I think his observations with respect to the importation of United States coal are timely, and that is perhaps the crux of our whole problem. But I should like to point out that there should not be any difficulty as far as the government is concerned in carrying out what he suggested, namely the placing of an embargo on a certain amount of United States coal coming into this country and zoning markets so there would be markets for coal produced in Canada. Such action should be taken because of the very heavy imports from the United States.

The largest single import into this country measured in terms of dollars is coal. It is the largest single item in our whole import list. As the hon. member for Bow River said, we import 4,700,000 tons more than we produce. Why I say it should not be difficult for the government to arrange what he suggested is that more than half of that 4,700,000 tons is imported by the Canadian National Railways, a government-owned organization. It should not be difficult to come to some understanding with Canadian National Railways on the marketing of Canadian coal at least between Ontario and the maritimes.

I have taken the matter up a good many times with the president of the C.N.R. in the committee on railways and shipping, and of course his answer always is that Canadian coal must be made competitive. They accept no social responsibility at all for communities across the country, and neither do the companies that mine the coal. They accept no social responsibility for the communities where they are exploiting the raw material. Until such time as governments take action to bring to their attention the fact that they have some social responsibility to the communities they are exploiting, the situation will go on as it is, as long as it is measured in terms of dollars and cents and figures on the right side of the ledger.

May I say here that I do not hold the federal government entirely responsible, because they have very little control over the coal mining industry of this country. In the first place, the provincial governments grant the leases. They are the custodians of the raw materials of the provinces, and they hold them in trust for the people of the provinces. When they farm them out to large companies and give them leases in perpetuity the first responsibility rests with the provincial governments and the companies that hold the leases. The federal government's only prerogative is the granting of subventions, subsidies and drawbacks, and the coal board will also assist in marketing in so far as they have the power to do so. Under the British North America Act the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the dominion coal board are going as far as they are permitted to go, unless the provinces change their minds and there is a change of heart on the part of the operating companies. Until we get legislation placing some power in the hands of the federal government the thing will go along as it is.

The hon. member for Bow River also spoke about the coal-burning gas turbine engine being experimented with at McGill. He stated that the members who went down to see the project some four or five years ago were very enthusiastic about it. I want to remind him that I was one of the members who visited the project at that time and, as the minister knows, I was not enthusiastic about it. It was being held up at that time as the great solution so far as the future of the coal mining industry was concerned, and the newspapers were full of it. But after I visited there my conclusion was that if it ever worked it was at least ten years away from any commercial value. That is five years ago and it is still in the experimental stage.

The assumption is that the turbine engine is interchangeable with the present diesel engines recently adopted by the Canadian National Railways. That is not true, because in order to instal the turbine engine in a locomotive a special locomotive will have to be built for it, and having in mind the huge investment in diesels made by the C.N.R. in the last few years they are not going to write off that investment in the foreseeable future.

I think it is well to dispel these illusions that are thrown out from time to time to keep people guessing and wondering for a year or two while at the same time there is a rapid decline in the industry. I do not think it does any good, and I think the department is fully aware of that fact.

In that regard I should like to refer to page 90 of the 1955 departmental report. What they say is not very encouraging, but at the same time they are not trying to fool anybody. The report has this to say:

> This equipment, which is installed at the gas dynamics laboratory of McGill University at Ste. Anne de Bellevue, was operated for about 300 hours during the year. Some difficulties were experienced with slag formation and corrosion of the tubes in the hot heat exchangers. The causes of these troubles and methods for their prevention are being investigated.

That is just about where it was five years ago. The phrase used there indicating that it was operated for about 300 hours might give the impression that it was installed as an engine and had operated for that number of hours. Actually it is just sitting there on a frame and the engine has been operated. The difficulty is and has been to find a cooling system that will take away the heat from the gas and not burn off the blades of the engine. That has been the difficulty and I think it still is the difficulty. If the engine is ever perfected I think it might be a good marine engine or a good engine for the generation of thermal power in small electric plants, but I cannot see Canadian National Railways writing off their huge investment in diesels within the foreseeable future and building new locomotives to instal that type of engine.

The reason I am saying this is that for too long there has been too much of this kind of thing thrown out to people, and it is merely an illusion and raises false hopes. I believe we should be frank and realistic at this time with the people in an industry such as the coal mining industry. As the minister knows, at this time one has to be careful in discussing coal, particularly in my end of the country. As the minister also knows, the mine workers have been conducting negotiations with the operating company for several months. They had a conciliation board, and the conciliation board decided that no wage increases or changes in conditions were warranted at this time because of the financial position of the coal company. A vote was taken on that proposal and the miners rejected it by about three to one. Now they are going to hold a convention for the purpose of determining where they go from there.

I do not want to get involved in any of the internal problems, but I would say this. The miners have worked hard and have co-operated fully. They have subsidized to a large extent that coal operation in Nova Scotia. They have not had any adjustment in wages or conditions since 1952. At the same time alongside of them, within 13 miles, is the steel plant owned by the same corporation they work for; and in that steel plant there has been a continuous adjustment upward in wages, working conditions, fringe benefits and additional holidays. To those 7,000 or 8,000 men who always led in the wage field in that province it is a rather tough proposition to see every other industry stepping up ahead of them while they continue to accept the same conditions and wages that prevailed back in 1952.

What the outcome of their negotiations is going to be one cannot say at this time. But there is something the minister's department can do in co-operation with the Department of Transport. It is rather difficult to pinpoint any particular problem, especially an economic one, as that of any one department because they spill over from one into the other. The recent 7 per cent interim increase in freight rates which has just been authorized by the board of transport commissioners has added a problem to those of the department of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, in that it adds 12 cents a ton to the cost of the movement of coal from Nova Scotia to the points at which it is marketed. Some is marketed in Ontario but it is mostly marketed in Quebec. That increase of 12 cents a ton together with the other 7 per cent or 7½ per cent increase when it goes into operation some time this fall will bring the increase up to about 24 cents a ton. That adds to the burden.

In the past, when an increase in freight rates was made, it was the practice of the coal board to revise the subvention schedule so as to absorb the additional freight-rate cost and maintain the same balance in the freight rates for the movement of coal. A few days ago I asked the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether it was the intention to follow the practice of the past and absorb into the subvention this 12 cents a ton additional freight rate for the movement of Nova Scotia coal. The minister's answer at that time was, of course, that no consideration had been given to that matter at that time. Before we conclude consideration of his estimates I hope the minister will tell us whether the matter has been further considered, and whether the practice of the past is to be carried out.

As I said a moment ago, if one follows the press on this question of the future of coal and the economic feasibility of natural gas and other fuels, one is left in a rather confused state of mind. When you pick up one press clipping you find that it says, "Golden year for coal is seen". This is from the United States, where they are stepping up production and they figure there is a bright future for coal. Then you pick up an editorial and read, "Coal comes back", and so on. That sounds rather nice except to the coal miners, who cannot see it coming back as far as their wages and conditions are concerned.

Then recently the president of the coal company in his annual report to the board of directors—they held the meeting in Nova Scotia this time, for the first time in the history of the corporation—stated as follows:

> . . . the impact upon the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia of the St. Lawrence seaway and the trans-Canada pipe line is "somewhat difficult to appraise and foresee". He added, however, that "neither one of these projects appeared to offer other than somewhat alarming possibilities of increased competition in our upper Canadian markets".

And so on. Then he offers as a solution mechanization, lower costs and greater production. I have heard that story a good many times during my lifetime; sweat it out of the hides of the workers; take it from the consumer; we take no responsibility except you get down and dig. In another editorial—and this is from the old country—they finish up by saying this:

> Thus oil which now accounts for about 38 per cent of the free world's energy supplies, will soon displace coal from the dominant position it has hitherto held.

We have one press statement against the other. One expert says coal is on the way out. The other fellow says there is a golden future for it. The president of the big operating coal company says sweat it out of their hides and get the figures on the right side of the balance sheet. As I said before, until we get a realization of responsibility on the part of those who are fortunate in having huge leases granted by provincial governments that prevent anyone else from operating—and provincial governments grant charters to enable them to amalgamate five or six companies in one; squeeze the small shareholders out; establish remote control at Mount Royal; draw big salaries and pay taxes in Quebec; siphon the wealth off from that part of the country—until we bring these people to the realization that they have some social responsibility in the communities where they work on the natural resources, we are going to continue this thing of ghost towns everywhere we are working in a wasting industry such as mining; whether it is coal, gold or metal of any kind, it is a wasting resource.

I was encouraged by this press report recently from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. I think it is the first realistic step that has been taken for a long time. It is headed "To make special study of coal industry in N.S." and it reads in part as follows:

> The Gordon royal commission on Canada's economic prospects will make a "special study" of the Nova Scotia coal industry, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald was informed Tuesday by a top official of district 26, united mine workers of America.
>
> A union statement said the Gordon commission has ordered that "a special study be conducted into all aspects of the Nova Scotia coal industry".
>
> The Montreal firm of Urwick, Currie Ltd. "has been engaged by the commission to further investigate the industry and report to the Gordon commission".

This is encouraging. The only thing I have to say on that point is this, Mr. Chairman. If that examination is made, I hope the people who make it are competent, are free from pressure and will call the shots across the board as they see them. I hope they will not do as previous commissions have done. I hope they will not just compile a rehash of briefs that I read 30 years ago and call it a report and an examination of that industry at this time.

Mr. Forsyth indicated he was fearful of what the St. Lawrence seaway and natural gas were going to do to the coal industry, when and if that pipe line reaches Quebec city. Six years ago I was a member of the committee that made the first examination of the application of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines to build that famous line. At that time all those who appeared before the committee were from the United States, the engineers and the people who made the surveys. The Lehman banking people from New York were going to finance it, and they appeared before that committee.

I asked these witnesses what they calculated natural gas in Montreal and Quebec would do to the coal industry of Nova Scotia, which was the main economic base of that province. Well, they said they did not know.

I said, was any survey made east of Montreal? No, no survey was made. Were there any representations from the operating coal companies? There were no representations from anyone. This was just the forgotten area. They wrote Canada off at Quebec city.

As the minister knows, they were good enough to hear the only witness we could get with any information on the subject, the chairman of the dominion coal board. He came and gave evidence. He admitted that gas and oil had pretty well cleaned up the coal industry of Alberta, but that province was fortunate in that these other industries replaced the coal industry. We do not have that. What is going to happen when gas reaches Quebec and Montreal? We do not know. It is a hypothetical question.

This was six years ago and the line has not been completed yet, so we have had a lease on life. I talked with one of these witnesses afterwards, and I asked him by how much they could undersell coal. He said they could take the market from coal in any industry except the basic steel industry. He said they could take it from coal in the domestic field, that they could undersell coal by at least $1.50 per ton, measuring it in B.T.U.'s. He said, "If we did not figure we would get that market in Montreal and Quebec we would not be going down there." That is logical; they require that market.

I have always questioned in my mind the economic wisdom of taking gas from Alberta to Quebec and Montreal. I do not think that is going to be cheap fuel for that area. I do not think it is a good development, because you have approximately half of Canada's total productive capacity concentrated in that area and you are harnessing industry and domestic heating to a long pipe line going straight across the country, which would be extremely vulnerable. If you changed over your equipment it would take a long time to change back if something happened to that pipe line. Then there is the question of supply. While geologists and oil men may make guesses as to how long the oil is going to last, I think you can be more certain about solid fuels. I am not so sure you can be certain about either oil or gas.

I have a brief in my hand prepared by the solid fuels research institute. These people should know something about the subject. Of course, they have a motive in trying to retain solid fuels, but at the same time it is a rather responsible body. On page 1 of the brief they say:

> A study of newspaper clippings on many American centres will show a record of frequent failure of supply, of low pressures, forced cut-offs and rising prices. For many communities depending on natural gas, these have been disturbing factors.

This brief points up this question in quite a realistic way. They go on and say, on page 2:

> A stable coal industry is recognized as a necessity. The economic flow of solid fuel for Ontario and western Quebec region is from an area within a radius of 500 miles.

They are talking about United States coal.

> Many questions have been raised as to the economic soundness of a 2,000 mile pipe line.

That has always stuck in my mind, too. I would question the wisdom, in a time of rumours of war, threats of war and the possibility of the hydrogen bomb, of harnessing the industrial section of Quebec to a pipe line that is over 2,000 miles long and is certainly vulnerable to sabotage. As I said before, if you change your heating facilities and something happens to that line, then you are in quite a spot.

Personally I do not think the operating coal companies in Nova Scotia particularly, are pulling their share of the load. Right in my own area they closed down three fairly large mines since the mechanization program went into effect. So far the results of the mechanization program have confirmed all the doubts I had as to its value in stepping up production and cheapening costs in these old submarine mines. It has not been very successful to date, and it has had a fairly good test period. Whether or not the companies are trying to find markets for coal or whether they are producing coal to fill the markets, I am rather doubtful. Just a few days ago I received a telegram from Toronto which reads:

> We may need 50 tons per day of pulverized coal for a project at Bancroft, Ontario. Would like to use Cape Breton coal. Where do I inquire for established prices f.o.b. destination. Please wire or phone collect.

I telephoned this man and he told me that the 50 tons would perhaps be stepped up, and it would be a continuing order. Well, 50 tons a day is a fairly substantial order, but he could not find anyone in the province of Ontario through whom he could place an order or get quotations. They are certainly not trying to sell coal in Ontario. This man told me that the reason he wanted coal was that he had been using oil and had found it expensive. He wanted to get out of it.

When you talk about coal being competitive with oil, that is a pretty good example. Here is a man who is using oil, and he wants to get out of it and go back to pulverized coal. If these people are trying to sell coal why is there not an agent in that area? At least if you are trying to sell neckties or shoes or aluminum ware, there is an agent going around offering it to you. There is a possibility that there is that kind of business running around Ontario if they wished to go after it.

Perhaps these companies are too busy marketing United States coal. Dominion Coal has a wholly-owned subsidiary in Montreal, the Dominion Import Company, and perhaps they are too busy doing that. That is something I hope the Gordon commission will go into quite thoroughly.

I think the federal government in so far as they can under the circumstances, have done a reasonable job in assisting the industry by way of subventions, subsidies, drawbacks and rebates under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. If you look at the assistance these people have received and then look at their balance sheets you will find they would not be in business at all if it were not for the help they get from the federal government. But they take this position. We want your help but we are free enterprisers; you have nothing to say about where we spend your money or how we invest it or whether we market the coal or whether we do not market the coal; that is our business and it is none of your business. According to the figures I have of the assistance they get from the balance sheets they put out, if public support were withdrawn from them they would be insolvent.

I have a quarrel with them on another score. At a convention in Toronto the Prime Minister said that when the maritimes took the initiative and began to make plans to do things for themselves the federal government would help. Well, since that time they have been doing something. The Atlantic economic council is doing an excellent job probing the possibilities of intermarketing among the four maritime provinces, what they can produce here and what they can market there. Some little industries have been established; not big ones, but it is something. They are doing something.

The four premiers of the Atlantic provinces are meeting in Fredericton to ascertain what can be done further. Well, what is the answer? What can be done to bolster a waning coal industry? The answer is subsidiary industries. A few days ago the president of Dosco made the statement that they were establishing two new fabricating plants this year. I was very sorry to learn they were not going to be established in Nova Scotia; they were going to be established in Quebec. That man was a member of the Atlantic economic council. That is the kind of industry that is required in the maritimes to bolster the economy if coal is in the shaky position that is indicated at this time, and if those people are interested in those communities where they are working on the raw materials, because those fabricating plants in Quebec are going to be supplied with the raw material from Sydney, from the basic steel plant where they have the iron ore, the coal, the limestone and all the ingredients that will go into the steel that will be fabricated there. It will all come from that area. Why could not at least one of those plants be established there if those people had any social responsibility, because that is the base of their whole empire? The raw materials will be taken from that area.

Of course when they turn out that raw steel they will get a subvention—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Gillis: You just spoiled a great speech.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, while you may have spoiled a great speech I am not going to be so bold as to say that you are about to listen to one. However, I do wish to follow the same line that my hon. friend has followed and the same line that my colleague the hon. member for Bow River followed this afternoon. But I am going to make my remarks apply particularly to my own constituency, because I did have what at one time was regarded as a fairly large coal mining industry in the Crowsnest pass area.

I do not think I need to emphasize, any more than previous speakers have emphasized, the fact that the coal mining industry throughout Canada at large is in a very depressed condition. I do not think I go too far when I say that the coal mining industry of the Crowsnest pass is perhaps worse off than any other area because it has been dependent upon certain particular markets which have almost completely disappeared. This is largely due, as the hon. member for Bow River said, to the fact that over the years the government of Canada has not adopted a national coal policy which would keep the coal mining industry of Canada in a healthy condition.

We have had several commissions study this very subject. They have travelled from coast to coast, and a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent over the years in studying the coal mining industry. No end of recommendations have been made from time to time, but the government has not in the past arrived at any very definite over-all national coal policy. Therefore I say we must blame the government to some extent for the condition in which the coal mining industry finds itself.

In the Crowsnest pass area it will not be long until there is no coal mining industry at all to speak of. We have communities there that once upon a time were and are now dependent upon the coal mining industry. One town had a population of 4,000 people; another coal mining town had a population of 3,000 people, and there were quite a number of other smaller towns with populations of 200, 300 and 600 people. Now these communities are fast becoming what might be known as ghost towns because they have not been able to dispose of their coal, owing to a lack of markets in years past and in recent times, of course, the introduction of the diesel engines which run our trains. Those mines used to supply the railroads with coal for their engines.

I am not going to blame the present minister for the situation as it exists there. I do blame the government for having no over-all coal policy throughout the years. In my constituency the depressed condition is largely owing to the introduction of the diesel engine, and I cannot blame the minister for that. Therefore I am not laying that blame at his doorstep. These are things we cannot help. We live in an age of progress, when one thing replaces another. When that happens, of course, some industry is going to have to pay the price, some industry is going to fail unless it is able to take up the slack and go into something else. This is impossible for the coal mining industry. When the coal mining industry fails, it fails and it cannot do anything else to keep itself going.

I notice that at page 87 of the minister's annual report he tells us something of the responsibilities and the work of his particular department. I am just wondering how much actual value this might be in the light of the fact that coal is being used less and less throughout Canada on account of the government's failure in the past to adopt a long-term, over-all national coal policy. At page 87 I read, under "Fuels division:"

> The major objective of the division is investigation of improvement of methods in producing and utilizing Canada's fuel resources. To do this, research in coal has been directed toward (a) study of stress phenomena in mining (b) improvement in preparation techniques and (c) study of problems relating to combustion and power.

Well, now, that is all very well and all very good, but I wonder what it amounts to if in the end the coal mining industry cannot sell its coal. That is the thing that to me is a bit baffling. I recognize there must be something of value in this type of research, but in the light of the fact that other fuels are displacing coal I am just wondering whether it is all worth it.

At page 89 under the paragraph entitled "Physical and Chemical Survey of Canadian Coals", I find the following:

> This work is part of the study of the basic properties and characteristics of Canadian coals including their suitability to cleaning. Large scale samples from five mines in Nova Scotia and one mine in Alberta were examined and reports were issued for use of the interested parties.

A further paragraph reads:

> Commercial coal surveys.
>
> This survey was done in co-operation with the dominion coal board and the provincial mines departments to obtain information on the quality of coal offered for sale by the coal operators. It is part of the general survey of Canadian commercial coals to obtain data for the analysis directory of Canadian coals issued by the mines branch.

Well, now, that is all right; so far, so good. But what does it all amount to when there are no markets for the coal? I shall read just one more paragraph:

> Coal Beneficiation.
>
> Investigations were continued on the problem of finding uses for the finer sizes of western Canadian bituminous coals which are particularly friable. Considerable attention was paid to the evaluation of factors influencing the production of briquettes to meet market requirements. A nozzle for the improved dispersal of asphaltic binder used in briquetting was developed and tested in commercial plants in western Canada, and the results were encouraging and further experimental work is continuing.

All of that is good; it looks nice in print; I suppose it gives a lot of people a bit of a job to do and helps them to fiddle around, and I also suppose the net result of the research as far as information is concerned is very valuable. However, of what value is it if you cannot dispose of your coal and find markets for it after all the studies have been carried on? As far as the Crowsnest pass area is concerned, people there cannot find markets for their coal. The same thing was said by the hon. member for Bow River in giving the over-all picture, and he has an extensive coal mining industry in his area. The hon. member for Cape Breton South, who has a large coal mining area in his constituency, made a similar complaint; if there are no markets, then the coal mining industry is going backward.

I come now to the report of the dominion coal board, and on page 10 I find something of interest. The hon. member for Bow River put much of this paragraph on the record, and I shall read just three lines:

> The Alberta and British Columbia fields, more especially the former, have suffered most of the aforenoted reduction in Canadian coal output. The present prospects for this segment of the industry are bleak.

That is not very encouraging, is it? I must repeat that I am not blaming the minister for the particular situation which exists in my own area, but I am going to say this to him. He must not run around indicating that the industry is becoming any healthier. Actually I do not suppose he does that altogether; perhaps he just states the facts, but he has to state them more clearly than he has in the past. He must not scurry about trying to encourage the coal mining industry to think that hope exists somewhere or other. Unless he can say there is an immediate hope, then he is just leaving a false impression. I suggest to him that he should tell the truth and seek the co-operation of the coal mining industry for some other purpose. If he cannot find markets, if the coal mining industry cannot get rid of the coal, then those who are employed in the coal mining industry should be told about it and assisted in some fashion or other to rehabilitate themselves.

Some work in rehabilitating coal miners has been carried on in the Crowsnest pass area by the Alberta government, and the government has met with some considerable success. A year or so ago the government of Alberta appropriated some $100,000 to help rehabilitate the coal miners. The government did not go out and say, "Now, how many of you want to move? Tell us where you want to move and we will finance you." The government did not do that at all. Instead, it sought the co-operation of the industry, the coal miners' union and the national employment office. The latter is, of course, a branch of this dominion government, and I will give it credit for doing a marvellous job in co-operating in this instance.

I sent to Alberta for a report of the work of this committee that was set up for the rehabilitation of these men, and I received it promptly. I would like to quote a couple of paragraphs from the covering letter, which was written by the minister of industries and labour of the province of Alberta. He comments on the report of this committee and says:

> The interesting aspect of the work of this committee was that it did not require a great deal of money to make it effective. The committee was a good one, consisting of personnel familiar with displacement problems and generally interested in rehabilitation work. The over-all attitude was one of helping the displaced coal miner to help himself, with certain costs that would have been a burden if carried by the miner himself, being drawn from the limited funds apportioned for the purpose. The miners, their union and the committee co-operated excellently in accomplishing the remarkable results shown.
>
> The success of the venture proves what can be accomplished when the chips are down and the very future of a large number of working people is at stake. The human interest element tends to revive one's faith in human nature and restore confidence that people generally have not adopted the attitude that they will not assume risks and responsibility without first securing complete public assurance in advance that their welfare is assured.

Those two paragraphs from the minister's letter tell a great deal and are worth pondering. I believe it would pay the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to work in co-operation with the Minister of Labour in reviewing the situation. If they wished they could set up a committee; it could even be a parliamentary committee, which might be a good idea. It also might be an interdepartmental committee, with members of a miners' union and members of the coal mining industry, if they wish. Some body should be set up to investigate whether or not it is possible to rehabilitate the coal mining industry, with special emphasis on the rehabilitation of the coal miner who is in a very bad way because after all, as the hon. member for Bow River said, you cannot train a coal miner overnight. You cannot go out on the street and say to an individual, "I will give you a job digging coal". These are specially trained men; mining is a life work. These men go in the mines when they are young and they stay there and put their whole life into their work. If at middle age or later they find themselves unemployed by reason of depressed conditions in the coal mines they are in need of rehabilitation, because they are on in years and there is little else they can do. It is very bad for them.

In this report of the Alberta government's committee on rehabilitation it states that in one year alone the total placements were 384 families who were moved with their effects. In another year 325 families were moved into other areas, where they were rehabilitated and found other employment. I shall read one paragraph of the report:

> In carrying out its work, the miners' rehabilitation committee wishes to express its appreciation for the valuable assistance rendered by the national employment service and the united mine workers of America, district 18.

Well, $100,000 was appropriated for this purpose. It was found that it was not necessary to spend all the money, because they received such excellent co-operation from these bodies. I shall not say anything more. This must be about the twentieth or twenty-first annual speech I have made on coal. Perhaps they have not been very effective; otherwise something would have been done by this time. But this is the twenty-first year I have been sitting here, and I do not think I have let a year go by without dinning into the ears of the government the need for a national coal policy and trying to do what I can for the coal mining industry of my own constituency and of Canada generally.

It seems that in this particular session the situation is graver than it ever was before. I can only suggest this to the minister. We live in an age of progress. We are building a pipe line that is going to take the place of a great deal of coal in eastern Canada, in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. As I said on a previous occasion, who knows but that it will not be very many years until atomic energy will displace that again? That is the way it goes. Millions and millions of tons of coal are lying in the ground. Perhaps it will continue to lie in the ground until this earth is destroyed and eventually becomes recreated in so many millions of years, with a new race of people who will have to start all over again and commence digging coal. Perhaps that will be the situation.

I shall not say any more, but I wish the minister would tell the coal mining industry exactly what the score is and then take steps to remedy that situation.

Mrs. Shipley: Earlier this day my colleague and neighbour, the hon. member for Villeneuve, had some very kind words to say about the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and his staff. The hon. member for Villeneuve comes from Quebec and I come from Ontario. It is true that our ridings abut, but our problems are identical, as I am sure are those of other ridings where gold mines or coal mines exist. But I am not going to take the time of the house to reiterate the thanks to the department expressed by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Earlier today the hon. member for Bow River spoke of the plight of coal miners. When hon. members speak in this house about coal miners and gold miners, the two words sound so much alike that I have to stretch my ears to make sure which they are talking about, because our problems are almost identical. My hon. friend chose to emphasize the comparison of the subsidy to coal mines with that to gold mines. He mentioned the equivalent of the subsidy in protective tariffs to other industries, but in my opinion we would both be well advised if we compared the subsidies that either one of us receives to those received by the farmers, particularly in western Canada; or the protective tariffs, which are nothing else than subsidies, to the industries in Canada rather than to either his problem or mine. After all, consider these tariffs. For instance, take the electrical industry and the automobile industry. He and I could play tiddley-winks with our subsidies when compared with either of those industries. Every cent of those subsidies is paid by the same taxpayers. They are trying to help him out and they are trying to help me out and all others in the same plight.

Furthermore, it would appear to me and I am sure, to every hon. member in this house who has either coal or gold in his riding, that because it is an actual resource of this country and because both have played a great part in the economy of this country and may well do so again—let us pray that they may—we are more entitled to consideration than perhaps a manufacturing industry that is competing with something from another country that can be sold cheaper here.

I hope my hon. friends over here and I can get together on this. We are really not far apart, but perhaps we are not assisting each other quite as much as we might when we compare the help we receive. We are both representing natural industries of this country. I know that the coal in certain parts of the country, and in fact most parts of the country, is not needed very much in industry today. Our gold used to be the most desired natural resource in the whole wide world, but the nations chose to go off the gold standard. Certain things came to pass that made your coal not so valuable for industry. I shall support anything such as a royal commission as suggested by the hon. member for Bow River and others, so that we may find some use for your coal, and I hope my gold will finally attain its former value once again.

Mention was made of the gas pipe line coming in, which will perhaps lessen your market. I do not think the type of coal that comes from Nova Scotia and, to a lesser degree from Alberta is presently used where gas would be used. But it is the same thing with my gold as it is with your coal. This is something we have to face. From my many discussions with the minister whose estimates are now under consideration, I know that the coal problem is one of the main things he considers. When I go to him with my problems he says, "I have just stopped thinking about coal and now I have to think about gold." I do not envy him his position.

I am sorry the hon. member for St. Paul's is not here. I have known the hon. member for many years. He mentioned the surveys that are being made by this department.

Mr. Prudham: He is at a committee meeting.

Mrs. Shipley: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I was not drawing attention to the fact that he was not in his seat; that was not my intention. That is done all too often in the house in perhaps not too kindly a manner. I have known the hon. member for many years. I was going to be slightly critical of him, and I prefer to be critical to a man's face rather than behind his back. That was the only reason I mentioned that. I am glad the minister said that, because I certainly did not mean to draw attention to it.

The hon. member referred to the many surveys being made by the department. I shall read what the hon. member said tomorrow and if I am wrong in my present understanding I will be glad to apologize. He asked the minister to make it very clear just how the information resulting from these completed surveys was distributed, and I had the definite impression that there was an implication that there was favouritism. I was rather surprised at that comment by the hon. member. I had an experience which I am sure you will all be glad to hear about and I am going to ask the minister if there is enough money in his budget to make certain that this is a common practice where need is proven.

Let me start at the beginning. I had requests from the most important people in my riding, and for those who do not come from mining ridings may I say that the most important people in my riding are the prospectors. They wanted copies of aerial magnetic maps that had been made of the surrounding area and they had never been prepared by the department, where you can get such maps for very little money, next to nothing. I got in touch with the department and they told me that these maps had already been prepared by a private company. They also said that because there was a limited amount of money to spend on making such maps, which are found so valuable by prospectors, they made it a general practice not to duplicate areas that had been done by private companies.

These prospectors in my riding could not afford to buy the maps from the private company even if they would release them. It was suggested by one of the minister's officials that possibly they might be able to obtain the maps, the negatives or whatever you call them, from the private company and make the maps available to the prospectors. After a year or so this was accomplished. As far as favouritism is concerned, the information was finally completed on a Friday and was sent to the newspapers in the area concerned and to me at the same time. I got it on Monday morning but along with the letter from the department notifying me that it had been done I had wires from many prospectors and mining companies in the area thanking me and asking me to thank the minister for getting this done. I hope there is enough money in the department's estimates to obtain this information, which is very costly to prepare, from private companies and make it available to the prospectors and the mining companies generally.

There is one other matter I should like to ask the minister to investigate. Members of parliament get free copies of statistics, pamphlets and other information from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. Every member of parliament gets them and probably 20 per cent at most are keenly interested in them. I received the pamphlet referred to this afternoon by my colleague the hon. member for Villeneuve; and when I did I thought, my word, how the people in my home town would like to see that. I went around to three or four members who are not very interested in it, got extra copies and sent them to my home town library. I had a letter back a little while afterward saying that even the topmost thriller in the library had not had as much circulation as these pamphlets.

I should like to make a suggestion to the minister, and in doing so I suggest that the matter should be at his discretion. From time to time we are criticized for our printing bills, and I think it might not be wise to send out such pamphlets to all public libraries in Canada. However, I suggest that the minister should have enough copies of these and other information available so that on the request of a member or any other responsible person and at the minister's discretion—"discretion" only means that he is sure some reasonable use will be made of the information—certain libraries may be put on the mailing list for all publications of his department that might be of interest to those in the area. I lent my copy and I had to go and scrounge another in order to have one. As you know, in my riding we are entirely dependent on mining, and I do know that the pamphlets and other information issued by this department that I have sent to my riding have been invaluable. I hope the minister will see if that can be done. Perhaps he would not have to put any more money in the budget, and I should like him to say if he would welcome requests from members of the house.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Chairman, my remarks this evening will differ from those of previous speakers. I was most interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West this afternoon, when he dealt with the forgotten expedition into the Arctic in 1903 and 1904 by Commander A. P. Low. It appears strange to me, as I am sure it does to all members of the house, that proper notice was not taken of this historic expedition for many years, in spite of the loss of the proclamation records. I am glad to report, however, that the Arctic exploration publication of December, 1955 properly deals with this expedition. It is to be hoped that the Canadian Geographical Journal will take the opportunity to publish an article correctly describing this famous expedition, the first Canadian expedition into the Arctic.

This afternoon I followed with interest the remarks of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys dealing with the activities of his department. The minister and his officials have always been eager and willing to cooperate in all matters pertaining to the mining industry in general. They are to be congratulated on the efficiency of their department and for doing an excellent job.

While I am on my feet I wish to take this occasion to say something about the Canadian Geographical Society and the monthly magazine published under its auspices, namely the Canadian Geographical Journal. The Canadian Geographical Society is one of the most public spirited and unselfish organizations in this country. Its ambition is to make Canada better known to Canadians and to the rest of the world. Its chief purpose is to distribute information on the geography, resources and people of this country. To assist in this task, and as its primary object, the society publishes the magazine to which I have referred. The Canadian Geographical Journal in my view is one of the very best periodicals issued anywhere in Canada. In a sense it is the eyes of this nation, because through its illustrated and printed pages it enables Canadians and other people to see this country as an entity.

The Journal writers take threads or fragments of Canada's history and geography and over the years weave or blend these into a meaningful and informative picture of Canada as a whole, in all its interest and variety. In a word, it serves to present a memorable image of Canada.

The Canadian Geographical Society was founded 27 years ago, in 1929, I believe, to be exact. Its first president was that great friend and native son of the Canadian north, Dr. Charles Camsell, C.M.G. Today its president is another great worker in advancing the best interests of northern Canada and other parts as well. Major General H. A. Young, who is also deputy minister of public works, is president of the society at the present time.

Mr. Herridge: And he is a good president, too.

Mr. Simmons: That is fine. Through good times and bad the society has managed to keep the Journal alive and issued regularly. How they do this on the funds available to the society thus far, baffles me. In the United States the corresponding publication has the benefit of very large sums bequeathed by wealthy, public spirited citizens. In Canada there is nothing resembling this type of large-scale financial assistance for a geographical publication. Nevertheless the articles in the Canadian Geographical Journal are of a high calibre and its pages are always handsomely illustrated, sometimes in several colours. Colour printing is a particularly expensive process, however, and I imagine it is a special luxury at present for the Journal.

The success thus far of this Canadian magazine is due in large measure, I believe, to a dedicated board of directors, a wise editorial committee and a very able executive secretary and editor of publications in the person of Gordon M. Dallyn. Incidentally, all directors and committee members serve without remuneration.

The society does much more than publish its worthy journal. It sponsors public lectures and awards scholarships as well as granting financial aid to exploration projects and other research. Its sponsored lectures have been given by such men as Sir Hubert Wilkins, General McNaughton, Dr. MacKintosh Bell, Edward Shackleton and Gordon Robertson, deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources. In addition the society awards scholarships in geography. In the years 1939 to 1953, 29 such scholarships were awarded amounting to a total of $7,400.

In the matter of expenditures to assist exploration, financial aid was contributed by the society to the Baffin islands expedition of 1950 and 1953; to Dr. Williams for geographical investigation in the Churchill region; to Dr. Kimble and associates for a survey of the St. Maurice valley; and to a Mr. Laforest with the upper Orinoco expedition. In addition to sponsoring the production of several documentary films with geographical themes, the society has published and distributed over 5 million pamphlets containing articles from its Journal on 153 separate subjects. It is an astonishing fact that when the Canadian Geographical Society first came into existence there was not one professional geographer in Canada. Today there are over 300.

This year for the first time on record the association of American geographers met outside the United States. Montreal was the city chosen in this connection, and this gesture in itself is a tribute to Canada's significance in the world geographical picture. The international geographical union, which meets every four years, convenes in August this year in Rio de Janeiro. Canada has always been a member of this world organization. For many years the Canadian Geographical Society was the nominal sponsor of the Canadian committee of the international geographical union. I am glad to say that Canada will be represented at the Rio meeting this year by Dr. Norman Nicholson, head of the geographical branch, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. I believe that every consideration and support ought to be given by the federal government and by Canadian citizens individually and generally to this organization created to foster greater geographical knowledge.

What are some of the ways in which geographical science helps Canada and Canadians? First, it assists us all to understand better the economic development now taking place in this country. A better knowledge of geography, of the distribution of our natural resources, of fuel supplies and needs —all of these facts help Canadians to grasp in a more intelligent way just what is involved in the concept, engineering and economics of the various projects being undertaken throughout the length and breadth of Canada today. I mention as an example the gas pipe line from Alberta to eastern Canada.

Second, geographical knowledge also enables Canadians generally to understand that in order properly to develop the mineral wealth of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, railways must be built. On this subject I want to point out that had it not been for Charles Camsell and his lifelong interest in the north, as well as his awareness and knowledge of the importance of the north country, our national development would have been much less extensive.

Third, by studies of the distribution of ice in northern waters, the action of currents and the influence of winds, our scientists are able to assist materially in solving the problems of ocean navigation along our northern coast.

Fourth, survey work in the north, carried out by parties operating under the direction of the geographical branch of the federal mines and technical surveys department, engaged in studying and recording surface conditions in the territories such as the location of navigable rivers, the extent and type of vegetation, the location of muskeg areas and so forth, has been of immeasurable aid in the construction of the D.E.W. line.

From these and many other activities we see that modern geography is not only a relatively new-found art but a vitally important practical science. It teaches us where our various resources are located. We learn about weather, climate and problems of transportation. We gain a better understanding of our own and other lands. It helps us to dispel the curse of overspecialization in these days in a country where many graduates of our universities are actually ignorant of the character and resources of Canada, and have little appreciation of how their particular field of training relates to the well-being and progress of the country as a whole.

For all these reasons I would therefore strongly urge that the Canadian Geographical Society and its Canadian Geographical Journal are worthy of substantial federal government support in the form of an annual grant or vote. I urge this for a reason even greater than any I have thus far given. The kind of knowledge the society disseminates results in a keener and wider appreciation of the special problems and background of people living in the several distinct regions of this extensive country. In all that it does the society makes for greater mutual understanding among all Canadians, and to this extent is an invaluable agency in creating and promoting greater national unity.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take up much time of the committee, inasmuch as several points I had intended to mention have already been covered by other members of various parties. No doubt the minister, when he replies, will give the information that I would have asked about.

I was interested in what the minister had to say regarding this little publication, a summary of the activities of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for 1955. It appears to be a supplement to the annual report. I would be interested in knowing if this booklet is intended for free distribution. I do not see any price marked on it. I wonder whether it covers the same period of time as the annual report, the annual report being for the fiscal year. This booklet indicates that perhaps it is for the calendar year; I am not sure.

The annual report, of course is for the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1955, and therefore is a bit out of date, but the minister did bring us up to date on the activities of his department in a way that was quite informative. I noticed that the introduction to the report is signed by the acting deputy minister. I would be very pleased if the minister would make a statement as to the present position of the deputy minister of the department. I understand that the deputy minister has been on leave, and I think hon. members would be interested in knowing whether or not that is going to be a continuing situation, whether a replacement is contemplated, and if so when that might take place. I am just seeking information.

I come, of course, from a province that is not of great interest to the mines side of this department. As far as we know we have no minerals that are available in commercial quantities. I was interested to note in the annual report that a geological survey of Prince Edward Island is in process. I might add that the oil companies seem to retain a fairly persistent hope that the geological formations in that area would indicate the possibility that oil exists. At the present time there is a company conducting a survey there to ascertain the wisdom of doing some more exploratory drilling. If oil should be discovered in that area it would be a very great boon to the maritime economy which, as has already been so ably stated, is suffering from the depressed condition of the coal industry.

The technical surveys side is of general interest to all of Canada. In that connection the minister did speak about aerial photography, and I noted that great progress is being made in vertical photography of the whole country. I was wondering if the department have yet got to the stage where they are in a position to do a new aerial survey by vertical photography of the more populated areas, which have changed considerably since the first series of photographs was taken. There are new roads, railways, and changes of that sort; mostly artificial changes. I know that at one time an aerial photographic survey of a large section of the maritimes was made—I think about 20 years ago —and until fairly recently those were the only aerial photographs obtainable. I would be interested in knowing if that is still the situation.

I have a few other questions to ask but I do not wish to delay proceedings, so I shall ask them when the particular items come up.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank hon. members for their comments. In spite of our good intentions the debate on coal crept in, but that is quite all right. I do not propose to answer all those questions and observations until I make a statement on the coal board item.

The hon. member for Kootenay West brought up a very interesting subject, and I thought it was a very useful contribution. I can make this promise, that someone from our department will make it a point this summer to communicate with Dr. Borden and endeavour to obtain all the information available about the historic voyage into the north. From time to time our survey parties find evidence of these early explorers in the north. I think it was last year that they found a cairn on Ellesmere island. I have not the details of the information, but they found some scraps of paper bearing messages that were left by an expedition.

The hon. member for Bow River confined his remarks largely to coal. He and the hon. member for Macleod both referred to page 10 of the report of the dominion coal board. I would recommend to both of them that they also read page 11, and I think they might find at least a partial answer to some of the questions they asked.

I wish to thank the hon. member for Villeneuve for the complimentary remarks he made. I note that he wanted some information about the geophysical work and whether we have developed new methods. We do operate one Canso aeroplane for aerial magnetic surveys under the geological survey, and that Canso plane is also equipped with a radioactivity detector instrument. It has been found by experience that what they call drift will distort the radioactivity of a region. In other words, it provides a shielding effect and the result is that while radioactive areas are indicated they are not able from the results to locate with certainty where the major deposits are. They have found it useful in relation to their geological mapping. It is useful in identifying the rocks. So far we have not published these reports because we believe they are rather misleading to anyone but an expert, but to a limited degree they are useful in studying and identifying the various rocks of a region.

The hon. member for St. Paul's wanted to know about the distribution of our reports. The reports of aerial magnetic surveys usually are not released for about a year or two after the survey is made, for the simple reason that it takes a great deal of time to compile the results on topographical maps. A mailing list is built up in the meantime, and the public is informed that the map will be released on a certain date. No one has an advantage. It is made available to all comers at the same time.

Others have made reference to the distribution of our maps and reports. The printing bureau sends out notices from time to time, usually by postcard, of new reports that are ready for distribution. Our budget this year for the printing of reports is $216,000, and I believe the printing bureau also has a considerable item for the same purpose. The suggestion of the hon. member for Timiskaming that these reports be made available to libraries is good. Any library board wishing to have those reports made available may have them by writing in, and any member who is interested in promoting the distribution in his own community could probably notify the interested parties.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South made his usual good contribution on coal. I intend to answer him on only one item at this time. He referred to the possible effect on the subvention of the increase in freight rates. Well, the actual increase of 12 cents a ton on coal and coke has now been published by the board of transport commissioners. The amount of the subvention payable is based upon the difference between the laid-down cost of Canadian coal and imported coal. In the case of Nova Scotia coal moving all-rail to the subvention area, that is the market area, the actual increase in freight payable will be 12 cents a ton less the 20 per cent assistance granted under the Maritimes Freight Rates Act, or 9·6 cents. On the competitive coal moving by rail from the United States mines the full increase of 12 cents will apply to the Canadian portion of the haul. The net effect, therefore, will be that while Nova Scotia coal will cost 9·6 cents more, the competitive coal will cost 12 cents more, which will mean a bettering of the competitive position in favour of Nova Scotia coal of 2·4 cents.

Since this all-rail subvention is calculated on a percentage of the freight rate, that is 45 per cent, and since the amount is small, the subvention rate will not be reduced to allow for this item. In the case of waterborne coal and railway coal, the subvention payable is directly determined from the laid-down cost of the competitive coals, and wnere there is any alteration in the competitive position from this or any other cause it is automatically covered by the subvention. I am sure that the Gordon commission will do a good job in its study of conditions in the Nova Scotia coal industry.

The hon. member for Yukon mentioned the good work the geographic society is doing in publishing the Canadian Geographical Journal. I would also like to add my appreciation to his. I believe they are doing an excellent job. I am not sure that I heard my hon. friend's suggestion, but I believe he was suggesting a subsidy. It is the first time that has ever come up. I think they are doing a good job and they deserve a great deal of credit. Perhaps they would rather remain good private enterprisers doing a good public job.

The hon. member for Queens mentioned the summary of activities. It is published on an annual basis, that is, for the calendar year, and it comes out ahead of the annual report. We compile it and issue it specifically for the use and information of members of the house, but it is having a somewhat wider distribution, as the hon. member for Villeneuve mentioned today. There is no charge for it. It costs only $240 to publish.

With regard to the deputy minister, Mr. Boyer had a very severe heart attack over a year ago. He is making a very good recovery. The director general of scientific services, Dr. Hume, has been carrying on as acting deputy minister in the meantime. Mr. Boyer has assumed additional duties as a member of the board of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, which is taking quite a bit of his time at present. He is now at the meeting of the mining society of Nova Scotia, and he is gradually getting back into harness. I hope he will soon be fully recovered.

In regard to geological mapping to which the hon. member for St. Paul's referred. I would refer hon. members to page 14 of our summary of activities, where they will find the following:

> The present top priority objective is to complete the preliminary reconnaissance mapping of Canada. About 2·8 million square miles are unmapped geologically on even reconnaissance scales and sound long-term plans for national development and more detailed geological work cannot be made effectively until this reconnaissance has been completed.

This is where our main effort is being directed at the present time. It will take quite a number of years fully to complete. We are gradually doing some rephotographing of certain areas where there is need for it, where there is development taking place, and sometimes at the request of provincial governments. The vertical aerial photographing of continental Canada will be completed in 1957. The geological mapping will take longer, and the detailed topographical mapping will also have to follow.

I believe this answers most of the questions hon. members have asked.

Item agreed to.

Topographical surveys including expenses of the Canadian board on geographical names—

215. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $106,000.

Mr. MacLean: This item has to do with construction or acquisition of equipment. I notice there is a decrease of $20,000 in the item on this occasion. I think it is a good thing, depending on what the explanation is. Can the minister say what is the explanation for the decrease?

Mr. Prudham: For several years we have had a contract with the Marconi company for the development of a radio geodometer, and it so happens that the amount required this year for that development is less than it was last year.

Mr. MacLean: I am not sure I am asking this question under the correct item but in connection with mapping services that are done by helicopter I should like to know if the helicopters are owned by the government, or are they supplied on a contract basis?

Mr. Prudham: It is done entirely on a contract basis.

Mr. Bell: Has the minister any information concerning the hydrographic survey that was slated to begin in southern New Brunswick?

Mr. Prudham: Well, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if my hon. friend could be a little more specific in his question. When we undertake a survey in a certain area we always stay with it until it is completed.

Mr. Bell: I can give the minister the counties in the province which the survey was supposed to include. These were Charlotte, Saint John and Albert, in southern New Brunswick.

Mr. Prudham: If we could stand that item, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it. The man in charge of the hydrographic surveys is in the official gallery.

The Deputy Chairman: I wonder if I might point out that item 215 covers topographical surveys. Shall item 215 carry?

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 216 carry?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Item stands.

219. Provincial and territorial boundary surveys, $50,725.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain the work that is being paid for under this item?

Mr. Prudham: Yes, Mr. Chairman. At the request of provincial governments this department undertakes a survey of interprovincial boundaries, and the same applies between the provinces and the Northwest Territories. At the request of the two parties concerned this department will appoint a man to the commission and share the expense with the provincial governments concerned.

Mr. Green: Are those boundaries not already fully marked? I notice on page 290 reference is made to the Alberta-Northwest Territories boundary and the British Columbia-Yukon-Northwest Territories boundary and the Saskatchewan-Northwest Territories boundary.

Mr. Prudham: They are not completed as yet. We have a preliminary report on the Alberta-Northwest Territories boundary but it has not yet been approved and it has not been submitted to the Alberta legislature or to this parliament.

Mr. Green: Has the boundary never been surveyed between British Columbia and the Yukon and British Columbia and the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Prudham: It is being done at the present time, but it is not completed as yet.

Mr. Green: Will this complete it?

Mr. Prudham: No, it will not be completed this year.

Mr. Fleming: How much more is it going to cost to complete the work beyond this year? Is the minister in a position to tell us that?

Mr. Prudham: No, I would not like to hazard a guess, because it is extremely rough territory and we never know until it is completed. We have no estimate on that.

Mr. Fleming: Can the minister say what period of time will be required to complete the survey?

Mr. Prudham: Are you speaking of the British Columbia-Northwest Territories boundary?

Mr. Fleming: Yes.

Mr. Prudham: I understand there has been a preliminary survey of the entire boundary but it was found there were inaccuracies, and some of it is being resurveyed at the present time. Today I saw the preliminary report on the Alberta-Northwest Territories boundary and we found there were some discrepancies or variations in two different locations involving, I think, seven or eight acres in each instance. Whether that will be resurveyed to be made exactly right or whether the provincial government will agree with the Northwest Territories representations that it is all right the way it is and that the original survey work be recognized as the boundary, we cannot say as yet. If we had to stay with it until it was absolutely perfect it might take quite a long time, but there are three parties concerned and we cannot say just how long it will take to complete.

Item agreed to.

Map compilation and reproduction—

220. Administration, operation and maintenance, $923,986.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the item the Canada atlas comes under, is that correct?

Mr. Prudham: Would the hon. member mind repeating his question?

Mr. MacLean: Is this the item under which questions should be asked regarding the new Canada atlas?

Mr. Prudham: No. 218 would be the item, I suppose. Legal surveys come under 218 if you are referring to the Canada Lands Surveys Act.

Mr. MacLean: Perhaps the minister misunderstood me; I was inquiring about the new Canada atlas.

Mr. Prudham: I am sorry. That would be under geographical surveys item 228.

Mr. MacLean: In that case I will hold my question until we reach item 228 but in connection with—

Mr. Fleming: Ten o'clock.

Mr. MacLean: —this particular item I have some questions. Perhaps the committee might rise now and report progress as it is ten o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue tomorrow with these estimates and the estimates of veterans affairs and then labour.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Civil service commission—

84. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $2,599,117.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

337. Departmental administration, $518,347.

338. Purchasing, stationery and stores, $1,164,453.

339. Distribution of official documents, $302,473.

340. Printing and binding of official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public, $485,000.

341. Printing of Canada Gazette, $110,000.

342. Printing and binding the annual statutes, $35,000.

343. Plant equipment and replacements, $500,606.

671. Distribution of official documents—further amount required, $10,665.

672. Plant equipment and replacements—further amount required, $245,438.

673. To provide for reimbursement of the queen's printer's advance account for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed, $7,277.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

209. Departmental administration, $510,190.

Explosives Act—

210. Explosives Act—administration, operation and maintenance, $107,865.

Surveys and mapping branch—

211. Surveys and mapping branch administration, $57,242.

212. Geodetic survey of Canada—administration, operation and maintenance, $567,786.

213. International boundary commission, $58,060.

Topographical surveys, including expenses of the Canadian board on geographical names—

214. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,584,232.

215. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $106,000.

217. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $461,290.

218. Legal surveys and aeronautical charts, including a grant of $500 to the Canadian institute of surveying and photogrammetry, $644,832.

219. Provincial and territorial boundary surveys, $50,725.

Surveys and mapping branch—

Canadian hydrographic service—

649. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $500,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 6, 1956

The house met at eleven o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION FOLLOWING INCIDENT AT POZNAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the situation in Poznan, Poland, and he stated then that he would bring the matter to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he returned.

As time is very much of the essence, Mr. Speaker, I again ask the minister whether or not the Canadian government will give immediate consideration to sending to the Polish government a request on behalf of Canada that those who stood for freedom in the recent uprisings in Poland shall not have visited upon them barbarous and unnatural punishments and pointing out that while the Canadian people expect justice to be done they ask that unnecessary cruelties and barbarous conduct be avoided.

Hon. Roch Pinard (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I fully understand the seriousness of the matter. I have just been informed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back tomorrow. There is nothing I can add to what I said yesterday, but I will take up the matter with him tomorrow when he returns.

NEWFOUNDLAND—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHTS OF CANADIANS BY U.S. AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister investigate further the accuracy of his statement to the house that the United States northeast air command, on its own initiative, sent a letter to its Canadian employees on May 12, 1956, informing them that the provisions of the Canadian Civil Service Act regarding participation of civil servants in federal and provincial elections would be applied in principle to Canadian civilian employees of northeast air command?

In view of a report that a man named Fred Clarke in charge of civilian personnel at air bases issued these instructions, will the minister determine under whose authority Mr. Clarke issued these instructions?

Hon. Roch Pinard (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did in fact discuss this matter with the officials of the department this morning. I may say that the information I gave yesterday is correct. This information came through the United States embassy and the United States northeast air command issued the directive about political activities and accepts full responsibility for it.

TRADE

CHINA—INQUIRY AS TO EXPORT OF STRATEGIC MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if there are any negotiations going on at present with a view to modification in the list of strategic materials as applied to trade with China, if Canada is having any part in such negotiations and if the government is aware of any recent infringements of the existing list of strategic materials on the part of any countries that are bound by the present embargo?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Negotiations continue to be carried on in Paris. I am sure that Mr. Wilgress, who represents us there, is taking part in them. There have been certain violations—at least, I would call them violations, although I am not sure whether or not they are violations technically—in the shipment of strategic materials into Red China. For example, Ceylon has been shipping rubber into that country. Canada has made no representations to the NATO council in recent weeks.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask further, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any reason why the full list of strategic materials could not be made public and in particular the difference between the list as applied to shipments to Russia on the one hand and the list as applied to shipments to Red China on the other.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the list is a public document. I do not know of any reason why it cannot be tabled in the house. If my hon. friend will put on the order paper a motion that the list be tabled, I will be pleased to table it.

Mr. Fleming: Could the minister deal with the other point about the difference between the two lists. There is a difference between the lists of strategic materials applied to the two countries, is there not?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): My recollection is that the two lists are the same. However, if the hon. member will ask for both, we will table both lists.

POSTAL SERVICE

REQUEST FOR RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN SQUAMISH AND NORTH VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is it the intention of the Post Office Department to establish railway mail service on the recent extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway between Squamish and North Vancouver? If so, when will this service commence?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the department to make use of the P.G.E. line to Britannia Beach and Squamish. However, the latest information that the department has is that construction is still going on. Of course, until a regular train schedule is issued by the P.G.E., it is impossible to make any definite plans.

NATURAL RESOURCES

IRON ORE—REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF EXPORT FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, notice of which I sent him earlier this day. Would the minister indicate whether he has received a request from Premier Bennett of the province of British Columbia or other departmental ministers of that government asking him to prohibit export of iron ore from that province? If so, what action does he intend to take on the matter?

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The answer is no. We have received no such correspondence.

[Mr. Fleming.]

AIR TRANSPORT

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF STATUTE TO PROHIBIT DUMPING OF FUEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some days ago the hon. member for Kootenay East, following the accident which occurred to the Venezuelan airliner, asked me if I would consider revising the Aeronautics Act to provide that no dumping of gasoline shall be allowed while aircraft are in flight. I should like to say that I have had the opportunity of conferring with the officials of my department who advise me as follows: It is standard aeronautical practice for aircraft takeoff weights to be in excess of permissible landing weights for the same aircraft, and aircraft operations are based on this practice. This means that if an aircraft with a heavy fuel load is compelled to land sooner than expected and, therefore, has not used up the required amount of fuel it may have to rid itself of this fuel while still in the air before making an emergency landing so as to reduce its weight to the permissible landing weight. In these circumstances, two courses are open. One is for the aircraft to continue flying until it has actually used up the fuel and the other is to dump the fuel while still in the air through emergency valves especially built for this purpose. Fuel dumping in the air is an accepted and necessary safety practice in the event of an emergency landing, particularly where the aircraft has not been able for one reason or another to continue flying so as to use up the fuel.

I should like to make it quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that these remarks do not constitute in any way a judgment as to the cause of the accident to the Venezuelan airliner, as to which we have no information in the department.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STATEMENT RESPECTING CONSIDERATION OF LANGLEY AS SECONDARY AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): Yesterday the hon. member for New Westminster referred to the Langley airport. I have been informed that the Langley airport is a useful supplement to the Vancouver international airport and we expect that it would be used for this purpose to an increasing degree in the future, particularly for light aircraft. With this in mind, the federal government has already assisted in the development of the Langley airport and hopes that it may be possible to provide some measure of further assistance in the future. The

Langley airfield, however, will not in itself provide adequate relief for the growing problem of air traffic in the Vancouver area and it is quite clear that an additional airport will have to be developed before long.

I have already announced that if the site at White Rock proves suitable for construction purposes it is our intention to proceed with the development of an airport in that area. Since this announcement was made, I have received some representations against the use of the site at White Rock as an airport and these representations are at present under consideration.

SHIPPING

STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF SPEED BOATS IN MINOR WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Marler (Minister of Transport): On July 3, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster raised the question of an amendment to the minor waters navigation regulations with regard to achieving greater control over the speed of freighters and tugs which fail to observe the proper speed limit and in consequence damage fishing vessels and floats. If the hon. member has specific reference to the lower reaches of the Fraser river, solution of this problem may be found to be within the jurisdiction of the New Westminster harbour commissioners since the New Westminster harbour limits include these lower reaches. In any event, this matter has been drawn to the attention of the commission.

Any further action in this matter through the use of the minor waters navigation regulations could be better considered after the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which are at present before this house have been dealt with, since one of these amendments would affect the scope of the regulations in question.

GRAIN

WHEAT AND BARLEY—POSSIBILITY OF SALE TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of a recent statement that Canada would like to enter the China market for barley and wheat. Are any new representations to China being contemplated in the hope that we may develop this market for substantial quantities of Canadian wheat and barley?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): We have no diplomatic relations with communist China and therefore no official representations have been made or are being made. Inquiries have been made by responsible members of the wheat board about the situation in China, and the information they have received is that China is not at present in the market for either wheat or barley. China has bought fertilizer from Canada and the objective would seem to be to become self-contained in foodstuffs.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Does the minister imply, in his reply to the effect that we have no representative in China, that it does interfere with our trading relations with that country?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would say very definitely that it interferes with our ability to get official information from that country; however, it does not interfere with any desire that the authorities in China may have of making purchases of foodstuffs in Canada. That can be arranged, but without official representation in China any Canadian who enters that country is on his own. Whether he can approach the proper officials or not depends on his own ingenuity, not on the usual official introductions that he would expect in any other country.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

SUGGESTED REOPENING OF DISCUSSIONS WITH CAUGHNAWAGA INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the fact that earlier this week almost the entire membership of the Caughnawaga Indian reserve band council changed when the council election was held, does the minister intend to reopen discussions with the council regarding the acquisition of land for the seaway, since this election would seem to indicate dissatisfaction with the way in which it has been carried on in the past?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to interpret the election results in the Indian reserve with the same confidence that the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace seems to have. There is no question of reopening any conversations with the council of the band. We have been having these conversations all along and we shall continue to have them with the regularly constituted authorities of the band.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REFERENCE TO ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PENSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister any progress to report in connection with the offer which he made on June 15 to support the representations made on the floor of parliament with regard to discrimination by the Canadian Pacific Railway against some of its pensioners?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make other than that which I made on that occasion.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR PARTICIPATION IN MOSQUITO CONTROL IN FRASER VALLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I have not given him notice of my intention to ask this question, so he may wish to take it as notice.

Since there are others who are interested in the welfare of the Fraser valley besides the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) and Senator Reid, I wonder whether the minister can advise the house if any decision has been reached relative to the application of the municipalities for the co-operation of the Indian affairs branch in mosquito control? If so, what has been the decision?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes; I have no difficulty. I have already advised all the hon. members, including the hon. member for New Westminster, who communicated with me on this subject, that we are contributing $1,500 to this excellent cause, and if the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the question to me had communicated with me about it earlier I would have informed him also.

Mr. Patterson: May I say I have been in communication with the officials of the minister's department for several weeks.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes; I understand, sir, that the hon. gentleman was duly informed by the officials of my department of what had been decided.

Mr. Patterson: That was when I phoned them this morning.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

The Chairman: I understand that resolution 216 stood over last night. Is it the intention to proceed with it?

Canadian hydrographic service—

216. Administration, operation and maintenance, including Canada's annual contribution of $4,200 to the international hydrographic bureau, $3,017,362.

The Chairman: Shall this resolution carry?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert last night inquired about hydrographic surveys in southern New Brunswick. We understand from a subsequent conversation with the hon. member that he really means aeromagnetic surveys. A meeting was held in November in Fredericton in which departmental officials participated and arrangements were made to make a survey of southwestern New Brunswick including the counties of Charlotte and part of Queens and Kings. The area was flown in May of this year and the maps that are the result of this survey are now being compiled and will be released as soon as they are completed.

This area is part of the mineral belt of New Brunswick and the aeromagnetic maps will supplement the geological information already available.

Mr. Bell: Well, Mr. Chairman, when the announcement was made with respect to this survey it was meant to include Saint John, Kings and Albert counties and it was definitely set up as a southern New Brunswick survey. I have a press clipping here of a conversation that was held with the Minister of Labour and some officials. Perhaps it is not as definite as we might have hoped but it certainly indicated that these counties would be included in the survey and the allocation for this survey would be in the estimates of the department this year. If I could just ask the minister if it is meant to include the counties of Saint John and Albert and when this may begin, it would satisfy me.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I know that this arrangement was made in conjunction with our officials and the officials of the department concerned in New Brunswick. Consultation was held and it was decided what areas should be flown and that has been carried out. My officials here think my hon. friend is correct and that these areas were included although it is not in this statement.

Mr. Bell: May I take it then, Mr. Chairman, that this survey which has begun or will begin in the near future is to include in it the county of Saint John and part of Albert?

Mr. Prudham: The survey has already been completed; the flying has been done. They are now preparing the report and the maps.

Mr. Bell: The county of Saint John and part of Albert were surveyed—at least that part of it has already been done with respect to these particular counties?

Mr. Prudham: I cannot be too sure of that. We think so but we are not sure.

Mr. Bell: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is rather unusual because I have a statement here from the Moncton Transcript dated November 25. The announcement was made by the Minister of Labour. This was not an official announcement from the department but he was called on the phone by the Saint John people. I attended one meeting and it was stated definitely. The clipping reads:

> The Minister of Labour said it was expected that the counties of Saint John, Charlotte, Kings and part of Albert would be mapped.

And then, when he was further asked just how definite this might be, he said:

> "I do not indulge in double-talk."
> . . . Mr. Gregg said he would "support in any way an item in the estimates for the survey in the southern section of New Brunswick".

I still persist in my question concerning Saint John and Albert. I think probably these counties were done because we saw the planes overhead but I would like to be definite about it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Prudham: The Minister of Labour took an active part in helping to bring about the survey. We do know that the most promising mineral belt was flown. Just at the moment we are not sure about the counties mentioned by the hon. member. We can look that up and I will supply the exact information later.

Mr. Gregg: I should like to comment upon what has been said by the hon. member. As my colleague has stated, I did have some part in helping to arrange the meeting which was held at Fredericton, which he attended but which I did not. As he knows, officials of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys met with officials of the department of mines of New Brunswick. It was my view at that time, as was stated in this report—I was called on the long distance telephone, I did not call the newspaper—that those parts of New Brunswick were involved. I think the officials thought that it would take in part of Saint John county and parts of Albert, Kings and Charlotte counties. It would comprise the belt across the southern rocky portion of the province of New Brunswick. If my colleague finds out that these areas have not been done I hope that he will give consideration to having them done at the first opportunity.

Mr. Bell: Could the minister find out if those counties were included?

Mr. Prudham: Yes.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Bell: No, I think it will have to stand until we get this information.

Mr. Prudham: I am not sure that I can get it quickly, but I will supply the information to my hon. friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Bell: As soon as possible means very little to me with time receiving the funny consideration it now receives from this parliament. I do not see why this item could not stand for a few minutes. Surely the department must have some knowledge of the particular counties. I am not asking if the entire counties were done, but they should know what counties were mapped.

Mr. Prudham: The information is given in longitude and latitude and we would have to consult the county maps to make sure which counties are included.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nowlan: No. I have a question to ask on this item. I think the hon. member for Saint John-Albert is making a perfectly reasonable request when he asks that the item be allowed to stand. I can understand the information being given in longitude and latitude but that is no reason why the information could not be supplied. The records could be checked and the question answered.

I wonder if the minister could give us some general information with regard to this item. I certainly know very little about hydrographic surveys, but I have talked with those who have experience with these things. I understand that in preparing these charts the charts which were originally prepared by the British admiralty many years ago are used. The British authorities made these original surveys and turned the charts over to this government and now the minister's department is responsible for them.

Mr. Prudham: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: I understand that in many cases the department is still using these old original charts which were prepared perhaps 50, 75 or 100 years ago when they did not have the equipment and scientific data which are available today. I believe the minister does have records to indicate that there are obstructions, rocks and other things which were not indicated on these original charts, and I understand that in fact some departmental ships have encountered such obstructions.

I wonder whether the minister could give the committee some outline of just where this matter stands, how much of this work has been done within recent years and in how many cases are we still dependent upon the old charts which were perhaps made by captains of British frigates cruising around our waters 100 or 150 years ago. It does seem to me that this is a phase of the departmental work which is rather important and if we do have the responsibility for doing all this work now the committee should know how much of it has been brought up to date and how much of it still remains to be done in the years to come before we have a complete and modern set of charts for all of our coastal waters. I think the minister could make a general statement along that line for the committee.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, they are still using a few of the old British admiralty charts but they are being replaced as quickly as possible. I suppose my hon. friend is interested in work being done on the Atlantic coast. The C.G.S. Kapuskasing has a detached party stationed at North Rustico, Prince Edward Island, which has carried out inshore charting off the north shore of the island. The motor launch, Henry Hudson, operating in the Canso area and the motor launch, Anderson, operating in the Liverpool-Cape Raceway area continue to chart the inshore waters off the southern coast of Nova Scotia. As a result a number of hitherto uncharted shoals have been added to the charts of these waters. It is true that these old charts are not entirely accurate. When re-surveys are made reefs are found that are probably just slightly below the safety level, and as fast as possible they are charting these areas, especially where there is heavy shipping.

Mr. MacLean: With respect to the north coast of Prince Edward Island and the Rustico area where hydrographic charts are now being made, is this the first hydrographic survey made by the department in recent years? Up until that time have modern navigators been dependent on the old British charts of that area, surveys made by Admiral Bayfield and others? Is this the first departmental hydrographic survey in that area?

Mr. Prudham: Hydrographic survey officials are at present working in that area revising the old charts. It would take quite a bit of research to find out how old some of the charts are, but we are endeavouring to bring them up to date right at the present moment.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Hees: I think that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert is entitled to an answer to the question he asked the minister.

Mr. Prudham: The question was stood. We are getting the answer.

Mr. Hees: Yes, but I do not think the item should carry until the question is answered. Are you standing this item?

Mr. Prudham: Yes.

Item stands.

Map compilation and reproduction—

220. Administration, operation and maintenance, $923,986.

Mr. MacLean: Would the minister be good enough to give the committee a brief outline of what the situation is especially with regard to the compilation of maps primarily for aerial navigation? As far as information respecting the northern part of Canada is concerned, what is the procedure? I should preface my remarks by saying that it is essential that other countries, especially the United States, have aerial navigation maps of large areas of this country, if not all of it, and I was wondering what the policy is. Does the government furnish other friendly countries with the required information and do they print their own aerial navigation maps or do we actually sell the maps we have produced to other countries?

This question has arisen in my mind chiefly from looking over an excellent booklet published by the department regarding a profile study of the new Quebec crater. I notice there, if I read it correctly, that the first aerial photograph on which this crater was noted was one taken by the United States air force in 1942 and the first maps on which it appeared were ones produced by the United States air force. Apparently the department also published a map in 1942 with the information on it. Then the following three maps, one produced in 1944 and two in 1945, were also produced by the United States air force.

Appendix B to the booklet would indicate that the first aerial photograph of the crater was taken by trimetrogon survey in 1943 by the United States air force. The first photographs taken by Canada on which the crater appeared were taken by the R.C.A.F. in 1946, three years later. I wonder what the position is. I should like to think that as a nation we have greater and prior knowledge of the northern part of our own country. I think the question of national pride demands that, if nothing else. Would the minister say a word on that?

Mr. Prudham: During the period of the war Canada was completely covered by trimetrogon photography. There was a very urgent need and the United States did co-operate in that particular area of the country, but this department made the maps from that photography. As I said before, trimetrogon photographs were taken and the maps were prepared on the scale of 8 miles to the inch. The R.C.A.F. took up the work as soon as they had the equipment available, and in the last two years we have been doing our photography work by contract. However, I do not think there is any special significance in the fact that the United States took the original photographs of that area, other than the needs of defence.

Mr. MacLean: I take it that at the present time the United States government publishes its own maps for aerial navigation and we do not supply them with maps produced in Canada.

Mr. Prudham: The Canadian aeronautical charts are published by us. Any other country has the privilege of making whatever maps they wish. We received a very nice portfolio of maps from Russia recently. They are splendidly done and the work is excellent. They had a world atlas and they had a map of Canada that was very beautiful and carefully done. We have no control over the mapping that other countries do but we do provide the aeronautical charts for Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: I suppose that map compilation covers all kinds of maps that are made as the result of surveys of every kind, including general maps of the country. I was rather intrigued by what the minister said about the map of Canada that had been prepared by Russia. He said it was a very excellent product. In visiting some of the rural schools of our country from time to time I have sometimes been rather dismayed at the ancient maps of Canada you will find hanging on the school walls. Some of them still show the old Northwest Territories and some of them were certainly prepared long before Newfoundland took over part of the eastern seaboard of the country because it is shown as part of the province of Quebec. In other words, in many cases the maps are hopelessly out of date. I am wondering whether the department has prepared recently a modern up-to-date map of the Dominion of Canada as such showing the proper boundaries and the delineations of the country as we now understand them, with possibly a little uncertainty as to the border between Quebec and Newfoundland on the extreme east of this country. If that has been done, under what arrangement are these maps distributed to schools? Do they do it through the department of education of the various provinces? Do they buy these maps from you or just what is the arrangement? I am not suggesting the responsibility lies with the minister. It may lie with the department of education in a province or it may lie with an individual school board which is perhaps careless or so short of funds that it has not provided proper maps for its schools. If we are going to inculcate a proper pride in and a knowledge of this country and if we are trying to teach geography in our schools, I think the basis of that is accurate maps properly and attractively prepared, as apparently I would judge the Russians did in connection with these specimens they sent to the minister. I wonder what we are doing in that connection? When did we last prepare a complete map of Canada for distribution and how is it distributed?

Mr. Prudham: The latest map of Canada was released for distribution in early 1955 at a nominal price. There is a special discount to dealers and to school boards or any organization where they would make a substantial distribution.

Mr. Nowlan: Are these maps distributed directly to provincial educational authorities or are they sold through dealers? The minister says the last one was in 1955. Can he tell the committee when the previous one had been issued? In other words, could he tell us the time lapse between 1955 and the map issued prior to that time?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, just at the moment I have not the date when the previous map was issued. I know that we have an up-to-date map of Canada available to anyone who wishes to pay the small sum involved.

Mr. Nowlan: What is the small sum?

Mr. Prudham: Depending on the size, 25 cents to 50 cents; probably some go as high as $1.50. These maps are available to members without charge. I think every hon. member should have one for his own office. It is a good map. It is very nicely done. I am sure that school boards would be well advised to acquire them.

Mr. Nowlan: I am afraid of that suggestion, Mr. Chairman. I am afraid that perhaps some local school board will suggest that the local member for the constituency should buy these new maps for every one of the schools. This perhaps is a subject that I should drop and leave alone immediately.

However, I suggest to the minister that more publicity should be given to these maps. I am not speaking of schools in Nova Scotia only. I have seen the same thing in other schools. In fact, in some of the rural areas in Ontario where I have happened to be I have seen maps which certainly far antedate 1955. If they were not prepared before the first war, I would be surprised. I think steps should be taken by this department, in conjunction with the educational authorities of the various provinces, to see that this new, apparently modern, accurate and up-to-date map is given publicity and that steps be taken by his department to encourage its distribution so that it at least will be in every school house in this country.

Mr. Prudham: I have a note here which reads as follows: In the case of public libraries such as those operated in the cities of Montreal and Toronto, one copy of each map is supplied free of charge. In order to keep this collection up to date the name of the library is added to our automatic mailing list for single copies of new and revised maps as issued. Extra copies of any of the maps are charged for at the discount rate of 40 per cent off list price. Small libraries receive a few free maps for their immediate area. The method of distribution of maps to schools is outlined on the list of maps suitable for school use. They have a special list compiled in the case of universities. One free copy is sent to the head of a department such as geography or geology. Extra copies of these maps are sold at 40 per cent discount.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the distribution of the reproduction maps, I have first a suggestion I should like to make in a somewhat humourous vein. I wish the minister would send the C.B.C. a copy of one of the most recent maps because I notice one of their programs—I believe it is called "Trans-Canada Hit Parade"—that shows an abysmal ignorance of geography, especially of the maritime provinces. They are shown on their map just in the background as just a sort of blob and my province is completely missing from their map.

Mr. Prudham: I should like to put in another little plug for the department. I think I did so once before. Hon. members have seen the beautiful map in the railway committee room. When that map was prepared, because of its size it had to be prepared on the floor and it all had to be done by hand. The tracing and the colouring is all hand work. It is really a masterpiece. I think the people who had the responsibility for producing that map deserve a great deal of credit.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the reproduction maps, I had a question or two. I do not pose as an expert on maps but previous activity required me to have some knowledge of maps and they are therefore of rather special interest to me in an amateurish way. I happen to have here a map of Canada. The scale is 100 miles to the inch. It is indicated that it was printed in 1951. I notice that it shows two fairly extensive railways one from Seven Islands up into Labrador and another in Manitoba. They are shown on the map. This is a 1951 map. I am sure that these railways did not exist in 1951. I presume the explanation is that the date of the map should have been changed to some later date and that that was not done when the map was being brought up to date. To me that would indicate sort of sloppy editing, but perhaps there is some other explanation. Then although the key does not show what it is meant to indicate, the map indicates what I take to be a railway under construction or a proposed railway out on the west coast in northern British Columbia just south of the Alaska border. I point that out because I obtained what looks like the same map in French. The French copy of this map is rather interesting to me. It is basically the same map, but I notice that it is dated 1956 and that it shows these two railways as being completed, namely the first two I mentioned, the one in Labrador and the other in Manitoba. However, it does not show this one under construction or whatever is supposed to be represented by this broken red line in B.C. So on looking at the map it would appear that things were in a greater state of advancement in 1951 than in 1956, if you were to take these maps at face value. Of course I know that is not the explanation. It probably is a bit of careless editing.

Also in that connection I happen to have a sheet here of a map produced by the department. It is the Portage mountain sheet. When I saw this I was under the impression that Portage mountain was in British Columbia. It is indicated here as being in Alberta. I looked up the annual report and I find where it lists the sheets that were printed for the area covered by the last report, and it shows this sheet as one of them all right. In the report it shows Portage mountain in the right province. It shows it in British Columbia, although the map itself indicates that Portage mountain is in northern Alberta. Now, these are perhaps small things but to one who is interested in maps, they are errors that one would think inexcusable. I just wonder what explanation the minister might have in that regard.

Then I was interested in ascertaining whether the reproduction of maps is done entirely by the government printing establishment or whether some of them are being reproduced by contract. If the latter is the case, I should like to have some figures as to the amount paid to each of the various contractors and who they have been over the last two or three years.

Mr. Prudham: I am not able to say, Mr. Chairman, whether the hon. member was right in the discrepancies he pointed out, but I agree with him that if they exist as he says they are inexcusable. We will certainly check on that.

With regard to the farming out of map production, we do all the maps unless they are very complicated geological maps where many colours are involved. Occasionally we do let that type of work out to outside firms which are better equipped to do the work.

Mr. MacLean: Would the minister be kind enough to give the committee some figures as to the cost of these maps or the amounts paid to various contractors for the publication of maps in the last year. I should like to have some figures on that.

While the minister is getting that information perhaps I might draw his attention to a couple of other small points with regard to this item. I wonder if the minister can give us some figures as to what size the staff of this branch was five years ago and what it is now. How much has it grown or decreased in size over a period of say five years? I just mention five years so we will have an indication of the mapping activities of the department.

I have seen listed a manual for cartographers, which apparently has been produced by the department. I presume that is for the use of its own staff, but I was wondering if it is meant for general distribution and if so what is the extent of the distribution, what would it sell for and what was the cost of production?

Mr. Prudham: What report is that again?

Mr. MacLean: It is a cartographers' manual which I believe the department has published.

Mr. Prudham: The answer to the last question is that the cartographers' manual was prepared for the use of our own department. We are not aware that it has any outside distribution.

In regard to the printing of maps by outside contractors, that is done through the queen's printer. We have no information as to the cost.

At the present time, we have 214 employees in that reproduction division and that has been increasing progressively with the volume of work. I am sorry, but at the moment I cannot give the figures for five years back. I would be glad to obtain those figures and give them to my hon. friend.

Mr. MacLean: Do I interpret the minister's earlier answer as meaning that the queen's printer arranges for a contract for printing maps with an outside contractor and the expense is borne by another department or through some other item and is not part of the moneys which we are voting now?

Mr. Prudham: We do reimburse the queen's printer for the work done during the year but we have no record, at least not here, of the individual contracts that they let on our behalf.

Mr. MacLean: Can the minister give us a lump sum amount by which the queen's printer was reimbursed for that type of work in recent years?

Mr. Prudham: While the officials are looking up this information, I now have some information for the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. The county of Charlotte is complete; most of Kings county, most of Saint John and the southeast portion of Queens.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to pin down the minister to a specific latitude and longitude but when he says "most of Saint John" I take it he means more than half of the county?

Mr. Prudham: Well, yes; the most promising part from the standpoint of minerals.

Item 216 agreed to.

Mr. Pallett: I understand that the United States has recently prepared a map of that country and by merely looking at it you can ascertain the topography. You do not have to read the different levels of elevation because that is shown by degrees of colour. I understand it is quite a large job and I wondered if any similar project was being undertaken here?

Mr. Prudham: The particular map to which my hon. friend refers is a very nice map. I have seen it in many offices across Canada. Our department does that type of work for smaller areas only, for maps on the scale of eight miles to the inch. Although the map to which my hon. friend refers is an excellent map and serves the purpose of most people, it perhaps lacks the detail that would be required of our department, and therefore our maps are done on a smaller scale for a smaller area and in more detail.

Mr. Pallett: I appreciate that, but I wondered if any steps were being taken by the department. The minister says the map is satisfactory for most people, and I understand that is what the government is supposed to be concerned about, most people. I just want to know if any steps are being taken by this department to prepare a map of Canada similar to the one which has been prepared for the United States?

Mr. Prudham: I understand that particular map retails for $40. We do not believe there is a sufficient demand for that type of map in Canada to go into a large scale production of it. For one thing, there is a private company in the field already. As I say, we do produce maps of smaller areas giving that type of information, and it has to be done precisely. I think we could point out features that are missing on that map. They are not important for the use to which most people put the map. I do not think our department could turn out even a small map without more precision as to detail.

Mr. Pallett: Once you move away the cotton batting from the minister's answer, Mr. Chairman, I gather the department is not making such a map and does not intend to make such a map. Is that correct?

Mr. Prudham: We have produced some but not on a large scale. It has been for local areas only, not for the whole of Canada.

Mr. Pallett: Is it the intention of the department to make it for the whole of Canada?

Mr. Prudham: No, Mr. Chairman. As I say, there is already a private enterpriser in the field and we think he is doing a good job, serving the public well and we do not intend to compete with him.

Item agreed to.

Geological surveys—

222. Administration, operation and maintenance, including the expenses of the national advisory committee on research in the geological sciences, an amount of $1,875 for Canada's share of the cost of the committee on mineral resources and geology, London, England, and an amount of $40,000 for grants in aid of geological research in Canadian universities, $2,314,954.

Mr. Harkness: This item has to do with geological surveys. I wonder whether the minister can outline to us briefly what type of geological surveys have been carried on during the past year and where? As far as these surveys are concerned, I would be interested to know particularly what division there may be between those for minerals in the ordinary sense of that term, gold, uranium base metals, and so forth, and petroleum products, oil and gas?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, this department does not prospect for any one mineral. We provide the basic interpretation of the rocks, and it is up to the provincial governments and to private enterprise to do the prospecting.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I was not asking about prospecting; I was asking what type of surveys had been carried on and where.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I have a map here showing the location of all of our geological parties. I would be glad to supply this map to my hon. friend or to any other hon. member. There were 70 parties out in the field. They are not searching for any particular mineral; they are just trying to take some of the hazards, some of the risks out of the search that private enterprise carries on. We prepare the reports and maps of the basic geology and industry carries on from there.

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps I can put it in this way. In what parts of Canada were those surveys carried on in the past year?

Mr. Prudham: If my hon. friend would read the summary of activities, or the annual report, of the department he would find that information. On page 16 there is a map showing the distribution of the parties, and on page 17 there is a list. Does my hon. friend want this put on Hansard or not?

Mr. Harkness: No, I do not think there is any need to put it on Hansard.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Nowlan: I notice in the Summary of Activities to which the minister has just referred, and which I think is something new—at least I had not seen it before—a summary of the activities of the department is given. I notice that on page 13 it says that a reorganization of the geological survey of Canada took place last year and resulted in six divisions and servicing units shown on the chart below. Actually, there are eight shown on the chart below. There are six squares which are larger than the two smaller ones at the bottom. Just what is meant by the sentence that there are six divisions and servicing units shown on the chart below? Does that include the smaller ones at the bottom, or is it simply a branch of some existing survey? What is the situation in the department now since this reorganization has taken place? How many branches did the minister have before, and how does it compare in so far as efficiency is concerned with the former organization? Before the minister answers that may I say I notice on the following page it says, shortly after dealing with the problem of geological survey:

The present top priority objective is to complete the preliminary reconnaissance mapping of Canada. About 2·8 million square miles are unmapped geologically on even reconnaissance scales and sound long-term plans for national development and more detailed geological work cannot be made effectively until this reconnaissance has been completed.

The figure of 2·8 million square miles is, of course, a substantial mileage when you realize there is a terrific area in the north country, but I wonder how much has been mapped? How much has the department done throughout the years? I should like that information so that we can get some perspective of what is left. The minister says 2·8 million square miles are unmapped geologically on even reconnaissance scales. How much has been properly mapped, how much has been carried on on reconnaissance scales, and how long do the department and the minister think it will take before he will be able to complete this preliminary mapping which certainly is very essential to the geological development of this country? We do know that 228,000 miles were done last year, some of it by the use of helicopters, and I presume in a rather sketchy way, though there was that much progress made last year by one party, and 61,000 square miles were done by another party. Therefore, it is obvious that probably more was done last year than had been done in any preceding year. I would like to have the minister deal with that more fully in view of those comments on pages 13 and 14 of his summary.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, the chart to which my hon. friend refers indicates eight branches of the geological survey. Six of these are scientific groups and the others are supporting groups. Two are really a service division supporting and compiling information the other groups obtain. The hon. member also asked what percentage of Canada has been mapped geologically. The answer is about 30 per cent. He also asks how long it will take to complete it. Is is very difficult to say. We are by the new methods, by the use of helicopters, speeding up the work. As I said in my statement yesterday, we are now able to do in one year what we would take 25 years to do by the conventional ground parties. I would guess it would take another couple of decades to complete the preliminary geological reconnaissances, and it is certain that the geological survey will have plenty of work to do for the next 100 years.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us whether any reports have been issued as a result of the surveys made, or have any other steps been taken to make available the information secured to those who might be interested in it or could make use of it? I have in mind particularly quite a comprehensive report on the oil and gas resources of the dominion which was issued a number of years ago by the department, and I was wondering whether anything of the same type had been issued recently, or particularly as a result of the last two years' surveys?

Mr. Prudham: The department issues topical reports every year on oil and gas. We do try to keep up to date with the reports, particularly those that are of major interest. If my hon. friend would like to be put on the mailing list it could be arranged. Perhaps he would like to pay attention to these cards that come from the queen's printer from time to time; I think he would find a complete list of the reports.

Mr. Harkness: The cards referred to, Mr. Chairman, are chiefly concerned with maps.

Mr. Prudham: No.

Mr. Harkness: I receive those cards indicating what maps are being put out but the thing that strikes me is this. There is no use of the department securing a great deal of geological information and then sitting on it. If it is going to be of any use to the country it is necessary for that information to get into the hands of the people who can make use of it, the people engaged in the various mining industries, prospecting and things of that nature. I think it is important that the department should disseminate the information it secures and put it into the hands of people who can make use of it as a result of which new wealth may be developed in the country.

The particular report to which I referred was a splendid one and served a useful purpose but it is the only comprehensive report concerning information secured by the geological surveys branch which I know of having been issued and that is why I asked if any other reports of this nature had been issued. I take it from what the minister said there have not been and I think it would be highly desirable if much more were done along this line in order that this information may be disseminated to interested people.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend has made a good suggestion but actually that is being done. We have an item in our estimates for $216,000 for the publishing of reports and they are distributed through the queen's printer as well as by our own department.

I have here two postcards prepared by our department and sent out to our mailing list and they are usually recorded in the mining journals. Here is one which reads:

Advance Notice—Aeromagnetic Series—Scale 1 inch to 1 mile.

Geophysics Paper, Advance Edition, Crackingstone, Saskatchewan.

Geophysics Paper, Advance Edition, Forget Lake, Saskatchewan.

Geophysics Paper, Advance Edition, Goldfields, Saskatchewan.

These papers will be released on above date, and may be obtained in person or by written application to Room 308, National Museum Building, McLeod Street, Ottawa.

I have another postcard which reads:

Recent Publications of the Geological Survey of Canada—March 12, 1956.

National advisory committee on research in the geological sciences. Fifth annual report 1954-55, (including survey of current research in the geological sciences in Canada 1954-55). Price 50 cents.

Geophysics paper; aeromagnetic map, Puddle Pond, Newfoundland.

Geophysics paper; aeromagnetic map, Harrys River, Newfoundland.

Geophysics paper, aeromagnetic map, Serpentine, Newfoundland.

Renfrew and Lanark counties, Ontario,—map.

And so on. These postcards are issued regularly as reports are ready for publication and anyone interested would be very well advised to keep in touch with our department. I do know that several of the major discoveries that have been made in recent years have been based on reports issued by this department, some of them going back 15, 20 or more years.

I have here the report of the special committee on research, minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 10, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. This is dated June 7, 1956 and I would like to read one extract from the evidence presented by Mr. W. J. Bennett on the subject of raw materials. On page 329 of the report I find the following:

First, it is necessary to find economic deposits of uranium. Here, the geological reports and maps which are prepared by the geological survey of Canada are of inestimable value in determining what areas are favourable to the deposition of uranium. It is significant, I think that the discoveries made in the four main uranium-producing areas—Great Bear Lake, the east end of Lake Athabasca, Blind River and Bancroft, all resulted from reports prepared by the geological survey.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the details of this item on page 293 there is an item of $18,000 for printing maps. Do I understand that is a sort of bookkeeping entry within the department so the expenditure will be shown against the proper branch, or am I to understand the geological survey gets maps of its own printed by outside contractors or by the queen's printer directly? What is the position there?

Mr. Prudham: The geological survey publishes its own maps through the map reproduction division with the exception, as I said, of complicated colour maps which are farmed out through the queen's printer by private contract. This year the estimated amount for this outside contracting is $18,000.

Mr. MacLean: The minister gave us some very interesting information on the efficiency of surveys made by the use of helicopters and aircraft as compared with having to go into difficult terrain by some other means. I notice in the breakdown that under the item "chartered aircraft" this item is down from $330,000 to $85,000. Would the minister give an explanation of that and also would he give the names of the contractors concerned if it is not an extremely long list? I should also like to know whether this work is let by tender or by an agreement of some other sort?

Mr. Prudham: The reason the amount is down is that we had a very expensive operation in the Queen Elizabeth islands last year.

I have here the list of contracts for last year. It is quite lengthy but if my hon. friend would care to have me do so I could read it.

We do call for tenders but the work is allotted on the basis of the ability of the contractor and at the rates prescribed by the air transport board.

The list of contracts is as follows:

Superior Airways Limited, Fort William, $17,500.
Whitehorse Flying Services Limited, $35,000.
Boreal Airways Limited, St. Felicien, Quebec, $30,000.
Pacific Western Airlines Limited, Vancouver, $18,600.
Associated Helicopters Limited, Edmonton, $101,200.
Spartan Air Services Limited, Ottawa, $140,000.
Okanagan Helicopters Limited, Vancouver, $203,000.
Arctic Wings Limited, Ottawa, $30,475.
Spartan Air Services Limited, $93,500.
Spartan Air Services Limited, Ottawa, $104,000.

Mr. MacLean: I have a further question but I am not quite sure that this is the right item under which to ask it. I think perhaps it might be better asked under the item concerning the observatory but if I am on the wrong item perhaps the minister would sort of take my question as notice and answer it at the proper time.

I notice in the summary of activities for 1955 in the introduction there is a paragraph which says that preparations were begun for Canada's participation in the international geophysical year 1957-58 and I wonder if the minister at the appropriate time would make some comment concerning what plans exist regarding Canada's contribution to this international effort?

Mr. Prudham: Under the observatory.

Mr. Nowlan: There is a grant of $40,000 in aid of geological research in Canadian universities and I should like to have a breakdown of that. Is the grant given to the universities themselves or is it in the form of scholarships? How does this amount compare with what was paid out last year?

Mr. Prudham: The amount is under review by the national advisory council and we have not yet received the allocations. There are representatives of the department, of the universities, of the provincial governments and of industry on that body. The amount spent last year was between $23,000 and $24,000.

Mr. Nowlan: How was that paid out last year?

Mr. Prudham: I am sorry, I have not that information here but I can send it to my hon. friend. I understand that these amounts are allocated to universities for special projects rather than trying to make a uniform distribution. A university willing to undertake a certain project will receive consideration.

Mr. Nowlan: I presume the minister will have this information available in his office and perhaps we could have it some time after the luncheon recess as I do not think we will be through the departmental items before one o'clock.

Item agreed to.

Mines branch—

224. Mines branch administration, $95,968.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not hear the minister's opening statement yesterday and therefore do not know what he may have said about administration. My Hansard for yesterday has not yet come to hand. I understand that the deputy minister is on leave and I should like to know just what is the situation. There are a director of the mines branch, a director of geological surveys and other directors of other branches in the department. How are they correlated in so far as general administration is concerned? Are these directors working under the direction of the deputy minister, and if the deputy minister has not returned, when will he be back and what is proposed to be done in that connection?

Mr. Prudham: I made a statement on that last night and perhaps my hon. friend could consult Hansard.

Item agreed to.

227. To provide for payment to McGill University in connection with the development of a coal-fired gas turbine, $50,000.

Mr. Harkness: Could the minister give us an outline of the more recent developments in connection with the research being carried on by McGill University in an effort to develop a practical coal-fired gas turbine. This is a matter of extreme importance because it is possible that the future of a good deal of our coal industry depends upon the development of a successful turbine of this kind which would provide a market for much of the coal which has been lost through the use of fuel oil in locomotives. This project has been going on for seven or eight years and I do not think we have had any information for the past two or three years as to how close to success it is. I believe a coal-fired turbine was produced as far back as four or five years but there were a number of bugs which had to be ironed out and also the question of producing it in a size which could be used in a locomotive.

Mr. Prudham: The matter is still in the experimental stage, but Professor Mordell is quite optimistic. He has obtained some fundamental and valuable information from the experiments which have been carried on so far. They have had many difficulties. As I stated in my introductory remarks, they had to make revisions in the heat exchanger and the combustion chamber and so on, but recently they had some success in the continuous operation of the turbine. I received a letter the other day from Professor Mordell saying that they had had a long uninterrupted run. It is necessary to have a large number of hours of continuous operation in order to evaluate fuel savings and economy of operation.

It is proposed to have a symposium this fall of all interested parties in order to make a study of the results obtained to date. I would not like to hazard an opinion as to what the report will be although, as I say, Professor Mordell is quite optimistic. Not being a scientist I have to take his word for it. Certainly they are making an all-out effort to attain success. It took some 50 years to develop the diesel engine to its present stage of perfection, and considering the length of time that this experiment has been under way I think they are making good progress.

It remains to be seen whether it will be of value to the coal industry. Professor Mordell estimates that the fuel saving on a locomotive will be between $20,000 and $50,000 a year, but that remains to be proved. Theoretically that is the possible saving. They are considering the possible application to locomotives as well as to stationary engines for power development purposes. The latest letter I received from Professor Mordell indicates that they will be soon far enough along and have enough information to proceed with the development of a stationary power unit. It is hoped that the symposium will bring out sufficient facts to interest private enterprise in continuing with the development of an engine.

Mr. Harkness: Is there just the one experimental model and is there a model which would be suitable for use in a locomotive?

Mr. Prudham: There is only the one model, which is quite cumbersome, but the principles they have evolved and the information they have obtained could be applied eventually to a smaller model.

Mr. Harkness: That was the point I had in mind and I think that was the general information we obtained some years ago. I was wondering whether anything had been done in the way of constructing a smaller model which might be adapted to use in a locomotive or in a small power plant. Has anything along that line been done so far?

Mr. Prudham: No.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question along that line. Possibly he can inform the house whether or not there is an experimental coal fired gas turbine engine in operation in the United States. I understand there is one already installed in a railway engine which is operating. It is true that it is in the experimental stage but they actually have one on the road. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made over there in this type of development and if our engineers here are working in co-operation with those in the United States along the same line?

Mr. Prudham: Professor Mordell and his associates are very well informed about what is taking place in the United States, Great Britain and other parts of the world. I understand that their experiment has an entirely different approach from that being used in other countries. I understand that in other countries they are driving the hot gases from the combustion of the coal directly through the turbine whereas here they are using heat exchangers which will prevent the fly ash from going directly into the turbine and wearing out or corroding the blades of the turbine. They think this is a decidedly better approach and, if successful, will be superior to anything being developed elsewhere.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, as the minister will remember, I have spoken on this item in other years, and I do think that if there is one place where the department is open to more criticism than others it is in connection with this particular item. As the hon. member for Calgary North said a few moments ago, we have had this item in the estimates now for many years, six or seven years, I think, since we started voting money towards the development of this engine.

I remember that last year the member for Cape Breton South practically stated that in his opinion it was a fruitless effort and that the development had been so disappointing that nothing more should be expected of it. However, as the minister says, Professor Mordell is very optimistic. Nevertheless, I do not think it is any answer at all for the minister to say that after all it took 10, 15 or 20 years to develop the diesel engine. There was not the great pressure to come ahead with that production because it was at least in competition with existing motive power.

If 50 per cent of the hopes of the people who are close to this project could be realized, it would make the most profound difference to the coal industry of anything that could be accomplished in this country. Whether Professor Mordell is right or not I do not know. As the minister says, he is not a scientist and certainly I am not, but my quarrel is that we have not gone far enough in dealing with this matter one way or the other. Surely we should have had the answers before this. I am not criticizing Professor Mordell at all. I think he has done a wonderful job.

But this matter has been approached from the viewpoint of an experimental project in a university laboratory. That is virtually the approach to it. It is an interesting problem. Let us give them some money and see what they can do with it. I do think, in fairness to the minister, that probably there has not been any great emphasis by Professor Mordell on getting more money. As I said, it has been a matter of a scientific, intellectual experiment which has great possibilities, but let us not disturb the serenity of the laboratory. In the meantime the coal industry is threatened with extinction.

We know that tremendous developments took place during the war in the production of airplanes within a period of months because the resources of the nation were turned loose, bottlenecks were overcome, bugs, to use somebody's expression, were taken out, and you had the project completed. This engine, according to the minister's summary, ran for 300 hours last year. There is some achievement in getting an engine that ran for 300 hours. However, apparently there is trouble with the ash blast, there is some corrosion and there are other problems such as that to be solved.

But Professor Mordell says that this engine is going to be so far ahead of the diesel when he gets it completed that diesels are going to be almost outmoded. I suggested last year that it was most unfortunate that the railways had proceeded so quickly with dieselization when this engine was still in the experimental stage and might even be at the practical stage. I have a statement here from the press of last summer in which Professor Mordell said that this engine would reduce costs and would be far more efficient than the diesel engine. Mr. Lionel Forsyth, president of Dosco, made this statement:

> I believe that the only way to find out whether it is the real answer to the motive problem is to build it, and try it on the rails.

He went on to say that if they wanted to they could have done that that year, in 1955. Well, this year we are voting $50,000 towards the project compared with $110,000 the year before. We either should not be voting a cent or we should be voting enough to clean it up and get it over with. Let us stop this horsing around with this thing. Nothing has been more poorly handled than this particular project which offers such tremendous possibilities to eastern Canada, Alberta and other sections which are interested in coal. We do not know yet whether or not it is going to work but here you have the president of Dosco saying, "Put it on the rails and try it out." Here you have the man to whom we have been paying the money, a man in whom we apparently have confidence, the man who has done a great deal in developing it, one of Canada's eminent scientists, saying that it is the most superior form of motive power yet developed and that it is going to be the solution to the problem of the coal industry and everything else.

Perhaps we are holding it back deliberately until all the diesels become outmoded so that the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. will not have to write them off too quickly. There must be some explanation for the delay. The hon. member for Bow River referred to another experiment a few moments ago. My information, and frankly I get it from the general manager in Dosco in Cape Breton, is that in Great Britain they have an engine, perhaps produced by a different approach—

Mr. Gillis: They had one 50 years ago and 30 years ago in the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: —and they have one in the United States. They are convinced they have solved the problem. Whether we have made the right approach I do not know. The minister says our approach is better. I hope that is so, but let us stop approaching and let us get there because there is something radically wrong with our approach when something so vital to the country as this is has been allowed to dilly-dally as long as it has. We see now that this year the proposed expenditure is reduced by 50 per cent. I am not urging increased expenditures on an over-all basis or anything of that kind, but I do say that either this expenditure should be cut out entirely or we should put all our resources back of it and get it over with. I suggest, with all due respect to Professor Mordell, that we take the experiment out of the university laboratory. Let us get some commercial engineering firm and give them a contract so that with Professor Mordell's assistance and with all the money necessary they may try it out and bring it to a conclusion one way or the other so that we will know whether we have something here that may be of tremendous importance both to our transportation systems, because they need efficient transportation, and also to the coal industry.

I hope that the minister will reconsider this matter and will put his emphasis behind it. I am quite sure that this committee and parliament will be very glad to vote additional moneys if they are necessary, and they obviously are. The amount of $50,000 is not going to finish the project in any way, shape or form. Let us get behind it and get it settled one way or the other this year.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I only rise at this time because the member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings paraphrased rather badly what I had to say last year. Four years ago I went down and had a look at the experiment. The minister was good enough to organize a delegation of members to go down and have a look at it. I was interested in it because the press, in my judgment a bad source of information, were playing up this experiment as the solution of the problem of the coal industry of Canada. It was the miracle that was going to put coal in competition with natural gas, oil and all the rest of it. It was going to revolutionize our transportation system, particularly the railways. I wanted to go down and look at this thing because I had heard a lot of talk about it and had read about it. So along with the minister and members of the House of Commons I went down and looked it over. The coal-fired gas turbine engine is not a new thing. They had that type of engine 50 years ago in a locomotive in Britain but it did not work. They had it 30 years ago in the United States and it did not work. The difficulty always has been to find a cooling system that will prevent the burning off of the blades of the engine. They could not find a solution and they abandoned the idea a long time ago. What Professor Mordell is working on now is not a new type of engine. What he is trying to find is a cooling system that will enable the blades of the engine to stand up to the terrific heat.

At the time when I came back I did not say what was put on the record by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. I said that as far as that engine going to save the coal industry was concerned, it was at least 10 years away from any commercial use. I might say that in discussing this matter with the president of the C.N.R. in committee on several occasions, I made that statement and he said that in his judgment I was a realist, that it was not going to perform overnight the miracles that the press would lead you to believe. My concern was that I wanted something done to assist the coal industry rather than pin our hopes on something that might or might not help. It certainly would not solve the problem. At far as saving Alberta's coal industry is concerned, there is not any to save. It is fairly well gone. That is equally true of the British Columbia industry. Those industries are gone. The coal industry is gone in the west but it has been replaced by oil and gas. Quite a chunk of the Nova Scotia industry is also gone beyond repair. The thing we want to understand is that we do not want to keep on having false hopes on the question of saving the coal industry.

I went into this question fully last night and I expressed the opinion that the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. are dieselizing the railways from coast to coast. They are making an investment that it will take at least 10 years to write off. At the present time they are dieselizing the railways in Newfoundland. That is their program and they are going ahead with it.

It was stated on several occasions that this engine is interchangeable with the present diesel units, and that you could instal this type of engine with the present diesel unit. You cannot do that. I found that out fairly definitely. I also found out that before they can adapt that engine to a locomotive, the C.N.R. will have to send in some of their engineers and technicians to work on that experiment and build a locomotive to which that type of engine is adaptable. What does that add up to? First, you must get the C.N.R. interested to the point where they are going to come in and work on it.

With respect to asking the minister to solve the problem, may I say that he is not an engineer. He knows about as much about it as I do. He had a look at it, and you are obliged to depend on what people tell you. But if there is a solution for the coal industry in this particular experiment, why is not the coal industry sufficiently interested? The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings says the president of the coal company, Mr. Forsyth, said: Get it on the rails and get it running. If it means that much to that corporation, why are they not contributing to the experiment? Why have they not some engineers working on it? They have engineers, and good ones. Why are they not putting some money into the thing? If that industry is going to benefit to the extent suggested by the press and others, then they should be "in there pitching" and trying to find a solution.

As I said last night, I do not believe in keeping my head in the sand. I want to get done for the industry something that is going to mean something to it. I said last night that in my judgment, after looking at the engine, I figured that it would perhaps be an excellent marine engine if they can find what Professor Mordell is looking for, or it would be an excellent engine by means of which to generate power for small power plants. But even if it were installed on the C.N.R., if it were to perform so as to affect the economies in fuel which they say it will effect, it is not going to use much coal, and it still is not much of a solution for the coal industry.

I do not know what is going on in the United States although I have seen some reports in the press. But if they have perfected that engine to the point where they can operate it in a locomotive, why are we wasting time in searching? Why do we not get the information from there and put it to use instead of spending money on an experiment of our own? I think that would be the logical thing to do. However, as I said, I do not know any more than what I have seen in the press as to what is going on in the United States. Nevertheless, I know this. Unless there is a big development in thermal power—and I think that is one of the solutions for the coal industry—there is not much hope.

I have never objected to this grant. We have spent $650,000 so far on the experiment. I have said right along that it is justified on the ground of being a grant to McGill University so as to enable engineering students to sit in there and study and work on that proposition. There were quite a few of them around there the day we were looking at it.

I think it would not be a bad idea if the minister had another pilgrimage and took down there a group of members from this house who are interested and had another look at it, talked to Professor Mordell and found out from him directly when this engine might be of some commercial use, and what the possibilities are of getting the co-operation of the C.N.R. and of industry that is going to benefit financially and from an engineering standpoint. With the interest that has now been created, I think another trip down there would result in bringing back to this house some concrete information that would prevent in the future any speculation or the posing of hypothetical questions that cannot be answered.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I have left the matter of the coal industry to this very item. I know it certainly is not the solution to the condition in which the coal industry finds itself today. However, it is a program which, if successful, anticipates the large consumption of coal. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that an embargo on coal is the solution. In western Canada, particularly in British Columbia, we have in the United States a large market for coal and coal products. Our coke and other by-products of coal are being shipped in large quantities to the western states. Then again much of the other product of the mining industry finds a market in the United States. If an embargo were to be imposed on coal in eastern Canada, it follows that there would be some sanctions against our products in western Canada.

I have been interested in this Mordell experiment since first coming to Ottawa in 1949 and I have followed it fairly closely. I believe the problem now is that in the heat exchangers corrosion is taking place owing to sulphur in the fuel itself. It is not a serious problem and it is different entirely from that suggested by the hon. member for Cape Breton South in that it is not corrosion of the blades of the turbine. There is no corrosion to the blades as the gas flowing through the turbine is pure air. The heat exchanger through which the burning gas is driven certainly is the place that takes the strain from the burning of the gases. When it has been determined that a proper alloy can be fabricated for the lining of the tubes in the heat exchanger, I believe the problem will be pretty well solved.

One only has to stand opposite or ride in an aeroplane such as the North Star to realize the wear and tear from vibration that is the consequence of that type of motor. Then, if one rides in a Viscount, which has a turbine type of motor, one realizes the very great advantage of the turbine engine for this use or any other. Even now the railroads are finding the maintenance of diesel locomotives quite a large factor in their operating costs. I understand that they are having considerable difficulty with the pistons. Anyone who knows anything about mechanics realizes that the very high compression, which is part of diesel locomotion, results in a great deal of wear and tear and vibration which is not one of the factors of a turbine motor. In every respect, therefore, the turbine is a much more efficient operation.

I believe that we are overlooking a particularly significant development here and that we should put more money not only into the development of the coal-fired gas turbine, but in the processing of coal for other purposes. Sitting on the research committee for this past session, I have found that we are spending many millions of dollars in research into other aspects of industry. Specifically, we are spending millions of dollars for the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. I think that other plans and developments are being dwarfed by this great desire to rush into the development of atomic energy, while we are allowing other more simplified fuel elements to go by the board. The fuel element in an atomic reactor is a very expensive product. It requires large mining operations, great milling operations, and then the cost only begins to materialize after having gone through those processes. Coal may be obtained on the surface in many places in Canada simply by going in with great shovels and stripping the overburden. Coal has been the lifeblood of the nation for many years, and may well be in the future. We know that we have coal reserves for up to a thousand years at the present rate of consumption.

It is, therefore, my belief that having regard to all those factors and the particular benefits of turbine motors as opposed to internal combustion motors, the coal industry itself and the people who work in that industry, instead of voting $50,000 this year we should be voting something over a million dollars. Apparently, this $50,000 is all that is required at the present time to complete this very limited experiment that is taking place at McGill University. When one visits the installation there one has the feeling that they are actually hampered, in a sense, by the lack of interest and the inadequacy of funds which are provided for this purpose. They go for many months unable to carry out a certain experiment because some particular plant does not seem able to supply them with the necessary implements. It seems to me we are not providing sufficient funds for the experiment itself. I feel that we should appropriate more money for this particular experiment, and certainly for other experiments in the use of coal.

Mr. Prudham: Before the committee rises, I wonder if I might be permitted to supply the information requested by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and give the names of universities receiving grants in connection with the geological sciences. The University of Alberta received $750. The applicant was Dr. R. E. Folinsbee. There was also another $1,000 granted in connection with the growth of silicates under low temperature and pressure and temperature conditions. The applicant was Dr. J. D. Godfrey. Then there was $400 for chemical analysis of clay fractions of marine and non-marine cretaceous shales. The applicant was Dr. C. P. Gravenor.

The University of British Columbia received a grant of $960 in connection with the weathering of ores under surface and underground conditions. The applicant was Dr. H. C. Gunning. There was a $1400 item biogeochemistry of cobalt and nickel, and the applicant was Dr. H. V. Warren. The University of Manitoba received $2,200 in connection with the analysis of rocks by induced radioactivity. The applicants were Drs. G. M. Brownell and H. D. B. Wilson. McGill University received $3,400 in connection with silicate and sulphide phase relationships. The applicants were Drs. J. E. Gill, V. A. Saull and E. H. Kranck. There was another $250 in connection with enthalpy changes in metamorphism, and the applicant was Dr. V. A. Saull. McMaster University received $800 in connection with geochemical studies of metamorphic rocks and minerals. The applicant was Dr. D. M. Shaw. Queen's University received $2,700 in connection with spectrographic methods of analysis of minerals, rocks and ores. The applicant was Dr. J. E. Hawley. There was another $3,000 in connection with X-ray spectrographic analysis of minerals, and the applicant was Dr. L. G. Berry. The University of Toronto received $5,392 in connection with geological age determinations. The applicant was Dr. J. T. Wilson. The University of Western Ontario received $1,000 in connection with the study of pleistocene stratigraphy along lakes Huron and Erie. The applicants were Dr. G. H. Reavely and A. Dreimanis. Then there was another $900 in connection with scale model experiments of airborne electro-magnetic prospecting. The applicant was Dr. R. J. Uffen.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Item No. 227.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, before this item carries I would just like to remind the minister that the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house is an important coal-producing constituency, and that the coal mines in that area are in a very depressed condition. I would ask him to be sure to do all he possibly can to find out what can be done, if anything can be done, to alleviate the condition of the coal areas.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the minister going to say anything further on this matter? As I understand the discussion which has taken place so far, the suggestion is the problem is one of mastering the heat which is generated by this engine, and that that is perhaps the most difficult problem with which the department is confronted. It does seem to me the same problem has been met in other industries. One can think of the aircraft industry, for instance, where the heat problem must be as great as in this one. We read today of experiments being carried out with guided missiles where the heat factor caused by friction is the greatest problem confronting the engineers, and they are attempting to meet that. According to the press, the United States government at the moment is carrying out experiments to send a satellite planet drifting around and around in the atmosphere, and one which can survive all of the heat tension to which it will be subjected. It would seem that if there is sufficient concentration of effort placed upon this problem from a technical and scientific point of view, the difficulty will be solved in the relatively near future.

The criticism which was expressed this morning was based on the minister not spending enough money on it rather than the criticism we sometimes hear that he is spending too much. He should give some explanation as to why the expenditure is being reduced this year instead of being augmented so that this matter may be brought to finality one way or another in the near future.

Mr. Prudham: The hon. member was not here yesterday. Perhaps he does not know that the Minister of Finance has also asked for a supplementary estimate of $50,000 for this project which will carry the program through until the end of this year. This project has never been held up for want of money. Professor Mordell would be the first to tell him that.

The hon. member has mentioned the difficulties they have with the heat exchanger. One of the problems was to find a metal or an alloy that would resist the corrosion from the sulphur in the coal and other chemical reactions. They built a heat exchanger using several different metals in order to find out which metal resisted the corrosion and would be suitable for continuous operation. They have now reached conclusions in that regard. They know the metals, or at least they have decided on one that seems to stand up, and when the new heat exchanger is built, when a locomotive or some other type of plant is built, they have information that will be of value. I do not think that the experiment has reached the stage yet—perhaps they are nearing it—where a larger expenditure would be warranted. They have to proceed slowly and accumulate information as they go along.

I am sure they could not have been pushed faster than they have been up to the present time. After the meeting this fall, which they propose to hold, there may be enough information to justify an all-out effort to start the practical application of the experiment.

Item agreed to.

228. Geographical branch—administration, operation and maintenance, including a grant of $250 to the Canadian association of geographers, $283,386.

Mr. Nowlan: Item 228 has to do with the geographical branch, Mr. Chairman. I think it is under this branch that the atlas of Canada—I think that is the name of it—is being prepared. It was obvious yesterday from the minister's statement—as a matter of fact he admitted it—that he was disappointed in the progress which has been made on this atlas heretofore. It will be remembered that he discussed it a year ago and at that time told us he hoped it would be prepared within a year. Another year goes by and he says it will be at least one more year before the atlas can be brought to completion. The committee should get more information with respect to this, Mr. Chairman. I am not sure how long this atlas has been in the course of preparation. The minister refers to it at page 109 of the annual report of the department. It is indicated there that it is a most comprehensive document. It deals with mammals, plants, birds and fish, and all the natural resources of Canada, population statistics, and so forth, in addition to the usual material which is found in an atlas. I believe this was first conceived, thought of or suggested by the late prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, when he was prime minister, and it has been in the course of preparation for some years. The minister should tell us how long it has been in course of preparation, what it has cost us to date, who is in charge of it and when he thinks it will be completed. You can see by reading between the lines, Mr. Chairman, that many of the charts which have been prepared up to now must be out of date by this time, and if we keep on waiting to get it finalized we shall never get this book into production because when the final charts are completed the first ones will be out of date, and the book will be useless. Apparently, it is a mammoth production which they have in mind and not too much progress has been made. From the reports and suggestions heard in the city of Ottawa this is one matter on which there has been a great deal more confusion than accomplishment. The minister should give us some concrete information with respect to this matter before the item passes.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, very briefly I want to support the remarks made yesterday by the hon. member for Yukon concerning the good work being done by the Canadian geographical society. I am not going to repeat the excellent review and plea he made, but I do want to emphasize the interests of a good many of our members in the work of this organization, particularly in its publication of the Canadian Geographical Journal, the publication of booklets on provincial aspects of development and publications concerning industrial development and also the publication of that excellent book, Image of Canada, which I think does great credit to those who are responsible for its publication, and also for the carrying of the lectures which were commenced by Mr. Francis Younghusband, I think, in 1930. As a matter of fact I had a chap working for me once who was on that expedition. It was a most interesting expedition. I might also refer to the good work done by the society in granting scholarships in geography and the limited support, but to the extent of their financial ability, to the Baffin Land expedition of 1950 and 1953 and the support of the investigation of the Churchill region, and last but not least, the excellent sponsoring of certain documentary films. These activities are performing a great service for Canada which I think should be recognized in this committee.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the devotion and voluntary effort of those who have guided this society in the past and are guiding it today—and it has some excellent heads—warrants the support of every member in this house as a representative of the people. I think all of us who recognize this good work and all who are interested in this country should do what we can, each in his own way, to support the work of this society. I think that should also be the attitude of the Canadian people generally. They could assist very greatly by subscribing in larger numbers to the journal, by universities subscribing, and libraries, high schools, public schools, community organizations and service clubs. I think the society would be greatly helped in its finances if all these people would take an interest in it and chip in their little bit. I think the government could assist, where proper and possible, through its publications by bringing the attention of the Canadian public to the good work that is being undertaken by the Canadian geographical society.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the atlas there is a very precise statement in our annual report and I think perhaps I should put that on the record:

> Because of the increased attention to other projects less headway than was hoped for was made toward completion of the atlas of Canada. Data for the plates dealing with ranges of plants (other than trees), principal mammals, birds and fish, profiles of major rivers, and population origin and citizenship were received from the contributing departments,— > —and preliminary compilation was started. Preliminary compilation was completed for 23 plates in the agricultural section; and of the plates dealing with types of settlement, land use and functional plans of major cities, and population distribution. Detailed specifications for 5 base maps were completed. Final draughting of the 1:10,000,000, 1:20,000,000 and 1:50,000,000 base maps was completed and stocks of blue line prints were delivered. Final draughting of the remaining bases and five of the plates in the historical section was commenced.

That is, other departments of government.

I have a more recent report here which indicates that six plates were printed, five are in the proof stage, five in the photographic colour stage and eight in addition are now in the hands of the printers. This applies only to the English edition and nothing has been done on the French edition as yet. Information has been received from all other departments of government. There will be over 100 plates in all and the information for those plates is mostly at hand and is gradually being compiled for reproduction.

As the statement says, other projects have come up which seemed to have greater priority. One was the survey of the population and industry in the area affected by the St. Lawrence seaway development. The department did a great deal of work there for the Ontario hydro and the Ontario government and, as I mentioned yesterday, it has done a great deal of work for civil defence for the Department of National Health and Welfare. These projects have been of urgent importance and required immediate attention and consequently the work on the atlas has lagged. We hope to speed it up this year and I sincerely hope we will have a better report on progress next year.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister could answer these questions: When was this project first started? How long has it been in process? How many people are employed in this work; that is, how many officials of the department? Who under the minister is responsible for it and what has it cost approximately to date?

Mr. Prudham: It is very difficult to separate the cost from the other costs of the branch. We do know there are seven or eight people working full time and many others are working part time on this project. The man in charge of the division at this time is Mr. Nicholson. Dr. Watson, the former head of the division, left us a year or so ago to take other employment.

Item agreed to.

General—

232. To provide for purchases of air photography and the expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys, including purchases of equipment, $1,500,000.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, before this item passes there are one or two comments I wish to make, and while the matter I wish to mention does not come under this particular item I do not know where else I could bring it in because it is not included in any other part of the estimates. What I want to ask the minister about is the research with regard to the extraction of oil from the Athabasca tar sands.

During the last war the federal government took a keen interest in trying to develop a process whereby this oil could be extracted from the sands. As the minister knows, this is one of the largest oil deposits in the world. I think the estimate is about 200 billion barrels. In view of the fact that the British empire would be in a very precarious position in the event of another war because of oil supplies, it seems to me we should be making some effort during this period of peace to develop a process that would extract the oil from the tar sands.

Even today, Mr. Chairman, we find that the British particularly are in a rather embarrassing position with regard to the oil which they secured from Iraq and Iran and other Persian gulf areas. It could happen in the event of war that we in this country would also find ourselves in an exceedingly embarrassing position so far as oil supplies are concerned if something is not done.

I know that in the west we have been doing a tremendous amount of development in the drilling of oil wells and we are producing a rather large quantity of oil and I suppose that amount will be increased as time goes on; but I doubt very much that we will ever get to the point in western Canada where we could supply from drilled wells all of the needs of Canada and the North American continent in the event of an emergency, although we could do that very easily if we developed the proper method of extracting oil from the Athabasca tar sands.

In view of the fact that these tremendous potentialities exist and in view of the fact the federal government itself did quite a good deal of exploratory preparation with regard to the possibility of extracting this oil, I think we should be doing something about it in this peacetime period. I know the provincial government in Alberta has been making rapid progress in the development of the extraction of oil from the tar sands and I think they are working closely in co-operation with some of the large oil companies. I am well aware of the progress that is being made and I am equally well aware of the tremendous effort they are making to extract the oil from the Athabasca tar sands, but I think there should be some supplementary effort, exploration and possibly scientific development on the part of the federal government in order to still further expedite the extraction of this oil particularly now in peacetime so that we will have it in the event of an emergency should that time ever arise. Could the minister tell us something about that at this time?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River has referred to the problem of extracting oil from the tar sands. Our department is of the opinion that this is not the major problem at the moment. At least two methods have been devised for separating the sand from the oil.

The most important problem seems to be the treatment of the bitumen and the resulting oil which must be treated in order to permit it to flow through a pipe line, and then breaking it down into its various components and removing the sulphur. To that end we are undertaking experiments at the mines branch. It is a high-pressure experiment. Before we embarked on this project we consulted with the United States bureau of mines and it was decided that Canada should undertake the high-pressure treatment experiment and they would undertake the low-pressure.

We have had great difficulty getting high-pressure vessels which are necessary for the experiment. It is only recently that the plants to which we looked for the manufacture of these vessels were able to produce them for us because of orders they had for defence and other reasons. We now have all the high-pressure vessels required and we expect to be able to proceed with the experiment this year.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Why is there no item to deal with that? You are showing the amount of money which has been expended and the effort being put forth in regard to this. Surely if we are making the effort which the minister has indicated there should be some item here to take care of that and we should be kept up to date on the progress being made. Generally speaking I think the belief is that nothing is being done now, that things are just being left idle. I am glad the minister has been able to tell us that they are still carrying on, but I should like to know to what extent financially we are assisting in this development and just what progress it is expected will be made.

Mr. Prudham: I think the details of that would come under item 225. The actual cost of the equipment being assembled for this experiment has been spread over two or three years and I do not have the total amount expended.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What would be an estimate?

Mr. Prudham: We think the equipment would cost about $150,000.

Mr. Barnett: Is the work to which the minister has just referred correlated with work which I understand is being done by the national research council? I remember seeing a couple of years ago a pilot plant which had been set up. Has that work been discontinued or what is the relationship between the activities of the department and those of the national research council?

Mr. Prudham: The work we are undertaking is closely correlated with what has been and is being done by the national research council. Ours is a high-pressure experiment. I am not just sure of the technical terms that should be applied to the work they have been doing, but it is closely correlated.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is that experiment being carried on here in Ottawa?

Mr. Prudham: Yes.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Members of parliament could visit the plant if they wanted to see what was going on?

Mr. Prudham: Yes. That is a very good suggestion. If hon. members would like to go out to the mines branch to see the work that is being carried on I am sure they would be welcomed.

Item agreed to.

Dominion coal board—

233. Administration and investigations of the dominion coal board, $116,660.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the minister going to make a statement with regard to the dominion coal board? It has been the practice in the past to do that. I notice that yesterday he said he preferred not to speak on that in his opening statement.

Mr. Prudham: Before I deal with that, may I reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings with regard to the international geophysical year.

The basic purpose of the geophysical year is a study of the earth's upper atmosphere and the manner in which it is influenced by the sun's radiation. Practical applications include radio communications, meteorology, high altitude military projectiles and a better understanding of the earth's immediate environment.

In co-operation with the Department of Transport, national research council and the Department of National Defence, the dominion observatory is equipping and operating ten to fourteen magnetic stations in Canada extending along magnetic meridians from Resolute Bay—latitude approximately 75—to southern Canada. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is providing the instruments while some of the stations are being manned by other departments. The observations are all to be collected and arrangements made for their analysis and publication by the dominion observatory.

As well as the projects I have mentioned, important additions are being made to our northern seismographic station at Resolute Bay. Systematic observations of sunspots, flares and other disturbances on the sun are being made at Ottawa throughout the geophysical year. In co-operation with the departments I have mentioned, observations are being made of the aurora, the ionosphere and of meteoric phenomena at Ottawa, Agincourt, Meanook, Newbrook, Victoria, Yellowknife, Baker Lake and Resolute Bay.

In presenting the estimates for the operation of the dominion coal board in this fiscal year I am pleased to report that there has been an improvement in the coal situation over the last twelve months.

This improvement is demonstrated in increased production of Canadian coal from 14,770,000 tons in the fiscal year 1954-55 to 15,014,000 tons in the fiscal year just ended; in an increase in the consumption of coal of over 2 million tons and in a reduction of the subvention payments of some $773,171. I may add that this reduction in the amount of assistance did not result from any appreciable decrease in the tonnage of Canadian coal moved under subvention assistance but from the reduced cost of assistance per ton from $3.07 last year to $2.92 in the year just ended.

In the province of Nova Scotia output was down by almost 100,000 tons. This was not due to lack of markets but rather to the closing of a high cost operation. The mechanization of the Sydney collieries began to show concrete results during the year. Cost of production is dropping and the output per man day is slowly climbing upward. During the year a market opened up for Nova Scotia coal in the United Kingdom and the continent. In the fiscal year some 230,000 tons moved to Britain at a cost in subvention of approximately $494,000 or $2.14 per net ton.

Shipments to Quebec and Ontario were slightly lower than in the previous twelve months but this was due more to difficulties in transportation and delivery than to any lack of markets.

The Nova Scotia producers have been working to develop new methods of burning coal. One new product, the dominion down draft furnace, has received an award of a certificate of merit from the national design centre and is finding an increasing sale in the maritimes. This radically new furnace for household use is at present being offered in Ontario and Quebec and a growing market is hoped for. The Department of National Defence has installed a number of these furnaces in the new Gagetown project where they are being fully tested over a full year's operation. My colleague tells me that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has also been testing out this equipment.

Turning to New Brunswick, the output of coal at 880,000 tons is not only 100,000 tons more than last year but forms an all-time record for the Minto field. Increasing tonnages of this coal are being used for the production of electricity and for industrial use. In Saskatchewan also production of 2,302,000 tons constituted a record. This coal finds a ready and increasing market in the industrial and electrical power fields.

Alberta has been the most depressed section of the Canadian coal industry but this past year has seen at least a slowing up in that trend, although I am not trying to minimize the seriousness of the situation in Alberta. The bituminous mines in this area have been largely dependent on the railway market. The switch to diesel locomotives and to oil burning steam engines continued, causing some further loss of markets. This loss was not nearly as heavy, however, as in the previous year. The cold winter in western Canada, together with the increased wheat traffic, threw a considerable burden upon the railways and the fuel requirements were considerably heavier. Steam locomotives scheduled for retirement were needed for operations and, while locomotive coal consumption was down by some 300,000 tons, the unexpected need for more fuel found the coal stock piles depleted and caused an unexpectedly heavy demand for supply from the mines. The cold weather also increased the demand for household coal and the subbituminous mines have enjoyed a relatively prosperous year. Altogether, Alberta fiscal year production of 4,621,000 tons is somewhat higher than the 4,591,000 tons in the 12 months previous.

Finally, the British Columbia mines show some increase in output from 1,344,000 tons last year to 1,460,000 tons in the 12 months ended March 31, 1956. This increase, however, is due to the improved operations in the Crowsnest pass area while the Vancouver island mines do not show any increase.

The coming year will undoubtedly produce some difficulties. The Alberta bituminous mines will continue to lose more of the railway market while the domestic producers will be affected, of course, by the vagaries of the weather. There will be an increase in the consumption of western coals for power production when new plants now under construction come into operation.

The amount of money required for subvention purposes shows a substantial decrease. The estimated amount of $9,210,250 is $789,750 below the estimate of last year and some $1,356,623 below the actual expenditure of last year. This reduction in amount does not mean any curtailment in the assistance offered to Canadian coal. The amounts provided on specific movements in the various orders in council remain exactly as in the previous year. The subvention payments have always been calculated as the amounts necessary to enable Canadian coals to meet the competitive laid-down costs of imported coals in the designated markets. Over the past 12 months there have been substantial increases in the laid-down costs of imported coals as well as some decreases in the cost of Canadian coals. These mean that, while it required $3.07 per ton to move the subvention coal in 1954-55 and $2.92 in 1955-56, it is estimated that it will require $2.46 per ton to move approximately the same tonnage in 1956-57, assuming that there is a movement of 3,700,000 tons. I am glad to repeat that, while part of this has been due to increased cost of imported coal, a substantial part has also been due to the increasing efficiency of Canadian coal production resulting in lower costs.

It is hoped that the improvement noted in the Nova Scotia coal picture over the last 12 months will continue through the coming year. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has mentioned that they are doing a good job there in lowering their production costs. The increasing effect of mechanization will be reflected by greater efficiency of operation and higher output per man day. That has been the trend in the early part of this year. It is estimated that the amount of money parliament is being asked to provide for subvention assistance and the existing orders in council defining and regulating the payments will enable the Nova Scotia coal mines to find outlets for their production in the year ending March 31, 1957.

I should like to refer to the delivery of coal to Newfoundland, which has been mentioned by some hon. members. There have been recurring difficulties in this delivery arising partly out of the seasonal availability of schooners and in part out of the lesser number of these vessels engaged in the trade. A meeting was held in Sydney in January of this year of those interested in this movement, with the chairman of the dominion coal board in the chair. A very full and detailed review was made of the difficulties and the possible remedies. I understand that as a result there has been a marked improvement in the loading of the vessels and that basic investigations are being carried out by private interests looking towards the development of better means of transportation over the longer term.

Liquid fuels are expected to continue to take over new domestic outlets as well as to win some established customers from coal. There will possibly be some gain to coal from wood consumers but not enough to overcome the loss to other fuels. When we read that there were in Canada in 1951 some 1,436,050 homes in which coal was the principal fuel while in 1955 there were only 1,115,000 in this category, it gives us some picture of the loss. At the same time, oil burning installations increased from 774,535 to 1,656,000 homes.

Of course this is not the whole picture. The demands for coal for industrial use continue to grow and this trend no doubt will continue. While most of this growth is in Ontario and Quebec, where United States coal is the main supply, the growing demand for electricity in the coal-producing provinces is providing an expanding outlet. Reports by the power companies to the dominion bureau of statistics estimate increases in the installation of fuel electric stations in the maritimes from 324,000 kilowatts in 1954 to 513,000 kilowatts in 1958 and in the western provinces from 605,000 in 1954 to 1,058,000 in 1958. This shift in markets, as I remarked on a previous occasion, will create problems for many of the existing producers.

Present reports indicate that the United States coal trade will be hampered by a shortage of cars during the year and that costs will be somewhat higher. This trend should help to provide outlets for Nova Scotia coal but, unfortunately, cannot be of much assistance to western Canada.

The hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Macleod have suggested that we should block off a portion of the Canadian market for Canadian coal. It is a very nice idea and I would be all for it if it were possible to do it but I do not think it is.

One difficulty is that most of the industrial installations in Ontario are built to burn United States coal and Alberta cannot supply the type that these plants are equipped to burn. Another problem and difficulty in moving western coal in large quantities to industrial Ontario is the fact that as a rule Alberta coal does not store well, and it has to be delivered as it is consumed. That makes it difficult to persuade large industries to put in the necessary equipment and rely entirely on western coal. Actually I think that the solution to the coal problem and the problem of the communities situated in the Crowsnest area and other coal-producing areas in Alberta is to encourage industry to locate in those areas. The provincial government and the federal government should both give all the encouragement possible to the solving of that problem.

I know that the industries, the mine companies concerned, are extremely active in trying to diversify their operations. There is one very healthy coal operation in the Crowsnest pass. They have a diversified operation. They have coke ovens. They have the largest supply of coking coal west of the Mississippi. They have lumbering operations. They are engaged in oil development. Another company is endeavouring to develop base metal deposits in the area. I know they have shipped samples of the ore to Europe for experiments on extraction. Although it is far from proven that they will get good results from their efforts, I know that they are spending a great deal of money and are endeavouring to establish another industry which will provide stability not only for the coal industry itself but for the communities in that area. I believe that is the positive approach. I do not think that putting restrictions on imports is a positive approach to the problem even if it could be carried out under our constitution. The hon. member for Cape Breton South last night I think pointed out that this government has not the power to dictate what type of fuel shall be used in any particular area. If anybody has the power, it is the provincial governments concerned. I do not think that the answer to the coal industry's problem lies in that direction.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this item of the coal board is one which probably embraces as many people and affects their lives as much as does any other one item in the whole estimates of our parliament. It is a matter on which some of us—and I know I have done so—have spoken at length at other times, and I do not propose to do it now.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South spoke last night with respect to this matter and of course he represents thousands of people who are employed in this industry and who are directly affected by it. In order to show its ramifications I need only say that in my own constituency, which is removed some considerable distance from the actual coal fields themselves, we too are greatly affected by this matter because it is one of the principal markets for agricultural products in the maritime provinces. As the coal industry prospers and develops, so do the farmers of the Annapolis valley, and of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island generally. As the coal miners suffer depression, so do our farmers suffer from loss of markets and reduced prices. They are perhaps not as directly affected by it but they are affected by it and to the same degree as are the people living within a few miles of the coal mines themselves. That is why this is an item which is important to all of us, because I am sure the same situation applies in the province of Alberta and in the province of British Columbia or wherever else coal may be mined. It is not only the miners themselves but those in the other associated industries who are affected by the large number of people who at one time were employed in this industry and who unfortunately have suffered from greatly reduced employment during the past few years.

I am not one who wants to cry blue ruin over this matter. I remember that this is not the first time the coal industry has suffered a marked depression. I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South and I myself remember the situation 25 years ago when, in the island of Cape Breton, there was mass unemployment, there were labour difficulties and there was actual starvation and it looked as though the coal industry was through. People said that the coal industry could never recover from the depression of those days. Yet a marked recovery was obtained. The government of R. B. Bennett, working in co-operation with the provincial government of Nova Scotia, by increasing subventions and carrying out an aggressive marketing policy, went a long way towards restoring prosperity in the mining areas of Cape Breton and therefore of Nova Scotia generally.

Then again during the last few years we have been faced with technological changes which have threatened the very existence of this industry once more. A few moments ago the minister pointed out the greatly reduced sale for coal because of the dieselization of the railways. In 1953 or 1954 the Canadian National Railways purchased 700,000 tons of coal. Some people suggest that by 1957 or 1958 these purchases will have virtually disappeared. The St. Lawrence basin, which at one time presented and offered a great market for Nova Scotia coal, is threatened by the development of the St. Lawrence seaway and the prospect of American coal being brought down by water carrier into that area. Then there is the development of the gas industry which also is going to cut substantially into the market for coal.

I was interested in what the minister said about the development of this domestic furnace to which he referred and in connection with which he said a citation had been awarded to the company for producing it. I think this could be said, perhaps not in criticism but as a statement of fact, and I think the coal operators will be the first ones to admit it. In the days gone by they did not worry too much about marketing. Certainly they did not worry at all about the domestic consumer. They had the demands of the railways. They had the demands of heavy industry. They would meet your orders if they saw fit to do so but the local customer, the domestic consumer, was the forgotten man. If he did not want to take the type of coal, the size of coal and the dirt which they had to offer, it was just too bad for him; he could freeze. That was virtually the attitude which they took. Then suddenly, because of these changes, the industrial market and the railway market have been substantially lost to the coal producers. Now they are struggling desperately to meet the demands of the domestic consumer and to satisfy him.

We now have this down-draft furnace which was produced two years ago, which is on sale, and which apparently is a tremendous improvement over the old coal-burning furnaces. If that same aggressive attitude had been adopted 10 years ago by the companies concerned, they would now be enjoying a much greater proportion of the domestic market than that which they now enjoy. Of course, once having turned to oil, the domestic consumer is not going to throw out the oil furnace and put in a coal-burning furnace, although perhaps it is comparable in efficiency and cost with the oil furnace. Hence they have much responsibility for the way in which they have lost these markets, particularly domestically. It is encouraging to see that they realize that now—I think they frankly admit it—and that they are going to combine efficiency and production together with aggressiveness in sales and are going to attempt to meet the demand of the customer rather than ignore him as hitherto has been the case.

One would not worry too much about the coal industry, or rather one would worry about it but one would face its problem and its fate, possibly, if one believed that this was a sort of horse-and-buggy industry which was going to pass out of existence in the way in which the horse and buggy passed out when it was confronted with the competition of the motor vehicle. I recall what happened in the Studebaker plant, I think it was, many years ago. They were the largest producers of carriages in the world. The men went on strike when they first started to produce the automobile because they said it was a hopelessly inefficient machine that was going to put them out of work and would not accomplish any great good. However, the horse and buggy passed. The automobile came to the fore.

I do not think the coal industry is going to pass. I think it has a substantial basis in the economy of this country and that over a period of years it will recover. In fact the report of the dominion coal board says that while the current situation, viewed as a whole, is cause for grave concern, it is to be remembered that the Canadian coal industry is basic and one upon which our economy is still largely dependent.

I think that is a fundamental statement, Mr. Chairman. It is because of that we say this government does have a responsibility in helping to assist this industry in every way possible, not just to keep it in the horse-and-buggy era, but to carry it through a trying period of transition. The reports of the minister's own fuel board suggest that within a decade the costs of other fuels will be increased, the industrial potential of this country will have been developed and there will be an increasing demand for coal. The coal industry must then be in existence to meet that demand. As was suggested this morning, I think by the hon. member for Cape Breton South when referring to the gas turbine engine, perhaps by the time we have that development the coal industry will have passed out of existence; that is the danger, Mr. Chairman.

It is different from operating a grocery store or some sort of a retail business where you can shut the doors, pull down the blinds and have it closed for one year or 10 years. Then you can come back, sweep out the cobwebs, and go into operation. Once these mines are allowed to close, once the shafts fill with water, once the men are taken out, the difficulty and cost of reclaiming them would make it virtually an impossible situation. The mines, having gone, cannot be reclaimed. As I said, therefore, it is essential that this government, in co-operation with provincial governments and in co-operation with the industry itself, do everything possible to maintain the coal industry during these days.

I think we have failed in this parliament and in this government in the development of a truly national fuel policy. I think that is the basic problem. One day we have emphasized the place of gas and a great deal of money is spent in assisting the gas industry. We have control now of certain rivers in connection with the production of electricity so as to preserve power for Canada. All those things are desirable and all those things may be necessary, but there is no over-all co-ordination; there is no development of a fuel policy as such. I think that is one responsibility of this government and one in which this department has failed.

There was a reference last year to the interdepartmental committee on energy, and that was to be a committee composed of representatives from the various departments of government which would meet and work out a national fuel policy. What do we find? Look at the report of the coal board and you find that the interdepartmental committee met twice. Look at the preceding board report and you find the committee met twice during that year. There were four meetings in two years, Mr. Chairman, and that is not a very aggressive way in which to develop a national fuel policy. I think that more must be done in that connection than has been done before. I agree with the minister that probably greater industrialization may be the solution to the problem. Undoubtedly, there is going to be greater industrialization. Even in the Atlantic provinces there has been a great increase in industrial development, but not nearly as much as in the central provinces. Some criticisms have been levelled at this government by maritime members because it has done very little to assist in the development of industries in these provinces, particularly those industries associated with national defence where direct government control would have permitted much more to be done than has been done. As those industries are developed, so will the market for coal develop.

I want to pay a word of respect to certain industries such as the Nova Scotia Light and Power, for instance, to which reference has been made before. They have installed greater units this year for the burning of coal in the development of electricity. I think there again there has been lack of co-ordination in the past. I am sure that in my own province probably too much money has been spent in the costly development of hydro-electric energy by trying to get the last bit of power development from relatively small water courses. If more attention had been paid to the development of electrical energy from coal we might have been in a much better position than we are today. At least Nova Scotia Light and Power, by installing this new unit, is providing a certain market for Nova Scotia coal, and as similar installations take place in various areas in the maritimes, so will the consumption of coal increase.

The emphasis has been placed, I think, on the development of these other sources of power. I feel this government is justified in doing more for the coal industry than it has before. A few minutes ago the minister said that, apparently owing to a little increased cost in maritime coal and an increased efficiency in the production of our coal, the amount paid out for subventions per ton will be a little bit less this year. That is a very fortunate situation, and as we develop increased markets in our own country that can continue. Until that situation arrives this government is justified in spending, for subventions and assistance in the movement of coal, more money than it has heretofore.

We had a situation last year where the Canadian National Railways complained about the quality of the coal and refused to buy it on a certain basis. As a result, our government had to pay several million dollars additional to the Canadian National in order to have a certain basis for our coal. Those expenditures are just, because when you spend hundreds of millions of dollars in the development of a seaway, when you advance hundreds of millions of dollars for the building of a gas line—justified as those expenditures may or may not be from a national standpoint, and we are not criticizing that for a moment—then this department and this minister are more than justified in spending the money available to the coal industry, even more money than has been spent in the past. This industry must be kept together during this period of transition.

We have the new problem of freight rates. Freight rates have been increased, as we know, by an interim order of the board. There are going to be further hearings this fall and we will know then what the final increase in freight rates will be. The government has in the past assisted in meeting those increased costs. I know the hon. member for Cape Breton South raised the question yesterday, and it has been raised before. I hope that this afternoon, in dealing with this particular item of subventions on coal, the minister will tell us what the policy of the government is with respect to meeting these increased costs to the coal producer because increased freight rates just came into effect during the last few years.

As I said, the ultimate problem is the greater industrialization of the country and that is perhaps a place where this government and the provincial government can co-operate. Next week there is to be a meeting of the provincial premiers of the maritime provinces called by Premier Flemming of New Brunswick, in which they are to consider the whole basic problem of the maritime economy. As a result of this conference certain recommendations will be made to this government. The Prime Minister has said he would welcome those recommendations and they would receive direct consideration. We hope that is true. This is one of the basic problems of the maritime economy, this matter of coal production and coal mining. It is essential to the economy of at least two provinces in so far as the Cape Breton area is concerned, the Cape Breton population and those farmers in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. The New Brunswick farmers, of course, do not come directly into contact with the Cape Breton area but there has been a development in the coal mining industry which has been helpful to that province.

There is some reason, therefore, not perhaps for optimism, but determination that this industry will be kept at least at its present standard of employment, which is low enough, lower than it should be. It must at least be held there during this interregnum until the situation develops which is envisaged by the minister's department when it says that in 1965 there will be a situation in this country by which the coal industry will again be utilized to its full extent.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, you will remember that last evening when I was speaking I was called to order, and I did not complete what I had to say. I am not going to repeat anything I said last night. I might say that I agree with everything that was said this afternoon by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. As he very well pointed out, this question affects not only the coal miner of Nova Scotia, it affects the whole economy of Nova Scotia. If the industry goes down the province pretty well goes down with it. That is why I have been so vociferous on the matter ever since I came into this house.

Last evening the picture I was trying to leave with the committee was that in so far as actual knowledge of the future of coal, or of any other fuel in Canada, is concerned, there is not very much known. Most of our information comes from the press. I put on the record last night statements from different sections of the press that were directly opposite to each other. One statement painted a picture of the golden era of coal; coal was going to begin to come into its own. The next statement threw it down flat, wrote it off, and it was pretty hard to pinpoint the problem accurately.

I said last night, as the minister indicated this afternoon, that the dominion government did not have the authority to bring this problem to a final conclusion and find a solution because actually the problem is one that, under the British North America Act, rests with the provinces and to a large extent with the operators of the industry. The Dominion Coal Board Act was assented to on July 17, 1947. The powers and authority of the board were clearly set out in the act. The powers and authority given to that board at that time were based on the condition of the industry at that time. Drastic changes have taken place in the whole fuel set-up of Canada in the last nine years. Problems have been created that are interprovincial or company and provincial, and the federal government cannot move to meet them under their present powers.

What I wanted to say last night in summing up what I had said was that I believe what is needed in this country today is an expansion of the Dominion Coal Board Act to give the board the necessary authority to bring some sanity into the production and distribution of fuel in this country. In addition to having its powers broadened the board should have on its membership personnel from the oil industry and the gas industry. The coal industry is represented there at the present time. It should include someone who has some knowledge of the potential of atomic energy, because that is around the corner.

If the situation in the fuel industry is allowed to continue as it has been in the last few years one type of fuel will destroy the other. Nobody can tell with any degree of accuracy what the economic value of natural gas will be in Quebec. The men who are going to pipe that gas down east cannot tell you; neither can the government of Alberta, because when the line comes into Quebec, before they can sell gas or fix a price for it they have to deal with the public utilities board of the province, which will fix the rate. Nobody knows what it will be. Heating systems should not be changed until the price is known. I am reasonably sure that whether it is oil or gas they swing to they will find it will cost more than coal. Many of the small industries in this province that changed over to oil not so long ago are switching back to coal because of the cost.

If we allow the coal industry to drift as it has been drifting, in the next 10 years there will be no industry to rehabilitate. Whether or not you want coal you will not be able to get it. As the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said, you cannot reclaim a coal mine. You close a mine down. It is closed for a year or two. You are not going to open it again.

There is another thing. It will take you at least five or six years to qualify a miner underground. He has to write examinations. I want to warn the committee that once a miner with five or six years' experience comes above ground he will not go back again if he can find employment somewhere else. I am convinced, after looking at the thermopower development, for example, in Alberta at Battle River, that that is one angle we should be promoting in the maritime provinces. A very good job is being done in Alberta, but they have much cheaper fuel.

In the final analysis I say this government, in co-operation with the provinces, should expand the act and increase the powers of the board. The kind of personnel that I suggest should be placed on the board with the end in view of making an examination of the different zones in Canada as to the fuel that is most economic in a particular zone. That should be done before it is too late. If you had men of the calibre I have in mind from the different fuel industries who could consult together and examine the economies in the different zones across Canada, there is no doubt in my mind but that coal from Cape Breton island would be allocated to the province of Quebec. It is the logical fuel for that area. Regardless of anything else I believe there is a market for at least 5 million or 6 million tons of coal in that particular area for many years to come; but somebody has to take the responsibility for making that kind of survey.

I do not think there is anyone in a position to do that but the federal government, with a board that is pretty competent in the whole field of fuel. The present coal board has a lot of information, a lot of data and many trained personnel today that they did not have in 1947. It would not be very hard to expand the board if it had the power to go into the problems which arise out of the question of the proper economic fields for the different fuels. I think you have to do that if for no other reason than to prevent one fuel killing the other because of the greed and grab for markets at any price until they get in there. Once they get in there, of course, they root the other fuel out. The heating plants are adapted and you pay their price or you do not have any heat.

I think it is a bad thing to give a monopoly to oil, gas or any other fuel in any section of the country and have that section of the country completely dependent on it. The only logical and sensible answer is a national fuel policy with that kind of board administering it, and with the power to regulate and allocate as far as fuels are concerned.

Toward the end of last session I moved a motion in the house having to do with this particular question, and I was supported by the whole opposition. The Ontario press is pretty careful in going out on a limb on anything that is new. The Globe and Mail had editorials saying that this was a sensible idea. In view of the present situation in the country in the field of fuel, we may be spending millions and millions of dollars on hydro, on oil, on natural gas and on coal. But don't forget what the British are doing right now on atomic energy. In a few years' time because of that development—maybe in the United States and definitely in Britain—we are going to have to work along similar lines, and we are just throwing money away because we do not have any authoritative body in this country that is making a competent study of the whole question of fuels now and in the future, and it is very nearly time we did. The framework of the act is here now, and it is just a matter of giving it a little consideration and expanding it.

The minister did tell us last year that this interdepartmental committee was working. Well, they had a couple of meetings, but there is no doubt there may be some smaller body that is actually doing the research and the digging and we have not received the benefit of it. Perhaps the minister is closer than I am aware to doing the kind of thing I am talking about. Perhaps they are ready to set it up, but it has to be done under an amendment to this act.

I do not want you to call me to order again, Mr. Chairman, but I just wanted to say this in order to complete what I was saying last night. I hope the minister's department will soon get around to bringing some sanity to the whole question of fuels.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I do not want to make any speech on this topic, because I told the minister yesterday when I was speaking that I would not repeat what I had said earlier. I was absent from the chamber for about an hour and a half this morning and I expected this whole department would have been cleared away within that time, but perhaps I was too optimistic in that regard. At this time I want to ask the minister just one question.

Yesterday when I was speaking the minister gave the employment figure for 1954 in the gold mining industry as 18,497 and for 1953 the employment figure in the coal industry was 18,291. I asked him at that time if he would be kind enough to obtain the employment figure for the coal industry for 1948, and I wonder if he would give me those figures at this time if he has them there.

Mr. Prudham: Yes. In 1948, some 22,566 were employed in the gold mining industry and 24,318 in the coal industry. In 1949, 22,358 were employed in the gold mining industry and 24,230 were employed in the coal industry. In 1954, 18,479 were employed in the gold mining industry and 18,050 were employed in the coal mines.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I think the minister and perhaps all the committee will readily understand my interest in this matter when I indicate that almost 25 per cent of all the coal mined in Canada, or about one-fifth of our national production, is mined in my own constituency of Moose Mountain. The coal industry in my province is in very excellent condition. In spite of the fact that western coal production has gone down almost 30 per cent in the last ten years, we are happy to know that in the lignite fields of Estevan we have more than held our own. In 1955 we produced 2,239,000 tons of coal with a sale value of $4,250,000. It is therefore quite important to my province and to me in particular, representing the constituency I do, that everything be done to promote the industry and maintain it in a healthy state.

I was extremely interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. I want to join with them in suggesting that the time is long overdue for this government to take the responsibility of setting up a national fuel board by which both the conservation and utilization of our fuels can be handled in an intelligent manner.

As I listened to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings I noticed he pointed out that in his view some of the things that are wrong in the situation existing in the coal mining industry in his area are going to be corrected, but it has taken a long time for the department concerned to take the proper action, and this indicated that something is being done in the way of setting up a national fuel board.

I remember reading speeches made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South prior to my coming to the house in 1945. Even that long ago the hon. member was pointing out to the government of that day that in Canada we should have a co-ordinated board under the control of this government, which would have the interests of the various types of fuel producers in mind, to set up a program which would be conducive to the development of the various fuels on a sensible basis. It is well understood that in the last few years across the country we have had a tremendous development in alternate fuels. In my own constituency we have perhaps one of the largest oil fields on the North American continent. Not only do we have an estimated reserve of 13 billion tons of coal, or perhaps 24 per cent of all Canadian reserves, but we also have some of the greatest potential oil fields on this continent.

I think the point made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was well taken, that we should have a policy under which there would be no friction between the various ways to utilize our fuels. It is all very well for the minister to get up and say he feels that the best interests of the various fuel industries, speaking about coal in particular, can be served by locating industry in those areas, but it may be that without a plan industry will be set up where competitive fuels will come in and the industry will not be in a competitive position. I think the point made by the hon. members I mentioned was extremely well taken.

This afternoon I want to point out in particular my own concern over the production of coal in my constituency. Over the past ten years we have developed perhaps the highest type of specialized coal mining to be found anywhere in the world, but despite this fact a situation could arise whereby that industry would find itself in great competitive difficulty. Lignite coal moving to the city of Winnipeg and western Ontario markets today furnishes power for some large pulp and paper mills but the new rulings of the transport board, the interim horizontal freight rate increases, might put that industry in an uncompetitive state and perhaps will have a bearing on the future of the coal industry in my constituency. I should like the assurance of the minister after I resume my seat that the government has taken into consideration the situation which has evolved through these interim horizontal increases in freight rates.

I wish to point out to the committee that as far back as 1914 the transport board agreed that, due to the fact that lignite coal was not competitive with bituminous coal, there should be a 10 per cent differential in freight rates. Estevan coal, for example, moving into the Winnipeg market in 1914 was $1.80 a ton; bituminous coal at that time was $2 a ton. Under the present rates and increases subsequent to 1914, lignite coal moves at a freight rate of $3.30 a ton as compared with $3.50 a ton for bituminous coal. That indicates that the increase through these horizontal freight rates may very well put the coal industry in my constituency in a very unfavourable competitive position. I would like the assurance of the minister that his department will take into account the fact that while this industry is very highly specialized and has enjoyed an increase in production over the last 10 years, any further increase may make it non-competitive.

Representations were made by the four Atlantic provinces and the four western provinces, and representations were also made to the Turgeon committee to the effect that horizontal freight increases were not justified and certainly were not fair. I hope we can have an assurance from the minister this afternoon that this new interim increase and the one which may follow later will not adversely affect this industry.

Mr. Prudham: There is no subvention payable on Saskatchewan coal for shipment to Winnipeg, but the subvention on shipments to western Ontario is based on a percentage of the freight rate up to $1 per ton. It is revised within that limit from time to time as the freight rate varies. At the moment we do not see any reason why it is likely to pierce that ceiling of $1, even with the new change in the freight rate.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I understand that last year 1,400,000 tons of lignite coal moved to industry and pulp and paper mills in Manitoba and western Ontario, and I should like to know if there is likely to be any change in the amount shipped to that area in the coming year because of the new freight rates.

Mr. Prudham: I think not. The contracts for the supply of coal for the current year were made early in the year, and I do not think there will be any change as far as this present year is concerned.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): How will that affect coal going into that area? Will there be less coal produced and moved there?

Mr. Prudham: The increase in the freight rate would add to the cost of the coal. I should like to say a word of comment in reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South. His suggestion is consistent with his socialist philosophy. There is no doubt that it sounds good to say you should have a national fuel policy and a national board with power to direct people as to what type of fuel they can use. However, I am afraid if you tried that you would get into a great deal of difficulty. I do not think the people of Canada would accept that kind of direction. For instance, the people of Cape Breton might be forbidden to use fuel oil, and there would be many arguments. The people living in Edmonton and Calgary might be directed to use coal because those cities are close to the coal fields and it might be argued that it would be more sensible and economical to send gas to eastern Canada because of the easier method of transportation. It may sound good to say that we should have a national policy with such a board, but I do not think it would actually work out in practice.

Mr. Gillis: The dominion coal board is not a socialist body, and I do not think they advocate socialist principles. I am merely suggesting that competent people should make an examination of the problem so that we might have the facts before us. In 1949 we passed an act to assist the producers of coal in the Atlantic provinces and $10 million was appropriated. I should like to know how much of that has been loaned, to whom it has been loaned, and how much has been paid back.

Mr. Prudham: The details as of March 31, 1955 are as follows:

Avon Coal Co. Ltd.
Loan authorized—3 per cent	$ 218,000.00
Total advances	160,000.00
Balance to be loaned	58,000.00
Dominion Coal Co. Ltd.
Loan authorized—3¼ per cent	$7,500,000.00
Total advances	4,673,524.92
Balance to be loaned	2,826,475.08
Repayments	408,129.30
Balance to be repaid	4,265,395.62
Interest paid to Dec. 31, 1955	503,108.11
Four Star Collieries Ltd.
Loan No. 1 authorized 2¾ per cent	$ 100,000.00
Total advances	100,000.00
Repayments	57,666.00
Balance to be repaid	42,334.00
Interest paid to Dec. 31, 1955	7,477.85
Loan No. 3 authorized—3¼ per cent	69,320.00
Total advances	62,000.00
Balance to be loaned	7,320.00
Victor Charles McMann
Loan authorized—3 per cent	$ 8,175.00
Total advances	8,175.00
Repayments	nil
Balance to be repaid	8,175.00
D.W. & R.A. Mills Ltd.
Loan authorized—4 per cent	$ 305,850.00
Total advances	305,850.00
Repayments	127,484.37
Balance to be repaid	178,365.63
Interest paid to Dec. 31, 1955	21,619.48
Total loans authorized	$8,201,345
Balance not committed	$1,341,655

Mr. Gillis: Does the rate of interest vary from company to company?

Mr. Prudham: It varies according to the cost of money to the federal treasury. It is 3 per cent in some instances, 2¾ per cent, 3½ per cent and 4 per cent.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

498. Departmental administration, $2,215,472.

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a short statement at this time. As hon. members know, no new legislation has been introduced this session having to do with veterans affairs, with the exception of a minor amendment to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, which comes under the Department of Finance.

This does not mean that the government and officials of my department consider that further amendments to the legislation making up the veterans' charter may not be necessary in the future. As I have mentioned in previous years, that legislation is under constant review with the intent that the charter must meet the changing needs and requirements of the veteran and his dependents.

It must be agreed, however, I submit, that great progress has been made in the legislative field during the last five years. In 1951 substantial amendments were brought down to the Pension Act, which came into force on January 1, 1952, and the act was again amended in 1954. The War Veterans' Allowance Act was amended in 1952 and again last year. Part II and part III were added to the Veterans' Land Act during the 1953-54 session, and the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act was passed in 1953. A complete consolidation of the treatment regulations was effected during the year 1954, and these regulations have been amended several times since during 1954, 1955 and this year.

Writing in the October, 1955, issue of The Legionary, the Legion publication, Very Rev. Dean John D. Anderson, then dominion president of the Canadian Legion, said:

> Today the task of obtaining adequate legislation is almost complete. True there are areas where improvements could still be made and will be made. But by and large the legislation picture is gratifying.

As hon. members know, the dominion convention of the Canadian Legion in session last month in Vancouver passed a number of resolutions concerned with proposed legislative amendments, and as soon as these recommendations are received by the government I can assure the committee they will receive the careful and thorough consideration of the government and the officials of my department. Here I wish to pay tribute to the Canadian Legion, the national council of veterans' associations in Canada and the other veterans' organizations which have done so much to promote the well-being of the veteran and his dependents in our country. The efforts of these organizations and their willingness at all times to co-operate with the Department of Veterans Affairs are reflected in the legislation we call the veterans' charter of which all Canadians are, I believe, justifiably proud.

As hon. members know, the most significant changes made in the War Veterans' Allowance Act last year were in the rates and ceilings, the former being increased by 20 per cent to $60 monthly for single persons and $108 for those on married rates, and the ceilings being raised to $840 per year for recipients at the single rate and to $1,440 for those receiving the married rate. As of March 31, 1956, there were 51,781 recipients on war veterans allowance with an annual liability of $40,207,916. These recipients included 38,427 veterans of all wars, 13,208 widows and 146 orphans.

There has been a marked increase in the number of applications for war veterans allowance since April 1, 1955, the date the amendments to the act became effective. In the year ended March 31, 1954 there were 5,545 new applications approved for war veterans allowance and in the next fiscal year ended March 31, 1955, there were 6,322 such applications. In the last fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, 8,562 new applications were approved.

As announced in the house last session, the rules under which grants from the assistance fund could be approved were reviewed and the formula extended to include allowances for clothing and other personal items. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1955, 5,681 veterans and widows received assistance from the fund, and in the year ended March 31, 1956, the number was 6,256.

While generally speaking the assistance fund has been meeting the purpose for which it was set up, I have recently asked the appropriate officials in the department to review its administration and application with the intent of perhaps again widening the formula to help some of those war veterans allowance recipients who cannot supplement their incomes through casual earnings. Veterans in receipt of the allowance are also eligible for free treatment for any condition, and the cost of that treatment in the 1955-56 fiscal year was estimated at about $13 million, which was almost one-third of our total treatment cost.

The administrative wrinkles in connection with the putting into operation of the new rules regarding casual earnings, including the formulae designed for calculating farm income and to determine net income derived from roomers and boarders, have been pretty well ironed out, and I can report to the committee that these new regulations have been of substantial benefit to many war veterans allowance recipients.

The Veterans' Land Act administration continues to operate at a high level of activity. In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1956, 3,175 veterans were settled under the act. This number was made up as follows:

Full-time farmers	578
Small holders	2,467
Commercial fishermen	36
Settlers on provincial and dominion lands	94

The total number of veterans settled under the Veterans' Land Act since its inception as of March 31, 1956, was 70,529, made up as follows:

Full-time farmers	32,377
Small holders	37,122
Commercial fishermen	1,030
Settlers on provincial and dominion lands	5,092

Since part II came into force and as of June 30, 1956, 655 contracts for veterans to build houses for themselves have been approved under this new part. Construction activity during 1955, including that under part II, reached its highest level since 1950, amounting to 2,159 new contracts let, of which 88 per cent were managed by the veterans themselves.

As hon. members know, part III of the new act provides for additional loans to farmers and small holders at the time they are settled. Up to the end of March, 1956, 1,387 farmers, 3,422 small holders and 22 commercial fishermen had been granted these additional loans under part III. We are closely watching the operation of these two new parts of the Veterans' Land Act to make sure they are meeting the purposes and objectives which parliament intended when the amendments were made to the Veterans' Land Act in the 1953-54 session.

It is interesting to note that the 10-year period has expired for a number of veterans, and as of July 1, 1956, 2,830 veterans have now earned their conditional grants. As many veterans were settled in 1946 and 1947, we anticipate that several thousand veterans will earn their conditional grants during the next 18 months. I think all members of the committee will agree that the Veterans' Land Act has been a most successful rehabilitation measure.

The Pension Act, of course, remains one of the main pillars of the veterans' charter. At the end of May, 1956, there were 194,035 persons in receipt of pensions under the act, with a total annual liability of $128,685,908. During the last five years, or even during the last 10 years, one trend which is very evident is the constant decline in the ranks of world war I pensioners, both veterans and dependents, and the steady rise in the number of world war II pensioners. As I informed the Legion convention at Vancouver, the Canadian pension commission has completed several reviews during the last two years, undertaken as part of the policy of ensuring that the maximum benefits of the Pension Act are made available to veterans, and this committee may be interested in some of the results.

These reviews were carried out in conjunction with the regular work of the commission, and in co-operation with the treatment services branch of the department. One of these was a review of all world war I pensioners whose disabilities were assessed at 40 per cent and 45 per cent. As hon. members know, these awards were stabilized if they had been in effect for three years or more, but we were of the opinion that a medical re-examination would disclose an increase in disability in many instances.

The chairman of the commission, Brigadier J. L. Melville, issued orders accordingly and over 3,000 such pensioners were re-examined. As a result a very substantial number of these awards were increased to 50 per cent or more, making their dependents eligible for an award in the event of death.

Similarly, a review was undertaken of all awards to world war I veterans for defective hearing, which awards had also been stabilized. Over 6,000 reviews were arranged and it was found that there had been a further deterioration in hearing acuity in more than half of these pensioners. This additional loss has been compensated for by a corresponding increase in their awards.

At the beginning of 1955 a more liberal policy in respect to awards to dependent parents was placed in effect, and a review commenced of all such awards in payment. It was felt that these recipients were entitled to similar consideration, respecting allowable income, as were recipients of war veterans allowance and old age assistance. The total allowable income for one dependent parent is now $85 monthly, except for widowed mothers who may have $95, and $120 per month for two dependent parents.

In the two-year period since the enactment of the amendment to the Pension Act which provided for the payment of additional pension for legally adopted children, additional pension has been awarded on behalf of nearly 3,200 adopted children, a much larger number, I must say, than was originally anticipated.

Since the passing of the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, 679 children of those who gave their lives for our country have been approved for educational assistance. The students are enrolled in nursing, teaching, engineering, business administration, law, medicine and many other courses. We are convinced there will be substantial increases in the numbers of students approved for assistance under the act during the next few years, as most of the eligible children are still in secondary or even primary school at this time.

Under the veterans' treatment regulations the department provides treatment, hospitalization and domiciliary care for veterans and for other authorized persons under certain circumstances. This, of course, is one of the most important aspects of the work of the department. The cost of our treatment services last year amounted to $45,381,181, including hospital construction in the amount of $3,465,177.

The amendments to section 13 of the treatment regulations last year—this is the section with the sliding scale of charges designed to protect the veteran against hospitalization costs which might ruin him financially—came into effect on August 1, 1955. During the last fiscal year 6,359 patients were treated under section 13 at a cost of $2,356,563.90. Of this amount only $546,726.61 was charged to the patients, which I believe shows the effectiveness of the sliding scale.

Here I should like to mention the fact that the Department of Veterans Affairs suffered a severe loss last December in the untimely death of Dr. Wilfred Parsons Warner, who occupied the post of director general of treatment services for the last 10 years. Hon. members will recall that Dr. Warner had been responsible for the setting up of our hospitalization system throughout Canada in the Department of Veterans Affairs. I know he will be remembered by veterans for his professional qualifications, for his human and down to earth approach to their problems, and for the success he attained in providing veterans with the best possible care and medical treatment available anywhere.

The department has been fortunate to obtain the services of Dr. John Crawford, formerly with the Royal Canadian Medical Corps at the Department of National Defence. He is the new head of treatment services. He brings to veterans' affairs sound professional qualifications, with a good background of administrative experience.

As hon. members know, 100 years ago Queen Victoria authorized a medal to be made from the metal of the guns which had been captured at Balaclava and to be awarded for valour in the presence of the enemy. It was known as the Victoria Cross. This year, during the week commencing June 25, the centenary celebration of the award of the first Victoria Cross took place in London, Canada being represented by a large group of V.C.'s and relatives, of whom two are members of this house.

Under arrangements made by the Canadian V.C. centenary committee and with the cooperation of T.C.A. and various shipping companies, a total of 118 persons were provided with transportation to the United Kingdom by air and sea at public expense.

The V.C.'s, who included two still serving in the army, numbered 36. They were accompanied by 37 relatives, and there were also 44 relatives of posthumous and deceased V.C.'s. Although I have not as yet received an official report, I am informed that the ceremonies were most impressive and the arrangements for the Canadian party in England extremely well handled by the staff of the D.V.A. office in London, England, and the officers of the Canadian joint staff, national defence, to whom my appreciation is extended. I feel that all of us will be honoured by the prominent part played by Canadian V.C.'s and their relatives in this unique celebration.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Chairman, I should like to mention the national memorial and cenotaph which, as I announced in the house some weeks ago, will be built on Nepean point overlooking the Ottawa river. As I said in the house, the world war II Book of Remembrance and any similar books which may be prepared in the future, as well as a copy of the world war I Book of Remembrance, will be housed in this national memorial. The matter is now in the hands of my colleague the Minister of Public Works, and I understand that the architects are presently engaged in preparing the plans and specifications.

The annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs has been edited and it is now in the hands of the queen's printer. Full statistical information regarding the administration of the department will, as usual, be found in that report. I, of course, will be glad to give all the information I have to members of this committee on any aspect of the work of the department, either under this item or subsequent items.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, we appreciate the remarks of the minister and his comprehensive report of the veterans affairs department. May I, at the outset, join with him in expressing the appreciation which I know the people of Canada feel for the attendance of our V.C.'s at the centennial celebration in England, and particularly the two who represented us from this House of Commons.

The minister truly said that there has been no legislation this year emanating from the veterans affairs department. I was pleased to hear him say this does not mean that the department does not realize there are amendments which should and must be made to the different veterans' acts. When we review the estimates, Mr. Chairman, we realize there has been very little change in the department during the last year. As a matter of fact the estimates for last year, 1955-56, were $245,808,151 and for 1956-57 they are practically the same, $245,413,819. This shows that there has been very little change in the veterans department.

The minister mentioned the fact that the veterans' charter is the basis of veterans' legislation. We who have been here for many years, since 1945, realize that the veterans' charter did contain some very comprehensive legislation covering the needs of veterans. We also realize that in these changing times there must be changes in veterans' legislation. I remember that in those days the veterans' committee was the busiest committee in the House of Commons. This was true not only in 1945, 1946 and 1947, but right through until that legislation was completed. Then again during the Korean war we were fairly busy bringing legislation up to date to see that the veterans of Korea received the same benefits as the veterans of world war I and world war II.

There is a feeling amongst some veterans, Mr. Chairman—possibly it is not justified—that now there is no war the government believes there is little need to attend to veterans' problems. I think this idea gains ground from the fact that at the present time we have a minister who is sharing his activities with the Post Office Department. In previous debates this year this matter has been brought before the house, and it was before the Legion's convention in Vancouver. I think it is generally felt that the veterans would like to see a full-time minister on the job.

There are so many ramifications to veterans' problems. We only have to listen to the minister's report this afternoon to realize the many problems facing the veterans department and the minister. There are homes for veterans, farms, businesses, insurance, fisheries, pensions, war veterans' allowances, hospitalization and many more that I could mention. I do not believe there is any department of government that has to deal more with human problems and the human element than has the veterans affairs department. Even the health department is not concerned with these problems to the same extent. In the field of health there are health departments in the different provincial governments and the municipalities. Veterans affairs is an exclusive problem of the federal government.

We feel there should be a full-time minister. I might say that anything which might be considered as neglect of this department—and I do not say there has been neglect, particularly—but anything which would make the veterans feel this department was not as important as other departments, gives them serious worry. The veterans of this country are very jealous indeed of their Department of Veterans Affairs. I do hope this is the last session of parliament in which we shall see a part-time minister dealing with this most important department. In addition, the Post Office Department is a very important department. I could name other departments of government in which I do not think the ministers are very busy or need to be very busy. If the work in these two departments which should be done by the minister of a department is to be done, a minister should be on the job full time in each department.

The minister spoke about the possibility of new legislation. There is no question in my mind, Mr. Chairman, that the many acts which he mentioned this afternoon do require amendment; there is no doubt in my mind or in the minds of veterans across Canada that there are many problems and many things concerning veterans which must be considered and brought up to date. I think we can show, for instance, that there has been considerable unfinished business. When I say "unfinished business", Mr. Chairman, my mind goes back to the different meetings of the veterans affairs committee in this House of Commons, when matters were repeatedly brought before the committee and the government having to do with amendments which should be made to certain acts, particularly the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

I should like to deal with that for just a few minutes. I shall deal with it under the head of unfinished business as far as the department is concerned. I was very pleased to note, and not surprised in the least, that at the convention of the Canadian Legion in Vancouver a short time ago some of these problems were again brought to the attention of the country by resolutions presented to the convention. I might say in passing, as has often been said in this house, that I suppose one of the finest pieces of veterans' legislation that has ever been presented to any parliament was the war veterans' allowance legislation that was presented to this parliament in 1930. The history of that legislation has been given a great many times, and it is not necessary to repeat it this afternoon.

I should like first to mention the ceiling on the war veterans' allowance. This is not new, Mr. Chairman; it is something which has been discussed at every veterans' meeting we have had in the past five or six years. As the minister pointed out, the ceiling on income for single veterans is $840; the ceiling on income for the married veteran is $1,440. The minister and other members, particularly the members of the veterans' committee, will recall that the recommendation which was made in 1952, I think it was, and repeated again in 1955, was that the ceiling should be $1,200 for single veterans and $2,000 for married veterans.

This was recommended to the committee after very serious study by Legion committees all across Canada. It was a great disappointment to veterans all across Canada when the government did not see fit at that time to raise the ceiling. It has worked a great hardship on many individuals who are recipients of war veterans' allowances.

As far as the employable veteran is concerned, it was argued that the ceilings were high enough because under the present ruling regarding casual earnings the veteran who is employable can earn an extra $600 a year; also, under section 4 of the act a veteran during months of employment could earn whatever was possible for him to obtain. So far as the employable veteran was concerned the ceiling did not mean very much. The very fact that the department increased the allowable casual earnings, and the very fact that we have section 4 of the act, were a recognition that more money was necessary as far as the unemployable veteran was concerned. The unemployable veteran, the man who has nothing but his war veterans' allowance or perhaps a small pension, is placed in a very serious position.

I want to emphasize this afternoon that one of the first things to which the Department of Veterans Affairs should give attention is this matter of increasing the ceiling on the war veterans' allowance. For instance, take the veteran who has reached the age of 70 years. If he has no other income but his war veterans' allowance, owing to the ceiling he can obtain only part of his war veterans' allowance because he is also a recipient of the old age pension. If he is single he can receive a total of only $820 a year. Then there is the disability pensioner. These things are not new. I know hon. members have heard them discussed in the veterans' committee. We brought in amendments and pressed for these considerations in 1952 and 1955.

The disability pensioner with a small pension of $25 or $30 a month is also prejudiced against. If he is a single man he cannot receive more than $840 a year; if he is married he cannot receive more than $1,200 a year. Take a man who has worked hard during his life and at the time of retirement has a small superannuation allowance which he has earned. If he receives $25 or $30 a month as superannuation allowance he is prejudiced under the present ceiling of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. Of course we have been told that there is an assistance fund. Well, the assistance fund amounts to $10 a month and is given only to those who have absolutely nothing except their war veterans' allowance. If they are in receipt of $60 a month they may obtain another $10, bringing the amount up to $70 a month. If one is to judge from the amount of money which has been paid out by the department, very few people are receiving any substantial amount from the assistance fund.

As far as the employable veteran is concerned, he is not going to be employable for very many more years. He is employable today because his health is good. These men of the first world war are old men today. The average age of the war veterans of the first war is in the vicinity of 66 or 67 years. In a few years these men who are today earning extra money will not be able to earn that money. The numbers of unemployable veterans are increasing every day of every month. I do hope this matter will receive very careful consideration at the next session of parliament.

Something else which was brought up at the Legion convention at Vancouver which hon. members have been mentioning for many years was this question of granting the war veterans' allowance to men of the first war who had service only in England. I have always felt that these men were entitled to consideration. I think that entitlement is emphasized today more than at any other time. These are old men. Many of them served in England because they had no choice; perhaps they were good at training men in the reserve areas. Perhaps they were men who either worked at headquarters in London or at some particular job which did not permit them to go to France. Spending four years of army life away from home was not easy on them. While the original idea of the war veterans' allowance was to give it to men who had served in the front lines in the trenches—and that is the reason these men have been denied it—that idea has been altogether changed as far as the war veterans allowance is concerned.

I would like to point this out as well. The mere fact that a veteran set foot in France qualifies him for consideration for the war veterans' allowance. Perhaps he arrived there in 1918 in the very last month of the war and perhaps he did not get within miles of the trenches; but nevertheless that man is entitled to consideration for war veterans' allowance. But the man who spent four hard years in England frequently working under very trying conditions is not entitled to consideration.

To emphasize again how the original idea changed regarding service in the trenches, I would point out that men can receive the war veterans' allowance today if they have had dual service. That means they may have simply arrived in England during the latter days of the war and never gone to France and served in Canada here during the second world war. Such a man is entitled to war veterans' allowance but, as I say, the man who had four years of hard service in England does not receive any consideration.

When this matter was up before, the question of the time of arrival in England was mentioned in the committee. We know there were thousands of men who arrived in England for training just about the time the war ended. I think perhaps an amendment might very well take into consideration the fact that the man who had gone over in 1914, 1915 or 1916 and who had long service there should be entitled to consideration, but not the man who arrived in England just a short time before the end of hostilities.

The matter of the cost was mentioned in the 1955 committee. At that time we were told that it would cost an estimated $9 million. That estimate seems very high to me. The minister told us today there are 51,000 recipients of war veterans' allowance. That figure includes men of the first war, men of the second war, men of the South African war, men of the northwest rebellion and all the widows and other dependents. I suppose the men who served would total approximately 30,000 all told. Out of that 30,000 probably 25,000 are veterans of the first war. I think the 11,000 who were mentioned as those who would be entitled as recipients of the allowance for service in England if an amendent were made is a figure that is out of all proportion. I think it is an exaggeration and should be carefully reviewed once more. As I said before, many of them are men who arrived in England just as the war was ending. This is a matter which I feel should and must be considered. These men feel a great injustice is being done to them, and I share that view.

At every veterans' committee we have had during the past ten years we have had a group of very nice old ladies visit the committee, and they have always presented an interesting brief. I refer to the widows of our allied veterans, the non-pensioned veterans' widows. A veteran who did not serve with the Canadian forces but who served with one of our allied forces and who lived for 20 years in Canada was qualified in the same way as our own veterans to receive the war veterans' allowance, but he had to reside 20 years in Canada. If he qualified, his widow would automatically receive the war veterans' allowance at his death.

Many of these allied veterans lived in Canada for almost the required 20 years—18 or 19 years, and sometimes within a few months of the 20 years—and then died and their widows received nothing. These ladies who visit us, as I said, have made application time after time that they be considered for pensions if they themselves—as widows of allied veterans who had every qualification except 20 years' residence—have resided in Canada for 20 years. I think that is a reasonable request. I am sure this house will be surprised to learn that the total estimated cost presented to us in this regard is between $300,000 and $400,000; there are about 700 of them, according to the evidence we have had.

Here again is something that should be taken into consideration when the War Veterans' Allowance Act is amended, in justice to these women. As the evidence before our committee last year revealed they are dying off very quickly, and there would not be any great burden on this country even if their number were increasing, in view of the small amount of money required to take care of them.

I believe there should be a review of the Pension Act; it should be brought up to date. I hope at the next sitting of this house a veterans' committee will be set up which can review our Pension Act to see if the pensions we are paying are at all in line with the cost of living as it has changed from year to year.

When the minister was speaking he mentioned the cost of dependent parents. I am pleased that this matter is receiving consideration, because I have always felt it was a great injustice that we did not give consideration to pensions for dependent parents at the time we increased the pensions for widows from $75 to $100. If a dependent parent lives with a widow who is receiving the $100 a month and if that widow has children the parent can receive only $40 a month. If the widow marries and the dependent parent has to seek a home somewhere else, she still receives only $40 a month. This has created a hardship for many dependent parents, and I am sure if it were properly adjusted it would not cost this country very much.

The minister has referred to hospital treatment. When the Legion met in Vancouver there were present veterans from the United States. At the present time a pensioner living in Canada receives hospitalization which is more or less satisfactory, but if a Canadian soldier living in the United States requires hospitalization he receives it for his disability alone. As the minister has said, these men are getting older all the time and the disabilities which they suffer bring on other disabilities. They are men of 65, 67 and 70 years of age.

The representatives of Canadian veterans living in the United States asked for a new reciprocal deal for the Canadian veteran living in the United States and also in Great Britain or other countries. They asked that when hospitalization was required it be paid for by the Canadian government, and that a reciprocal arrangement be made whereby the United States veteran living in Canada would receive hospitalization here when required.

This comes under section 13 of the treatment regulations. In the information sent out by the department entitled "Should Illness Strike" there is this sentence:

> This treatment is available to veterans in Canada only.

The words "in Canada only" are emphasized. There are some 35,000 Canadian veterans living in the United States, a small proportion of whom are pensioners. The spokesman for this group at Vancouver was Mr. Wright, who said:

> The Canadian ex-serviceman below the border is entitled under the present act only to his disability allowance.

He was referring to hospitalization for disability only.

> He forgoes everything else. If he can't afford to travel back to Canada when he is sick, then he must pay the shot where he is.

This is something we could very well take under consideration. While these men are living in the United States, they served in the Canadian army just the same as those who are living in Canada, and received their wounds in the same battles.

There is another matter with which I do not intend to deal at any length at this time, as it can be discussed when the items are before us. I refer to the need of homes for older veterans, a matter which I have brought up before. This is an increasing problem, and I note that the department realizes this because on page 15 of the departmental report the following appears:

> General welfare needs of older veterans are increasing in importance and volume, and a sustained effort is required in helping them with their problems. More world war I veterans are becoming retired or able to do only light employment, entailing increasing calls on the department's statutory provisions for assisted maintenance, and co-ordinated search by the staff for suitable work.

The whole point is that the day is fast coming when these men will no longer be able to look after themselves, and I am referring now not only to veterans but to all older people. This is becoming a serious problem in this country and homes for older people should be established all across the country. Not long ago I read an article in the Saturday Evening Post dealing with nursing homes in the United States to which older people were farmed out and left to await death. In countries like Great Britain, Sweden and many others, provision is being made for older people. With the provinces, the municipalities, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Veterans Affairs working in conjunction something along this general line should be done for our veterans and our older people.

On April 27 I asked the minister a question regarding the protective staff of the house, and he promised that he would give a reply later on. I asked whether military service applied in connection with seniority.

The Deputy Chairman: It is five o'clock and the house will revert to the consideration of private and public bills. Perhaps I should point out to the hon. member that he has exceeded his time, but with the unanimous consent of the committee he would be permitted to complete his statement when the committee resumes.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I have been given to understand that it is not intended to proceed with any public bills, although it is the right of any hon. member to have any particular bill called if he so desires. All items under this heading can stand by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Then the house will revert to the consideration of the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

498. Departmental administration, $2,215,472.

The Deputy Chairman: Do I take it that the hon. member for Royal has the unanimous consent of the committee to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Brooks: I wish to thank the committee for its courtesy. I do not intend to take much more time, because there will be plenty of opportunity to discuss these matters when the items come up. At five o'clock I was calling the minister's attention to the question I asked on April 27. I do not think I need to extend my remarks on that. When he replies to some of the other questions I hope he will give that further consideration.

Mr. Lapointe: I think I did reply to that question the following day.

Mr. Brooks: Perhaps I was away. I will check on it. I was pleased to hear the minister pay his tribute to the Canadian veterans' organizations. We have always felt in our committees and in the house that the organizations he mentioned, the Canadian Legion, the national council of veterans and others, have given great service to war veterans all across this country. As a matter of fact I was greatly interested in an editorial in a recent issue of The Legionary. The editorial is headed, "Legion Principles", and I should like to read one part with which I agree 100 per cent.

> They have by their ceaseless efforts sought to secure just recognition of the hard-won rights of their disabled comrades, of the widows and dependents of those who made the supreme sacrifice. These will always be their first responsibility. They have sought justice for those who have become prematurely aged by the exposures and privations of war. They will continue their efforts on behalf of these gallant men who, having saved their countrymen from oppression and slavery, only ask for a modest allowance sufficient to maintain themselves as self-respecting citizens.

I think that sizes up the situation as far as the efforts of the different veterans' organizations are concerned. I could make a comparison, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps it is not out of place to do so. I remember that after the first great war there were thousands of veterans in the United States who marched on Washington and demanded a $10,000 bonus. Recently we have seen them again asking for enormous amounts of money. I should like to refer to an editorial in the Christian Science Monitor of June 12, 1956.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite).]

It mentions the bill the veterans are trying to get through congress and has this to say:

> This bill would grant within two months of enactment a monthly pension of $105 to any veteran of the two world wars or of Korea who has reached the age of 65 and whose income, if married, is less than $2,700 or, if single, less than $1,400. The criterion is reaching 65, not wounds, sickness, or accident suffered during military service.

The editorial goes on to say that if the bill should pass it would mean a cost in excess of $400 billion to the American people in the next 44 years. I simply mention this to contrast the difference so far as the Canadian veteran is concerned. I am not saying this in disparagement of the United States veterans, but we all know that Canadian veterans of the first world war served for four years in France while many United States veterans did not serve in France for more than a few months. Our Canadian veterans, under the leadership of the different veterans' organizations, have never at any time been unreasonable in their requests to the country or the government. Neither the Canadian Legion nor the other organization has ever made excessive demands upon the people of Canada. I believe the demands to which I have referred this afternoon are very modest. I believe they are demands which could and should be given consideration by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I was pleased to hear the minister mention some of his officials, particularly Dr. Warner. We know what splendid service he gave. I should also like to refer to Brigadier Topp, formerly of the Canadian pension commission but now retired from that position. I am sure all veterans valued the great service Brigadier Topp gave to veterans before his retirement. I am not going to impose upon the committee any longer. I have been granted extra time, but I will have time to discuss many other matters later. I wish to thank the committee for their courtesy.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I want to join with the minister in his reference to the loss the department suffered in the passing of Dr. Warner. I was one member of the house who was privileged to do considerable work with him from time to time and to go to him to find the solution to certain problems. I join with the minister in his expression of the loss that has been suffered. Anyone who took an active part in trying to iron out problems with reference to treatment particularly found a very active friend in Dr. Warner, and I think the veterans' hospitals across Canada, which compare with any hosiptals in the country, will stand as a monument to his memory. I trust that the man who has taken his place will be able to fill his shoes. He has been set a pretty hard task.

I listened with interest to the minister's report, and I want to compliment the department for the things they did without any urging or any pressure. It indicates to me at least that whether or not we are pushing the department, there seems to be a constant review within the department and the pension commission so far as pensions and the welfare of veterans generally are concerned. The fact that without any solicitation, as far as I know, the 40 per cent to 45 per cent cases were re-examined and adjusted to 50 per cent by the commission is to me a thoughtful and generous gesture on their part, because not only does it give the veteran the additional income but it also protects his wife and family in the event that he passes on.

I want the minister to know that as one member who is interested in the commission I appreciate that gesture very much. I believe that the fact that there was a re-examination of 3,000 cases in certain categories and that they were stepped up to the 50 per cent mark represents a pretty fair assessment on the part of the commission, and I think they should be complimented for it. As an opposition member I believe in shoving them when I have to, but also in giving credit where credit is due.

The minister mentioned another item for which I think we should express our appreciation. He referred to the fact that 3,200 adopted children have been brought under the act for pension purposes. That not only serves the purpose of giving the children some security, but also serves the purpose of encouraging veterans who are pensioners and in a position to adopt children to do so and give these children homes. I know many institutions across this country which have the responsibility of caring for unfortunate children will appreciate this gesture on the part of the minister. I think that is a problem that was crying for a solution for some considerable time. I am glad to see that—again without very much urging or pushing—the department or commission saw fit to make that adjustment.

Another matter under the minister's department, according to his report, that I thought was encouraging was the educational assistance made available just a couple of years ago to veterans' children in certain categories. The fact that 609 children were able to take advantage of that legislation shows that it was needed. As time goes on I think more and more use will be made of it. I just wanted to say that in appreciation of what the commission and the department have done during the time since the last veterans' affairs committee met.

On this matter of the minister occupying the dual position of Minister of Veterans Affairs and Postmaster General, may I say this. I received one letter on the question. Of course it represented a command within my own area. My answer to that letter was that I did not think the fact that the minister was obliged to make an announcement in the house occasionally on behalf of the Post Office Department—one that was handed to him by the deputy postmaster general, who runs the department anyway—had detracted very much from the minister's performance of his duty as Minister of Veterans Affairs. I do not think it involved a great deal of work because, as I have observed it during the time I have been here, that is about the situation. But I do not think that the minister should continue to be obliged to accept that responsibility. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration does a very good job in that field, and he had the portfolio for some time. In order to remove any thought on the part of the veterans that the minister is occupied fully by the Post Office Department, I suggest that the department should be handed over to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Thank you very much.

Mr. Gillis: The reason I say that is this. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the deputy postmaster general are old friends. They occupied the same office for a long time. They both live in Ottawa. I am sure you get along with him much better than does the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I just want to say that I never considered that matter too seriously, because I fully realize just how much work there is involved in making these announcements. As to the people who have complained, that is all I have heard. Of course if I thought the dual position in fact detracted in any way from the minister's handling of his own department, I would be one of the first to complain.

There are a few odds and ends which I think still require cleaning up. One is the matter of casual earnings. I believe the department should give serious consideration to lifting that ceiling. I believe that the demand of the Legion for $2,000 for the married recipient of war veterans' allowance and $1,400 for the single person is reasonable. We have the fact that the basic amount is set at $108 plus $12 in certain cases bringing the allowance up to $120. Lifting the ceiling on permissible earnings does not mean that it is going to cost any more. It is not going to cost the government any more. However, it will provide an incentive for the recipient of the allowance to go out and try to earn something.

I think that particular point should be given serious consideration by the minister's department.

The second sore spot, in my opinion—and it is becoming more apparent as time goes on—is the discrimination that exists in the war veterans' allowance as between the man in the second war and the man in the first war. A veteran of the second war, because England was declared a theatre of war in certain circumstances, can qualify for veterans' allowance. The veteran of the first war cannot do so. As has been pointed out time and time again, I think you are safe in saying that at least 90 per cent of the men of the first war who stayed in England did so because they were ordered to stay there. They were cooks, technicians and people who went into the pay and records offices. They were instructors and that kind of thing. They were under orders to stay there. I know many of them who wanted to go over to the front and who broke their hearts to leave their units.

These people did not suffer the hardships of the trenches, and they were not wounded. People of that calibre came back, and they were people who had either a profession or a trade; they had training of some kind. They were people who could come back and find a job in this country, with a reasonable degree of health, and they have been employed. Now they are getting along to the age of 65 and maybe to 70 but they are not old enough for that $40 a month and they still cannot qualify for war veterans' allowance.

I think it is time something was done for them. As the hon. member for Royal said, even if you took them on now, you are not going to have them very long. Many of them are getting around to the point where they are not going to be here much longer. The situation is a piece of discrimination. I know I am getting a good deal of correspondence on the matter now, and it is only within the last few years that I began to get it. It arises because of the fact that they have been moved off jobs because they have reached the retiring age, many of them in industries and what have you that do not have any pension schemes, and they just go out with nothing. I receive some rather pathetic letters from them.

Looking at that age group again and the question of establishing homes for them, may I say this. I do not know what the situation is in the rest of the country, but I know that in Halifax, at Camp Hill hospital, there is an annex that is designed for that purpose. I have looked it over. I know many of the people there. The Red Cross maintains an institution close by where meals and recreational facilities are available at very low cost in comparison with what you must pay in the city. During my last visit there I found the men to be quite happy and contented. They have at their disposal a nurse who stays there with them. There is a doctor who comes in there and takes care of them. Some of them are placed two in a room. Others have a room to themselves. I did not hear any complaints.

That is the situation around Camp Hill in Nova Scotia. I do not know what happens in the rest of the country. I think the veterans will have to stay together. They want to be together. You cannot farm them out into the regular old people's homes. They have something in common. They want to reminisce about their experiences. When there is a group of them together they are quite happy and they can keep occupied. They do a great deal of work there making handbags and bracelets. They can pick up the odd bit of change in that way. Of course that is the situation at that one point, but I assume it is just about the same across the country. I trust the minister will give serious consideration to changing the act to include veterans of the first war for war veterans' allowance purposes.

Another pet complaint that I have had for some time is with respect to the imperial veterans' widows. As to the imperial veteran who had 20 years' residence in this country and passed away, his widow can qualify for war veterans' allowance. Even with respect to a veteran of the Italian army in the first war living in this country who passes away after 20 years' residence, his wife can qualify for war veterans' allowance. But the imperial veterans' widow who finds herself in the position that her husband passed away perhaps six months or a year before he completed the 20 years' residence qualification finds she cannot qualify for the pension.

There are not very many who are affected by this. I know there are two women living close together, both of whom came to this country at about the same time, and one widow gets the pension while the other does not. I think that distinction should be removed. The fact that a man lived in Canada, worked in Canada for perhaps 18 or 19 years, paid taxes in Canada, established a home in Canada and died in Canada surely should be sufficient qualification. He was not out of the country.

I think when that clause was inserted in the first place it was designed to be used in the case of people who came here for four or five years and then went back for three or four years. However, when the residence has been continuous until the time of the man's death, I think the widow should qualify. It is a very sore point in my part of the country. I know it is in my riding, because we had a lot of imperial veterans who came to that part of the country after the first war.

Another matter I hope the minister has in mind, because it involves national defence and veterans affairs, is the matter of unemployment insurance for men in the service. During the last committee meeting the Legion recommended that we should give consideration to bringing service personnel under the Unemployment Insurance Act on a contributory basis, just like any other employee in industry.

Mr. Lapointe: That is national defence.

Mr. Gillis: That is right, but it has to be handled by both departments. I have talked to the Minister of National Defence about it twice. His department was going to conduct a survey to ascertain if the men in the service wanted to come under unemployment insurance. I do not think that is the proper approach. If you went out and conducted a survey in any industry as to whether the employees wanted to contribute something, they would say no.

I think it is up to the Department of National Defence, with some urging from the Department of Veterans Affairs, to bring this about for a lot of people who enter the service and who do not know where their best interests lie. They sign up for three years or five years, perhaps intending to stay and make a career of it. Some men going into the service today leave jobs, and there is no civil reinstatement act applicable when they come out. They are unemployed.

Some of them still think the old system prevails, just as it did for the veterans of world war II and Korea. Those fellows got unemployment insurance and these fellows think they should get it, too. I know, because I meet quite a few of them. I tell them if they went into the service after a certain date they are not covered.

The service is going to be a career. It is employment for some of these people and I think they should be protected against unemployment when they come out. In the defence debate I pointed out to the minister that the wastage from the services during the one year 1955 equalled the number that was taken in. What they call wastage are those people who are weeded out, people who cannot qualify. They cannot meet the standards but they are kept in perhaps two, three or four months or a year and then weeded out. The number going out in 1955 equalled the number coming in, and that is quite a large group of men. Most of these fellows would not find employment for some time, and they are not protected by unemployment insurance. I think the approach your department should make to national defence is that if you are going to canvass the services and ask the men if they want to contribute something, the answer will be no.

If this government, after due consideration and a proper analysis of the problem based on statistics, determined that it was in their best interests to protect them, then laws would be passed. There will not be much fault found with them. I know I would not have very much trouble convincing a group of boys in the services today, who are not thinking very much about anything but having a good time—I did the same thing at their age—that it would be in their best interests to have this. It would only cost a few cents a day, so knock off a few glasses of beer. I know national defence is thinking about it, and I trust the minister will also lend his weight to it.

There is something I said at one committee meeting and I have talked about it several times since, but I want to mention it now. Are the service bureaux across Canada adequately staffed? Within the last year or so we were unfortunate enough to lose the chief pensions advocate at Halifax. He dropped dead as the result of a heart attack. A Mr. C. P. Coleman took his place, and I believe he is a very good man and doing a very good job. He has not been there long. I have had considerable correspondence with him. I have met him, and I think he is an excellent person. I believe the man he replaced went out very quickly because of the stress and strain, the long hours of meticulous work examining these files, assessing evidence, preparing new files, checking forms and trying to get doctors' reports. It entails burning a lot of midnight oil.

They have staffs to help them a little bit, but I do not consider they are adequate. I believe men like Coleman at Halifax, who handles all the Nova Scotia problems, should at least have another top flight man with him. I believe there is plenty of work for two men. We have all seen cases where the commission is blamed for delays, but I believe in fact the point of delay has been in the service bureau office because it was not able to handle the volume of work. I think the minister's department should take a square look at the staffs in the bureau offices to ascertain if they have all the personnel they need.

I have another problem here which is an old, outstanding one. It is one about which perhaps very few people have heard. When the pensions investigators were set up after the first war, they were classified as such and paid a certain salary. When the department was streamlined they established welfare offices and welfare officers. The old pensions investigator was reclassified and designed as a pensions visitor. There are only 15 of them left in Canada and they are all getting along toward retirement age. Last year their salary was brought up to that of a grade 4 stenographer, and then it was increased by $300. This still leaves them receiving $300 per year less than their co-workers who are classified as welfare officers.

What is bothering these people is that for many years they did the welfare officers' work the hard way. They worked out of central offices and covered the province by dog team, horse and buggy or motor car where they could. They went from house to house visiting these claimants. Today the welfare offices are on a district basis. The field men do not go out to any great extent. These old pensions investigators would be on the road for months at a time without getting home. The welfare officer living in the district is home at least every night.

I think they are completely justified in asking to be reclassified into the same category as the welfare officer. That differential of $800 in pay should be made up, because it would mean much to them in their superannuation when they reach the age of retirement. Only 15 people are involved in the whole of Canada. To relieve the anxiety that exists in the minds of those 15 people, and the uncertainty of their future with respect to superannuation, the department should give some consideration to ironing out the problem.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, we in this group would join the minister and others in expressing regret at the loss of Dr. Warner. I am satisfied that if the minister has been able to find a suitable successor in Dr. Crawford he is indeed fortunate because specialists are scarce and particularly hard to find. He is to be complimented on his choice.

So far as the group who went to the centennial celebration of the establishment of the Victoria Cross is concerned, we would rejoice in the thought that those who received the reward posthumously were represented by relatives or friends of their families.

I would agree that this department is particularly difficult to administer because it does have a humanitarian aspect and that, of course, calls for a recognition of the sentimental as well as a realistic view of the obligation we have to the men and women who are being served by the administration. I am sure we all realize it is difficult at times to decide whether a case is one of merit or whether it should be denied. It makes me often wonder whether one can legislate for humanitarianism.

It is therefore with a great deal of joy that I am able to tell the minister that I am very happy over the co-operation I have had from the department, from the minister, his officials, his parliamentary assistant and others. I think this department is one that has captured the spirit of the government and of the administration, which in this case happens to be to assist rather than to resist those for whom they are trying to work. I feel the minister is to be congratulated on the job he is doing. If he can handle both portfolios of which he is now in charge as well as he has been handling the one department of which he has been in charge in the past, I am satisfied that no one in this country should suffer because of his administering those two departments.

My reason for making these remarks, Mr. Chairman, is an incident that took place during the recess. During that time it was my task to draw to the minister's attention, or to the attention of his officials and his deputy, Mr. Garneau, the case of Mr. Frederick J. Hards, who was suffering from sclerosis. He, his wife and three children had to live entirely on a family allowance cheque which amounted to something like $15 a month. He is a war veteran of the second world war. This young man and his family were suffering, and it was drawn to my attention. The legion branch in New Westminster and other interested bodies immediately got in touch with the minister's office, and within a matter of a week I was pleased to receive a reply indicating that consideration was being given. As Mr. Garneau said in his letter of September 28, 1955:

> I am very pleased to state that the board has now come to the conclusion that, in accordance with the act, veterans of world war II who had actually left the shores of Canada before the 8th day of May 1945, and were on their way to an actual theatre of war, may be deemed to have been on service in a theatre of actual war outside the western hemisphere.
>
> I have therefore advised the Vancouver district authority accordingly and I have no doubt that the case will now be dealt with solely on grounds of entitlement as otherwise provided for in the legislation.

The fact that it was dealt with on entitlement was, of course, an important factor and brought to my mind the thought that it is difficult to legislate for humanitarianism. I am sure the department will be pleased to know that the community of Langley in which this young man lived, as well as others who were interested in the case, including myself, are pleased with the work that was done and with the objective way in which this case was treated.

However, as in all departments, all cannot be said to be well so far as every phase is concerned. With respect to this department, I view with some regret the loss of several trained appraisers we had in the New Westminster office of the Veterans' Land Act. I cannot help but think it is most difficult to replace some of these men from time to time. I wonder whether they have been replaced, or whether it has been decided that we do not require replacements in the area.

I know there is a very heavy drain on trained personnel by private industry, which pays higher rates and also has other inducements such as the possibility of progression that is not experienced in governmental jobs, and which cannot be offered to civil servants from time to time. That applies particularly to the appraisers in this branch. Therefore I viewed with some concern the possibility that we might have lost some very competent men who were needed in the department.

The question of the plight of the wives of imperial war veterans whose husbands died before completing the 20-year period which would make them eligible for war veterans' allowances under the act was raised and has been raised for many years. In The Legionary magazine of April, 1956, I find on page 35 an article entitled, "A Happy Marriage". I am sure every hon. member here will be pleased to know that the marriage between the imperial veterans and the Canadian Legion has been consummated, for we feel satisfied that in unity lies strength. Possibly the strength of this new union will result in obtaining that which these widows have been trying to get for so many years. I well remember last year and previous occasions when they brought their brief before the committee and presented it in their capable way, and drew to our attention how necessary it was to try to do something for them. This article says in part:

> We are, however, disappointed that the dominion government has not yet acted on the many representations requesting entitlement to the benefits of the War Veterans' Allowance Act for those widows of imperial and allied veterans whose service-husbands died before having established the 20-year qualifying residence period.

The article goes on:

> We have evidence that the deceased commonwealth veterans for whose widows we now seek help, died in many cases only months and, in some cases, actually only weeks before having lived in Canada for the 20-year qualifying residence period.

Surely we should be in a position to give greater recognition to the few who are left, who have lived here for so many years. Surely we can prove that we in Canada are not as completely hard-hearted as this article would make us out to be. According to the best figures we can obtain there are only a matter of some 500 to 750 who remain who might be eligible for an allowance. I am sure that many of them are in receipt of the old age pension at this time. Certainly it would not add too materially to the cost if we were to give these widows an allowance under the act as it might be revised. It is not a credit to our country to remain so unrealistic on this point and to be so dogmatic as to insist that because we have not given it up to this time we therefore should not give it in the future. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that if a resolution were brought into this house by the government and a free vote were taken on the question, it would probably receive the greatest support of any piece of legislation that has come before the house to date.

From time to time in committee we have discussed the question and have heard from the ladies who brought the request to our attention. Their request has the support of other Legion groups. On no occasion was there any indication that any party or individual party member would be opposed to granting the assistance asked for by these ladies. It is my sincere hope that this "happy marriage," as it is referred to in this article, will mean this very thing; that it will present the matter in such a light to the government that it will no longer deny these widows that which I believe they have a right to expect.

It was not so very long ago—in fact on November 10, 1950—that the Canadian Legion, dominion command, in presenting its brief to the Prime Minister made such a recommendation in these terms:

> That widows of allied ex-service men be granted war veterans' allowance in cases where the husband died before completing 20 years' residence in Canada provided—(a) that the effective date of her eligibility be 20 years after the husband's arrival to take up permanent residence in Canada, (b) that the widow herself has completed 20 years' residence in Canada, and (c) that the husband and wife were both otherwise eligible.

The brief at that time pointed out that in many cases the husband may have lived in Canada for a lengthy period of time, paid Canadian taxes and seen his sons and daughters serve in the armed forces of this country. What the brief possibly did not point out was that although the husband may have predeceased the wife he did show good intentions in wanting to stay here, in which case, of course, he would continue to be a taxpayer. Because of the fact that many receive the old age pension today, because there are probably only between 500 and 750 who would be eligible, and because I am satisfied there would be no opposition in this house at least, to such a move if it were proposed by the government, I would sincerely urge the minister and the government to consider these factors and grant these people the assistance they have a right to expect.

There is one other matter with which I should like to deal. These matters appear to be minor, and if a committee on veterans' affairs had been set up we probably could have discussed them there more effectively. This is a matter, however, relating to the administration of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. While my time is somewhat limited and I do not wish to spend too much of it on this question, I did note that the minister in making his statement indicated that he had asked for a review of the administration and the application in respect to this assistance fund. He went on to say it would be applicable to those who cannot supplement their allowance through casual earnings.

I was pleased to hear him say that, because these are the people who are most in need of assistance. They have no means of obtaining casual earnings, and I was therefore particularly delighted to hear the minister make that statement. The fact is it has been suggested that probably the fund should be made available automatically to those people if the officials find they are incapable of obtaining casual earning.

Another problem which exists in my own province, because we have a health plan there, is the question of working out some plan with the government of British Columbia to make the terms of the hospital insurance act applicable to those who receive war veterans' allowance, on the same basis as if they were old age pensioners. At the present time the hospital insurance act does not give assistance to those who are in receipt of war veterans' allowance, and it therefore creates a hardship on those people when they go into our provincial hospitals. I am satisfied that if the minister or his officials were to see the department of health in my province in all likelihood they could arrive at some mutually satisfactory and amicable solution.

Another problem which has arisen and caused me some concern is the question of the comfort allowance. I have a case in mind in which a patient was in hospital on two separate occasions, the dates of which are important. The two occasions amounted to a full period of about seven weeks. The dates were from March 29 to April 16, and later from April 30 to May 29. As I understand it, under clause-12 treatment it is customary for a patient to be eligible for comfort allowance of $7 per month providing he is in hospital on or about the 27th of the month. He must be there, of course, to receive the cheque.

[Mr. Hahn.]

You will note that the first date was March 29, which was shortly after the 27th of the month. He left the hospital on April 16, before the end of the following month. This patient was not in hospital at a time which enabled him to appear on the list of those eligible for the comfort allowance cheque. On April 30, the date of his next entry into hospital, he was again not eligible because he came in too late; and while he was there on May 29 to be registered, he failed to collect because he was not there on the first of the month when the paymaster came around and he therefore received nothing. As I understand it, on an earlier occasion before the changes were made in the regulations the cheque would have been mailed out to him. Apparently that procedure is not being followed now and this patient was out of luck on both occasions because he happened to enter or depart from the hospital at an unfortuitous time.

The minister indicated, I believe, that the 1956 report is now being edited. There is one item in the report dated March 31, 1955, which interested me as it compared with the 1954 report. On page 11 of the 1955 report and on page 14 of the 1954 report are set out the number of veterans attending universities and vocational schools. We find that in 1954 there were 574 attending universities, which number had dropped to 377 in 1955. The 1956 report is not available as yet, but the indication is that the number attending universities is declining. The number attending vocational schools increased from 111 in 1954 to 346 in 1955. The over-all figures are 686 for 1954 and 713 for 1955.

There seems to be a definite trend toward the vocational schools, and I am wondering why the emphasis is that way, especially in view of the fact that we are so much in need of trained university graduates. Section 9 (1) (b) of the Veterans Rehabilitation Act states that a veteran must commence his course at university within one year and three months of his discharge.

The reason I raise this matter is that I have in mind the case of a young veteran who waited for a longer period before applying for assistance to go to university. Here again I must say that we have been told from time to time that we are in need of trained men, particularly those having vocational or university training. Such men are needed to aid us in our competition with communist countries. Yet this man has been refused the opportunity to attend university when he desires to do so, merely because application was not made within one year and three months after discharge.

I know this young man and I know he would be an asset to this country, even more so if he were fully trained rather than only partially trained as he is today. I would ask that the government review this section of the act. If it is felt that the act should not be changed, then I suggest that each case should be studied on its merits. With the initiative this young man has shown in past years, and with the ability I know he has, he could make a success of life. He simply wants to have that chance which is being denied him because the time limit has elapsed. I submit that these cases should be given special attention, and the act should provide for the consideration of each individual case.

I am satisfied that if that were done we would be in a position to continue to train many veterans in the future, and in so doing would soon be in a dominant position as far as education in this country is concerned.

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to appear to be holding up my colleague's estimates, but in view of what he said in his excellent statement this afternoon and what other hon. members have said I think I should carry out an assignment which was given to me by a number of my fellow travellers last week on the very memorable trip we made to England. I should like to acknowledge, as I am sure the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich would if he were here, what was done for us.

I might note in passing that the hon. member is carrying out a mission of great importance and interest to veterans generally, near the city of Mons of armistice fame. In August, 1914 the British Lancers reached a point to the northeast of Mons and then began the retreat. On November 11, 1918 the third Canadian division surrounded Mons and the 116th Canadian battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. George Pearkes, V.C., reached exactly the same area as that which had been occupied by the Lancers. The regimental association of the 116th has since made a plaque which the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is unveiling, with the co-operation of the Department of National Defence, on the 10th of this month. It will stand alongside a similar plaque of the 9th Lancers.

On the hon. member's behalf and on behalf of those whom the minister has mentioned I should like to express our appreciation to him and to his officials, both on this side and on the other side of the water. What was done was appreciated by the next of kin and all of us who had transportation arranged for us. There were other things done which were also greatly appreciated. Well before the time of departure officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs worked out detailed plans. An official accompanied the party over, and then on the other side arrangements were made which added greatly to the pleasure of everybody concerned.

I am sure the committee will be interested in knowing that those who were there as holders of the cross appreciated the fact that these arrangements had been made for the next of kin and relatives of those who had died. Everything was well arranged and the occasion was one of great importance and great significance. I should also say that the co-ordination between the Department of Veterans Affairs and the district administrator and his staff on the other side and the staff of the Department of National Defence on the other side was excellent. A bus was available at the hotel on every occasion, and either a representative of veterans affairs or a good staunch corporal of provost went through the hotel to make sure everyone got on the bus and got back safely on the return trip.

Last Sunday going down to Brookwood cemetery in the Bramshot area in the heavy rain such service was most noticeable and valuable. I should like to congratulate the minister and the department for the way their plans were carried out.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: Could we have the business for Monday?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): On Monday we will have a supply motion.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WARTIME HOUSING, MEDICINE HAT, ALTA.

Question No. 526—Mr. Wylie:

1. What was the total cost of construction of the 100 wartime houses known as project 3/48, Medicine Hat, Alberta?
2. What was the average cost per unit (a) type A & B; (b) type C?
3. What was the total amount of expenditure on the upkeep of this project for painting, repairs, etc., to March 31, 1956?
4. What is the total amount of rent collected from this project up to March 31, 1956?
5. What is the total amount of taxes paid the city of Medicine Hat to December 31, 1955?

Answer by: Mr. Bourget, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Public Works:

1. $668,614.08.

2. Types A and B, $6,305.11; type C, $6,849.44.

3. Expenditure for painting, repairs, etc., $17,995.00; expenditure to cover instalment payments for retirement of moneys borrowed to finance construction of the project, $175,-702.06; administration expenses, $22,350.00.

4. The gross potential revenue from this project from completion of construction to March 31, 1956 is $298,404.34.

5. Grants in lieu of taxes were paid to the city of Medicine Hat in respect of project 3/48 to December 31, 1955, in a total amount of $48,102.03.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Canadian hydrographic service—

216. Administration, operation and maintenance, including Canada's annual contribution of $4,200 to the international hydrographic bureau, $3,017,362.

Map compilation and reproduction—

220. Administration, operation and maintenance, $923,986.

221. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $38,400.

Geological surveys—

222. Administration, operation and maintenance, including the expenses of the national advisory committee on research in the geological sciences, an amount of $1,875 for Canada's share of the cost of the committee on mineral resources and geology, London, England, and an amount of $40,000 for grants in aid of geological research in Canadian universities, $2,314,954.

223. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $169,000.

Mines branch—

224. Mines branch administration, $95,968.

Mineral resources investigations (including the former investigations of radioactive ores)—

225. Administration, operation and maintenance, including a grant of $12,500 to the Canadian institute of mining and metallurgy to assist in defraying the cost of the sixth empire mining and metallurgical congress to be held in Canada in 1957, $2,833,302.

226. Construction or acquisition of equipment, $226,085.

227. To provide for payments to McGill University in connection with the development of a coal-fired gas turbine, $50,000.

Geographical branch—

228. Geographical branch—administration, operation and maintenance, including a grant of $250 to the Canadian association of geographers, $283,386.

Dominion observatories—

Dominion observatory, Ottawa and field stations—

229. Administration, operation and maintenance, including membership fee of $500 to the international astronomical union and a grant of $3,500 to the royal astronomical society of Canada, $542,915.

230. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $122,738.

231. Dominion astrophysical observatory, Victoria, B.C., $148,597.

General—

232. To provide for purchases of air photography and the expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys, including purchases of equipment, $1,500,000.

Dominion coal board—

233. Administration and investigations of the dominion coal board, $116,660.

234. Payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council, $9,210,250.

Mines branch—

650. Mines branch administration—further amount required, $5,000.

651. To provide for payments to McGill University in connection with the development of a coal-fired gas turbine—further amount required, $50,000.

Dominion observatories—

Dominion observatory, Ottawa and field stations—

652. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment—further amount required, $20,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, July 9, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON RESIGNATION OF MR. SPEAKER

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since I returned from London on Saturday morning I have given careful consideration, with my colleagues, to the situation which arose in the house on Friday, June 29 and on Monday, July 2.

I have also, as I am sure every hon. member would have expected me to do, seen Mr. Speaker and discussed the situation with him.

I think all of us can understand the desire of the Speaker to be able to answer fully and freely the criticisms levelled against him as a result of the position in which he had been placed by members of two of the opposition parties who supported the motion which was moved on June 4, and which asked this house to say that it no longer had any confidence in its presiding officer.

It is not hard to understand the reactions of any man, regardless of the office he may occupy, who feels he has been unfairly charged and has not, himself, been able to reply to those charges.

I am sure most hon. members will sympathize with the desire of the Speaker to place himself, as soon as possible, on a basis of equality with other hon. members so he will have freedom to explain the conduct, which was vindicated by the very large majority which rejected the motion I have just referred to.

And that, I understand, is the position Mr. Speaker wished to achieve when he stated on Monday of last week that he was placing his resignation before the house to take effect at the pleasure of the house.

Of course, all hon. members are aware that such a statement or declaration of intention does not constitute the formal action required as the actual resignation of a Speaker.

Because of my absence in London, Mr. Speaker refrained from taking any such formal action so that I might have the opportunity to consider the situation, and for that I wish to thank him.

As Prime Minister I have the ultimate responsibility for the leadership of the house, and I do not intend to shirk that responsibility in any way.

I have had to ask myself whether the matter referred to by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and others on Friday, June 29, really has sufficient gravity to justify the resignation of a Speaker who recently received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the house.

I have no hesitation in saying I do not think so.

I share, and I am sure most hon. members share, the regret of the Speaker that any part of his personal letter was published. I cannot, however, share the view that because the Speaker had expressed in private the views he did express in that letter, he could no longer continue to be an impartial and competent Speaker. It does not seem to me that the publication by someone else of an extract from a private letter would justify me, or the majority in this house, in taking any formal action in consequence of what has taken place.

During the debate on the motion relating to his conduct and subsequently Mr. Speaker has discharged his duties in this house with dignity and impartiality.

My confidence in Mr. Speaker is unshaken, and I know of no other member better qualified than he is to preside over our deliberations; I believe that confidence is shared by an overwhelming majority of members, a majority by no means confined to the supporters of the government.

Now, as the one responsible for the leadership in this house, I have expressed that view to Mr. Speaker and I have found that he was willing to subordinate his personal feelings to his duty to parliament and the country, and to continue in the office in which he has served with great distinction. I am happy to be able to make that announcement to the house.

An hon. Member: The Liberals are yellow.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other motions?

[Later:]

ALLEGED FALSIFICATION OF FACTS BY MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a number of members of this house have been accused of falsifying facts for their own political ends, will the Prime Minister ascertain who those members are and in what respect they have falsified the facts?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not think that would be a very profitable undertaking for me, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that no hon. member would knowingly falsify the facts.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO EARLY DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be getting information on different points that came up during the Prime Minister's absence. May I ask him one question? Has he given any consideration to the question which was raised several times during his absence as to an early dissolution of this house?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of dissolution of the house is one that, whenever it is appropriate to do so, I shall have to discuss with His Excellency the Governor General before I make any public announcement about it.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

THE PRIME MINISTER—STATEMENT ON MEETING IN LONDON

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the statement issued in London on Friday on the meeting of prime ministers at the commonwealth conference. For the convenience of hon. members, I would suggest that, by leave of the house, it be printed as an appendix to the Hansard of today.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to have this document printed as an appendix to Hansard of today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

(For text of document referred to above see appendix, pages 5811-12.)

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement now on the matters discussed at the conference, which can be taken into account by hon. members who wish to discuss this subject upon the estimates of the Department of External Affairs which it is planned to discuss soon.

The statement of the conference—which, as always, represented a lot of work in achieving points of substance and forms of expression to which all could agree—indicates that the main subjects of discussion were in the field of international affairs. Problems of the commonwealth, as such, did not require very much attention. It is functioning as we expect it to function and adapting itself to changing conditions. It is primarily an association of nations having a common heritage of British parliamentary institutions, and many elements of common purpose in their approach to the problems of the day, despite the great differences in the geography, history and cultures of the various constituent nations.

The purpose for which we meet is the important and constructive one of exchanging information and opinions, in the hope that thereby the governments and parliaments of member countries can and will make wiser decisions. The conference does not seek to take any collective decisions or actions itself, but hopes to assist in bringing points of view closer together.

The commonwealth of today has not been the product of any political theory. It has developed from the practical response of sensible men to the desire for a continuing and close political relationship which adds to rather than detracts from the independence of its members. For most member countries, a common allegiance to the same crown is a link between us which we hold very dear. For the other, republican members, the Queen is none the less the head of the commonwealth. In discussion around the table, there is no distinction between members, and all prime ministers joined in frankly and fully setting their views in confidence before their colleagues, and in questioning one another.

I should like to lay special emphasis upon the value I find in having the prime ministers of the Asian members of the commonwealth at our conference table. The histories and cultures, the peoples and problems of these nations, are so different from our own that it is of great value in dealing with major international affairs to have the benefit of discussions with their leaders.

The development of Asian nationalism is one of the great historic movements of our time. Indeed, in some ways it is more comprehensive and significant than the rise of militant communism. The wise counsel of the outstanding commonwealth Asian leaders of this great movement is something I find most helpful in trying to understand the perplexities of this complicated world in which we must now accept our share of responsibilities.

The London communiqué indicates the main subjects we discussed. They include our relations with Soviet Russia, the problem of security and stability in Europe, the current situation in the Middle East, the developments in southeast Asia, our relations with China, the economic position of the countries in the sterling area and the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. In addition, there were many private talks on a variety of subjects, and those members of the commonwealth who are linked by special defence agreements, such as NATO, met to consider certain aspects of defence policy.

I cannot, of course, give a detailed account of the discussions which were held in confidence and on which we issued this agreed statement. I should like to take a minute or two, however, to say a little from my own point of view about several of the matters we discussed.

First, on relations with Soviet Russia, the communiqué makes clear that we all felt that the changes that have been taking place in the Soviet government, and its attitudes and policies, may have more than merely a feigned or superficial significance. Events will tell. This situation offers opportunities for improvement in our relations with Russia and perhaps opportunities for the settlement of outstanding difficulties between Russia and the western nations. All commonwealth governments plan to seek and use such opportunities and will welcome any improvement in relations with Russia which they may make possible. But the changes that have taken place are not such that we can have confidence that the danger of war has been removed. In view of this and of the tremendous Russian military power, and the evidence we have had in the past of the possibility of aggressive intentions, I believe we must continue to maintain an effective modern armed strength, primarily of course as a deterrent against attack. Such preparedness, however, need not prejudice an improvement in our relations and the development of a greater degree of mutual confidence which would be a more secure foundation for a lasting peace.

In the discussions on China we exchanged views, of course, on the recognition of the government on the mainland. While the views of most of us are already fairly well known, I found the discussions both informative and helpful. I recognize the force of the arguments about the importance to Asia of having its largest country fully participating in the councils of the world. To that view, of course, we must give great weight and we shall. But there are other considerations as well which must weigh in determining Canada's policy and course of action. I see no reason strong enough to justify changing our policy on this matter at this time.

Our discussions in regard to the Middle East naturally centred on the danger of conflict between the Arab states and Israel. On the whole I was somewhat reassured by what I heard. We all recognize that the situation there is dangerous, but the danger has become a little less acute as a result of Mr. Hammarskjold's mediation. I feel that every effort should be made now through the security council of the United Nations to secure the collaboration of the Soviet union in helping to find a peaceful settlement of this Palestine issue. I think they realize the danger there would be to them as well as to the rest of the world from war breaking out in that area.

Our discussions of economic affairs were in the nature of interim reports and analyses of the situation in the sterling area members of the commonwealth. They were naturally of very considerable interest to us, for the situation of all these countries, particularly of Britain, affects our trade. I gave a brief résumé of some aspects of our situation likely to be of interest to others. The United Kingdom government is persevering in its efforts to find solutions to its own economic problems that would permit an increasing freedom of trade between us and the continued elimination of discrimination against imports from the dollar area. We recognized and valued the progress made already in this direction and naturally we expressed the wish to see this progress continue. We were assured that the United Kingdom intended to persevere with this policy and I think the events and public statements in the United Kingdom in recent weeks make this determination quite evident. I am convinced that our policy should continue to be to seek the removal of the remaining restrictions on the imports of Canadian goods into the United Kingdom and elsewhere in the sterling area and to encourage the development of sound competitive export trade from the United Kingdom to Canada.

This trade remains under the detailed scrutiny of our continuing joint committee of senior officers which was established for that purpose and which met in London earlier in June.

Commonwealth Conference

There was no discussion at this conference about the time or place of our next meeting. I have been asked whether a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers might be held in Canada and to this I would reply that we should be glad and honoured to have a future meeting here but the time and place of any particular meeting must be determined primarily by the convenience of the busy men who are required to attend. London has proved to be a convenient site but this does not mean that the conference should not be held in other commonwealth capitals when that is the general desire.

I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to express again the gratitude of all the Canadians attending this conference for the hospitality and friendliness with which we were received by Her Majesty the Queen and by all those in the United Kingdom who joined in making the conference a success.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with this. Can the Prime Minister inform the house if in fact there was an invitation extended by Canada to the other prime ministers to attend a conference here in Ottawa along the line suggested before the Prime Minister's departure?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): No. After our conversations there it was not felt that this would be an appropriate time for having an economic conference in Canada with the other members of the commonwealth countries.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION ON SUBJECTS DISCUSSED AT LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to ask one or two questions arising out of the rather abbreviated statement the Prime Minister gave. Would he say whether or not consideration was given by the prime ministers of the commonwealth to the need for the revision of the Statute of Westminster, having regard to the changes that have taken place since that statute was enacted in 1931?

Second, would he say something regarding the degree to which the fears of the people of the commonwealth have been aroused over the fact that Ceylon, in establishing itself as a republic, may deny the use of her airport facilities to the commonwealth and United States air forces?

Third, would the Prime Minister say what the reaction was, if not of the commonwealth prime ministers, of himself, to the matter of the Middle East arising out of the request from the Israeli government for export permits for the shipment of some 24 Sabre aircraft, and when it is expected a decision will be made by the government.

Finally, would he say something regarding—

An hon. Member: The shorter catechism.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, my hon. friends may laugh, but the abbreviated nature of the report makes it necessary to ask these questions. The final thing is respecting the prospective settlement or terms of settlement being considered by Britain and Cyprus at the present time, and what are the possibilities if those terms are accepted of Turkey withdrawing from NATO? Those are a few of the matters that have received press attention recently and which the Prime Minister, in his report, did not have an opportunity of dealing with.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of possible amendment to the Statute of Westminster was not discussed. Second, the fears of the people of the commonwealth with respect to the denial of the use of Ceylon bases to the United Kingdom and to the United States was not discussed at the general conference, and I was not in attendance when they were discussed between the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Prime Minister of Ceylon; but we were informed that there was a genuine, sincere attempt to work out something which would allay such fears as may have been expressed previously about the situation there.

I will say I found that the new Prime Minister of Ceylon was desirous of maintaining good relations with the other members of the commonwealth and was anxious to consider their views in respect of all the problems in which the attitude of Ceylon might be of consequence. I was very pleased to have had the opportunity of meeting the new Prime Minister of Ceylon and in finding that he seemed to be sincerely desirous of maintaining the status of Ceylon in the commonwealth and of co-operating with the other members of the commonwealth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And accepting responsibilities within the commonwealth?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Well, I would not care to go beyond that. Our impression was that, to the extent to which it went, he and Sir Anthony Eden had had a very satisfactory conference about that troublesome question.

With respect to the supplying of arms to either of the parties to the dispute between the Arab nations and Israel, there were very frank views expressed by several of those attending the conference, and I must say that I was not able to get anything from the conference that would assist the government of Canada in making a favourable decision on the request for the supply of those Sabre jet aircraft to the government of Israel. It is a matter that is still under consideration. The situation there, as the hon. gentleman knows, is one that has to be regarded as very delicate, and there was nothing that I brought back from the conference that would be an argument for me to put before my colleagues in support of a favourable decision on the request for jet aircraft at this time.

With respect to the terms of the settlement about Cyprus, I do not think I should go beyond the terms that are set out in the communiqué. I think the United Kingdom is making every possible effort to find a solution that will be a real solution of a very thorny problem that arises in respect of Cyprus. I would not care to say anything that might make it more delicate or difficult for them to handle the situation, but we were convinced I think that they were doing everything that seemed to be possible in the circumstances to reach a settlement that would be a real settlement.

INQUIRY AS TO LATER DISCUSSION OF TRADE AND ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question in relation to a statement he made earlier this afternoon concerning the proposed calling of a commonwealth conference on trade and economic questions. Did he mean that the subject was not introduced at the conference by the Canadian delegation or that it was introduced and as a result of discussion it was not proposed by the Canadian delegation that the conference should be held later?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, it was not introduced by the Canadian delegation at the conference. Our conversations with other members of the delegations attending the conference were such that we did not think it was the appropriate time to introduce the subject at the conference.

Mr. Fleming: May I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that this subject was discussed in conversations with other prime ministers attending the conference?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): There were discussions about the situation, and I know that there are some prime ministers who wished to have alterations made in their bilateral agreements with the United Kingdom, and were intending to discuss with the United Kingdom authorities the kind of alterations that were made many years ago in our bilateral arrangements with the United Kingdom.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER DAM

Motion No. 89—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of Saskatchewan, since January 1, 1956, regarding construction of the South Saskatchewan river dam.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The government of Saskatchewan will be communicated with before the papers are produced.

Motion agreed to.

PETITE RIVIERE AU RENARD—FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

Motion No. 90—Mr. Dufresne:

For a copy of all payrolls and lists of materials used in connection with work done in (a) 1953; (b) 1955, at Petite Riviere au Renard, county of Gaspe, Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

WHARF AND HARBOUR EXPENDITURES, CHARLEVOIX AND SAGUENAY COUNTIES

Motion No. 91—Mr. Dufresne:

For a copy of all payrolls and lists of materials used in connection with the work done on wharves and harbours, since January 1, 1956, in the counties of Charlevoix and Saguenay.

Motion agreed to.

RUSSIA AND CHINA—PROHIBITED AND LICENSED EXPORTS

Motion No. 92—Mr. Fleming:

For a copy of (a) the list of strategic materials of which Canada prohibits export to Russia; (b) the list of materials which Canada permits to be exported to Russia only under licence; (c) the list of strategic materials of which Canada prohibits export to China; (d) the list of materials which Canada permits to be exported to China only under licence.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On Friday I undertook to table the public list of items under export control, which I do forthwith. In addition to this list, under our area control all commodities shipped to Soviet bloc countries require export permits. In order to facilitate the movement of non-strategic goods, general export permit No. Ex 2, effective on July 16, 1956, which I am now tabling, exempts 118 items from the requirement of an individual permit on shipment to Soviet bloc destinations in Europe. This exemption does not apply to shipments to communist China. Hon. members will appreciate that I cannot table secret and confidential information exchanged with certain NATO and other friendly countries covering controls over the shipment of strategic goods to Soviet bloc countries.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion subject to the limitations placed by the minister?

Mr. Fleming: So far as the limitations are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear as to what limitations the minister is proposing to put upon the motion, because in the motion which appears on the order paper I simply followed the language of the question I put to the minister on Friday, when in reply he said he would be quite willing to table the lists.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I am tabling all commercial information that has been published, including information that will be published later this week. I find that there is certain secret information which I cannot make public. I was not aware of that when I spoke on Friday; but everything that can be tabled is being tabled. I think my hon. friend will find the information he wishes to have contained in the material that is being tabled.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask one question, Mr. Speaker? Does the withholding of information on the ground of necessary secrecy apply only to the list of goods in relation to shipments to China, or also to Russia? Does it include that list?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): The difference between the list for China and the list for Russia is that a great number of items can be shipped to the Soviet union under general permit. That is, a permit can be issued which allows any shipper to ship anything on the list. That provision does not apply to China. That is the only difference between the two situations.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservations made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION FOLLOWING INCIDENT AT POZNAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister joined other heads of governments and heads of humanitarian, social and political organizations in making representations to the Polish government with a view to seeking an assurance that the United Nations declaration of human rights will not be violated and harsh treatment will not be given to the accused persons who may be tried in Poland as a result of the recent riots?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I understand that the Department of External Affairs has dealt with that, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs can perhaps answer the question.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, two questions were asked on this subject last Thursday and Friday, I believe, by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Diefenbaker: And on Thursday.

Mr. Pearson: Thursday and Friday of last week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Pearson: I might make a short statement in reply to those questions and the point raised by my friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). I am sure that all hon. members of this house condemn certain methods which the Polish authorities have seen fit to use in suppressing the decent peaceful demonstrations of the people of Poznan, Poland, who have asked only for bread and freedom from their communist rulers. These methods of the police state are deserving of the strongest censure on the part of all nations and peoples who respect human liberty and dignity; all the more so because of the recent talks about "liberalization" and "democratization" in Poland. If the Polish government wish us to believe that there is any reality behind their use of these words, they will apply these principles to the people of Poznan, especially in regard to action taken against those who have been arrested and who are entitled to a justice which excludes, in the words of the hon. member for Prince Albert, "cruel and unnatural punishment".

It is a telling commentary on what communists call a "worker's paradise" that, in the midst of an international fair designed to demonstrate to the world the material progress of Poland since the war, the workers should be driven by hunger and despair to demonstrate against food shortages and against the oppression of the regime. In spite of the steps being taken against the people of Poznan, and, in fact, because of my deep sympathy and great admiration for them —which is, of course, shared by all members of the house—it would, I am afraid, be useless and perhaps unwise to direct an official request to the Polish government as to how they should handle the situation. Such an official request would be taken by that government simply as unwarranted interference in their internal affairs, and the reaction in Warsaw might be directed against the people of Poznan themselves, whom we would be trying to help.

I am sure that no one in this house, and especially none of the people of Polish descent in Canada who are so rightly aroused by these events in their motherland, would want the Canadian government to take any action which might bring further suffering upon their compatriots in Poland who have shown us that the Polish tradition of courage and the Polish passion for freedom are still strong and vital. I can assure the house that I would have no hesitation in recommending such action if I thought it had any chance of achieving our principal aim, which is the alleviation of the lot of the people concerned.

We can, however, do this. We can make clear our condemnation of any cruel and police-state methods of repression used or contemplated by the Polish communist authorities. We can express our fervent hope that these authorities may learn that the ancient yearning of the people of Poland for freedom and a better material life cannot be indefinitely suppressed by force. Finally—and I assure the house that we will do this—we can see that this statement of our views is brought to the attention of the Polish government.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, if I might do so, I should like to ask a supplementary question. With Canada being a member of the United Nations and the Polish government having accepted the international declaration of human freedoms, does the minister not consider that Canada, from its place of detachment, could let the Polish government know that the conscience of this country and of the free world resents the kind of thing that is happening there, without such action being interpreted as an invasion of national rights?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the words that I have just used and which will be made known to the Polish government will have just that effect.

Inquiries of the Ministry

STEEL

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT OF UNITED STATES STRIKE ON CANADIAN PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I apologize for not having sent him notice of it. In view of the effects which the United States steel strike has already had in Canada, has the minister taken the necessary precautions to ensure supplies for essential production and especially for defence materials and projects?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the government of the United States has taken action in freezing all warehouse stocks of steel, the purpose being to protect defence production, and this government has been notified that those warehouse stocks of steel are available if required for the same purpose for Canadian defence production. Canada, of course, is at this moment more fortunate than the United States in that our own production of steel is proceeding normally and in that our position with respect to defence steel has been taken care of to the extent that the United States has been able to take care of her own production. I can think of no representations that Canada should make at this time.

POWER

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING WITH PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who has, over the week end I believe, returned from discussions with the premier of British Columbia with respect to the Columbia river development. Can the minister make a statement on the progress and results of his discussions?

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, my interview with the premier of British Columbia was very cordial. We had a full and frank exchange of views on various matters, especially on the problems relating to waters crossing the boundary which will be the subject of discussions between the government of the United States and the government of Canada. Following my meeting with the premier we issued a joint statement which would be somewhat too long to read at this time but of which I can send a copy to my hon. friend. Both Premier Bennett and I agreed that in the interests of British Columbia and Canada on the eve of our discussions with the United States it would not be appropriate to add anything to or to substract anything from our joint statement.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Kootenay East. Would the minister consider tabling the statement that he referred to, a copy of which he is sending to the member for Kootenay East, because many of us on this side of the house are also interested in that statement?

Mr. Lesage: If it is the pleasure of the house, sir, I will do so.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO REDEVELOPMENT IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement of the prime minister of Quebec on Friday last and the telephone conversation between the Minister of Public Works and the prime minister of Quebec recently, is the minister now prepared to finalize, for the purpose of the slum clearance and housing program in Montreal, the final agreement with the body authorized several months ago to represent the province officially?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): As the hon. member knows, I communicated with the premier of Quebec and told him that under two sections of the National Housing Act we need the approval of the government of Quebec. Under section 23, which is the slum clearance section, it is necessary to have the approval of the provincial government concerned; and under section 36, which is the applicable section for the subsequent housing development, it is necessary for the provincial government to enter into an agreement with the federal government. I asked the premier of Quebec if the government of Quebec is prepared to act accordingly and I have not yet received his answer.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): As a supplementary question, may I ask whether the minister did not discuss that matter in a telephone conversation with the prime minister of Quebec about two weeks ago—

An hon. Member: The premier of Quebec.

[Mr. Lesage.]

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I believe Quebec enjoys the proud privilege solely among the provinces of Canada of having a prime minister. As a supplementary question, may I ask whether the minister did not have a telephone conversation with the leader of the Quebec government about two weeks ago when this gentleman was in Hull?

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The premier ministre of Quebec telephoned me on that occasion when he was in the city of Hull. I told him then what was in my letter of May 31, which he had not seen at that time because he had been engaged in other activities.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, since replying to the question asked by the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace I have had the following telegram handed to me:

> Concerning the Dozois plan in Montreal and pursuant to your letters of May 31 and June 22 and also to our telephone conversation while in Ottawa on my way to attend a public meeting in Hull on June 15. The unavoidable delay in answering your two letters mentioned above is due to very very exacting demands upon my time. Furthermore the Quebec government would like to have additional and necessary information in regard to the attitude of the Montreal municipal authorities which information should be supplied by the end of next week at the latest.
>
> Maurice Duplessis.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Prior to the Prime Minister's departure for London, he stated that during the time that he was there he would give consideration to the possibility of setting up a standing committee on defence expenditures. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, in view of the discussions that he has had or as a result of such inquiries as he has made, he is now prepared to announce the establishment of such a standing committee which could perform a very useful service in an examination of defence expenditures prior to the present examination by this house?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am sure neither the Leader of the Opposition nor I would wish to change the record as to what was exactly the form of that suggestion before I left for London. I did have inquiries made in London, and I brought back copies of reports of some of the meetings of the subcommittee on defence expenditures. I did not have time to give them careful consideration because they are voluminous records. I brought them back with the intention of having them carefully considered, but I cannot announce at this time the establishment of a committee.

Mr. Drew: I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that during the absence of the Prime Minister there have been further statements by senior defence officers in regard to the need for the effective reorganization of the department and an examination of the general plan of expenditure, will the Prime Minister give immediate consideration to the possibility of setting up a committee, which could still act during the current session of this house?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I have not seen the statements which, I understand, were made while I was away by senior officers of the department. I will be glad to secure them and give them careful consideration.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VETERANS HOSPITALS—REQUEST FOR FIVE-DAY 40-HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): As the Minister of Veterans Affairs did not make any announcement on Friday last when he introduced his estimates regarding the introduction of the five-day 40-hour week for employees of veterans hospitals, would the minister now indicate the government's intention of inaugurating such a policy with respect to Westminster hospital, London, and other veterans hospitals? Second, were assurances given last October that a decision would be made on this matter without too great delay?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): My hon. friend did not give me notice of this question, and I am not aware of any recent changes regarding the introduction of the 40-hour week in all veterans institutions. I know that we have introduced the 40-hour week in those localities where that was the practice in other civilian hospitals. I shall be glad to look into the situation with regard to Westminster hospital. I cannot, however, recall making any commitment whatever to anybody last fall.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question which is not directly related to that which has been asked, but which does relate to the responsibilities of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister received representations from the Department of Veterans Affairs employees national association asking that all D.V.A. hospital employees be placed on a five-day 40-hour week in place of their present five and one-half day 44-hour working week, in line with the policy already adopted in such D.V.A. hospitals as those in Victoria, Vancouver, Calgary and Halifax?

Mr. Lapointe: I did, in fact, some time ago have the benefit of representations from that association. They are constantly in communication with the officers of the department and I am aware of their views. We have received such representation but the matter has not yet been given consideration by the cabinet.

Mr. Drew: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the salaries of D.V.A. hospital employees at present are the same, regardless of whether a longer or shorter working week is in force?

Mr. Lapointe: That is what has been alleged in a letter sent by the association. I am having that looked into. I would not like to say yet that it is the case, because I am not convinced it is. I am having the officials of the department look into it, and I shall be glad to give the information to the house when I receive it.

(Translation):

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, to follow up the questions previously put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe), could the latter tell us whether it is his intention to recommend before his departmental estimates are passed, that all the employees of military hospitals coming under him be treated in exactly the same fashion as every other civil servant, in other words that they may be allowed a work week of five days or 40 hours?

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the employees of those hospitals which come under the Department of Veterans Affairs are treated in exactly the same way as other civil servants. The policy of the government in this regard extends to hospital employees as well as to every other civil servant. My hon. friend knows that this policy consists in extending the 40-hour week to every civil servant in areas where it already is in force in most industrial or commercial concerns. Now then, I do not think that the 40-hour week has been implemented in any of the hospitals of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask another question of the minister. Is it his intention to recommend that all employees of the military hospitals in the province of Quebec be treated in exactly the same way as the employees of the hospitals in the other provinces of Canada?

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend reads the answer I have given to his first question, I believe he will find in it the answer to his second question.

(Text):

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FIVE-DAY 40-HOUR WEEK TO ALL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, but actually it is supplementary to the questions just asked of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it the intention of the government at an early date to extend the five-day 40-hour week to all its operating staffs?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Whatever the intention of the government may be will be announced in due course.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister if such an extension is under consideration?

Mr. Harris: That is the sort of thing that is confided in secrecy to the cabinet from time to time.

FLOODS

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister state what has been the total amount paid to Saskatchewan in connection with the 1955 flood damage and whether or not any further substantial amounts will be paid?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I cannot give at this moment the precise figures. I received the hon. gentleman's question just a few moments before I came into the house at 2.30. I understand that reimbursement has been made to the government of Saskatchewan with respect to at least one of the claims, but no very large amount, and that most of them are still unsettled. There is an item of $120,000 included in the supplementary estimates for the settlement of claims in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. I will endeavour to ascertain just exactly what the situation is at the present time and give the information to the house and the hon. member just as soon as I can obtain it.

[Mr. Dufresne.]

SUPPLY

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF NATURAL RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have been reminded today in some of the statements that have been made that we are living through a period of dramatic change which affects us and every other nation. It is my intention in the remarks that I shall make to discuss Canada and our own future in the changing scene.

The whole of Europe has marched ahead since the end of the last world war in a way that no one would have dreamed possible during the grim days of war itself. Not only have nations which were crushed under the impact of war found a new vitality and a new strength but nations which had not previously existed have taken form. New nations have emerged in Asia, Africa and elsewhere which will have a profound effect upon the course of our own life in the years ahead. Nowhere have those changes been more remarkable than within the commonwealth. Today we have had a brief report from the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) about the conference which has recently taken place in London. Following that conference a statement was issued which placed a very optimistic interpretation upon the meeting itself. I think it will be the hope of all of us that the optimistic expectations will be fulfilled. I must confess that we have little information before us now as to what the details are which justify those expectations. We regret very deeply that the government of Canada did not extend an invitation for a trade and economic conference here in Ottawa to be attended by the prime ministers of all the governments of the commonwealth. After all, the beginning of any meeting of that kind rests upon a positive invitation.

We have been stressing for years our belief that it is in the interests of Canada as well as the other parts of the commonwealth that every possible step be taken to vitalize the exchange of goods and to bring into as close harmony as possible those nations which are associated in this amazing fellowship. I would hope that the day is not too far distant when it will be possible for such an invitation to be extended in a manner that will leave no uncertainty that we in Canada desire the very fullest possible co-operation in every way with the United Kingdom and other nations of the commonwealth.

As we look forward into the distant years ahead not one of us can see what may happen in that future period. Let us hope and pray that in the uncharted course that lies beyond the immediate future the commonwealth may emerge as the great central core of international understanding and that the unique fellowship which found expression in London in recent days may give confidence to others for international harmony and good will and find living expression without weakening national sovereignty in any way.

Behind every consideration of the future must be a recognition of the reality of the Soviet empire. By steps which need not now be recounted in detail Russia has established a terrible sovereignty over the colonial system which by one of the strangest ironies of history has emerged at the very time that, by the voluntary acts of other great powers, colonial systems elsewhere have been disappearing. Only recently we have seen something of what that authority means in the steps that have been taken in Poland to suppress the expression in that country of the desire for freedom. The reality of Russian domination of nearly one-third of the world's people and the reality of the attempts of Russia to affect our life in so many ways, both in our internal activities as well as otherwise, impresses upon us the need for examining our position and considering how best we can strengthen ourselves not only for the immediate present but for the long years which lie ahead.

What will historians one hundred years hence record of the events which will occur during the lives of ourselves, our children and our children's children? Will it be told that freedom was engulfed in an ever-widening flood of communist oppression, or will the story be a bright narrative of spreading freedom which saw its beginning in such events as those which occurred in the last few days in Poznan or other similar events which have happened elsewhere in East Germany and other places behind the iron curtain? Of one thing we can be sure. The course will be determined in large measure by the degree to which freedom itself is cherished and protected in the countries which are still free and in the degree of unity which is maintained among the nations sharing freedom at this time.

As we read the history of the events which preceded the beginning of the dark ages—and they are set forth with dramatic colour and vigour in the recent history published by Sir Winston Churchill—we are reminded that the advanced civilization of the early Christian era almost disappeared because of complacency and uncertainty about the value of united effort to stem the tide of aggression which on every frontier threatened the survival of a civilization which in arts and letters even if not in technical development had equalled or even surpassed our own civilization of today. Our own part in maintaining this priceless freedom will be measured not only in our material advancement and our contribution to the joint defence of freedom but also by the extent to which we speak as a free and sovereign nation capable in every way of making our own special contribution to the common cause and making that contribution as a result of decisions that are entirely our own.

If one lesson comes to us more clearly than any other from the long history of the past it is that our best contribution in the international field as well as in the field of domestic development will be to speak as Canadians on behalf of Canadians with visions of a strong and growing Canada always before us in our thoughts. We Canadians have hardly yet grasped the full significance of what has been happening since the end of the second world war. We have seen things happening around us which had their beginning in that war itself. Because of the unparalleled use of resources during the war and the need to repair the awful destruction of those terrible years, demands on new resources of raw material and resources generally have become far greater than ever before. On top of this have come remarkable scientific and technical discoveries in so many fields which were stimulated by the demands of war itself.

It is in such a situation and under such conditions that we find ourselves in possession of enormous resources of so many kinds. We have all the resources in this country to support a large, prosperous and happy population. We have the agricultural land; we have the forests; we have the fuel; we have the raw materials for buildings; we have all the things that are needed for a really great development here within our own boundaries. With all this we have practically every mineral needed in this mineral age. The only important metal for which we have not the raw material in Canada is aluminum; yet in that case because of our huge hydro-electric resources we are importing bauxite from Jamaica and British Guiana on a scale which ranks us as the world's second producer of this immensely valuable metal, and there is reason to believe that we will soon be the first. It is a fabulous picture of opportunity which opens out before the people of Canada today.

I am not going to go into all the statistics to support the statement that at this time

Canadians have a greater opportunity for the future than any other people in the world. The facts are there; there is the reality. What a story of rewarding adventure it has already been. Just let us think, as we look into the future, of the new discoveries which within so small a number of years have changed the whole picture here in Canada and in some measure changed the picture throughout the world.

It is only about 25 years ago that Gilbert LaBine in that romantic flight of his in the sub-Arctic saw the first signs of uranium and by the discovery which came later started a new phase in Canada's mineral possibilities when the reality of those uranium deposits became known. Before that the existence of this mineral had been unknown in Canada. Now it seems that we shall soon be the world's largest producer with the discoveries which have recently been made.

The same story is being repeated in so many fields of development. Ten years ago we were relatively small producers of iron and the fabulous deposits in eastern Quebec and Labrador had still to be proved. Our oil production was still small; and up until a few years ago natural gas was being used only by those fortunate enough to live near the actual sources of supply. Just in those few passing years, from the Atlantic to the Pacific vast new deposits of iron ore have been discovered, oil production is mounting by leaps and bounds and spreading over a wider area all the time, and huge reserves of natural gas have been added to our fuel supplies. It is a truly fantastic picture.

Not only have we almost every mineral in the calendar from antimony to zinc, we have them in large commercial quantities, we have them in amounts that make it possible for us to contemplate the industrial use of every one of them. The question we must ask ourselves is, what is this going to mean to Canadians in the years ahead? We have everything to make this a great and populous industrial nation. We have the resources, we have the industrial power, we have the fuel-producing capacity and the basic requirements for housing, clothing and heat for a very large population. We can grow vast quantities of food. We grow enough wheat for 100 million people. We can expand our food production to support a very large population by intensive agricultural methods throughout the whole country.

What lies before us is much more than the opportunity for growth which is taking place in other parts of the world today. If only we perceive the full possibilities now opening up before us we will find, not that we are at the beginning of a period of steady advance but that we are just now at the threshold of one of those historic upsurges in the life of a nation which have carried one country after another to positions of commanding importance throughout the centuries.

But this is not going to happen just for the reason alone that we happen to have natural resources. That is a fallacy which it would be well for us to keep in perspective. The way that these resources will be used will depend upon positive decisions. We cannot emphasize to ourselves too often the fact that resources alone do not bring power and lasting prosperity. There are far too many stories in the pages of history which tell us of the temporary wealth, sometimes great wealth, of nations which lived on their resources without any thought for the future and then sank into relative unimportance after those resources had been exhausted.

On the other hand, many nations have become strong and prosperous with practically no raw materials in their possession. They overcame their difficulties by industry, technical skill and a great national spirit. Of all the nations which offer an example of what can be done, the United Kingdom stands supreme. With relatively few natural resources as we know them, they became the great trading nation of the world in the last century simply by the energy, productive capacity and skill of the people of those famous islands.

Let us look at other examples. One small nation which tells us what can be done even without resources is Switzerland. It has practically no raw materials of any kind except its forests, its soil and its streams, but the application of research and great technical skill combined with industry and a national determination has made it one of the most prosperous countries in the world today.

When that can be done without resources, think of what can be done with the resources we possess if in this country of ours, the third largest in the world, we apply the same principles, the same spirit and the same policies to the tasks which lie before us.

We have much reason for satisfaction here in Canada. We have one of the highest material living standards in the world. But we have no reason for complacency. We are not manufacturing all that we could manufacture from our own raw materials. We are not processing nearly as much of our raw material as should be processed by Canadians here in Canada. The simple and inescapable fact is that, while we can point with a great measure of satisfaction to many areas of concentrated industrial development, we have not been keeping pace with many other countries in industrial development during recent years, in spite of our tremendous opportunities.

Another thing which has a great bearing on our own future is the fact that the discovery of the full extent of our mineral and other resources has come at a time when the United States has in a very substantial measure exhausted many of their own. Because of our geographical position there is a tendency to seek from Canadian sources raw materials for a huge industrial production in the United States. It is to our immediate advantage to ship much of our raw material to the United States, just as it is to our immediate advantage to buy certain raw materials from them; but it is also to our immediate and urgent advantage that, while the development of these resources is being opened up and these resources are being shipped to the United States, we also take appropriate steps to make sure that here in Canada we are giving employment to Canadians at the highest level of wages by processing just as many of those resources as we possibly can.

The thing that we must remember and that we are inclined to forget is that no raw materials are inexhaustible. The United States thought their raw materials were beyond any level of exhaustion; then suddenly they came face to face a few years ago with the reality of their situation. In the Paley report, which was the report of a very competent commission set up to examine the situation in the United States, they were told to the amazement of many of them, that in the case of a great many of the resources the United States was going to be a have-not country within 25 years.

According to the latest figures of the dominion bureau of statistics, the only mineral in Canada which might seem to be comparatively inexhaustible is iron ore. Even in that case it would not be wise for us to assume that there is not some point of exhaustion, if we discuss these problems in terms of history and not of the immediate present. If we become the main supplier of a tremendously expanded steel industry in the United States throughout the years ahead, and if they should be in a position to determine what the main end product of those resources will be and how those resources will be used, then we might find ourselves in the position that even with our huge reserves they could in time, with their enormously expanded production, exhaust our own resources of iron just as they have their own. That, however, is the one case where we have any reason to use the term "inexhaustible resources", except in the case of forest products, where there is a renewable resource which under proper forestry methods could be kept intact for all time.

Let us examine the figures of some of our main minerals. Those figures are particularly revealing. These are the most recent estimates of the dominion bureau of statistics in regard to the number of years of supply of ore available at current rates of production in relation to what has already been proved. I would ask hon. members to think of these figures and what they mean when I repeat the fact that this is only at current rates of production and consumption:

Copper	24 years
Lead	26 years
Nickel	30 years
Zinc	30 years
Asbestos	64 years
Petroleum	22 years

Granted that there have been new discoveries since those figures were published, recent though they are, and granted that there will be new discoveries, what should be remembered is that these estimates are only based upon current rates of production. If the current rate is rapidly expanded to meet demands in the United States, then it will be seen that, far from having inexhaustible supplies, even the large supplies we now have could be fairly quickly exhausted. The United States has shown us that resources can be exhausted; these estimates demonstrate that it can happen here.

Once a country is fully opened up, it is opened up for all time; with new technical devices and new means of transportation we are well on the way to the real opening up of our country. As trustees for future generations of Canadians, we should make sure in every way we can, within the framework of our constitutional structure, that by the combined efforts of all governments and all the people of Canada the opening up of our country brings the maximum benefit to every part of Canada, not only for today but for future generations far into the years ahead.

We see many signs of great increases in industrial production in Canada, but again it is well for us to temper our satisfaction with statistics. In spite of new sources of industrial energy and great new supplies of raw materials for industrial production, we have not kept pace with the rest of the free world in industrial expansion, as I have already mentioned. The United Nations monthly bulletin of statistics for January 1956 reports that the increase of industrial production for the whole non-communist world was 37 per cent between the years 1948 and 1954 inclusive, while for the same period Canada's industrial expansion was 24 per cent. In the same period the industrial production of West Germany expanded 180 per cent. I, of course, concede immediately that there are unusual circumstances which have produced that result.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You mean, from the paralysis following the second world war?

Mr. Drew: I concede immediately that there are unusual circumstances that produced that result, and I was just going to say when the minister interrupted my remarks that these cannot be compared with our own figures, because Germany was rebuilding a great industrial structure after the destruction of the world war. Nevertheless, in the United Kingdom, where there also had been destruction, there has also been a greater percentage of industrial expansion than there has been in Canada. This is not something in regard to which we need to be unduly concerned, having regard to the future; it is simply, as I said before, something to temper our optimism and make us recognize that with the unique opportunities we possess, unequalled by any other country today of anything approaching a similar population, we have not done all that could be done in the way of industrial expansion.

There is also the fact that the improvement in personal income, which has been substantial, has not been equally distributed throughout our country. In terms of real dollar value there has been a surprisingly small increase in the maritime provinces and Saskatchewan, with some areas in the other provinces equally unbalanced. Large areas right across Canada have not participated fully in our recent growth and development. This government has failed to meet its obligations to those parts of Canada which are most in need of encouragement and financial support. The failure of this government to support sound projects like the South Saskatchewan power and irrigation project, the Beechwood project in New Brunswick and other similar developments which have been discussed here from time to time merely serve to accentuate the differences already existing not only in different parts of this country but in the way in which this government deals with the problems in different parts of the country.

The present government's policy for Canada's economic growth exposes this country to severe external dangers which could be reduced if greater encouragement were given to the building within Canada of heavy and light industry while at the same time increasing the size of our domestic market by well-planned immigration.

Our growth has been the result of a vigorous pioneering spirit over the long years amongst our own people combined with foreign investment in our development through the whole of our national history. From Britain, France, Germany and now more particularly from the United States money has flowed into Canada because of the prospects offered for a sure return. That, after all, has been the inducement: The prospect of returns from the investment made.

We have always welcomed foreign investment and I am sure we always shall. But we should not exaggerate our dependence on foreign investment. More than 80 per cent of all capital investment in Canada still comes from Canadians. However, the important fact which we must examine and discuss from the point of view of government policy is the growing danger to our economy as a result of the ownership by residents of the United States of a very large proportion of Canadian industries and mineral production. The latest official figures available are those for 1952. According to those figures we are told that 38 per cent of the capital in Canadian manufacturing industry was owned in the United States, and 53 per cent in mining, smelting and the petroleum group of industries. That proportion has rapidly increased since those figures were made available. It has been estimated in the press recently that 90 per cent of our oil industry is controlled in the United States. It may not yet have reached that point. Certain it is, however, that the percentage of ownership in the vital industries which profoundly affect the course of our economic growth is rapidly increasing all the time. It is not enough to say that these industries and other producing activities must of necessity operate to the advantage of Canada because they are in Canada and under Canadian law. The fact is that this government has on different occasions answered people who have complained of certain difficulties that arise because of the foreign ownership of industry here, that they could not control the result of that ownership. Companies which are controlled in the United States, whether they be Canadian companies or United States companies, are controlled effectively outside Canada as to their plans of production, their pricing policies, their dividend policies and the policy of the company as to further extensions of their activities and the direction of their production. The laws of Canada do not affect their control over those fundamental and vital aspects of their activities. Already this represents a substantial loss of economic independence in many lines of production.

Our position is different from that of any other country in the world today. It is well for us to keep in mind the broad map of the world and the relationship of other countries throughout the world. Nowhere is there a situation similar to that with which we are confronted. We live side by side with a great and friendly neighbour. No sinister purpose guides their attitude towards us. Over the years, right across Canada there has been a mingling of blood that extends family relationships with the people of the United States. Nevertheless, there is this unusual situation. We live side by side with a country which has a direct and daily impact upon our thinking through the press, over the radio, by television, through the periodical publications and by other means of communication. In this way the desire to buy things produced in the United States is stimulated in a manner that is perfectly legitimate for those who are selling and producing those products in the United States. Nevertheless, the reality is there. The steady pressure of financial expansion from the United States into Canada has created an interlocking economy in which the direction is swinging more and more to the head offices of companies in the United States which are operating on both sides of the border. It is as though there were two great bodies living side by side, with the arteries becoming more and more intertwined but the central control of those arteries moving more and more into the more populous of the two countries.

Let us examine these facts in the manner in which we are accustomed to examine them when we discuss situations of this kind with our friends in the United States. After all, it is to their interest as well as ours that Canada be a strong and vigorous nation, confident in its own right and in a position to build to the full stature of powerful nationhood under the control of our own policies in the years ahead. Here are some of the results of the situation which is developing:

1. A heavy net outflow of interest and dividends increases the amount of goods which have to be shipped abroad to raise the necessary foreign exchange. In other words, the profits are drained out of the country and the amount of goods which can be imported at any given level proportionately reduced.

2. Foreign interests control the pricing policies of their Canadian subsidiaries in a way that could be a great disadvantage to the Canadian consumer.

3. Foreign financial control is in a position to decide the extent and the form of the operations of their Canadian subsidiaries, and they can use earnings from their Canadian subsidiaries to finance expansion of plants outside of Canada.

4. In many cases senior positions in Canadian subsidiaries are held by other than Canadians.

5. Foreign management may use its Canadian plant to manufacture goods for export only when the United States plant is too busy to handle its export orders. This creates undesirable fluctuations in production and employment in the Canadian subsidiary.

6. A foreign-owned subsidiary can export scarce goods to the parent company's foreign consumers even if prices for the product are higher in Canada. That has already happened in cases that have been discussed.

7. A foreign company may not give the Canadian public adequate information about the affairs of its Canadian subsidiary. A number of Canadian subsidiaries today are operating under laws which do not compel them to give the information which is essential for an understanding of their operation.

8. United States interests doing business in Canada are subject to some laws of the United States such as the anti-trust laws. No matter how desirable the purpose of any of those laws may be, the result is that there can be an interference with business in Canada by the decision of the United States courts or other tribunals. I submit that business in Canada should be under Canadian courts and tribunals only.

9. Industrial research for Canadian owned subsidiaries of foreign owned corporations may be carried on outside the country so that there may not be adequate inducement for skilled personnel to remain in Canada.

A number of these disadvantages could be met without in any way discouraging investment in Canada and with comparatively simple changes to Canadian laws. For example, there should be a Canadian law to compel the United States owners of substantial Canadian subsidiaries to publish properly audited balance sheets and income statements of their Canadian operations. If this were done the Canadian public would know how profitable those subsidiaries are and what the actual cost of production is in relation to price. Those are some of the obvious disadvantages that arise from a situation which has developed simply from the fact that Canada now offers a rich return for large scale investment.

We have gained a great deal from that investment. We all recognize that. We must recognize that we have also gained much from the association of Canadian business with large United States businesses, as we have from the association with British businesses, with French businesses, with German businesses and other businesses that have set up for operation here in Canada. We gained the advantage of their technical skill, their industrial experience and their elaborate research facilities. On the other hand, carried to its ultimate conclusion, this could produce the result that we would not have adequate research facilities of our own; that we would not develop the necessary management skills and that our business methods, which in the end have such a wide impact upon our social conditions, would not be under our own direction.

Therefore, it seems clear that if we do believe it is important that we remain Canadians and have a distinct Canadian nationality, it is desirable that those steps be taken which are necessary to encourage our own management and expansion of our own affairs. This can be done without in any way discouraging legitimate investment of any kind in Canada. One of the most important things in industrial expansion is research. The amazingly successful industries of Switzerland and Holland, both tiny countries compared with the size of ours, are an example of what can be accomplished in that field. So also is the immense production of Germany and that, of course, is true of the United States. Therefore, the training of skilled men and women to take their part in research and technical development must be part of the national program consciously designed to advance our industrial expansion in Canada.

Without interfering in any way with the exclusive jurisdiction over education which rests with provincial governments, encouragement should be given to advance research and within the framework of our constitution research facilities should be expanded rapidly right across Canada in our universities and industries. This is something the government can do and should undertake right away.

This government has been strangely reluctant to make those changes in our laws which would end the very real discrimination against Canadian investors. It does seem a strange thing that a situation actually exists today that Canadian investors are in many respects at a disadvantage when it comes to investment in Canada as compared with investors from the United States or some foreign country. It is important that minority participation in foreign companies operating in Canada should be open to Canadians. There are obvious reasons why Canadians should be able to affect, to some extent at least, the operation and direction of affairs of all companies in Canada. The more companies that are controlled by Canadians themselves, naturally the happier we will be. But where that is not so, there certainly should be provision for participation by Canadians in all companies in this country.

Actually, at present minority Canadian participation in foreign controlled subsidiaries is discouraged by our own laws. These are recommendations which we have already discussed at different times in this house in detail. I want to summarize some of these subjects which have been discussed here and elsewhere because the impact of our own laws upon investment by Canadians in our own activities is one of the things that have a very great bearing upon the situation which has developed in this country. We have been told that Canadians are unwilling to take risks with their money; that is not so. It is utterly untrue. Canadians are prepared to take risks along with others. Canadians, however, have not found the same opportunities and the same encouragement as others because our own laws are not as beneficial to those who take risks of certain kinds.

May I review some of the ways in which the laws do act contrary to our own interests in this respect:

1. Canadian tax laws should be changed to eliminate the tax penalty which a British or United States company must suffer when it allows Canadians to own a substantial minority interest in a wholly owned Canadian subsidiary.

2. The incentive to non-residents to operate in Canada as foreign corporations rather than as subsidiary companies incorporated in Canada should be removed.

3. There should be stronger incentives in the Income Tax Act for investment companies to invest solely in Canadian equity stocks.

4. Succession duty laws should be amended to make it easier for Canadian families to maintain control of their businesses.

5. The method of taxing Canadian oil companies should be changed so that the Canadian operator is not at a disadvantage in competition with United States operators in the Canadian oil fields, as he now is.

6. Tax deductions should be permitted in respect of research expenditures which will encourage our own research in every field.

I do not intend to review these subjects in detail. It is not possible within the time at my disposal to do so. These cover a vast field. Certain it is, however, Canadian government policy should be designed to give Canadians as favourable a competitive basis for operation as is possible, and it should be extended to every possible case where Canadians invest. It certainly should be extended to Canadians as much as or more than it is to the foreign investors no matter where the investors may come from. That is the least that Canadians should expect from their government.

Now, may I speak, and only briefly, of this unfavourable trade balance with the United States which amounted last year to $839,996,794. This enormous amount is one that we cannot disregard. Figures released for the first five months of 1956 indicate that it is likely this unfavourable balance will exceed $1 billion for the current year; that is something to which the Canadian government must give attention. It certainly should be Canadian policy to balance our trade as much as possible and not place ourselves in so precarious a position in relation to any one nation, no matter how friendly that nation may be. We must not place all our eggs in one basket, either in regard to trade or in regard to any other aspect of our economy.

There are many aspects of this unfavourable trade balance which call for our consideration. It is only possible to support such an unusual situation because of the heavy flow of investment money into Canada from the United States. That has made it possible for us to buy many things that we require and undoubtedly many advantages have flowed from those purchases, but it has also limited some of the advantages of the investment which has been made.

Another subject which must be borne in mind is the upward trend in the export of raw materials since the end of the second world war. That has steadily increased. At the same time, the proportion of fully manufactured goods in our exports has been declining. In 1946, 51·8 per cent of all our industrial exports from Canada were in fully manufactured form. In 1954, they had been reduced to 39·8 per cent. At the same time the percentage of fully manufactured goods in our imports has been steadily rising. In 1946, 66·8 per cent of our imports were fully manufactured, while in 1954, 75·6 per cent were fully manufactured. This gives a picture of growing dependence upon outside manufacture which is not consistent with our remarkable position; it is not consistent with the fact that we have every one of the known sources of industrial energy in large quantity and that we have great resources of raw materials beyond the dreams of most countries of the world today.

Nothing that I have said is an argument against foreign investment on the one hand, or the export of resources on the other. It is an argument that in the laws which govern the results of investment, and in the use of our resources, Canadian interests should at all times be protected and encouraged. That will not limit legitimate investment in any way. At the same time our export policies should be related to our own needs for the future and the desirability of processing as much as we can of our own raw materials in Canada to give employment to new millions of Canadian workers.

These problems pose a question to which all Canadians must be prepared to give an answer one way or another. Do we believe in Canada as a national entity? Do we believe that it is worth while that the people living in this country in the years ahead shall continue to be Canadians with full and effective control over a strong, prosperous and vigorous country? I am sure that it is the wish of Canadians, and I am sure that Canadians want policies which will make that result certain.

We recognize the constitutional division of responsibility, but this government must assume responsibility for guiding policies in regard to international trade. Canadian expansion under as great a measure of Canadian control as is consistent with our national aspirations should be the policy supported by every one of us.

The question before us is simple but vitally important. Are we going to be satisfied with a quick cash return for capital assets which can never be replaced, or are we going to plan privately and publicly for the highest possible use of our own raw materials in Canada under long-term plans of development and conservation? Are we going to be hewers and diggers in large measure for a great and friendly neighbour who will then sell the finished products back to us after the most profitable employment has been created for their own people, or are we going to make the processed and finished articles that we need here in Canada in factories broadly based across the whole of our country to use the materials and resources which providence has entrusted to our care?

I think the answer to these questions is of vital concern to every Canadian. It is of equal concern to our farmers and industrial workers and investors, because the broad prosperity of the Canadian people will depend upon what we do. I have not spoken today about the great production of our agricultural areas. We all know of that. We know that one of our problems is the surplus production; we know that there is nothing so important to the farmer in Canada today as larger consuming markets within this country to provide the ready outlet for the goods that can be produced on our farms in far larger quantities than are being produced today. I think the appropriate answer is clear. I think we should decide that as Canadians we will process our raw materials to the greatest extent that is a practical possibility and in that way create highly paid employment for many new millions of Canadians in the years ahead, that will create more markets for an extended production in Canada in every field.

We all share the satisfaction in the growth and development that has already taken place. But this is only a promise of what can happen. Government policies should encourage the development of our own resources, should promote the processing of those resources in Canada, should correct our unfavourable trade balance, should assure the participation by Canadians in the development and processing of our resources, and should assure opportunity and employment for all Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific wherever they may live.

Along with the bright picture that we see in so many centres in Canada today, there are unhappy pictures which no Canadian should ignore. I think many of us have seen the extreme poverty which exists in some parts of this country and which has not been alleviated by the developments that have taken place here. It must be the concern of all Canadians to spread this rich opportunity across our broad land and by the combined efforts of our people make sure that it is not only for some Canadians that these advantages accrue but that the development of those incredible opportunities is truly for the benefit of all Canadians wherever they may live, whatever their occupation may be and whatever part of Canada they call their home.

My firm conviction is that if we adopt a sensible Canada first policy which strengthens our own country we shall then be in a position to make our greatest contribution to international friendship and international cooperation. Upon our own strength will depend the value of our contribution to the joint efforts which are being made for the advancement of civilization throughout the world.

We are indeed a very fortunate people living in a very fortunate land. We are now at the dawn of one of the brightest days which ever opened out before the people of any nation. But it is not only of today but of tomorrow, and of the many other tomorrows, that we should be thinking at this time. We can gain much wealth in a short time for a limited number of people, or we can spread prosperity, security and happiness across the whole land, depending on the course that we follow.

We wish to be good friends of all nations; that goes without saying. But first of all we wish to be strong within our own boundaries and within every part inside our boundaries. With the right policies today Canada can have a population of at least 30 million people within the next 25 years, and by the end of the century we should have at least 75 million people and be a great and prosperous world power.

I have said this before, but I repeat it from deep conviction. For the Canadians of today and of tomorrow this can indeed be the beginning of Canada's golden age. Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming):

> That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
>
> this house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate in this circumstance, one is under some disadvantage. Not having had an opportunity to make preparation and marshal the necessary material facts, one is perhaps unable to do justice to a topic of this importance. However, I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) this afternoon in moving this resolution and in the address which introduced it has placed before the house a great deal of material and has advanced many arguments that will appeal to members on all sides of the house. I agree with him that Canada should be on the verge of still greater expansion.

When I say that we should be on the verge of still greater expansion it is because over the last half century or so we have seen a tremendous growth both in the development of our resources and indeed in our population. I can look back now over almost a half a century since I came to this country as an immigrant. I recall the prairies as they were then, wide open spaces, the homesteaders building their sod shacks and in many instances still breaking the land with oxen. When one sees what has developed in that agricultural area over the last 45 or 50 years one realizes what expansion can be achieved in the years to come in all parts of Canada.

One has only to move from one side of this country to the other to realize the variety of our resources as well as the beauty of the land in which we live and the diversity of the people who inhabit the land, people of diverse origins. Our English-speaking population today is not wholly Anglo-Saxon, but intermingled with the people who inherited the English language from their forebears are those who have come to us from other countries and have been integrated into the English-speaking part of Canada. We also have the French-speaking population which has grown and expanded and assisted so materially in both the industrial and cultural development of the land in which we live. Consequently when one projects his mind 25, 50, 75 or 100 years hence one begins to see a picture of what this country may be in the years to come.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition has placed before us some considerations to which we should pay some attention in this parliament at the present time. It is quite true that the development—or shall I use the word "exploitation"—of many of our natural resources has fallen under the control of interests that are not Canadian, whose only thought in the exploitation of those resources is the making of a maximum amount of profit and return on the capital they have invested in our land. It seems to me that while we do welcome capital from outside the country to assist in the development of our resources, we in this parliament, and perhaps more particularly the members in the provincial legislatures, have an obligation to see that this development is planned in order that the maximum benefit may accrue to Canada today and to Canadians in years to come.

I noticed the Leader of the Opposition used words to this effect. He said what we need is a national program consciously planned, and I agree with him. We in this group have long held that if we are to develop this country along the right lines we must have sound national economic planning. By national economic planning I do not mean that it must be done by the central authority, but that under the leadership of the federal authority the provincial governments in co-operation with the federal authority should be planning the utilization of our resources not only for today but also for the years to come.

When we move across this country we can see the extent to which our resources are being not developed but exploited. I have our great forest resources in mind at the moment. Had I known this debate was to come up this afternoon I might have looked up some information I have at home on this subject. About two weeks ago a timber expert from a Scandinavian country made a statement as he departed from Canada. He had visited this country for some months, and in his investigation of the manner in which these resources in Canada were being utilized he had taken jobs at various lumber camps without indicating his real interest in Canadian forestry.

When he left he made a statement to the effect that he had been very interested in seeing the vast forest resources Canada has, he had been interested in having an opportunity to investigate the manner in which they were being exploited, and then he went on to say that he knew of nowhere in the world where the forest resources were being as wastefully denuded as they are in our country at the present time. He also went on to say, of course, that our vast forest resources were not inexhaustible, and that at the rate we are cutting down the trees and not replacing them under any conscious plan the time would come when Canada would be without these great forest resources.

One has only to remember what happened in the United States some 50, 60 or 100 years ago to be aware of what results from a lack of planning. One has only to travel through Minnesota, Wisconsin or Michigan, which at one time were the great forested areas of the United States, to realize that the heritage of scrub, sand and rock, in Minnesota particularly, has resulted because the people of that day and generation failed to safeguard and properly utilize the great resources which once covered those vast areas of the United States.

Coming in a little closer to home, one only has to drive up and down the Ottawa valley to realize that 100 years ago this valley was the scene of one of the finest stands of white pine in North America. One has only to go to the archives and other places to see pictures of the Ottawa and Rideau rivers of 75 or 100 years ago to see the rafts of mighty timber that were coming down. Today you can drive up and down this Ottawa valley and except for an isolated tree here and there you can find no descendants of those great trees which once covered the area.

What has happened in Michigan? What has happened in Wisconsin? What has happened in Minnesota? What has happened in this Ottawa valley, still beautiful indeed with the scrub bush which now covers it but denuded of the great forests which once added to its glory. Without conservation and planned use the same will happen in British Columbia, in the northern parts of the prairie provinces, in Ontario and Quebec and indeed in the maritimes, where already many great forests have been lost to this generation. Thus we can readily realize what may happen in the future. I think the generation which is exploiting our forests is doing an injustice to the generations which will follow.

What we need in connection with the development of our resources is a national plan to be applied as we use our forest resources. I give this as an example because they are replaceable, and are not like minerals where once you take them out of the ground you have nothing left but a hole. There are possibilities of replacing our forest areas so that future generations may have the resources upon which they can build industry of various sorts and types and thus be enabled to be happy and prosperous.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition spoke of other lands where once upon a time there had been great and prosperous cities. There had been cities in the Sahara desert, in Mesopotamia where according to tradition the garden of Eden was situated between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. Until comparatively recent times, until indeed some new irrigation projects were undertaken, the valleys of these historic rivers were nothing but deserts of driven sand. The same thing applies, of course, to North Africa. Anyone who has visited North Africa will have seen the hillsides in Palestine which were once the vineyards of that area and which are now merely eroded terraces of rock. The soil has gone and nothing can grow there. One then realizes what human beings can do to the resources of a land if there is no proper policy of planning and conservation.

If we are to have proper water resources, if we are to have water to irrigate the parched lands of the prairies, then we must maintain the cover on the mountain sides so that water will flow, not in great floods sweeping everything before them but more gently during the season of the year when it is needed for irrigation purposes. Linked with the preservation of our forests is the conservation of water, for irrigation purposes particularly. That is linked again with the conservation of soil. I have already mentioned Mesopotamia, the Sahara desert and the Kalahari desert and indeed parts of India where teeming populations once lived and grew the necessary cereals and other crops to maintain themselves. They are now deserts because the soil was improperly tilled and improperly cultivated.

Many of us remember the drifting soil on the prairies of North America, and in referring to the prairies of North America I include the prairies of Nebraska and Kansas as well as those of Alberta and Saskatchewan, in those dreadful years of drought. I think we have learned a lesson that we shall never forget. I have been happy to note that the farmers on the Canadian prairies have taken note and have changed their methods of cultivation. Only recently during a very dry period with high winds on the prairies I saw very few spots where the soil was blowing as it would have done 25 or 30 years ago under the same circumstances. This was true because the agricultural population of that region had taken to heart the lessons of the windy dry years of the 1930's and changed their methods of cultivation so they conserved the soil for their own use and indeed for that of future generations.

As the Leader of the Opposition has said, not only have we forests, not only have we soil, not only have we water resources, we have resources in the water in our fisheries both inland in the great lakes and in the northern regions where numerous fishermen catch fish in the lakes to make their living, as well as along the coasts of Canada. The conservation of salmon on the Pacific coast, the replacement of salmon on the Atlantic coast and the general supervision now given to the fishing industry is a form of planning, a form of planned development which could be applied in another way, of course, in co-operation with the provinces to our forest and other resources of this country.

Then we have the tremendous resources of the Canadian shield. Almost every kind of mineral is to be found there. Then in the far north we have the huge deposits of iron ore to which reference has been made already this afternoon. But we must not forget that these are wasting resources. While perhaps we cannot foresee at the moment when the minerals of that vast area will be exhausted, one day perchance that may come about. As has been suggested this afternoon, we should try to do what we can as a parliament, co-operating with the legislatures of the provinces, to see to it that as much of those mineral resources as possible is utilized and developed for the building of Canadian industry and the prosperity of our Canadian people.

I am not suggesting that we should act like a dog in the manger and prevent the flow of raw materials to industry elsewhere, but I do suggest that that flow is greater than it should be, and that we should be doing much more of the processing of those raw materials and those minerals in our own country. When we think of the diversity of our mineral development over the past few years and the remarkable discoveries of oil that have been made in the province of Alberta and are now being made in the province of Saskatchewan, the province of Manitoba and indeed the province of British Columbia, we realize that there we have a great resource that should help to build up our Canadian economy.

It is quite true that because of the enormous amounts of capital that were required for the exploration and development of this oil resource, the control has fallen very largely under the domination of several great United States oil companies, but in the further development of this great resource we should do all we can to see to it that as great a control as possible is maintained in Canada, and certainly that no foreign corporation should be able to say to the Canadian people, "This is my oil" or "This is my gas, and unless you utilize it as I decree I am not going to allow you to utilize it at all." That has been said, and that is the kind of thing this parliament and our provincial legislatures should view with some misgiving and should seek by proper legislation to rectify and bring under the greater control of our own Canadian people.

We have tremendous resources newly discovered, which already are establishing great industries. When one goes, for example, to the city of Edmonton, a city that I knew nearly half a century ago—

Mr. Martin: You are getting old.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, and so is the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He is getting more interested all the time, I hope, in improving the lot of the old age pensioners, because he is getting along to that stage gradually himself—

Mr. Martin: Tempus fugit.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Do it before you die.

Mr. Coldwell: —and I congratulate him on giving more attention to that important group of people in our country.

Mr. Martin: I thank the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Coldwell: I am congratulating him because I hope he is giving more attention to them. But as the years go by one realizes the extent to which this development has occurred. Edmonton is an example of a city far away from what one would consider to be the great centres of the world's population, far away from the normal outlets of navigable rivers and ocean and so on, that yet, because of the discovery of new resources, suddenly expands into a great industrial centre. I am convinced that other cities of the west, like Saskatoon and Regina and other cities that are adjacent to areas where probably similar resources will be found as exploration and development proceed, will also become industrial centres though a few years ago we thought of them purely as distributing centres for our great agricultural areas. So we need to safeguard these resources.

My hon. friend from Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) last Friday placed before the house some views regarding the coal industry and, as he has so often done, the necessity for the establishment of a national fuel policy so this great industry may be saved from extinction and the great resource it represents may be utilized over the years. Indeed, let us not forget that in all probability, when the oil wells begin to run dry the world will go back to coal again as a source of power; perchance also to water and atomic power, of course, but coal once again, with its great storehouse of chemicals. I suppose there is no mineral that has stored within it as many useful chemicals as coal. Our dyes, many of our medicines, and indeed extracts that we use for flavouring and all the rest of it—

Mr. Gillis: And nylon stockings.

Mr. Coldwell: As my friend from Cape Breton South says, nylon stockings originate largely in the coal fields of Nova Scotia, Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and other parts of Canada. So we have an obligation to the future generations of Canadians to safeguard these great resources.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition mentioned the human resources. Without adequate development of our human resources, of course, we cannot properly develop our mineral and other natural resources. I think Canada has not done nearly enough in the realm of education and in the encouragement of young men and young women to take various courses in our universities. I am not one of those who believe we should say to every young man and woman, "Take a scientific course or a technical course in our colleges and universities." Far from it; I would tell every young man and woman who wants to take a scientific or technical course in our universities first of all to take the arts course and get a broad picture of life that will serve them well in any field of endeavour they may undertake in the years to come.

We have not done enough in any of these fields of education. Of course I have often said that without interference with the control of education by the provinces this parliament should be making grants for education, should be encouraging in every possible way the expansion of our universities and giving encouragement to all our young men and women who have the ability to take a higher education. As I said some time ago, one of the great satisfactions I had when I was in the United Kingdom two years ago was to go back to my old college and to the other educational institutions in that country and be told that, contrary to what it was when I was young, when my parents had to sacrifice tremendously to give me the education I got, today no boy or girl with ability would be denied higher education right through to the university in Britain, because of the scholarships and the bursaries and the grants to the universities made by the government of the United Kingdom. Of course it is a little simpler there because they have a unitary system of government, while here we have, of course, a federal system; but I think it could be worked out here between the provinces and the federal authorities to the satisfaction and the advantage of the country.

Stemming out of that, of course, is the need for research. Until very recently not a great deal of research was done in this country. I think the national research council has done a magnificent job. The national research council gave an impetus to research in this country. It was a public institution but, very fortunately, many of our great industries have followed suit and are now paying much more attention to research than they were a few years ago, although I do not think they are paying sufficient attention yet. More research must be encouraged in our country and that means, of course, that we must have more young men and women prepared to enter into the fields of research in all phases.

If we are going to do all these things we cannot adopt an attitude of laissez-faire. We cannot leave it merely to individual corporations and individual persons to undertake all this. We have to have some conscious planning, some conscious economic and social planning, in which we, of course, as a party believe. That does not mean that everything has to be done under public ownership and public control. I think we learned many lessons during the years of depression and subsequently. In a modern society leadership must be given by public organizations. But in a modern mixed economy there is room for private enterprise which will help to develop the resources of the country in order to give to our people a better standard of living; and most of all, of course, there is need for the organization of co-operative associations of various types and sorts to distribute as well as to produce many of the things that make life worth living.

I am therefore going to leave the matter at that, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that we agree that if we are to develop our resources intelligently, as the Leader of the Opposition said, there must be a national program consciously planned. If it is consciously planned, the federal authority must give leadership. It may not undertake it wholly itself but rather must do so in co-operation with the provinces, because the natural resources of the country are controlled by the provinces of Canada. If we do this, I am convinced that over the years we shall see developed in this country a vigorous and prosperous population which can look forward in the years to come to contributing not only to the welfare of the people of this country itself, but generally to the welfare of the world.

Let us not forget this fact Mr. Speaker. This can be done under the guidance of our democratic institutions. Today democratic institutions are being challenged as they have never been challenged before. The totalitarian countries tell us of what they are able to do in developing their resources. They are trying to demonstrate to some of the underprivileged people who one day will probably decide the fate of the world that they can do better than the democracies. I am certain that under our democratic institutions we can do better than they can.

However, the outcome depends on the energy we put into the doing of this job. If we want to win over these people of the world who are being told by the totalitarian countries, "We have achieved much in a short time", we too must achieve much in a short time in our country. We can do that. We can develop our resources. As the Leader of the Opposition suggested this afternoon, we can remove the spots—there are many of them, and some of them are quite large spots—where poverty, misery and disease exist. We have the resources. All we need is the will; and given the opportunity, I believe the Canadian people have the will to do this job.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I think it is to the advantage of Canada that occasionally the members of this house stop to take a look at the over-all policy that guides the development and growth of our great country. I think it is wise occasionally to place before the house a motion such as that which has been moved this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition, which gives us all a chance to express our point of view. It helps to focus attention upon our resources and how best they can be developed in the interests of all the people of this country and of the country itself. I am therefore extremely glad to have this opportunity of saying a word in connection with the speech made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition and the amendment he moved.

I could not help feeling how great a change has taken place in the thinking of many members of this house in 10 years. When I came into the House of Commons 10 years ago, everybody seemed to be quite enthusiastic about internationalism and the prospect of finding the answer to our local problems by surrendering our economic defences, giving them away. Now we have come around full circle to a degree of economic nationalism that I would not have believed possible in that length of time. I congratulate the members of the house who have already spoken on the fact that they have grown older and wiser and that, with their grey hairs, they have come to understand that there is no answer to our local problems in the surrender of our economic defences, that we cannot look to internationalism to solve our own problems.

I was interested especially this afternoon in listening to a good many of the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition, with which I agree. I am going to deal just briefly with some of them. To begin with, I must say that I would have been much more impressed with many of them had I seen some evidence a few years ago of an inclination on the part of his followers in this house to take a stand that was possible at that time, namely a stand for retaining our economic defences and against some pernicious things that have happened to lose those defences for us.

Mr. Rowe: We took that position before you were in the house.

Mr. Low: You forgot about that. Afterwards you became very weak, I am afraid—

Mr. Rowe: No.

Mr. Low:—and you forgot that idea, because I did not hear your voice raised during some of the debates.

Mr. Rowe: You never listen to me.

An hon. Member: You would not be worth listening to.

Mr. Low: I listen to my hon. friend and he often says something worth while. But he kept a very strange silence back in 1945, at a time when he should have been speaking up on something worth while instead of a lot of the piffle that he often talks.

My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition said we are not manufacturing nearly enough here in Canada. I agree. I believe I am right when I say that last year Canada imported a greater dollar value of finished goods than any other country in the world, irrespective of its population. I think that statistic should soak in. If it is not true, I should like to have the facts presented. I believe it is true. It indicates that we in Canada have failed to develop our industries as they might have been developed.

Of course we have not done all we can in industrial expansion. I agree with that statement. But the question is, what is the answer? I believe that one of the great statesmen of Canada back in the late nineteenth century made the statement that the great need of that time in Canada was for transportation, and he repeated it; transportation, transportation, transportation.

We have our transportation fairly well developed now, Mr. Speaker. I believe the greatest need in Canada today is markets. I believe therein lies the answer to this question of industrialization in Canada. However, we cannot expect the total market of Canada to be available to our industrialists until we make absolutely sure that our people have the purchasing power with which to buy what has been produced. There is no question about that. Of course many people will laugh and emit those funny cackles which indicate that they do not know much about the situation and have not given much thought to it.

The greatest problem in Canada today with respect to industrial inducement or encouragement is that of getting purchasing power into the hands of the people. Until we make certain that they have purchasing power that is equal to our productive capacity, we are not going to get the industrial expansion we ought to have.

Now, we say that we are not manufacturing enough in Canada. But where are the markets; that is the big question. Our industrialists are asking that question. The Canadian people have got into the habit of buying in the United States. As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out last year they bought from the United States a billion dollars worth of goods more than the people of the United States bought from Canada. We have got into the pattern of buying in the United States. Why is that? The big reason, of course, is that the people of Canada find they can buy a good many things cheaper down there than they can buy them here. The Leader of the Opposition said in his speech, and certainly indicated in his amendment, that one of the reasons has been that in Canada we have not paid enough attention to this whole problem of taxes.

For a great many years we have imposed upon commodities not only sales taxes but also certain excise taxes. These taxes have increased costs and they have, to a very large measure, discouraged our Canadian people from buying things made in Canada. As a consequence a great many of them regularly go down into the United States and buy to the limit of the customs allowance. They bring those goods into Canada. The Minister of Finance ought to take a look some time at the possibilities in the purchases by the people of Canada in the United States. If a large proportion of them take it into their heads to go to the United States every four months, as they can, and buy and bring back into Canada a hundred dollars worth of goods duty free, then let the minister figure out how much it would amount to.

Our people, Mr. Speaker, have got into the habit of buying in the United States. The consequence is that we have a trade unbalance. The question I have to ask myself is, how in the world can this pattern be changed? There is one way in which it can be changed, and that is by making it more profitable for the people of Canada to buy Canadian made goods. I have in my hand something which is pertinent to the case. Here is a little column, a short one, which indicates something of the problem at any rate. I cannot say whether or not the figures are exactly right, but it indicates the extent of the problem. It is headed, "Hidden Taxes Chisel from Cradle to Grave", and is written by Fred Edge in Liberty magazine. This is what it says:

> Not long ago a Winnipeg friend of mine bought an automobile for $2,600. "How much," he asked the salesman, "am I paying in taxes on the actual price of this car?"
>
> The salesman had to admit he didn't know, and wasn't too interested. Like most Canadians, he accepted government taxes as a part of purchase—written into the price tag in invisible ink. My friend did some checking on his own. He found: Sales tax on his car was slightly more than $170. Excise tax was about $280. Approximate total tax: $450!
>
> Each year, Canadians make out their income tax, mutter briefly over how much tax they pay on their salary—and promptly forget taxes until next year. Few people realize they pay staggering taxes every time they buy anything from shoes to toothpaste. The tax they pay makes the average man's income tax look minor.
>
> Cigarette smokers who smoke just one package of cigarettes a day are paying $62.05 a year in tax to the dominion government—or 17 cents on each package. The man who buys a bottle of Canadian made rye for $4 is paying roughly 84 cents for the rye and $3.16 to the provincial and dominion governments. The sales tax alone on a pound of coffee or tea costing $1.10 is 6 cents; a pair of $15 shoes carries 95 cents sales tax; tax on a 40 cent tube of toothpaste is 2 cents.
>
> The iniquitous hidden tax, borne by Canadians from the moment of birth—both pins and diapers carry an unseen sales tax—follows right to the grave. The government last year pocketed roughly $1,000,000 on the hidden sales tax on coffins.

Now, as I say, I have not checked the figures that were used in this article. What I do say is that the whole article indicates as least one facet of the problem. As long as we make it unattractive for Canadians to buy Canadian goods, then certainly they are going to seek their purchases elsewhere. It is only natural that they will go to the United States and buy as much as they can bring back duty free. Sometimes they are able to buy things in the United States, pay the taxes and still beat us here in Canada.

In his amendment the Leader of the Opposition mentioned something about taking action in connection with taxes so we can make things much more attractive in Canada. We have got to expand our markets, and it does not matter how much well planned immigration we attract into Canada; that will not solve the problem unless we are going to do something about prices. We do have an answer to this price problem, and we can get along without imposing these price-pyramiding excise and sales taxes that put us behind the eight ball when it comes to the question of competing with other countries in the matter of trade.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke of foreign financial control of a very large percentage of Canadian resources. I followed him as he spoke about those things and he failed to say anything about the answer to that problem, nor did he enlighten the house as to when and how the roots of that condition were put out. He did not say, for example, that beginning with the administration of Sir John A. Macdonald and right down to our own day, the governments of Canada and all the provinces have given away large blocks of Canada's resources, alienated them from the crown and alienated them also from Canadian control. In the old days it used to be the fashion to reward political heelers for services rendered to the party, and when a party got into power they would hand over large blocks of our resources to those people for exploitation. This has not stopped yet, Mr. Speaker, yet we talk about foreign control. We have seen something of this situation in our own province. I am going to say that the Leader of the Opposition was not completely correct when he said that foreign financial control has arisen simply from the fact that investment in Canada offers such rich returns.

I am sure that everybody is aware of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the C. and D. Corporation and the Hudson Bay Company, as well as other big concerns, were given outright very large blocks of our resources, our mineral rights. During the years they have taken control of those outside of Canada to a very large degree, removed them from the control of the government of Canada. I am not blaming this government for that. It happened that when we came into office in Alberta in 1935 we discovered that slightly over 50 per cent of the subsurface rights, minerals and oil, had been alienated from the crown and the people, by deed of gift, by sale or by some other means that we have not been able to find out. That left us less than 50 per cent controlled in the interests of the people.

Well, we sat down and thought about the situation for some time, and tried to figure out means by which we could see that the rest of the resources that remained unalienated could be developed in the interests of all the people. I believe we succeeded in laying down a policy that would do it. We decided then and there that one of the important points that we had to observe was that not one square foot of any of those resources remaining in the possession of the crown for and on behalf of the people should be further alienated, and we have stayed with that policy to this day. Not one square foot has been sold or given away.

We adopted a policy of leases, rentals and royalties under which we sought to attract people who would come and invest their risk capital in a lease controlled by the crown. The ownership of those resources was to remain vested in the crown and be administered for and on behalf of the people. Always the control, in a circumstance like that, will be in the government, not outside. As a consequence we have gone forward in the development of our resources in the province of Alberta. That portion which remained unalienated has been developed for the people. They own it. But the development has taken place under a process of private enterprise, and there have been no alienations in the last 21 years.

That is one way by which these things can be accomplished, by which we can establish the foundations for a true Canada first policy; but we cannot establish a Canada first policy if we are going further to alienate our resources from the crown and give them away to others to exploit, under which plan Canadians will find themselves under the complete domination of foreign countries.

Well, we dealt with the situation and we started this, Mr. Speaker, in an effort to build up our industrialization. We had as our objective the bringing about of a balance as nearly as possible between our agriculture and our industry, and I think we have fairly well succeeded; but we had to resort to some very interesting means. One of those means was to intensify the effort to sell our Alberta people on the purchase of Alberta goods. We did so by using a very interesting form of local purchasing power and a process of bonusing Alberta made goods. It did intensify industrialization; it did succeed in focusing the attention of the people of Alberta on the need for buying Alberta goods. While we were not trying to discriminate against any other province or any other country, we felt the absolute need of doing what we could to build up industry in Alberta, and I think we have fairly well succeeded in that.

I believe we have to start there; we have to start on a broader scale to see to it that our resources are kept in the ownership and control of the people of Canada. That is perfectly correct. It can be said, of course, that the oil industry to a very large extent is financed by people outside of Canada. I do not know whether it is 90 per cent, 80 per cent, or what it is; nobody knows. But, Mr. Speaker, let me point out this fact. It does not make any difference, or not so much difference at any rate, where the investment risk capital comes from so long as the ownership remains vested in the people of a province of this country, and so long as control is exercised by the governments of the provinces to see to it that the development takes place for and on behalf of the people and they get the benefits. There is no question about that. That is what we have tried to do, and I think we have succeeded to a remarkable degree.

While there are people who inveigh against the big oil companies, yet the big oil companies are not in a position to dictate what shall be done with the oil, the gas or any other of our resources in the province. The policy we have followed does not allow that, and I think it can be demonstrated without question that this is so.

My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition spoke briefly about the trade deficit of a billion dollars with the United States last year. That trade deficit, Mr. Speaker, has developed very largely as a consequence of our failure 11 years ago to stand up against the pernicious international arrangement that was advocated and adopted in this house. At that time we in this corner of the house pointed out that if Canada became a party to the Bretton Woods agreement it would throw our whole trade arrangements into complete—well, confusion, to say the least. We point out then, Mr. Speaker, how Bretton Woods favoured creditor nations like the United States, and how it did not place upon the United States, or upon any other creditor nation, the responsibility of balancing its trade by the acceptance of goods from other countries. But it did place upon the debtor nations that responsibility. It introduced an international gold standard, and gave the creditor nations the right to sit back and demand gold or United States dollars in payment of trade balances. Now, where in the world is the gold to come from?

My hon. friend was not in the house at that time, it is true. He was in Toronto as leader of the government of Ontario. Had he been here I am interested to know what he would have done about it. His followers here did not do anything. They joined with the government of the day and with the C.C.F. in voting us down, in steamrollering us because we stood out against this pernicious international agreement under which we gave away our economic defences and made possible the very thing that now takes place, where the United States refuses to balance her trade, or even to try to balance her trade, by buying from other countries with United States dollars an equal amount or nearly equal amount of what those countries buy from the United States.

Canada sits back today complacently and allows those trade deficits to pile up. We do have an inclination on the part of people having capital in the United States to come in here and invest in our resources; otherwise we would be in a pickle. What in the world we would do about those trade balances if we did not have this investment I do not know. Therefore I say I would have been much more impressed with what the Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon if he had said we ought to set out at once to correct this situation. There is an escape clause in the Bretton Woods agreement. It would be possible for us to get out of it, and I think we should be talking here about the necessity—in fact it is a moral obligation—on the part of the United States to try to balance her trade by buying in other countries an amount equal to what other countries buy in the United States.

How can they get the dollars to balance their trade if they buy in the United States and the United States does not buy from them? And so we suffer this terrific trade imbalance very largely as a consequence of the developments of the last 10 years, and my hon. friends over here have nobody to blame but themselves, along with the other parties in this house.

Mr. Blackmore: They cannot even see it yet.

Mr. Low: May I refer for a few moments to the terms of the amendment which, it seems to me, consists of four different propositions. The first is:

> . . . the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada.

I think that is quite correct, Mr. Speaker. I think we all agree with it. I believe even the government would agree that that is so. They may say, "We already have it". I do not believe they have. I do believe that through dominion-provincial taxation, financial arrangements and conferences of various kinds we might develop such a policy so that our natural resources will be developed for the maximum benefit of all the people in Canada, but you cannot do it until you lay down a policy similar to that which we have adopted and have used so successfully for 21 years in the province of Alberta.

The second important thing he suggests is the adoption of a national development policy that will encourage greater processing of our natural resources in Canada. Again may I say I agree with that, but I would point out that until such time as we clear away the taxation and other disabilities that militate against the popularity of Canadian goods, until we see to it that our people have the purchasing power with which they can buy what we produce, then there is not much use talking about encouraging the processing of these resources in Canada. We have to make it possible for our industry to compete with other nations in the world of trade, and we cannot do it by any pious statements of hope.

He suggests that we should correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances. I have already said I would have been much more impressed by that part of his amendment if the hon. gentleman had told us where they stand with respect to the Bretton Woods international agreement and the things it has done for Canada.

He also suggests we have to foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources. Once again that is a very desirable thing to do, but how it can be accomplished is another question. You cannot force people to do this. Instead, it has to be done by other processes. Certainly it is a desirable goal.

His last suggestion concerns a policy to promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population. Yes, that is perfectly correct.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say again all of that depends on whether or not we succeed in bringing our purchasing power into balance with our productive capacity. If we do that I think we will have laid the foundation, but until we do all the rest of these things are nothing but pious hopes.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the amendment submitted by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon is of high importance and it is not without significance, it seems to me, that while all the parties in opposition have been heard from, no voice had yet been heard from the government side of the house.

Mr. Harris: Politeness.

Mr. Hodgson: Tired.

Mr. Fleming: The Minister of Finance says "later".

Mr. Harris: No, he said "politeness".

Mr. Rowe: Complacency.

Mr. Fleming: Well, if it is politeness it is a new departure in this house on the part of the government. I think the politeness might have been better demonstrated by the government in acquainting the house with its views on this very important amendment and the policy it enunciates and invites the house now to pass upon. I suppose the government is waiting to be furnished with speeches to be read after they have been prepared for them by their officials. One would have hoped that they would have had something to say at this stage of the debate before a second round of opposition speakers should have commenced.

Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this amendment is not just a passing issue. This amendment states an abiding objective of policy of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, and it touches upon subjects to which all Canadians—and not least of all this house—need to devote some hard thinking and serious attention. We approach this question not on a negative or merely emotional basis but on a positive and constructive basis. We are advocating a national development policy.

At the outset I wish to touch on two aspects of this matter to set our approach to this question in perspective. The first relates to the role of government. We consider that the function of government in relation to national development policy is to create a climate favourable to individual enterprise, and it is within the sphere of government or public enterprise in carrying forward its public works, enterprises, projects, expenditures and policies to do so with goals in view such as those stated in the amendment.

The second general observation relates to the constitution of this country. Under our constitution the development of our natural resources falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces, but in the development of those resources there is a fruitful field for co-operation between the dominion and the provincial governments; and then, of course, there is the vast field assigned by the constitution exclusively to the federal authority, namely jurisdiction over trade and commerce of an interprovincial or international character.

The development of our resources, sir, is a subject to stir the imagination of any Canadian. Providence has blessed this country with a vast store of natural resources. In the custody and use of those resources we Canadians must have due regard for the need of conserving them and for the need of replacing wasting resources; and there are important fields in which the federal authority has an opportunity of contributing in a significant measure to the development of our resources. I mention in passing just two great projects which we of Her Majesty's loyal opposition have long advocated against the determination of the government not to have any part of them.

I refer, of course, to the South Saskatchewan irrigation dam against which the Prime Minister and the Liberal party have firmly set their faces notwithstanding what the Minister of Agriculture continues to say on the subject out in the west, and also to the Beechwood project in New Brunswick, which promises great benefits to that part of Canada and which the federal government refused to assist even to the very limited extent of guaranteeing the bonds of the province of New Brunswick issued for the purpose of financing that beneficent project.

We wish to see measures of that kind undertaken by the federal authority, measures that will be of benefit to all parts of Canada. The Leader of the Opposition this afternoon referred to the fact that the post-war increase in purchasing power in Canada has not been evenly distributed, and pointed out that in the maritime provinces purchasing power has not kept pace with individual purchasing power in other parts of this country. There is a need of development of secondary industry in the Atlantic provinces and in the west.

The federal government had a glowing opportunity to carry forward that process of development of secondary industry during the war and in this period of building up our defences during the past six years. That opportunity has been largely thrown away. A valuable opportunity has been lost, an opportunity that would have contributed much to repairing the disadvantage under which geography has placed those parts of the country and thereby could have helped to distribute the benefits as well as the cost of confederation.

There is a fruitful field also for the processing of more of our natural resources within the boundaries of Canada. We as a Conservative party do not regard the development of our resources as the equivalent of the export of those resources in raw form to other countries. Today Canada is exporting heavily from her raw resources and those resources, we need to remind ourselves, are not inexhaustible. In a measure we are depleting our storehouse of resources. We are not doing it as we might in order to provide opportunities to Canadians in the processing and fabrication of those materials into the finished products in Canada.

The Paley report in the United States had an extremely sobering effect in that country on those who thought that the be-all and end-all was the development of raw resources. That report, in drawing attention to the threatened exhaustion of many of the natural resources in the United States, has a lesson for Canada. It is not only that our resources may be depleted, but that between 1950 and 1975 the United States will need to quadruple its imports of industrial materials. The materials which the United States is going to require in that period and later happen to be largely the kind of resources that we have in Canada. To an increasing degree therefore the United States is going to be obliged to look to Canada as a supplier of raw materials for the great industrial machine of the United States to process.

We are exporting those raw materials to the United States and are buying back from the United States to a considerable degree the same goods in finished form after United States labour has been expended on their manufacture with benefit to United States workmen. Canadian workmen should have the opportunity to do that work.

We should also remind ourselves that the United States tariff is constructed with the idea of not putting any obstacles in the way of the importation of raw materials for fabrication in the United States, but it does aim to exclude either partly or finished manufactured goods. Generally speaking that tariff rises notably as the degree of manufacture increases, and the duty is low or frequently non-existent on raw materials or some of the simply processed items. The duties are very substantial and sometimes extremely high on manufactured goods. The United States tariff structure is a serious barrier in the way of a natural and desirable avenue of Canadian development, that is to increase the extent of processing and fabrication of our own basic resources.

I wish just to throw out a word of caution on this subject before I go further. Let it not be said that what we are advocating is an embargo upon the export of raw materials to the United States. No, that is not what we are advocating. Indeed, the production of some of our extractive industries—nickel is an example—is such that Canada will not be a consumer of very much of the production, and certainly not a total consumer. As nearly as one can see there will always be a vast production of nickel available for export which would not be required in the fabrication of manufactured goods in Canada.

In the second place, we do not propose any repudiation or sudden reversal of policies which will deny to those who have entered into contractual arrangements the rights to which they have thereby become entitled. We are not unmindful of the need at the present time to maintain our volume of exports in the face of the very high excess of imports over exports, but we have to consider as a nation what are our objectives in this regard.

A few months ago there appeared before the Gordon royal commission a very eminent Canadian, Mr. Robert Fowler, who is a well known and distinguished Liberal and who spoke for the pulp and paper industry. He submitted to that royal commission that the role for which Canada by nature and destiny was best suited was, as he put it, to be "a hewer of wood and a drawer of water". In other words, he submitted that Canada's economic role was to carve out of our forests and extract from our soil products which should be then exported to the United States. This is what was advocated by a prominent Liberal whose position is recognized by his having been appointed as chairman of a royal commission. I ask, is this government policy?

Mr. Harris: Of course not; it is his personal opinion.

Mr. Fleming: We should like to have something more in the way of concrete evidence that this is not government policy than simply an offhand remark by the Minister of Finance, who has not chosen to make a speech in the course of this debate. I think it would be a very good thing, now that the Minister of Finance has allowed himself to utter the one sentence he has in this debate, that he should rise and tell us what the government's policy is, because we wish to know. The time for it has come and we do not propose to be put off on this subject any longer.

If you want proof of what can be accomplished in this regard you have only to look at what was accomplished by my leader when he was premier of the province of Ontario by insisting that forest products should be processed in that province instead of being exported in raw form to the United States. The development which has resulted has been remarkable, and is a tribute to his far-sighted policy. There are in Ontario whole communities which owe their existence today, not to mention their prosperity, to the farsighted policies of this kind which he put into effect when he was premier of the province of Ontario.

Let me give another example of commodities in connection with which a good deal could be accomplished, and we have a very recent experience to point to. I refer to aluminum. Canada is a very large producer of aluminum, and much of the aluminum consumed in manufacturing in the United States comes from Canada. Last year there was a serious shortage of aluminum in Canada and the United States, but did the Canadian processors enjoy any benefit from the fact that this is a Canadian product? Did Canadian fabricators and manufacturers have first claim upon the Canadian production of aluminum? No, they did not. They were seriously curtailed. Here is a very apt example of the sort of thing which could be accomplished to the benefit of all Canada if some regard were had for the desirability of fabricating and processing these natural products to a much greater degree in Canada.

I wish to speak on the subject of trade. Our unfavourable trade balance has reached most serious proportions. Indeed, I think it is not too strong to say that it has reached alarming proportions. In 1955 Canada in its trade with the world incurred an over-all trade deficit for the third year in succession. It amounted to $360 million. In 1956 the situation has become more serious still. The daily bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics of July 6 tells us that Canadian commodity imports in the first five months of this year amounted to $2,359,100,000, up $551,800,000 or 30·5 per cent over last year's figures for the same five months. Canadian exports rose only 11·6 per cent, to $1,874,900,000 from $1,680,000,000 last year. For the five months January to May inclusive, the import balance this year aggregated $484,200,000, as compared with an import balance of just $127,300,000 last year. In other words, in our commodity trading with the world our import balance in the first five months of this year was four times as much as it was in the first five months of 1955.

Those are the figures of our over-all trade with the world. What about our trade with the United States? I have drawn attention to the fact that our commodity trade deficit with the whole world is amounting to $100 million per month. We are buying from the world at the rate of $100 million per month more than we are selling; but what about the United States? Here the situation is much more alarming still.

Last year in our commodity trade with the United States we incurred a deficit of $840 million, a deficit greater than any in our history with the exception of one year, namely the year 1947. It was an increase of 40 per cent over the deficit with the United States in the year 1954. But in the first five months of the year 1956 we are increasing that same deficit with the United States at an alarming rate. Indeed, it is just about double what it was last year for the same period. To an alarming degree we are placing our trading eggs in one basket.

In 1955, continuing a process that was evident in preceding years, Canada drew from the United States 73 per cent of its total imports and only 11·6 per cent from the United Kingdom. Of our exports, 60 per cent went to the United States and only 18 per cent to the United Kingdom. It is evident that we as a country are being drawn more and more into the trading and economic orbit of the United States, and the government seems to be quite indifferent in the face of these facts.

Consider these figures of our trade with the United States for the first five months of this year. In the five months our purchases from the United States amounted to $1,765 million, up 31 per cent from $1,349 million in the first five months of 1955. The result was an import balance for these five months of $625 million as compared with $352,800,000 in 1955. Our excess of purchases from the United States over our sales to the United States is running at the rate of $125 million a month. I think it is time this house and this government took stock of this alarming disproportion in our trade. But when I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce several months ago what the government proposed to do in the face of this situation, which was then becoming apparent, his answer was a glib "nothing". The government has done nothing about it and apparently continues to do nothing about it.

It is facts like these that have led an eminent Canadian economist, Mr. Douglas Gibson, in delivering his presidential address to the annual meeting of the Canadian political science association a few weeks ago, to say:

> Certainly in the economic sphere the United States constitutes the only real threat to Canadian independence and it will remain our chief economic preoccupation as far ahead as one can see.

Further on he added:

> Even the briefest examination of the facts makes it clear that our ties with the American economy have become closer and more important during the past decade than ever before.

It is an unchallengeable fact, yet the government faces this fact without concern.

Another kind of trade ought to be giving us more concern. We are buying back from the United States processed goods while our exports to her consist largely of raw materials.

The United States is a good neighbour. Let no one misunderstand anything we have to say concerning our trade with the United States. We recognize the burden of leadership that the United States is bearing in the world today. We recognize the burdens that she is carrying for the benefit of all the western world. But Canada's trading relationships with the United States ought to be a matter of very serious concern to every Canadian, as they face us at this time.

We are the best customer the United States has in the world, but we do not always see appreciation of that fact on the part of those who are shaping either administrative or legislative policies at Washington. It is always difficult for other countries who deal with the United States, because of the separation of the administration from the legislative branch of government there.

We Conservatives as a party have supported the principle of GATT on the several occasions when GATT has come before this house in its original form and in the form of later agreements based upon it, but we have not been able to close our eyes to the fact that in recent years, while the United States congress did vest in the administration the powers under which that administration signed the general agreement on tariffs and trade, nevertheless that congress turned around later and enacted legislation that violated not only the spirit of GATT but indeed its letter as well. I refer to the Andresen amendment of several years ago and the succeeding moves on the part of congress to erect barriers against the importation of Canadian dairy products.

We have seen a succession of attempts to raise tariffs and apply quotas and restrictions on the import of Canadian grains into the United States, recent attempts to apply tariffs upon the importation of fish sticks, hardboard and other Canadian products. No one can view the extent to which Canada is being drawn into the trading and economic orbit of the United States without very serious misgivings and a feeling of insecurity. To top it all, we see the United States proceeding to dispose of its farm surplus by putting $2 billion at the disposal of the administration in order that exports of agricultural produce by the United States may be subsidized, creating thereby very unfair competition for the Canadian farmer to face.

Let me just say this in conclusion on this particular subject. We as a party in Her Majesty's loyal opposition have supported GATT. Canada has lived up to her obligations under GATT; but we call upon the United States to do as much. We are not unmindful of the fact that eight years ago the GATT signatories agreed that they would simplify customs procedures. Canada fulfilled her obligations in that respect. However, after eight years much remains to be done by the United States to fulfil her obligations in that regard. We have seen instead quantitative restrictions and other devices, the use of escape clauses and other provisions that GATT contains, to obtain for that country benefits that other signatories to GATT have not obtained for themselves.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, the baffling maze of the United States custom administration has been referred to as "the commercial war of nerves against importers". The conclusion from these factors is that under the way the GATT agreements are working out the United States is deriving the advantage.

I come now to the subject of wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources. Canada needs capital, particularly in this period of rapid development. We all must acknowledge the extent to which United States capital has contributed to the development of Canada's resources. What is Canada's investment position at the present time? It has been thus described in the daily bulletin of the dominion bureau of statistics of April 6:

> Canada's gross liabilities to other countries rose to $14,500 million at the end of 1955, including non-resident long-term investments in Canada of $13,200 million, . . . The largest part was direct investment in companies controlled outside Canada, amounting to $7,500 million. In the 10 years since the end of the war these foreign direct investments in Canada increased by $4,800 million and other foreign long-term investments in Canada by $1,300 million.
>
> Canada's gross assets abroad at the end of 1955 totalled 7 billion including $4,800 million of long-term investments. The net balance of Canada's international indebtedness at the end of 1955 reached $7,500 million, having doubled in six years. The new study shows that Canada is an even larger debtor in respect of equity investments.

Sir, we should like to see more opportunity for British investment in this country. About $80 million has come into Canada from the United Kingdom in each of the last two years, but it is hardly to be expected that under present conditions Britain is going to have a great deal of capital to invest in Canada.

What are to be the sources of the capital that Canada needs for the development of her resources? At the present time 80 per cent of the capital comes from Canadian sources. But as Mr. Gibson points out in his address to which I referred earlier:

> From 1948 to 1955, the book value of foreign investment in Canada has increased from $7½ billions to over $13 billions. Of this increase United States investment in Canada accounts for more than 80 per cent, rising from $5½ billions to over $10 billions. In the last few years total external investment in Canada has been increasing at a rate of close to $1 billion per year and United States investment at a rate of approximately $750 millions, not including any allowance for capital appreciation in excess of book values which may have been considerable in some of the resource industries.

And he says further:

> . . . the Canadian share of ownership and control has been declining in the manufacturing, mining and petroleum industries. American capital has financed a very substantial part of the increase in our industrial capacity.

And again he says this:

> In 1953, the latest year for which detailed figures are available 43 per cent of Canadian manufacturing and 55 per cent of Canadian mining, smelting and petroleum exploration and development were controlled by United States residents. Indicative of the active part which American investment has been playing in the post-war period, the corresponding proportions before the war were approximately 30 per cent and 40 per cent respectively. Moreover, whether controlled in the United States or not, Canadian industry is largely American in equipment, standards and organization, and more so than before the war.

Then as to the type of United States investment, Mr. Gibson points out this:

> It is no accident that the bulk of United States direct investment in Canada is in big companies: In 1953 almost 60 per cent of the investment in American-controlled manufacturing companies in Canada was in companies in each of which $25 millions or more had been invested.

Mr. Speaker, this subject of increasing United States control over Canadian resources and their development is one upon which the Gordon royal commission ought to have been asked to study and report.

I do not intend to repeat what I said on July 3 concerning the need of adjusting our taxation policies in this country in order to provide more capital out of savings of Canadians. That is a need of our fiscal policy, and there is no indication that the government intends to meet it.

Another source that could promise much assistance to us would be a favourable balance on trade and on current account including services and other invisibles. Here our trade position is altogether against us. At the present time our importation of foreign capital is only going to pay for our deficit on commodity trading account. We are not going ahead. We are simply borrowing and importing capital from abroad to pay for our current trade deficit. As the dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin of July 6 points out:

> . . . the unusually large capital inflows into Canada have served to finance the import balances.

Mr. Speaker, what we need is more capital that will not simply be paid out to finance the deficits on our commodity trading account. Our trade needs to be set in balance. We are living beyond our means in the terms of current account and we are paying by (a) borrowing from abroad and (b) selling part of our patrimony. What we need is more Canadian investment. The advantages of Canadian investment were enumerated by my leader this afternoon and I do not intend to repeat them, but there are some distinguished Canadians who are drawing attention to the same thing.

Mr. Rhys M. Sale, president of Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited, was reported in the press of June 20 as saying:

> . . . growing domination of Canada's extractive industries by foreign capital "troubles him as a Canadian".

On the same day Mr. H. R. MacMillan in British Columbia, as quoted in the press, said this:

> . . . U.S. ownership in Canada includes 98 per cent of auto and parts industries, 75 per cent of rubber industry, 70 per cent of the non-ferrous mining and smelting industries, and 59 per cent of the electrical industry. U.S. interests owned more than half the investments in B.C. forests and wood-consuming mills of all kinds.

And he added this:

> . . . 55 per cent of all dividends and 18 per cent of all corporate interest payable by Canadian companies is paid outside of Canada, and 75 per cent of it goes to the U.S.

Here again fiscal policy could bring assistance and redress. There is a very good statement in this respect by Mr. W. Harold Rea, president of Canadian Oil Companies Limited who, speaking in March, drew attention to this fact:

> When it comes to bidding for oil leases and reservations in Canada, a Canadian suffers a heavy disadvantage compared with an American bidder. Result: The American bidders generally get the Canadian oil acreage.

He also said this:

> Costs of most leases and reservations . . . which prove unproductive cannot be applied against revenue for tax purposes . . . Since these costs are deductible in the U.S. even when incurred in Canada, it follows the U.S. companies can afford to risk more when bidding for Canadian acreage. In other words, we risk and lose 100 cents per dollar on the cost of unproductive acreage. U.S. companies risk only net cost after deducting income tax.

Mr. James Muir, president of the Royal Bank of Canada, has been speaking to the same effect. On January 20 he said:

> We might encourage risk capital in general by doing something about the present tax disadvantage on equity as opposed to bond financing.

And further:

> Second, we might study the advisability of granting the same tax advantages to Canadian firms engaged in resource development as are at present available to American firms under American tax law.

Again, Mr. H. R. MacMillan, as reported in the press of April 24, had this to say:

> Perhaps it would help, if we made some changes in our tax laws, to put Canadians on the same basis as Americans enjoy in Canada and vice versa.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is a fruitful field for government fiscal policy. Attention has been drawn to it by Canadian university presidents and Canadian bank presidents. It is time that Canada—and that means the Canadian government—made known the feelings of Canadians in relation to United States firms owning Canadian subsidiaries and closing them out entirely so there is no possibility of Canadians buying into those Canadian subsidiaries which are engaged in the development of Canadian resources. We do not wish to discourage the investment of United States capital in Canada, but we do wish to preserve the proper degree of ownership and control for Canadians in Canadian resources.

Mr. Speaker, our amendment concludes with provision for a policy that will increase opportunity and employment for Canadians. We see the development of the resources of Canada as the basis for opportunity and extended employment. My leader this afternoon referred to Canada's great resources. We have in Canada all five of the sources of energy, namely coal, oil, gas, hydro-electric and atomic power. We have vast mineral wealth. We have a fertile topsoil over vast stretches of this great country. We produce virtually all foods required for human consumption. This storehouse of resources is a trust not just for us but as well for generations to come. It is our duty to guard it against alienation, depletion, waste and despoiling for some illusory present advantage. It is the source and the hope of wider economic opportunity for Canadians and for more Canadians, more Canadian-born Canadians and more Canadians coming from abroad to join the Canadian family.

The dynamic development of our resources should and must be the key to our immigration policy, and with the development of these resources and an increase in the Canadian population we shall greatly expand the domestic market for Canadian primary producers.

This policy of national development is one born of the invincible confidence of the Conservative party in Canada's future. We are optimists for Canada, but we are realists as well. This great patrimony that a beneficent providence has given to this country is in our hands now. We can be worthy or unworthy custodians of it.

Canada holds a high position in the world, and that position is going to become of increasing importance. With it come increasing obligations, and to discharge those increasing obligations Canada needs to be strong. If Canada is strong, strengthened by the kind of policy we are advocating here today in this amendment, we shall at the same time strengthen this continent, the commonwealth, the free world and the entire cause of freedom. We cannot do that unless Canada enjoys a proper measure of economic independence.

Sir, we are not dogmatic on this subject. We have never said Canada can be self-sufficient, but we say there is a great opportunity here for the application of this policy of national development. I wish to quote this extract from the speech by Mr. Gibson:

> Much as we would at times like to invoke it, British influence on the economic side of our national life is not very great. Thus to maintain a degree of economic independence we have to develop our own economic policies.
>
> This implies that we have economic objectives which can command agreement across our rather diverse country. In my opinion, the fundamental objective on which there seems to be the widest agreement is not economic at all—it is that we in Canada wish to remain an individual and developing national entity and not to become a part or a mere satellite of the United States. If we accept this fundamental conclusion, which I can think most Canadians would, certain economic conclusions appear to follow. The primary one is that the Canadian economy should be an economic reality and not merely a series of tributary areas whose orientation is largely toward adjoining parts of the United States. Political independence in any real sense needs a material basis and would scarcely be practicable in a divided and dependent economy. If Canada is to remain an economic reality, it further follows, as it always has in the past, that Canada must have a national policy of developing east-west communications across her country and east-west lines of trade.

We do not advocate waving any big stick at our friends in the United States, but we do assert that it is not the destiny of Canada to be the trade satellite or the dumping ground of any country in all the world. We think much can be done to shake our United States neighbours out of their complacent attitude toward Canada and toward Canada's economic interests.

The Canadian people are the greatest resource of this country. We wish, sir, to be good neighbours, staunch allies, helpful friends, unwavering supporters of the free way of life. I close with these words from Mr. Gibson:

> Our choice in practice is rather between having some national economic policies of our own and becoming a divided and ineffectual satellite of the United States.

Then further he says:

> If we wish to retain and strengthen our national identity we must develop more cohesion in our economic life and objectives.

This policy we advocate will help Canada develop that cohesion in our economic life and objectives which is needed. So I say, sir, that the destiny of Canada as a good neighbour, as a staunch ally, as a helpful friend, as the unwavering supporter of the free way of life, will best be served by the policy of national development which was set forth in the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As I listened to the want of confidence motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition it seemed to me he must be speaking of some country other than Canada, although he did mention Canada. What did he say? He said the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our national resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada.

May I call his attention to the fact that we started that policy on an exceedingly active scale back in 1940. The progress from 1940 to 1945 was stimulated by the urgency of producing weapons of war. However, let me point out that after 1945 there was no pause in that policy. No country has ever witnessed the national development, the development of our national resources and the increase in processing of those resources in this country to the extent that the people of Canada have witnessed it during the past decade and a half.

We speak of the present unfavourable trade balance; fostering wider participation by Canadians in the development of their resources and promoting greater opportunities of employment for a steadily increasing population. I am going to discuss those matters as we proceed, but I can say that all those things are being attended to and have been attended to over a very considerable period.

First, as the result of a balanced economic growth, financed largely by Canadian savings but assisted materially in certain key industries by foreign capital, know-how and enterprise, Canadians have enjoyed the benefit of prosperity unparalleled in the history of the country. Jobs are more plentiful; incomes are higher and so are living standards. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the economic policies pursued by the Canadian government, designed to encourage the development of our national resources and our secondary industries, have been sound and eminently successful.

I am sorry that I did not have the advantage of members of the official opposition in knowing what we would be discussing today and therefore I am meeting a prepared speech with a speech I have attempted to put together with scissors, largely from speeches I have made over a period outside this house.

I shall first discuss the trade situation. It is not surprising that this remarkable record of expansion and rising standards of living should be accompanied by equally remarkable levels of foreign trade. Indeed, it is not too much to say that the present economic activity could not be sustained without record exports and record imports. A high level of export demand is essential to the economic health of the Canadian economy. Rising exports have, in fact, been one of the main reasons for the rapid recovery from the mild recession of 1954. On the other hand, larger imports have been equally essential to meet the rising demands of Canadians for consumer and capital goods. The greater the prosperity, the more rapid the expansion, the higher the level of imports. Exports rose by 10 per cent in 1955 above the previous year. In the first five months of this year the increase over 1955 was 12 per cent, and in January, February and May the increase was between 17 per cent and 18 per cent over the same months of 1955.

We are undoubtedly on our way to a new record for exports, both in volume and value, well beyond anything that a year or two ago would have seemed attainable in 1956. As hon. members are aware, wheat exports have contributed substantially to this remarkable showing. After a slow start last fall, demand began to pick up about October or November. Then followed a period of sustained buying unique in my experience as minister of this department. Within the last few months we have seen wheat moving out of all our ports in steady and large volume. Exports of wheat and flour will probably reach, and perhaps exceed, 300 million bushels during the crop year 1955-56, an increase of 50 million bushels over the previous year when exports were at about average or normal levels.

As far as our other main exports are concerned, with a few exceptions we are exporting about as much as is available for export. In most important areas the limiting factor is supply, not demand, a fact which is responsible for many of the larger expansion projects now under way in Canada. Further increases in exports can therefore be expected to follow upon completion of new capacity for the production and distribution of such items as aluminum, copper, iron ore, petroleum, uranium, pulp and paper and various types of chemicals. Canada is particularly fortunate to be an efficient supplier of those raw and processed materials so much in demand in the neighbouring United States and throughout the world.

There are exceptions, of course, even in a year of such phenomenal over-all results. Exports of lumber, for example, are now running a little below last year's unusually high sales, mainly as a result of the drawing down of defence stocks in the United Kingdom; but, by and large, our export trade is flourishing.

As hon. members are well aware from the comprehensive reports issued by the bureau of statistics, there have been even greater increases in imports. In the current year, to date, imports have been nearly one-third higher than in the same period last year. As I said at the outset of these remarks, these extraordinary imports reflect the extraordinary levels of economic activity now prevailing in Canada. In particular they reflect the unusually rapid pace of development now under way.

Twice a year my department makes a survey of investment intentions of private industry and governments. At the beginning of 1956 this survey indicated a 21 per cent increase in capital expenditures to the highest levels on record. The department is just about to publish its mid-year survey. To my astonishment this survey indicates an upward revision in 1956 plans which now involve outlays 28 per cent above actual outlays in 1955. A major upsurge in imports would seem to be the natural consequence of such a situation. Many of the goods normally produced in Canada are simply not available in sufficient quantities to meet the present level of requirements.

For example, even though Canadian steel mills have been operating at capacity since early in 1955, imports of rolling mill products in recent months have been running at about double the rate of a year ago. As for cement, more than the normal volume of supplies from abroad will be needed this season notwithstanding greatly increased domestic capacity. Apart from this increase in over-all size, the changing composition of this year's investment program is also contributing to larger import totals. Most of the increase in capital outlays this year is for industrial expansion involving extensive purchases of machinery and equipment, much of which can be obtained only from foreign sources.

In consumer goods, some of the sharpest increases are to be found in new types of goods not yet available in quantity from Canadian plants. It is apparent, therefore, that a very large proportion of the increased volume of goods coming into Canada has been necessary to supplement domestic supplies. While imports of goods which compete directly with Canadian products have also increased, this increase has not prevented higher production levels in the domestic industries concerned.

With very few exceptions activity in Canada's secondary manufacturing industries is now running well ahead of the levels prevailing in 1954. These considerations suggest that in the circumstances now prevailing in Canada a rapid rise in imports is not to be deplored. On the contrary, it is highly desirable. In the first place, it helps to speed industrial expansion while market opportunities are still present. Second, it helps to ease the pressure on domestic resources and thereby prevents inflationary tendencies and unhealthy speculative excesses which might benefit individual groups but would react to the disadvantage of the community at large. Even those who are prone to deplore the rising level of imports would, I am sure, be concerned if a prolonged steel strike in the United States were to bring about a reduction of imports at the expense of those great projects which depend upon the availability of structural and other types of steel produced in United States mills.

A much sharper rise in imports than of exports has resulted in a substantially increased deficit in merchandise trade. It is customary for Canada to run a deficit on non-merchandise transactions, and when this is added to the imbalance on trade the resulting deficit on all current account transactions amounted to $345 million for the first quarter of 1956. In other words, Canada's international balance of payments on current transactions is at the moment showing a deficit amounting to about one-quarter of total receipts from abroad.

Balance of payment deficits sometimes occur when countries, in one way or another, attempt to maintain living standards out of line with their productive potentialities. For this reason adverse international balances are often associated in the public mind with financial weakness. In fact, for most countries a current deficit of the same relative magnitude as that now being encountered by Canada would mean serious trouble.

In Canada's present circumstances, however, this deficit is not a reflection of weakness but of strength; it is the direct result of rapid industrial growth and rising living standards which are no more than commensurate with the nation's productive capacities. In fact, as I have indicated, a major portion of current investment is for additions to capacity in export industries. In other words, the very strength of Canada's export prospects is one of the principal reasons for the current import surplus.

Present expansion plans also involve substantial additions for the production of goods now being purchased from abroad. Both these types of expansion will primarily affect trade with the United States. Further increases in the production of forest products, minerals and chemicals will tend to boost our future exports to that country. At the same time the round of expansion now taking place in steel, fuels and various chemicals will replace goods now being purchased from United States suppliers. It is important that the present deficit with the United States be considered in the light of these underlying developments.

The most conclusive evidence of the basic strength of Canada's external position is the fact that despite the large deficit on current account, we are not encountering balance of payment difficulties. The increasing rate at which investment funds are coming into the country gives ample proof of the confidence placed in Canada's position and future prospects. So far this inflow of funds has been sufficient to match the rising deficit on current account, with but an inconsequential decline in official holdings of gold and United States dollars and with continuing firmness in the external value of the Canadian dollar. The Canadian dollar is stronger now than it was for some time in spite of the large trade deficit.

There might be some reason for concern about the present situation if foreign investors were shying away from Canada, if they were worried about Canadian economic or political stability. There might be some reason for concern about the present situation if we were living beyond our means or were building up uneconomic industries. But this is not the situation. Foreign investors all over the world have confidence in Canada. They are confident that this country will continue to be in a position to meet its obligations. They are strengthened in that belief by the evidence that a great deal of the new investment is going into industries which help to increase exports or reduce imports, thus adding to Canadian financial and economic stability for future years.

I am astonished when I listen to criticism of the current trade deficit, which is so essential to our current phase of expansion and development. Perhaps, however, the opposition is really opposed to the development of the country but hesitates to say so, since this point of view would not be popular with the people of Canada. Certainly they would find themselves unpopular with the provincial governments of this country which, without exception, are promoting the development of their respective territories and are encouraging industries from outside the country to establish in Canada.

Mr. Fleming: That wasn't very funny.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I would now like to say something about the processing of raw materials. Most of the complaints we hear about the lack of processing of domestic raw materials in Canada are based on two premises: (1) that by using more of these materials at home we would be providing more jobs for Canadians, and (2) that if we cannot use these resources at home or cannot sell them abroad in processed or fabricated form, we should let them remain in the ground, the forest or the sea, to protect the national heritage of future generations of Canadians.

Let me say right from the start that the Canadian government is just as much interested as the members on the opposite side in seeing that a high level of employment is maintained in our country, and that the national interest is safeguarded for the benefit of the present as well as future generations of Canadians. In fact many of the Canadian government's economic policies are directed to this very end; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, they have been eminently successful, as the post-war record of economic achievement in Canada shows very clearly.

The main point to remember is that in many fields if it were not for our export markets, Canadian production would have to be cut back severely and costs of production would rise materially. In wheat, for example in a good crop year we export up to two thirds of our output. In nickel we export some 99 per cent of our production, in asbestos 96 per cent, in newsprint 93 per cent, in aluminum 87 per cent, and in copper 66 per cent. As to iron ore, we exported last year about 84 per cent of our total domestic production, and this proportion may rise further over the next few years as production is likely to expand at a considerably more rapid rate than domestic consumption.

The point has been made that by keeping raw materials at home, processing them here and then fabricating finished products, employment will be increased in Canada. Well, I submit, Mr. Speaker, if we were to stop exports of a number of our important industrial materials the opposite would happen. We would have less employment, incomes would fall, and the standard of living of Canadians would drop. Obviously we cannot use some 100 times as much nickel as we are in fact doing, nor 25 times as much asbestos, 14 times as much newsprint, 7½ times as much aluminum, six times as much iron ore, and three times as much copper, as we would have to in order to make use of all these raw materials we are producing. Nor can we eat three times as much bread and cake, which we would have to do to use up all our wheat at home.

Two things could happen if we stopped exports of this or that important raw material: (1) our customers could turn to alternative sources of supply. Don't let us fool ourselves. There are plenty of natural resources available in the world. They may not be as conveniently located as they are in Canada, or they may be in countries with a less stable economic climate and government than we have here in Canada. But if our customers abroad could not get the raw materials and foodstuffs they urgently need and in the form they wanted them from us, I am sure they would develop sources of supply somewhere else, or they might turn to alternative materials that in the end might serve their purposes just as well. (2) Since we could not possibly use all the materials at home, we would have to close some of our mines, mills and factories. People laid off in these industries would spend less, affecting people employed in our fabricating industries and in our service industries. Unemployment would spread and the country would be going down instead of up.

I hardly think even the members on the opposite side of this house would want to see this happen in Canada. But this is what could happen and in my considered opinion would happen if Canadians resorted to artificial measures on a broad scale to interfere with the forces of the market, and in the process disturbed the balanced economic growth which Canada has been undergoing in the more recent period. In the present buoyant state of the Canadian economy the argument that keeping raw materials in this country increases jobs is not only academic, it is also fallacious.

One of the most noteworthy developments in Canada is the high degree of industrialization of our economy. Every fourth person working in our country is now employed in manufacturing industries, and approximately one out of every three dollars of our national income is earned in Canadian industrial plants. No wonder, then, that Canada has become an important importer of industrial raw materials and fuel, including bauxite, cotton, wool, coal and crude oil. Last year, for example, we imported $530 million of industrial materials in raw form. We exported a total of $3·25 billion of industrial materials. But of this amount $2·8 billion represented materials sold abroad in processed form. Only about $425 million went out in raw form. Hence in our trade in raw materials and fuels used by industry, Canada was a net importer of industrial raw materials, to the tune of some $105 million in 1955.

This situation, of course, is not static. We are likely to export more iron ore in the future. But then some of our other industrial materials which are now exported in raw form may be moving into the category of materials processed at home in some form or another; for example, pulpwood, copper, etc. It is well to remember when we complain about exports of our raw materials that we import raw materials to the value of $105 million in excess of the value of the raw materials that we export.

I have heard the question asked, why are we exporting so much iron ore? Why are we not using more at home? Well, hon. members will be interested to hear that out of 5·1 million tons of iron ore used last year by Canada's five largest steel mills, 3·8 million tons were imported. In the midst of Canada's greatest surpluses of iron ore, our steel manufacturers are presently using almost three times as much imported ore as domestic ore.

There are good reasons for this. Steel makers need different types of iron ore for mixing purposes. Some types are not available in Canada or only at much higher prices than they can buy these types of ores, say, in the United States. Why should a Canadian steel company pay higher prices for Canadian iron ore if it can get that iron ore at a lower price somewhere else? Would opposition members recommend that Canadian steel companies be forced to pay more for Canadian ore and thus price themselves out of the market? Does it not make more economic sense to buy the iron ore in the cheapest market to enable the Canadian steel industry to remain competitive? Or in a broader national context, does it not make economic sense for Canada to sell iron ore, crude oil or any other industrial raw material to the United States where this can be done competitively, and to bring in the same or similar materials from the United States where these materials can be bought more cheaply than Canadian products, which because of added transportation costs might be higher priced?

Incidentally, one of our largest Canadian steel companies has substantial sums of money invested in United States iron ore mines. If Canada stopped the export of iron ore to the United States or made it difficult for such ore to get to the United States, could Canadian importers of iron ore rightly expect any different treatment? May I remind the house that Canada depends quite heavily on imports of industrial materials in both the raw and processed forms from the United States. It is not just iron ore; we also buy from the United States oil, coal, cotton, sulphur, brimstone, phosphate rock, etc.

The United States has traditionally protected Canada's supply of raw materials in times of shortage, and the Canadian government appreciates the co-operative attitude of the United States administration. You will recall how our friends to the south continued to supply Canada with such scarce items as steel during world war II and during the period of rearmament which followed the outbreak of war in Korea, even though that meant cutting down the domestic consumption. Canada did the same with such materials as nickel, copper, aluminum, etc. North America has a good deal to gain from the efficient development of these resources and from a continuously expanding exchange of such materials. Our hope, of course, is that more and more of the materials we supply as our part of the exchange will be processed at home. We have made a good deal of progress in this direction, as I shall elaborate later, and we believe we will continue to make good progress.

The Leader of the Opposition says we are not processing enough of our raw materials in Canada. What does he mean by enough? I have already pointed out that it just does not make economic sense to smelt in Canada every ton of iron ore we are capable of producing, or to refine every barrel of oil that comes out of the ground. If we look at the actual achievements in the growth of our processing industries they are remarkable indeed, and are perhaps the best answer to those who want to give the impression that our processing industries are shrinking violets and are making little progress.

Increased processing of raw materials in Canada is reflected in substantial expansion in the production of a number of our major industries in the post-war period. For example, the value of manufactures of primary iron and steel rose three times over the last decade, reaching a total of half a billion dollars last year. Non-ferrous metal production reached a peak of $1·1 billion dollars in 1955, some three times the value ten years earlier. Pulp and paper production chalked up a record of $1⅓ billion last year, three and one-third times the 1945 value. The chemical industry for the first time in its history joined the billion dollar club of Canadian industries in 1955, more than doubling the value of its 1945 output.

The chemical industry is perhaps an outstanding example of the rapid industrial progress and diversification the Canadian economy has been experiencing in the more recent period. World war II transformed a rather modest industry into a mushrooming giant, one that produced many of the chemicals needed to win the war. After the war's end much of these gains were consolidated, with new chemicals being produced in Canada as accessibility of raw materials and the growth of domestic and foreign markets warranted.

A large number of chemicals have been produced for the first time in Canada since the end of the war, or have been produced by means of new and more efficient processes. They include petrochemicals such as acetone, formaldehyde, acetic acid, acetic anhydride, isobutanol, methanol, normal proponal, pentaerythritol, normal propyl acetate, and propylene glycol. Other products include synthetic resins such as polyethylene, polystyrene and polyesters. Then there is ethylene glycol, used widely for antifreeze. Carbon black is now being produced in Canada, and demand is so heavy that output is being doubled in the near future. Pharmaceutical products produced in Canada for the first time in the post-war period are too numerous to mention, but perhaps an outstanding example is the production of poliomyelitis vaccine by the Connaught laboratories and the University of Montreal. There are too many hard words in that paragraph.

I could go on and tell you similar stories of the achievements and programs of our other major processing industries, but perhaps I have said enough to indicate that there is no lack—and I repeat—no lack of processing of Canadian raw materials in Canada. On the contrary, our processing and advanced manufacturing industries are expanding rapidly. This expansion is well balanced and is accompanied by growth in our resources industries which cater to both Canadian and foreign markets.

As a result of Canada's rapid process of industrialization our country now occupies a position second only to the United States in terms of output per capita of manufacturing industries. I am sure hon. members will be gratified to hear that in relation to our total labour force employed there are about as many people working in manufacturing industries in Canada as there are in the United States, about 25 per cent in both countries. Approximately 16 per cent are in what is known as fabricating industries or advanced manufacturing industries, that is, motor cars, railway rolling stock, typewriters, etc., and 9 per cent in processing industries, pulp and paper, aluminum, primary iron and steel. The United States proportions are similar, 17 per cent and 8 per cent. Surely if a country with only about one-tenth the population of the United States has achieved a structure of industry that is not too different from that of the world's leading industrialized nation it is something to be proud of.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would now like to put before the house a few key facts about foreign investment in Canada and Canadian investment abroad. I propose to show:

First, that Canadians are financing out of their own savings an increasing proportion of the capital expansion of their country and that, if present trends continue, Canada is likely to become a creditor nation within the next quarter of a century.

Second, that in relation to our growing productive capacity the burden of foreign investment is declining, while Canadian investment abroad is increasing by leaps and bounds.

Third, that Canadian ownership of capital employed in Canadian industry has increased more rapidly than non-residential ownership. The trend in over-all terms is toward the Canadianization of Canadian industry.

I shall conclude with a few observations about the benefits accruing to the Canadian economy from the inflow of foreign capital into Canadian resources and industrial development, and I shall mention some of the difficulties that are being encountered.

The free and unhampered flow of foreign investment into Canada has brought so many benefits to this country that it certainly is entitled to a fair and unbiased hearing from the Canadian people. We do not want such discussion to be carried out in an atmosphere of emotionalism and ignorance, but rather in one in which common sense and good will prevail. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that after considering the facts Canadians will continue to endorse the policies of this government.

What are the government's policies in the investment field? The principal objectives of our policy are to create an economic climate in which private enterprise thrives and businessmen and capital, whether domestic or foreign, are encouraged to take risks to contribute to the rapid development of our country to the benefit of Canada and all others participating in our development.

We expect foreign investors in Canada to respect our laws as Canadians do. We expect them to show a sense of responsibility in financial, managerial, resources use and trade methods. We expect them to take an interest in the long-term development of their enterprises, to give Canadians opportunities to participate financially and managerially in the growth of these companies and generally to justify the confidence that Canadians have placed in foreign-controlled companies operating in this country by treating them in the same way as they treat their own companies. It will be useful for foreign-controlled companies operating in Canada to remember that they are expected to behave in most matters like Canadian-owned companies do, and that their success or failure must tie in with the ebb and flow of Canadian economic expansion.

Now, what are the facts?

An hon. Member: What have we heard so far?

An hon. Member: A very good speech.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I listened patiently this afternoon to some of the greatest rot I have heard in my life, so please listen to me this evening. Canada has always been dependent on a substantial inflow of capital to develop the country, to expand industry, to build a transportation network and to create the many other facilities which a rapidly expanding economy requires.

In the 89 years since confederation there has been an important change in the pattern of financing Canadian investment. In the nineteenth century the overwhelming proportion of our capital expansion was financed by capital coming from the United Kingdom and the United States. Then during the first two decades of this century the rapid settlement, urbanization and industrialization that took place made it possible for Canadians to accumulate a more significant volume of savings, which found its way into Canadian investment. While statistics of this type are scarce, what information we have suggests that something like two-thirds of Canadian investment was financed by funds from abroad during this period. The years that followed saw a further improvement, and by the late 1920's about one-half of gross capital formation in Canada was financed from Canadian savings, the other half through non-resident financing.

During world war II Canada herself was able to finance almost wholly the capital expenditures on facilities required to turn out munitions of war, to train the armed forces, and to keep the civilian economy going. After the war's end foreign investors started sending capital to Canada again to participate in our economic expansion. Still about 80 per cent of all of Canada's gross capital formation was financed from Canadian savings and 20 per cent through direct foreign financing in the period 1946 to 1949. In the last five years the inflow of foreign capital has been stepped up, and the ratio of Canadian to foreign financing of gross capital formation has been about three to one.

In fact, however, Canadian savings available for investment were much greater than these figures would suggest. A good portion of these savings were invested abroad. From 1946 to 1949 and for some years before that, and again in 1952, Canada was a net exporter of capital. So if one allows for Canadian investments abroad and the use of foreign resources as a percentage of net capital formation, it turns out that not more than 6 per cent of Canadian investment in the post-war period depended on foreign resources.

To look at foreign investment in Canada in its proper perspective, we must see it in the light of what Canadians are doing abroad. I have noticed that some hon. members on the opposite side have been quoting from a recent publication of the dominion bureau of statistics, "Canada's International Investment Position 1926-1954". I have noticed how careful they have been in not bringing to light any facts or figures which would bring out the positive achievements of Canadians in this field of foreign investment. The reasons are fairly clear, since most of the trends are favourable to the Canadian position. Instead of being proud of that, opposition members prefer to pick on a few figures, and out of context at that, to support their claim that Canadian industry is going to the dogs because of foreign domination.

Mr. Fleming: That is utter rot.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Thank you for that contribution. Before the war Canadians had gross liabilities to other countries of $7·4 billion. Their assets abroad amounted to $1·9 billion. Their net indebtedness amounted to $5·5 billion. In other words, for every dollar Canadians had invested abroad they owed about four to other countries.

By the end of 1955 gross liabilities to other countries had risen to $14·5 billion, amounting to about double what they had been in 1939. Canada's gross external assets had risen to $7 billion, or about four times what they had been in 1939. Currently for every $2 Canadians owe abroad, $1 is due them. If this trend continues I would not be surprised to see Canada in the next quarter of a century move from a position of a debtor to that of a creditor nation. In fact, as I said earlier, in some years we already have been making available to other countries more capital than we have been bringing in. In a way, then, one can say that for some years Canada has already been a creditor nation. But this trend is likely to become even more clearly apparent as our economy gathers strength and savings continue to accumulate in Canada at a rapid rate.

We hear little complaint about foreign investment in Canada other than that directed at investment by United States residents. Now, out of the $14·5 billion of money Canada owes to other countries, about $13·2 billion is foreign capital invested in Canada and the remainder is Canadian dollar holdings of non-residents and short-term assets. Of the latter amount some three-quarters is United States investments.

More detailed figures available for 1954 enable us to compare the long-term investments of Canadians in the United States with those of United States residents in Canada. Hon. members will be interested to learn that at the end of 1954 the average Canadian had invested $121 in the United States, while the average United States investor had invested less than half that amount in Canada, $59. To suggest that the average Canadian investor is a timid soul, as I have heard it said, while the United States investor is bold and venturesome, is not quite supported by the facts, if we consider Canadian and United States investments in each other's countries on a per capita basis.

This is in no way intended to disparage the importance of the large United States stake in Canada, or the enterprise and imagination shown by some of the large United States companies in participating in Canadian resources and industrial development. But the point I would like to make is that for a country as small as Canada with only about one-tenth the population of the United States and one-fifteenth of its national output, Canadians have made substantial investments abroad. The bulk of it is in the United States, but fairly sizeable amounts are also invested in the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries, Latin America, western Europe, Africa and Asia.

Now, to come to the role of foreign capital in Canada, let us consider for a moment what foundations there are for the scare stories which are being spread by some members of the opposition, which have led the hon. member for Broadview to use the picturesque phrase of Canada becoming an "economic vassal" of the United States, or the hon. member for Three Rivers to revive the ghost of economic colonialism, which I thought was buried 89 years ago.

Foreign investors have shown preferences for investment in certain sectors of the Canadian economy, particularly oil and natural gas, mining, and certain branches of manufacturing such as motor cars, appliances, electrical and electronic equipment. In these fields in which they have concentrated they have invested large amounts, and in some sectors they frequently own or control the bulk of the assets. But we have to see foreign investment in Canada in its proper perspective, and that is in relation to the growth of capital owned by Canadian residents. The fact of the matter is that Canadian capital has been expanding over the last decade and a half at a rate about twice as great as that of foreign capital in Canada. This is illustrated by the growth of resident-owned capital in selected Canadian industries from $7·4 billion in 1939 to $17·2 billion in 1953, an increase of 132 per cent. During the same period non-resident capital rose from $4·5 billion to $8·3 billion, an increase of 84 per cent.

There is the further point that Canadian business has relied more and more on domestic sources for the capital needed for this expansion. As a result foreign direct investment in Canada has been expanding at a much slower pace than has outlay by private business. Over the period 1939 to 1955, for example, foreign direct investment in Canada more than tripled while outlay by private business increased to nine times the 1939 level.

I have heard it suggested that the growth of foreign investment in Canada is putting unbearable strain on the economy of the country. Those who make this suggestion want to give the impression that our foreign investors are interested in nothing but making a quick profit. The fact is that a large proportion of the Canadian earnings of foreign investors is reinvested in Canadian development. Further, Canada's economy has been growing at such a rapid rate that the role of foreign investment in relation to our productive capacity has diminished and will continue to do so.

You will recall that I mentioned that our gross liabilities to other countries have about doubled between 1939 and 1955. Over this same period our gross national product has risen to four times what it was before the war. Obviously as our productive capacity continues to grow more rapidly than the inflow of foreign capital, the burden of carrying this foreign investment is reduced.

[Mr. Howe (Port Arthur).]

Mr. Lennard: Now I have heard everything.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Did you listen carefully?

Mr. Lennard: I certainly did.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): One thing about it, you will keep it to yourself. You will not tell the house about it.

Mr. Lennard: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I say that when I speak in this house I speak without notes, and nobody writes my speech for me.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): There were other matters referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. Reference was made to the growth of research in the country. We have a very good story about the growth of research. Last year we spent over $100 million in research. We appointed a committee to investigate research in Canada and on their findings I think that no one would mention Canada being deficient in research. However, I shall leave that matter for another hon. member of this party to elaborate on.

It has been suggested that we have unlimited fuel resources. That is true. We have hydroelectric power probably in greater proportion in relation to our industry than any other country. We have great resources of coal. We have recently developed great resources of oil and we have built a pipe line to convey that oil to markets. I would point out, however, that with all the development of oil, we have not improved our position as far as imports of oil are concerned. We are importing as much as ever, Canadian production only keeping pace with the increase in consumption of oil. We have recently discovered natural gas, and I am happy to report that as a result of the worst battle I have ever seen in this parliament we have succeeded in beginning the means of distribution of that natural gas to Canadian consumers.

We have a great country in Canada. It has been developing in a way that is marvelled at by other countries in the world. I am happy to find that each year shows a pyramiding of that development. We are not developing at a steady rate; we are developing at an accelerated rate. I really believe that anyone who cares to examine the financial position of this country, its rate of growth and its rate of industrialization will conclude that the government does not need to begin now to adopt a policy for the development of Canada.

Mr. A. J. Brooks (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate this evening and to support the resolution introduced this afternoon by my leader, which advocates a national policy for this country. I listened with great attention to the remarks of the minister and, as he was speaking, the thought occurred to me that his remarks could very well apply to certain limited sections of this Dominion of Canada. However, I am of the opinion that they do not apply to all of Canada. I do not believe that the people in western Canada, for instance, who have not been able to sell their wheat in the last two or three years, would agree with what has been said by him this evening. I am also satisfied that if the people in the eastern provinces of Canada could have heard the remarks made by the minister tonight, very few of them would agree with what has been said.

In speaking tonight I wish to say that my remarks will relate to that particular part of the country from which I come, namely the maritime provinces. By the minister who just took his seat and by other hon. members we have been told—in fact we do not need to be told of this—of the great wealth of resources we have in this dominion. We all realize that fact. There is no other country in the world that is so blessed with resources as is the Dominion of Canada. The minister mentioned the fact that we were selling, for instance, 84 per cent of our iron ore. I do not believe that the future of Canada is going to depend upon the selling of our raw materials to the extent of 84 per cent or, as is the case down in my own province of New Brunswick, our base metals to the extent of 100 per cent. I do not believe that Canada or any other country can be built on such a policy as that.

The minister spoke tonight as though a Canadian policy was something for immediate attention. Policy is something that is devised not for immediate use in a country but for the building of a country in the future. I believe that role would be fulfilled by this policy mentioned in the resolution, if it were carried out. If Canada is blessed with great resources and great assets, we in the maritimes—and I hasten to say this—also have our blessings. We in eastern Canada feel that there is no finer section of Canada in which to live. We depend mostly on primary production, farming, fishing, lumbering and mining.

So far as our farming is concerned, it is well known that our dairy products are surpassed by none in Canada. Our potatoes, one of our great crops, are one of the finest crops, of course, in this Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Harris: And you are getting a good price for them, too.

Mr. Brooks: As I said a moment ago, we in Nova Scotia are not living in the present alone, and I am going to speak of the past as well as the future. Nova Scotia apples have been the finest of those to be found in any section of this Canada of ours. Speaking of our fishing I remember being told some years ago that the north Atlantic fisheries were the finest in the world because of the cold water in which we caught our fish. Our lumber is another of our great assets. The fastest growing lumber to be found anywhere in Canada is found in my own province of New Brunswick.

We also have our mining industry. Up to the present, except for Nova Scotia where they have great coal fields, mining has been very limited. However, I am proud to say that in my province of New Brunswick we have in recent years discovered great fields of basic and other metals. If I were not too modest I should like to mention the people of New Brunswick. A few moments ago the minister spoke about the men who had developed Canada. I want to say this. I believe no people in this dominion have played as great a part in building up this country as have those who have come from the eastern provinces.

Now, having mentioned the assets with which we are blessed, the question might very well be asked, if we have so many blessings in eastern Canada why is it that we are complaining? Well, take our agricultural products, for instance. We want no imports in the maritime provinces today. A few minutes ago the minister said it was a splendid thing for a country to have many imports. I want to point out to him that in the maritime provinces at least, and I believe in the rest of Canada, what we need now is not imports but exports. We want to export our apples, for instance, from the Annapolis valley. We want to have an export market for the fish we produce. We want to export our potatoes. The minister said we were getting a good price for them now. We may be getting a good price for them now, but last fall the farmers were not getting a good price for them. A good many farmers sold them at a very low price, and many other farmers had to destroy their potatoes. That is not the sort of export market we want in this country.

Then, our income in eastern Canada has been about 30 per cent below the national income. It is all very well for the minister to get up in this house and say that everything is fine in Canada, the people are all prosperous. In this country or any other, unless you have a balanced economy from one end of the country to the other there is something wrong with the policies which are inaugurated and being carried out by the government in power. This is the situation in our country. It is nothing new. Perhaps it is because Canada is a new country and has not had time to get certain matters ironed out. Nevertheless it is a fact that there are very prosperous sections of this dominion under present policies, and then again there are other sections of Canada which are not prosperous.

Another factor besides the fiscal policy of this country which has reacted against the eastern provinces has been that of geography. We are more or less at the end of the line, you might say. Canada is a great country which stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It has been very difficult as a result of the transportation problem for the eastern provinces to sell their goods in central Canada. Before confederation we were the most prosperous section of the country. I am not going to go into history now. As a matter of fact that was many years ago, and I do not think history is of any practical benefit so far as economics is concerned.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, the economic policies of this government and previous governments as well as our poor geographical position, the economy of eastern Canada has for a long period of time been in a depressed state. The forces which have caused this condition, as I said, are beyond the control of the different provinces. I have mentioned geography, national policy and the monopolistic competition from other parts of Canada as well as the United States, which have been the chief basic contributing factors. Except for a brief period during the depression when the prairie sections were particularly hard hit, the per capita income of the maritime provinces was the lowest in Canada. It still is the lowest. While our internal situation improved during the war, since the war it has not improved. There is nothing to indicate that our relative position is any better. A more equitable share of the national income is for us a vital matter.

This statement of our position is in line with the views of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations some few years ago, which were expressed as follows:

> New Brunswick shares with Nova Scotia the unhappy distinction of the longest unfavourable economic history of any Canadian province.

This extract will be found in book II, page 91 of the report. Earlier in the report the commission pointed this out:

> The general effect of national policies has been to accelerate the natural shift of industry and finance, and of concentration of wealth and income, to central Canada.

This quotation is found in book I, page 190. The remedies for such conditions lie primarily with the federal authorities which, under the constitution, have exclusive jurisdiction in all matters of national importance, including such items as tariffs, freight rates, international and interprovincial trade, credit, exchange and monetary policy. These are subject matters of fundamental concern to the primary industries upon which the welfare of the people of the eastern provinces chiefly depends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, speaking of our development policy the Prime Minister gave an address in Edmonton in September of 1955, and he had this to say:

> Canada stands at the threshold of expansion unequalled in our history. We believe that if we can maintain a vigorous and expanding economy, and if we can create the conditions under which Canadians can avail themselves of the great opportunities that this country presents, then none of us need fear for his future or for the future of the nation.

We have no quarrel with that statement. Truly we have great opportunities in this country from the east to the west, but most of the opportunities today are concentrated in central Canada. What is the government doing to promote great expansion in Canada? Well, the Prime Minister in this same address spoke of the St. Lawrence seaway. He had this to say:

> This project seems to illustrate a truth that is too often forgotten—that any contribution to the Canadian economy is a contribution to all of Canada and not just to the area immediately concerned.

There is a question in the eastern provinces as to whether the St. Lawrence seaway does contribute to the economy of all Canada. We will not know until the seaway is built. However, we are not objecting to paying. We are willing to pay our full share of the cost of development of the St. Lawrence seaway. If it will be of benefit to other parts of Canada we are willing to share in the cost of construction for such benefits. But why is the St. Lawrence seaway the only project in which the government is engaged at the present time, outside of the pipe line which the minister mentioned a few minutes ago?

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that all Canada would gain if assistance were given to the development of hydroelectric power on the Saint John river. We feel that we are entitled to this consideration just as much as a United States company is entitled to assistance from this government in building a pipe line in western Canada. We believe that all of Canada would benefit if the Passamaquoddy were developed in New Brunswick, if it is found that it is a feasible development for electric power. We believe that the Chignecto canal would be of benefit to all other parts of Canada, just as the St. Lawrence seaway is, if it also proves to be practical and feasible. This government has never undertaken to find out whether the Chignecto canal would be practical and should be constructed.

I could mention the South Saskatchewan power and irrigation project. I believe this project would be of great benefit to the people of western Canada. We of the maritime provinces are anxious and willing to do our part in the development of something which will be of benefit to this country. We believe that a policy for the sale of Nova Scotia coal, something which is so necessary to the economy of that great province, would be a great help. We feel that more could be done by policies such as were mentioned by my leader in his amendment this afternoon for the development of coal in Nova Scotia.

I could also mention the Columbia river and other things which are just as important, I believe more so, to the people in that section of the country than would be the St. Lawrence seaway to British Columbia, or to Newfoundland, or even to New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It is public investment in the types of projects that I have mentioned that would encourage private investment, domestic and foreign, that we need for our expansion. It is on the firm basis of things like the St. Lawrence seaway, natural gas, electric power, irrigation and reclamation that people build homes, offices and factories. These are the sort of things that keep our people at home; these are the things that bring industries to our country and, through industry, we bring in immigrants and help to build up a country, not in one particular section as is happening in Canada today, but in the east as well as in the west, so we shall have a well-balanced country from one end of Canada to the other.

This only emphasizes that we need a great national development policy which will assist provincial governments to develop projects which can be demonstrated to be both practical and capable of expanding their economy. It is also through such a policy that we can develop potential sources of cheap power across this country. My leader today well said that this government has failed to assist the parts of Canada where the need is the greatest. Any fiscal policy of this country must take into consideration the weaker sections of the dominion. A policy which does not do that is not a national policy.

I could refer to the $45 million Beechwood project on the Saint John river in New Brunswick. If we are not to export all our raw basic metals from the northern part of our province we need 250,000 kilowatts of electric power in and around Bathurst; we need 100,000 kilowatts at Woodstock, where 200 million tons of manganese has been discovered, a metal which is very rare not only in Canada but on this North American continent. We would like to have the power there to process this manganese in our own section of the dominion. It is estimated that in a short time we shall need 420,000 kilowatts. We have not got that, and it will tax our resources to the utmost. I doubt whether the province of New Brunswick, without some financial assistance by way of lending money, can develop its resources. We are not asking for any handout. What we want is a policy under which money can be lent to those provinces which need it to develop electric power in order that we may process the metals and the raw materials we have.

We also have a pulp and paper industry in New Brunswick. It is the greatest industry we have. Today we are exporting a lot of raw pulp from the province of New Brunswick. If we had more electric power in New Brunswick we could build more pulp mills. I understand there is a concern which is going to build a mill in the southern section of the province if sufficient electric power can be obtained. Power is the key to success not only in Ontario and Quebec, but in other parts of this dominion.

We have often spoken of decentralization in the Dominion of Canada. There will never be decentralization of industry in Canada unless assistance is given to those provinces which need assistance so much. I wish to repeat, Mr. Speaker, what we must do to strengthen our economy and to increase employment in the country. What we must do is process far more of our primary products right here in Canada. Despite what the minister says, we in the eastern provinces must process more of our raw materials if we are to have anything like the prosperity which exists in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Today we seem perfectly content to ship most of our vast supplies of natural resources out of the country in their raw state to feed mass producing machines of the United States and other countries. There is no reason why a far larger proportion—I do not say all; no one on this side of the house says that all our materials must be processed here in Canada—of our raw materials should not be processed into finished articles by Canadian workmen in Canadian factories. If United States and German workmen can turn primary products into manufactured articles which find a ready sale in export markets throughout the world, there is no reason why Canadian workmen cannot do the same thing in Canadian plants.

What is needed is for the federal government to give a lead to industry by sponsoring a greatly expanded industrial research program. The minister mentioned research tonight. There is no question that there is a considerable amount of research being done in Canada, but there is not sufficient being done. More could be done to the great advantage of industry here in Canada by revising our taxation policies to encourage new industries to get started and present industries to expand. We have within our borders everything needed to make Canada into one of the greatest industrial nations of the world. Upon the federal government lies the great responsibility of seeing that we make the most of our great opportunities, and that our industrial progress is as rapid as possible. This, I repeat, is something the federal government must do. The provinces are not in a position to do that either through the fiscal policies of this government or in any other way.

When I spoke here some time ago I quoted from a former premier of the province of New Brunswick. He was speaking before the dominion-provincial conference in Ottawa in 1946, and was dealing with the situation in the maritime provinces at that time. He said:

> Let it be remembered again that the control of all matters national in their scope and which affect most vitally the social and economic well-being of the people in the provinces is now vested in the central government. I have already mentioned the main items. The chronic unbalance in the Canadian economy with the heavy concentration of industrial, commercial and financial power in certain favoured areas, is due to the play of forces under the control of the dominion parliament and government since confederation. That situation is capable of being remedied, and only remedied, through national policy—

—a national policy, Mr. Speaker, such as is outlined in this resolution which was presented this afternoon. We who have read the history of the United States know that after the civil war and until just a few years ago the southern part of the United States was very poor. They exported their raw cotton to the north and out of the country. A few years ago it was decided by the federal government in Washington that they would give assistance in the development of electric power in the southern United States. They set up the great T.V.A., built the Tennessee valley dam, and they built other dams and hydroelectric plants in the southern United States, with the result that today that section of the United States has developed as a great manufacturing part of the country. They also did the same thing in the western United States along the Columbia river. What should be done here is that a similar policy should be adopted for Canada. England has done the same thing in developing certain areas that were not in as good an economic condition as others.

We have been told at different times—and it is something we do not mind being told—that we should do something for ourselves. I do not think there is anyone here who believes that the maritime provinces have shirked either in trying to do something for themselves or for other parts of Canada. If the history of the industrial development of Canada were written I think it would be found that the people of the maritimes have done more than their part in developing the west and north and other sections of this dominion.

As far as helping ourselves is concerned, an organization called the Atlantic provinces economic council was recently formed in the Atlantic provinces. This organization is making great efforts to assist in the development of industry in these provinces. I think I might mention the premier of my own province of New Brunswick, Hon. Hugh John Flemming. He has advocated a policy of expansion under a ten-year program. He wishes to develop hydroelectric power on the Saint John river which will cost approximately $211 million, which is a lot of money for a province such as ours. His intention is that through the development of power he can bring smelters into the province to look after the smelting of the metals that have been discovered there. He wants to have more pulp and paper mills built in the province of New Brunswick. He also wants to bring in other industries from outside, and he knows the only way they can be encouraged to come is through providing cheap power.

The Prime Minister gave us some advice not very long ago. We have had lots of advice from other parts of this country concerning what we should do. Speaking before the labour convention in Toronto a few months ago with reference to the economic development of the Atlantic provinces, the Prime Minister had this to say:

> . . . economic redevelopment of the Atlantic provinces deserves consideration. . . . special measures should perhaps be taken to improve the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

The Prime Minister should not have said special measures "should perhaps be taken" to improve the economy of the Atlantic provinces; I think as prime minister of this country he should have said "special measures must be taken" to improve the economy of the Atlantic provinces. He went on to say:

> This merits and is receiving attention from many of us. However, the initiative and the ideas, the energies and the determination to accomplish this redevelopment cannot originate in other parts of Canada; they must come from the Atlantic area.

That was looked on as a challenge by the people of the maritime provinces and eastern Canada, and I might say the challenge has been accepted. It has certainly been accepted by the four premiers of the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. They are meeting today in the city of Fredericton, and I can assure the Prime Minister and this government they will come forward with plans and schemes—they will not be altogether new, because they have been recommended time and time again before dominion-provincial conferences—which if put into effect will greatly benefit these provinces in future.

I should like to quote briefly from some of the remarks our premier made at the dominion-provincial conference in 1955. When speaking of the processing of natural resources in my own province, Mr. Flemming said:

> The government of New Brunswick will not stand idly by and allow these natural resources to lie dormant. Your government is determined that our mineral wealth shall not be dug up and carted away from this province to be processed elsewhere.

That should be the policy not only of the province of New Brunswick but as far as possible it should be the policy of the whole of the Dominion of Canada. He continued:

> The aim of the government is to supply the mining companies with power cheap enough to insure the economic processing of our minerals in New Brunswick.

As I said, this same policy could very well be followed for the whole Dominion of Canada. I might also say it is the same policy which was followed by our leader when he was premier of the province of Ontario. It was practised in Ontario at that time, and I am satisfied it will be practised in the Dominion of Canada when the leader of the Conservative party becomes the prime minister of this country. At the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects Mr. Flemming, speaking of the industrial and economic growth of Canada, said:

> As a matter of fact, for nearly one hundred years the relative economic level of this province—

He could have said the same thing for all the eastern provinces.

> —has been steadily declining, as tables in our brief will indicate. Since 1952 there have been signs that this trend may be reversed. Foremost among them has been, of course, the discovery of huge mineral deposits here. But unless we can supply adequate amounts of low-cost electrical energy this great wealth will only be dug up to be carted away and processed elsewhere. New Brunswick will be destined for years to come to remain the hewer of wood and the drawer of water that it has been for years past. But, gentlemen, this province is no longer content to remain one of the weakest links in the confederation. If need be, we will fight for our place in the economic sun.

He went on to say:

> Whenever they have been called on in the past, our citizens have been more than prepared to accept the sacrifices and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship. The time has come when they must be accorded all the rights and privileges of such citizenship. We cannot accept anything less than this.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is about up. I am satisfied that if the principles set out in this resolution now before us are adopted and become the policy of Canada, the future of this country is assured, not only that of certain favoured sections; because when the minister was speaking tonight we who come from other sections could not take any other idea from his remarks than that he was speaking for certain favoured sections of the Dominion of Canada. He was not speaking for the whole dominion. If we are to be the great nation that we should be and that we are destined to be we must have a policy which will look after the interests, the rights and the development of the provinces in the east and in the west, and also the rights and further development of the provinces in central Canada.

I have nothing further to say. I am 100 per cent in favour of this resolution which has been brought forward. I believe that if it is adopted and carried out by any government in this country it will react greatly to the benefit and the development of our country in the future.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I listened most carefully this afternoon to that hour-long speech by the Leader of the Opposition. I think for 50 minutes of his speech I wondered how he could ever come down to any point of criticism of the government, because in that 50 minutes practically everything he said was at least by implication eulogistic of the government which was responsible for the very prosperous conditions in Canada to which he was referring. Therefore I make it quite clear at the outset that I have certainly no quarrel to pick with at least nine-tenths of the speech made this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition, nor for that matter with the speakers from other parties on that side.

However, I must say that I was a little surprised when the Leader of the Opposition got down to his actual motion of want of confidence in the government and itemized the particular reasons why he thought that motion should be adopted. As I see it the two most important points he made were first that Canada had a huge adverse balance of trade with the United States approaching $1,000 million last year, and second that Canada was not developing her own natural resources sufficiently in this country, that we were simply hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States, that we were exporting too much of our raw materials and that the United States was getting the benefit.

I must confess that when I thought over his argument about the heavy adverse balance of trade with the United States, running to several hundred millions of dollars a year, I was really astounded at everything that has happened in this house this year; because most of the time of this house, and certainly most of the energy and most of the speeches of the Conservative opposition, have been devoted to trying to obstruct, to trying to prevent the one great change that has been made in the Canadian economy in recent years which would help to correct the heaviest item in our adverse balance of trade with the United States.

What were the Tories—excuse me; I understand that the Tories do not like that word any more—the Conservatives trying to do when they were trying to block the natural gas pipe line? Certainly they were lining up with John L. Lewis and the Pennsylvania coal barons on the side of Pennsylvania coal against Alberta natural gas. Surely if we are sincere about wanting to cut down our heavy adverse balance of trade with the United States one of the items we should look to is the importation of United States coal, in view of the fact that we have been importing up to $148 million worth of United States coal per year in more recent years. I should have thought that if the Leader of the Opposition really meant what he said about wanting to reduce this adverse balance of trade he would have been the foremost advocate in this chamber of the natural gas pipe line, which was going to reduce United States coal imports and give to the gas now wasted in Alberta the market of central Canada which now goes to south of the border.

When I heard the Leader of the Opposition bemoaning the heavy influx of United States capital it made me think of my boyhood in Hamilton. I see the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Fairclough) is present. I grew up in her constituency and I got some of my early political education in a hall which I imagine she will remember, a die-hard Tory hall called the Twentieth club on Locke street. The first election I remember —I realize that this will date me—is the election of 1911 when some of my good friends won the election with the cry, "No truck nor trade with the Yankees".

Mrs. Fairclough: That was before my time.

Mr. Philpott: Of course it was long before the time of the hon. member for Hamilton West but not before my time, because I have a good long memory about some of these old Tory tricks. I see that some of the really old Tory tricks which were played in 1911 are being tried out again, if you please, in this year of our Lord 1956. I have no doubt that two years hence when we have a federal election the main election issue, if the Conservatives get their chance, will not be "No truck nor trade with the Yankees" but certainly they will call it, "Send them Yankee dollars home". Already they are bringing forth that issue for the next election.

I think before we send them Yankee dollars home, before we fasten on any such loose catch phrase or slogan for the election which we will get about August, 1958, we should take a good long look at the wisdom of this sort of thinking. I wonder if my hon. friends have read an admirable volume published by the dominion bureau of statistics. I hope my hon. friends will note that I put on "dominion", something which they discussed the other day. This is 100 pages for a dollar which is enough to warm the heart of any Scotsman in the country, because it is the best one dollar's worth of reading matter that any politician who hopes to fight an election issue on "send them Yankee dollars home" is likely to read.

This deals with Canada's international investment position in the years 1926 to 1954. I am not going to go into the whole 100 pages of statistics, because my own idea of statistics is something like that of the first minister of finance I can remember operating in this chamber, which was a long while ago; the grand old miller by the name of J. M. Robb. He used to say, "There are three kinds of lies; lies, damn lies and statistics." So I am not going into the whole 100 pages of statistics. However, as I read these statistics of the changes in Canada's investment position in the international world from 1926 to 1954, I note that there was a great increase in United States investment in the last few years. But why did we have the so-called great adverse balance of payments over the years? We had the great adverse balance over the years—and it is made very clear in this book as well as in all other authoritative publications—for the simple reason that the Americans were pouring in the tools for capital investment; they were pouring in the tools for the development of this country.

I for one would not say that it is always unwise to kill the goose that lays the golden egg, but I would submit to this country that before we should get ready to plunge into an election on the issue of "send those United States dollars home" we should take a close look at how we got all those United States dollars over the past few years. This vast sum of money that has come into this country has come into Canada for the development of Canada, and I submit that it would be possible to scare off United States investors. Of course we would not need to have the Leader of the Opposition parading around with a stick and a cardboard placard reading, as in Iceland, "Yankee, Go Home". All we would need is the suggestion that United States dollars were not welcomed in Canada any more, and you would not need to pass any laws to get the Americans to keep their investment dollars at home. The Americans would look after that for themselves.

Mr. Fleming: How silly can you be?

Mr. Philpott: Mr. Speaker, if you are in earnest about wanting to know the net change in Canada's investment position, and if you refer to page 14 of this official publication I mentioned, "Canada's International Investment Position, 1926-1954," you will read this:

> Taking the period from 1926 to 1954 as a whole, Canada's external liabilities have risen by somewhat under 3 per cent per annum, in contrast to a growth of over 6 per cent on the assets side. The over-all increase in net indebtedness from $5·1 billion to $6·7 billion is equivalent to an annual rate of less than 1 per cent. Considering the great expansion of productive capacity and the changes in price levels which have occurred in the past quarter of a century, it will be apparent that the relative burden of Canada's debtor position has been greatly decreased.

So if our friends in the Conservative opposition are really looking for an issue on the question of Canada's indebtedness to the United States, I think they had better take a second look at the facts. The plain facts are that Canada's net credit and debit position has been greatly improved during the whole 21-year period of the lifetime of this government, but more particularly in the past five or six years.

Now I want to spend just a few minutes on that other argument which we hear, and I am sorry to say I thought we heard a little of it this afternoon from my old friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar; that is the suggestion that Canada is not developing enough of her own raw resources. As I see such a solid phalanx and such a 100 per cent representation of C.C.F. Saskatchewan wheat farmers opposite me tonight, I should like to know whether there is a single Saskatchewan C.C.F. wheat farmer who would cut off the export of Canada's wheat, provided we could not develop that wheat to the point of flour before we could sell it. I submit that it is absolute nonsense to talk about 100 per cent development of all our natural resources before the people agree to export it.

Mr. Brooks: Nobody suggested that.

Mr. Philpott: You have to use your common sense about export. I submit that of all the countries in the world that should never be so foolish as to cut off its own nose to spite its face, and put an embargo on exports on raw materials, that country is our Dominion of Canada.

I think of my own province of British Columbia. I am glad to see my neighbour and good friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra there, and I ask him and any other member in this house where British Columbia would be if we cut off the export of our raw materials. Where would the town of Kitimat be if we were so foolish as to talk economic nationalism and say we would not export or import raw materials? Where would our country's aluminum industry be if we did not bring in the bauxite from the West Indies and other countries thousands of miles from our own shores? I submit that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. As you say Canada should not export any raw materials, then other countries should not export raw materials either; and God help us if other countries should ever adopt that foolish policy.

On motion of Mr. Philpott the debate was adjourned.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

WHEAT STORAGE STATISTICS

Question No. 544—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many bushels of wheat of all grades was in storage in Canada on (a) June 30, 1954; (b) June 30, 1955; (c) June 30, 1956?

Answer by: Mr. Dickey, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

The number of bushels of wheat of all grades, including Durum wheat, in storage in licensed elevators in Canada and in transit in great lakes vessels, and in railway cars on: (a) June 30, 1954, 349,007,133; (b) June 29, 1955, 348,488,948; (c) June 27, 1956, 335,100,213.

APPENDIX

STATEMENT ON
MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS

During the past ten days commonwealth prime ministers have together reviewed the current state of international affairs. Their discussions have again revealed a sense of common purpose in their approach to the major problems of the day. The peoples of the commonwealth all share the common heritage of parliamentary democracy. They respect aspirations for freedom and self-government, and they take pride in what they themselves have done in helping to fulfil those aspirations.

This meeting has been held at a significant stage in the development of international relations. A new element has been introduced by the growing recognition of the devastating power of thermonuclear weapons. Other developments of importance have taken place in the world, including changes in the Soviet union. The common understanding which the prime ministers have reached in their review will form a valuable background which will assist each government in the formulation and pursuit of its national policies.

Despite the high hopes with which the world emerged from the last war, new international tensions developed. These have given rise to increasing fears and suspicion. They have resulted in vast expenditures on armaments and economic distortions which have delayed the full development of the world's natural resources for the common good.

The governments and peoples of the commonwealth are united in their desire for peace. They seek friendly relations with all the peoples of the world and have no aggressive intent or design. War would bring disaster for many; world war could mean destruction for all. The policies of all commonwealth countries will at all times be devoted to preserving and consolidating world peace. The prime ministers emphasised the importance they attach to the search for a comprehensive disarmament agreement.

The commonwealth governments will strive for a progressive improvement in the standards of life of their own peoples and will assist in similar efforts in other parts of the world. Since the end of the war, in addition to furthering their own economic development, they have done much to assist the development of other countries, through the United Nations and such organizations as the Colombo plan, the commission for technical co-operation in Africa south of the Sahara and by other means. They will continue in their efforts to secure prosperity as well as peace for all the peoples of the world.

In the course of the meeting the prime ministers reviewed the significant developments in the Soviet union in the context of international relations and world affairs. In this assessment they were helped by the reports made by those ministers who have recently visited the Soviet union or have held elsewhere personal discussions with the new Soviet leaders. The prime ministers considered the recent decisions of the Soviet government to reduce the numbers of their armed forces, their willingness to facilitate increased contacts between the Soviet union and other countries, and their expressed desire for improved relations with other governments. They welcomed these developments. A progressive improvement in the relations between the Soviet union and the other great powers would help to remove the fear of war and serve the interests of world peace. They believe, however, that the removal of the causes of tension and the creation of mutual confidence and goodwill are essential if peace is to rest on secure foundations. The governments of the commonwealth countries will persevere in the search for just and lasting settlements of outstanding international problems. Unless such settlements can be reached, resources which might otherwise be used to improve the lot of man will continue to be devoted to armaments; and the fears which impel the peoples of the world to accept the burdens of defence will continue to distract and weaken mankind.

The prime ministers noted with regret that, since their last meeting, no progress had been made towards German unity. They were informed of current proposals regarding the political and economic activities of the north Atlantic alliance and the development of closer economic co-operation in Europe.

The prime ministers considered the situation in the Middle East. They reaffirmed their interest in the peace and stability of this area. They welcomed the efforts of the Secretary General of the United Nations to ensure observance of the terms of the armistice agreements between Israel and the neighbouring Arab states. They agreed that all practicable steps should be urgently taken to consolidate the progress thus made and to seek a lasting settlement of this dispute.

The prime ministers were informed of the situation in Cyprus, and welcomed the unceasing efforts of the United Kingdom government to find a solution acceptable to all concerned.

The prime ministers reviewed the situation in the Far East and southeast Asia. They noted the part which was being played by certain commonwealth governments in seeking to maintain peace in Indo-China. They looked forward to a continuing relaxation of tension in the Formosa area, and expressed the hope that unremitting efforts would be made to this end. Peaceful settlements of the problems in this area are imperative for stability in the Far East and for removing the dangers of conflict which would frustrate the hopes of peace. The prime ministers heard with interest a report from the Prime Minister of New Zealand on his recent visit to Japan. They were informed of the progress of constitutional advance in Malaya and of the negotiations on constitutional development in Singapore.

The prime ministers noted with satisfaction that Ceylon and certain other countries had recently been admitted to the United Nations. They recognized the important part which members of the commonwealth had played in securing this extension of the organization. They expressed the hope that its membership could be broadened still further so that it might command a wider allegiance throughout the world.

The prime ministers agreed that it was of first importance for their countries to maintain and increase their economic strength. Each country, through sound internal economic policies and steady development of its resources and earning power, could help to strengthen the commonwealth and the sterling area, and move steadily towards the agreed objective of the widest practicable system of trade and payments. The prime ministers noted with satisfaction the United Kingdom's determination to maintain and improve its capacity to serve as a source of capital for development in commonwealth countries. They received reports on the development program of certain members of the commonwealth.

The prime ministers exchanged views on the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. They agreed that the civil use of nuclear energy constituted a valuable new sphere of co-operation within the commonwealth, as well as with other countries, and they noted with satisfaction the progress already made in this field. The commonwealth countries are already a major source of world supplies of uranium and thorium, and their resources in these materials are increasing. In most of these countries research organizations have been established to develop the use of nuclear energy as a source of power.

During the course of the meeting, the Prime Minister of Ceylon stated that, in accordance with their declared policy, the Ceylon government proposed to introduce in due course a republican constitution for Ceylon. He also stated that it was their intention that Ceylon should continue to be a member of the commonwealth. The other prime ministers took note of this statement, and expressed their agreement to Ceylon's remaining a member of the commonwealth.

The prime ministers considered the particular position of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland in relation to meetings of commonwealth prime ministers. Taking into account the 20 years' attendance first by the Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia and now by the Prime Minister of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, they agreed that they would welcome the continued participation of the Prime Minister of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland in meetings of commonwealth prime ministers.

Apart from the consideration of matters which are of common concern to all commonwealth countries, these meetings also afford opportunities for discussions outside the formal sessions. Advantage has been taken of these opportunities on this occasion. The continuing exchange of views on matters of common concern is an important element in the relationship between the member countries of the commonwealth. It is of the utmost value that this should be supplemented at intervals by personal contacts between the political leaders of the commonwealth countries, and in a rapidly changing world the need for these direct consultations has assumed a new importance.

LONDON,

6th July, 1956.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 10, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TABLING OF CAPITAL BUDGET

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the capital budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the financial year ending March 31, 1957.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue if copies of the capital budget of the C.B.C. which he tabled earlier this afternoon are available for general distribution among members? If not, and if the document is not too long, could it be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Speaker, there has only been one copy of the budget tabled. It will not be a very difficult task to have mimeographed copies made of it, and they will be made available to those who are interested. I may say we expect to have copies of the annual report mimeographed by the time we come to a discussion of the estimates of the C.B.C.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON OVERTIME AND WAGE RATES ON FEDERAL WORKS AT LA SCIE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): On June 19 the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asked me several questions referring to overtime and wage rates on federal works at La Scie, Newfoundland. At that time I stated that our Newfoundland officer had been instructed to investigate the complaint and make a report.

The first complaint was that the companies concerned were working their employees in excess of the authorized hours. The second complaint was that they were paying local workers less than mainland workers for the same work; and third, our representative was asked to investigate and determine whether the companies should be required to pay penalty overtime rates for hours worked in excess of the statutory hours.

Our officer has now reported in the negative on the first two complaints, and on the third that he was making an effort to effect an understanding with the company on the question of overtime payments.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—EFFECT OF REPORTED AGREEMENT BETWEEN RUSSIA AND CAMBODIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the agreement reported in the press between Cambodia and Soviet Russia is likely to have any effect on the political situation in Viet Nam or other parts of French Indo-China?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the terms of any such agreement as has been reported in the press, and I have asked for a report on this matter from our commissioner in Cambodia. I prefer to wait until I get that report before I attempt to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

DANGERS TO FREE COUNTRIES OF ACCEPTING AID FROM RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I note in this morning's press that Vice President Nixon of the United States has issued a warning to the neutral free countries of the world against accepting any economic or military aid from Russia. Does the Prime Minister consider the time has come for a warning from this government to those countries which are being offered Russian aid; that is, a warning as to the dangers of accepting these offers?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hesitate to suggest that the Canadian government issue any warning against the acceptance of aid by less developed countries though, of course, there may be some dangers involved in doing so. But I think the fact that there would be assistance to underdeveloped countries is a meritorious fact in itself. I do not think we would put ourselves in the position where we might appear to be saying you should get the aid and if you refuse to take it from the countries behind the iron curtain we shall see that you get it from other sources. We are not in a position to do that. There has been a lot of propaganda about proffered aid, and I think it has gone beyond the actual benefits that those who seem to have been offered aid would receive from such offers.

It is very difficult to attempt to intervene in the domestic affairs of other countries. Of course a country like the United States may be in a position to say, "If you do not take aid from Russia we shall see that you get it from us", but we are not in a position to make any such broad statement.

CEYLON—EFFECT ON COLOMBO PLAN OF SURRENDER OF BRITISH BASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the present action of Britain in surrendering her bases in Ceylon affect in any way the assistance that is being granted to Ceylon under the Colombo plan?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. We have endeavoured to have what is done under the Colombo plan done on its merits without any strings attached to it, and to avoid any suggestion whatsoever that it was meant to obtain any political influence over the affairs of the recipients.

ATTENDANCE BY RUSSIAN OBSERVERS AT U.S. AND CANADIAN AIR SHOWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister or his department considering in any way the recent application by the Russians to attend air shows in Canada or the United States in the next month or two?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if an application is made for a visa for such a visit it will undoubtedly be considered by the department. I have no knowledge myself of such an application having been made but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. If such an application is being made, and it appears that way from the United States press, will the minister look into the possibility of a polar trip by the Russians and the resulting danger to our secret northland defences?

[Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East).]

Mr. Pearson: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that any such visit will not be prejudicial to the security arrangements we have in the north.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

LOW LEVEL BRIDGE, BURLINGTON, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. When will motion No. 80 standing in my name, and made an order for return on May 21, be tabled? It has to do with the written agreement in connection with the low level bridge over Burlington channel.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): There is no written agreement, as I indicated previously in the house, but I shall endeavour to table a nil return at the earliest possible date.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VETERANS HOSPITALS—REQUEST FOR FIVE-DAY 40 HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. My question relates to the representations of the Department of Veterans Affairs employees national association about which he was asked a question by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday.

Can the minister say if it is correct that these representations were received last October or November? If so, is it still true that they have not yet been considered by the cabinet, as the minister stated yesterday?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As I stated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the officers of the association met with the Minister of Finance and myself during the course of last fall and made their representations at that time. Since that time consideration was given to these representations and in fact the 40-hour week was granted in two of the establishments, the Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary and Camp Hill hospital in Halifax. Following the survey made by the civil service commission of the situation in civilian hospitals in those localities it was found that the general pattern was to have a 40-hour week. In the other localities where D.V.A. institutions exist and where the survey did not reveal that the pattern in other hospitals was to have a 40-hour week the matter was postponed, but it is being looked into again at the present time.

Mr. J. Wilfrid Dufresne (Quebec West): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs following the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister said consideration was given to the 40-hour week in some localities other than where it exists now. Does he mean to suggest that consideration was given by the cabinet or by the officials of his department?

Mr. Lapointe: I explained, Mr. Speaker, that the process which is followed is that a survey is made by the civil service commission. They in turn report to treasury board on the result of their survey, and treasury board informs the cabinet of the situation. That is what is being done at the present time.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

KITCHENER, ONT.—INSIGNIA ON MAIL TRUCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Is the minister aware that most of the trucks contracted to his department in Kitchener bear the words "Canada Post Office" and lack the royal cipher?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that. Evidently I do not have the same sources of information as the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, but I will inquire into it.

An hon. Member: You should look into the trucks, too.

Mr. Lapointe: I do know, Mr. Speaker, it is usually one of the clauses of the contracts we enter into with the contractors that the royal cipher appear on the trucks that are used for the conveyance of mail.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether, after he has examined the newspaper clipping which I will send him with the photograph, he will take steps to see that this improper marking and wording is immediately corrected?

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, I shall have to see the report first and inquire.

Mr. Sinclair: What is wrong with the word "Canada"?

POWER

PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DEVELOPMENT SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he any further report to make with regard to the progress being made in connection with the Passamaquoddy development project survey?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I said on June 1 that a reference would be made on this important matter to the international joint commission as soon as the terms of the reference could be agreed on between the two governments; I refer to the United States government and the Canadian government. Exchanges of correspondence have been going on and discussions have been held with the United States government so that we can reach agreement on the terms of reference. It is obviously extremely important that there should be agreement on such terms before the investigation begins. That process is now almost completed, and I hope the terms of reference can be submitted to the commission within the next very few weeks.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, July 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Drew.

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF NATURAL RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned last night at ten o'clock I was trying to show the relation between these Yankee dollars and Canadian jobs. I am not going to keep the house too long today, because I do not want to hold up this session too long; I am very anxious to get back to Vancouver. I am particularly anxious to get back to Vancouver because since I finished the first half of my speech last night and today when I am beginning the second half, I have had news of my second new granddaughter since Easter. I would remind hon. gentlemen of the good old British Columbia custom that whereas fathers must give out cigars when sons or daughters appear, grandfathers always receive cigars from all quarters of the house.

I want to refer particularly to one section of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition when, as reported at page 5780 of Hansard, he said:

> We all share the satisfaction in the growth and development that has already taken place. But this is only a promise of what can happen. Government policies should encourage the development of our own resources, should promote the processing of those resources in Canada, should correct our unfavourable trade balance, should assure the participation by Canadians in the development and processing of our resources, and should assure opportunity and employment for all Canadians from the Atlantic to the Pacific wherever they may live.

As I listened to the hon. members of the Conservative opposition yesterday developing their case, it seemed to me that I heard echoes of old, unhappy, far-off things and battles of long ago, because there was the distinct echo of 1911 in this approach. I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there would be now anything as blatant as the slogan which won the election of 1911, namely "No truck nor trade with the Yankees". However, I am submitting that the Conservative opposition are on a slippery slope now, and that they could easily continue down the decline until they got themselves in a position even more dangerous for this country than that of advocating "No truck nor trade with the Yankees" as they did so successfully in 1911.

What I want to show, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a very real connection between these Yankee dollars which some of my hon. friends in the Conservative opposition would keep away from Canada, and Canadian jobs. I do not know whether they would chase out the dollars which are already invested here in the factories, in the pipe lines and in all the other things that go to make up the prosperity of Canada, or whether they would confine themselves to keeping out new investments in Canada; but I want to submit that Yankee dollars invested in Canada mean good jobs for the Canadian people. God help this country if we are ever foolish enough to turn away those Yankee dollars simply to make a convenient election slogan for a desperate party, or for politicians who have not thought things through.

Last night I referred to a very admirable volume, "Canada's International Investment Position, 1926-1954", and I submitted that it is a bargain at $1 from the queen's printer. On page 44 of that volume we get an exact breakdown of all the different industries in Canada, exactly what percentages United States-owned companies obtain in the Canadian market and exactly what percentage of employment is given to Canadians by that United States investment. Working from the bottom upward, I shall read the statistics on page 44:

	Per cent
Printing, publishing, and allied industries ..	1
Clothing (textiles and furs)	2
Wood products	6
Primary iron and steel	7
Bakery products and confectionery	10
Beverages	12
Iron and steel products n.o.p.	14
Textile products (except clothing)	14
Food industries, tobacco and tobacco products and leather products, n.o.p. ..	14
Castings, iron	15
Dairy products	16
Non-metallic mineral products and products of petroleum and coke, n.o.p.	18
Aircraft and parts, railway rolling stock, and transportation equipment, n.o.p. ..	19
Agricultural implements	20
Miscellaneous manufactures	20
Hardware, tools and cutlery	23
Canning and processing	24
Toilet preparations	27
Brass and copper products	27
Paper products n.o.p.	29
Heating and cooking apparatus	29
Grain mill products	29
Machinery, industrial and machine tools ..	32
Chemicals and allied products n.o.p.	36
Pulp and paper	39
Sheet metal products	39
Medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations	41
Soaps, washing compounds and cleaning preparations	45
Paints, varnishes and lacquers	45
Electrical apparatus and supplies	50
Non-ferrous metal products n.o.p.	50
Machinery, household, office and store	60
Motor vehicle parts	67
Petroleum products	68
Non-ferrous metal smelting and refining ..	70
Rubber products	78
Motor vehicles	98

So I should like to know whether there is a single hon. member, even in the Conservative opposition, who will rise in this house and say in all seriousness that he believes the 98 per cent of the jobs which Canadians have in motor vehicle manufacture should be cut off simply because United States investments have provided us with those jobs. So on down the line.

No, Mr. Speaker; when we analyse the Conservative warning about the menace of these Yankee dollars, the menace of this great adverse trade balance about which they are so fond of talking, we find that adverse trade balance almost entirely made up of tools and capital equipment which is coming in to develop this country. I would ask my Conservative friends to point out the name of the United States-owned factory which they think is a menace to this country. I submit that they are only against this United States investment in general terms, but when it comes down to concrete terms and they are talking about the exact factory or the exact job which is provided by that United States investment they are very vague indeed.

Take my own province of British Columbia. I should like to touch on one or two instances. I will start up the coast at Prince Rupert. I would wager that there is not a single person in the whole city of Prince Rupert who would say that United States investment there has been a menace to that city. As a matter of fact, United States investment in the past few years has transformed the city from one of very moderate progressiveness to one of the most prosperous cities in British Columbia.

I come down the coast to Ocean Falls, where United States investment is entirely responsible for the whole project. I come farther down to Powell River, where there is one of the greatest pulp and paper companies in the whole world. Incidentally, United States investment and for that matter United States management under the Foley brothers, who are among the most enlightened employers in the whole Dominion of Canada, have transformed the city from one which 21 years ago had some of the shadiest labour relations to a city with perhaps the most enlightened labour relations in the whole of Canada. I venture to say there is not even a member of the Conservative opposition who would suggest that is a menace to Canada.

Coming farther down to the city of Vancouver, certainly in my own constituency of Vancouver South I cannot think of any foreign investments that are a menace to Canada. I must say that when I have heard the term "foreigners" used with reference to Americans or "foreign investment" when we mean United States investment I have wanted to cry "shame", because everybody knows that no sensible Canadian ever calls an American a foreigner unless he is deliberately trying to insult him. In any event, in my riding of Vancouver South we welcome foreign investment.

I am sorry to see that my good friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is not in his seat at the moment, because yesterday he said he had some sensible things to say about forest production waste and some sensible remarks about what a young Scandinavian had said about our wasteful forest practices in this country. But, Mr. Speaker, never in the history of this young nation, Canada, has there been such an improvement in any industry as there has been in the forest products industry of British Columbia in the past 15 or 20 years with respect to the utilization of materials which formerly went to waste and the better exploitation of the raw materials, especially with regard to the manufacture of plywood.

I would point out that all or most of these improved practices are due to the know-how that came into this country along with some of the refugee capital which came here as a by-product of Hitler's persecutions in Europe. I would say that if there is not a silver lining to every cloud, there was a silver lining at least in one respect so far as Hitler's persecutions were concerned, in that we in British Columbia got fine and enlightened Czech capitalists like the Koerner brothers, who have not only improved our whole woodworking industry but have made a gift running into millions of dollars for humanitarian purposes in British Columbia.

When I look over the United States-owned factories in my riding and other ridings I invite any member of the opposition to get up and say which American-owned factory he would close down, which American factory he would keep out of the country. There are thousands of people employed in the United States-owned factories, at least a fifth of all the people in Canada. Incidentally, the people with the best jobs in Canadian factories are those who work in these factories created by United States investment.

Mr. Ellis: What a straw man.

Mr. Philpott: When I hear the member for Regina City he makes me more homesick than ever, because his voice is exactly like the foghorn in Vancouver harbour. I submit that my hon. friends opposite are in a rather dangerous position. I have no doubt they know full well the meaning of the motion they have moved. It is of course a want of confidence motion, and if it were passed the house would be dissolved and we would have an election now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ellis: What are you afraid of?

Mr. Philpott: Of course my hon. friends opposite want an election now, especially the Conservative opposition, because they know very well that unless they get their election before the natural gas pipe line reaches Winnipeg they will be shown up as the most senseless, stupid obstructionists in the whole history of Canada. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, the party that aspires to be the government of Canada and that talks about reducing the adverse trade balance with the United States tries to block the pipe line which is going to substitute Alberta gas for Pennsylvania coal and thereby reduce the largest item that goes to make up this adverse trade balance with the United States.

I know that my hon. friends immediately opposite are in a little different position. They have about four months' extra grace. The poor old Tories there—I must apologize for that term, but it is the result of spending my boyhood days in the city of Hamilton, where people were not only willing to admit they were Tories but were proud of it. I am glad to say that I can remember when the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I lived in Hamilton in our boyhood days. I think he was born into a Conservative family, too. I believe my father was the first Liberal on our side. We even had an aunt whose name was Aunt Tory; that was her real name, too.

Mr. Ellis: What party are you going into next?

Mr. Philpott: I can think back to my first experience in politics in 1911. I have a horrible admission to make, and that is that even in those days, although my father was a Liberal, the Tories sold me on the idea that if the Liberals won the election we were going to have annexation to the United States. I can remember the great crowds gathering in the dining room of our old home on what was fondly called the mountain in Hamilton, and debating the issue. These debates used to end in real fist fights, which is one reason of course why I felt a little bit at home in this chamber a while ago, because I had been in that kind of atmosphere before long ago.

When I grew up I talked to some of my colleagues like Mr. McGregor and Mr. McTavish of the Vancouver Province, who not so many years ago wrote a series of articles about the 1911 election. He gave the inside story of that 1911 election and told how some smart Tory newspaper man from Canada went down to Washington, if you please, and paid those congressman $100 per speech to make speeches in favour of annexation of Canada by the United States. Those fellows would have done it for nothing, especially if they could have had their names across the front page.

May I say that before my hon. friends opposite go farther down the slippery slope of warning against the menace of these Yankee dollars they should keep in mind what happened before. You cannot fool the people twice with the same trick while some of the same people are still alive. Never should they forget that the so-called menace of these United States dollars is the kind of menace which is responsible for one-fifth of the best jobs we have in this country.

I think back to the days of the war when the great Churchill coined one of his most famous phrases when asking for co-operation from the United States. He said, in effect, "Give us the tools and we will finish the job". I submit we could paraphrase that today in regard to this United States investment in Canada which has been responsible for the tremendous development we have had in this country, by saying that they have lent us the tools and we will finish the job; we will carry through from where we are now and proceed with the development of this country. No, Mr. Speaker; the Yankee dollars are not a menace to Canada except in the minds of the hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Mr. Philpott.]

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to follow my hon. friend in the discussion of the fictional matters in which he indulged. He went back to 1911 and resurrected a fiction that has remained amongst those who do not read and will not hear, that in that election of 1911 this party took the stand "No truck nor trade with the Yankees". This indicates the paucity of argument in regard to the amendment before us, and the extent to which the hon. gentleman felt impelled to go into the fictional past in order to remove himself from the discussion of the present.

But there was one interesting thing I noted in his speech. After he had covered all this historical fiction and myth he finally came to mention the amendment and said, "You want to watch this; if you vote in favour of it we are going to have an election." This indicated that in behind all those words and the creation of all these straw men, there was a fear that could not be hidden. Over and over again—and you, sir, know the circumstances—we on this side of the house have done everything we could to challenge the government to do that thing to which my hon. friend referred a moment ago, but without success.

Now, returning to the amendment, I think at this time it might be well to read that amendment so the discussion might once more return to the subject matter before the house. This is the amendment:

> This house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population.

I noted, sir, that throughout his remarks my hon. friend dealt with no portion of that amendment. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition set out in very considerable detail the attitude taken by this party in reference to the need for a development policy that will not only expand and develop Canada today, but preserve and maintain that development for future generations.

The attitude taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was generally to this effect: After all, if we sell our irreplaceable resources in raw form it will be and is to the advantage of the present. The difference between his point of view and that of the Leader of the Opposition is this. The Leader of the Opposition is building for the future; for if we take our irreplaceable resources and move them from Canada in the raw form, the day will come when, there being none to replace, the advantages of the present will be lost in so far as our national destiny is concerned.

No one has ever taken the stand that it is not to the advantage of this country to have investment from the United States or elsewhere, but what we do say is this. In that investment let Canadian considerations be No. 1, rather than subject to the interests of any corporation from any other part of the world. When you speak of the present and of the need of United States investment in Canada, let me say this. One of the most serious things that has taken place in recent months in connection with Canada's development has been the increase in discount and interest rates, thereby forcing Canadian industry, municipalities and provinces to go into the United States market to borrow because money there is cheaper than it is in Canada.

In today's newspapers parliament learns, as it so often does through the press, that interest rates on bank savings will be increased by one-quarter of one per cent after August 1. What kind of encouragement is that to saving in Canada so that Canadians will have money available in order to finance a larger share of Canada's development? Sir, this most niggling, niggardly increase can have no serious influence in causing Canadians to have more money available for investment in Canada. Indeed, the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, when speaking recently in Hamilton, used these words:

> I share the desire of Canadians to be free from dependence on large scale imports of capital. As a member of the Canadian government I do all I can to help maintain conditions favourable for Canadian investors, in the hope that one day we shall be able to look after all our capital requirements if we choose to do so. The plain truth is, however, that Canadians have not generated enough savings to supply all the capital required for Canadian development.

Well, no matter what savings they have generated the government has degenerated them by the heavy rates of taxation that exist, and this latest action of raising interest rates to that extent does not meet the situation and will not meet the situation, nor will it encourage further savings in Canada.

My hon. friend says let us get as much capital into Canada as we can regardless of whether we have any control over it. Well, Mr. James Muir—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): When did I say that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the president of the Royal Bank of Canada, spoke before the Canadian club at Ottawa on January 19 and said this:

> The disadvantages to the Canadian economy of non-resident control lie mainly in practices that would appear to be easily changed for the better. Participation by Canadians in enterprises financed by outside (especially American) capital would be greatly encouraged were it not necessary in many cases to buy stock in the parent company in order indirectly to secure some voice in the operations of the Canadian subsidiary. In other words, Canadians should be allowed to buy stock directly in any Canadian corporation.

That point was made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. Mr. Muir continued:

> Another practice, with a similar effect, is that of centralizing research facilities in the non-resident parent company. This practice may result in economies.

Finally, he said this:

> I believe that every encouragement and incentive should be given to the establishment, by non-resident corporations, of research facilities in Canada.

I shall deal with that in a moment, for Canadians find themselves in the position where corporations cannot deduct those expenses in Canada to the same extent that they do in the United States, where provision is made to encourage the research so necessary in the developments of today. Yesterday the Minister of Trade and Commerce ridiculed, or endeavoured to ridicule, the arguments advanced by the Leader of the Opposition regarding the fact that development was not reasonably equal in all parts of Canada. The Leader of the Opposition said, as reported at page 5775 of Hansard:

> As trustees for future generations of Canadians, we should make sure in every way we can, within the framework of our constitutional structure, that by the combined efforts of all governments and all the people of Canada the opening up of our country brings the maximum benefit to every part of Canada, not only for today but for future generations far into the years ahead.

And then he said this:

> Large areas right across Canada have not participated fully in our recent growth and development. This government has failed to meet its obligations to those parts of Canada which are most in need of encouragement and financial support.

To all of this the right hon. gentleman said he had never heard so much rot in one afternoon in his life.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Will my hon. friend read the extract from my speech in which I discussed distribution of development projects across Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I read it, but I am just mentioning—

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You are reading into it comments that are not there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I were to read all that the hon. gentleman said yesterday it would be perfectly clear that he did not admit the basic reason for this amendment, namely that across Canada there is not equal development and there is not equal opportunity for Canadians in every province of Canada.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I wondered what the reason was.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nor any endeavour on the part of the government to secure it. Last evening the hon. member for Royal dealt with this question, as he has done on previous occasions, and pointed out the injustice and unfairness to the maritime provinces owing to the fact that this government has failed to act, has failed to give any support to the power development on the Saint John river, as it has failed to give assistance to the province of Saskatchewan in connection with the South Saskatchewan dam.

Where are the maritime members now? Today's press records that while the minister was ridiculing the arguments of the Leader of the Opposition, and also in anticipation the arguments raised by the hon. member for Royal, there was a gathering in Fredericton. It was a gathering of premiers, three Liberal and one Conservative. The conference was held. The maritime premiers demand a better deal for the maritimes. They want a co-ordinated policy, and they went on to point out, "Ottawa helps those who help themselves, but only if they complain loudly enough".

Well, that was the first principle they enunciated. Sir, it is worthy of the attention of the Liberal members from the maritimes, because it should not have been necessary after 20 long years in power for these three Liberal premiers to meet together and determine that in so far as their representation from the maritimes was concerned in government circles, there were insufficient demands for the rights of the people.

Let us go on:

> Does the federal government consider that its mission in the development of the Atlantic coast of Canada has been accomplished by sending three geological survey parties to Newfoundland this year, Premier Smallwood demanded?

There is one of the great creative men of Canada. He created the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill). Then we have Mr. Hicks saying:

> It is necessary to point out to the federal government that they do not have to think always of industry in the Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto region, when it comes time to hand out defence contracts.

Coming back again to Premier Smallwood, speaking as the tribune of the people on behalf of equality of opportunity everywhere in Canada and in particular seeking to equalize those opportunities in the maritimes who said:

> "The government of Canada is wrong when they say that all provinces should be treated as equals." The Newfoundland leader borrowed a phrase from communist philosphy to express his attitude: "From each according to his ability, to each according to his need."
>
> The policy of equal treatment, he said, would result in "four, or possibly five, rich provinces, with the rest of us in the poorhouse."

He went on to say there is a faint glimmer of hope:

> There is now a glimmering of comprehension in Ottawa, and one of the signs was the appointment of the Gordon commission on the economic development of Canada.

He went on to express the hope that as the result of the work of this commission there may be some action such as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out over and over again is necessary in this country by way of equalizing opportunities for people in every province of Canada. He goes on to deal with freight rates; he speaks of the unfairness of flat increases that have the result of discriminating against the maritimes and the west, and he concludes by saying that action must be taken in order to secure an equality of opportunity and to raise economic standards in various parts of Canada to the level of other parts of the country. That is the purpose of this amendment. While the Minister of Trade and Commerce was saying yesterday there was no need for this amendment, these men were calling on the government to do the very things which are embodied in the amendment presented to this house.

Sir, it is a very serious question, and one that has been ignored by this government. This government has failed to recognize that every part of Canada deserves its fair share in the national development. It is because of that failure that we in this party have asked among other things that instead of shipping our resources from Canada in their raw form they should be processed here in Canada to the maximum extent.

The hon. member for Vancouver South says there are so many jobs resulting from those raw materials being sent out. I think the number is aproximately 250,000, representing people employed in Canada as a result of the export of raw, semi-raw and partially processed products. There is only a small labour content in raw material. When transferred into processed or semi-processed material jobs are increased far out of proportion to the extent to which expenditure is necessary to transform those materials into saleable products.

What I want to deal with in particular now in the time at my disposal is one phase of this question that was alluded to by the Leader of the Opposition as part of a development plan. At page 5778 of Hansard he said:

> Therefore, the training of skilled men and women to take their part in research and technical development must be part of the national program consciously designed to advance our industrial expansion in Canada.
>
> Without interfering in any way with the exclusive jurisdiction over education which rests with provincial governments, encouragement should be given to advance research and within the framework of our constitution research facilities should be expanded rapidly right across Canada in our universities and industries. This is something the government can do and should undertake right away.

There has been considerable discussion on this subject of the shortage in Canada of trained technical personnel. Gilbert Jackson and associates of Toronto recently summed up their views in anticipation of the situation in Canada in the next ten years and pointed out this fact:

> A leading impetus to industrial investment is the prospectively rapid rate of technological advance and automation. The surge in this direction is already under way and tends to feed upon itself. Even the cold war is becoming more and more a race for economic, industrial and technological superiority.
>
> The prospectively rapid rate of technological advance and automation is now seriously threatened by the dearth of engineers and highly trained technicians. This may prove to be the greatest of our handicaps during the next decade.

In other words, training the necessary personnel in Canada under research facilities, either dominion or provincial, or through the instrumentality of business to the end that trained men will be available, is a serious need. Only today there is a report on the university situation in Canada which indicates that during the present year there are some 60,000 students in Canadian universities and eight years from now, according to the dominion bureau of statistics, there will be between 100,000 and 135,000. The U.S.S.R. has not only launched an international trading system but has also launched a vast training system to train the necessary technological workers, scientists, engineers and the like; but while the United States allows almost complete deductions for technical research on the part of industry we in Canada do not do so, nor do we have the opportunity of doing so because United States companies in the main do their research work in the United States. While we in Canada receive an indirect benefit from that, we do not receive the benefit that we should in keeping Canadians in Canada.

In the last four years the U.S.S.R. has graduated 154,000 engineers; in the same period Canada graduated 6,900 and the United States 116,000. This year the U.S.S.R. will have 60,000 graduates in applied science as compared with 1,700 in Canada, 3,000 in Great Britain and 22,000 in the United States.

Everywhere the fear exists that Russia is outdistancing us and by 1968, according to an estimate that has not been denied, the U.S.S.R. with its present trade policy and its expansive industrial policy will equal the industrial production of the United States. Everywhere the fear is expressed that we are not doing our part nationally or provincially to provide the necessary trained personnel. Within the limits of our constitution, why should not the federal government expand and extend the amount available by way of scholarships in order to encourage and permit universities in this country to take their part in our national development and meet the international challenge presented by the U.S.S.R.?

Sir Winston Churchill warned that the western world is falling behind the U.S.S.R. in advanced training and research in pure and applied science. Last year in Canada one-sixth of the total number of undergraduates were in engineering. The engineering institute of Canada has stated that Russian tactics are building up the world's greatest army of technicians, and this fact should both disturb and inspire us.

I am not suggesting that our institutions of higher learning should become instruments of the state, dominated by the state, but I say this. In order to meet the responsibility of expanding the processing of our commodities in Canada and the development of our industry, we require more and more technicians, far beyond the numbers now being trained. Universities cannot carry on. Fees have increased in several of the universities by from 5 per cent to 11 per cent.

What the Canadian government is doing in these terms is merely touching the outer edge of this responsibility. Last fall they set up a scholarship fund in the national research council which granted some 267 scholarships worth $363,000. Rather, that was the general plan previous to last fall, and there was an increase in that number by 250 summer research scholarships to the value of $200,000. We want to build up in Canada that necessary research army, that scientific corps of trained men. There is no reason why there should be so few scholarships. They do not interfere with provincial rights. That number should be materially increased.

In addition to that, business should be given encouragement, and companies that come to Canada from outside should be required to provide a certain portion of their earnings for the purpose of research and for the training of research personnel. That is being done in the United States. That has been done in countries in Europe. That today is the purpose of a recent change of front on the part of the U.S.S.R. which, however, goes farther than any of us would wish to go in that it places industrial research and scientific education above any other type of education and denies to a major extent the development of the humanities.

The Globe and Mail of Toronto in March ran a series of articles by Jim Senter in which he set forth in detail the tremendous lack of trained men in Canada, including trained scientists, engineers, electronics technicians and the like. He went on to point out that the army and the air force are short of technical personnel, and that to a lesser degree Canada's defence research board and Atomic Energy of Canada find themselves in a similar situation but not to the same extent as does industry. He also pointed out that in Canada, in the engineering field, in one area to which he made reference approximately one-third of the engineers had come from elsewhere in the world and generally from Europe.

I think one of the main things that can be done today in order to make possible the laying of the foundation for the kind of development the Leader of the Opposition has envisaged as within the capabilities of Canada, would be first to make available the facilities and then train that army of technicians which will be necessary. Then, I repeat, Canadian industries should be encouraged to extend their research facilities by the necessary taxation allowances being provided and companies that come in from the outside, foreign companies, should be required as part of their development to devote a portion of their earnings to the expansion and development of research.

Just one word more, Mr. Speaker. At the beginning I mentioned that the Leader of the Opposition had painted a national picture in which development everywhere would be equalized within natural limitations. I do not want to refer once more to the South Saskatchewan river project, but I say this. Only in the last few days Mr. C. T. Hazen of Saskatoon set out in detail what this great project could achieve in my province. Why does not the government act? It met no opposition from any member of the opposition party. Why should not that project be a national development? It is one that has received the support of the Leader of the Opposition through the years. It is one that we feel is necessary. It is one more argument in support of those maritime premiers who, meeting yesterday, pointed at the present government of Canada the finger of condemnation for the failure of this government to do that of which the Leader of the Opposition over and over again has stressed the necessity, namely the building up of equal opportunity in all parts of Canada.

Whether it be Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan or British Columbia, the federal authority should be charged with the responsibility of assuring the people living in those areas a reasonable and fair share of the national benefits that for the moment are concentrated to too great an extent in two or three of the Canadian provinces.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the amendment that has been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition raises a number of important points, and in the speeches which have been made by hon. members opposite in support of this resolution a number of these matters have been dealt with.

I think it is quite obvious to all hon. members that in this resolution and in the speeches that have been made by members of the opposition there is nothing that is new. Everything that has been said or suggested has been said before by the same hon. members or by different hon. members in speeches in this house and in speeches outside this house. The wording and intent sometimes differs, but the basic material is the same.

The speeches of the Leader of the Opposition like those of others who have spoken in support of his amendment, were collections of generalities. This has been pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver South a few minutes ago. The hon. member for Vancouver South showed how, when those generalities are reduced to practical examples, the picture that has been painted in the general statement seems to change. I did not see any hon. member across the floor of the house rise to take up his suggestion that they deal with these individual examples that he gave.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that all these generalities are not supported by the facts of our present economic situation in Canada, nor are they supported by the history of the development of the economy of this country over the past 15 or 20 years. Many of these general statements, when taken alone, could perhaps be agreed with. But when they are put together in the form of a more or less connected speech they create an entirely wrong and incorrect impression, and it is that impression and that wrong implication that requires an answer.

My purpose in entering this debate is only to deal with one or two of the major points that have been raised by several of the speakers opposite. The amendment itself refers to the adoption now of a national development policy which will do certain things. The Minister of Trade and Commerce in his speech in this house last evening pointed out and proved with facts that there is now an existing policy that is being put into effect by this government that it is achieving in very substantial and satisfactory measure the very purposes which are contained in the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition.

This policy is achieving results, as has been proved in a number of fields, and I want to speak of that policy and its results in two important fields. The first is that of research. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned research in a number of places in his speech. As recorded on page 5778 of Hansard of July 9, he spoke of desirable steps to be taken which are necessary to encourage our own management and the expansion of our own affairs. He said this could be done in the important field of industrial research, and he told us of the success achieved in other countries. Then further down the page he went on to speak of university education and research in the universities; and in the next column he spoke of tax deductions that should be permitted to industry in respect of research expenditures, which would encourage our own research in every field.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar also referred to research in his remarks last evening; and the hon. member for Prince Albert, who has just resumed his seat, spoke at some length about the need for research and support of research by the federal government, by provincial governments and in the universities. We have had debates on research in this house in the past, and it is a fact that there has been a very considerable increase in activity and interest in research in Canada over a long period of years.

This increase in activity and interest has accompanied and paralleled the very rapid and satisfactory growth of both our primary and our secondary industries, which was outlined by the Minister of Trade and Commerce last evening. As far as government research is concerned, the federal government is spending this year over $100 million on a wide variety of essential research activities. I am sure it may be said with justice and truth that this represents a per capita expenditure on government research that compares favourably with similar expenditures in any other country in the world. I think it is also true that the quality of Canadian research and the results achieved fully justify these very large sums of money which have been voted by this parliament and expended by the various agencies and departments of government that exercise responsibility in this field.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the picture will be clearer if I place on Hansard a table prepared from the estimates which summarizes the figures of expenditures on research by the various departments of government. This table indicates that Canadian government research covers a very wide field including the responsibilities of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, to say nothing of the national research council which is, as hon. members know, the main federal government organization active in the general field of industrial research and pure science. With the permission of the house I shall place this table on Hansard covering the estimated expenditures on research by the federal government for the current fiscal year 1956-57 and for the previous fiscal year 1955-56.

Mr. Green: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Dickey: Yes.

Mr. Green: Do these figures include, for example, all the expenditure on Canada's atomic energy program?

Mr. Dickey: Yes; I said they included all the moneys voted by parliament for research, and that is quite clearly set out.

Mr. Green: I am asking whether these figures include the total moneys voted for Atomic Energy of Canada, a large portion of which is not research at all.

Mr. Dickey: No. As the hon. member will see from the table, this includes only the $300,000 paid out in the form of grants by the atomic energy control board and the research operations portion of the activities of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited; but that, I think—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member unanimous consent to place this table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dickey: The table is as follows:

TABLE I

SUMMARY OF ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES ON RESEARCH BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Department or Agency	Fiscal Year 1955–56			Fiscal Year 1956–57
	Operations	Capital	Total	Operations	Capital	Total
	$	$	$	$	$	$
Agriculture—
Animal pathology	657,869	235,685	893,554	715,074	96,535	811,609
Experimental farms service	9,923,000	1,356,000	11,279,000	9,593,174	2,428,000	12,021,174
Science service	8,195,000	1,989,000	10,184,000	7,713,923	2,100,000	9,813,923
Atomic Energy—
Control board grants	300,000	nil	300,000	300,000	nil	300,000
Research operation, A. E. of C. Ltd	11,226,183	8,176,425	19,402,608	13,743,370	8,713,685	22,457,055
Defence research board	20,101,000	2,799,000	22,900,000	19,854,689	3,280,700	23,135,389
Fisheries research board	2,631,000	267,000	2,898,000	2,916,000	689,000	3,605,000
Mines and Technical Surveys—
Mines branch	2,982,561	756,290	3,738,851	2,979,270	1,251,085	4,230,355
Geological survey	2,394,637	604,000	2,998,637	2,314,954	919,000	3,233,954
Dominion observatories	632,083	97,050	729,133	691,512	123,738	815,250
National Health and Welfare	527,200	10,300	537,500	616,500	nil	616,500
National Research Council	16,300,000	2,470,000	18,770,000	17,697,000	2,818,000	20,515,000
Northern Affairs and National Resources—
Forestry branch	1,611,634	1,205,513	2,817,147	1,687,505	1,988,497	3,676,002
National museum	175,000	nil	175,000	175,000	nil	175,000
Canadian wildlife service	275,880	nil	275,880	267,545	nil	267,545
Veterans Affairs	350,000	nil	350,000	375,000	nil	375,000
Totals	78,283,047	19,966,263	98,249,310	81,640,516	24,408,240	106,048,756

Hon. members will see from this table that in the fiscal year 1955-56 these estimates totalled $98,249,000 and for the present fiscal year 1956-57 the total has advanced to $106,048,000. This, I submit, is a very substantial expenditure. This total includes only the expenditures made through estimates presented to and voted on by this parliament. There are other substantial expenditures on research not included in this table; for example, the Canadian National Railways, Polymer Corporation and other crown companies have substantial research programs in their own fields of activity.

In view of what has been said by hon. members opposite, and particularly by the hon. member for Prince Albert, who immediately preceded me in this debate, I should like to say a special word about the very considerable expansion that has taken place in the support given by the federal government to university research in Canada. This support is provided mainly through the agency of the national research council, and the increase has been truly dramatic. The program of scholarships and research grants under the national research council was begun in 1917, and has risen from a few thousand dollars in that year to almost $3 million per year this year. In particular it should be realized by hon. members that the support of university research by the national research council has multiplied by a factor of nearly six since the end of world war II.

The hon. member for Prince Albert demanded expanded scholarships. I am sure that every member in this house would wish to expand scholarships, particularly in the field of science and research, as widely as possible; but we must remember that the progress that can be made in this field is limited by the students available for graduate study and the research facilities available. The program of the national research council has been designed to try to ensure that, as students become available and research facilities are expanded and improved, the necessary support from federal government sources is available for scholarships and research grants.

In this case also it may be convenient for hon. members to give me permission to place on Hansard a table showing the actual expenditures by the national research council on scholarships and research grants from 1917, the year the program was instituted, to 1956, with the addition of the estimates of expenditure on this program for the current fiscal year 1956-57. This table will, I believe, indicate to hon. members as clearly as it is possible to do the steady and satisfactory growth of university research being carried on in Canada with federal government assistance because these figures, as they rise from $13,000 a year in 1917 to $2,955,000 this year, indicate the vast expansion in research activity being conducted on university campuses right across Canada. If I may have the permission of the house I should like to place this table on Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member permission to place the table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dickey: The table is as follows:

TABLE II

National research council, Scholarships and research grants, 1917-56

Year	Expenditure
1917-18	13,794
1918-19	36,680
1919-20	53,416
1920-21	68,704
1921-22	62,342
1922-23	77,035
1923-24	101,658
1924-25	93,782
1925-26	106,214
1926-27	119,150
1927-28	154,591
1928-29	252,559
1929-30	270,432
1930-31	238,459
1931-32	209,324
1932-33	121,732
1933-34	205,089
1934-35	191,653
1935-36	164,184
1936-37	192,495
1937-38	213,656
1938-39	247,211
1939-40	369,559
1940-41	279,469
1941-42	281,809
1942-43	267,618
1943-44	227,688
1944-45	284,256
1945-46	307,891
1946-47	537,017
1947-48	949,615
1948-49	1,064,454
1949-50	1,552,776
1950-51	1,810,171
1951-52	1,836,583
1952-53	2,141,624
1953-54	2,123,324
1954-55	2,230,073
1955-56 (Forecast)	2,400,000
1956-57 (Estimates)	2,955,000

There is, I believe, no question but that the support of the national research council has over the years been a major factor in the development of university research in Canada. I should also point out that the national research council is by no means the only federal government body which is supporting university research. In the year 1954-55, for example, support for research carried out in the universities came not only from the national research council but from the Department of Agriculture, the defence research board, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and to a minor extent from other sources. The amounts of these assistances to university research have not been included in the table I have just placed on the record.

The hon. member for Prince Albert laid some stress on the question of industrial research and the steps that should be taken through taxation policy to assist private companies in engaging in industrial research. The Leader of the Opposition took the same line in his speech yesterday afternoon when he said, as found at page 5778 of Hansard:

> Tax deductions should be permitted in respect of research expenditures which will encourage our own research in every field.

I find it difficult to understand just how hon. members opposite, in the light of the law as it exists in Canada today, can suggest that this is not being done, in as full a measure as it is done in any other country of the world and in fuller measure than it is done in most countries. The hon. member for Prince Albert said during his speech that we should allow write-offs of research expenditures by industry, and he said we did not do it. That, Mr. Speaker, is just not the law. The law in Canada today with respect to the allowance of research expenditures by private industry is that in so far as current expenditures are concerned expenditures on research are allowed as deductions up to 100 per cent of those expenditures. How anything further could be done than providing a 100 per cent immediate allowance I am unable to imagine.

It is true that the expenditures made must be on a research program approved by the Department of National Revenue, but the regulations and the administration of those regulations are such that any research program even vaguely connected with the industry in which the particular company is engaged or the business that it is carrying on can be an approved project and the expenditures certified for complete write-off in the year of expenditure.

With respect to capital expenditures, which are also a very important consideration in connection with assistance to private firms engaged in industrial research, there is provision for the accelerated write-off of cost of both buildings and equipment, excluding the value of any land involved, over a three-year period. In other words, a company which wishes to do research is permitted to write off its full expense on current account each year 100 per cent, and if the building of any facilities or the provision of any equipment of a capital nature are required they have accelerated depreciation which permits them to write off those expenses in three years. How hon. members opposite, in the face of that, can suggest that this country is not giving very substantial and effective assistance to companies interested and anxious to go into research projects, I cannot possibly imagine.

The second point with which I should like to deal is one which has been dealt with very briefly by the Leader of the Opposition, in more detail by the hon. member for Royal last evening, and again to some extent by the hon. member for Prince Albert this afternoon. What has been said draws attention to the necessity of the federal authority taking reasonable steps, the best steps that are possible, to assist all portions of this country to develop their economic life on a basis which is fair and equal with the development going on in other parts of the country. Obviously it would be impossible to achieve complete equality of development in a country so diverse as Canada. But it is in this particular field that I think can best be demonstrated the truth of the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce last evening when he said that we have in effect now policies which are doing everything the Leader of the Opposition had in mind in placing his amendment before the house.

The suggestion has been repeated as a generality, but without any attempt to discuss facts or to establish the general statement by facts, that the government is doing nothing to assist the economy of the Atlantic provinces, for instance, in their development in order to try to level out any inequalities there may be there. Let us deal with the Atlantic provinces and the various federal government assistance programs that are being carried out in that area. I say "are being carried out". These are not vague generalities or promises, as are the suggestions made by hon. members opposite. These are actual programs on which money is being spent and through which achievements are being made.

Last night the hon. member for Royal, for example, spoke of the coal industry as one of the basic industries of the maritime provinces, particularly in the province of Nova Scotia. There are federal government assistance programs in effect and being carried out at the present time to assist the coal industry. There are not just one or two programs; they are five in number.

The first one is the transportation subvention on coal movements which is intended to overcome to some extent the handicap of coal mines far removed from the main markets in Ontario and Quebec. This program was instituted in 1928 and has been in effect ever since. The expenditures under that program are of a substantial magnitude. For example, in the fiscal year of 1954-55 alone the expenditures under this subvention program for mines in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were $8,764,000. Over the period of the whole program from 1929 to 1955 the total amount expended under this program in the two coal producing provinces of the maritimes amounted to $56,066,000.

The second program is the subsidy payments on coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel. This program is designed to place Canadian coal used in the manufacture of iron and steel on a basis of equality with imported coal. These payments have only been made in Nova Scotia, because that is the only Atlantic province in which basic steel is produced. In the fiscal year 1954-55 those payments amounted to $224,000. Since they were instituted in 1931 up to the end of 1955 the total amount paid has been $6,914,000.

The third program provides coal production subsidies, loans and rentals, intended to extend financial assistance with a view to increasing the production of coal in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick mines. This was carried on from 1942 to 1947, the period of this program, with total expenditures amounting to $31,883,000.

The fourth program is coal production assistance, which was instituted to make long-term loans totalling $10 million to operators for the purpose of increasing efficiency of production through expanded and modernized mechanization. This has been in effect since 1949. The total expenditure under that program from 1949 to 1955 in the two maritime provinces has been $8,362,000.

Finally there is an export subsidy program which was brought into effect in 1955 to extend financial assistance in respect of coal from Nova Scotia being shipped outside of Canada during the period June 1, 1955, to March 31, 1956. This program has since been extended. The expenditures under that original program undertaken last year in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia amounted to $300,000.

Mr. Speaker, that, very briefly, is a description of the actual assistance that has been given by this government to one of the basic industries in the maritime provinces to achieve the very effects of which hon. members opposite are talking. These are not promises. These are not suggestions of what might be done at some future time. Those are actual programs which hon. members opposite obviously either did not know about or were unwilling to admit in their speeches last night and today.

Let us look a little further than the coal industry. There are two programs of a general nature which are of great value to the maritime provinces. The first is the steamship subvention for coastal services. This is to provide a payment to contractors for service between designated ports in the maritime provinces. This program is not as important as it used to be in some provinces, but over the period 1948 to 1955 the total payments on these steamship service subsidies in the three maritime provinces amounted to $4,644,000. In order to show the importance of this particular program to one of the Atlantic provinces, may I say that these steamship subsidies for Newfoundland in 1954-55 totalled $2 million and the total subsidies paid since 1951 and including 1955 amounted to $8,279,000 for that single province.

Then there is the freight assistance under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This program is to provide for a reduction of 20 per cent on all rates charged on traffic which originates or terminates in the designated area, which is the maritime area. This was brought into effect under the Maritime Freight Rates Act in 1927. The expenditures for the Atlantic region in the year 1954-55 amounted to $10,590,000, and for the period 1946 to 1955 totalled $77,542,000 for this one program alone. I did not hear the hon. member for Royal mention that program in his speech last night.

The hon. member may be interested in the fishing industry. There are seven programs of assistance supported by the federal government for the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. The first is the fish bounty, most maritime members know about that. It is to aid the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, to encourage the building and fitting of fishing vessels and the improvement of working conditions for the fishermen. In the maritime provinces for the year 1954-55, $120,000 was spent on this program, and from 1946 to 1955 a total of $1,161,000 was spent.

Then there is assistance under the baits service which assists in making supplies of bait available to fishermen. This applies to Newfoundland, and since 1949 the payments made have amounted to $1,019,000.

There is a bounty program for the destruction of harbour seals to protect the fisheries, on which payments have been made since 1946 amounting to $95,000. There is a program of educational services for fishermen to provide for educational work in co-operative producing and selling amongst fishermen, on which the expenditure has been $459,000 since 1946. There is an annual vote of the Department of Fisheries for industrial development to provide technical services to fishermen and the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. Since 1948 and including 1955 this has cost $658,000, and for Newfoundland from 1953 to 1955, $88,000. Finally there is a program for the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities on which the expenditure in the maritime provinces from 1949 to 1955 has been $101,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that these are important programs of assistance. These are intended to build up the basic industries of the Atlantic provinces, and these are programs that are in effect and achieving results.

Mr. Brooks: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? I wish to remind the hon. member that my complaint in my remarks last night was regarding markets for our products. I admit these small matters are important.

Mr. Dickey: Mr. Speaker, on the question of markets, the success in marketing fishery products over the last five years has been outstanding, I believe, and I cannot think of any surplus of fish that has not found a market today, last year or in the last two or three years. We did have some difficulty about two years ago with lack of markets in the West Indies and in Europe for salt fish, but at the present time—I stand subject to correction—my understanding is that there is no fish production that has not found a ready market.

Mr. Sinclair: That is quite correct.

Mr. Dickey: Let us look at one of the other basic industries, namely agriculture. There are no fewer than nine federal government assistance programs for agriculture in the maritime provinces. First of all there is assistance in reclaiming and developing the marshlands of the maritime provinces. This was started in 1946 under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, and since 1946 in the three maritime provinces expenditures of $4,127,000 have been made.

There is the agricultural lime assistance program, a policy of which the importance to agriculture, in the province of Nova Scotia at least, cannot be exaggerated. These payments are to assist the provincial governments in promoting the increased use of lime on acid soils. The total assistance under this program in the maritime provinces since 1946 has amounted to $1,369,000.

There is the program of freight assistance on western feed grains shipped into eastern Canada as feed for livestock and poultry. The recent development of both the livestock and poultry industries, certainly in my county of Halifax, is directly dependent upon this excellent program which, from 1946 to 1954, in the maritime provinces has involved the expenditure of a total of $26,339,000 by the federal government, and since it has become effective in Newfoundland from 1950 to 1954 the expenditure of $1,625,000 in that province.

Then there is the assistance to cheese factories under the Cheese and Cheese Factory Improvement Act, which has been very important particularly in the province of Prince Edward Island. The expenditures under that act from 1946 to 1954 amounted to $40,000, with an additional $86,000 to assist in amalgamating cheese factories into larger and more economical units.

Mr. Brooks: May I ask the hon. member a question? Do the matters of assistance on feed grains and to those cheese factories not apply to all of eastern Canada, Ontario and Quebec, just the same as it does to the maritime provinces?

Mr. Dickey: That is correct.

Mr. Brooks: There is no special benefit.

Mr. Dickey: As a matter of fact, if the hon. member had been paying attention and if he will check Hansard, he will see that as far as feed assistance is concerned I said that it applied to eastern Canada, and that is correct; but it is of much greater benefit, both relatively and actually, to the maritime provinces than it is to any other part of Canada that gets this assistance. After all, the argument that the hon. member was putting up was that he wanted equality of treatment. If he is going to suggest that programs that can be useful to agriculture in the central provinces should not be applied to those provinces but restricted to the maritimes, I think he is forgetting about his argument on equality of treatment.

Mr. Brooks: The hon. member had better get the opinion of the four premiers meeting in Fredericton.

Mr. Dickey: The four premiers can look after themselves.

Mr. Brooks: They certainly can.

Mr. Dickey: They have their responsibilities.

Mr. Brooks: They do not say we are getting equal treatment.

[Mr. Dickey.]

Mr. Dickey: The hon. member has his responsibility not to mislead the house and the country the way he did last night.

Mr. Hees: Nonsense; and the way you are right now.

Mr. Dickey: I am giving the hon. member for Broadview and anybody else who is listening the facts, not some general statements that cannot be supported.

Mr. Hees: What the hon. member is doing is preaching a sermon. Will the hon. member tell us who wrote his speech for him?

Mr. Dickey: The next program is the program of assistance on hog carcasses, which has resulted in payments in the maritime provinces from 1944 to 1954 totalling $1,970,000.

Then there is the assistance program in the removal of apple trees, which was designed to assist in the removal of ancient and less desirable trees in the Annapolis valley. Under that program from 1943 to 1952, when the program came to an end, we made expenditures of $2,163,000, and no one in the Annapolis valley of Nova Scotia will gainsay the advantage of that program to that area of the country.

Then there is assistance in the construction of cold storage warehouses, under the Cold Storage Act. That program has resulted in the expenditure in the maritime provinces from 1948 to 1954 of $489,000.

Then there is assistance under the Canadian farm loan board, which is, of course, an act of a general application similar in nature to those mentioned earlier by the hon. member who interrupted. The expenditures under the act have amounted to $4,401,000. In addition there have been loans for farm improvements under the Farm Improvement Loans Act amounting to $14,092,000 in the maritime provinces from 1945 to 1954. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and list three other important programs in the field of forestry and the assistance given under the general health grants and other matters, but I think I have placed on Hansard sufficient facts to give the hon. member for Royal and a number of others some reason to reconsider the kind of statements they make in this house.

We are not going to solve problems of an economic nature in any part of this country by trying to make things look worse than they are. It is not facing the facts to suggest that this government is not undertaking policies that are designed to give assistance and that are having good results in bringing about the very things the Leader of the Opposition stated in his amendment. My purpose has been to point out very briefly some of the assistance programs that are in effect in the Atlantic provinces.

The programs I have described are current programs designed to give practical assistance to the basic industries, such as coal mining, fishing and agriculture, in the Atlantic provinces area. That is the kind of practical, effective assistance that can bring and is bringing results. I have not mentioned, and I will not take time to mention, the capital developments that have been carried out by this government, such as the construction and acquisition of auto ferry vessels serving the four Atlantic provinces, providing essential transportation services by connecting them, the ferry services to Prince Edward Island, to Newfoundland, and the Bar Harbor-Yarmouth ferry service which has come into effect this year, the cost of such projects as the strait of Canso causeway, which was a great and important development, the contributions that are being made under the Trans-Canada Highway Act to assist in highway construction in the Atlantic provinces. To no province in this country is the trans-Canada highway assistance of more importance and more benefit than to the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker we have had quite a survey of the industrial development, or lack of development, depending on the point of view, that obtains in Canada. As often happens when I listen to a discussion of this sort I am constrained to wonder if perhaps we do not frequently confuse means and ends. For instance, whenever I pass a particularly large pulp and paper plant in my own constituency, one of the largest in Canada, there is always a question arising in my mind as to just what is the purpose of that particular industrial development. Beyond providing jobs for a certain number of people I must admit I am sometimes in doubt as to whether there is any social purpose at all behind that institution.

I believe when we come to consider the question of the industrial development of Canada we should be asking ourselves not merely how large is that development, not merely how well are we employing our natural resources, but we should also be asking ourselves something else and that is, what is the purpose of our industrial development. As I said, I believe that today we tend to confuse means and ends; we tend to accept as ends industrial development which by the nature of things can only be the means to some real and valuable end.

I do not quite know how one would express that end. Perhaps each individual has his own definition of it. Possibly the expression "the good life" might be as good a definition as any of the end of social organization and industrial development, for industrial development provides us with the material basis for that good life. I am not for a moment underestimating the extreme importance of that development, but it only provides one of the ingredients of what I think most of us would consider to be the good life.

I would remind hon. members that there have been other systems of society which have had varying degrees of success in industrial development. We have all heard of the success of the late unlamented Adolf Hitler in Germany and we all know, of course, that Mussolini made the trains in Italy run on time. In recent months we have heard a great deal about the industrial success now being achieved in the Soviet union. In each of these instances I have cited there has been brought to the nth degree that confusion of ends and means which I feel afflicts us too in some measure; for while industrial development provides the material basis for the good life for free men and women, it does no more; and as the instances I have cited suggest, if left unchecked by other developments in society it may very well develop into weapons which will more effectively destroy freedom than an underdeveloped economy would be able to do.

Now, to seek the basis for the other aspects of the good life for free men and women we have to look at other institutions and other developments in our society; and I submit, sir, that the basis for the most valuable part of the good life is to be found in the type of social and political institutions under which people live. Here in Canada the fundamental basis of that good life is to be found right in this chamber of the House of Commons, because here in the hands of the 265 members of the Canadian commons rests ultimately complete power over the lives and fortunes of the Canadian people. While it is easy enough for us to take the position that those who now exercise power through the medium of this institution have in their minds and hearts no desire and no intention to infringe on the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens, we must also bear in mind the fact that precedents and habits and procedures that are developed in this chamber may at a later stage in our history be used by men with definite intentions to infringe on the freedom, rights and liberties of the Canadian people.

Things have been happening in this chamber of late, sir, that raise some very grave doubts in our minds, doubts as to whether this vast industrial power about which we heard so much from the Minister of Trade and Commerce last night may not in the future be used as a weapon of oppression rather than a tool for enhancing and expanding individual liberties and freedoms among the Canadian people. I have on previous occasions suggested that this House of Commons is but a frail barrier protecting the freedom and democratic rights of the Canadian people. It is the best we have, but it must be handled with great care and delicacy, and I think it is not too much to say that within recent days and weeks events have taken place in this chamber that have seriously corrupted this vital, central organ of democratic freedom in Canada.

A week ago yesterday the presiding officer of this chamber, for reasons that he considered good and sufficient—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would confine his remarks to the amendment about which we are speaking. It seems to me that in the last few minutes his remarks have wandered somewhat far afield, and at one point he almost reflected on a vote which had previously taken place in the house.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that I am suggesting there is very little use of our discussing the industrial and economic development of Canada if we have not simultaneously as much attention and regard for the institutions that protect the freedoms and rights of Canadian citizens. On that basis, sir, with all due respect I suggest that my remarks are in order.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are not in order.

An hon. Member: It would be something new for you.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): There has been some doubt lately as to who was going to be the Speaker of the house—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You go ahead and be Speaker.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): —as we find out now from an unlucky candidate.

An hon. Member: You are the least worried in this house about democracy.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I submit, sir, that I am in order to discuss the whole framework of Canadian society in which our industrial development is taking place.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You are not.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): A vital section of the framework of that society is the conduct of this central organ of democracy within the Canadian nation. If you wish to rule me out of order at this point, sir, I shall take my seat and raise this matter later as a grievance.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo).]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I feel that we are limited by the terms of the amendment which is before us. I do not propose to read the entire amendment, but in the main it deals with the development of the natural resources of this country, and I feel that discussion of extraneous matters is, of course, out of order.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce last night and by the manner in which he read it. He admitted, of course, at the beginning that it was a scissors job. At page 5795 of Hansard I find this statement:

> . . . I am meeting a prepared speech with a speech I have attempted to put together with scissors, largely from speeches I have made over a period outside this house.

Obviously that speech was based on the product of one or more ghost writers.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): By what right does my hon. friend draw that conclusion? I mentioned speeches I had made outside the house. If he is going to talk about ghost writers, I myself can mention a few that are active on the other side.

Mr. Rowe: But he is doing the speaking right now.

Mr. Green: I have the floor at the moment. I repeat that it is perfectly obvious that the speech which the minister read was a patchwork of speeches.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): As was the one which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) read.

Mr. Green: That may have been so. As I said, there is no doubt that the speech which the minister read was a patchwork of speeches read by the minister elsewhere at different times, and it contains some real highlights. For example, one was his attempt to paint the wonders of Canada's having an adverse balance of trade with the United States. That was something new, I am sure, in the annals of this house; yet the minister tried very hard to make out a case for that point. As reported at page 5796 of Hansard he explained that there was this adverse balance and then he went on to say this:

> In fact, for most countries a current deficit of the same relative magnitude as that now being encountered by Canada would mean serious trouble.

But in the following paragraph he has this to say:

In Canada's present circumstances, however, this deficit is not a reflection of weakness but of strength . . .

And a little further on he added this:

I am astonished when I listen to criticism of the current trade deficit, which is so essential to our current phase of expansion and development.

Those remarks, Mr. Speaker, make one wonder whether it is not time that the minister had a new battery of economists advising him. Certainly, if he is right, all the economists in the country are wrong. I merely pointed out these statements to show how little value can be placed on many of the statements made by the minister last night.

Then he had another statement to make. It is to be found at page 5801 of Hansard. There he was trying to minimize the extent to which United States capital has been invested in Canada and he pointed out that on a per capita basis Canadians have more money invested in the United States than have Americans in Canada. It sounded like a good plausible argument until one began to read it; and then one could see clearly why it is said that statistics can prove anything. Here we have two countries and there are 15 times as many Americans as there are Canadians. Yet the minister argued that, because the average per capita of Canadian money invested in the United States was greater than the average per capita of United States money invested in Canada, there was therefore no problem. He almost tried to make us believe that Canada was taking over the United States rather than the opposite.

Then in the positive way in which the minister read this speech he once again—as he usually does—tried to make us and the country believe that black is white. But he never quite convinces himself because he always comes in with an addendum, namely that even if black is not white, we ought to consider ourselves lucky that we have black. In that spirit last night he tried to ram quite large quantities of gobbledygook down our throats.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition merited a good deal more substantial consideration than was given to it by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). This amendment sets out one of the long-term policies for Canada of the Conservative party and it was brought forth because we believe in the policy that is to be found in that amendment. I propose to read it again. It is as follows:

This house is of the opinion that the welfare of the Canadian people requires the adoption now of a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada, encourage more processing of those resources in Canada, correct the present serious unfavourable trade balances, foster wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of our resources, and promote greater opportunity and employment for a steadily increasing population.

Our objective in that policy would be to make Canada one of the great nations of the world. We believe that is her destiny. We suggest that this policy gives the Canadian people a vision of what this nation can be. We believe that a national development policy—and I stress the word "national" without any apology—if pursued vigorously, would enthuse and inspire Canadians of all ages and would make that vision come true. I suggest to the minister that the Canadian people are not getting much inspiration from any policy or any kind of leadership that has been given by this government in recent months.

In considering this policy I think we should first review Canada's position today—in July, 1956—89 years after confederation. In my opinion here are some of the factors which are of vital importance to a consideration of future Canadian policy. The first is that Canada is still overshadowed by her great and friendly neighbour, the United States. This has been so since confederation and it has been necessary for public men to recognize that fact throughout the whole history of Canada and to adopt policies to counteract it in so far as it was possible to do so. Let us consider confederation itself. One of the main reasons there ever was a Canada was this overshadowing by the United States. Then consider the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That construction took place almost entirely in order that Canada's boundaries might be stretched right out to the Pacific ocean rather than having the whole northwestern part of the continent become a part of the United States. Today the situation is just the same—namely that we are overshadowed by our great neighbour—and it probably will be the same for many generations in the future.

Then the second factor, which is vital in my opinion, is that this neighbour is depleting its national resources, and at a much greater rate than the Americans had ever anticipated. In the course of this debate several references have been made to what is known as the Paley report. As the minister knows, that is a report made by what was called the materials policy commission set up by the President of the United States a few years ago. I believe they reported to him in the year 1952.

I have here an interview with Mr. Paley conducted by the editors of the U. S. News and World Report and contained in the edition of that magazine for August 15, 1952. I propose to read two or three paragraphs because they focus attention on the findings made by Mr. Paley and his fellow commissioners. One answer he gave in this interview was as follows:

A. As a nation we have crossed the great industrial divide. We used to produce more raw materials than we used, but now we are using more than we produce. And this is not a temporary situation. In 1950, we had to import about ten per cent of the raw materials we used, and they cost about 900 million in prewar dollars. We estimate that by 1975 we may have to import about three times as much.

Then he was asked:

Q. Then, the days of "self-sufficiency", as you see it, that for generations we have felt that we had, are over?

A. Yes. Our technical people figured that even if we had what we started with—all the materials that were in this country to begin with—it still wouldn't be enough for another 25 years of growing at the rate we've maintained for the last half century.

Another question was this:

Q. What are the principal commodities that are in an unsatisfactory condition today?

A. If you want to get dramatic about it, you could talk about the additive alloys—cobalt, columbium, and such materials as high-grade quartz crystals, mica and industrial diamonds—those materials for which we are largely or completely dependent on foreign supply. But the thing that bothers me most is the lessening adequacy of low-cost supplies of the staples, such as iron, copper, zinc, petroleum, lumber, water for industries, and so forth.

This means that the United States will look more and more to Canada for raw materials in the days that lie ahead, and therefore there will be a more rapid depletion of our own resources than there would otherwise have been. I use minerals as an illustration. There will certainly be a far more rapid depletion of our minerals by reason of this great need which has arisen in the United States. Canada too has a lesson to learn from the Paley report. A few months after it was published, the Bank of Montreal dealt with the question in its monthly Business Review for November 20, 1952, and had this to say:

The commission's policy suggestions and recommendations are, of course, directed to the United States administration. But for Canada the moral is clear. We may reasonably hope to benefit richly over the short and middle term from the colossal appetite for materials of our neighbour to the south;

In my judgment, that is the policy that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is working on. The bank review goes on to say:

—and we may rejoice in our wealth of resources and our timely capital expansion program. Yet, if the trend is toward an age of scarcity that can only be averted by major technological developments, we too may be well advised to do some serious stocktaking for the longer range in the midst of our apparent plenty. For, in the words of the commission, "the consumption of almost all materials is expanding at compound rates and is thus pressing harder and harder against resources which whatever else they may be doing, are not similarly expanding."

Then the third factor in Canada's position today, which is very material, I believe, is this. Our friendly neighbour—and no one questions the wonderful friendliness between the Americans and the Canadians—is unwilling to let Canadian products interfere with the United States home market. I need only mention farm products. Time and again in the past few years we have had moves made by the Americans which have affected our sale to them of farm products, and those moves have been taken on the basis that it was not right to their own countrymen to allow our farm products to take the United States home market. Just last week they made a similar move with regard to a mineral, and I refer to nickel. I have here a dispatch of July 5, just five days ago, from Washington:

The United States is trying to free itself from dependence on Canada for its nickel supplies.

The article goes on to say that already some success is being achieved in reaching that objective.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Should my hon. friend not be pleased with that situation, according to his theory of saving our natural resources? The United States is also worried about excessive imports of lead and zinc; perhaps those metals would fit in too.

Mr. Green: I am not quarrelling with the Americans. I tell the minister this, and I hope he will remember, that the reason why the United States is the most powerful nation in the world today is that that nation adopted the policy we are advocating in our amendment. The article has this to say:

This desire to become independent of Canadian supplies, these officials say, forms one of the primary aims of a new nickel-purchasing policy announced recently by the office of defence mobilization, the United States government agency charged with stockpiling essential war materials.

Then it points out that Americans are planning to speed up production of nickel, and there is this further paragraph:

The ODM proposes to achieve that increase by offering to buy nickel from all suppliers on a contract basis at a firm price of 64½ cents a pound, which is about the current market price,—

Here is a point the government of Canada might note.

—and by offering tax concessions to United States producers who undertake to expand production.

Since Canadian producers would not be eligible for the tax concessions, the program obviously favours domestic United States mines.

Then it goes on to point out that Canadian nickel mines are concentrated in a few centres and are therefore very vulnerable to hostile attack. Then there is this report:

At the same time, other sources report that administration circles for some time have been unhappy about a long-standing situation which leaves the United States dependent on one country—even so friendly a neighbour as Canada—for the bulk of its supplies of so strategic a mineral as nickel.

The new program, besides seeking to stimulate domestic output, apparently is aimed at encouraging American firms to build plants to process low-grade ore from Cuba. They could obtain the tax benefits by setting up processing plants in the United States.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Fine.

Mr. Green: Why try to delude ourselves? This has been, is now and will be the basic policy in the United States. As I have said, it is because of that basic policy that they have built such a powerful nation.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Thus they will not be stripping us of metals.

An hon. Member: Sure they will.

Mr. Green: There is no doubt they will be getting all the nickel they want from Canada in addition to getting it from these other sources. The fourth factor which should be considered by Canadians today is this. The Canadian government has been concentrating on trade with the United States. Last year 60 per cent of our exports went to the United States and 73 per cent of our imports came from that country. In this connection we must always remember that we are importing from the United States goods which are far more highly processed than the goods we are sending to them. The very heavy adverse trade balance does not seem to be worrying the minister at all. In fact, he gave us the impression last night that he was very pleased that Canada had such a large adverse trade balance with the United States. To point up the extent of our adverse trade balance I should like to refer to a dispatch I have here of July 6, just four days ago, which has this to say with respect to the importation of consumer goods:

The main rise was from the United States, Canada's top customer and chief source of her imports. Canada's trade deficit with the United States continued to rise to new heights.

Farther on in the article there is the following:

The great imbalance was with the U.S. Exports to the U.S. rose by some $40 million in May—

In one month.

—to $261,700,000—

For the first five months of this year.

—while imports increased by almost $90 million to $404,100,000. . . . For the first five months the Canadian deficit in American trade almost doubled to $625 million from $352,800,000.

The Canadian Statistical Review for June of this year, which we received yesterday, points out on page 4 that the deficit on current account for the first quarter of this year was at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of approximately $1·2 billion. If these adverse balances go on for the rest of the year they will aggregate over $1 billion for the whole twelve months which, as the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) reminds me, will be an all-time record.

The fifth factor which should be considered by Canadians is this. In the last ten years Canada—this has very little to do with any activities by the government—has been discovering raw materials to a far greater extent than at any other time since confederation; oil, natural gas, iron ore, reserves of copper, nickel, uranium, titanium and so on down the list. These discoveries have improved our economy immeasurably. I happened to run across an old advertisement the other day which was published by the government in 1947 when restrictions were placed on trade with the United States. Here is an advertisement headed, "This Is An Emergency—Let's Treat it as Such." The advertisement goes on to say:

Canada is heavily "in the red" in present trading with the U.S. dollar area.

She was not one-half as much in the red as she is now.

In our total trade with the world we are in a good position but not in that part which is done with the U.S. dollar countries.

There is a picture of an oil barrel, a coal scuttle, a bale of cotton and a steel rail, and there are these words:

To keep our industries humming, our living standard high, we need petroleum, coal, cotton, steel and similar essential things.

Our position with regard to at least some of these commodities has greatly improved in the meantime. I realize that the minister said we are still importing as much oil but we are producing a great deal more than we did then. We are to get natural gas and it will be replacing coal to some extent. We have also had the huge discoveries of iron ore. By the way, we should always remember that none of these resources being dug out or pumped out of our soil are inexhaustible. These discoveries have opened wider opportunities for Canadians than we have ever had before, and that very fact alone merits reconsideration of the long-term policy of Canada with regard to future development.

There are obviously two main roads this country can take in the future. I admit at once that it is largely a matter of emphasis. No matter what government is in power, that government will not be able to follow one narrowly confined policy. It is a matter of emphasis. The first road is to continue concentrating on trade with the United States and to stress the export of raw materials. That is the policy this government is following today. I will not say that they are not doing something about processing materials here. They are, but they are not placing as much emphasis on that type of activity as a Conservative government would do. The Liberal emphasis is on exporting raw materials, and that has been the case right down since the time of confederation, as well as their policy of concentrating on trade with the United States.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Would my hon. friend think it is a mistake to exchange raw materials? I would remind him that at the present time the exchange is very much in our favour. We get far more raw materials from the United States than we sell to the United States.

Mr. Green: That was another phony argument the minister made last night. He of course left out of his figuring all the commodities that are only processed to a very small degree.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Such as what?

Mr. Green: Some of the ways in which logs are treated, for example. In that way he arrived at these favourable figures, which in my opinion meant very little.

The other main road which the people of this country can follow is to strive to process more of our raw materials at home and to diversify our trade, in particular to give more attention to trade with the commonwealth. We do not say for a minute that no raw materials must be exported. The member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) based most of his speech on that thesis, which of course was completely wrong. We would follow this second road, and therefore it is from that thinking that we have devised this national policy.

I come back to the terms of that policy. We advocate a national development policy which will develop our natural resources for the maximum benefit of all parts of Canada and encourage more processing in Canada. In effect what it means is this: we would try to get the maximum return from our own Canadian resources for the Canadian people. I come now to British Columbia and I will show how that policy would apply there. We have in British Columbia and the Yukon a body known as the British Columbia and Yukon chamber of mines. They made a submission to the Gordon commission in December of last year which contained this paragraph—

Mr. Lesage: Do you rely completely on this association?

Mr. Green: I think the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) has got enough problems in settling what is to be done about power on the Columbia river without trying to interrupt my speech.

Mr. Lesage: I would not rely on you.

Mr. Green: The organization had this to say:

> We think every effort should be made to encourage establishment of more manufacturing plants in Canada, including those that utilize as their raw materials products obtained from the mines. This would put Canada in the position of not being so dependent upon foreign markets for sale of her mineral production.
>
> At the present time, nearly all of this province's extensive output of such important metals as lead, zinc, copper, iron ore and asbestos, are shipped to manufacturing centres in other parts of the world. An aggressive policy of encouraging new manufacturing industries in Canada, in addition to a continuing program of research, would undoubtedly develop local markets for many of our mineral products.

I can see no reason why other countries would not be just as anxious to get our minerals in the form of ingots, rods, sheets or wires or at least in a semi-processed form as they are to get them at the present time in the raw state.

In British Columbia we have comparatively small deposits of iron ore. We have been trying for years to bring about the establishment of a steel industry. The minister and I have exchanged words on that subject more than once. When I pointed out to him that this iron ore was being dug out and shipped in the raw state in Japanese ships to Japan, and we were buying back the semi-finished product in the form of steel at greatly increased prices, the minister said, "Well, it is a good thing to get the mine developed."

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I said nothing of the kind. I said I had no authority to stop it. The reason I had no authority to stop it was that the opposition prevented me from passing legislation which would permit me to do so.

Mr. Fleming: Thank heaven for the opposition!

Mr. Green: The minister did not make any attempt to stop it when he had the authority. I believe he has authority to stop it under the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): You had better read the act again.

Mr. Green: The minister does not want to do anything about it; that is the trouble. Last night he spoke about iron ore and the fact we were producing so much we had to export most of it. That is not the position on the west coast at all, although it may be in the eastern part of Canada.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Does my hon. friend challenge my statement that I have no authority to stop this export.

Mr. Green: Certainly.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, you are quite mistaken.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow me time for all these interruptions by the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: But not for provoked interruptions.

Mr. Green: Oh, don't you pop up.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not take up as much time as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Green: Your interruptions are not very impressive, and I would advise you to keep out of this debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman has anything to say about immigration, I will reply to him.

Mr. Green: So far as iron ore is concerned, the minister is evidently interested only in selling this abroad.

Mr. Lesage: You had better talk to Mr. Duplessis about that. Ask the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) about it.

Mr. Green: I am getting a lot of help here, but unfortunately it is not much good. I should like to read to the minister an extract from a speech made by Dr. Hume with regard to the processing of iron ore in Canada. This speech was made on March 9, 1953. He said:

> No one needs to minimize the difficulties of research directed towards the processing of this ore to the pig iron stage at or close to the point of origin.

He was referring to the Quebec-Labrador ore.

> But perhaps a really concentrated effort on the part of Canadian metallurgists and scientists would seem important at the present not only to investigate much more fully possible methods of treatment but if present methods are totally unsuited to conditions as we have them, to devise new methods, an accomplishment surely not beyond Canadian inventive capacities.

Then he said:

> It is suggested as not beyond the possibilities of our research scientists to find ways and means in Canada to utilize electric power and iron ore occurring together in the same area to at least effect a partial processing which would be of immense benefit to this country. The Ontario research foundation has been doing excellent work on the study of iron and our mines branch at Ottawa has a number of scientists well versed in the technology of treatment of all kinds of ores. Thus well directed efforts might accomplish much toward reducing our iron ore to the metal before shipment outside Canada . . .
>
> It is not my intention to advocate extreme views in this regard but even a partial solution would bring great additional wealth to this country and show that we are capable of handling our heritage for the welfare of our nation with not only great credit to ourselves but perhaps by discovering new processes we might bestow great benefits on mankind as well.

And then he said:

> There is no reason, however, to hesitate to tackle the problem because it is hard and with hundreds of millions of tons of iron ore in sight with mining on a large scale assured for many years a success promises rich rewards nationally.

Then just this year Mr. P. E. Cavanagh, director of metallurgy of the Ontario research foundation, had this to say:

> . . . it appears certain that most of this iron ore will be exported to the United States and Europe.
>
> In this situation it is proper for us to consider means of converting some or all of this Canadian ore into semi-finished or finished products here in Canada. Several proposals for establishing new steel industries in Canada to use large tonnages of this iron ore have already been advanced.

So much for iron ore, Mr. Speaker. Then another example is in the production of heavy water. Canada's whole atomic program is based on the use of heavy water. We are giving a reactor to India and we hope to sell reactors to other nations based on heavy water. For some years there was a plant manufacturing heavy water at Trail. It is true it was owned by the United States but Canadians learned how to manufacture heavy water there. A few months ago that plant was closed and now Canada gets all her heavy water from Savannah, Georgia, the only heavy water plant on this continent. Talk about concentration of nickel and the dangers of concentration—there is the only heavy water plant and this Canadian government has apparently made no attempt whatever to have heavy water produced in this country. We are going to require a great deal of it in the future with new reactors and with the development that takes place, but no move has been made to produce our own heavy water. I might go on to deal with other products, other resources, but my time is running out. I think those will suffice as an illustration of what we have in mind.

Then, the amendment mentions the correction of the present serious unfavourable trade balance. If we process our own resources to a greater degree, that of course would go some way towards meeting this problem of an adverse balance. I suggest also that we should stop this bowing to Washington at all times. This course has been followed by this government ever since the end of the second war. They hurriedly adopted United States arms for our defence forces to just as great a degree as they possibly could. This attitude has been carried on ever since.

The other day the minister announced the changes that had been made in the GATT agreement. He pointed out that the United States had made concessions to Canada, and that they had benefited and that we had benefited. The Montreal Gazette punched a hole in that argument very neatly when they said that concessions on an equal basis would be all right if our trade were anything like on an equal basis, but it is not. Before the government starts cheering too loudly about getting equal concessions from the United States under GATT, I suggest that they should take into consideration some way of bringing trade between the two countries more nearly into balance.

At the same time as there has been this bowing and scraping to Washington, we have had an indifference towards commonwealth preferences. Of course, these preferences were fought tooth and nail by the Liberals in 1932. That party, now in power as the government, had no use for them. The former minister of national defence expressed the attitude of the government very clearly when he was questioned in the house about preferences on October 12, 1949, and the late Tommy Church asked him this question at page 705 of Hansard:

> May I say to the hon. gentleman that the proposal also hangs preferential trade on the sour apple tree, like John Brown's body.
>
> Mr. Claxton: That is a good place for it too.

Our own Prime Minister, speaking here on June 22, was asked by the hon. member for Prince Albert whether he would be opposed to any extension of the British preference. This is the Prime Minister's answer, as recorded at page 5284 of Hansard:

> That is not correct as a general statement. The matter will have to be considered in all its aspects and of course in the light of its possible repercussions upon the general tariff and trade arrangements which are still in force and which have proved to be of quite substantial benefit to Canadian trade.

The Prime Minister obviously is not very much interested in the preferences, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce is even less interested than the Prime Minister. Canada should be buying more in the commonwealth and less in the United States, but there is very little indication of a policy of that kind being adopted.

[Mr. Green.]

Finally, the amendment proposes that wider financial participation by Canadians in the development of Canadian resources should be fostered. Even the members of the government admit that this situation should be remedied, but what do they propose to do about it? So far, we have heard no proposal which would meet that situation. Tax exemptions? No, not a word about that. Tax reductions? Oh, no, they are holding off the reduction in taxation in order to help them win an election next year, although there are surpluses now in the moneys coming into the treasury.

Perhaps this is the most important point of all, because here is a case where a vision could be held out before the Canadian people, a vision of Canada for Canadians. The president of the University of British Columbia summed up the picture very neatly when he spoke in Rochester, New York, about a month ago. President Norman A. M. MacKenzie is not a politician, is not a partisan in any sense of the word. He is one of the outstanding Canadians today. Here is what he told an audience at the University of Rochester:

> He said Canada is delighted to have United States capital in the country.
>
> But "some of us like being Canadians and want to remain Canadians, and we are not unaware of the influences and pressures infiltration and intervention of this kind bring with them and imply".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I am afraid I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired. I have allowed some time for the interruptions which occurred.

Mr. A. B. Weselak (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the speeches which have been made in the course of this debate. The amendment urges this government to take such steps as will ensure the greater processing of our raw materials in Canada. A great deal has been said in the course of this debate regarding the trade deficit which Canada suffers from at the present time in her trading relations. I think it is only common sense to recognize that any country which is experiencing the industrial development and expansion which Canada is experiencing today requires a great deal of specialized equipment, tooling equipment and other items to expand her industrial potential. I think a striking example of this is the pipe which is being imported into Canada at the present time for the construction of the trans-Canada pipe line which eventually will add a great deal to the industrial development and indeed to production in this country of ours.

In discussing the trade deficit a great deal has been made of the statement that Canada is suffering an increasing trade deficit as a result of her trading relations. Very little has been said in the course of this debate about the increase in exports which this country is experiencing throughout the world.

In the mail this morning I received the dominion bureau of statistics daily bulletin for Monday, July 9, and the first paragraph makes interesting reading as far as this debate is concerned. The section is headed:

Domestic Exports in May Reached Record Value and Volume

The article states:

Canada's domestic exports reached an all-time high record total for a month of $428,501,000 in May, topping last year's May total of $367,100,000 by 16·7 per cent and bettering the previous monthly peak of $411,700,000 in June, 1953 by slightly more than 4 per cent, dominion bureau of statistics reports in its monthly summary. In the first five months of this year exports to all countries advanced 11·6 per cent to $1,846,300,000 from $1,654,200,000 a year earlier. The volume of exports, also a record, rose 12·5 per cent in May and 7·9 per cent in the 5-month period, while prices averaged 3·8 per cent higher in May and 3·4 per cent in the cumulative period.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these export figures indicate an expansion in our industrial economy which is going forward apace.

On the second page of this bulletin are some rather interesting figures in so far as the group values of exports are concerned. These figures are given in millions, with comparisons for the same period last year. Agricultural and vegetable products, $358 million as compared with $297 million last year; animals and animal products, $102 million as compared with $101 million last year; fibres, textiles and products, $8 million as compared with $7 million last year; wood, wood products and paper, $612 million as compared with $597 million last year; iron and products, $154 million as compared with $128 million last year; nonferrous metals and products, $356 million as compared with $326 million last year; non-metallic minerals and products, $110 million as compared with $71 million last year; chemicals and allied products, $98 million as compared with $92 million last year; miscellaneous products, $44 million as compared with $32 million last year. Across the whole range there has been a substantial increase in our exports in the 5-month period this year as compared with last year.

Then, if we look at the main commodities themselves which are entering into our export trade, I think we can get some idea as to what percentage of those commodities form the raw materials to which the Leader of the Opposition has made reference. At the top of the list we have newsprint paper, a fully processed commodity. We find that in the 5-month period of this year exports of this item have increased from $267 million to $290 million. Wheat, which is incapable of processing, and is generally shipped in its natural state, has increased from $134 million to $191 million. Planks and boards dropped slightly from $151 million to $131 million. Wood pulp, which is capable of further processing, increased from $118 million to $125 million. Nickel increased from $89 million to $93 million. Copper and products increased from $59 million to $85 million. Aluminum and products dropped from $88 million to $80 million. Fish and fishery products rose from $45 million to $46 million. Farm machinery and implements are at the same figure, $42 million.

In this whole range of products which are set out on this sheet, actually the only products which are capable of further processing are wood pulp, nickel in some instances, copper in some instances, zinc in some instances and iron ore. These are our main export commodities, and a very small portion of them is made up of commodities that are capable of further processing in Canada. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comparisons between 1939 and 1954.

It is true that in this 15-year period our exports of raw materials increased by 288 per cent but alongside this export of raw materials we find that in this period the index on durable manufactures rose from 107·9 per cent to 297·9 per cent or an increase of 277 per cent, which is less than the increase in our export of raw materials. The index on non-durable manufactures rose from 108·2 to 222·4 or an increase of 206 per cent. I think these figures indicate that where it has been economically feasible secondary industries have been established in Canada at a pace which compares favourably with the increase in our exports of raw material.

If we look at the exports we find that exports of partially and fully manufactured goods have risen in that period from $511 million to $1,846 million or an increase of 361 per cent which is far in excess of the percentage increase of our export of raw materials. Our total export of raw materials in 1954 amounted to $1,082 million. It is interesting to note that of this total figure 75 per cent comprises agricultural and other products which are generally exported in their natural and unprocessed state. The remaining 25 per cent or roughly $304 million were mineral and forest products which are quite capable of further processing.

In the same period in 1954 we imported $473 million worth of raw materials of the same category and this figure indicates, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other speakers have stated, that we are a net importer of raw materials to the tune of roughly $170 million in the year 1954 and not net exporters.

The official opposition in this house has advocated that a policy be adopted by this government of encouraging the maximum processing of raw materials within this country. In the course of the speeches which we have heard I do not think that any definite statement has been made by the Conservative opposition as to how they would achieve this end or just what actually would be done by them, should they form the government, to increase the industrial production in this country. However, I recall that the manufacturers' association of Canada were not quite as wary as the Conservative party concerning what means they would suggest be employed to achieve this end. They stated point-blank that they felt the tariff structure in this country was not such as to encourage the expansion of secondary industries. I believe the figures I have quoted indicate there has been a progressive expansion of industry in Canada and that industries have located themselves in this country where they have found it profitable to do so.

I do not think that in this country there is a lack of businessmen with sufficient foresight that where an industry can be established within the country which can compete with other industries in the home and the world market any opportunity would be overlooked by those businessmen to establish such an industry within Canada.

If the only answer lies in the suggestion of the manufacturers' association, then the work which has been done over the past 25 years in encouraging international trade would be lost. In addition to that we would create in and for Canada a state of economic isolation. We would try to reach absolute self-sufficiency at the cost of isolating ourselves from the trading markets of the world. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if we were to follow that policy we would be going against the record of history. A reading of history indicates to me that in 1930 this method was tried. We tried to isolate ourselves from the other markets of the world and endeavoured to create tariff walls to prevent other people from bringing their goods into this country in competition with our own industrial development. The government of that time no doubt sincerely felt this was the answer, but before its reign was over it found this was not the answer, and in 1932 the British preferential tariff was brought in in an effort to open the markets of the world to our primary production.

In 1935 the Liberal government came into power and in 1937 a statement of policy was adopted by Mackenzie King in which he stated that this party would bend every effort toward breaking the shackles which prevent free international world trade. I think this government has done that because in the period during which it has been in power protective tariffs in Canada have been reduced by close to 40 per cent and during that period our trade relations with other countries have increased tremendously and our exports have also increased proportionately. By adherence to GATT and bilateral agreements with such countries as Japan and the U.S.S.R. we have opened new markets particularly for our farm products and we expect these markets will be of great benefit to us in the future.

If we were to follow the suggestion of the opposition to its logical conclusion, it would appear to me we would have no alternative but to create an atmosphere wherein we would establish in this country uneconomic secondary industries which would not be capable of competing in the world markets without a certain amount of subsidization or protection. I suggest that the creation of this atmosphere would have an adverse effect upon the economy of this country. If we were to use protection as a means of achieving this end we would soon find we would lose our markets throughout the world.

As has been aptly said, trade is a two-way street. We must buy a certain amount from other countries in order to receive an open port into their markets, and I think this experience is illustrated by the bilateral agreements which have recently been concluded with Russia and which two years ago were concluded with Japan. On the other hand, if we were to try to subsidize these markets we would of necessity have to tax the people in order to meet the cost of such subsidization. If we were to sponsor or force uneconomic industries to establish themselves in this country we would possibly, as I have said, lose our world markets. We would be restricted to our own local markets and as a result we would naturally have to restrict our primary production because we would have no market for it.

This is a serious thing to us in western Canada. Our primary production through agriculture in western Canada is very great. We are dependent for approximately 70 per cent of our production in grain or foreign markets, particularly in wheat. The expansion of the discovery of raw materials in western Canada has been encouraged by the markets which have been made available for these products and the effect of the development of raw resources in the western provinces is that there have been established service industries and other light industries which are required to service the raw material industry which has been developed as the result of the discovery of such materials, and they are continuing to develop and establish themselves in those particular provinces.

In my own constituency we have a very large pulp and paper mill which is dependent practically completely upon foreign markets. We have recently had brought about mineral developments in the Bird river and Cat lake areas where many metals are being discovered and which are presently being developed and mine shafts being sunk. If we were to adopt the policy of restricting our exports I am sure that these industries would definitely suffer. In my view, this proposition which has been put before the house should be scrutinized very closely. It has many implications which, if carried to their logical conclusion, would certainly have a serious and bad effect upon the economy of the country.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, this motion that is now before the house is to my mind an extremely important one. I believe it is much more important than many of the government members and members of the cabinet—what is left of them here—really assume it to be.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Look around yourself.

Mr. Rowe: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that this government feels that everything is well as long as they are there. With reckless abandon they disregard parliament, they disregard the opposition, they disregard the people and they say, "All is well so long as we are here". Yesterday evening the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), I believe, said that we must not be governed by emotionalism and ignorance, that we must view these matters with common sense or in a spirit of common sense and good will. He said he had listened to the greatest rot that he had ever listened to. Then he said, "Do not let us fool ourselves; there are plenty of natural resources; we are not going to be short. There are plenty of them in the world." He said that it does not make much sense to smelt every ton of iron ore and refine every barrel of oil that comes out of the ground.

I could not help thinking of my three or four-year-old grandson setting up a teddy bear and knocking it down in order to show how strong he was. I could not help thinking how the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was setting up these straw men and knocking them down like a little boy with a teddy bear. We have the minister giving us a lecture about emotionalism and talking nonsense in the house; we have a responsible minister trying to say that to this house. It is bad enough when these Liberal henchmen go out in the country and misrepresent the facts in the country as to what this party stands for. But it is worse to stand here in the house and say that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) implied at any time in his life that every ton of iron ore should be processed in Canada, that every barrel of oil that comes out of the ground should be refined. Mr. Speaker, there is not an hon. member within the sound of my voice nor a child in the Ottawa public schools who does not know better than that.

Mr. Speaker, what we have said in this motion is consistent with Conservative policy all down through the years. It was Conservative policy many years ago—yes, at the beginning of our history of industrial development—that gave birth to industrial development in this country. Even the most bitter free traders of the day, and even a few that may be left yet who still cling to that old dusty halo of free trade, practise the policy laid down by the Conservative party down through the years, namely to raise tariffs instead of lowering them, and other methods, in order to develop industry in Canada. We have no apology to make for that.

I believe, however, that we have common hopes in this house, independent of party, race, class or creed. As Canadians, I believe that we have common hopes in relation to our national security, the defence of our way of life and our survival itself. We have common hopes that we shall become a strong country, that we shall have more people and that we shall have a greater degree of economic independence rather than dependence. I believe those are the common hopes and aspirations of every man, woman and child in Canada who takes time enough to think. The trends, however, are different. No one can study the trends of our development without realizing this. Perhaps the government, in their smug complacency have not bothered to realize that it is nothing they have done, particularly so far as fiscal policies are concerned—for they have not any—which resulted in the development that has taken place. It is the demand of foreign countries on our resources that are being depleted. It is the demand of $2 billion for expenditures for national defence and other more or less abnormal features that has kept our prosperity developing as it has lately to a great extent.

There are some things that Canada stands out in. There is no other people with such great resources, as we will all agree. No other country exports more raw resources per capita in world history than Canada has been doing in the last number of years. No other country per capita buys as many of the manufactured goods, the product of other countries' labour, and no other country exports more with less labour. In other words, there is no other country that exports so many dollars worth and that distributes and gives as little benefit to so few people as we do in Canada under our present policy. There is another particular in which Canada stands out. There is no other country in the world that places so many of its trade eggs in one basket. No other country is depending so much on another country. No other country in the free world depends on requirements of other nations so much as does Canada. No other country in the free world needs population more than does Canada and no other country in the free world is increasing its population more slowly.

Why are these things so, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have an all-time high national product? Surely that should exercise the dullest mind in this house and even in the country. Why do you boast so much about a great national product of $26 billion and promising to be $28 billion while you are employing on new jobs only half as many as you did in 1952. You say a billion dollars less. Why? Because it takes less men to export our products than it does to finish the product where there is 75 per cent to 80 per cent more finished goods in the last ten years. We need a policy. We need it for our national security. We need it for sound prosperity and economic stability.

In the last ten years, Mr. Speaker, 300,000 Canadians have gone to the United States to find employment in fabricating the raw resources that have gone over there from here. In other words, three have gone to the United States for every one that came to Canada or three times as many. Today, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, as many Canadians from your own native province and from your own great race have down through the years gone to the United States to find employment as you have almost in the whole province of Quebec. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing that will give employment to more people than will the gradual development of our manufacturing industries. It is important. It will give the maximum benefits to the greatest number of people. It will help to equalize these benefits among our people. It will help to level out the benefits that we have heard about in this house, where some districts had 30 per cent less benefits in this so-called prosperity in the last few years. It will help to decentralize our development. It will help develop home markets which after all are the best markets. Hon. members speak of what the government has done. Hon. members have talked about the Beechwood development, and they have talked about the Saskatchewan dam. For years they have brought that out at election time but they have never put it into effect yet and they will not do so until after the next election; and if they thought it would not be a tattered and torn issue they would probably save it for the next federal election as they saved reform of the Senate for the last thirty years in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have an all-time high, it is true, in our national production. But at the same time that is dependent to a great extent on other countries. We are more dependent on our export markets than is any other country. Let us consider the United States and the United Kingdom. As someone has said already today, what has made those countries great? What has made the United States to the south of us the most powerful industrial country in the world?

What made the United Kingdom the great power she has been down through the last century? It was the development of her manufacturing industries, even though she had to import a great deal of her raw resources. Here in Canada we have an abundance of raw resources; and yet we are buying more per capita than any other people in the world of finished manufactured goods and we are exporting more of the raw products. We are dependent on others to market our products. We are dependent on the whims of Washington. We are dependent on the policies of France. We are dependent on the policies of Germany. We are dependent for 17 per cent of our total national output on the whims of others who need our products or who may not need them, whilst the great United Kingdom, with all her problems, is only dependent on four per cent of her national output. We deal almost exclusively with one country; 73·3 per cent of all our purchases last year were from the United States of America, while only 8·5 per cent were from Britain.

We have had a lopsided trade policy down through the years. What has been the result? The government speaks about this party not believing in development. I believe that the Minister of Trade and Commerce tried to imply that it was apparent that we were opposed to development. There is no party in this country that has a record of national development equal to that of the party I represent here this evening. Down through the years, the national development of our own resources for the benefit of our people has been a fixed policy of the Conservative party, in this country for 75 years. The party to your right, Mr. Speaker, has never been conspicuous for that. They were not conspicuous for that when it was created; they were not conspicuous for that after it was first practised. They opposed it all through the years. They even wanted commercial union with the United States in 1895; in 1911 they wanted reciprocity; in 1930 they wanted countervailing duties; they wanted to go to Washington and find out what Washington thought about fixing tariffs and they would fix them the same. They have no fiscal policy. They have no immigration policy. At the present time they boast about their achievements in the past few years, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has tried to imply that no other country has made such advancement as we have. No other country has been so dependent on other countries for the requirements of raw resources, which are being depleted. The United States to the south of us needs our raw resources and therefore is buying them from us, it is true; but, so far as the development of manufacturing industries and giving employment to our people are concerned, this government has failed dismally.

No other country in the world has had a greater opportunity to develop manufacturing industries, with the raw resources available here, in the last ten years, than this government has had. Yet we find that we have only a 25·6 per cent improvement in our manufacturing development in the past ten years, while France had a 50 per cent increase, the United Kingdom had a 42 per cent increase, the United States had a 35·5 per cent increase, and communist countries behind the iron curtain have had an increase of over 50 per cent. So on that score we have seen the lack of a policy by this government. We have seen a government tired, smugly complacent, self-satisfied and saying, "Everything is well; we will never run out of our resources." Yet our economists tell us that the visible supply of our chief resources in this country at the current rate of consumption will not last more than 30 years.

Probably the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he says, "That will be enough for us", figures that his government will have pretty well passed by that time. That is not good enough. There is no industry in Canada that could justify its place in the life of this country except by extending equalizing conditions and extending benefits to the greatest possible number of people. There is no other way. If we are going to be true to ourselves and true to our children's children, we will develop that great heritage of resources in a way that will give the greatest amount of employment to the greatest number of people and equalize conditions through the different parts of this dominion, rather than exporting our resources in the raw form.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce and others have chided the leader of this party about his development policy. Members from the province of Ontario and others who wish to observe it know very well that we have in the province of Ontario many monuments to his policies of development when he was premier of that province. In the district I was very familiar with, I am satisfied there were at least $200 million and at least 30,000 people employed merely because of the development of the resources of northern Ontario set out by the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. George Drew, when he was premier of Ontario. These things are history. You will find that the history of this country's industrial development has been based more on the sound Conservative policies down through the years than any of the expediencies and shot-gun prescriptions that have been put forth by those who have ridden the gravy train in cold wars and hot wars on these matters and are selling our raw products and our heritage too to people who want them—and risking that they will not want them in the years that lie ahead. Will any hon. gentleman, even those in the back benches who say so little and think so much, they say, pause for a moment and think what will happen if we had anything in the way of a world depression, when these countries would not want some of the raw resources? We are depending so much more than any other country on such exports. What would happen? What would happen if we were not spending $2 billion for defence? It would be most conspicuous then that this government would have no fiscal policy, as they have demonstrated down through the years.

The United States, it is true, has depleted its raw resources, but it depleted its resources as old England depleted hers to a great extent. It depleted them for the benefit of its workmen. The United States is rapidly depleting its resources of iron ore for the great industrial plants of the United States. They are sending their finished products over here at a tremendous rate. In the United Kingdom they do the same thing. The history of these countries and the history of any country that has had substantial and sound development has been through that development.

This government seems so self-satisfied, even in the face of an increasingly unfavourable trade balance. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said last night, though our trade balance would frighten any other country and in fact would almost ruin many countries, that it was a good thing for this country. That is a strange type of thinking. It is a strange type of logic. It is like telling someone, "Sell a little more of what you have every year and keep buying more, but buy more than you sell and you cannot go broke. It will break another country, but it will not break this country as long as we have a government in power that does not listen to an opposition or is afraid to listen to the people and ignores parliament itself."

This year we are now developing in our trade tendencies the greatest unfavourable trade balance that this country has ever known. In March 1956 we bought $4½ million per day more of finished products from the United States than we sold of any of our raw products and all other products combined: $132 million in one month. Yet, even that does not shake the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He says that is a good thing. If that is a good thing, we probably should anticipate a billion and a half, and if it is a good thing probably he and the Minister of Finance will get together and say, "We boasted to the country that we have lowered tariffs at the GATT conference; we will lower some more." If it is a good thing to buy $1½ billion more of manufactured goods which our own people could make, it might be a good thing to buy $3½ billion more. Then we could be truly the hewers of wood and drawers of water that some of the statements of the government indicate they want us to be. I do not think any of the front-benchers have actually said that in the house but it has been said outside, and down through the years for the last quarter of a century, yes, for the last half century, many people in Canada have felt that the policies of the party now in power would eventually, if allowed, bring this country to a state of hewers of wood and drawers of water. This is a term that was used in the past but only lately has it been used by their admirers and supporters.

The government seems to think that all is well. They have no manpower policy. They have no fiscal policy, and when they have neither they do not need an immigration policy. They do not have one anyway. We know that immigration into this country is falling down. We will soon be losing more people than we are gaining. Why, Mr. Speaker, at this late date and in this dangerous trend we hear these tired old ministers boasting about what they have done in the past, about their past reductions in tariffs at GATT conferences. We see them hiding behind the Gordon commission and dreaming and guessing about the population of Canada in 1980, at the same time not saying why because they are exporting more with less work year by year.

It will take the best ingenuity of industrial leaders and executives and labour leaders and the best ingenuity of a new government to safeguard the sound economic independence and development of this ountry. We cannot boast about our raw resources and the great wealth we are bringing into the country. The United Kingdom has been our best market, but on two occasions we have virtually lost it when the Liberal party was in power. Between 1921 and 1930 we virtually lost the whole British market. We lost it for agricultural products between 1921 and 1930 and we have lost it again to a great extent. Yet down through the years we have had favourable trade balances with that country. Even during the past 10 years we had a favourable trade balance with Britain of $3,413 million and yet in the very same period we bought $7,679 million more from the United States than we sold to that country.

Therefore it is not surprising to find that today the United States owns 91 per cent of our mining and smelting business. It is not surprising that they have a 75 per cent interest in our industrial concerns. It is not surprising that about 50 per cent of all our industrial and primary activities in Canada are controlled by United States investment because we have given it to them in trade balances. On the other hand, despite what the ward politicians out in the country may say, the Conservative party led by the Hon. George Drew has never at any time said that they were opposed to United States investment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rowe: My hon. friends laugh. If you would listen more and laugh less you would learn more about what has been going on in this country down through the years because that was the established policy of this party before some of you laughing boys were born. Who was it who developed the industries of this country? What was it that developed them more than the imperial trade agreement, even in the days of the depression? Many of the biggest industries in Canada today were established here because of the imperial preference agreement brought about by the Hon. R. B. Bennett in 1931.

Where was your party in those days? You were opposing the policies of the imperial preference. Only one among all your members supported that policy at that time and he was almost ostracized. At least there was one Liberal at that time who voted as he thought, independent of the crack of the whip. Those were difficult days. It is all very well to talk about those difficult days and blame them on a government. You might as well blame them on the United States where there were 12 million people unemployed. You might as well blame them on Britain where there was almost a revolution, or on France. Throughout the world 35 million people stood idle between 1930 and 1935. Yet during those years of depression more industries were brought into Canada under the imperial trade agreement preferences than at any time of normal business prosperity.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rowe: My hon. friend laughs. He was just going to school in those days and he has not learned much since.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you sure he went to school?

Mr. Rowe: My hon. friend laughs but he knows very well that the government in power at that time, for which he was such a good secretary along with half a dozen more secretaries who were more important than he was, lost every market we had in Britain by 1930. We were buying Danish bacon to feed our own people and your party went out of power. We did not bring about the depression. You left it on our doorstep.

Mr. Pickersgill: You made it worse.

Mr. Rowe: You left every lumber yard that was not burned bulging with unsold lumber. You left every elevator filled with unsold wheat and you lost every important market for agricultural products overseas. You left more people unemployed following your regime than at any other time in our history. We had it left on our doorstep. He laughs best, Mr. Speaker, who laughs last, but I will remind my hon. friend that when the history is written of the development of this country it will be told that the party I have the honour to represent in speaking today is the party whose record of policy has been closely associated with the record of our development down through the years. The party that my hon. friend, the little Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill), represents has been the party of expediency down through the years. They look north and south trying to develop trade with the United States and climax it at last by our having more trade with one country than any other country has ever had with another country in the history of the world's business. You are depending more on the whims of Washington, as you tried to do years ago, than at any time in our history.

Mr. Pickersgill: Back to Bennett.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Rowe: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that under the new standing orders I have only a few minutes to conclude the remarks I was making this afternoon. I wish to summarize what I was saying in connection with our hopes for the development of this country, the employment of our people and the equalization of conditions amongst the various parts of this dominion. I feel that the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) is one which should have been given more serious consideration than it has by this government which has shown distinctly today, and in the last few months, that there is a clear-cut difference of opinion between the government of the day and Her Majesty's loyal opposition. This government has shown all down the years that they believe the development of this country is to be achieved by the exhaustion of our vast resources for the immediate gains that might be brought about through employment of our people. We of Her Majesty's loyal opposition have, since the early days of Sir John A. Macdonald, believed in the development of our own resources for the development of our own people and for the equalization of conditions in the long term interest.

The Leader of the Opposition followed that policy in the days when he was the premier of the province of Ontario, and has emphasized and re-emphasized that the great resources we have, like the great estates of any country or any family, are not inexhaustible. We are the trustees of those resources and we should plan for the future, for future generations. We should try to husband those resources and not to reap the immediate benefits that the members of the government seem prone to emphasize and boast about. As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out yesterday, many of our major resources in this country, great as they are, could be exhausted at our current rate of consumption within 30 years. Stop and think about it! Some of you men who have children, and who expect their children's children to have opportunities in this country, will realize that these resources should not be exhausted, like the nickel and other resources of this country, in a period of 30 years.

This government has grown very smug and complacent. They have been in power so long, they think nothing matters as long as it does not happen to them. I realize that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is just back from the conference in the United Kingdom. Before he went the Leader of the Opposition urged upon him that he call a conference of the commonwealth prime ministers. The Prime Minister told us on his return that it had been intimated to him that it was not desirable now. He left the impression it may have been intimated by anybody, but it was asked by the Leader of the Opposition and it was refused by the Prime Minister, who took no recommendations over to the conference and brought nothing back. As a matter of fact, he contributed very little to the conference except to tell them how Mr. Eisenhower was going to run his election in the United States. That is not good enough. He told them that about President Eisenhower. If the Leader of the Opposition had said anything like that, he would have been condemned right across the country for interfering in international affairs. The Prime Minister said, "I do not tell you where I stand on anything; I brought nothing in my hands and I take nothing back. I said in the house that I would not do anything without their approval, but I tell you now that President Eisenhower of the United States will make no statement on any great international problem until after the next election." In other words, he interprets Mr. Eisenhower as playing politics, as the Grit politicians in Canada have played it for the last 25 years. Nothing but expediency of the moment: that is the keynote of what you did while you were over there at the prime ministers conference.

I am glad you are back and looking so well.

An hon. Member: You do not mean that.

Mr. Rowe: I am glad the Prime Minister has returned in such good health. He looks well. However, no one should look badly who travelled over that long distance and did as little as he did. We have pleaded with you for five years to have an imperial conference. Do you want this trade to continue with a balance of $7 billion or $8 billion favourable to the United States, as in the last 10 years?

[Mr. Rowe.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Having been advised by the Clerk that it is six minutes past eight o'clock, it is my duty under standing order 56 to put the question on the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Drew) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss
Argue
Balcer
Barnett
Bell
Blackmore
Blair
Brooks
Bryce
Bryson
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Cardiff
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Churchill
Coldwell
Diefenbaker
Drew
Dufresne
Ellis
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fleming
Gagnon
Girard
Green
Hahn
Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace)
Hamilton (York West)
Hansell
Harkness
Hees
Herridge
Hodgson
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Johnson (Kindersley)
Johnston (Bow River)
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Leboe
Lennard
MacLean
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
McGregor
McLeod
Monteith
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Nowlan
Pallett
Patterson
Perron
Poulin
Quelch
Regier
Robinson (Bruce)
Rowe
Small
Smith (Battle River-Camrose)
Stanton
Starr
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Thomas
Tustin
White (Hastings-Frontenac)
White (Middlesex East)
Winch
Zaplitny—71.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Ashbourne
Balcom
Batten
Benidickson
Bennett
Blanchette
Boisvert
Bonnier
Bourget
Brisson
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Buchanan
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Campney
Cannon
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Decore
Deschatelets
Deslieres
Dickey
Dumas
Eudes
Eyre
Fairey
Follwell
Forgie
Fraser (St. John's East)
Gardiner
Garland
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Habel
Hanna
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer

Henderson	Monette
Hollingworth	Nixon
Hosking	Pearson
Houck	Philpott
Howe (Port Arthur)	Pickersgill
Huffman	Pinard
Hunter	Pommer
James	Power (Quebec South)
Jutras	Power (St. John's West)
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)	Prudham
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)	Purdy
LaCroix	Reinke
Laflamme	Richard (Ottawa East)
Lafontaine	Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche)
Langlois (Gaspe)	Richardson
Lapointe	Roberge
Lavigne	Robertson
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)	Robichaud
Leduc (Verdun)	Robinson (Simcoe East)
Lefrançois	Ross
Legare	Roy
Lesage	St. Laurent (Quebec East)
Lusby	St. Laurent (Temiscouata)
MacKenzie	Schneider
MacNaught	Shipley, Mrs.
Macnaughton	Simmons
McCann	Sinclair
McCubbin	Smith (York North)
McCulloch (Pictou)	Stick
McIlraith	Stuart (Charlotte)
McMillan	Thatcher
McWilliam	Thibault
Mang	Tucker
Marler	Villeneuve
Masse	Vincent
Matheson	Weir
Meunier	Weselak
Mitchell (Sudbury)	Winters—122.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

And the Clerk proceeding to announce the result of the vote:

Mr. Speaker: Before the Clerk announces the result of this division, I heard at a certain moment cries of "order" on the part of some hon. members presumably because a member entered the house while the division was in progress. If that is so, the vote of that hon. member cannot be counted and therefore the vote of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Henry) will not be allowed. See standing order 12(2).

And the result of the vote having been announced:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see that two hon. members are now competing for the floor.

Some hon. Members: Three.

Mr. Speaker: I will have to bring the matter to a head. I see that the C.C.F. party has had only one speaker in this debate and I also see that the Social Credit party has had only one member speak in this debate, but I will have to bring the matter to a head. I give the floor to the hon. member for New Westminster.

SUGGESTED SUMMER RECESS FOR MEMBERS

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the grievance I intend to raise is one in which every hon. member of this house is interested because it affects not only my riding but the riding of every hon. member in this house and I would say it possibly affects every Canadian citizen as well, at least those who are interested in what is being done in parliament today. It is not my intention to speak to it at great length because I feel the interest in this subject indicated by certain hon. members of this house is such that every hon. member who cares to do so should be permitted to speak to it.

My grievance is that we as members of parliament do not declare a recess period in summer to afford ourselves an opportunity to visit our constituencies as we should. There are a great many members in this house who are fortunate enough to live within a very short distance of Ottawa and they are able to come here without spending a great deal of time in travelling. I can fully understand that they would feel it is not at all necessary for us to adjourn for the summer recess and go home so that we can visit our constituents. However, Mr. Speaker, may I point out to those hon. members that there is a great deal of difference between the time it takes to travel, let us say from Ottawa to Vancouver or Victoria, or the far-flung parts of the maritimes, and the time involved in travelling from Ottawa to a city like Toronto. For that reason alone, if for no other, I think it is necessary for us to rearrange our business or else find some other means of transportation to enable those members who live a long distance from here to get home to see their constituents.

We in this parliament like to think we conduct the business of the nation in such an excellent fashion that we should receive high praise for it. On the contrary, I would say we mishandle our affairs here by failing to recognize the need for hon. members to go home to see their constituents as well as in the fashion in which we conduct ourselves, which is much worse than most of the Polly pigtail clubs or other literary clubs in the country.

May I point out that to reach the city of Vancouver by train, which is our common mode of travel, it requires at least four nights and three days by ordinary rail traffic—although the Canadian and the super-continental do it more quickly—and it requires another four nights and three days to return. In other words we must spend at least a full week in travelling across the continent if we wish to see our constituents. On the other hand it is only a matter of an overnight trip to the city of Saint John, New Brunswick, and those who are fortunate enough to represent a riding in New Brunswick do not find themselves in the same awkward position as do we who come from the far west of our fine country.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we owe it to our constituents, to our families, to ourselves and to Canada that we have the right to declare a recess here and go home during the summer months when most of our families are on holidays so that at least we may have the privilege of seeing them from time to time. During my short period in this parliament—a matter of three years—we have had three summer sessions. As I stated earlier, I can understand the need, or the lack of need, as is manifest, with respect to the people or the representatives from Ontario and Quebec who live near Ottawa. I can understand that there is no need for a holiday so far as they are concerned. They can go home and examine their constituencies at their pleasure over the weekend or they may meet their constituents over the weekend. As has so frequently been suggested by members in this house, we have our "T to T" boys in the chamber who do not necessarily stay here but who find that their business takes them home and rightfully so. It is much easier to handle the problems of your constituency at home when you have before you the person who has the problem and can discuss it with him at first hand.

I say this. Let us use some common sense. Let us show the intelligence with which we are endowed. Certainly there is no need for us to carry on here year after year during the summer months. We find, for instance, that industry declares a certain holiday for its employees. Management recognize the need for the employees to have a holiday. Management also recognize the fact that they themselves must have a holiday. The holiday might be only for the purpose of visiting their families or their friends. I am not pleading for a holiday, Mr. Speaker. Rather I am pleading for the opportunity for us to get home legitimately, go and see our constituents, talk to them as we should like to do, and hear of their problems at first hand.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) earlier this session asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marler) to give some consideration to allowing members of parliament from British Columbia and the far west and from the maritimes to have air transportation—that is to have a pass on Trans-Canada Air Lines—once a session or more often in order to visit their constituencies. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), in the absence of the Minister of Transport, answered the question he was taking it as notice and we have not heard any definite decision on it since. But understandably, I say, as we have heard in the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee room from time to time from the representative of the air lines, Mr. McGregor, this would be a very costly thing as far as Trans-Canada Air Lines is concerned. Seats are at a premium on our air lines. It is a very costly matter. It costs $312.45 to go from here to Vancouver by plane return. To some or to many, possibly, that is not too big a sum and probably they should use their funds for that purpose and spend more time in their constituencies.

Possibly it might be considered that the 21 days we are allowed is sufficient to spend in our constituencies. But, Mr. Speaker, I find—and I am satisfied that many members in this house who have spoken to me on this very same question find the same thing—that the 21 days is in itself not adequate. We must feel free to leave this chamber with the knowledge that the estimates in which we might be interested or some vital piece of legislation that is still before the house or might come before the house might not be brought into the chamber while we are at home and we would not have our constituents tell us that we should have been in the House of Commons to speak to that particular question.

The opportunity for members of parliament to take part in the normal civic affairs on Dominion day and other holidays during that season is lost because we find that it is necessary for us from the far west to stay in this chamber to take part in the discussions or to look after our business from this point of view. After all, that is the reason we are being paid; or one of the reasons we are being paid is to be doing our business in Ottawa. It is true that we might go home and say, "We are home on parliamentary business". I would admit that. But, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, it takes us four nights and three days by train to reach Vancouver and another four nights and three days to come back; in other words if we are to spend a week in our constituencies, it would take three weeks for a British Columbia member to do his job at home and use the train going and coming. Mr. Speaker, I feel that that is a mistake. We should declare a recess just the same as would any other common-sense business enterprise, and get our business done. I am satisfied that if that were done and if we, let us say, declared our recess some time before July 1 and had only one month recess or two months, as the case might be, whatever is decided upon, we would get a great deal more business done before June 30 than we are getting done at the present time. I think that a great deal of our time is being spent in not doing the business that we have been sent down here to do because so many of us,—and not for political reasons—by reason of the fact that they cannot see their constituents, are frustrated from time to time by knowing full well that certain of the estimates or other business will be before the house when they are at home trying to look after their constituencies.

We recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there is need for a recess period at Easter so that members of parliament can go home to see their constituents at that time. How much truer it is to recognize the fact that it is more important to go home during the early part of July or all of July and part of August and carry on later in the year again and finish the legislation in a common-sense fashion. Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the government may feel that it is impossible for us to finish our business in ten months' time. I have been given to understand heretofore that the government has felt that we should finish our business by June. This suggested procedure would at least give them the opportunity of trying to get it done by that time. Certain individuals may argue that it might be impractical, that we might reach the stage, let us say, toward the end of June when it became apparent that an extra week of sitting would finish our legislation and we would be finished for the year. To them I would say that certainly we should be able to revise the rules in order to make it possible for us, by unanimous consent, to decide to continue to sit for that extra week, as the case might be, and finish the business for the year. But, Mr. Speaker, I feel—and I am satisfied that there are many more in this house who feel likewise—that we should have a recess during which we can visit our constituents and for which we can plan so that we can tell our constituents we will be home during that particular time of the year. I find that the constituents—many of them in my riding at least, and I am satisfied that the same applies to many other ridings—do not realize that their legislators do not regulate their business so that they can be home for events such as Dominion day and on other occasions, as they might expect them to be.

I would say that we should change our rules to call for a recess possibly of one month—it might be found convenient to have a two-month recess—not for holidays but to go home so that we can look after the business properly as we are expected to do in our own ridings, at least during the summer months.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) following the same grievance subject or opening a new subject?

Mr. Knowles: My subject could be related to what the hon. member said, but a part of it will be different.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member who is following the same subject.

Mr. Knowles: This is not a put-up job, is it?

Mr. Byrne: You have a suspicious nature.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): I was very much interested in the remarks just made by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Hahn), because he echoed thoughts which I have entertained ever since I came to this parliament. Hon. members will appreciate that the thoughts of those of us who live down by the sea go back at this time of the year to the balmy breezes coming in from the Atlantic ocean and the smell of the salt water and the seaweed. We find it quite a sacrifice to exchange those pleasures and beauties of nature for the steamy hot weather of Ottawa, particularly in view of the ordeal we all suffered so very much last year. This year we have been more fortunate, and the weatherman has been extremely kind, but I do not think we can bank too much on his indulgence in that respect.

My chief complaint about these long sessions is that they interfere so much with family life. I have known constituents to say, "We elect the members; we send them to Ottawa; we pay them $8,000 a year and $2,000 for expenses; and they should be very grateful. What have they got to complain about anyway?" I should like to tell the world that there are many easier ways of earning a living than coming here to Ottawa, and the $8,000 a year remuneration that I get in no way compensates me for the sacrifice that I have to make in family life.

Last year I came to Ottawa early in January. I got home for a week at Easter, and then we were here till the end of July. It takes five days to travel by rail to my constituency, and it was the first week in August when I got home. I had a week's rest and then I started to go around my district. I can tell hon. members that my district covers almost 1,000 miles of coast line and contains 260 different settlements. Each one of these settlements expects to see its member at some time in between sessions. I myself find it necessary to make that trip to find out what is going on in my district, because communications are so poor that the only way to find out is to get first-hand information. Last year it was December before I completed my trip around my riding. I can tell my hon. friends that when daylight saving time goes off and the days begin to get short it is no picnic travelling around the south coast of Newfoundland in all weathers, sometimes tied up for two or three days or a week at a time in a settlement on account of bad weather. I got home about the middle of December last year.

I had no time at all with my children last year. They were out of school before I left here and they were back in school again before I finished my trip around my district. I was home in December for about two weeks, and this year early in January I had to leave again to come up here. This year I was a little better off because I had a week extra on account of a conference. But except for that, I was here this year until Easter, when I had another week or so at home. Now it looks as though we shall be here again all this summer, at least for all of July and possibly for part of August. So again I shall have no time with my family. My children were out of school in the middle of June, and before I get home they will be back in school. I can tell hon. members that it is impossible to compensate for the sacrifice in family life by dollars and cents. That is one sacrifice that members who live a great distance from Ottawa have to make.

Perhaps many of us would not complain at making that sacrifice if we felt it was really necessary. I have been here now since 1949 and I have not seen any session that could not have closed and completed the business at least six weeks earlier than it did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: Certainly last year—

Mr. Fleming: Is that why we had closure?

Mr. Carter: I am sorry; I am all for closure. I do not think we have enough closure. I hope that from now on we shall make a regular practice of having closure on every bill. If we get ten days on a bill, we are pretty stupid if we cannot put forward all the arguments for and against it in 60 hours.

Mr. Rowe: That is one man well trained.

Mr. Carter: We are not helping parliament's prestige by endless repetition and mere sounding off without adding anything to any debate.

Mr. Rowe: Why not have closure and send in for your cheque?

Mr. Hees: Why not sit down now?

Mr. Carter: I want to give my hon. friend some good advice, which I hope he will listen to and practise.

Mr. Hees: You are giving us advice but not good advice.

Mr. Carter: Perhaps my hon. friend is not able to discern good advice. If he would listen a little more and practise what he learns a little more he might accomplish something.

Mr. Hees: Get her all wound up again. Let her go. Come on, boy. He has lost his place.

Mr. Carter: I do not speak very often but when I do speak in a debate I can manage to say everything I want to say in half an hour.

Mr. Hees: You can say it in five minutes.

Mr. Carter: I have seen too many of my hon. friends on the opposite side of the house stand up, talk for 40 minutes and say what could be said in five minutes. There is another aspect, apart from this unnecessary absence from one's family, which I think is a terrible thing. I do not think it is good for members, I do not think it is good for parliament, and I do not think it is good for our constituents. As the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn) said, there should be a stated time when we could plan visits to our districts. We should be able to spend more time there than we do now. We cannot do it as long as we are here just talking sweet nothings.

Mr. Nesbitt: Like now.

Mr. Carter: No, this is something worth listening to, and I hope the hon. member will let it sink in.

Mr. Sinclair: These Ontario members do not understand the problem. They are home every week.

Mr. Carter: Another aspect is that we are all very conscious of the taxpayers' money. We make considerable fuss when we think the taxpayers' money is being wasted. I do not know any way in which the taxpayers' money is wasted more than it is in endless futile talk. This parliament costs money. Every minute that an hon. member spends occupying the floor is costing the taxpayers money. Every unnecessary minute is money wasted. If we prolong parliament 20 per cent longer than is necessary that 20 per cent extra cost of parliament is sheer waste of the taxpayers' money.

I want to support what my hon. friend said about air travel. I do not think it is an unreasonable thing to expect to be provided with air transportation. Members who live at the extreme ends of Canada, at least 500 miles from Ottawa, should have the privilege of travelling by air. This would put them on a par with hon. members who live in the central provinces. Most members from the central provinces can go home on the week ends. Certainly that discrimination should be done away with and that can only be done by granting air travel privileges. I do hope that the government will give consideration to this problem because I think what has been suggested is in the interests of parliament and of the members of parliament. We should be able to spend the odd week ends with our families. We should be able to spend the odd week ends with our constituents. In my opinion any provision that will facilitate that end will be in the interests of parliament.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for Kootenay East indicated when I did not see him before that he wished to follow the same line of argument. If I am correct in that and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not, then I recognize the hon. member for Kootenay East.

Mr. Ellis: It is all arranged in advance.

An hon. Member: Oh, shut up, Ellis.

Mr. Ellis: A Liberal-Socred coalition.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, if I thought for one moment that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was going to follow the line introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster I would be indeed pleased to allow him to take the floor at this time.

Mr. McIlraith: He has just been home.

Mr. Byrne: My memory harks back several years to the time when some hon. members were seeking to do something for members of parliament. It is a great axiom of long standing that the Lord helps those who help themselves, but the members directly opposite me are always pleased to ride along on the coattails of those of us who are prepared to stand up and take criticism, rightly or wrongly, when we attempt to do something about the conditions affecting members of parliament. Perhaps my training in the past leads me to take the position that when people help themselves they are indirectly helping others.

As a trade unionist and miner I always found that when I was able to get a higher rate of pay or more dollars per foot for the breaking of rock I was helping my fellow workers. So far as I have seen, that has not been the policy of the members directly opposite. I said that my memory harks back to the time when members sought to do something to alleviate the situation that left members in very dire financial circumstances after having served seven to eight months here in Ottawa and having to undergo the very great expense that is a part of being a member of parliament. They were certainly a rear guard and far in the rear when it came to the point of assisting us. As a matter of fact, they were all for it behind the curtains when they came and spoke to me about the pay increase, even suggesting that $12,000 might not be too much. They said that they would not go for that but that $10,000 was perfectly all right. However, they then rushed in with amendments to reduce that amount to $8,000. I would not suggest for a moment, of course, that that was done for political purposes. I am sure it was entirely for the benefit of the taxpayer. However, I leave that to your imagination.

The question of holidays in the summer, which was brought up by the hon. member for New Westminster, no doubt is a good one, but I think that the committee that spent several years changing and attempting to improve the rules of parliament perhaps did not go far enough in its deliberations. We had hoped that the improvement in the rules would have streamlined the procedures in the House of Commons so that the business of the house could at least be completed in six months. That, of course, has proved not to be true.

Mr. Ellis: If we did not have to listen to speeches like this we would get through.

Mr. Byrne: Has the hon. member something to say?

Mr. Ellis: If we did not have to listen to speeches like this we would get through.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member takes exception to listening to speeches—

Mr. Ellis: Like this one.

Mr. Byrne: —that are not to his liking. Of course, I realize that some of the things I said a few moments ago are not to his liking but I have listened endlessly to the hon. member. I recall that earlier today and on several occasions in the past he has been likened to the foghorn in the harbour at Vancouver. That becomes a very tiresome sound if you happen to come from the interior of British Columbia, as I do. I can assure the hon. member that I have sat here endlessly listening to speeches by him that have been anything but invigorating and have certainly led me to believe that the rules should have been improved upon a great deal more and should perhaps even go so far as to say who should be members of the House of Commons.

Now, I have been attracted by those people directly opposite who have perhaps taken up three-quarters of the pages of Hansard during the past session. Of course, there was one debate when they were outstripped, but generally they are occupying the floor and wasting much of the time of the house, so they should not feel too disconcerted if at this time we try to do something for the members of this house, and indirectly something for the people of Canada.

It has been suggested that a member should have at least a limited pass on Trans-Canada Air Lines, and Canadian Pacific Lines should not be overlooked in this regard. I do not believe these companies should be expected to indiscriminately issue passes. Perhaps it would be a better method if we were allowed to travel on the air lines and charge the expenses to the House of Commons. The T.C.A. should not be expected to make up the losses that may result from members travelling to far eastern Canada or far western Canada. Members at least should be given the right to travel home to their constituency two or three times during a session. In this way members would be enabled to provide some service to their constituents, and would be placed on an equal footing with members who are living in the central provinces. I would certainly support such a suggestion because it is not a good arrangement for a member who comes to Ottawa to move a young family to Ottawa for six or eight months of the year. It breaks up the school year, and the cost of maintaining two homes is certainly prohibitive.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hahn), a member should be able to visit the various parts of his riding to hear the complaints and requests that his constituents may have. The hon. member from Newfoundland—I shall not try to pronounce the name of the riding—has pointed out that it requires a great deal of travelling to get around to the various points. While most of my travelling can be done by automobile, still the riding is approximately 300 or 350 miles long and 150 to 200 miles wide. If we are going to be sitting here seven or eight months of the year, and are expected to get around the entire community, then something should be done to enable us to visit the constituency periodically during the session. We might even this year have been able to find that our constituents were more enthusiastic about building a pipe line than was evidenced from the letters that we received which would have given us a great deal more persuasion to carry on this great struggle we had to put up.

Now, those are my reasons for feeling that something should be done either to provide for shorter sessions or to enable a member to visit his riding periodically. While I cannot give wholehearted support to the summer holiday idea, I do think we should conduct the business of the house more efficiently and be able to get the work done within six months.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I see several hon. members. Does the hon. member for Wetaskiwin wish to—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): It has been customary in this house, although not always usual, when two members rise, one member for a larger party and one member for a smaller party, one substantially senior in service, that the one who was senior was seen. On this occasion such did not happen. I wish to tell you why, Mr. Speaker; because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) informed His Honour tonight he would like to speak and he was sufficiently ill-advised to tell the Speaker that he wanted to speak about something affecting His Honour—

Some hon. Members: Order; sit down.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I condemn the shabby conduct of the Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Before the hon. member goes any further, he will permit me to tell him and the house that I saw the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre every time he rose.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): You were not in the chair first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, having quite frankly said he did not propose to follow the same line as was introduced by the hon. member—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am not talking about you, I am talking about the Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the hon. member for Winnipeg North is rising on a question of privilege which occurred before the present time, then surely the time to have raised it was at the time.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I did not see the plot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North might pay me the same courtesy which I am trying—

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I do not know what right you have to be occupying the chair. I do not know what right any of the three elected officials of this house have to be in this chair. What has happened tonight is shameful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I would suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North that as he knows—I am afraid it has been drawn to the attention of this house on more than one occasion—there is a procedure he can follow if he wishes to question my right to occupy the chair. At the moment, of course, he knows that it is because the house saw fit earlier in the session to elect me as deputy chairman of committees, and under certain circumstances I find myself occupying this chair.

I think perhaps the matter which has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North should not be allowed to drop there, but I do feel this, that the debate which I happen to be presiding over at the moment is a time limit debate and any time I take now is going to be taken from one of the members who has a chance to speak between now and the expiry of the two hours and six minutes.

When I was interrupted, I was asking the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Thomas) whether or not he proposed to follow the same grievance line which has been discussed by previous members?

Mr. Thomas: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): The hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I want to speak on the same grievance, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I am sorry, did the hon. member for Nanaimo have a question of order?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): No, I want to speak on the same grievance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): I shall remember that when the hon. member rises. In the meantime, I have seen the hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Ellis: Haven't we any rights here at all?

Mr. Ray Thomas (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege as that raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. Unfortunately, I am going to have to disagree with the stand that he took because I feel it would be unwise and improper to adjourn, as he suggested, around the end of June and to reconvene at a later date. Although I like my holidays and vacation as much as anybody else, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the question raised by the hon. member for New Westminster was that he wanted to go home during that period to meet with his constituents, do work around his constituency and cover his own area.

All of the work that can be done between July 1 and the end of August in one's constituency is very small because, when you go home during that period, you find that people are on vacation. It is impossible to call people together. The service clubs and all of the other organizations have adjourned for the summer months and you cannot get more than a bare minimum of work done during the months of July and August. By the same token, if the work is not completed here by the end of June—and mind you, I would like to see it done by the end of June—by that time we would be far better off to stay here during July and whatever part of August we find necessary so that we can get home by the time the holiday season is over around the end of August, and we can then get down to work by the first day of September, or at least after the labour day holiday. Otherwise, if we adjourn for the six weeks or two months in the middle of the summer, as suggested by the hon. member for New Westminster and others who have spoken on this matter, we go back and we sit at home for the summer; we come back here in September and sit here through September and probably part of October; we go back home again just about freeze-up, the weather turns bad and it is impossible to cover our constituency at all. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, the logical thing is, if we have not completed our work by July 1, to continue on until we have completed the business, go home, spend the fall months and the early winter months when we can get around our constituency and meet the people and when we can find the service clubs in operation and we can address various groups that are meeting at that time. Then in the winter time we can come back here, start our session and finish it up in the middle of the summer if necessary.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the same matter that was raised by the hon. member for New Westminster. I would like to carry it to a more logical conclusion. As you may recall, sir, a very distinguished constitutional lawyer wrote an open letter to the Prime Minister in which he outlined what he considered to be the most logical way of conducting this parliament from now on. At that time he suggested to the Prime Minister that we should meet for one afternoon a year, and when we came in we would be given a questionnaire with the government's proposed legislation outlined on it. We would listen to the speech from the throne. On retiring, we would mark on this questionnaire "yes" or "no" to each of the government's proposals, and then wend our way home.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that might be a very reasonable way of conducting this parliament since it has been reduced to such a farce within recent days when the Prime Minister, in the most insolent manner, took to himself the right to decide who should preside over this assembly—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): —and, Mr. Speaker, reduced those of us who are obliged to sit on this side of the house to the position of sitting under the presidency of a man who has openly stated that in his opinion certain members have falsified the facts for their own political ends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that we have been placed in that position. The logical thing to do is either to dissolve this parliament immediately or to follow Dr. Eugene Forsey's suggestion and meet for one afternoon a year. That would be carrying out all the democracy that is left in this parliament after the activities of those who should be its guardians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is the house ready for the question?

ACTION OF PRIME MINISTER WITH RESPECT TO THE OFFICE OF SPEAKER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to state a grievance. In doing so, I speak on behalf of this group and I believe I speak on behalf of the institution of parliament and on behalf of the good name of this house.

Mr. McIlraith: Did you hear your colleague tonight?

Mr. Knowles: My grievance is against the Prime Minister. I do not propose to rehash any of the events which are part of the records of this session of this parliament prior to a few days ago; but I feel that in addition to the injury that has been done to parliament in this session a further insult was added yesterday by the Prime Minister.

There are certain matters which are the prerogative of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. Those matters include a number of important considerations, one of them being the decision as to who will preside over the deliberations of this house. This is provided for, Mr. Speaker, not in anything that is temporary or passing but in the British North America Act itself. Section 44 of the British North America Act reads as follows:

> The House of Commons on its first assembling after a general election shall proceed with all practicable speed to elect one of its members to be Speaker.

Section 45 reads:

> In case of a vacancy happening in the office of Speaker by death, resignation, or otherwise, the House of Commons shall with all practicable speed proceed to elect another of its members to be Speaker.

Surely, I do not need to emphasize the point that it is laid down clearly in the constitution of this country that it is the House of Commons, not the government, not the Prime Minister, but the House of Commons that decides who shall be its Speaker. In this connection, there is an interesting citation in Beauchesne's third edition, citation 35, which reads as follows:

> The choice of Speaker is the choice of this house. The house chooses and elects its Speaker; he is in no sense the choice of the government—in no sense the choice of the Prime Minister. In the British house, this has been the practice since the earliest times; we have followed that custom in equal degree and with equal fidelity. Indeed, in the British parliament it has never been the practice even for a member of the government to move or second the selection of a Speaker; that is left to the private members.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that that is a quotation from a speech made in this house by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. I think it is properly included in Beauchesne's third edition as an annotation to the sections of the British North America Act that I read a moment ago.

Perhaps I might read as well a few lines from the next citation in Beauchesne's third edition, citation 36:

> Mr. Pitt once intended to propose Mr. Addington, but Mr. Hatsell, Clerk of the house, on being consulted by Mr. Addington, said: "I think that the choice of the speaker should not be on the motion of the minister. Indeed an invidious use might be made of it, to represent you as the friend of the minister, rather than the choice of the house." Mr. Pitt acknowledged the force of this objection.

Mr. Speaker, I am ready to admit that it took quite a few years for the Canadian House of Commons to develop a tradition with regard to the choice of its speaker. I read again today the account of the sitting of the House of Commons the first day it met in 1867 and there was a dispute on that very first day over the choice of the speaker proposed on that occasion by Sir John A. Macdonald. I have read debates at the opening of a number of parliaments across the years and I find that on quite a number of occasions there have been disputes. There have been occasions when some alternative person was proposed in opposition to the name suggested from the government side. True, in all the cases the choice of the government became the choice of the House of Commons. What interests me, however, is that gradually the house came to realize, although there might be differences over some things that were done in connection with the election of the speaker that basically he must be recognized not as the choice of the government nor as the choice of the prime minister but as the choice of the entire House of Commons.

The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen on March 8, 1922, speaking to a motion of the then prime minister, Mr. King, for the appointment of the speaker for that parliament, used the words I read a moment ago from Beauchesne's third edition and then he went on to say:

> Indeed, in the British parliament it has never been the practice even for a member of the government to move or second the selection of a speaker; that is left to the private members. In our parliament we have not in that special regard followed the British practice. No one would deny that a member acceptable to the administration should be selected; but I do deny the right of the administration—the right of the prime minister—to announce to this house and to the country in advance whom we shall select as speaker.

In 1930 Mr. Bennett was prime minister and on September 8, when it was proposed that Mr. Black be appointed as speaker, Mr. King indicated he had no objection to the person of Mr. Black but he did object to the way in which Mr. Bennett had gone about announcing the appointment of Mr. Black, more or less installing him as speaker, even before his election had been accomplished by the House of Commons. In objecting to what was done at that time, Mr. King, as recorded at page 3 of Hansard for September 8, 1930, read some of the statements that Mr. Meighen had made in 1922 and put his stamp of approval on Mr. Meighen's statement:

> . . . that the government have not any right as such to name a speaker, that the speaker is essentially an officer of the House of Commons; he is an appointee of the House of Commons and is in no sense an appointee of the government.

There, Mr. Speaker, you have both the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen and the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King making it extremely clear that the choice of the person to preside over the deliberations of this house is the prerogative of the House of Commons and not the prerogative of the government nor of the Prime Minister. It is clear that it took a few years to build up that tradition but it had certainly become firmly established by the twenties and thirties of this century.

In 1936 when Mr. King moved the nomination of a speaker for that parliament he ran into some difficulties because of certain things that had happened. He referred to the practice at Westminster of having a permanent speaker. I should like to interject that this matter seems to have been discussed a good many times in the history of the House of Commons and although it has been discussed at times when speakers were elected nothing seems to have been done about it in the meantime. At any rate, Mr. King on February 6, 1936, as reported at page 2 of Hansard for that date, said:

> In Canada the practice since confederation has been different; the speaker has been nominated by a member of the ministry, the prime minister, in fact, and I think the nomination has in all cases been accepted by members of the commons. It is but right, that the ministry should have at least an opportunity to make known its view with regard to the person it thinks should be appointed to the high office of speaker.

I continue with these words used by Mr. King:

> I wish to make it very clear, however, to hon. members, that the choice of a speaker is the choice of the commons itself, and that hon. members themselves must elect the one who is to be the occupant of that office.

Although on that occasion Mr. Bennett and Mr. Woodsworth had reason to object to some of the things the government was doing they both concurred in that statement made by Mr. King that the choosing of the speaker is the prerogative of the House of Commons and not the prerogative of the government nor of the prime minister.

Similarly on May 16, 1940, when Mr. King was moving the nomination of Mr. Glen he referred once more to the difference between the tradition at Westminster and the tradition here but as reported on page 2 of Hansard for that date he said this:

> However, this difference is not in any way intended to imply any restriction of the freedom of members to make whatever choice they wish. The speaker of the house is not appointed by the government, he is elected by the commons. Members of the house are entirely free to make whatever choice they wish.

I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that my grievance is against the Prime Minister. It is my considered view—and some of us have had time to think this over since the events of yesterday afternoon—that the Prime Minister has added insult to injury, that he has given this parliament a serious affront in what he did yesterday.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: A week ago yesterday the Speaker of the House of Commons placed his resignation before us. As found at page 5555 of Hansard for July 2, 1956, he put it in these words:

> I place now my resignation before the house to take effect at the pleasure of the house. I would wish that it be accepted as soon as possible.

He then went on with further comments, which he began with the words, "This is my farewell speech."

In my view, Mr. Speaker did the right thing on that occasion; he did the honourable thing. He placed his resignation before the house. He made his own decision on the basis of what had transpired in days just previous to July 2; and not only did he do the right and honourable thing in offering his resignation, but speaking in parliamentary terms he did the correct thing in placing it in the hands of the House of Commons. It was there, Mr. Speaker, for the House of Commons to deal with. This is something that is one of the prerogatives of the House of Commons. The acting prime minister of that day, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), was quite correct, I think, in suggesting that this was a matter that might wait until the return of the Prime Minister yesterday; and so we waited with anticipation the return of the right hon. gentleman. Yesterday, with regard to the resignation offered the week before by the Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) chose to say that it was not really a resignation. I quote from page 5763 of Hansard of Monday, July 9. This is what the Prime Minister said:

> Of course, all hon. members are aware that such a statement or declaration of intention does not constitute the formal action required as the actual resignation of a Speaker.

I do not think anyone will deny that, in the view of the Speaker, he was placing his resignation in the hands of the house for the house to deal with, when he took the course of action that he pursued on Monday, July 2. The Prime Minister took it upon himself to place on the Speaker's statement a different interpretation than that which the Speaker had placed upon it and a different interpretation than that which was understood by the house. Not only did the Prime Minister place this different interpretation upon the words of the Speaker. He violated the prerogatives that have been laid down over a number of decades by choosing to make by himself a decision as to who would be Speaker of the House of Commons for the balance of this parliament. I can imagine that some hon. members would like to argue with me and say that what we were confronted with at this stage is something different from that with which we are confronted at the beginning of a parliament when we have no Speaker. Technically that statement is correct. Technically there has been no break in the Speakership in the House of Commons in this parliament. But in spirit, speaking virtually, from the time Mr. Speaker placed his resignation in the hands of the House of Commons on Monday July 2 until yesterday, we were really without a Speaker.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Knowles: It had not been decided who would preside over the deliberations of this House of Commons for the balance of this parliament. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) asked the house and the Speaker to wait until the return of the Prime Minister for that question to be settled. What question? The question as to who would be Speaker of the House of Commons for the balance of this parliament.

Mr. Harris: Nonsense.

Mr. Knowles: By his action yesterday the Prime Minister took unto himself that prerogative, made that decision and did not even give to the House of Commons the chance to pass upon it either by way of approval or otherwise. It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that we now have an issue that is greater than any issue we have had yet in this session. That is one of the reasons why I have taken no time at all in dealing—

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman want to go back to yesterday?

Mr. Knowles: What does the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration say?

Mr. Pickersgill: I asked if the hon. gentleman wanted to go back to yesterday.

Mr. Castleden: No. That is done by the Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: I am talking about yesterday, Mr. Speaker. I am saying to the house and to the Prime Minister that, in addition to all the injury that was done to parliament by the way in which a certain piece of legislation was put through this house, and in addition to all that has been done by way of destroying the atmosphere of this parliament and making it a place where we cannot properly carry on the business of the country, we now are aware of the fact that we have as Prime Minister, as leader of this house, a person who thinks of it not as a House of Commons but as a Liberal caucus in which members of other parties, by his grace, are allowed to sit and to make speeches.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Knowles: Yesterday the Prime Minister, as reported at page 5763 of Hansard, said this:

> As Prime Minister I have the ultimate responsibility for the leadership of the house, and I do not intend to shirk that responsibility in any way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Those are plausible words, but the applause that has just been given to them by the Liberals opposite underlines my point that he spoke and acted yesterday not as the leader of the House of Commons but as the leader of the Liberal party, making the decision that he felt was best for the fortunes of the Liberal party. Mr. Speaker, the issue is no longer the things that happened in the month of May and the early part of June. The issue is not who actually occupies the chair for the balance of this session or the balance of this parliament. The issue is that there should be no "balance" to this session and no "balance" to this parliament. Any vestige that was left—

Mr. Pickersgill: Has not that question been settled by the house?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: By the Liberal party; not by the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is not the hon. member out of order?

Mr. Knowles: I am prepared to answer that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman poses as a great expert on the rules. I am asking if that question has not been settled by vote of the house and therefore should not be raised again. I should like him to give an answer to that question.

Mr. Knowles: I am quite prepared to answer that question. In fact, I would be happy to listen to a speech by the minister on that question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it would be out of order to make a speech.

An hon. Member: Oh, shut up.

Mr. Knowles: I may tell the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Pickersgill) that one of the reasons I am talking about the present situation is precisely because I realized that a point of order could be raised if I talked about things that happened prior to the time that certain votes were taken.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not answering my question.

Mr. Knowles: There was a vote on the question as to whether or not the Speaker should be censured.

Mr. Pickersgill: No. That is not the question.

Mr. Knowles: There was also a vote, on party lines, on the motion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) calling for dissolution of this house and an election.

Mr. Pickersgill: And that question was decided.

Mr. Knowles: But, Mr. Speaker, what I am talking about has happened since then. I base my contention that the time has come for dissolution not just on the things that took place in days gone by and on which there may have been decisions by the majority of this house, even though in some of those cases the decision was really not valid unless it was unanimous. I base my protest on what happened yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: In other words, the hon. gentleman is objecting to a decision of the house.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am asking if the hon. gentleman is not setting himself up above the house. A decision was made by the house by an overwhelming majority. He is now asking that that decision should be reversed.

Mr. Dufresne: The hon. member will have the opportunity to make a speech.

Mr. Knowles: The house decided on Tuesday, June 26, by a majority vote that there should not be a dissolution. To the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration does that mean that there is never to be a dissolution?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not at all.

Mr. Knowles: Does it mean that this government is to stay in office forever? Would that vote of the house deny to the members of the government the right to meet at any time and decide on dissolution when they wished to do so?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not at all; but if I may answer the question which the hon. gentleman asked, I will do so. What it means is that no hon. member has a right in this session in debate to raise the same question again for decision by the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the rule and the hon. gentleman knows it very well.

Mr. Knowles: The decision, even though it was only a majority decision, was on the motion of the Leader of the Opposition calling for dissolution not in the abstract but on the basis of what had happened prior to the time he made that motion. I call for dissolution of this parliament, if for no other reason, on the basis of what happened yesterday. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration cannot get around the fact that something new in terms of damaging parliament has been added to the picture by the action of the Prime Minister yesterday.

An hon. Member: A very flimsy basis.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier that the question of how the Speaker gets elected in this House of Commons has an extremely interesting history. There were earlier occasions when there were struggles and squabbles of one kind and another; but gradually it has been accepted that he is the choice of the whole House of Commons. Indeed it was in this very parliament, under the present Prime Minister, that I think we reached perhaps as high a point as we have ever reached when, at the opening of the first session of this parliament in 1953,—I think for the first time in history—the Prime Minister's motion that the present Speaker take the chair was seconded by the Leader of the Opposition. At the start of this parliament under the present Prime Minister we had reached a high point in the unanimity with which the house acts in the matter of electing a Speaker. Yesterday under the same Prime Minister we reached a low point, when the right of the House of Commons to have the say as to who is to be the presiding officer was taken away from the House of Commons—I do not think even the Liberal party had any say in it—and was exercised by the Prime Minister himself.

I have already said that I think His Honour the Speaker did the right and honourable thing on July 2, when he placed his resignation in the hands of this house. I am not now offering any words of criticism of the Speaker, despite what I might have felt about something that happened earlier this evening. I have refrained from any criticism on that score because I think a new issue has arisen, the issue of the rights of the House of Commons itself, rights which the Prime Minister himself has violated.

The reason I said earlier that I could have related my remarks to the not too important issue raised by the hon. member for New Westminster was that I realized he was asking that parliament go home for the summer and I could have supported that suggestion because certainly I think it should be going home right now, but not for the same reasons which he gave.

Because parliament has got into an atmosphere where we are not able to do the business of the country properly, it does not matter, from here on in this parliament, who is put in the chair, the present Speaker or someone else. If he is going to be chosen by the Prime Minister and given to the house on the Prime Minister's authority without any attempt to pay some regard to the decencies of parliamentary procedure that would simply continue to damage and destroy the atmosphere of this house.

I think most of us believe that certainly one of the most important institutions in Canada, if not the most important, is the parliament of Canada. The people of Canada have the right to have that institution on the highest possible level. The people of Canada have a right to have the discussions in this parliament take place on a basis of give-and-take, of argument and conflict, but nevertheless of understanding as to the points that we are discussing and with respect both ways and with respect for the Chair.

We have had an unfortunate atmosphere since the events of earlier this session, and I think it has become very clear that this parliament's prestige in the eyes of the Canadian people does not merit its being continued and that the Prime Minister, who will have the ultimate say as to when dissolution will take place, subject to the five-year limit, owes it to parliament and owes it to the people of Canada to give consideration to a very early dissolution of parliament and the calling of a general election.

I insist that the issue now—and I say this for the benefit of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as well as others—is not with reference to things that have happened in the past and on which the house may have taken decisions. The issue that faces us in this house is pin-pointed by the dictatorial attitude of the Prime Minister yesterday in his disregard for the prerogatives of parliament. I feel more strongly now than I did when I urged on earlier occasions that there be a dissolution that that is the only course to follow. I hope that the Prime Minister will give serious consideration to this matter and do something about it at an early date.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the situation was such that I did not get the floor earlier so that there might be more time for this matter to be discussed, but even so I feel I should not speak longer, for I wish to leave at least the 12 minutes that there are tonight and the six minutes there are tomorrow for the Prime Minister to speak on this matter if he wishes to do so, and I trust he will.

But, if he does exercise that right, as I hope he will, I trust he will not say the kind of thing that will close the door to a proper consideration of what I think is now his duty to the Canadian people, namely, the early dissolution of parliament and the calling of a general election so that we might have a new parliament, clean and fresh, that can measure up to what the Canadian people have a right to expect.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I shall require even the 12 minutes that remained a moment ago, when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sat down, and the six minutes of tomorrow to tell him that it is not what he thinks I should do that is going to be done. There may come a time when he will not only have to think but be in a position to do what he thinks should be done; but that time has not yet arrived.

With respect to everything the hon. gentleman has said about the choice of the Speaker, I am in full agreement, and it did not require 89 years of practice to make it absolutely crystal clear that the Speaker was the choice of the House of Commons. However, the hon. gentleman, who referred to sections 44 and 45 of the British North America Act, certainly overlooked, and many others in the house have overlooked, the provision of section 49 of the British North America Act, which provides that the actions of the House of Commons do not have to be by the unanimous decision of the House of Commons but that they are the result of decisions by the majority of the members of the House of Commons.

It has been sought to be established for quite a long time in this House of Commons that it was not the supporters of the government who had the right to make decisions but that it was the members of the opposition, and that whenever there was any suggestion put before the house with which the members of the opposition did not agree it was wrong, unconstitutional and a contempt of parliament not to take into account their views instead of taking into account the views of the majority sent here by the Canadian people—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —to make the decisions that are required to be made to carry on the business of the country. It is not by any accident that the party of which I have the honour to be the leader at the present time has been in office now for 21 years and plans to continue in office for several years longer.

Mr. Dufresne: 1957 will be the end.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Now, with respect to what I did yesterday, the hon. gentleman says that that is an act of contempt of parliament. I submit that it was an act of full respect for the rights and privileges of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): The hon. gentleman has been posing, and with some justification, as an expert on the rules and precedents of parliamentary institutions. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that there has never been any formal acceptance by the House of Commons here or by the House of Commons in the United Kingdom of the resignation of a Speaker. A Speaker who chooses to resign does resign and it is the act of his own will that creates the vacancy required under the British North America Act to make way for the appointment of a new Speaker. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, and as well as all other hon. members who have not made as profound a study as he has of the rules and precedents, that what was stated by Mr. Speaker on Monday, the 2nd of July, did not vacate his office and that it was expected there would be some other formal action that would bring about the situation provided for in section 45 of the British North America Act, that is to say, a vacancy happening in the office by resignation or otherwise.

That being the situation, I felt that it was necessary for me to say to the house whether or not I was going to take any formal action to bring about a vacancy in the office of Speaker. What I did yesterday was to declare to the house that, having ascertained that the Speaker was willing to have his duty to parliament and to the country regarded as higher than his natural desire to be able to meet the criticisms that had been and were still being levelled against him, I felt under no obligation to take any action in respect of the statements that had been made on the 2nd of July.

I appointed no Speaker. I made no pretence of appointing any Speaker. I proposed the motion, which was seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), made at the beginning of this parliament that the present Speaker take the chair for this parliament. I did that because I realized, as the hon. member realizes, that it is desirable to have the appointment of the Speaker in the form in which it is made represent what is provided for by the constitution, that is to say, an appointment by the House of Commons and not an appointment by the government.

I remember that both in 1949 and in 1953 newspapermen were anxious to find out whom I was going to propose for the speakership. I told them that the speakership was something that was within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons itself and that I could give them no information, that I had in mind the gentleman I wished to suggest to the house to appoint but that he would become Speaker only if and when he had become appointed by the House of Commons. He is still Speaker of the House of Commons because there has never been the formal act required by the constitution to create a vacancy in his office, and I felt that it was desirable as soon as possible after my return to state publicly that I was not going to take any action to bring about a vacancy unless Mr. Speaker himself refused to continue to carry out the responsibilities of the office which he has discharged with knowledge, competence and distinction.

Whatever the hon. gentleman may think of my conduct, and I know that he is sincere, I do not think that my conduct requires me to advise His Excellency to dissolve parliament at this time. The hon. gentleman has said that is the only matter with which he is dealing as his grievance at this moment. Well, I am not going to satisfy that grievance and his grievance must persist if the only way in which it can be removed is by my stating here that I have come to the conclusion that I have acted in a way that makes it improper for me to continue to be a member of parliament. I do not agree that that is the case, and I am convinced, as I was convinced yesterday, that in informing the house that Mr. Speaker was willing to continue I was informing a majority, a large and overwhelming majority made up not only of those who support this government, of something which was very agreeable to them.

If the hon. gentleman feels that I mistook the sense and feeling of the majority in this house he knows that he can at any time put on the order paper a notice of motion to remove the Speaker from the chair and he will see—

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, will the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) not admit that I made it clear that I did not think it mattered who is in the chair. Will the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: —not agree that I made it clear that it was not the resignation of the Speaker I was suggesting but rather the dissolution of parliament?

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): I know that it was the dissolution of parliament that the hon. gentleman was suggesting, but he was suggesting the dissolution of parliament because I had stated yesterday that I believed that it was the will of the majority in this house, if Mr. Speaker was willing to do so, that he continue to preside over our deliberations. That being the only reason urged by my hon. friend for a dissolution of parliament, I consider it to be a very insufficient reason.

Mr. Rowe: You will not need any more votes, just your opinion.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): If the hon. gentleman thinks that I am mistaken about how the votes would go in this house he knows how he can test that opinion.

Mr. Rowe: You are sure they will all vote for you.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, it is ten o'clock. I will not continue now unless it should be the unanimous feeling of the house that the six minutes additional should be taken up tonight.

Mr. Rowe: Ten o'clock. You have said too much now.

Mr. McCann: You cannot take it any more.

An hon. Member: Sit down and take it.

On motion of Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, we will conclude this debate tomorrow and then take the estimates of veterans affairs and northern affairs.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: No, sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Casselman: Get the steamroller out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 11, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CRIMINAL LAW

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the third report of the special joint committee on capital and corporal punishment and lotteries. This report, presented in English and French, constitutes the committee's final report on the question of corporal punishment only. No motion will be made for the adoption of this report at this time.

TRADE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND HONDURAS

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house that a trade agreement was signed today in Tegucigalpa between Canada and Honduras. This agreement was signed on behalf of Canada by Mr. H. A. Scott, Canadian ambassador to Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Haiti, and by Mr. Pedro Pineda Madrid, minister of finance of Honduras.

Copies of this agreement have been tabled for the information of hon. members.

This is the first trade agreement between Canada and Honduras. It will enter into force on July 18 for an initial period of one year and will continue in force thereafter until either country takes action to terminate it.

The agreement provides for the exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment with respect to customs duties and related matters. This will provide new opportunities for Canadian exports to Honduras. Under this agreement, for example, Canadian exports will now be subject to customs duties and charges no higher than those levied on goods from the United States, on the basis of the trade agreement between Honduras and the United States. Similarly, Honduran exports to Canada will now be subject to the most-favoured-nation rates of the Canadian tariff rather than to the general tariff rates, as has been the case up to now.

Honduras has specifically reserved the right to participate in a customs union with other Central American countries as it did in the case of its trade agreement with the United States.

As a direct benefit of this agreement, Canadian exports of wheat flour, canned salmon and sardines, upper leather, rubber tires and other products will henceforth be able to compete in the Honduran market on the same terms as exports from the United States. Honduras is a small but valuable open dollar market with no import or exchange restrictions. Canada's exports in 1955 were about $588,000, while imports from Honduras amounted to $1·7 million, about 90 per cent of which consisted of bananas.

This trade agreement with Honduras is particularly notable in that it completes the Canadian structure of trade arrangements with Latin-American countries based upon the most-favoured-nation principle. Canada has already exchanged most-favoured-nation treatment with all the other countries of Latin America.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa,
July 11, 1956

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice C. H. Locke, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 11th July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Secretary to the Governor General (Administrative).

STARRED QUESTION

INTEREST RATES ON BANK DEPOSITS

Question No. 58—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the government or the Bank of Canada given consideration to requesting chartered banks to increase interest rates on depositors' savings accounts in view of the fact that loan interest has been increased?
2. If so, when?
3. If not, will the government give consideration to making such a request?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the inspector general of banks and the Bank of Canada do have conversations from time to time with the chartered banks of Canada; however, these discussions about matters of mutual interest are confidential and their value would be diminished greatly if they were not considered as such. I therefore feel that is the only answer I can make at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You might whisper to them that a quarter per cent in the interest rate is not much of an increase.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RIVIÈRE-DU-LOUP ARSENAL BUILDINGS

Question No. 546—Mr. Dufresne:

1. Have the Rivière-du-Loup arsenal buildings been sold? If so, on what date?
2. What was the amount of the sale and what were the conditions of payment?
3. What was the conversion cost of the former Canadian National shops, which subsequently became the Rivière-du-Loup arsenal?

FLOODS

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. McCullough) wished to ascertain how much the government of Canada had paid to the province of Saskatchewan in connection with the flood damage which occurred in that province last year.

From the inquiries I had made I have ascertained that to date only one claim for reimbursement has been received from the province of Saskatchewan. That claim amounted to $8,763.44 and was paid to the province on June 26 last.

I am informed that the government of Saskatchewan, in accordance with the agreement between the two governments, is in the process of preparing a second claim for reimbursement based on the individual claims it has received. Until that claim is received by the Canadian government, I am confident the hon. member will understand that I am not in a position to indicate its amount nor the amounts of other claims for reimbursement which may be received in the future.

As I indicated on Monday, the supplementary estimates contain an item for $120,000 to provide for claims from both Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—VIEWS OF MEMBERS ON NON-MILITARY CO-OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Mr. Harris.]

In view of the information he has been seeking from other member countries of NATO concerning their intentions about article 2 of the North Atlantic treaty, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs outline the position of the Canadian government concerning the same article?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can very usefully do that on the orders of the day apart from the fact that it is not I but the committee of NATO which is seeking this information. The committee is doing that by sending a questionnaire to the various governments to ascertain their views on non-military co-operation in NATO. This government along with the other 14 governments is now in the process of formulating its views so that the questionnaire can be answered, and while that process is going on it is not easy for me to discuss it on the orders of the day in the House of Commons.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is this committee of three going to interview representatives of the government of Canada with regard to article 2?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is hoped that when the replies have come in to the committee of three from the various governments the committee then will meet representatives of these governments in Paris to discuss the replies and exchange views concerning them.

ISRAEL—REASON FOR WITHHOLDING EXPORT PERMIT FOR SABRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France have been authoritatively reported as having no objection and indeed as approving Canada's action in exporting Sabre aircraft to Israel, would the Prime Minister say what the impelling reasons are that cause him at this time to say it is not an appropriate time to grant the export permit for these aircraft as requested by the state of Israel?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is any authority for the report that the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France have suggested that we should supply—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not suggested.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): —have expressed the view that they have no objection—I do not remember just what words were used by the hon. gentleman—to Canada supplying aircraft to Israel. As to the compelling reasons, they resulted from discussions with General Burns who is acting as commissioner for the United Nations in supervising the armistice arrangements, and with the Secretary General of the United Nations who I understand is just about to leave for a second visit to that area, from which we gathered that it is still a very delicate situation which might be unfavourably influenced if a country like Canada were to attempt to take the lead in changing what is in my opinion an imbalance of armaments at the present time between the Arab countries and Israel. This is a matter to which we have given very careful consideration. The hon. gentleman knows that we would not wish to do anything that might make it in the slightest way more difficult to ensure the observance of the cease-fire which has been in force and which has been observed to a large degree for several months past.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. The Prime Minister noted that there was an imbalance between Israel and the Arab states. Has not that imbalance been created by the large supplies of planes and arms which have been made to the Arab countries by the Soviet union and its satellite states? Would not the same action by the western powers rectify that imbalance?—and when I refer to the western powers I include Canada.

Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the suggestion implied in the hon. gentleman's question. I think there has been an imbalance created by the armaments supplied if not by the Soviet republics by the satellites of the Soviet republics. We would have been quite happy to join with other western powers in doing something to restore a balance, but we do not feel that when other western powers were not prepared to join in that responsibility it should be a responsibility left to the government of Canada which has not the immediate interest in the area which other western powers have.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HANSELL—REFERENCE TO REMOVAL OF STATEMENT FROM "HANSARD"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I think concerns the entire house. In this morning's Globe and Mail there appears a Canadian Press dispatch, which evidently would go throughout the whole country, entitled "Bawdyhouse Charge made by C.C.F. Member". The part to which I wish to draw your attention reads:

> Alistair Stewart (C.C.F., Winnipeg North) hurled new accusations at the Commons chair after a party colleague was unsuccessful in getting the floor to discuss Mr. Beaudoin's decision to remain in office.
>
> "I think you are making a bawdyhouse of this place," Mr. Stewart shouted at Acting Speaker E. T. Applewhaite.
>
> Mr. Applewhaite, his voice choking with emotion, asked Mr. Stewart to withdraw the statement.
>
> Mr. Stewart did not. Instead, he said: "I don't know what right you have to occupy the chair."
>
> Mr. Applewhaite did not again ask him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Speaker, I think all in the house who heard the discussion will agree that the report is substantially accurate, but in reading Hansard today I find that nothing appears to that effect in Hansard. My point of privilege is that Hansard has been tampered with far beyond the propriety of ordinary revision, and I think some explanation is due the house.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. T. Applewhaite (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on this question of privilege it is essential for the house and for the hon. member concerned that I should make a statement, which I hope will be brief. It was my privilege and responsibility to be acting as Speaker at the time the incident occurred. Despite what the press said, I did not clearly hear the quotation referred to, but I had my doubts. I made inquiries later and found that the expression referred to was used.

I considered it my responsibility as Acting Speaker to assume responsibility for what should or should not go into the permanent records of this house for all time to come. Time was short; Hansard goes to press very shortly after the house closes. I on my own responsibility removed the item from Hansard, not on the grounds of protection for any political party or for any line of thought but because I did consider that the expression used was one which should not become part of the permanent record of the Canadian House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker was not available for consultation at ten o'clock. The Deputy Speaker was. Nevertheless, I take full responsibility for having personally, as Acting Speaker, signed a directive addressed to Hansard to that effect. I can add only two things. The action I took was not without the knowledge —and, I think, not without the tacit approval —of the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

The only other thing I have to add is that, if the excerpt read today remains part of the records of this house, then any action which I took, rightly or wrongly, will have been ineffective.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am not prepared to allow the Acting Speaker to accept the full responsibility, as he so generously has done in this matter. I said something last night which on reflection I realized was not in good taste, and it was my own opinion that it should be stricken from the record. That is the situation so far as I am concerned, and I take my share of the responsibility for it.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Speaker, with the explanation the hon. member for Winnipeg North has given, I think perhaps we can all be satisfied.

Mr. Ellis: You made sure it got on the record.

An hon. Member: You keep quiet.

POULTRY

REQUESTED PROHIBITION OF VACCINATION OF CHICKS ON HATCHERY PREMISES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister state if the federal government has taken action to prohibit the vaccination of chicks on hatchery premises as advocated by the Saskatchewan poultry association at its recent meeting in Saskatoon?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Before coming into the house, I did not have the resolution that was passed by the meeting at Saskatoon, but it has been sent to me since I came into the house. I am inclined to think that the resolution itself does not conform exactly with the published statement which appeared a day or two ago in the press, and I presume the question asked is based upon the press report. Since neither the resolution nor the press report seems to follow the policy which is followed by the department, I think it better that I should take this as notice and give a proper answer to the question later.

EGGS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BASIC PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Could the minister add anything to what was said by the parliamentary assistant in answer to the question I asked the other day in respect to a resolution passed by this association in Saskatoon asking the federal government to increase the floor price on grade A large eggs so that the producer might benefit?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. I have just this moment read what my assistant had to say and I have nothing to add beyond what I have said previously, that if there is going to be any effective action in the province of Saskatchewan some additional action will have to be taken by the provincial government.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

P.F.R.A. AND P.F.A.A. OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that on the 30th of January last a motion for the production of a list of all P.F.R.A. and P.F.A.A. employees and their salaries and expenses was passed by the house. That is over five months ago. I know the list is a long one, but I think the time has come when the minister should table that return.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thought it had already been tabled. It was certainly circulated in Saskatchewan recently. I shall see that it is brought down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You must have done it yourself. You did not put it before parliament.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER ADVANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce inform the house whether, since his last report on the subject to us, additional sums have been advanced to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited by the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation and, if so, what amounts and on what dates?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If my hon. friend will put that question on the order paper I will try to get an answer.

AGRICULTURE

PRODUCER MARKETING BOARDS—JUDGMENT OF SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether or not any decision has been reached by the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to producer marketing boards in Ontario? I asked the same question on May 15 and at that time the answer was no. Has any decision been reached since that date?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, and if upon inquiry I find that there has been I will so inform the house.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINNIPEG—EXTENSION OF FIVE-DAY 40 HOUR WEEK TO EMPLOYEES OF DEER LODGE HOSPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the generality of the five-day week in the Winnipeg area, will the five-day 40 hour week soon be extended to the employees of Deer Lodge hospital?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question was put to me in a general way yesterday, and I do not think there is anything I can add to the answer I gave yesterday.

Mr. Knowles: May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? In view of the fact that some 90 per cent of government employees are now on the five-day 40 hour week, what reason is there for not making it universal?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that is a question I shall encounter on my estimates.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, July 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris for committee of supply.

ACTION OF PRIME MINISTER WITH RESPECT TO THE OFFICE OF SPEAKER

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, normally and naturally on a matter of the kind that is under debate at the moment the Leader of the Opposition would be speaking at this time, but having already spoken on the present motion the Leader of the Opposition is precluded under the rules from speaking again.

I have but six minutes to express the views of Her Majesty's loyal opposition on this matter of very serious importance.

Let me say also, sir, that the statement the bility for a situation within this house which has now become utterly intolerable rests squarely upon the shoulders of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the government.

Let me say also, sir, that the statement the Prime Minister made in the house on Monday, July 9, took the opposition, and I am sure most members of the house, completely by surprise. There was no advance communication of it by the Prime Minister to the opposition, as has been suggested in some quarters.

The statement that the Prime Minister made on Monday, July 9, was bad enough, Mr. Speaker, but the statement that he made last night was far worse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: It was a bald, barefaced declaration of dictatorship which stripped away all the sham and pretence that the government has sought to build up around this problem. The Prime Minister last night expounded a doctrine that the majority in this elective chamber is omnipotent, that the majority in this house which has never yet represented the majority of the ballots cast at the last general election, is omnipotent. Mr. Speaker, the doctrine amounts to this. It amounts to saying that the majority is parliament. What the doctrine amounts to is that nothing else shall prevail. Constitutional practices; the traditions of centuries; hallowed observances of minority rights; the respected guarantees of freedom; the established bulwarks of parliamentary liberties and privileges—these matter nothing any more. The rights of the entire parliament have been subordinated to the will, the whims, the demands and the caprice of a majority in this house; for under this doctrine the majority is parliament.

An hon. Member: Get your flag.

Mr. Fleming: The issue was never any question of the publication of letters. The point was that the incumbent of the office of Speaker expressed himself in terms in which he indicated quite clearly that he wished to be free to enter the lists in partisan debate against members of the opposition against whom he had levelled certain serious charges and, so far as the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is concerned, that fact does not in any respect disqualify the incumbent of that office. The Prime Minister has said, "My faith in the Speaker is unshaken"; and so far as the Prime Minister is concerned that is all that matters. We do not know under what improper pressures or influences the Speaker was deflected from the honourable course of resignation which he announced in this house on July 2.

The action that the Prime Minister has taken is without precedent. It is an act of supreme arrogance. The office of Speaker is older by centuries in the parliamentary system than is the office of Prime Minister. It is not any appendage of an all-powerful office of Prime Minister. Under the parliamentary system it is an office apart. Yet we in this chamber have seen with our own eyes the further naked exposure of subordination by this government to this government of the high office of Speaker, the very cornerstone of the parliamentary system and its freedoms. One-party government has now been all but achieved by the Prime Minister, his ministers and followers. For the degradation of the high office of Speaker, the Prime Minister is responsible, and with it the degradation of this house itself.

There is but one course now open out of these shambles. Let the electorate cleanse this place of this discredited twenty-second parliament,—

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Fleming: —a parliament discredited by a Prime Minister and a government with a totalitarian mind and purpose. They fear retribution at the hands of an outraged electorate and that is why they are clinging so to office. Dissolve this discredited parliament, for only in that way can Canada now hope to rescue and redeem the integrity of the very institution of parliament itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Minister of Finance speaks now, he will conclude the debate.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we listened to the hon. member for Eglinton,—

An hon. Member: Time is up.

Mr. Harris: —and all I can say is this. No one in the Dominion of Canada believes the things he has said about the Prime Minister of this country, and when the time comes he will find out.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is rising on a point of order?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. May I point out to Your Honour that the time allowed for this debate has expired?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In accordance with the new practice which has obtained this session, following the change in the rules last year, on supply motions we have taken it that the Clerk will inform the Chair when the time of the debate has expired. The Clerk so informed me immediately following the time that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra rose. That has been well established, I think, on the previous five supply motions.

The Clerk now having informed me that the time has expired it is my duty, under standing order 56, to put the main question.

Mr. Harris, seconded by Mr. Campney, moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of supply. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Harris) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson
Applewhaite
Arsenault
Ashbourne
Balcom
Batten
Benidickson
Bennett
Blanchette
Boisvert
Bonnier
Bourget
Bourque
Brisson
Brown (Brantford)
Brown (Essex West)
Buchanan
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Campney
Cannon
Caron
Carter
Cauchon
Cavers
Cloutier
Decore
Denis
Deslieres
Dickey
Dumas
Dupuis
Eudes
Eyre
Fairey
Follwell
Forgie
Fraser (St. John's East)
Gardiner
Garland
Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Gauthier (Nickel Belt)
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Habel
Hanna
Harris
Harrison
Healy
Hellyer
Henry
Hollingworth
Hosking
Houck
Howe (Port Arthur)
Huffman
James
Jutras
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
Laflamme
Lafontaine
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Lavigne
Leduc (Gatineau)
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Leduc (Verdun)
Lefrançois
Legare
Lesage
Lusby
MacNaught
Macnaughton
McCann
McCubbin

McCulloch (Pictou)
McIlraith
McMillan
McWilliam
Maltais
Marler
Masse
Matheson
Menard
Mitchell (Sudbury)
Monette
Nixon
Pearson
Philpott
Pickersgill
Pinard
Pommer
Power (Quebec South)
Power (St. John's West)
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Reinke
Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche)
Roberge
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
Ross
Roy
St. Laurent (Quebec East)
St. Laurent (Temiscouata)
Schneider
Shipley, Mrs.
Simmons
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Thibault
Tucker
Villeneuve
Weir
Weselak
Winters—121.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss
Argue
Balcer
Barnett
Bell
Blackmore
Blair
Brooks
Bryce
Bryson
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Cardiff
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Churchill
Coldwell
Diefenbaker
Drew Dufresne
Ellis
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fleming
Green
Hahn
Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace)
Hamilton (York West)
Hansell
Harkness
Hees
Herridge
Hodgson
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Johnson (Kindersley)
Johnston (Bow River)
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Leboe
Lennard
Low
MacLean
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
McLeod
Michener
Monteith
Murphy (Lambton West)
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Nowlan
Pallett
Patterson
Perron
Quelch
Regier
Robinson (Bruce)
Small
Smith (Battle River-Camrose)
Stanton
Starr
Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Thomas
Tustin
White (Hastings-Frontenac)
White (Middlesex East)
Winch
Zaplitny—69.

Mr. Gillis: I was paired with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul E. Gagnon (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, members in this corner of the house failed to vote, because the second clerk assistant stated too soon that the members of the government had voted. We would have liked to vote with the government.

Mr. Speaker: It is regrettable that this should have happened, because I myself was looking at the second clerk assistant who calls the names of the hon. members as they rise and I noted with surprise that the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon) and those who sit next to him had not risen. I thought that they merely wanted to abstain, as they are entitled to do. I hope that this unfortunate mistake will not happen again in the future.

(Text):

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

58. Departmental administration, $500,150.

LEGISLATION

The Senate—

The Speaker of the Senate—

198. Allowance in lieu of residence, $3,000.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

415. Departmental administration, $628,021.

Proceedings reported.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

498. Departmental administration, $2,215,472.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there was some consideration of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs on Friday last and today I should like to make a few comments on this particular department. I believe the time has come to reassess the position of Canadian veterans and their dependents and the legislation designed to help them. While that legislation was designed to help these Canadians in fact it goes much deeper because in effect it is to repay them for the sacrifices they made for this nation. This obligation started right after the first war and it will continue as long as any of these veterans or their dependents remain alive.

I am afraid there is a tendency today to forget that many of the problems affecting veterans are still very serious and require immediate action, and furthermore that there always will be such problems. The reasons for this tendency to forget and for the apparent lack of interest are several, and today I should like to point out one or two of them to the members of the committee.

The first is that the veterans of both world wars are getting up in years. The annual report of the department for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1955 shows that at that date —I am quoting from page 85—the average age of disability pensioners of the first world war was 65·22 years. That means that today the average age of those pensioners would be between 66 and 67 years. Further on in the report we find the figures for the disability pensioners of the second world war. I was surprised to find that the average age of those pensioners was 42·27 years, which would bring that age today up to 43 or 44 years. The ranks of the men who served in the first war are growing very thin; many of them have joined their comrades who made the supreme sacrifice. The veterans of the second world war have been busy getting established and it is more difficult for them to be interested in and pay attention to the problems which arise in veterans affairs.

Another reason for this tendency to forget and this lack of interest in veterans' problems is I believe the amount of talk there is about the so-called veterans' charter. Time and again we hear in this house of the wonders of the veterans' charter which is considered to have pretty well settled all the problems that will face the veteran for all time.

The actual fact is that veterans' legislation started back during the time of the first world war. I think the Pension Act was passed in 1919. The three main acts affecting the veterans of Canada are the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Veterans' Land Act; a similar earlier act was known as the soldier settlement act. Those three foundation acts were in effect long before the so-called veterans' charter of 1946. What was done in 1946 and during one or two sessions preceding that year was simply to bring up to date that basic legislation and to add certain other statutes to meet conditions which were peculiar to the second world war. The veterans' charter was passed eleven years ago and it does not meet the problems which are now arising and will continue to arise in connection with veterans' affairs.

Actually there is a great need today for an attack on the problems of the veteran and his dependents with renewed vigour. Yet that has not been done. Let me point out, as did the minister in his opening discussion of his estimates on Friday, that there has been no legislation brought into this house during the present session by the Department of Veterans Affairs. There was an amendment to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, but that was introduced by the Minister of Finance. In his remarks the other day the minister sought to excuse this situation by saying that there had been some resolutions presented at the dominion convention of the Canadian Legion held in Vancouver a few weeks ago and that there had not yet been time for the government to review these suggestions. His remarks are to be found on page 5747 of Hansard. He said:

> As hon. members know, the dominion convention of the Canadian Legion in session last month in Vancouver passed a number of resolutions concerned with proposed legislative amendments, and as soon as these recommendations are received by the government I can assure the committee they will receive the careful and thorough consideration of the government and the officials of my department.

That really was not a very good excuse for inaction, because as a matter of fact most of those resolutions were presented to the government when the dominion officers of the legion met the cabinet on November 10, 1955, in plenty of time to have them considered in the intervening months.

Then we still have the situation that the minister is only a half-time minister in so far as the Department of Veterans Affairs is concerned. He was named Postmaster General on November 8, 1955, and for those eight months has been carrying on as the minister of two important departments. I complained about this situation on January 23, when I made my first speech of this session. Other members have complained about it; veterans' organizations have made a similar complaint; but the Prime Minister has done nothing about relieving the present Minister of Veterans Affairs of his obligations as Postmaster General. The blame for this situation rests not on the shoulders of the minister but on the Prime Minister himself.

According to the report of the department, there are over 300,000 Canadians directly affected in that they receive either a pension or war veterans' allowance or have settled under the Veterans' Land Act. I do not know the exact number because there will be certain duplications: for example, a pensioner may also be receiving a war veterans' allowance or may also be settled under the Veterans' Land Act. But there are at least a quarter of a million Canadians who are directly affected by what is done by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and surely that job, if it is to be done properly, is a full-time job. The minister should be relieved of his obligation to act also as Postmaster General. The very fact that the Prime Minister allows this situation to continue shows that he for one is not very deeply concerned about these problems facing the Canadian veteran.

Then we have the continued refusal to set up a standing committee on veterans affairs. Year after year, requests have been made that that step be taken, but every time they have been turned down. When we form a government, we certainly will have a full-time Minister of Veterans Affairs and we certainly will have a standing committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. Lapointe: Wishful thinking.

Mr. Green: The setting up of such a committee would result in rectifying the mistakes in legislation and in administration much more quickly than is done under the present conditions. It would also result in keeping the veterans legislation up to date, and I think it would make things a great deal easier for the staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs because it would bring them much more closely in contact with the people whom they are serving.

However, these veterans' problems are not to be dealt with at all during the present year. What is the result of that failure to take any action? Let me instance the case of the veteran on war veterans' allowance who reaches 70 years of age this year, and do not forget that these recipients of war veterans' allowance are in great majority front-line troops of the first world war, men who served in the trenches. The veteran who reaches 70 this year does not get a full old-age security payment of $40 per month. At least, he may get the full old age security payment, but his war veterans' allowance will be cut down. His fellow Canadians who did not serve at all in the forces will get the $40 automatically, but not this front-line fighting soldier.

The reason why he will not get it is because of the low ceiling placed on the annual income he is allowed. If that ceiling were raised from $840 per year to $1,200 per year for the single veteran, and from $1,440 per year to $2,000 per year for the married veteran, as requested year in and year out by the great veterans' organizations of this country, then that situation to which I have referred would be met. This veteran would be able to get his full old-age security payment when he reaches 70, and the small pensioner who is under 70 would be able to retain his small pension and get the full war veterans' allowance.

It is obvious that the government knows that this situation is not right, because there are palliatives being used to partially meet the needs. For example, provision is made for certain earnings to be exempt from consideration, and they are called casual earnings. We were told last year that only a small percentage of the recipients of war veterans' allowance were able to earn anything at all, but there is this provision for casual earnings, which helps some of them.

Then the government has set up what is known as a war veterans' allowance assistance fund. If a recipient of war veterans' allowance has no other income whatsoever, then he can get a hand-out up to a total of $10 per month, subject to a second means test. He has to take the first means test to qualify for a war veterans' allowance and then, to get any help from the assistance fund, he must take a second means test. I repeat that these are palliatives which help but do not actually meet the situation as it should be met. In effect they prove the need for raising the ceiling on annual income.

The Department of Finance in its wisdom has decided that $2,000 income should be exempt from taxation; in other words, that the family man requires that amount to exist and that he should not pay any tax on it. I suggest that the same ruling should be made with regard to the married recipient of war veterans allowance. It is a very good argument in support of raising this ceiling to the sum of $2,000 per year.

I think it will not be denied that the reason why these ceilings are kept so low is to keep the veteran in line with the recipient of social welfare, although the fact is that the payments made to the veteran are payments for services rendered for the greatest kind of services that any Canadian could render; they should be treated on that basis rather than regarded merely as social welfare measures.

There is another problem concerning war veterans allowance recipients which should be met. Most of these men are getting up in years and their health breaks down. In some cases they have to go to the southern states or to Mexico, some warmer climate, in order to stay alive, and when they do that they lose the war veterans allowance. It is only paid as long as they reside in Canada. There is provision for a short absence from Canada but if they change their residence to some country other than Canada then they lose the allowance. We have always been told that it is too hard for the department to figure out any way in which special provision could be made to meet these cases where the man's health has broken down as distinct from cases where he decides to move away for reasons other than health. I submit that this problem should have been met during the present session. Furthermore, I see no reason why the allowance should not be paid to a veteran who goes to live in another part of the commonwealth, whether or not he goes for health reasons. The same ruling should not apply in those cases as is used where veterans go to foreign lands.

So far as war veterans allowance is concerned, there is also a need to meet the situation of widows of imperial veterans who did not live for a full period of 20 years in Canada. Other members have dealt with this matter, have explained it very fully and have urged that the situation be remedied. The fact is, as we all know, that when provision was made to help these imperial veterans we had in mind the group of imperials who came here up to and including the year 1930. However, instead of saying that any veterans who had come here by that time would be eligible the amendment when passed in 1950 or thereabouts based qualification on the ground of 20 years' residence. Of course that meant that if the veteran died say in 1945 his widow could not qualify because the veteran had not lived in Canada for 20 years. This has been a mistake in draftsmanship and yet the department has never been willing to remedy it. That should have been done this year without any further hardships being imposed on this particular group.

Then there is the Pension Act. I believe the time has come to write into that act a presumption that injury or disease occurred after enlistment. As it stands at the present time, a veteran who suffers a disability now often has a ruling made against him on the ground that the disability originated before he joined the forces. In the second world war particularly medical examinations on enlistment were very thorough, much more thorough, as we all know, than was the case in the first war. I believe that the pension commission stretches things very far when it rules that a disability which the doctors could not find on enlistment actually existed then.

This was one of the points which the Legion emphasized when it appeared before the cabinet on November 10 of last year. At that time the Legion recommended that section 13 (1) (a) of the Pension Act be amended so that, where a pension applicant who served in an actual theatre of war is found to have a disability resulting from an injury or a disease not recorded on medical examination prior to enlistment, such injury or disease shall be presumed to have occurred or had its inception subsequent to an enlistment. There seems to be no good reason why that amendment should not be written into the Pension Act.

Another necessary change is to do away with the deadline against the marriage of a veteran which took place on or after the first of May, 1954. As the law stands at the present time, a veteran contracting such a marriage cannot get any allowance for his wife, and if he dies his widow can get no pension unless they were married before the first of May, 1954. The reason a deadline was written into the Pension Act in the first place was the fear that when Canadian veterans grew old they might be picked up by some young lady of 20 or 21 who was looking forward to getting a pension for the rest of her life. That was the basis upon which the deadline was written into the act. I do not think it ever had any justification in fact because the pension commission has always been given very wide discretion in such cases. If the veteran had not a reasonable expectation of life for a period of one year, then the pension commission has the power to refuse to grant the pension. Surely this change should be made now.

It is very significant that there is no such deadline in the War Veterans Allowance Act. I refer to the booklet on war veterans allowances which states that the widow of a veteran who died within one year of the date of his marriage shall be ineligible for the war veterans allowance unless it is considered that at the time of his marriage the veteran had a reasonable life expectancy of at least one year. A similar provision should be sufficient in the case of the Pension Act. Strange to say, there is a provision in the Pension Act that if the veteran has been living with a woman, although not married to her, before the deadline date, and marries her afterwards he can get the payment for a wife and she qualifies for payment as a widow; but otherwise if the veteran marries after the deadline date he cannot get any allowance for his wife and if he dies his widow can get no pension. It really is a ridiculous situation. I know some cases where very great hardship has been suffered as the result of the deadline, and I think it should be removed entirely.

The Legion has also advocated that there should be a change with regard to the date from which a pension can be paid. At the present time there is a restriction. Once the pension is granted it is not necessarily retroactive to the date on which the application for pension was made. It is true that power is given to the pension commission to make a six months retroactive award if the delay has caused hardship and distress and a further 18 months retroactive award where there are certain delays and administrative difficulties beyond the applicant's control. In an editorial in the March issue of The Legionary I find the Legion stating, and they should know, that the commission rarely recognizes the existence of such special circumstances. The editorial goes on to say:

> It is particularly interesting to note that no provision whatsoever is made for the correction of an error on the part of the commission or any departmental doctor or official. If an error has been committed, the pensioner must remain the loser.

That situation, Mr. Chairman, is not good enough, and I believe that provision should be made for payment of the pension from the date of application.

The final problem which should have been met this year in connection with the Pension Act is the amount that can be paid to dependent parents. These are cases in which the veteran has lost his life. The pension commission is given power to make payments to a dependent parent or even to two parents if there should be a need. At the present time they can get only $75 a month for one parent and $100 a month for two. The Legion has recommended that these payments should be increased to $100 per month for one parent and $125 per month for two. If that were done, those figures would be in line with the figures for other pensions of a similar nature. Formerly the same figure applied all round and I do not see why the distinction was made when the Pension Act was revised.

Those are some of the problems, Mr. Chairman, facing the veterans of Canada today. Of course, there are others; but certainly those particular problems should have been dealt with this session. That brings me back to my earlier statement that there is a need now to attack veterans problems with renewed vigour and to get away from this tendency to think that everything is lovely and that we no longer need to do anything about the veteran or his dependents.

The place for action primarily is right here in parliament. The responsibility to these veterans and their dependents rests here on the members of the Canadian parliament. I suggest that we must see to it that Canadian veterans and their dependents who made such sacrifices for this nation not only shall not be neglected at the present time but shall never be forgotten.

Mr. James: Mr. Chairman, following the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra I would be among the first to assert that certainly there are still veterans problems to be solved in this country. Despite the magnificent job the Department of Veterans Affairs is doing, I do not suppose all of those problems will ever be solved. However, I maintain that the department is doing a terrific job, that it is gradually whittling down those problems and solving them, and that it is making our veterans affairs administration the best of any country in the world.

Yesterday in the Ottawa Journal there was an extremely interesting article which I believe bears me out on this particular theme. It was written by Walter Gilhooly under the heading "The Ottawa Scene". It mentions two veterans, by name, Dave Polowin, and Lou Mirsky. Polowin was an air gunner with 425 R.C.A.F. Alouette Squadron. Mirsky was in the R.C.O.C. and third division. These two veterans apparently have started a rather unique delicatessen down on Elgin street. This article mentions their experiences following the war. I should just like to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, a little bit of this experience as one of them describes it. He states:

> I came back from overseas in 1946 and all that I had was the uniform on my back and the government owned that . . . Lou Mirsky wasn't much better off. We had, of course, our re-establishment credits and our war service gratuities. You should have seen this place—

This refers to their delicatessen.

> —when we started—a regular hole-in-the-wall. Three of us ran the joint—Lou and me and one employee. Now we employ 14 workers, and it costs us 50, 60 thousand a year to run the place.

Here is the part that I want to emphasize.

> D.V.A. fixed us up.

That is the Department of Veterans Affairs.

> They helped us finance and they guaranteed us salaries for six months in case the place didn't pay enough to keep us. D.V.A. gave Canadian troops the best deal any troops in the world got after the war.

I believe that is quite true, Mr. Chairman. I only want to add that I am quite certain that the majority or, in fact, practically all of the veterans in my particular area around Durham constituency feel exactly the same way, namely that they have been given a remarkably fine deal, and they have great respect for the Department of Veterans Affairs in all of its activities.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few remarks in this, as I suppose you might call it, most inspiring atmosphere. I must say that last Friday I listened with a great deal of interest to the minister's review of the activities of his department during the past year. Since listening to it, I reread his speech. I think there was some quite interesting information in his remarks. However, before going on to the few things I wish to say I must express my appreciation of the courtesy of the minister, the Canadian pension commission, the war veterans allowance board, the senior officials in Ottawa and the district officials in British Columbia, for the kindness and courtesy they have always extended to me when I have had occasion to place my troubles in their laps. I must say that their kindness and prompt attention to any of the problems I have had to bring to their attention have certainly assisted me better to represent my veteran constituents.

I think it is only fair, Mr. Chairman, that I should not omit the lady members of the senior staff. I have occasion to see them occasionally. Their charm, kindness, sympathy, understanding and knowledge is appreciated, I know, by a good many members of this house. I am sure it is quite safe to say that their knowledge, tact and kindness frequently acts as oil on the creaking wheels of administrative machinery. With others, I must say how much many of us regret the passing of Dr. A. P. Warner some time ago. I think it is only fair to say that, in his passing, the veterans lost a very good friend indeed. I want to mention the retirement of Brigadier Topp from the Canadian pension commission. He will be missed by many in this house and outside of it. I wish to make reference to the retirement of Mr. George Derby as western regional administrator on May 12 of this year after, I understand, 37½ years of service with the department or its predecessors. I first met Mr. Derby in Shaughnessy hospital in 1918 and I have known him since that time. I am sure there are many veterans in British Columbia and in western Canada who will have reason to remember his services in the department with gratitude and affection. I am sure there are thousands who will wish him a long and happy retirement.

Mr. Chairman, in listening to the minister I was very glad to hear of the review of 3,000 cases of pensioners whose disabilities were from 40 per cent to 45 per cent and to know that, as a result of that review, a substantial number of those veterans are now receiving a 50 per cent pension or more. Figures do not mean much to the general public in a case like that; but any one who has been closely connected with and interested in veterans affairs knows what a great deal it means to these veterans and their dependents whose pensions are now raised to 50 per cent or above.

I am very glad to know that the pension commission undertook that review. I was also pleased to hear of the review of the 6,000 cases of pensioners suffering from deafness or defective hearing, and that over half those pensioners will benefit as the result of this review. I was also glad to note that the department is adopting a more liberal policy toward dependent parents.

Another point the minister mentioned which was of interest to me was that over 3,000 adopted children are now receiving additional pensions. These things together do indicate an active and continuing concern on the part of the minister and his officials with these veterans and their problems.

[Mr. Herridge.]

As far as this committee is concerned, there has been one major achievement to the advantage of veterans this session, in my opinion; that is the making public of the table of disabilities, which the Legion has urged for many years. This session my attention was particularly focused on this question as a result of reading an article written by Adam W. Williams, chairman of the pensions, treatment and W.V.A. committee of the British Columbia command of the Legion. He dealt with the facts very well indeed and the need for the publication of this table. I must give major credit to the British Columbia command of the Canadian Legion for bringing this question to the attention of hon. members and others. I think it is quite correct to say that the British Columbia command, as the minister has known on occasions, is one of the most aggressive commands in Canada, and it is staffed with some very alert and active officers.

Before passing from this subject I must pay a tribute to Bob Macnicol, who has been closely associated with the Legion and the great war veterans' activities in British Columbia, and has done such excellent work. I think it is only fair to give credit to those people who have given such good service and, as far as Mr. Macnicol is concerned, since his retirement a great deal of voluntary service and time. This was a matter of some importance because I have heard it discussed at the Legion meetings; I have discussed it with veterans' advocates, and I have discussed it with officials of the Canadian Legion in British Columbia.

When I read the article I began to think just what could be done to ferret this out. I had a discussion with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I said to him, "I have a good notion to put a resolution on the order paper so we can have a debate on this specific question." He said, "Well, why not put a motion for production of papers?" I am one to pick other people's brains on occasions, and I immediately seized on the suggestion and placed a motion on the order paper for the production of papers. I am very glad indeed that the minister, after consideration, saw fit to allow that motion to be adopted unanimously by the house. Since then I have heard from a number of Legion officials, not in Ottawa, and from branches and from two or three veterans' advocates who said that to date it has been of considerable advantage to a number of veterans.

In concluding his remarks the minister also was frank enough to indicate that he considered that possibly some amendments were still necessary to veterans' legislation. That indicated he had an open mind and I am quite sure, being in that state of mind, he will listen most sympathetically to any representations made by the Canadian Legion or hon. members.

The 16th dominion convention of the Canadian Legion was held recently in Vancouver, and this parliament of the Canadian veterans adopted a number of resolutions. The majority of those resolutions dealt with war veterans allowances, the Pension Act, the Veterans' Land Act, and resolutions that have come before the dominion convention of the Canadian Legion on a number of occasions. They are the hard core problems which the legion wishes the government to solve by necessary amendments to legislation. I am not going to deal in detail with those resolutions. The hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra mentioned them. I am simply going to mention them. I am not going to take the time of the committee to tell the minister what he already knows, but the veterans I represent asked me to support any suggestions in this respect and to bring their interest in this matter to the attention of the minister and his officials.

From my contact with veterans I think the most pressing problem is an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act that would raise the ceiling on permissive income so it would be $1,200 for single men and $2,000 for married men. From personal experience I know that would be a great help to a good number of veterans in this country. I say it is the most pressing problem and possibly the first problem in the minds of the greatest number of veterans. As a result of attending Legion meetings and discussing it with people in my constituency and in other places, I do most heartily support representations made in that respect. The Legion indicated its continuing interest in that matter even as late as March of this year, in an editorial in The Legionary.

I also want to support the plea on behalf of those veterans of the first world war who served in England only. They should receive the war veterans allowance. They are growing fewer and fewer in numbers. I am sure it would not be a great expense. The present circumstances are somewhat unjust and unfair for reasons mentioned by the hon. member for Royal and by four other hon. members.

It just happened that a veteran stayed in England. I know a veteran in my company who just before we left for France was transferred to the pay office and did his best to get out of it. He was an accountant, so he went to the pay office and stayed in London for the rest of the war. Another veteran went to France and stayed at Havre working around the camp. He gets the war veterans allowance. Really there was no possible difference in risk between staying in London in the pay office and staying in Havre working around the camp, both doing what they were told to do as soldiers. I do support the representations made on behalf of those veterans.

I also support the representations made on behalf of widows of veterans who now have 20 years' residence in Canada. As one who is interested in this, I must at this point mention the work done by the ladies of the non-pensioned widows' association. I also want to compliment the parliamentary assistant on his special and particular interest in this problem. I know he has been very kind to this group of ladies when they have visited Ottawa, and I know he pays particular attention to their problems.

My final appeal with respect to the war veterans allowance I have mentioned several times in recent years. It has to do with veterans who have to reside outside of Canada for health reasons and who obtain a certificate from a departmental doctor to prove it. They should continue to receive the war veterans allowance. They are very few in number indeed. I know from my personal experience of one very unfortunate case. Under the present law and regulations nothing can be done for this man; consequently he is now living in Mexico as the result of a fund which is being organized and to which his veteran friends contribute every month. I think they manage to send about $50 a month to him in Mexico City, and I am very happy to chip in my little bit to help out.

I also think there should be the few minor amendments to the Pension Act with respect to dependent parents that have been suggested by the Canadian Legion. Compared to what has been done these are minor amendments, and I urge the minister and the government to give consideration to them. That is all I have to say concerning the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act. Now I want to say a word with respect to the Veterans' Land Act.

First of all I must say the local administration so far as I can see is excellent, that part of it of which I have knowledge. The officials with whom I deal in my constituency are competent and always willing to try to deal with any particular problem to the advantage of the veteran according to the law and regulation. However, in my constituency there are over 200 veterans, particularly young married veterans, who are unable to take advantage of the small holding section of the Veterans' Land Act because of the acreage required. I know the minister looks at me as if to say this is a boring topic and one which I have mentioned before, but this is a serious problem for veterans in a country with topography like ours where there are mountains, lakes and valleys and where it is not easy to obtain two or three acres of land. Most of these men are working in the mining industry or the lumber industry. A quarter of an acre is a quite sufficient area for a small holding for any man working in industry, and I suggest that further consideration be given to these particular circumstances and the regulations so amended that a veteran can obtain a holding as small in area as one quarter of an acre.

I think there is general recognition of the good work being done by the Veterans' Land Act administration. I have received one general criticism, not of the particular officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation concerned nor of any individual, but for some reason or another veterans like to come under the administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It is a department with a head and a heart—some have considerable head but not very much heart—and I find it is the almost unanimous wish of veterans who have to build houses that the administration of all housing in which veterans are concerned remain within the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Land Act administration.

The Department of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Chairman, is spending about $245 million this year. Changing conditions and circumstances create new problems almost from day to day for the veterans, the dependents of veterans, the administration and the government. In our opinion a standing committee on veterans affairs is necessary if parliament is going to deal effectively and with fairness with all the human beings concerned.

I know that the area in which we can tackle the government with respect to veterans affairs is somewhat circumscribed. We have certain particular problems that are not settled. We will have other problems that will arise in the days to come, and that is why we think it is essential that there should be a standing parliamentary committee on veterans affairs. It would provide an opportunity for representations to be made by veterans' organizations. It would provide an opportunity for the hearing of evidence from the departmental officials and a resumé of their activities, and would give us a better understanding of the administration of the affairs of the department. It would provide for an annual review of veterans' legislation as the result of listening to representations made by veterans' organizations, for amendments and improvements, and it would provide the committee, in addition, an opportunity to make recommendations to the government as a result of these representations, this evidence, this hearing of the officials and as a result of the personal experience of the members concerned.

The request for a standing committee on veterans affairs is genuine and has been voiced from this side of the house and by some hon. members on the other side for some years. I think the need is obvious if we are going to serve the veteran to the best advantage. All that is required is recognition of that need and recognition of the facts by this government.

That is all I am going to say on the estimates at this time. I may have some comments to make under particular items, but at this point I shall conclude my remarks.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, it was just about a year ago that we started to discuss the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs during last session. During the course of my remarks at that time I commented upon the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs for five years in succession had failed to make any statement at the beginning of his estimates. I did not think he would accept my advice which I tendered to him on that occasion, but to my astonishment he came forward this year and made a statement at the opening of his estimates.

That is an encouraging advance, and if the minister has charge of this department on some other occasion I hope he will continue that practice, because it is essential that a minister should review the work of the year and place it before the committee. Of course when I examine his statement made just a few days ago I find there are many omissions, but I am going to be patient and generous with him and hope for improvement as we go along.

I do not propose during the course of my remarks today to offer any criticism of the work of the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I think within the limitations of the act and the limitations of the direction given to them they are doing an efficient piece of work but, if necessary, I do propose to be critical of the actions of the minister and the ineffectiveness of the legislation as I see it.

The minister pointed out that no legislation was introduced this year and seemed to imply by that remark that everything was all right. That struck me as being rather odd, because last year the estimates of this department went before the estimates committee of the House of Commons and a fairly exhaustive study of the Department of Veterans Affairs was carried out in that committee. Various officials appeared before us and gave the committee all the information that was asked for and disclosed to us that they are as efficient as any members of the civil service. During the course of that comprehensive study of this department last year several points came up which I thought would be reviewed in the interval, and I expected that the minister would comment on them at this time.

In the estimates committee we went into the subject of the rates of pension with considerable care. Facts and figures were produced. For perhaps the first time the pension commission in the person of the chairman appeared before us and gave a great deal of information with regard to disability pensions. I thought we indicated to the minister at that time, and subsequently when the estimates came before the committee of the whole house, that the pension rates were not entirely satisfactory.

We get the same thing in connection with war veterans allowances. We went into that and pointed out the alterations that should be made to improve war veterans allowances. We discussed at considerable length the benefit of doubt section in the veterans' charter, yet nothing is said about it this year by the minister. We discussed at considerable length section 13 (2) of the Pension Act which provides for the granting of pensions to veterans or dependents where the veteran has suffered injury or death in connection with a disability which arose out of or was directly connected with his military service. That section has been a stumbling block for a number of years in connection with the granting of pensions. It was discussed thoroughly by the committee which sat last year, but it is passed by without any comment by the minister this year.

We discussed also the question of pensions for men who served in England in the first world war, but it passes without comment this year. We discussed at some length in the estimates committee and again in the house last year the problems of our veterans. We urged the setting up of a standing committee on veterans affairs, but again no result.

That is not good enough. There was a much more exhaustive study last year of the affairs of the Department of Veterans Affairs than we have had in previous years. The officials were there to be examined and to answer our questions. Problems which required rectification were brought to the attention of the minister. Yet the minister informs us that there is to be no legislation brought down this year, which gives the impression that everything is fine with regard to veterans affairs. Consequently we are placed once again in the position of having to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that everything is not right with veterans affairs. Some changes need to be made and should have been made long ago. They can still be made. Just a few minutes ago the hon. member for Durham was telling us how wonderful the veterans' charter was, and he quoted from a newspaper to the effect that members of the forces had benefited greatly after the conclusion of the last war from the assistance they had received.

That is all very well, but it should be placed against what is contained in the departmental report of 1955, the last one that is available to us. That indicates that 5,305 veterans of world war I made application to the pension commission for decisions of one sort or another. The same report contains the information that disability pensioners of world war I made application to the pension commission for additional or other allowances to the number of 1,543. Similar information with regard to world war II shows that in 1954-55 veterans of that war made 8,873 applications to the Canadian pension commission. If everything were perfectly all right with regard to veterans legislation we would not have applications of that nature coming before the pension commission at this stage, certainly not from veterans of world war I. It is quite obvious that the situation is not quite as rosy as some people attempt to make out.

As I pointed out to the house last year, and as I repeat this year, a fairly exhaustive study indicates that the picture with regard to those who are on pension is not particularly satisfactory. The chairman of the pension commission gave figures to show that in the case of world war I pensioners, those receiving a pension of 50 per cent or better constituted only 25 per cent of the total number. Three-quarters of world war I pensioners are receiving pensions of less than 50 per cent, and the average pension is $32.64.

World war II pensioners receiving pensions of 50 per cent or more constitute 17 per cent of the total, and 83 per cent are receiving pensions of under 50 per cent. The average pension for world war II pensioners is $24.52. It is quite evident from those figures that the Canadian pension scheme is not particularly generous. If it were a generous scheme, how does it come about that 10,000 disability pensioners have to receive additional assistance by way of war veterans allowances or other assistance plans?

Things are not as satisfactory as some people would try to persuade us, and much more activity is required on the part of the minister to make sure that veterans are not in trouble. It is for that and other reasons that we keep asking for a standing committee on veterans affairs where matters such as this could be reviewed. Otherwise things are likely to be taken for granted. As I have pointed out, the work of the pension commission did not come under detailed review until last year, before the estimates committee; at least not for a number of years. The facts and figures which I have given emerged from that review.

A standing committee meeting every year would be able to receive representations from veterans organizations, would be able to interview the officials of the department, and could keep closely in touch with the veteran situation throughout the country. We must remember that this is a continuing problem. It is safe to say that for 70 years after any war there will be problems concerning the veterans of that particular war. The figures shown in the departmental report indicate that the ages of world war I veterans run from 50 to 99 years. Those who are in their fifties on that disability list may live until they are 99; thus you could have another 40-odd years in which you would have to deal with disability pensioners of world war I. The ages of pensioners of world war II run from 25 to something in the sixties, so there will be a long period ahead in which problems affecting veterans of world war II will have to be considered. We are not going to get rid of the problems facing our veterans for a long time, and we must settle down and accept the fact that we have to look after the veterans of wars in which Canada has been engaged. Don't forget that the South African veterans are still with us. So for those reasons and others a standing committee on veterans affairs is the proper thing to set up. There too we would discover some of the reasons why there are so many thousands of applications for pensions being made even at the present time by world war I veterans. We might be able to find out why so many of those applications are brought forward and why so many of them are turned down.

May I point out to the minister, and he may pass the word along to his officials—and this is the only criticism I am making of the officials—that it is about time they altered a sentence in their departmental report. I think I drew it to their attention last year. If I did not I do so now, and if I did I repeat it. In the report in 1951, and it is repeated in the reports of 1953, 1954 and now in 1955, words like this appear in reference to applications for pensions:

> In all cases, every effort is made to obtain final settlement without recourse to an appeal board—

I worked out the figures and discovered that despite all those efforts, 91·2 per cent of all first and second hearings failed. So I think the sentence is completely meaningless. It occurs in the report for 1955 with the additional phrase added:

> —and in many instances finality is reached by this means.

That does not happen. Most of these applications fall to the ground on first and second hearings despite all these efforts. I think a standing committee on veterans affairs might investigate that particular problem and see whether anything could be done about it.

I am not going to cover the ground that has already been touched on by other members on this side of the house, but I certainly am in complete sympathy with the veterans' organizations that continue to press for attention with regard to disability pensioners, that continue to press for attention to the War Veterans Allowance Act and the regulations thereunder, and that continue to press for increased financial assistance to war veterans. I am not going to touch on the question of casual earnings; that comes up every year. It has been mentioned here again this year, and the veterans' organization continue to draw it to our attention. These are problems that are pressing; they affect individuals many of whom are in desperate circumstances.

It is certainly not right for anyone to attempt to create the impression that everything is all right with regard to veterans affairs in Canada and that there is a great charter which looks after all the veterans. My investigation shows that that is not so. I am not going to repeat the figures I used last year, when I dealt with this at some length and indicated that thousands of veterans have not received any assistance whatsoever since the first world war, and the same is going to be true of veterans of the second world war. Many thousands, of course, have not asked for assistance, but it struck me as very odd when I looked into it last year that half the number of those who had been wounded in the first great war had not been placed on the pension roll, and it strikes me as odd at the present time that men are getting pensions now, 40 years after the first world war, for gunshot wounds suffered then.

I noted that the minister referred to a review made of about 3,000 pensioners who were receiving disability pensions of 40 per cent and 45 per cent. He stated the other day that a very substantial number of these awards were increased to 50 per cent and more, making their dependents eligible for an award in the event of death. I had hoped there would be a table in the 1955 report indicating that activity—it may be there and I have not found it—or that the minister would give us the exact figures and not merely the statement that a very substantial number of these awards were increased. Why not pin it down and let us have the actual number, and give us the percentage of those who now get 50 per cent or more pension so we may make a proper comparison?

I think it would not hurt at all for a standing committee on veterans affairs to examine the matter I raised last year in the estimates committee and mentioned in the house, that a ceiling seems to have been set on the amount of money available for pensions over the years. I have traced the course of these for 20 years. There seems to be a ceiling, and as men die others can be added to the pension roll. Why did it not happen that a few years after the first world war the number on pension went away up to a high figure and then declined, instead of running almost level for a long period? I asked the question in regard to the second world war. Why should not the pension roll for the second world war have mounted very rapidly and then soon started to decline? If you look at the record you will find that there is a sort of dead level for 25 years, and that year after year men are being placed on the pension roll.

The only conclusion I can draw is that some ceiling has been set over all these years for these pensions, and as 800 or 1,000 men die each year, the pension board can receive applications from and consider adding to the pension roll 800 or 1,000 men, so the financial obligation remains the same. A standing committee could look into that as well as other things.

I have some other remarks on the Department of Veterans Affairs to be made later.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, at this time I wish to record my support for a number of suggestions relative to veterans' legislation. This afternoon we listened to the hon. member for Durham congratulating the department on the splendid achievements of the past, and he made some remarks relative to the widespread satisfaction that exists with regard to the legislation as we now have it. I am sure that none of us believe that every problem has been taken care of and solved, but I may say that all veterans and those who are interested in veterans affairs are appreciative of what has been done. Nevertheless, I think they will take at face value the implications in the minister's speech the other day, when he made the remark that further amendments would be possible in the future. Certainly we shall be looking forward to the introduction of some of those amendments, and we hope it is going to be in the not too distant future.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, in speaking this afternoon, made the statement that some of these problems would be solved when the Progressive Conservative party forms the government. I certainly hope we do not have to wait that long, because if that is so there will be a great many more opportunities to raise some of these very same problems in the future. However, we hope that as the days go by the minister and his department will give serious and favourable consideration to many of the subjects that have been raised in the course of this debate.

It has been indicated that one of the main problems faced by the veterans and those interested in veterans affairs is the matter of the permissive income. In reading the speech the minister made when introducing his departmental estimates I noticed that he referred to the significant change that had been made in the War Veterans Allowance Act last year with reference to the rates and the ceilings. Prior to the introduction last year of the legislation to which the minister referred we had hopes that he would be prepared to meet the requests of the Legion and the other veterans' organizations with respect to permissive income. However, when the legislation was introduced, we were disappointed to find that he had only gone part way. Perhaps it was just meant to appease those who had been persistent in their requests for increases. However, whatever the reason the department did not see fit to go all the way and grant the requests that the permissive ceiling be raised to $1,200 for single recipients and $2,000 for married recipients.

I think some satisfaction was taken in the view that these increases had taken care of the situation to a large extent. When we think of the entire picture and consider those who have the opportunity to supplement their allowance or income by casual earnings, perhaps such recipients are in a fair position; but then we are also reminded of the fact that there are those who are not in a position to take advantage of the casual earnings clause. There are those who are not physically able. There are those who are unable because of the economic situation in their communities. They do not have the privilege of supplementing their income, and we find they are still in a very difficult financial position. I think the minister and his department should give serious consideration to that particular class.

Another group to whom references have been made during the course of the debate are the veterans who are residing outside of Canada. I raised this same matter with respect to old age pension recipients. I felt that they should not be disqualified if for some particular reason, health or otherwise, they were required or desired to live outside of Canada. Certainly I feel just as strongly in the case of veterans who, for health or perhaps other reasons, want to live outside of Canada. I do not see why they should be disqualified so far as the war veterans allowance is concerned.

I know this matter has also been brought to the attention of the minister and the department not only during the course of this debate but on other occasions, and also by the Canadian Legion and the other veterans' organizations. I trust it is still under consideration. If not, I hope the minister and his department will take it under advisement and give serious consideration to this particular matter having to do with veterans' legislation.

There is another request to which I should like to give my support. I refer to the request on behalf of the widows of those who served in the allied forces during the first war and whose husbands died before they had fulfilled the 20-year residence qualification entitling them to the war veterans allowance. I believe this matter has also been given consideration by the department, but for some reason or other they have not seen fit to accede to the request. I suggest that the recommendation that when the widow has fulfilled the 20-year residence qualification she should be qualified to receive the allowance is valid and fair, and I would suggest that this recommendation be given consideration and the request acceded to.

There is another matter to which I referred last year during the debate on veterans affairs, and I believe it has also been referred to today. It has to do with those veterans who served in England during the first world war but did not get to the actual scene of battle. Last year when I spoke I referred to the fact that I had not been aware that during the first world war even those in England were subjected to enemy attack and bombardment. I think that should qualify them to receive the war veterans allowance, because I imagine there may have been some, perhaps not many, who crossed the channel, set foot in France and yet were not subjected to even the same degree of attack and bombardment as these men in England were on some occasions. It has also been indicated that the conditions in England under which these veterans were required to live were difficult, and this fact certainly should warrant some consideration of the matter. Again, their service in England may have been more arduous than in the case of some of those who perhaps just landed in France and did not actually go into a theatre of combat.

While discussing veterans affairs with veterans' leaders in my own constituency one particular matter was drawn to my attention, and I want to pass it along to the minister at this time. It is the request that consideration be given to providing medical services, drugs, etc., to the wives of war veterans allowance recipients. I feel this is a request which should be given serious consideration. I know this matter has also been raised before and drawn to the attention of the department; nevertheless up to the present favourable action has not been taken in relation to the request.

These are some of the matters to which I should like to draw attention. Perhaps they have all been mentioned before. It has been suggested today that some of these problems have been brought to the attention of the house and the department on many occasions, that they have been contained in briefs submitted by the Canadian Legion and other veterans' organizations. It may be that the department feels there are justifiable reasons why the requests should not or cannot be granted, but I certainly feel that until these requests are met and the problems are solved we should not be too ready to settle back and take the attitude that the veterans' charter covers all the problems that confront our veterans in this day and age.

In introducing his estimates the minister referred to the fact that with the exception of one minor amendment to the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, no veterans' legislation was to be introduced at this session. I trust that is not an indication that no further pressing problems are evident, and that we can settle back and take a breathing spell and perhaps review the situation again in the years that lie ahead. These matters call for urgent consideration.

The request has been made that a standing committee on veterans affairs be set up. I think I have heard the same request made in the past three sessions during which I have served in the House of Commons. I have also seen this subject referred to in the various veterans' periodicals. However, so far the government has not seen fit to set up such a committee. Last year a special committee was established to deal with veterans' legislation that would be referred to it. I know we appreciated the setting up of that committee last year, but even at that time we indicated that we felt it was not adequate for the needs because of the fact that the terms of reference were limited to those matters which had been referred to it by the house. This session we have not even had a committee set up in this session.

I think this is another indication that perhaps we are kind of settling back as far as the veterans' legislation and the veterans' problems are concerned. I certainly hope that favourable consideration will be given to the setting up of a committee and that the request that has been made on so many occasions in this regard will be acceded to.

So, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to these problems, I give my support to the request for a solution to them, and I trust that the minister and his department will give serious and favourable consideration to each and every one of them.

Mr. Philpott: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of unduly delaying the passing of any of these items, but I think I should make some comment on some of the statements made from the opposite side of the house today and one statement made by the hon. member for New Westminster the other day.

While I generally agree with what my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said, I thought he made one most unfortunate suggestion, and one which certainly will do the cause of the veterans in Canada no over-all good, when he suggested that there was some kind of sinister thing like an over-all ceiling on expenditures and therefore new applicants could be taken on the list as pensioners only as the old ones die off, or something to that effect.

When that suggestion was made, I think last year, I discussed this rather remarkable proposition with some of the responsible officials. I found, of course, that they were highly incensed at the implication or insinuation that there could be anything of this kind because it was, to a certain extent, a challenge to their integrity. I think it is obviously true that of all the departments in this government, there is no department of government where the officials from the top to the bottom give more faithful and fairer service to this house and to the people of Canada than do the officials of that particular department.

On reflection I think my good friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre will realize that, while it is a very melancholy thought, any good statistician can figure out in advance how many of us "old sweats" are going to die off every particular year. I think nobody but the Lord God Almighty himself can tell whether the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre or the hon. member for Vancouver South is going to be with us next year; but I think any good statistician can say how many of the veterans of world war I, of age 60 to 70, are going to be with us one year from now, how many are going to be with us five years from now, how many are going to be with us 10 years from now and so on down the list.

I therefore think it is quite obvious that the statisticians of the department always know in advance just what the trend is; and I believe the implication is most unfair that they are slanting their judicial decision as to the eligibility of applicants according to the amount of extra money that might be made available from "old sweats" passing to their reward.

Then with regard to some of the remarkable misstatements made by some of the members of the opposition, I thought also that my good friend the hon. member for New Westminster was certainly on false ground the other day when he suggested this. I forget how he put it, but it was to the effect that the British Columbia government had a grievance against the federal government for not giving free treatment to war veterans allowance recipients. Mr. Chairman, everybody in British Columbia including the people on war veterans allowance is forced to pay the 5 per cent compulsory sales tax which is collected for free hospital treatment.

Mr. Patterson: No, it is not. It is 2 per cent.

Mr. Philpott: If we are going to charge to the people what they ought to pay to the federal government, the government of Canada should be presenting a hospital bill to the Social Credit government of British Columbia every year to make up for the free hospital treatment that is given the veterans allowance patients in federal hospitals, for which not a single cent is charged to the Social Credit government of British Columbia.

Mr. Patterson: Put the record straight. It is 2 per cent, not 5 per cent.

Mr. Philpott: It is 5 per cent over-all. All we know is who pays it and how much. I think it is a very poor suggestion for the hon. member for New Westminster to make, especially when the same Social Credit government of British Columbia will not even make eligible for hospital services the incoming dependents of the people in the armed services until after they have lived in British Columbia for so many months. I think it is a year or so many months additional.

Mr. Patterson: I think they tried to work it out with the federal government, did they not?

Mr. Philpott: It takes two to make an agreement.

Mr. Patterson: That is the trouble.

Mr. Philpott: I think they had better start. To concentrate now on the happier side, I cannot agree either with some of my hon. friends opposite that there have been no improvements in the general set-up. I know this if my own mail bag is any criterion, and I think I probably get as much mail as most members of this house. I know that in the first year of this parliament my mail ran to over 1,000 letters per month asking for increases in the war veterans allowance, for the raising of ceilings on casual earnings and so on. This year I do not think I have had four letters from my constituents on the general question of increases or anything to do with the general set-up of the war veterans' system. I have had some letters of the other kind.

I remember one of the first modest things I tried to do when I came to this house, apart from doing what other members on both sides of the house were doing, namely trying to get increases in war veterans allowances which we subsequently succeeded in getting. I remember that one of the first letters I wrote was to the present minister.

May I interject here for just a moment, Mr. Chairman, that I have heard some rather ridiculous talk from the other side of the house about wanting a full-time minister. Our minister is a two-handed minister, quite capable of carrying two jobs at once. If the time ever came when he was not able to carry out one job with each hand, I know which job would be given up. The Prime Minister would be looking for a new postmaster general, because the veterans of Canada are smart enough to know that they have the most friendly and co-operative of all the distinguished ministers who have held this distinguished post. None has had a greater and more deserved hold on the affections of the veterans of Canada than has the hon. gentleman who sits in that position today and who is too modest to say so himself.

May I mention one of the relatively small things which we sometimes find pay big dividends. I remember almost the first day I got in this House of Commons—certainly in the first week or month—taking up the question of making adopted children eligible along with natural children for the allowances drawn by veterans. This year we saw in the report that several thousand of these children are now drawing those allowances.

Sometimes when we think of it in terms of how much it costs the country we may be inclined to forget the human equation. I have a letter in my file from a very fine war veteran in British Columbia who has a couple of children of his own and three adopted children of rather mixed parentage, perhaps. I remember both that man and his wife telling me that they were not so much interested in the actual allowance they would draw for those adopted children, but it was the idea that they could tell those children that the government of Canada had just as high a regard for them as it had for the natural children born in the ordinary course of the marriage relationship. Perhaps some of these small things are just as important in human terms as some of the spectacular things about which we all hear.

One other thing in the report this year that certainly warmed my heart was that somebody—I do not know who was responsible; perhaps it was a combined effort—took it upon himself or themselves to review the assessment of all the disability pensioners in the 40 per cent and 45 per cent disability group. We all know, Mr. Chairman, the practical effect of that was to make eligible for widows' pensions, when the unhappy occurrence takes place that the husband passes on and the wife remains, several thousand Canadian women who were not eligible until that general over-all revision.

While I do not think, Mr. Chairman, there is anyone certainly on this side of the house who is going to be inclined to rest on the laurels of our pension legislation, I certainly do not think we have anything to be ashamed of. I remember just about a week or so ago reading a long account in the New York Times of the discussion in the congress of the United States of the proposed revisions in their pension system, and it certainly gave me a thrill to read that even after all these years the United States has nothing that can remotely compare with the system we have in Canada with respect to disability pensions and war veterans allowances. After all these years the great rich United States, by far the richest country in the whole world, is only now coming around to propose, if you please, a very moderate and limited form of system which we have had ever since 1930 in our war veterans allowance legislation in this country. When I say we have had it ever since 1930 I mean we have had it by reason of the support that veterans' reforms have always received from all sides of the house.

I am not going to close my little talk today without making some practical suggestions. I believe we should have a select veterans' committee of this house meeting more often.

I certainly hope there is a veterans' committee next year if we get a chance to set it up. In any event, there are certain things we were not able to bring to finality at the last session of the veterans' committee which I personally would like to see reconsidered. One thing in particular I would like to see reconsidered is the question of the eligibility for war veterans allowance of world war I men who served only in what is called the British theatre, especially as the people in world war II are eligible for that allowance.

It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that when we had our last veterans' committee at the last session of parliament, the veterans' organizations of Canada were sharply divided on this particular question. While the Canadian Legion was strongly in favour of making eligible those who had served only in England in the first world war, there were other very powerful and very widespread veterans' organizations which took a very strong position against that suggestion. I say time is marching on. In my opinion this is one subject at which we should take a second look and of which we should certainly take a more liberal view.

There is one other thing I should like to mention. I do not think any other hon. member has mentioned it so far. If he has, it must have been done when I was not able to be here. I think it was a very fine thing that the minister and the government have agreed to the proposals of the Canadian Legion and have decided to build here, on one of the finest sites in the capital of Canada, a fitting cenotaph or national memorial to the fallen of all wars.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the beautiful memorial to the fallen of world war I which stands in Confederation square is a fine and inspiring work of art, but for various reasons it could never be transformed into a fitting memorial for the fallen of all wars. Someone pointed out to me the other day that even in its cultural aspects it is dated. I think of the gunners and their artillery horses. That was certainly all right for world war I, but I do not think the people of world war II would even know how to put the harness on the horses, let alone what to do with the spurs and so on. Therefore I think it is a very fine thing that the government has decided to yield to the suggestion of the Canadian Legion to build on one of the finest sites in the whole Dominion of Canada a fitting permanent cenotaph at which suitable ceremonies can be held from year to year.

Sometimes I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be almost worth the price if this nation would pay the fare of people across the ocean to the great battlefield of Vimy Ridge to see what I think must be the most inspiring war memorial in the whole world today. I know that I have never looked at anything which moved me as much as did the sight of that beautiful work of art which stands on the crest of the hill dedicated forever to Canada by the grateful French nation. I think if we assign our best artists and our best sculptors to design something equally fitting for the site in Ottawa we shall have done something of which this house will always be proud and of which no Canadian need be ashamed.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, without taking up the time of the committee any further, may I say there should be no disposition whatever for us in any part of this house to rest on our laurels in regard to veterans' legislation. What we have done is good. There are some spots in which it could be better, but we have given a fair break to the people who served this country in her hour of need.

Mr. White (Hastings-Frontenac): There are just one or two matters on which I wish to comment very briefly. The first is the remarks of the minister at page 5748 of Hansard. He advised us of the review made by his department of the pensioners who were receiving 40 per cent and 45 per cent disability pensions. I should like to ask the minister whether that is the start of a review of the cases of all pensioners who receive less than 40 per cent, in the hope and expectation that physical changes that have taken place over the years will show that they are entitled to a larger pension.

The minister should be commended on what he has done in that respect, and I sincerely hope that he and the officials of his department will review the cases of all other pensioners who receive less than 40 per cent. I would also like to have the minister explain to the committee the yardstick or whatever it is that is used in establishing the percentage of disability pension of the husband to which the wife is entitled on his death. I know it is 50 per cent, but I would like the minister to explain to the committee why and how they arrived at 50 per cent, and also why the widow of a pensioner who receives a 10 per cent to 45 per cent disability pension is not entitled to at least some pension on the death of her husband.

The minister may reply that if the veteran receives a 30 per cent pension his wife would be entitled to war veterans allowance on his death and that is quite true; but as the minister knows, when the widow reaches 70 and receives the old age security pension her war veterans allowance is reduced accordingly. On the other hand if she were in receipt of a pension on account of her husband's disability she would be able to retain that and also receive the old age security pension. I for one would be interested in having the minister tell us when he speaks how and why it has been set at 50 per cent and why his department feels that the widow of a veteran who receives less than a 50 per cent pension is not entitled to a pension on the death of her husband.

The second point which interests me is a point the minister must be tired of hearing, and that is the old question of the veteran who served only in England in world war I. On Friday last the hon. member for New Westminster read into the record an interesting letter from Mr. Garneau, chairman of the war veterans allowance board. In that letter Mr. Garneau made a most interesting statement in which he said:

> . . . in accordance with the act, veterans of world war II who had actually left the shores of Canada before the 8th day of May, 1945, and were on their way to an actual theatre of war, may be deemed to have been on service in a theatre of actual war outside the western hemisphere.

Nobody is going to quarrel with that, Mr. Chairman, but it does seem rather far-fetched that a veteran of world war II could leave the western hemisphere, and even before reaching England, when the war was over for the purpose of the War Veterans Allowance Act he could be classed as having served in an actual theatre of war. In view of the interpretation put on the matter by the chairman of the war veterans allowance board it seems difficult to understand why the minister cannot amend the act to classify England as a theatre of war as far as world war I is concerned in relation to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The third point with which I wish to deal was mentioned previously this afternoon by the hon. member for Kootenay West, and it is with regard to the acreage under the Veterans' Land Act. The minister and his officials must know that the price of building lots has increased considerably. Not only that, but due to the change that has taken place in the various provinces—in my own province of Ontario, for example—the tax rate has become very high and if the veteran has to have the number of acres required by the present regulations he must be penalized by paying a high tax rate each year.

For example, in the small village in which I live the average lot is one quarter of an acre in size; I think that is the standard size. A building lot would cost between $200 and $800 according to its location. The municipal tax rate this year is 80 mills. The minister can readily see that if it is necessary for the veteran to have the required number of acres he has to acquire land at a high price and he will be penalized each year by having to pay extremely high taxes.

The only other matter I wish to mention is with regard to the pension board. I still feel there are too many cases in which the officials are not giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt, and in far too many cases they continue to hide behind the old statement that the disability was pre-enlistment and not aggravated by war service and therefore the veteran is not pensionable. To give you an example, I have in my hand a letter written to a veteran by one of the medical officers at Sunnybrook hospital. In reporting to this veteran the doctor made the following comment:

> The information regarding your findings has been forwarded to the Canadian pensions commission and I understand your claim is still under study. I would think it most likely that they will find it a pensionable disability in view of our recommendations.

This report was written by a doctor who had been in charge of this veteran for several months; but despite his report, when the matter came before the officials of the pension commission they said this was the old case of the disability being pre-enlistment and not aggravated by military service, and therefore the veteran was not pensionable. In view of that I would say to the minister that I think there must be something wrong in this particular case. An outstanding medical man wrote to the veteran setting out his views on the case, and surely he must know more about it than anyone on the pension commission. Despite this fact the old alibi concerning it being a pre-enlistment disability cropped up.

I agree wth the remarks made by the hon. member for Royal on Friday and the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra this afternoon. Before I sit down I would like to emphasize again to the minister that I think he must be sufficiently satisfied, in view of the many remarks made this afternoon concerning the benefit to be derived from a veterans' committee, that he will find it possible to recommend to the government the setting up of a permanent committee on veterans affairs.

(Translation):

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I understand the enthusiasm shown by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) who attempted to make out that the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) is a superman by reason of the fact that he now heads two departments in the cabinet. However, I disagree with him, because the Department of Veterans Affairs having become one of the most important in the federal administration, I believe that the minister should be relieved of his additional duties so that he may devote all his time to the department to which he had been named previously.

Mr. Chairman, under present conditions, I do not believe it is good for the country to ask any human being to head two departments in the cabinet. I hope that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) will soon take steps to fill the vacancy at the Post Office Department so as to enable the present Minister of Veterans Affairs to devote all his time to those who loyally fought for peace and the defence of our territory.

I wish at this time to make a few remarks about matters which no doubt have already been mentioned but to which I want to refer again.

On behalf of veterans, I would like to urge that the ceiling on casual earnings be raised to $2,000 from the present maximum of $1,400 set for married veterans. This would seem to me only fair and reasonable, in view of the higher cost of living, that these married people be allowed an income of $2,000 a year. In the case of unmarried veterans, I believe also that it would be but fair and reasonable that the ceiling be raised from $840 to at least $1,400.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a correction. When I referred just now to the basic earning of married people, I should have said $1,200 and not $1,400. In fact, that was the recommendation made by the Canadian Legion to the department. I support this recommendation most wholeheartedly, and I hope that it will be taken into very serious consideration by the department concerned.

I would also like to say a word about the status of veterans who fought in the first world war, as compared to that of veterans of the second great war. Everybody knows that the war veterans allowance was granted to those first world war veterans who had served in what has been called a theatre of war. If we look at history, however, we will find that, at the end of the first world war, large numbers of soldiers were sent overseas to Europe. A certain number of them were sent to the theatre of war, which happened to be France at that time, others being sent to England, in order, no doubt, that their services could be used there. At that time England was not considered to be a theatre of war. Now those who came back from what was then considered to be a theatre of war, that is to say France, were fortunate enough to receive an allowance from the department.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly ask the government, at this time, to do away with what I would call this unfair discrimination between veterans of both world wars, the ones of the first war being refused the allowance granted those who served as I said a while ago, in a theatre of war.

It should not be forgotten that those who were at that time sent to England rather than to France did not choose their destination. They went because their superior officers ordered them to go. To my knowledge, no one refused to be sent either to France or to England.

I also believe, Mr. Chairman, and I think all hon. members in this house share this opinion, that veterans of the first world war had no less courage than the veterans of the last war, and that they served their country with the same loyalty as those who fought from 1939 to 1945 and also in the Korean war. Those veterans of the first world war, who for the most part are now 65 years old or more, find themselves in a painful situation, to say the least, particularly those who receive no allowance whatever.

We all know that most employers will not take on people who have reached 60, and more particularly those who are over 60, although a man of 60 is, quite often, still able to work and can sometimes do a day's work better than people much younger.

I believe that all those who fought gallantly and risked their lives in the first world war should get a more tangible mark of gratitude from the government.

It is a well known fact that from 60 to 70 is the most awkward age to get a job, since, as a rule, employers will not take on people in that age group, not for lack of sympathy but because insurance companies will not take responsibility for what might happen to those who are over 60, even when they are in the best of health and can render excellent services.

Therefore, I would ask the department, and I am speaking now on behalf of many war veterans who live in the constituency which it is my privilege to represent, that such allowance be paid in order to assist them. It is true that in the province of Quebec, at the age of 65, when one is an indigent, one may draw an allowance which enables—

Mr. Boisvert: That is so in all provinces.

Mr. Dufresne: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Boisvert: That is so in all provinces, and not only in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Dufresne: Now, I am not discussing what is done in the other provinces. I would be grateful to my hon. friend if he would let me have my say. I say that, in the city of Quebec—I am referring to a particular case in which I am interested—and I am willing to let others tell what goes on in their own ridings—

Mr. Boisvert: But, when one undertakes to state facts, they must be actual facts.

Mr. Dufresne: No, my hon. friend wants to give lessons in procedure in this house. Indeed, yesterday, or rather the day before yesterday, we saw him trying to pose as chairman and Speaker. Yet he knows that he lacks the qualifications, as he was told by the Prime Minister, in his speech, not to aim at this post. He therefore should leave others alone when they are speaking.

(Text):

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for Quebec West is entirely out of order. He has made the allegation that in the province of Quebec people 65 years of age are getting pensions. I raise the question that that legislation applies not only to the province of Quebec but to the country as a whole. All people of 65 years and over are getting pensions. That is the only thing I mention to the hon. member, but he does not answer my interjection, and he is trying to bring in a question outside the argument that he started to develop. I think the hon. member should be brought to order and resume the speech that he is making.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I was mentioning—

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Chairman, I have something else.

Mr. Dufresne: Why don't you sit down for a moment? Your speech is over. I have listened to your point of order. Take your seat. Mr. Chairman, I was mentioning what was going on in my own province. That is my privilege, to say what is going on in my province, and I leave it to the other hon. members in this house to say what is going on in their provinces; that is their privilege as well as mine.

[Mr. Dufresne.]

I do not see any point of order in what was brought up by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska. Whenever someone from this province gets up he always has something to say. He is trying to play the game of Speaker. As you should know, the Prime Minister himself told him two days ago that he had no competence to be a speaker of this House of Commons, that there was only one man who had.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, before—

The Chairman: Order. May I remind both hon. members that we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. If I understood the point of order correctly, the hon. gentleman was discussing old age pensions rather than—

Mr. Dufresne: No.

The Chairman: —pensions under the Department of Veterans Affairs. We must limit our discussion to this department.

Mr. Dufresne: I think I should now speak on the point of order raised by my hon. friend from Nicolet-Yamaska. I was not speaking about old age pensions; I was just mentioning the fact that veterans from 60 to 70 years of age should have a better deal from this government. I mentioned that fact as applied to my province. I did not mention the other provinces, though perhaps I should have mentioned them. I am talking about the province in which I am interested at the moment, and those I represent. Those I represent are in the province of Quebec, and I say that if they are needy persons they are privileged, when they are 65 years old, to draw pensions from the provincial government. That is all I was talking about. I was not speaking about anything else.

An hon. Member: We pay half.

Mr. Dufresne: The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska always tries to make others believe that he is a master of procedure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, he did not mention procedure.

Mr. Boisvert: You will know from me—

Mr. Dufresne: I invite the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska to come into Quebec West at any time he wishes to—

The Chairman: Order. May I remind hon. members that the hon. gentleman who has the floor may not be interrupted without his consent, and may I also remind the hon. member who has the floor that we are discussing resolution 498, Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Dufresne: That is exactly what I was doing when I was interrupted by some silly arguments brought up by my hon. friend from Nicolet-Yamaska. I think I should just answer a certain invitation that was sent to me by the hon. member. I invite him to come to Quebec West, and I hope he will be polite enough to invite me to his own riding.

Mr. Boisvert: You can come at any time; tomorrow, if you like.

Mr. Dufresne: Not tomorrow, because I have a duty to perform tomorrow, and that duty is in the House of Commons. When the time comes, it might come too soon for the hon. member but I shall be delighted to accept his invitation.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I was just saying that from 60 to 70 is the most difficult age to get employment, perhaps more particularly so for those who served in the armed forces—not, as I said, because of a lack of sympathy on the part of the employers, but because the insurance companies refuse to take risks for persons of 60 and over.

Therefore, I repeat the request I made earlier this afternoon to the hon. minister to the effect that allowances be provided for all those who fought valiantly and courageously during world war I.

When one of those veterans passes away, I would suggest that the wife should receive the same pension as was paid to the husband even if the widow is old enough to qualify for old age pension. I feel that this would be a sign of gratitude on the part of the government.

I suggest also that the government should take care without delay of all those who, after serving their country loyally, either here in Canada or overseas, for several years, choose to return to civilian life. They did their bit, and they deserve a suitable and steady job.

Again I would like to draw the attention of the minister to a distressing situation that is taking place in the riding which I have the honour of representing. As a matter of fact, a number of young men who served in the armed forces, not particularly during the last war, for either three or five years, or since the end of the last war, sometimes find themselves in very difficult situations after they have left the services because they are often unemployed for rather long periods of time, during which their families suffer, and are often faced with great poverty.

So I insist that the government should look after those people even before their discharge. When a man's request for discharge has been granted, and it is definite that he will return to civilian life, the department should take the necessary steps in order to give him a chance to earn a decent living.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I submit another suggestion? I highly appreciate the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs can grant, and at a very reasonable price, to war veterans who apply for it, a lot where they can build a home.

As I say, those lots are sold at a very reasonable price and are reserved for war veterans.

I wonder however if it would not be possible to extend that privilege to the widows of the veterans who gave their lives on the battlefield or who died on active service.

I would like to bring to the attention of the minister a special case which has been referred to me. This man served in both world wars, that of 1914-18 and that of 1939-45. He enlisted as a private but his gallantry, his ability and his loyalty soon gained him promotions up to the rank of colonel, which he still had when he came back from Europe in 1945, I believe. Unfortunately he died leaving a wife and children who would have liked to enjoy that same privilege of which the wife would have benefited had Providence spared him for them.

I wonder whether the department could seriously examine requests by widows of veterans in order to enable them to obtain a piece of land at a lower price and build themselves a house. Supposing a lot had been purchased last week, and that the veteran died this week, I do not believe that the department would deprive the widow of the land purchased previously.

I therefore respectfully request that this suggestion be taken into serious consideration.

I would like for a few moments to speak of a matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) and the hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. White) and about which I said a few words myself. I mean the five-day 40 hour week for the employees of hospitals coming under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Yesterday, as shown on page 5815 of Hansard, I put the following question to the minister:

I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs following the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister said consideration was given to the 40 hour week in some localities other than where it exists now. Does he mean to suggest that consideration was given by the cabinet or by the officials of his department?

Here is the minister's answer:

I explain, Mr. Speaker, that the process which is followed is that a survey is made by the civil service commission. They in turn report to treasury board on the result of their survey, and treasury board informs the cabinet of the situation. That is what is being done at the present time.

I must say though, Mr. Chairman, that a request was sent last October by the Department of Veterans Affairs hospital employees association. Judging by the protests we have been receiving, it would seem that these people have had no answer to their request. The minister says they have. I will accept that statement. I will say, however, that they did not receive the answer they were expecting.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member will no doubt allow me to interrupt since I am sure that he would like the facts he is stating to be true facts. Yesterday, or the day before, when I referred to the representations made last October, I noted that following these representations the forty hour week was extended to two hospitals, one at Calgary and the other at Halifax.

That means that we have studied their representations, since we have adopted that course in the case of two hospitals. In fact, on rereading Hansard for July 9, I noted that I had in effect stated that the government had not yet considered the representations made by that association. I should have explained that I was referring to the last representations received a few days ago by some hon. members. Those representations had not yet been taken under consideration.

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Chairman, I accept the minister's explanation and I take note of it. I was indeed referring to the telegram that most members in this house received from that association representing the employees of the hospitals under the Department of Veterans Affairs. I myself received one which reads as follows:

(Text):

Strongly protest the statement that appears to have been made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs to the effect that cabinet has not considered our representation for a five-day 40 hours a week for hospital employees made last October.

(Translation):

Having received that telegram today, I wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and of the house.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I am obliged to advise him that his time has expired. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Dufresne: If you will allow me, I think we have forgotten to take note of the time that was taken by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska. I think I still have at least six minutes left.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, may I say at this point that, while I am not too sure of my ground, I believe the hon. member for Middlesex East is probably the only other member at the moment who is expecting to take part in this debate.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Harris: Very good. I was going to suggest in that event that we continue after six o'clock, but if that is not the case I will not do so.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act.

An act to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act.

An act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

An act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1956, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

An act respecting Niagara Lower Arch Bridge Company Limited.

An act to authorize contributions by Canada in respect of unemployment assistance costs in the provinces.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Dufresne: Mr. Speaker, with the kind permission of the leader of the house and the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I understand the humour of the hon. member for Quebec West. It was not I who called it six o'clock; it was members of his own party who, in reply to my request, felt that they could not go on later this evening to complete both his remarks and other remarks on this particular item. Tomorrow we shall continue with veterans affairs and then take northern affairs.

It being eight minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

GRAIN—PRAIRIE PROVINCE BOX CAR DELIVERIES

Question No. 538—Mr. Castleden:

1. What is the total number of box car deliveries of grain from each of the three prairie provinces from delivery points on: (a) the Canadian National Railways; (b) the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the five-month period January 1, 1955 to June 1, 1955?

2. What were the total box car deliveries for each province on each of the railways for the same period from January 1, 1956 to June 1, 1956?

Answer by: Mr. Langlois, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

1 and 2.

Between January 4 and May 30, 1956, C.P.R. loaded 60,561 cars.

Between January 4 and May 30, 1955, C.P.R. loaded 49,592 cars.

Between January 4 and May 30, 1956, C.N.R. loaded 54,488 cars.

Between January 4 and May 30, 1955, C.N.R. loaded 32,812 cars.

The figures are not compiled by provinces as railway subdivisions overlap provincial boundaries.

TRANSPORT—SESSIONAL PAPER NO. 242

Question No. 541—Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace):

What was the date of each trip as reported by the Department of Transport on sessional paper No. 242 of Tuesday, June 26, 1956?

Answer by: Mr. Langlois, Parliamentary Assistant, for the Minister of Transport:

(a)
i May 23, 1956
ii May 17, 1956
iii April 24, 1956
iv May 16, 1956
v April 28, 1956
vi April 30, 1956
vii April 28, 1956
viii April 30, 1956
ix May 9, 1956
x May 14, 1956

(b)
i May 26, 1956
ii May 20, 1956
iii April 24, 1956
iv May 16, 1956
v April 29, 1956
vi May 1, 1956
vii April 28, 1956
viii April 30, 1956
ix May 9, 1956
x May 14, 1956.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 12, 1956

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY RESPECTING TAX ON CERTAIN ADVERTISING REVENUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he is now prepared to tell the house definitely whether it is his intention to proceed with or to abandon the proposed 20 per cent tax on advertising matter of certain magazines?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I said the last time I mentioned this I would make any announcement that should be made when the resolution was called.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister if the resolution will be called this session?

Mr. Harris: Certainly.

BANK OF CANADA—REQUEST REVIEW OF CREDIT RESTRICTIONS ON BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if, in view of the depressing effect on Canadian business of the present credit restrictions placed by the Bank of Canada on Canadian commercial banks, he will review the serious situation with the governor of the Bank of Canada in an effort to restore more normal credit conditions in this country.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is one of several questions of this kind that have been addressed to me lately, and I think I have always answered that I expect to make a statement on them when my estimates are reached.

PIPE LINES

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO ONTARIO PARTICIPATION IN FINANCING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question arises out of a letter from Hon. Dana Porter to the minister dated May 14 and tabled. Will the province of Ontario continue to participate in the financing of the northern Ontario section of the pipe line?

My second question is this. Did not the Hon. Mr. Porter in that same letter stipulate that construction of the western section must commence not later than July 1 this year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the letter from Hon. Dana Porter stated that if the construction of the western side was started on or before July 1 the province would participate in the northern Ontario section. Construction was started well before July 1 and I have every reason to believe it is the intention of the government of Ontario to participate in financing the northern Ontario section.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES—INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Michener (St. Paul's): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the proposed agreements which were submitted to the house at the time of the northern Ontario pipe-line bill were completed in fact and if they were not or if other agreements have been completed since will the minister make copies available to the house?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, all agreements with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines were completed prior to the 7th of June and all were tabled in the house. There have been no new agreements or anything purporting to be new agreements.

INDUSTRY

MOTOR VEHICLES AND PARTS—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT OF UNITED STATES IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received communications from the united automobile workers' union contending that the increasing number of United States-made motor vehicles and parts being imported into Canada is becoming a threat to the livelihood of workers in Canada's automotive and parts industries? If so, what action does the government intend to take to meet the situation?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. I have received a number of postcards from individual members of the united automobile workers' union in connection with the importation into Canada of motor vehicles and parts from the United States. The matter is being looked into.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON—REQUEST FOR FIVE-DAY 40 HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. While I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's estimates are before the house at the present time, nevertheless this question refers to a question asked and answer made on last Monday, July 9, 1956. This is my question. Does the minister recall receiving any representations from the employees of Westminster veterans hospital, London, last October?

Hon. Hugues Lapointe (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not specifically recall receiving representations from the Westminster hospital employees. I did receive representations from the employees of all D.V.A. hospitals at that time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY RUSSIA ON STRENGTHS OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. A United Press release today from the United Nations states that "Andrei A. Gromyko told the 12-nation commission that the Kremlin was ready to accept the western proposed manpower levels of 2½ million men for the United States, Russia and China, 750,000 for Britain and France and not more than 200,000 for other countries." Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether Canada was a party to this proposal to Russia or if there is any ground for such a statement on Mr. Gromyko's part?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a general statement made which was published and which I think was tabled in the house. It was transmitted to us with a letter from Mr. Bulganin. The matter is being considered and is being dealt with, but I do not remember that there was any specific number of men with respect to the armed forces for Canada referred to in that communication.

ISRAEL—REASON FOR WITHHOLDING EXPORT PERMIT FOR SABRE AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in connection with the matter of an export permit for aircraft to Israel. Has the minister or the government received any communications from the governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France since he gave evidence before the external affairs committee on April 17, as recorded at page 40, repudiating or in any way altering the statements they had made or indicating that there would be no opposition on their part to the shipment by Canada of such aircraft? Has there been any change since, or have there been any further communications since the minister gave evidence as I stated a moment ago?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not recall any communications from the countries in question on this subject since the date mentioned by my hon. friend, but I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since April 17?

Mr. Pearson: I do not recall any such communications.

ATOMIC ENERGY

COMPARATIVE COSTS OF PRODUCTION OF ELECTRIC POWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister had an opportunity to consider the statement made by the British delegation to the fifth world power conference at Vienna to the effect that developments which have now taken place assure the cost of production of atomic-generated electricity being below the cost of that produced by other fuels?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that it is the consensus of opinion, including the opinion of our own scientists, that for large-scale power plants electricity can be produced from atomic energy at a lower price than power produced by coal, but I think no one claims atomic power can be produced at a cost lower than an economic hydro development.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

498. Departmental administration, $2,215,472.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest yesterday to the many members who took part in the discussion of the estimates of this department. There is no doubt that all members are interested in the problems of the veterans. It is not my intention to review all that was said yesterday, but there are a few comments that I wish to bring to the minister's attention, and I hope that they will be useful and that good will come out of them.

There is in my constituency one of the finest, if not the finest, veterans' hospitals in Canada. I have watched its growth from the very day when the property was acquired and the original buildings were built at the close of the first world war up until this day. I am acquainted with many of the doctors and members of the staff of the hospital, and I want to pay a word of tribute and praise to the work of the doctors, the nurses and the staff at the hospital. It is understandable that, where there are such a large number of patients in a hospital covering such a wide area, there naturally will be some complaints and perhaps some injustices, but in most cases these complaints are taken care of in a very efficient way, and I think most of the people are well satisfied with the services they are given.

While I am mentioning Westminster hospital I might say that in 1953 I also referred to the old buildings that were erected there at the close of the first world war, and the minister at that time indicated that some new buildings were proposed. Some additions have been made, and I hope the minister will indicate to the house that the rest of the old buildings will very shortly be removed and new buildings erected in their place. I should be glad if he would later indicate such to the house. I should just say, too, that I am glad that the minister and his department have taken into consideration those pensions between 40 per cent and 45 per cent. I think that action will meet with general approval. I think it is advisable to establish a plan or system of periodic reviews of all pensions and pension cases because the conditions of health change from time to time, as we all know. But there are many pensioners who hesitate to ask for a review of their particular case and there are others who do not hesitate. Sometimes there are many worthy cases that do not get the attention to which they are probably entitled.

I speak for those pensioners who sometimes are denied a pension because their particular illness or complaint is alleged to have been attributable to causes arising before they enlisted or to post-discharge causes. I have in mind one or two of those particular cases in which it is alleged that the disability is so attributable. Yet these men served in the armed forces for several years. They were passed as being A-1, were accepted and were able to discharge their duties overseas. Yet, when they come back it is said that their disability arises because there was some illness prior to their enlistment.

There is no doubt—and this is well known to the department and to everyone here—that the earning capacity of many veterans has been reduced because of war service in one way or another. Some of them were not able to complete their education. Through disabilities some could not carry on their intended life work. The increase in the rate of pension that was granted a short time ago is still inadequate, in my opinion, in view of the inflation and the present cost of living. Also, the ceilings of earnings are too low considering living costs and the pension level. I would just say that the grant that was given a short time ago certainly could not be considered to be extravagant. I do not think it would even be considered to be liberal.

Back in 1951 and prior to that time I mentioned in this house the suggestion that the pensions—not only those for war service but also old age pensions—should be hooked to the cost of living index. I am still of that opinion. If that were done, if you once establish what is a fair and right pension level, then as the cost of living goes up the pension would go up; and if sometime in the future the cost of living goes down, the pension could also go down. In that way the income from the pension would bear some relation to its purchasing power and there would not always be these questions arising: it being said that the pension is not high enough and that the cost of living has gone up, and then, after two or three years have elapsed, an amendment being introduced with a view to increasing the pension. This suggestion would eliminate all this problem. Also I had in my constituency four V.L.A. small holding areas, one in London township and two or three in Westminster. I am very well acquainted with the officials there, and at this point I should say that I believe they are doing a very fine job. There are very few complaints. While I am doing that, I should also pay tribute to the young veterans who have taken up these holdings. They have taken great pride in their homes, improved their properties and they are not only taking an interest but taking part in the community in which they live, in the public life of the community through municipal affairs and church affairs. I might say that it was my privilege to have as a guest in Middlesex East the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, who addressed the veterans there some time ago. I believe that he also was greatly impressed with the community spirit and the work that they are doing.

Now, I come to the question I asked on Monday regarding the five-day 40-hour week for Westminster hospital employees and the employees of veterans hospitals in other parts of the country, who are asking that they be given the same hours of work as the employees of other departmental hospitals. I listened to the minister's explanation, and then I read the translation of his answer to the hon. member for Quebec West. While the minister has not denied to these employees the five-day 40-hour week, I think that regardless of what employment conditions may be in other industries or in other hospitals in any particular city, all the employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs should be treated similarly, whether they be in London, Halifax, Calgary or any other place. I believe it has been amply demonstrated that the employees of these hospitals can give efficient and continuous service, day and night, on the five-day 40-hour week. Consequently I am asking the minister to seriously consider the representations that have been made to him here and by the employees association last October. I ask him not to let this session go by without granting equality to all employees of the veterans hospitals across Canada.

Mr. Harkness: I regret, Mr. Chairman, that the government has not seen fit at this session to introduce any legislation to improve the position of the recipients of war veterans allowance. The hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra went into this matter in considerable detail, so I am not going to take the time of the house to give reasons why action along that line should be taken. However, I would say I have never been able to understand why the government was not willing at least to raise the amount of the permissive income. For many years past I have urged, as have others, that the limit on the permissive income should be increased to at least the amount of the income tax exemptions. I would urge the government to bring in legislation at the next session to put that into effect, as well as to increase the actual amounts paid to recipients of war veterans allowances.

There is another matter on which perhaps I can get some information from the minister when we come to the details, but I should like to mention it at this time. I refer to the amounts paid by veterans who are not receiving disability pensions for medical attention and hospitalization. A resolution was passed by Calgary branch No. 1, my own branch of the Canadian Legion, in regard to this matter which reads as follows:

> Free medical treatment for all veterans over 55 years of age with meritorious service with annual incomes in the case of single men of less than $1,800 and in the case of married men of less than $3,500.

The amount charged veterans who are not entitled to hospitalization has been increased I believe twice in the last few years, and is now in the neighbourhood of $14 per day. A married man with an income of less than $3,500 or a single man with an income of less than $1,800 finds it most difficult to pay that amount, especially when they are over 55 years of age. I should mention that they would not have to pay the full $14 per day as the amount is reduced according to income received. I submit that veterans in those income tax brackets should be given the benefits of hospitalization without payment. I should like the minister to say something about this matter of hospitalization and take under advisement the question of liberalizing the hospitalization policy in order to protect older veterans on comparatively small incomes.

I should like next to say something about the work of the imperial war graves commission. I had the opportunity last summer of seeing Canadian war cemeteries in northwestern Europe and Italy where Canadians who fought in both world wars are buried. I think I can say that without doubt they constitute the finest group of cemeteries to be found anywhere in the world. The care which they are given and the architecture which has been used to fit them into their backgrounds are of an extremely high order. I wish that every person who has a relative buried in one of those cemeteries had the opportunity to go to see it. I am glad that a grant is given to the imperial war graves commission under this department and I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to commend them upon the work they have done in maintaining the graves of our men who are buried overseas.

There is one other matter I should like to take up at this time, the question of compensation to members of the non-permanent militia, and to some extent the members of the permanent forces, when accidents occur which disable them or which result in death.

I bring this up particularly because of a case which occurred in Calgary last year. In outlining this case and referring to some of the difficulties that exist with regard to the legislation I want to make it quite clear that I am in no way reflecting upon the members of the pension commission. The chairman of the pension commission has done an outstanding job and I think he and the other members have carried on their activities with a very high sense of duty. The difficulty concerning cases of this sort, I think, primarily lies in the way the legislation reads and I think an amendment to the legislation in this regard is long overdue. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre mentioned the matter briefly yesterday and referred to the section of the act which deals with pensions to people who come under this classification. He indicated there had been considerable discussion of the matter when the estimates of this department were before the estimates committee last year but that no action had been taken concerning it. I would hope that some definite action would be taken in the near future.

The particular case I wish to give as an illustration of what happens concerns a squadron sergeant major in the South Alberta Light Horse. This man had a good record; he served overseas for five years and was awarded the military medal and he served six years in the militia. The unit is quite widely spread with one detachment at Strathmore some 40 miles from Calgary. They were in Calgary having an Armistice day celebration parade and so forth. The commanding officer of the unit got permission from western command headquarters in Edmonton to send a detachment down to take part in this anniversary day service and parade. Apparently the military transport in the form of a bus or busses had not arrived when the men gathered at the armoury in Calgary. They received a message to the effect that the bus had broken down or had been delayed in some way. The 2/IC of the regiment who was present told the men to take their own private cars. There happened to be a sufficient number of the men who had private cars to provide transportation for all of them, the presumption being that these men would eventually be reimbursed for their gasoline and expenses. In any event they proceeded to Strathmore and on the way back this particular sergeant major and another man were killed in the automobile which was driven by the other man. There was apparently no question of guilt or negligence so far as the driver was concerned and the widow of the sergeant major was not able to take action against the driver or his estate as the result of the death of her husband.

She applied for the pension and her application was turned down at the first hearing. The decision of the commission was as follows:

> Death incurred during military service in peacetime, but not pensionable under section 13 (2) as on the evidence presently available there is nothing to indicate death arose out of or was directly connected with such service.

A second hearing was held in this case and again her application was denied. I do not know whether it will be appealed but I presume it will be. The decision arises because section 13 (2) as it reads and has been interpreted makes it obligatory on the part of the person requesting the pension to prove in a case of this sort that the man was riding in a military vehicle, as I understand it, or a vehicle which had definitely been taken on strength for the time being and for which the man was being paid a mileage allowance.

In this particular case the man was on military duty and it happened through circumstances beyond his control that the military transportation did not turn up. The men were authorized by the senior officer there to use their private cars and it was in those circumstances that this man was killed. His widow's pension was denied but she would have received it if he had been killed in the military bus. It seems to me the interpretation of the act is much too narrow. The act is drawn in such a way as to cause an injustice of this sort.

I would ask the minister and the pensions commission to take this particular case under consideration again. It seems to me it might be possible by ministerial direction or by order in council that something could be done without its being necessary to change the act. I realize there probably is not time during this session to change the act but I think it would be possible by the means I have indicated to give direction to the commission to interpret this particular clause more liberally than is the case now; in other words, to interpret it in the spirit it was conceived to have when it was passed by this House of Commons. I am certain there was never any intention on the part of parliament that the widow of a man who was killed on military duty should be denied a pension because of an accident of the type I have mentioned where a military vehicle was not supplied although it was supposed to have been supplied and a private vehicle was authorized instead.

The same sort of thing applies to some extent to permanent force personnel. I was interested in a case which had an unfavourable first and second hearing and I believe was eventually settled satisfactorily on appeal. This case involved a man who was killed overseas. Only with great difficulty was it established that he was on military duty and his widow was able to get a pension. This occurred some two or three years ago. Eventually she was able to establish the fact and was granted a pension. The circumstances were much the same as in the previous case I mentioned except that in this instance a military jeep was used. There was some difficulty in establishing that the trip it was on had been properly authorized and that the man was properly on duty, as I recall the circumstances. In any event, however, it was finally settled satisfactorily.

It seems to me that in the cases I have mentioned a little more attention should be paid to the spirit of the legislation. If this were done I believe the first case could be settled in a way that would be satisfactory to the widow and other dependents of this soldier. I certainly hope the minister will give some personal attention to this matter and will see what can be done without its being necessary to change the legislation; as I indicated before, it is perhaps too late in the session for that to be done.

Mr. Jones: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the minister on the keen interest he has shown in the affairs of veterans especially during the last two or three years. I wish to thank him personally for the courtesy he has always shown me when I have brought personal cases to his attention—and this applies also to his staff in general.

I suppose I should compliment the staff because they carry out the letter of the law, but at the same time I also complain that the letter of the law is predominant in the administration of the veterans legislation and I think the spirit of the law and not the legal interpretation should prevail. It is on that subject that I wish to say a few words at this time.

In order to overcome the difficulty I have mentioned it seems to me a little more leeway should be given to the local administrators, those people who know the local problems and the persons involved. They are far more conversant with the individual cases and are better equipped to find solutions to the various problems than is someone in Ottawa or possibly in Vancouver or Calgary. I think that if a little more power were given to them to interpret the law according to the spirit of the act, many of the problems about which we are now worrying would be solved.

In many instances cases which are recommended to be dealt with in a certain way by local officials who know the circumstances have been turned down by senior administrators who have given a narrow interpretation to the wording of the act. The justice of the case did not enter into it, the morality of the case did not enter into it, the spirit of the case did not enter into it; there was simply a pure, logical reasoning as to the legality of the act.

I was a member of the veterans committee when it sat and I know the attention that was given to any question that came up. I know the feeling of all hon. members that the veteran should be given the benefit of any doubt, yet in practice this is not always done. I could outline the details quite quickly, but I shall not do so at this time. This is my main reason for advocating the setting up of a permanent veterans committee. I think it would be a far more important committee than many of those that now go on year after year, sometimes going through a session without meeting. Such a committee would carry out most important functions of great value to the minister and to the veterans.

Without such a committee we are in danger of gradually building up a legal bureaucracy, a group without a heart, a legal entity ready to carry out only, the letter of the law. If we had a veterans committee dealing with cases, that atmosphere would be changed when a veteran had to appear before a board or other group. I am sure that neither parliament nor the people of Canada wish this condition to continue.

It is true that we have made progress equal to that made in any other country, but there are many problems still unsolved affecting the veteran. I would mention those veterans who served in England during the first world war. Their number is getting smaller each year but they are still denied the right of pension. The hon. member for Kootenay West referred yesterday to two men who had joined up and who served as clerks, one in England and one in France. The one man is receiving a pension while the other is denied a pension. Such discrepancies should be removed and all veterans treated on a fair basis.

I still think that we should make the permissive income under the War Veterans Allowance Act more in keeping with the cost of living today, and the widows of veterans who have resided in Canada for some years should be recognized as being pensionable. I shall not go into the details of these cases, as the minister knows them better than I do.

Another problem which could be dealt with by a committee sitting year after year is one such as has cropped up recently in British Columbia, and this may be true also of other parts of Canada. British Columbia has recently made a reassessment of properties for school tax purposes. I have here a resolution which I should like to place on the record so the minister may know what I am talking about. It reads:

Whereas the reassessment of property in British Columbia which has recently taken place, grave concern is felt for veterans occupying small holdings under the Veterans Land Act, having their holdings of one acre, reclassified from agricultural into residential districts resulting in an increased assessment of at least double the original amount and a good chance of increased taxes due to present tendency of real estate speculation, which surround the V.L.A. project. This particularly applies to about 60 veterans located in the Bank-Head district near Kelowna, B.C. These veterans were rehabilitated on these acre lots with a view of their being able to supplement their earnings, now the reassessment will defeat the government's original intention and following the pattern of the first world war veteran, will force the veteran to vacate his holding as was the case of very many of our older veterans, who had taken up land under the Soldier Settlement Land Act and who were forced to quit, because of economic conditions.

Therefore, be it resolved that this north Okanagan zone request the provincial command to make strong representations to the provincial government protesting the reassessment of V.L.A. small holdings into residential areas and thus enable them to derive the benefit which has been granted to them under the veterans charter.

I appreciate that this is probably a provincial problem, but nevertheless the Department of Veterans Affairs has a responsibility to look after the interests of these veterans. In my opinion the least they can do is to protest to the provincial or municipal authorities this reassessment—in this case it is the province—on the ground that the veteran is entitled to special benefits. These men went on these small holdings with the understanding that benefits would accrue to them as long as they occupied the land.

The hon. member for Calgary North referred to the problem of the man who is killed while technically not on duty. Whether or not a man is on duty, I submit he is still a soldier. One or two cases have occurred recently in my riding. A young fellow who had served three years in Germany took a ride in a civilian car and was killed. This case is similar to the one mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary North. This man leaves a widow and two children and so far they have not received a cent from any department of government. They cannot qualify under this act; they cannot qualify under the army or in any other way that I can find out.

It seems to me that any man who joins the forces should be granted protection at all times for accident and death in order that the widow and orphans he may leave behind shall be protected. In this case the widow and the two orphans are living on charity. It seems to me that every soldier on joining the forces should be given the protection of an insurance policy to cover everything that may happen, with provision for the payment of at least $20,000 to his widow and family in the event of his death. There is a moral obligation to protect these young men in every way. They are depending entirely upon the army for their income and the welfare of their families should be protected.

We have not met this particular problem. I do not blame the department for this, but I hope the department will co-operate with the Department of National Defence in an effort to find a solution something like that mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary North so that in future we will not be faced with cases of this kind.

Another problem concerns the farmer settler. I am not going to go into detail about this matter because I have already written to the minister and he has kindly promised to look into it. Last year several farmers in the Cawston area of British Columbia suffered severe frost damage to their young orchards. They lost most of their trees which had to be replaced or replanted and they will have to wait for five or six years before they get a crop. It seems to me that the local V. L. A. authorities should be given full power to go into that area to assess the damage and what it would cost the Department of Veterans Affairs to replace these trees in order that these young farmers may be rehabilitated. If that is not done, I am afraid many of them will abandon their farms. They have been there two or three years struggling along and waiting for the time when they would have a crop. That time has now been deferred for another four, five or six years. I hope the minister will pay special attention to this group.

Another problem arises from legal interpretation. This concerns a case of young men who have gone out to work while their farms were coming into production. The case I have in mind is typical of two or three other cases that I know of. This young man was told on his return from service that he had to go on a farm for at least two years to qualify as a full-time farmer. He did so and qualified. He returned to the board, and they accepted his qualifications. On the strength of that, he went and purchased 35 acres of land; I presume it was part fruit and part stock, but whether it is fruit or stock the same applies: he would have no income for at least three years. With that in mind he thought he would get help and that he would work in his spare time, taking a job outside. As soon as he said he was going to work outside for three years until the farm would support him, he was refused the ordinary assistance under the act. The interpretation in this case, I claim, again was too narrow. True, the board in Vancouver is going to re-hear the case. In this case the local office, who know the man, who know the land and who know the conditions fully approved but somewhere—I call them "armchair farmers" —some administrators decided on the case. No armchair farmer can tell as much as local people what a young man is capable of doing or what the land is capable of producing.

Finally, I would suggest to the minister that the time has now arrived when those veterans of the first world war who are still struggling with the remains of a mortgage should have that mortgage cleared and a clear title given to them. It would not cost too much. I know the policy of taking care of them year after year has been carried out, but many of these people are now getting to an age where it is worrying them. They are too old to stand the strain, and that strain should be removed by giving a clear title to a veteran who has been on his land for 20, 30 or as in some cases, 40 years.

Mr. Hansell: I should just like to say a word or two on this item and in doing so I think I shall have to follow what others have said in respect to my belief that the veterans' legislation that we have on the statute books of Canada ranks perhaps with some of the best veterans legislation of any country in the world. That has been said before, and I think it will stand repeating. I think we have all had a part in bringing about that legislation. Suggestions have been made in previous veterans affairs committees, and with an efficient staff and an interest in the returned man I think we have accomplished something along that line.

I wish also now to pay my respects to the minister and thank him for very courteously taking up any cases I have presented to him. I recognize that he is confined within the regulations and within the law, but I am happy with the attitude he takes when I present cases to him, passing them on to his officials, doing some little personal investigation and trying to solve those particular cases, if possible.

I have handled a good many veterans' cases over the years, and on the whole there seems to be one general type of case which I do not think is quite fairly treated. This matter has been mentioned before over and over again, I fancy, and perhaps the veterans affairs committees have wrestled with this problem. That is the problem of the returned man's health at the time of enlistment, when he is given the category of an A1 condition and then, after he applies for a pension because in his mind and perhaps in the minds of many others he has a good case for a pension, somehow or other in the investigation by doctors and other interested officials they go back to a predetermined period and say, "This originates by reason of something that happened before you enlisted."

I think I can say that in most of the cases I have had to take up with the minister in respect to war veterans' pensions that seems to have been the main problem. I cannot let the estimates go by without adding my voice to the voices of others in making this strong plea that, if a veteran is taken into the defence forces and given an A1 category as his condition at the time, then that should remain the category of the veteran, unless of course the veteran at the time of recruitment purposely falsified the record or perhaps evaded certain questions or refused to give the full information. Unless this can be proved, then I think that the condition at enlistment should be regarded as his actual physical condition. If through his war services something happens to him, then I think he is reasonable enough in asking for a pension and should be given it regardless of pre-enlistment condition.

This is not a new thing. The minister knows all about it, and I wish he would make some pronouncement as to why this is so. I have never been able to satisfy myself that a reasonable explanation has ever been given as to why they should search into pre-enlistment causes when at the time of enlistment the man was given a clean bill of health. The recruiting officials seem to take the attitude, "We will try to put the man in the army if we can possibly get him through." That may not be so but that is how it seems to me. If he is thoroughly examined according to the regulations of recruitment, then I claim that that examination should be sufficient, unless it is found later, as I said before, that the recruit is purposely falsifying the record or purposely withholding some information. I wish the minister would once again give his pronouncement on that.

There is one other matter: a permanent veterans affairs committee. That has been mentioned before, and I do not wish to take up the time of the house on it now. I am sure our group would agree to having this committee made a permanent committee, and if it is not recognized as a standing committee it should be set up every year anyway. I cannot see any reason why it should not be because it is not going to cost much money. The committee is run by the House of Commons. Those members who sit on the committee are not paid any extra stipend for that work. Of course a clerk is required and some printing is required, but apart from that it does not cost very much. The small expense is absorbed in the general appropriation that we give for the work of the House of Commons. I think the minister could also comment on that and say just why he thinks it is not reasonable to set up a veterans affairs committee every year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to repeat any of the arguments that have been advanced but there are one or two matters that I think I should bring to the attention of the committee, especially as no hon. member from Saskatchewan has spoken since these estimates have been before the committee. So far as the province of Saskatchewan is concerned, the records show that 66,614 Saskatchewan residents wore a uniform in either or both wars, 16,002 in world war I, 48,263 in world war II and 2,349 in both wars. I also do so because over the years, too many years for one to be willing to admit, I have been a member of the Canadian Legion in Prince Albert and I wish to place before the minister and the committee some of the ideas and suggestions that Saskatchewan branch No. 2 and other branches have brought to my attention.

I want to say at once that so far as the pension commission is concerned my experience has been that Brigadier Melville and those associated with him have given to each individual case that has come within my knowledge and cognizance the very fullest of considerate attention. That is as it should be, for after all the commission should not permit itself to be shackled by a too close interpretation of the letter of the law and by a denial in consequence of the spirit of the law. The only criticisms that one hears from time to time arise out of individual cases. I can think of no better description of the pension commission than the words used by a cadet sergeant named Dwight Eisenhower who contributed an article in 1915 to his West Point class paper which began in this way: "True merit is like a river. The deeper it is the less noise it makes." This organization has not made any noise over the contribution that it has made, but that does not mean that individual cases have not arisen that deserve the serious reconsideration of the board of pension commissioners. Mention was made by the member for Calgary North of the Stanley Hepworth case. I am going to refer to it for a moment because in my opinion the widow is legally entitled to a pension on behalf of herself and her children. The decision of the commission, as recorded in a letter I have before me, is as follows:

> Death incurred during military service in peacetime, but not pensionable under section 13 (2) as on the evidence presently available there is nothing to indicate death arose out of or was directly connected with such service.

I find it difficult to understand the legal basis upon which that conclusion is based. According to this record Hepworth at the time of his death was returning from a parade in a car driven by Sergeant Major Rea. Army transport had been ordered for the purpose of taking personnel to and from the armistice day parade at Strathmore. Certain army transport had not turned up and the second in command of the regiment instructed the personnel to travel by their own transport. It is because of this instruction that Hepworth was riding in a civilian car at the time of his death.

I make this submission. This man had done everything that he was required to do. He had answered the directions of his superior officer and his death followed in consequence of acting on those directions. If that is not a death arising out of or directly connected with service, I do not know the meaning of those terms.

Mr. Bennett: Were the facts properly adduced?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am taking these facts to be the facts. I am submitting them on the basis of the statement before me. If one takes the interpretation on the words of the workmen's compensation act, which the hon. member for Grey North will know so well, injuries arising out of or in the course of employment, even so restricted an interpretation as is given to those words would make it possible, as I see it, for this lady to succeed in any court. However, she has no recourse in the courts. Section 5, subsection 5 of the Pension Act reads as follows:

> The commission shall determine any question of interpretation of this act and the decision of the commission on any such question is final.

I realize that no one wants to extend the pension legislation so that it would become a scramble in the courts, but I believe that in such a case as this consideration should be given to the amendment of the Pension Act so far as interpretation of the law is concerned so that recourse to the courts will be available to any aggrieved person to ascertain in the courts whether or not that person comes within the ambit of the legal definitions provided in the Pension Act. That would not open the whole Pension Act to the courts. It would simply make available to the courts the interpretation of legal principles, and certainly this government has not been above submitting questions—

Mr. Lapointe: It is not a question of law; it is a question of facts. In the case the hon. member has referred to it is a question of facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am taking the facts on the basis of what has been presented. It is for the minister to say in what particular they are not correct, and I understand that they have not been challenged. There has been correspondence or conversations between the member for Calgary North and the department. From what he has stated as to the facts of the case, I cannot see how the department can deny the claim. When I was interrupted I was about to say that this government has not been above submitting questions of law to the Supreme Court of Canada. There is an important question, one that the Minister of Justice could submit for a general determination as to the meaning of the terms and words of section 5 (5). If that were done, I think this widow would not be denied justice but indeed would receive consideration.

Mr. Lapointe: You are completely wrong and you know it. It is a question of facts and of evidence brought before the commission, and you know it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, Mr. Chairman, the minister treats this matter so frivolously.

Mr. Lapointe: I do not treat it frivolously.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is laughing about it. What is there to laugh about?

Mr. Lapointe: Read the wording of the decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have read the wording of it.

Mr. Lapointe: It refers to evidence presented before the commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should not become so excited over a case of injustice.

Mr. Lapointe: Who is excited?

Mr. Diefenbaker: He should not be laughing. I cannot at all understand the minister's attitude at this moment and his laughing, over a serious matter.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, you are laughing.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, I have never laughed at any case that is brought before the pension commission with regard to any veteran, I object to having the hon. member make statements as to the manner in which the Pension Act is handled by the commission when he knows that is not exactly what took place.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Lapointe: My hon. friend knows it. It is not a question of my getting excited. It is a question of sticking to the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know what my hon. friend is getting excited about. I said that the pension commission has done a good job.

Mr. Lapointe: Butter will not melt in the hon. member's mouth.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course, that is the kind of attitude the minister sometimes adopts. He has adopted it in his other department. Apparently the trouble is—and I had not thought of this until now—that the minister has too many departments.

Mr. Lapointe: Stick to veterans affairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has just now shown that it is one department too many for him.

Mr. Lapointe: You are showing that this is one piece of legislation you know nothing about.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is all right. With two departments, possibly it is two too many. Mr. Chairman, I was submitting a serious argument about the facts and the law.

Mr. Lapointe: Be correct about the facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just because an order or direction has been given to the contrary, it demands and merits more serious consideration than the minister is apparently giving to this case. I say that on the facts of it. We, as lawyers, know that courts make mistakes and that for that reason there are appeals on questions of law. It was in the course of making that submission that possibly this is indeed the type of case in respect of which there should be a right for the termination of the courts on a question of law that I made the statement I made a moment ago. I have covered that submission in detail. I suggest that a legal interpretation of those words, if the facts as set out by the hon. member for Calgary North are correct, —and he always keeps his argument within the facts—should be obtained. On that basis I submit that serious reconsideration should and must be given to such cases, and in particular to this one.

I come now to one or two representations that have been made. One has to do with the general level of disability pensions today. The minister has been told of this before and I am not going to cover any of the ground that was covered by the hon. member for Royal and those who followed him. What I believe is this. In view of the devaluation of the dollar or the decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar, if the standard of living of pensioners is to be properly maintained, the most serious early attention will have to be given to a general increase in the amount of the pensions. Somebody suggested that possibly some legislative enactment might be made whereby pensions would be attached to the cost of living index. I believe that objective would be rather difficult to attain. However, I believe this. In consequence of a continuing rise in the cost of living and also in the expansion of monetary instability having regard to purchasing power, I believe we can take it for granted that the present level of prices is a plateau from which we will not expect any retrogression in the days ahead. If that be so, then having regard to the purchasing power of money, I believe there will have to come at an early date a reconsideration of the Pension Act in so far as the amount of pension is concerned, to the end that the standards of living of those who served will not be reduced.

I should now like to say a word or two with reference to a matter that has been discussed on previous occasions, namely, war veterans allowances. As the situation is at the present time, the ceiling on income for single veterans is $840 and for married veterans $1,440. I find it hard to understand why the amount should not be increased to the level of that amount which, under the Income Tax Act, becomes exempt from income taxation. This question has been asked the minister before: where is the sense of fairness in this situation? Everyone is entitled to the old age pension, whether it is the Prime Minister who receives it or somebody else. Every citizen in our country is entitled to it at 70 years of age. Why should those in receipt of war veterans allowance find the amount of their old age pensions in effect reduced on the achievement of the age of 70 years? That is something that one hears universally complained about. It is something that is unjust for, by reason of the present ceilings, it places those who served and their dependents in a second-class position with respect to others who did not serve. It brings about a state of affairs that is unfair and unjust and it constitutes a discrimination that cannot be justified. I ask the minister once more—as he has been asked on previous occasions—this question: Why should such a state of affairs be permitted to continue?

I mention also another source of objection to the War Veterans Allowance Act and it is that those who served in the first war and who did not get beyond England are denied the war veterans allowance. At the present moment I know of at least three who served for a long period of time in England during the first war and who are now in hospitals, who have no source of income and who find themselves faced by a situation that is dire and dark. Why has not the War Veterans Allowance Act been amended so as to provide for payment of war veterans allowance to those who served in England during the first war? Those who served and did not leave England served as required and were in a position where they were liable to go to the front but, for reasons over which they had no control, were denied that opportunity. Over and over again one receives communications from those who served, who today are aged from 60 to 68 or thereabouts, asking why it is that some change in this connection could not be made to the end that a measure of justice that is denied to them here would be secured.

I am not going to refer to what has been said regarding dependent parents. I would point out that the case for dependent parents does demand consideration. When the Canadian pension rates were revised in 1951 the dependent parents of war veterans received very little consideration or improvement in their position. Although the widow of a war veteran was given an increase from $75 to $100 per month, so far as dependent parents were concerned the amount remained at $75. The Canadian Legionary had this to say about that:

> The Legion pointed this out at the time and asked that the dependent parents pensions be increased to $100 for one parent and $125 when both parents are dependent. But the government continues to discriminate against this group of pensioners and, despite continuing representations by the Canadian Legion for an increase, no change in rates has been granted so far.

I am quoting from the April issue of that magazine.

Finally, in connection with war veterans allowances, I bring to the attention of the minister and the committee the representations of one of the other soldier organizations which are as follows:

> That in view of the fact that less than 10 per cent of world war II exservice women were given the opportunity to serve in an active theatre of war, and all volunteered for such service, that the War Veterans Allowance Act be amended to read, that world war II exservice women shall be eligible who saw at least 270 days of active service upon reaching the age of 55, who are no longer employable, or below the age of 55 where, due to illness the veteran becomes unemployable—

—provided, however, that in the latter case there should be provisions that the payment should only be made in the event of need. Those are the one or two representations—

Mr. Lapointe: May I ask from what body that resolution comes?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was forwarded by the Canadian Corps Association. I am glad the minister asked that. It is dated November 18, 1955.

Summing up, the submissions that I make are as follows:

1. That having paid as warm a tribute as possible to the commission in their administration, on the question of interpretation of legal qualifications, there is no reason whatever why their decisions should be final. Finality could be the case in their decision on the facts, but on the question of eligibility within the law, my submission is that consideration should be given by the department to the interpretation of legal expressions and qualifications by the courts. I think that could be done simply by the Department of Justice, in a particular case, making a submission to the Supreme Court of Canada for the interpretation of any qualifications under the act which may appear ambiguous or in respect of which there may be two opinions as to the meaning thereof.

2. That the ceiling on earnings should be materially increased, and that the discrimination against those who served and their dependents, in so far as the application of the old age pension legislation is concerned, should be removed.

3. In so far as war veterans allowance is concerned, it should be made applicable to that very considerable group of men who today find themselves in a position where they are no longer able to earn their living and with the statute in its present form denying them the opportunity of receiving an allowance because they did not serve in an active theatre in world war I.

4. Finally, the whole question of the present level of pensions should be reconsidered, for in my opinion we have arrived at a point where the inflationary results on the purchasing power of the dollar will be basic; we are on plateau now and therefore, on the basis of that plateau, those who served are more and more being placed in a position where their standard of living must inevitably be reduced. This whole problem should be brought before a pensions committee of the house, and such a pensions committee, because of the vastness of the problem of veterans administration, should be a standing committee and should be set up at each session rather than a committee which sits from time to time, and only when the government feels that a committee should review the situation.

Mr. Regier: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that on item 1 of the minister's estimates we are expected more or less to discuss only the general policies of the department rather than individual items. I intend to do that, and therefore my remarks will be very brief.

I regret, as have other members before me, that the minister has to be the Minister of Veterans Affairs and at the same time the Postmaster General. At this time I should like to express my admiration for the minister's ability, as shown at the time the estimates of the Post Office Department were before the estimates committee. He demonstrated a unique ability to grasp, within a short period of time, the many details attached to the office of Postmaster General. I think it was remarkable, considering the way he had this additional burden put on him, that he was able to display such a unique ability to understand the workings of that other department of government, a major department. However, I think it is imposing an undue burden on the minister. No man, no matter how able he may be, is able to administer, in the degree that is expected of him, the department that he now holds as well as another department. I hope the day is not too far away when the Minister of Veterans Affairs will again be only the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am sure the minister is also looking forward to the day when he can shed his additional responsibilities. However, I hope that the view expressed in this house sometime ago will not be realized. I hope the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will not be saddled with the Post Office Department. If there is any minister who has shown his inadequacy in this house it has been the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and the Post Office Department is one of the last departments for which I would like to see him made responsible.

We are not supposed to mention the details of the minister's department at this time and I do not intend to do so. I intend to confine myself to the generalities of his department. When I look at the net earnings of Canadian corporations for the first three months of this year and realize they are in excess of $750 million, and when I look at the estimates of this department and see that the minister is asking for approximately $250 million, I think I can fairly say the needs of the returned men of Canada are very modest indeed. My only regret is that the government is unwilling to grant in their entirety the requests of the Canadian Legion. After all, these men were willing to sacrifice all in defence of democracy.

The Liberal party was not willing to sacrifice all in defence of democracy. I well remember that when the last war was at its height the C.C.F. party was advocating that we risk all in defence of democracy including not only the lives of these men but also the possessions of the people of Canada. However, the Liberal party saw fit at that time to risk only the lives of Canadian citizens. The time has come for us to pay tribute to those who risked all at that time.

I see that we are prepared to spend 5 per cent of the income of this government in order to help those who were willing to risk all. We are prepared to spend 40 per cent of our income on possible future wars. The Department of National Defence is asking for 40 cents out of our dollar whereas the Department of Veterans Affairs is asking for only 5 cents out of our dollar. I feel the balance is rather out of line, Mr. Chairman. I feel that if we want the Canadian people to be sincere in their effort in any future war—and I hope it will not occur—the relationship of the 5 per cent and 40 per cent will have to be brought into line. The government of Canada and our economy generally can well afford to grant the demands of the Canadian Legion which always have been modest and reasonable.

I can understand some of the hesitancy on the part of the government to grant a larger measure of welfare to our veterans when I think of the attitude of the government to the cause of democracy. These people—most of them at least—were willing to sacrifice their lives for our way of life and for our system of government which is exemplified by the parliament of Canada, and yet the Liberal party has been able to accomplish what Kaiser Wilhelm and Adolf Hitler were unable to accomplish. The Kaiser of Germany went all out to destroy democracy and Adolf Hitler made a supreme effort to rid the world of democracy and yet the Liberal government through actions recently displayed revealed that it was able to accomplish what the Kaiser and Adolf Hitler were unable to accomplish, the destruction of parliamentary democracy in this country.

There were hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens who were willing to lay down their lives for the sake of parliamentary democracy. May I remind the house that Hitler also had a parliament where the majority ruled, Mussolini had a parliament where the majority ruled and I understand that in Moscow there are approximately 1,600 members in their parliament where the majority also rules. We had hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens who were willing to sacrifice their lives and say they would die if necessary for our own British system of government and yet this government utilized the lives of Canadians in a cause that I have reason to suspect was most insincere. I have reason to think the government was more concerned about the welfare of the profit-making institutions who would make money on war than the lives of Canadians who were willing to die for a cause they thought was the cause of freedom but which has now been decidedly proven to have been the interest of the Liberal party of Canada alone.

I return to the point concerning which I am supposed to speak at this time. In the over-all picture the veterans' interests are insignificant in the eyes of the Liberal party of Canada. The interests of parliament and of democracy are insignificant. The interests of the Liberal party and the so-called overwhelming majority in the House of Commons—although not in the nation as a whole—have to take second place to the Liberal party itself.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is the hon. member prepared to throw away the constitution of the British North America Act including section 49 or has he the courage to go and present a bill to this house amending that section?

Mr. Regier: Mr. Chairman I do not have to throw away the constitution of Canada and the traditions of parliament because the Liberal party has already done that.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I want to take a few minutes at this time to speak about the three benevolent funds of the services. It is true there is an item, No. 512, which grants $8,000 to the army benevolent fund, but my remarks are of a rather more general nature and I feel I am more in order in expressing them now than I would be in expressing them on that particular item.

The general public may not realize the need for these various funds and the excellent work they are doing. The general public may perhaps feel that the various pieces of veterans' legislation should cover all cases and therefore that no veteran should be in need of aid from other sources. But of course that is not the case, and in order to illustrate the point I should like to refer briefly to the annual report of the army benevolent fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1955, where they give illustrations of cases where benefits have been given to veterans under certain circumstances.

For example, one case was the training for employment of a widow. In this case the man was killed in a non-pensionable accident leaving a widow and three children. The widow was given a training course in dressmaking which offered possible earnings of $2,400 a year and the children were placed with the widow's sister for day-time care.

Then there was another case where a man signed up for overseas service and assigned $30 monthly to be applied against four finance company loans totalling $1,300. His assigned pay barely covered the interest and as the family had obtained the loans originally to pay medical debts the fund made a grant which together with $200 realized by the serviceman from the sale of radio equipment was sufficient to retire the outstanding loan.

There are many cases of this sort where veterans find themselves in difficulty, where they cannot obtain benefits under any veterans' legislation but where they receive worth while benefits from the benevolent fund of the service in which they serve. I have no general criticism at this time of the army benevolent fund, but I am concerned with the situation that exists with regard to the air force benevolent fund. One objection I have is that although public moneys are paid into that fund, perhaps in an indirect way, it does not seem to be answerable to parliament through any minister that I know of. I do not think that is a reasonable state of affairs. I suppose the minister is going to rise to say that I am not in order in discussing this.

Mr. Lapointe: That was not my purpose in interrupting the hon. gentleman. I simply wanted to point out that the air force benevolent fund has its own incorporation, whereas the army benevolent fund was created by a statute of parliament and by virtue of that statute, is responsible to parliament through the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The department as such has no responsibility in connection with the air force benevolent fund nor in connection with the navy benevolent fund, which was set up in a similar manner.

Mr. MacLean: I want to thank the minister for very succinctly summing up the nub of my complaint. I feel that this is an unsatisfactory state of affairs. I believe that the air force benevolent fund, and I think the same applies to the navy benevolent fund, receives certain benefits from the taxpayers, perhaps in an indirect way. I stand subject to correction, but I believe quarters are provided.

Mr. Lapointe: No, not for the air force or navy.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. MacLean: I grant, not by the minister's department.

Mr. Lapointe: It may be possible, but I am not aware of it.

Mr. MacLean: I am under the impression that that is the case. I notice in the annual report of the air force benevolent fund they do not show any expense for headquarters rental, as they do in the case of the outlying areas. Then I notice also that the air force benevolent fund is audited by the Auditor General, even though it comes under the Companies Act.

I feel that there should be a more direct responsibility to the parliament on the part of this fund. I am not saying that because I feel there has been any maladministration on the part of those administering the fund, because I believe they are doing a good job by their own standards, but I do not think their objectives are absolutely correct.

As I said before, the army benevolent fund is in a different situation. As I understand it, the purpose of that fund is to give grants, loans and other benefits to veterans who served in the army during the war. The army has a separate army welfare fund to look after servicemen who are presently serving, while in the case of the air force the one fund looks after both classes of men.

We have a situation where a fund is not responsible directly to parliament, yet is receiving certain benefits from public moneys, even though indirectly. This is something which bears a close relationship to problems which arise in the Department of Veterans Affairs, and I think there should be a closer contact between these two funds. I should like to think that the minister or his parliamentary assistant, who may be more directly interested in this, would look carefully into this situation.

As the minister knows, during the war large sums of money accumulated in the non-public funds accounts in messes and canteens of the air force, and toward the end of the war these were turned over to the air force benevolent fund. Contributions continue to be made to that fund from similar sources in the air force. There is a strong feeling growing up among veterans who served in the air force that they do not have the same opportunity of benefiting from the air force benevolent fund as do the men who are presently serving. In the case of a man presently serving there are officers immediately at hand who are well acquainted with the benefits which are available and applications can be made and recommendations sent forward if the case is a good one, and a grant or loan is usually made. The air force veteran who is now a civilian feels that he is denied the services of such qualified men, that therefore his case is not so well presented, and as a result the benefits which he receives are not in proportion to the contributions which veterans as a group made during the war.

I think the system adopted in the case of the army benevolent fund is a good one. In that case field services are provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I would recommend that the minister look carefully into the situation with regard to the air force benevolent fund to see if a similar arrangement could not be made. I think it is most important that it should be made in the case of the air force, because the proportion of men now serving in the air force as compared with those who served during the war is much greater than in the case of the army. Therefore it is more important, not less, that two separate funds should be set up; an air force welfare fund for serving members of that service, and an air force benevolent fund which would apply only to veterans of the air force.

After all, it was the veterans who in the first case contributed through their non-public fund accounts very large amounts of money to the benevolent fund. Toward the end of the war they lost complete control of that as individuals. The non-public funds were turned over to the air force benevolent fund, and in most cases canteens, messes and so on had no alternative but to turn over the profits that had accumulated during the war. I know from experience that in many cases messes operated at a higher profit than they would have if they had anticipated what was going to happen.

It may be said that I have just expressed an opinion or that several veterans of the air force, who tend to grouse anyway, are just complaining because they do not feel they are getting a fair break, but I see a paragraph in the eleventh annual report of the Royal Canadian Air Force benevolent fund which substantiates what I have to say. They condemn themselves with their own words, in my way of thinking, in this regard. Please do not misunderstand me. Mr. Chairman. All three benevolent funds, I feel, are serving an excellent purpose and doing a vast amount of good, but there is always room for improvement, and it is on that basis that I make my remarks. In that connection, they say on page 13 of that report:

> The majority of R.C.A.F. veterans are established in peacetime careers but a surprisingly large number who have re-enlisted in the regular air force have, on returning from civilian life, required financial assistance. In general the applications examined presented a diversity of problems, mostly the result of sickness or accident, large families, low income, injudicious use of credit and some unemployment especially in the older groups.

My contention is that if these veterans required attention from the benevolent fund on rejoining the service they required it when they were civilians, and their claims should have been made and considered on their merits. I bring that to the minister's attention because I think it is important. It is something that will probably become worse as the years go by. If justice were to be done, I feel that part of the benefit fund which was accumulated during the war should be disbursed to the benefit of men who served during the war in such a way that the fund would be expended entirely by the time the veterans of that war had disappeared. At the present time there is a strong feeling among veterans that they contributed substantial amounts to this fund which is being held as a continuing investment fund and as a continuing benefit to people who may serve in the air force in the future. To my way of thinking that is not a fair state of affairs. If the fund were divided and an air force welfare fund established, it could be self-sustaining from the profits which accrue to it from the peacetime canteens and other non-public fund profits.

I should think, too, that the annual report of the air force benevolent fund and the navy fund should be more readily available. I was amazed to find that even the library of parliament does not have copies of these reports. I know that the minister has no direct responsibility in this matter, but I think it is something that is worth the attention of the welfare officers of his department.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies I should refer very briefly to the Stanley Hepworth case, which I raised this afternoon and on which the hon. member for Prince Albert also spoke subsequently. I do so because during the course of that discussion some doubt was raised as to the accuracy of the facts I presented; at least that doubt was cast by implication. I should like to assure the committee through you, Mr. Chairman, that I think there is absolutely no doubt in regard to the facts; I have never heard any expressed by anyone. I have discussed this matter with the commanding officer and with other members of the regiment; I have discussed it with a number of other people concerned in the matter, and I think there is absolutely no question in regard to the facts as I presented them.

The difficulty, as I have indicated before, I think is that there is too narrow an interpretation of section 13 (2). I think the difficulty really stems from the fact that during the war there was undoubtedly a considerable abuse of military transport, in that it was used for personal purposes of all kinds. Those abuses inevitably continued after the war, and therefore the general position taken by the government has been that people who take military transport and use it in an unauthorized way, if they are injured or killed, are not going to be rewarded, as it were, by the grant of pensions and things of that sort. It is too literal and too strong an application of that general idea. I think it causes the difficulties in these motor accident cases.

In every one of these motor accident cases where injury or death has resulted, that I have known about, it has been extremely difficult to get a pension granted. As I say, I think it stems from that position of contempt for military transport, and of not paying pensions unless it can be proved definitely that it was military transport authorized for use, that it was being used for military duty and so on. It was a correction of what I consider this unjust application of these ideas that I was requesting the minister to look into, particularly as far as this case was concerned.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure the hon. member for Calgary North that, in my remarks addressed to the hon. member for Prince Albert, I was not questioning for one minute the accuracy of the facts which he stated to this house, but simply questioning whether those facts had been properly put before the commission.

I should like, at the beginning of my remarks, to thank all hon. members who have participated in this debate on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. As is usual and proper, there have been praises for the officials of the department and criticism of the minister and of the policy of the government, and I suppose that is as it should be. However, I might say that I readily accept on behalf of the officials of my department the praises which were expressed of them, because I feel that the veterans' charter is administered and implemented not only with efficiency but in a humanitarian and understanding way. That is done both at headquarters and in the field by officers of the department who are veterans themselves in almost all cases, and I think that might be an explanation of their attitude of mind.

I must say I was particularly glad to hear the hon. member for Cape Breton South emphasize the fact that the department does act, that it does things without any special urging or pressure, because as I said in my opening remarks and have said on other occasions, it is the aim of the government, and it is certainly the aim of the Department of Veterans Affairs, to keep the veterans' charter constantly under review to ensure that it is always up to date and that it is meeting as much as possible the changing needs of veterans and their dependents.

I do not propose to deal at this stage with all the points that have been raised. I think I can do so better on the specific votes as they are called. I think it will be agreed that most of the points raised by way of criticism are matters that have been discussed before in the house, outside the house and before the special committee on veterans affairs. I think that all hon. members will agree that in many instances it is most difficult to draw the line for qualification for benefits under legislation such as that which comprises the veterans' charter. It is difficult, whether the line be one regarding a means test, or service qualification, or one concerning a time limit. In acts such as the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Pension Act and the Veterans' Land Act, no matter where the line is drawn there will always be borderline ones which just fail to qualify and may in fact well be cases of hardship. I think that is true of all legislation of a social character, what might be termed social legislation. It is one of the difficulties that governments meet, whether at the federal, provincial or municipal level.

Most of the hon. members who have spoken up to now on this item have referred at length to the ceilings on permissible income in the War Veterans Allowance Act. I think in the debate on second reading of the bill amending the War Veterans Allowance Act last session I submitted at quite some length and to the best of my ability the reasoning of the government in fixing the ceilings at their present levels, that is $840 for a single man and $1,440 for a recipient at the married rate. I pointed out, at the time, that if the ceilings had been established at $1,200 single and $2,000 married, the War Veterans Allowance Act could and would, in a number of cases, be a supplement to normal income.

I also pointed out the necessity of keeping all benefits available to veterans in balance, and that when fixing the ceilings under the War Veterans Allowance Act cognizance must be taken of the disability pensioner under the Pension Act. I also pointed out that this had always been done throughout the history of veterans' legislation in this country. The present ceiling of $70 a month for a single recipient is equivalent to slightly more than a 55 per cent disability pension, that is, a pension paid for injury incurred in service, while the ceiling of $120 a month for a married recipient is equivalent to approximately a 70 per cent pension under the Pension Act.

As I said at that time, if the ceiling on the single rate were raised to $1,200 that would be the equivalent of an 80 per cent disability pension. It would be in fact $25 less a month than a 100 per cent disability pension. A ceiling of $2,000 on permissible income at the married rate would be just $40 a year less than a 100 per cent disability pension at married rate. A 100 per cent disability married pensioner gets $2,040 or $170 a month.

The hon. member for Royal said that a disability pensioner with a small pension or a small superannuation allowance is prejudiced because of these permissible ceilings. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that, regardless of where you set the ceiling, a case could be made showing that the ceiling was not fair to certain people. That is what I was pointing out in the earlier part of my remarks when I referred to the difficulties that exist in dealing with such legislation.

For instance, let us say that the ceiling was raised to $1,200 a year for a single man. A war veterans allowance recipient at age 70 would receive $40 by way of old age security payment and $60 war veterans allowance, or the maximum permitted under this $1,200 ceiling. But let us consider the case of a 45 per cent disability pensioner under such circumstances. That the case, for instance, of a man who has lost an eye. I believe that, according to the table of disabilities, the loss of one eye creates a right to a 40 per cent disability pension. Let us say this man is a 45 per cent pensioner, that he has lost one eye and has some gunshot wounds. At age 70 this man would receive $675 under the Pension Act, he would receive $480 under the Old Age Security Act and roughly about $5 a month by way of war veterans allowance, making in all a total of $1,200. I think that this 45 per cent disability pensioner might say, to use the terminology of the hon. member for Royal, that he was prejudiced in that he would be getting very little benefit from his disability pension.

I dealt at much greater length with this question last year and I did note that although hon. members have again made the same representations—I know they do so with the greatest sincerity—no one dealt with the side of the case that I put up last year.

In the course of his remarks one hon. member said this: "It would not cost the government very much more just to raise the ceiling to $1,200 for the single recipient and $2,000 for the married recipient." I wish that were so, Mr. Chairman. However, it has been estimated—and these estimates are fairly accurate—that to raise the ceiling to those levels, with the present rates being paid, would increase the liability for war veterans allowance which appears in the estimates as $41,192,000 by $13,900,000, which would be, I believe, a little more than a 30 per cent increase in the present liability.

Mr. Brooks: Might I ask the minister a question there?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes.

Mr. Brooks: Would that be in the event that all war veterans were unemployable it would reach that amount?

Mr. Lapointe: No. It would mean present recipients plus additional recipients. As my hon. friend well knows, every time the ceiling is raised on legislation such as this a new group of recipients come in under the act, veterans who were barred from the act because of the existing ceiling and who with a higher ceiling may be permitted to come under the act for part of the allowance. That is the estimate we have. I say these estimates are fairly accurate. The last time we raised the ceilings and the rates, I gave the house an estimate of the increased liability, and I think the experience of the following year showed that our estimate, if anything, had been too conservative.

Mr. Brooks: My point is this, Mr. Chairman. The war veterans allowance is given under two headings, namely to those who are employable and those who are unemployable. I know that while the department have not boasted they have spoken quite eloquently of the casual earnings and so on, and have shown to us that a war veteran who was receiving the benefits of casual earnings receives more than $1,200 a year while the war veteran who is married and receives casual earnings obtains over $2,000. I was wondering whether they were being included in this amount of $13 million which the minister is now quoting. Frankly I may say that I think his estimate is much too high. I do not think the amount would be anywhere near that.

Mr. Lapointe: These estimates are based on the same figures we gave previously, when I told the house what would be the estimated cost of the increase in rates and increase in ceiling which we implemented when we last amended the legislation. I might further add that casual earnings do not come into the picture at all because, as my hon. friend knows, they are exempted. This would be straight income.

Mr. Brooks: They would come into the picture in this way—

Mr. Lapointe: Not into this calculation.

Mr. Brooks: —if a man were earning $600 or $700 a year and asked for war veterans allowance, it would only be the $600 a year that he could receive even though the ceiling were $1,200. That is the point I wish to make.

Mr. Lapointe: I might read briefly what the estimated cost is based on. Taking into account all other income which the present recipients had and the additional amount of allowance that would be paid to them if the ceiling were increased, it is estimated that an additional sum of $9,050,000 per annum would be paid out. It is also estimated that the increase in ceilings would make eligible for allowance 8,260 other veterans at an annual cost of $4,850,000. Thus the total cost of this proposal is estimated to be $13,900,000 per annum.

Mr. Brooks: Does that also include the extra amount that would be paid out in old age pensions?

Mr. Lapointe: No, this would be a straight vote for war veterans allowance.

Mr. Brooks: I think it needs checking up again.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was right the last time.

Mr. Lapointe: My hon. friend says it needs checking up again. May I say that I have noticed one thing, and it is this. Every time I have given estimates they have been challenged. Hon. members opposite always say, "Of course that is exaggerating". However, when we implement the changes those estimates always prove to be either accurate or, if anything, too conservative. I therefore think the hon. member may rely on the figures I have given him.

Mr. Knowles: Why not try being liberal once in a while?

Mr. Lapointe: I may say that is about the only occasion on which the department is too conservative.

While speaking on this question of raising the allowance may I say there is one point which seems to be forgotten. It has been admitted by hon. members and certainly by veterans' organizations across the country that the changes which were made last year in the formula used for casual earnings had been of considerable help to the veterans under war veterans allowance, and that the more generous approach which the department had taken in the handling of this legislation had certainly brought about great benefits. But there is one group, and I think they are the ones to whom our attention should be directed particularly, who constitute what might be described as the difficult cases.

I refer to the war veterans allowance recipient who has absolutely no other source of income; who is totally unemployable; who cannot benefit from casual earnings because he is incapable of doing so; who has no disability pension; who has no superannuation. Regardless of the level to which you raise the ceiling on permissible income I submit that you cannot help this man directly, because he has no other source of income. That is where the assistance fund comes in.

Mr. Brooks: Would there not be one exception, namely the man who is 70 years of age and who would receive old age pension?

Mr. Lapointe: I shall deal with that matter. My hon. friend knows that an unemployable veteran might come in long before he is 60. He might come in under the war veterans allowance if he is totally disabled physically or mentally, and nothing can be done; no matter how high you raise the ceiling, you do not help that man. That is why we created the assistance fund a few years ago.

There is one thing I have noticed, and it is this. Whereas the creation of that fund was discussed at the time, in any representations that are now made to increase the ceilings under the War Veterans Allowance Act, there is no longer any demand that this assistance fund should disappear. All who are familiar with the operation of the act realize the necessity for it.

I think the hon. member for New Westminster mentioned the rigidity of the formula used in granting assistance under this fund. I did refer to that in my opening remarks. Last year we did broaden the formula used to qualify under the fund, and we did follow very closely its operation during the year. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, in my own estimation there are cases in which the formula now is not flexible enough, and it is the intention of the department and the war veterans allowance board to go into this and be able to deal with those individual cases of hardship which remain even with the existence of the fund.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Royal asked me if the war veterans allowance recipients reaching the age of 70 would not be able to benefit by the full amount of the old age security payment if the ceilings were raised to the levels that have been suggested. Well, that is quite true. This matter was raised by other members. On other occasions, I have given the government's view on the matter. I know I have been questioned in this house and outside. The fact of the matter is, whether or not one wishes to admit it, that one has to go back some years to the origin of the war veterans allowance to realize just what was behind that legislation. I have said this before the Canadian Legion at their dominion convention, and nobody contradicted me. Nobody has contradicted me so far. I should like, if I may, to quote exactly what I did say at that time, because it explains why certain things that are requested under the War Veterans Allowance Act, in the view of the government cannot be done. These remarks were made in 1954 at Toronto:

> War veterans allowances have been based, since their inception in 1930, on the premise that service in a theatre of war preaged a veteran and placed him in a more unfavourable position in the labour market than would have been the case if he had not had such service. Because of this accelerated aging, the allowances were introduced to provide for veterans who needed at age 60, a form of social security not available to their non-veteran contemporaries until they reached the age of 70.
>
> In effect, it was an old age security scheme designed especially to meet conditions peculiar to veterans who had seen combat service.
>
> Now—some of you may object to that assimilation of the war veterans allowance to other social security measures. But the fact remains that a perusal of the debates in the house and the deliberations of the parliamentary committee of 1930 will bear me out on this point.
>
> This being the case, any major changes in the War Veterans Allowance Act—particularly some which have been suggested—cannot help but have serious financial implications in other fields of governmental activities.

Mr. Chairman, that basically is why, when a recipient of war veterans allowance reaches the age of 70, the amount of his allowance is reduced by the amount of the old age security payment he receives. Otherwise, for all practical purposes, he would be receiving the equivalent of two old age pensions coming from two different sources. Unfortunately that is the position and no one has ever denied it. It is impossible to do so if you go back and study the origin of the legislation and the debates that took place at that time.

Mr. Brooks: Does he not receive it now? He is receiving one and a part of the other. He receives both.

Mr. Lapointe: Because the balance of the war veterans allowance within the ceiling is paid to him as assistance on account of his war service. The same reasoning applies to some of the other representations which were made. I do not think it can be ignored.

There was much said about service in England during the first war being recognized for the purpose—

Mr. Knowles: Before the minister leaves the matter he was just discussing I wonder if he would permit another question. If the minister is going to claim that there is a relationship between the war veterans allowance and the old age pension because of the origin of the war veterans allowance, should the government not now take cognizance of the fact that whereas the old age pension in 1930 had a means test, the old age security pension that is now paid at age 70 has no means test. Does that not make it necessary, if the government is going to draw this parallel, to do something about the means test on the war veterans allowance, which the minister says is the civilian old age pension which the civilian receives at age 70, paid to the veteran at an earlier age?

Mr. Lapointe: I think my hon. friend will admit that if the means test were taken away from the war veterans allowance the result would be that this legislation would become nothing less than pensions legislation for non-service incurred disability paid to veterans automatically on reaching a certain age. It would amount to that. I have never heard of any organized veterans' body in this country endorsing such a policy.

Mr. Knowles: If the minister is not prepared to take that move, is he fair then in saying that the parallel still exists between the war veterans allowance and the old age pension? My point is that he is correct historically in referring to the parallel in 1930, but surely cognizance has to be taken of the change that has been made with respect to old age pensions. I think the Legion and others who have made representations are being responsible and fair in suggesting as a compromise made necessary by the change not necessarily the removal of the means test from the war veterans allowance but a raising of the ceiling itself.

Mr. Lapointe: There has been a certain amount of compromise, because the ceiling was raised and certainly our regulations concerning casual earnings, farm earnings and earnings from keeping boarders and so on, if my hon. friend is familiar with them, are very generous.

Mr. Knowles: The ceiling was raised, for the single recipient, only by the amount of the increase; the margin was not raised.

Mr. Lapointe: It was raised from $60 to $70.

Mr. Knowles: The allowance was raised from $50 a month to $60 a month, but the margin was not changed from $10 a month.

Mr. Lapointe: I do not think that comes into it at all.

Mr. Knowles: We think it does.

Mr. Lapointe: This is one case where my hon. friend and I differ in our views. However, to return to what I was saying concerning service in England during the first war, it was suggested that it should be recognized as a qualification for war veterans allowance. I think if we go to the origin of this legislation, Mr. Chairman, we have to recognize that eligibility for war veterans allowance is based on service in an actual theatre of war. I know the hon. member for Royal in the course of his remarks the other day said that it used to be like that but it does not exist any more. I would like him to get together with his colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, because in the course of his remarks concerning war veterans allowance recipients he referred to them as "those fighting front line soldiers".

Mr. Brooks: That was the original idea. I would like to ask the minister this question in order to see if he and I agree. Is it not true that we give war veterans allowance to men who have dual service, and that a man who only had service in England in the first war and only had service in Canada in the second war without ever being near the front line receives war veterans allowance?

Mr. Lapointe: That is right.

Mr. Brooks: I also referred to the man who was in the back lines in France and never got near the front. That is my argument on behalf of the men who had service in England. I think we have come a long way from the original idea.

Mr. Lapointe: I do not fully agree with the hon. member for Royal, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the dual service veteran. I think the hon. member is as familiar as I am with the history of that particular section of the War Veterans Allowance Act. This change was brought in originally in 1944, and it was an order in council passed under the authority of the War Measures Act. It was known as the "veterans' dual service pension order". The hon. member will recall that, when we sat in the veterans affairs committee in the years that followed the war and were asked to put in statutory form the various orders that had been passed, something had to be done about that particular pension order and it was added to the War Veterans Allowance Act at that time as part III of the act.

Finally when we reviewed and consolidated the act in 1952—my hon. friend sat as a member of that committee—it was decided that rather than have a separate part of the War Veterans Allowance Act to deal with the dual service pension order, it would be simply included in the act as a section and it became, I think, section 30. These veterans were described in section 30 of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I say we cannot overlook the fact that the war veterans allowance was originally created and has always been looked upon as legislation designed to deal with the needy veteran who served in an actual theatre of war. It has been said that many of these men stayed in England not because of their own choice. They may have been kept there because they were on the administrative staff or for some other reason, and mention has been made of the fact that they would have liked to serve in an actual theatre of war. I point out, Mr. Chairman, that is the case with every man who enlists. If service in England during world war I is recognized as a qualification for war veterans allowance I do not see how we could eventually avoid recognizing service in Canada.

Mr. Brooks: That is not a logical conclusion.

Mr. Lapointe: My hon. friend shakes his head, but I would point out to him that particularly during the second world war many men stayed in Canada because they were kept here for some reason or another. I would cite, for example, the case of a flying instructor. I know some of them personnally who because they enlisted at the beginning of the war were considered too old to fly, because the air force was pretty choosey concerning age in those days at the beginning of the war. Those men were put on the instruction staff and remained there. They flew in Canada in that capacity throughout the war, and certainly they underwent as great a risk to their lives as anybody who served in England during the first war. If we were to consider preaging and the fact of having undergone hardship being likely to bring about preaging, I know my hon. friend is familiar with some of the training the army, for instance, was put through particularly during the final years of the war. I suggest that at the present time disability pensions are being paid to people who suffered disability on battle drill courses or assault courses where undoubtedly they were put through a very hard type of training.

Mr. Brooks: They were in the first war, too.

Mr. Lapointe: I am just mentioning those cases to illustrate how difficult it would be, if we granted the request that service in England during the first war be recognized, not to include service in Canada, as service in an actual theatre of war.

It was also mentioned that this change would not be very costly. It is estimated that recognizing England as a theatre of war during world war I would cost approximately $7,920,000, which would have to be added to the present cost of war veterans allowance; and of course if this were done and the previous request of some hon. members were granted that the ceilings be raised, this amount would also have to be increased.

Mr. Brooks: In that connection may I ask the minister if it is not true that the figure he quoted includes several thousand veterans who arrived in England in 1918, at about the time the war ended, and all the real service they had in England was training in some of the reserve camps?

Mr. Lapointe: I am afraid it would include all service in England; that is right. It is impossible for me to give the figure concerning those who came in at such a date and so on, but I am giving the figure for 1955. It is estimated that the probable number of veterans living in 1955 who had seen service only in England was 52,000. In arriving at this estimate we assumed that the same proportion would apply for war veterans allowance as in the case of other veterans who qualify, and that would be approximately 23 per cent. This refers to world war I, of course.

Mr. Churchill: These figures were given last year in the committee on estimates, and I quoted them last year when I was speaking. A total of 52,000 served in England, and the official who gave these figures estimated that 11,500 would be eligible for war veterans allowance, or 22 per cent—the minister makes it 23 per cent—with the cost being $9,650,000. I want to point out that on the basis of the total number of survivors of world war I and taking the number drawing war veterans allowance as being 10 per cent, the figure for the United Kingdom would be reduced greatly, and I estimate it would be only $4,200,000.

Mr. Lapointe: My hon. friend is quite an expert on figures and the interpretation of statistics, but I can only give to the committee the views which my officials and the financial members of my staff give to me. Those are based on our past experience with other veterans.

There is another point which was mentioned by some hon. members and to which I should like to refer briefly. This concerns the payment of war veterans allowance to recipients who were living outside of Canada for reasons of health. Last year the hon. member for Kootenay West spoke at some length on this subject and I told him that we would be looking into these particular cases, which would call for an amendment to the act. Since that time I have had discussions with officials of my department, and I asked them to investigate this situation thoroughly.

I regret to say that, after a great deal of discussion and thought we find it is not feasible to amend section 14 (1) as was suggested. Under the present legislation a recipient may absent himself from Canada for a period of up to three months in any calendar year without affecting the payment of his war veterans allowance, and he may dovetail his stay outside of Canada from one calendar year into another and thus be able to absent himself for six months without having his allowance reduced. However, he can do this only once every two years.

There are serious obstacles to making the suggested change in the legislation, one being the provision of treatment for recipients of war veterans allowance who are living outside of Canada. A great proportion of them need medical treatment from time to time, and this would involve the extension of the provisions of section 12 of the veterans' treatment regulations. It would be most difficult indeed to implement such provisions.

Then there would be the difficulty of arranging for periodical medical examinations of veterans who have not reached the age of 60 years but who are in receipt of war veterans allowance because they are totally unemployable. Such examinations would be most difficult indeed under the circumstances. There would also be the matter of administering the means test in connection with people living outside of Canada. Of course if we followed the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and eliminated the means test that obstacle would disappear, but I am afraid I cannot agree to that suggestion.

Complicated administrative problems would be created where the wife of a recipient of war veterans allowance did not accompany him when he left Canada but remained in Canada. It would be most difficult to amend this section of the act to permit a war veterans allowance recipient to go outside Canada to only one or two specific countries. During the course of the debate last year reference was made to the veteran who might wish to go to the southern part of the United States or Mexico. If the act were opened up to permit the payment of allowances in other parts of the world, the administrative problems thus created would be most complicated.

The hon. member for Kootenay West mentioned the specific case of a veteran who wanted to go to Mexico. Frankly I do not know how we could deal administratively with veterans in that country. As I understand it, the facilities for looking after veterans in that country certainly are not such as would meet the necessities created by our act. For that reason we have not found it feasible to agree to this change at this time.

I realize that I have taken longer than I had intended. There are many other matters on which I wish to answer hon. members, but I suggest that possibly it would be more useful to deal with specific items as they come up.

Item agreed to.

500. Veterans' welfare services, $3,155,735.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask a question having to do with veterans' preference in the civil service, and I do not know under what item this would come. No doubt the minister has received many complaints from veterans and veterans' organizations that the veterans' preference is not being observed as it should be in the civil service. Whether or not that is correct is not for me to say.

Recently I saw a letter from an officer of the Canadian war disability pensioners association in which he complained that there was apathy with regard to the employment of veterans in the House of Commons, and he then went on to quote specific instances. He mentioned the fact that out of 33 appointments at Kingston penitentiary in recent years only 11 were veterans, and he mentioned also that two recent appointments at Stony Mountain penitentiary were non-veterans.

I should like to ask the minister if there is any check by the Department of Veterans Affairs as to whether veterans are receiving the preference they should in connection with appointments to the civil service. The Department of Veterans Affairs is considered by the veterans to be their champion.

Mr. Lapointe: Veterans' preference in the civil service is statutory, as my hon. friend knows. It is part of the Civil Service Act and, to my knowledge and certainly to the knowledge of my officials, has always been observed. There have been drawn to our notice cases where in advertising for a position in the civil service the usual reference which always appears to the effect that preference would be awarded to veterans with overseas service had been omitted, but in actual fact, when the competition takes place, veterans' preference was observed because it is statutory. That was brought to our attention some time ago, and I think it has beeen remedied since then. As I understand my hon. friend, he wanted to know whether it was still in force.

Mr. Brooks: I wanted to know whether there was any branch of the department that checked up on the correctness of these complaints that preference was not being given.

Mr. Lapointe: When complaints of that nature are brought to our attention the welfare branch of the department investigates the case to find out whether or not they are accurate.

Mr. Brooks: Have there been any reports of inaccuracies after investigation?

Mr. Lapointe: Yes. The only report from our investigation was what I mentioned before. In some cases, the advertisement did not mention veterans' preference, but it had been applied in the actual competition.

Item agreed to.

Treatment services—

501. Operation of hospitals and administration, $39,347,750.

Mr. Knowles: I should like the Minister of Veterans Affairs to say something further regarding the matter of the five-day 40 hour week for employees in the hospitals that come under his department. I know that the last two or three times he has been asked questions on this matter on the orders of the day, including the occasion yesterday when I put a question to him, he has contented himself with the reply that he has already dealt with this matter. I must assure him, however, that that contentment is something he alone enjoys, for the employees of the hospitals where the five-day 40 hour week is not yet in effect feel that they are the victims of discrimination. In connection with this matter I should like to read to the minister a telegram which, I understand, is similar, if not identical, to telegrams received by all of us—

An hon. Member: It was already read.

Mr. Knowles: —from the Winnipeg area. This one is addressed to me. It reads as follows:

> Strongly protest the statement that appears to have been made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs to the effect that cabinet has not considered our representation for a five-day 40 hour week for hospital employees made last October.
>
> L. J. Perry, President,
> D.V.A. employees national association,
> Winnipeg.

Yesterday I asked the minister about the situation at Deer Lodge hospital, and it was one of those occasions on which he simply said that he had dealt with the matter on an earlier occasion and had nothing to add. On other occasions when we have pressed the government for an extension of the five-day 40 hour week we have been told—and this minister has told us—that it is the government's policy to institute the five-day 40 hour week only in those areas where it is the general practice. I hasten to assure him that the five-day 40 hour week is quite general in the Winnipeg area. Indeed, in recent weeks it has been extended in the case of employees of rather large firms or establishments where it was not previously enjoyed. On that account it seems to me that employees of Deer Lodge hospital should not have to wait further for the five-day 40 hour week.

Another argument which, it seems to me, is of equal force and should carry some weight with the government is that, as I understand it, some 90 per cent of the government's employees, taking all of them into consideration, classified civil servants and prevailing rates employees and others, are now on the five-day 40 hour week, and in that case it seems all the more ridiculous that the other 10 per cent should have to wait.

The other day the Leader of the Opposition asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether it was true that employees of D.V.A. hospitals get the same rate of pay whether they work the longer or the shorter week. The Minister of Veterans Affairs said that was something he would want to look into before commenting on it. Perhaps he has done so in the meantime. Certainly it is my understanding that members of the operating staffs at D.V.A. hospitals get the same rate of pay whether they are at a hospital that is on the five-day 40 hour week or a hospital where they work 44 hours a week.

I speak particularly of Deer Lodge hospital because it is in the Winnipeg area, but I join with those who have made similar representations for employees of hospitals in other parts of the country. I hope that this time the minister will not just say he has dealt with this before, but that he will either indicate to us that action will be taken on this matter at a very early date or that he will give us some better reason than we have yet had for such action not being taken. Naturally I hope that what he will do now is to indicate to us that the five-day 40 hour week will very soon be extended to the operating staffs of all hospitals coming under his department.

Mr. Lapointe: I am sorry that my hon. friend took my answer to his question yesterday in that way. I am sure I did not want to offend him in any manner, but I find that I had actually answered the question the day before.

Mr. Knowles: To the minister's satisfaction, but—

Mr. Lapointe: Whether or not my hon. friend finds the answer satisfactory is another matter altogether.

Mr. Knowles: There are also the telegrams that have been coming in since.

Mr. Lapointe: Yes, but my hon. friend did not mention the telegram when he put the question. If he looks at Hansard for yesterday he will find—

Mr. Knowles: Yes, because the telegram came later. That is the point. The grievance still exists.

Mr. Lapointe: If my hon. friend looks at Hansard of yesterday he will find that the telegram was read in this house by the hon. member for Quebec West, and I answered the question on this particular telegram. However, I do not think any discussion between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself is going to settle the question of the 40-hour week or satisfy the employees of D.V.A. hospitals. At this stage I can say that the matter is being looked into by the government, and if there is any change in policy it will be announced as a matter of government policy.

Mr. Harkness: In speaking earlier I expressed the hope that the minister might say something about the hospitalization of non-pensioned veterans, and particularly whether any changes might be under contemplation easing the regulations in that regard so that elderly veterans on comparatively low incomes might receive hospitalization without payment.

Mr. Lapointe: I referred in my opening remarks to the application of section 13 of the veterans' treatment regulations. I do not know exactly what my hon. friend wants by way of information beyond what I mentioned in my opening remarks. I believe I stated the amount that had been spent and the number of veterans who had taken advantage of that section and had benefited from it. I should like my hon. friend to restate his question.

Mr. Harkness: I read a resolution which had been passed by a local branch of the Legion in Calgary requesting that veterans above the age of 55 and with incomes below $1,800 for a single man and $3,500 for a married man should be able to take advantage of this hospitalization without payment rather than having to pay the sums they have to pay at the present time. I do not know how much these particular people have to pay, but in any event the rate is $14 a day for the non-pensioned veteran.

Mr. Lapointe: I may say that to my knowledge the resolution to which the hon. member refers was never presented to the dominion convention and as such was never presented to the government by the Canadian Legion. As my hon. friend knows, the section provides for a sliding scale having regard to income, in order that a veteran may not become financially embarrassed because of hospitalization if he is in the low income group. The sliding scale starts at $840 and goes up to $2,500 under what is called adjusted income. I could explain it at great length but I could not say anything more by way of explanation than appears in the pamphlets that were issued by the department and which I believe my hon. friend received, and which explain how this particular clause involving the sliding scale works.

In the last year 6,359 patients were treated under section 13, and that was done at a cost of $2,356,563. Of this amount only $546,726 was charged to the patients, which I think indicates the effectiveness of the sliding scale plan and how it operates in helping veterans to get treatment at a very low cost. Of course the indigent veteran is treated free in our veterans hospitals.

Item agreed to.

Treatment services—

503. Hospital construction, improvements, equipment and acquisition of land, $4,534,825.

Mr. Churchill: This item deals with hospital construction, etc., and involves an expenditure of $4½ million. Would the minister give us, as he did last year, a breakdown of that expenditure by provinces?

Mr. Lapointe: I think the figures I gave last year had to do with major projects then in progress. The information this year for major projects now in progress is as follows: Saint John, New Brunswick, Lancaster hospital, land purchase and construction of laundry, $184,925; Winnipeg, Deer Lodge hospital, replacement, 300 bed hospital, $900,000; Calgary, Colonel Belcher hospital, new wing and facilities, $900,000; Vancouver, Shaughnessy hospital, prosthetic and maintenance building and central heating plant, $650,000, and new wings and facilities, $225,000. I would think that would be the first payment at the commencement. That covers the major projects.

Mr. Churchill: I have one other comment with regard to the construction of hospitals. I have been in some of these veterans hospitals and I think they are a credit to our country. At the Lancaster military hospital in New Brunswick I saw an inscription on a bronze plaque which I thought was very much to the point and well chosen. These were the words:

> To the gallant men and women of the armed forces of Canada who have fought and suffered in her wars for freedom this hospital is dedicated by a grateful people.

When I read it I thought that was a fine inscription to be placed on a plaque in a veterans hospital and that it or a similar inscription might suitably be placed in other veterans hospitals. I wish my commendation could go further than that, but I regret to say that I must now raise an objection, and I want to give a warning to the minister. I take quite an interest in the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I try to give him advice from time to time.

Mr. Lapointe: I am very grateful.

Mr. Churchill: Therefore I am going to give him some advice on this occasion. He is concerned with other hospitals throughout the country. I am very much interested in the addition to the Deer Lodge hospital, and what I have to say about putting bronze plaques in military hospitals will also apply to other public buildings in which the minister might be interested so perhaps he might pass this word on to the Postmaster General. A new post office is going up in the city of Winnipeg and I do not want him to make the error there to which I am now going to refer.

The bronze plaque in the Lancaster military hospital is a very large plaque. I have given the inscription. The plaque measures 36 inches across and is 18 inches in depth. It is very large. One-third of the bronze plaque is taken up with the inscription I have read and to which I have given approval. Two-thirds of the plaque, the larger portion, is taken up with the names of the gentlemen who opened that hospital, a hospital erected by the people of Canada for the veterans of this country. It is to that practice that I raise objection. These hospitals as well as other public buildings have to be opened but those who open them are serving in a temporary capacity and their names do not need to be recorded for all time.

I recognize the fact that the minister is a representative of the new ruling class of Canada, the pseudo-aristocracy, the descendants of the family compact, foreshadowed in section 49 of the British North America Act; nevertheless I do not think it is correct that their names should be recorded for all time on public buildings in Canada. Consequently I draw attention to the fact that this plaque, which may be satisfactory to the people of Lancaster would not be satisfactory,

I think, in the city of Winnipeg, records the fact that the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the then deputy minister of veterans affairs opened that hospital and their names and titles are recorded in bronze, occupying two-thirds of that large plaque and dwarfing the one-third devoted to the inscription recording the fact that the people of Canada erected the hospital for their veterans. The type used for the Minister of Labour is one inch in size for each letter, and for the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his deputy the type is three-quarters of an inch in size for each letter.

If you look at the plaques which were set up just outside the library, on the occasion of the opening of the renovated building, you will see that they are much more modest in character and in the size of the type that is used. But at this veterans hospital erected by the people of Canada for disabled veterans and those in trouble, in great blazing letters three-quarters of an inch in height, we have recorded for all time the names of these temporary occupants of office, two of whom happen to be present here in the House of Commons and the other serving as a deputy minister. The three gentlemen are all deserving of recognition in some way or another for their services to their country, but I think it should not be done in this way. In so far as any new buildings are concerned out in the area in which I dwell, I suggest to the minister that this practice should not be followed.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Chairman, I regret that I was out of the chamber for a few moments and did not hear what the minister had to say with regard to new construction. What is in the books for Westminster and London?

Mr. Lapointe: As far as Westminster hospital is concerned, the situation is this. It is at the head of the priority list, if I might use that expression. As soon as the major projects which are now under construction—like Colonel Belcher hospital in Calgary, which will soon be finished, and the others I have mentioned—are completed, Westminster hospital will be the first one on which work will start thereafter. I would think that in next year's estimates there will be an item for the start of construction. At the present time we are working on the plans and specifications.

Item agreed to.

War veterans allowances and other benefits—

508. War veterans allowances, $41,192,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this matter might have been raised on item 507 but I thought the minister would like to get away from the block of figures with which he has been tied up and move on to another heading.

I have one question to raise with respect to the war veterans allowance. I am raising it now because, as a matter of fact, this morning I had another letter about this case which reminded me of it. It raises a problem on which I should like the minister to make a brief statement. We know that the war veterans allowance is paid under various categories, over 60 and so on and so forth, permanently unemployable, and then you come down to one who, because of physical or mental disability or insufficiency combined with economic handicaps, is incapable of maintaining himself.

The situation which was brought rather forcibly to my mind this morning by a rather pathetic letter—a situation with which the minister or his departmental officials dealt two years ago and which has now been revised—is one such as this. You have a veteran who has been receiving war veterans allowance. He had a kidney disability, as a result of which one kidney was removed by operation. He had tuberculosis of the other. He had been receiving war veterans allowance up to two years ago, when somebody decided that he was then capable of earning a living. An appeal was taken and as a result the war veterans allowance was restored. Since then he has had two more operations on that kidney, so his condition apparently was not too good two years ago. Now he has been in Camp Hill hospital for examination, and he received a letter last week saying that, according to the doctors, he was now capable of earning a living. So his war veterans allowance has been cancelled as of July 31 this year.

I can understand the position of the department. Apparently, the section is mandatory and provides that if the medical officer says that he is capable of earning a living, there is no alternative. Frankly, I do not know what the minister can do about it. I think there should be some elasticity brought into the picture somewhere. Obviously there has been such elasticity or else he could not have got around the appeal two years ago. When you go on to the next section, you find that it is much more elastic, where provision is made for payment of benefits to employable veterans because there the requirement is that he is unable to maintain himself or is capable of taking only light employment.

At the same time, I know this is not the place to amend the act, and I quite appreciate the fact that some departmental officials have taken it upon themselves to view that section very leniently in restoring war veterans allowance, and they will have the same responsibility on their shoulders within the next few days. But I would think there should be another section in there which would give some discretion.

The situation is this. This particular man is a labourer with a grade VI education and living away out in the country. I know he was told at one time, "Perhaps you can operate an elevator". He never saw an elevator in his life, and he would be scared to death if he got into one; or if he got into one and operated it, he would probably kill whoever was in it. If he had training as a bookkeeper or as a school teacher, possibly he would be able to earn a living. But as a labourer, living in a rural community where, frankly, the only employment open to a labourer would be that of digging ditches, it is practically impossible for him to earn his living, though from a medical standpoint he might be capable of earning a living if he had employment categories open to him.

I am bringing the matter to the attention of the minister. As I said, I appreciate the fact that on an earlier occasion there was elasticity in the interpretation given to the section, and that was helpful. On many occasions there must be need for such elasticity. But I would think it would be a matter worthy of an amendment of some kind, so the minister or his departmental officials would have discretion there. When you get shall we say a hard-boiled doctor—and some of them are hard-boiled because, I suppose, they are obliged to be so in order to carry out their profession—who says, "You are capable of earning a living, in my opinion", then what does the department do about it?

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Chairman, of course it is extremely hard for me to make any comment on the specific case mentioned by my hon. friend because I do not know the details. With him, I will admit that the man concerned does not sound like a very healthy type. I shall be glad to look into the case again and see what can be done.

Mr. Nowlan: Of course that is the whole point. He does not have to be healthy. He just has to be capable of earning a living. That is the wording of the section.

Mr. Knowles: Despite what the Minister of Veterans Affairs said today in reply to what I thought were excellent representations made by many members for raising the ceiling on the war veterans allowance, I hope he will give this matter still further consideration. It seems to me that the Legion is most responsible in the figures it has suggested, namely a $1,200 ceiling for single recipients and $2,000 for married recipients. Because those figures are fair and responsible, we on this side of the house naturally do not like to suggest anything less.

However, it seems to me that the minister took advantage of that situation and was satisfied to take the view that there were only two choices; either the present ceiling or the figure advocated by the Canadian Legion and suggested in this house. If the minister and the government have not yet seen the light and are not prepared to go as far as the Legion has suggested I would hope that at least they would realize the force of the argument that has been made in the house and would start moving upward the ceilings on the total incomes of war veterans allowance recipients.

I listened with interest to the arguments the minister advanced today, and I confess that he did not convince me as well as he appears to have convinced himself. He pointed out, for example, that to establish a ceiling of $1,200 on the income of war veterans allowance recipients would be to set a figure equal to about 80 per cent of the disability pension. I point out to him, however, what all of us realize, that to establish a ceiling of $1,200 for single war veterans allowance recipients does not give them $1,200 a year. It merely permits them to supplement their war veterans allowance up to that figure.

May I also point out the other difference that would still obtain between the war veterans allowance recipient, if the ceiling were set at $1,200, and the disability pensioner, namely that there is no ceiling on the income of a disability pensioner. It seems to me that these same answers apply to the other examples the minister gave, and that in fact to establish a higher ceiling on war veterans allowances would not be as unfair—I am not sure if that is the word he used but that is the spirit I caught from what he said—as he suggested it would be to the disability pensioner. I do not hear any disability pensioners complaining about the suggestion that something better be done for war veterans allowance recipients. As a matter of fact those ceilings in the War Veterans Allowance Act have a limiting effect on the income of many recipients of the disability pension.

As the minister and all of us know, where a disability pensioner is receiving an amount as a disability pension which is equal to or higher than the ceiling set in the War Veterans Allowance Act he is denied the possibility of any supplement under the War Veterans Allowance Act. On the other hand, if the ceiling were raised under the War Veterans Allowance Act it would be of assistance not only to those who receive only the war veterans allowance, not only to the others who might come in, but it would be of assistance as well to many who receive disability pensions in the lower percentage brackets.

The minister also gave the example of a war veterans allowance recipient now drawing $60 a month. He said that if the ceiling were raised to $1,200 a year or $100 a month, that would permit him, when he reached 70 years of age, to draw the $40 old age pension in full and still keep the full amount of his war veterans allowance, bringing him up to $100 per month. Against that the minister set the case of a 45 per cent disability pensioner drawing $675 a year disability pension and $480 old age security or a total of $1,155 a year. He said further that that person, if the ceiling were raised to $1,200, would be able to draw only another $45 a year as war veterans allowance.

As I took it from the minister, he seemed to suggest that there was something of an imbalance between the treatment accorded the disability pensioner and the war veterans allowance recipient in that situation. May I point out that so far as the war veterans allowance recipient to whom he referred is concerned, prior to reaching age 70, at $60 a month he is already receiving $720 a year which, of course, is more than the 45 per cent disability pensioner is receiving under that legislation. The 45 per cent disability pensioner does not complain about that so long as there is a margin that permits him to get a supplement by way of war veterans allowance if his income is not adequate.

All told, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that these comparisons the minister sought to make between the position of the disability pensioner and the war veterans allowance recipient are not valid. For these, and for the other excellent reasons that have been advanced in the discussion of these estimates, I hope that further consideration will be given by the government to raising these ceilings. I wish the government would start making some upward move at this session. Certainly the ceilings should be set at nothing less than the figures suggested by the Legion of $1,200 single or $2,000 married, but surely it is possible to make a start in that upward direction at this session.

Mr. Argue: I wish to support the request of the Canadian Legion that the allowable income ceilings on war veterans allowance recipients be increased. I think over the years the Canadian Legion have taken a very responsible attitude so far as government legislation is concerned. Their proposals have always been moderate and responsible. I think their proposals today in relation to the war veterans allowance are very modest indeed. They are not asking, though I think they might have reason to ask, that the basic pension itself be increased above the $60 for a single person or $108 for a married couple. The new income ceiling they suggest of $1,200 per year single or $2,000 a year for a person who is married I think is quite low enough.

Today the cost of living is at an all-time high. If such a person could obtain the extra allowable income to reach the $100 a month, that would be little enough to meet the current cost of living. The Legion is asking for only a $30 per month increase for a single person and $46.66 increase in the allowable income per month for married veterans.

I would like to see, as others have said, a veterans affairs committee established again. I believe that in the past members of that committee have taken a very sympathetic attitude towards the veterans. I believe that if a representative committee of this house were to discuss this question they would bring in a recommendation that would, in large measure, meet the requests of the Canadian Legion.

I have only a few more remarks to make, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Argue: I have just one other remark. I cannot understand why persons on war veterans allowance who become 70 years of age are not allowed to have the old age security pension without a reduction being made in the war veterans allowance. I have had persons say to me, one living across the road from another, that it seems an anomaly that a person who is quite capable of taking care of himself in his old age, quite wealthy, reaches the age of 70 and gets an additional $40 per month, but a person on war veterans allowance will have his allowance decreased by $30 per month, if he is a single veteran without additional income, or by $58 per month for a veteran and his wife on old age security if they have no additional income. I would suggest that the minister take a look at this question and place the veterans who are on war veterans allowance in the same position as other Canadians.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: If the committee will permit me, may I say it has been indicated to me that there is a desire to make a change or two in the personnel of the standing committees, and under those circumstances would the committee agree to reporting the resolutions and asking leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

RESEARCH

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is there unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Hahn be substituted for that of Mr. Low on the special committee on research.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

War veterans allowances and other benefits—

509. Assistance fund (war veterans allowances), $650,000.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I notice reference in this item to the erection of headstones. Would the cost of a headstone and its erection be provided for in the case of a veteran who died and was buried in other than a military cemetery?

Mr. Lapointe: A headstone is provided by the department in every case where a veteran dies while under treatment in a veterans' hospital and the department has contributed toward the cost of burial, and in the case of the death of a disability pensioner discretion is given to the commission to pay for a headstone if the financial circumstances of the deceased warrant such a decision. Similarly, headstones are provided by the Last Post fund in the case of veterans who are buried by that fund, and of course they are provided for all veterans in our war cemeteries overseas. The latter is handled through the imperial war graves commission.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I presume that would apply also to Indians who were war veterans.

Mr. Harkness: The hon. member for Royal is not able to be here this evening because of the activities of the research committee, and he asked me to bring up the matter of assistance provided under the war veterans allowance. I note that the amount spent under this vote last year was about $375,000 less than the amount voted. The act provides for the payment of $10 per month or $120 per year to completely unemployable old veterans who are receiving war veterans assistance, but it would appear that the average payment is considerably under that amount. I should like to know the average amount paid to these unemployable old veterans. My information is that instead of $120 per year being paid the average is between $60 and $70, or about one-half.

It would appear from the fact that the amount voted last year was considerably underspent that the regulations have been rigorously applied. I submit that this is one group who are probably in about as bad a situation as any group in the Dominion of Canada. These old veterans are completely unemployable and it is impossible for them to supplement their war veterans allowances. In spite of that fact, if my information is correct on the average they get only a little more than half what the legislation provides.

I should like the minister to tell us what was the average amount paid and why the vote was underspent by more than one-third last year?

