SOME DAIRY RULES.
The following rules concerning the production and handling of milk have been drawn up by the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Animal Industry.

1. Read current dairy literature and keep posted on new ideas.
2. Observe and enforce the utmost cleanliness about the cattle, their attendants, the stable, the dairy and all utensils.
3. A person suffering from any disease or who has been exposed to a contagious disease must remain away from the cows and the milk.
4. Keep dairy cattle in a room or building by themselves. It is preferable to have no cellar below and no storage room below the stable.
5. Stables should be well ventilated, lighted and drained; should have tight floors and walls and be plainly constructed.
6. Never use manure or dirty litter.
7. Allow no strongly smelling material in the stable for any length of time. Store the manure under cover outside the cow stable, and remove it to a distance as often as practicable.
8. Whitewash the stable once or twice a year. Use lime plaster in the manure gutters daily.
9. Use no dry, musty feed just previous to milking. If fodder is dusty, sprinkle it before it is fed.
10. Clean and thoroughly air the stable before milking. In hot weather sprinkle the floor.
11. Keep the stable and dairy room in good condition, and then insist that the dairy, factory or place where the milk goes be kept equally well.
12. Have the herd examined at least twice a year by a skilled veterinarian.
13. Promptly remove from the herd any animal suspected of being in bad health and reject her milk, especially tuberculosis.
14. Do not move cows faster than a comfortable walk while on the way to place of milking or feeding.
15. Never allow the cows to be excited by driving, abuse, loud talking or unnecessary disturbance; do not expose them to cold or storm.
16. Do not change the feed suddenly.
17. Feed liberally, and use only fresh, palatable feed stuffs; in no case should decomposed or moldy material be used.
18. Provide water in abundance, easy of access and always pure; fresh but not too cold.
19. Salt should always be accessible.
20. Do not allow any strong-flavored food, like garlic, cabbage and turnips, to be eaten, except immediately after milking.
21. Clean the entire body of the cow daily. If hair in the region of the udder is not easily kept clean it should be clipped.
22. Do not use the milk within 20 days before calving nor within three to five days afterward.
23. The milker should be clean in all respects; he should use tobacco; he should wash and dry his hands just before milking.
24. The milker should wear a clean outer garment, used only when milking, and kept in a clean place at all times.
25. Brush the udder and surrounding parts just before milking, and wipe them with a clean, damp cloth or sponge.
26. Milk quickly, quietly, cleanly and thoroughly. Cows do not like unnecessary noise or delay. Commence milking at exactly the same hour every morning and evening, and milk the cows in the same order.
27. Throw away, but not on the floor, the cream in the gutter, the first few streams from each teat; this milk is very watery and of little value.
28. If in any milking a part of the milk is bloody or stringy or unnatural in appearance, the whole mass should be rejected.
29. Milk with dry hands; never allow the hands to come in contact with the milk.
30. Do not allow dogs, cats or loafers to be around at milking time.
31. If any accident occurs by which a pail falls or partly full of milk becomes dirty, do not try to remedy this by straining, but reject all this milk and rinse the pail.
32. Weigh and record the milk given by each cow, and take a sample morning and night, at least once a week, for testing by the fat test.
33. Remove the milk of every cow at once from the stable to a clean, dry room, where the air is pure and sweet. Do not allow cans to remain in stables while they are being filled.
34. Strain the milk through a metal gauze and a flannel cloth or layer of cotton as soon as it is drawn.
35. Aerate and cool the milk as soon as strained. If an apparatus for aeration and cooling at the same time is not at hand, the milk should be aired first. This must be done in pure air, and then it should be cooled to 45 degrees if the milk is for shipment, or to 60 degrees if for home use or delivery to a factory.
36. Never close a can containing warm milk which has not been aerated.
37. If cover is left off the can, a piece of cloth or mosquito netting should be used to keep out insects.
38. If milk is stored, it should be kept in tanks of fresh, cold water, renewed daily, in a clean, dry, cool room. Unless it is desired to remove cream, it should be stirred with a tin stirrer often enough to prevent forming a thick cream layer.
39. Keep the highest weather under shelter so rain cannot get into the cans. In warm weather hold it in a tank of fresh water.
40. Never mix fresh milk with that which has been cooled.
41. Do not allow the milk to freeze.
42. Under no circumstances should anything be added to milk to prevent its souring. Cleanliness and cold are the only preventives needed.
43. All milk should be in good condition when delivered. This may make it necessary to deliver twice a day during the summer months.
44. When cans are hauled far they should be full and carried in a spring wagon.
45. In hot weather cover the cans when moved in a wagon, with a clean wet blanket or canvas, but do not use the canvas.
46. Milk utensils for farm use should be made of metal and have joints smoothly soldered. Never allow them to become rusty or rough inside.
47. Do not haul waste products back to the farm in the same cans used for delivering milk. When this is unavoidable, insist that the skim milk or whey be kept inside.
48. Cans used for the return of skim milk or whey should be emptied and cleaned as soon as they arrive at the farm.
49. Clean all dairy utensils by first thoroughly rinsing them in warm water; then clean inside and out with a brush and hot water in which cleansing material is dissolved; then rinse and lastly sterilize by boiling water or steam. Use pure water only.
50. After cleansing, keep utensils, inverted, in pure air, and sun if possible, until wanted for use.

"HANDSOME IS..."
There are certain advantages that accrue to the plain woman that no matter how much she is adored by her admirers she will not care to share. This bit of information is offered tentatively, with the idea that it may, to some degree at least, act as a balm to heart-burnings and as a salve to heart-breakings.

The pretty woman may receive all sorts of favors at the hands of the men, but she is able to bury herself in the quietude of her domestic life and to contract a well-defined case of indigestion from the candy offered at her shrines, but she will never have the pleasure of hearing herself described as a woman who will make a splendid wife.

She may be called everything, from an angel to a fiend, during her lifetime, but it is reserved for her sorrowful Sister Jane to tell that some man will find a treasure of a housekeeper in her homely little person.

There's a beauty known, who is one of a large family. The other sisters are plain and they are also not particularly strong. It has fallen to Beauty's lot to darn stockings, and make deserts and hem sheets, and generally to do the household work.

She is almost too beautiful for every-day life," these astute ones will say carelessly, "but Priscilla is a sensible woman. She makes very good caramels and Welsh rabbit, does Priscilla." If I were a man I think I'd make love to her. A man could probably remedy her complexion."

When a prospective mother-in-law heard to declare her son's fiancée was a nice practical little woman who will make him comfortable, it's nine chances out of ten that that young woman is long on seriousness and short on looks.

When, to the contrary, the fiancée is spoken of lightly as a "pretty little thing," it doesn't take a Sherlock Holmes to infer that she is deemed too good-looking to make beds well or even to raise the young 'uns so that they will shoot correctly.

GOLD IN A WILD GOOSE.
A wild sensation has been caused in New Westminster, B.C., by the discovery of $12,500 in gold coins which were found in the crop of a wild goose which was killed at Pitt lake, 28 miles from Westminster.

Prospectors have started for the scene of the supposed gold placers.

THE ESCULENT CEREAL.
Celery is fast taking a prominent place among vegetables, but even yet does not receive the attention its merits demand. It is one of our finest esculents, and it may be served in such a variety of methods that it never becomes tiresome. It is claimed to be invaluable to sufferers from rheumatism and all nervous affections. No part of the plant need be wasted.

AN EVENING OF SONG.
The time is here when our evenings must be spent indoors, and our readers, who are fond of company, will be thinking of ways to entertain their friends.

Suppose you try an evening of song. Send your friends the following invitation:

Mrs. R— invites you to her home for Tuesday night at eight. She promises you a feast of song. Nor will she keep you late. Please to this call make quick reply. But if you cannot come tall why, And won't you kindly take the time To write your answer out in rhyme! Among your friends are those who can sing and play and recite. Ask those who you know will do well to help you in your evening's program. They will be delighted to be called upon.

The replies to your invitation should be read by the host or hostess, which will afford much amusement. Light refreshments served after the program will add greatly to what will be a pleasant evening at home.

THE CRIME OF THE TAILOR MADE.
A pessimistic Parisian prophet has declared that the vogue of the tailor-made gown has degraded the art of dressmaking until there is no longer ambition enough left in its high priests to inspire them to noble efforts. The great men of the past, such as Worth, Felix and the first Doucet, in the opinion of this disconcerting observer, will find no successors. There is entirely too much of the prevailing tailor-made to create artists in the profession. This complaint coming from a dressmaker has particular eloquence, as it is directed against the men in his own business. For one of the conditions precedent to a "successful" tailor-made is that it be the handiwork of a man and usually of one who has had experience in making the clothes of his own sex.

Earlier masters of the craft never had to impart the slightest suggestion of masculinity to the gown they made. The men dressmakers who began to prosper during the Second Empire had no thought of the revolution in fashion that would make men the most popular costumers for women, because they would apply to their styles the same methods that had made them successful with men. The Parisian who sees the decline of art in women's dressing to-day attributes this state of affairs as much to the moral influence of the tailor-made as to its present vogue all over the world. It is a cheaper kind of gown than well-dressed women ever wore before and it has made them economical in their expenditures. It can be worn almost anywhere outside of a ballroom and women have become indifferent as to the little proprieties of dress which they formerly observed so carefully. Nowadays they may take their afternoon drive in a tailor-made and in the same attire pay formal calls.

The elaborate costumes for afternoon wear have therefore disappeared almost entirely before the triumphant march of this new garment, which is crushing out by its utility all the graces and beauty of dress that used to interest women and inspire the dressmakers to designing gowns that really entitled them to be ranked among the artists of their day. This is less true in some of the European cities than it is in New York. Here and in London the cloth dress is always a tailor-made, whereas in Paris and Vienna the most costly dresses women can wear are embroidered clothes. But this kind of a tailor-made is unknown here.

It is against the more common kind of tailor-made that this French writer directs his attacks. He finds that its influence has also been most democratic. Duchesses and shop girls look alike nowadays to a degree they never did before, as the tailor-made can be brought within the reach of almost any purse, whereas the gowns made by the former masters in the profession could not. National differences in women's dress have also disappeared under the leveling influence of the tailor-made, as it is the same in Italy that it is in Austria or England. Well-dressed women would be inclined to dispute the soundness of this part of the article, for they know the difference of dress as it is made in various countries. None of them would be likely to choose a gown made, for instance, in Rome, when they could get one in New York or London. Their opinion of the tailor-made would probably be that for its general style the London article was the best, while here it is brought to greatest perfection and made with the greatest care and most complete finish.

ment as their standard have everywhere decreased their expenditures in all kinds of dress. Real lace is, for instance, no longer in demand, because the imitation looks well enough and costs so much less. Even the comfort in the thought that a court might once more elevate the ideals of dress in France is denied to this pessimistic observer, because even queens and princesses have succumbed to the baneful influences of the tailor-made. Some of its advantages are grudgingly admitted. Its economy is scarcely to be included among them for that has accomplished too much evil in other directions to be accounted a merit. It is becoming to good figures, which it shows off to advantage. But its influence has reduced to half a dozen the number of women in Paris who spend $20,000 a year on their dressing, and that is crime enough in the eyes of the great dressmakers to put the tailor-made under a ban forever.

ENCOURAGE THE CHILDREN.
It is somewhere related that a poor soldier, having had his skull fractured, was told by the doctor that his brains were visible. "Do write to father," he replied, "and tell him 'for he always said I had no brains.'" How many fathers and mothers tell their children such, or how often does such a remark contribute not a little to prevent any development of the brain. A grown-up person tells a child he is brainless or foolish, or that he is deficient in some mental or moral faculty, and in some cases the statement becomes a belief, or if not fully believed, the thought that it may be partially so acts like an incubus to repress the confidence and energies of that child. But while all this appeared so dark around him, and he had so often been told of his faults and deficiencies that he seemed to himself the dullest and worst of boys—and while none of his good qualities or capabilities had been mentioned, and he believed he had none, a single word of praise and appreciation carelessly dropped in his hearing, changed his whole course of thought. He has often said that "that word saved him." The moment he thought he could do well he resolved that he would—and he has done well.

Parents, these are important considerations. Sometimes encourage your children without an "if." Do not always tell them they can be good or can do well "if" they will do this or so well, and that there is nothing to hinder them.

A CHINESE WEDDING.
When a marriage takes place in China the wedding party enter the temple and light a quantity of fireworks, including a number crackers. This is supposed to make the "Great Ghost" from his sleep. The priest repeats the service at three paces, the bride and bridegroom take two little glasses of wine and are then declared man and wife.

Bank of N. B. to the Fore. The Evening Telegram of Toronto, Feb. 22, says: "The Bank of Nova Scotia has organized a hockey team - too late for entry into the Bank League - but they are so cocky that they talk of challenging the winners of the league championship."

It was voted unanimously that an exhibition be held next fall and it is hoped the proposed new building will be opened at that occasion.

During the past week the members of Chatham Carling Club have been keeping up the play in the Lovers' match. In addition to the results reported in last week's ADVANCE the risks playing since have come out as follows:

Board of directors made inquiries with a view of securing the L-1000 plot property, so called, as a site for a building and also a track. It was found, however, that the plot was too heavy at the south end, especially and the soil too rocky for track purposes.

SUEZ CANAL TO BE WIDENED.

Engineering Scheme for This Purpose... The Suez Canal is to be deepened and widened, if Mr. Linden W. Bates, the London, hydraulic engineer, who is now at Suez, reports that the work can be done within a reasonable time.

Both the war office and the colonial office are concerned in the enlargement of the canal, and the British government is indubitably by the latter department.

A RACKING COUGH.

AFFLICTED THE SUPPER FOR TWENTY YEARS.

Often set up in Bed coughing the "White Night" - Doctors. Exhaustively Told him the Trouble was developing Pink Consumption - How Relief was obtained From the Times, Picton, Ont.

Nothing racks the body more than a severe cough. If it is allowed to run for any length of time, it is very hard to get rid of, and often leads to that most dreaded of all diseases - consumption.

Such a sufferer was Mr. Thomas Jinks, of Prince Edward county. Mr. Jinks relates the following facts to a Picton Times reporter: "I am sixty-seven years of age, and for the last twenty years I have had a racking cough."

"I was sitting on the high stone wall, come around on the other side of the house, and you will see me." The face that looked down into Daisy's almost took her breath away for a single instant, it was so like Rex's.

"Certainly," said Daisy, stooping down with a strange, unexplainable thrill at her sun, and picking up the wide-brimmed hat and crutch which was unaccountably broken by her fall.

"Oh, my crutch is broken!" she cried, in dismay. "What shall I do? I can't walk back to the house. I am lame!"

"Let me see if I can help you," said Daisy, scaling the stone wall with the grace of a fawn. "Put your arms around my neck," she said, "and cling very tight. I will soon have you down from your high perch; never mind the crutch. I can carry you up to the porch; it is not very far, and you are not heavy."

"Thank you," said the child. "I know you are tired; we will rest a moment, please, on this fallen log." The touch of the little girl's hand, the glance of the soft brown eyes, and the tone of her voice seemed to recall every word and glance of Rex, and hold a strange fascination for her.

"I shall tell my mother and my brother how good you have been to me, and they will thank you, too. My name is Birdie; please tell me yours."

"My name is Daisy Brooks," she answered. Poor little girl-bride, there had been a time when she had whispered to her heart that her name was Daisy Lyon; but the bright dream was over now, she would never be sought like the Daisy Brooks.

"Is your name really Daisy?" cried the little girl in a transport of delight, scarcely catching the last name. "Why, that is the name my brother loves best in the world. You have such a sweet face," said the child, earnestly. "I would choose the name of some flower as just suited to you. I should have thought of Lily, Rose, Pansy or Violet; but I should never have thought of anything one-half so pretty as Daisy; it just suits you."

All through her life Daisy felt that to be the sweetest compliment ever paid to her. Daisy laughed—the only happy laugh that had passed her lips since she had met Rex that morning under the magnolia-tree.

"Shall I tell you what my brother said about daisies?" "Yes, you may tell me, if you like," Daisy answered, observing the child delighted to talk of her brother.

"He has been away for a long time," explained Birdie. "He only came home last night, and I cried myself to sleep, was so glad. You see, said the child, growing more confidential, and nesting closer to Daisy's side, and opening wide her great brown eyes. "I was crying for fear he would bring home a wife, and mamma was crying for fear he wouldn't. I wrote him a letter all by myself once, and begged him not to marry, but he came home all the child overjoyed. When he answered my letter, he increased a little presently, with a golden hair and little white leaves around it, saying: 'There is no flower like the daisy for me; he always talks about them as pearls beyond price.' I planted a whole bed of them beneath his window, and I placed a fresh vase of them in his room, mingled with some forget-me-nots, and when he saw them, he caught me in his arms, and cried, as though his heart would break."

"If the white fleecy clouds in the blue sky, the murmuring sea, or the silver-throated bobolink swinging in the green leafy bough above her head, had only whispered to Daisy why he loved the flowers so well which were the name of Daisy; how much misery might have been spared her loving heart! The gray, dusky shadows of twilight were creeping up from the sea.

Heiress and Wife.

How poor little Daisy's heart longed for sympathy and consolation! Oh, if only she dared tell Rex that great hidden sorrow that seemed eating her away! She felt that she must unburden her heart to some one, or it must surely break.

"Eve," she said, her little hands closing softly over the restless brown one drumming a tattoo on the window-sash, she sent golden beads dropping so close to Eve's, her curls mingled with her dark locks, "I could never love any one in this world again. I loved once—the reaction of the most bitter, experience of my life. The same voice that spoke tender words to me cruelly cast me from him. Yet I love him still with all my heart. Do not talk to me of love, or love, Eve, I cannot bear it. The world will never hold but one face for me, and that is the face of him who is lost to me forever."

"Oh, how delightfully romantic!" cried Eve. "I said to myself over and over again there was some mystery in your life. I have seen such strange shadows in your eyes, and your voice had the sound of tears in it. It is as if I could help you in some way," said Eve thoughtfully. "I'd give the world to set the matter straight for you. What's his name, where does he live?"

"I can not tell you," said Daisy, shaking her golden curls sadly. "Oh, dear! then I do not see how I can help you," cried Eve. "You can not," replied Daisy; "only keep my secret for me."

"I will," she cried, earnestly. And as they parted, Eve resolved in her own mind to bring his true name of Daisy's back to his old allegiance; but the first and most important step was to discover his name.

Eve went directly to her own room, her brain whirling with a new plan, which she meant to put into execution at once. While Daisy strolled on through the grounds, choosing the less frequented paths, she wanted to be alone by herself to have a good cry. Tomorrow she felt so much better for having made a partial confidante of Eve.

"You must put me down while you fix your veil," said Birdie. "You can not see with it so. These are huge stones in the path, you would stumble and fall."

"So I shall," assented Daisy, as she placed the child down on the soft, green grass. At that instant, swift, springing footsteps came hurriedly down the path, and a voice, which seemed to pierce her very heart, called: "Birdie, little Birdie, where are you, where are you?"

"Here, Brother Rex," called the child, holding out her arms to him with eager delight. "Come here, Rex and carry me; I have broken my crutch."

For one brief instant the world seemed to stand still around poor, hapless Daisy, the forsaken girl-bride. The wonder was that she did not die, so great was her intense emotion. Rex was standing before her—the handsome, passionate lover, who had married her on the impulse of the moment; the man whom she loved with her whole heart, and who had made an idol in her girlish heart, and worshipped—the lover who had vowed so earnestly he would shield her forever from the cold, cruel world.

"Yes, it was Rex! She could not see through the thick, misty veil, how pale his face was in the gathering darkness. Oh, Heaven! how her passionate little heart went out to him! How she longed, with a passionate longing which could not tell, to touch his hand, or rest her weary head on his breast."

Her brain whirled; she seemed to live again in those few moments. Should she throw herself on her knees, and cry out to him, "Oh, Rex, Rex, my darling! I am not guilty! Listen to me, my love. Hear my pleading—listen to my prayer! I am more sinned against than sinning. My life has been as pure as an angel's; take me back to your heart, or I shall die!"

"She has been so good to me, Rex," whispered Birdie, clinging to the girl which covered Daisy's face. "I broke my crutch and she has carried me from the stone wall; won't you please thank her for me, brother?"

Daisy's heart nearly stopped beating; she knew the eventful moment of her life had come. Her handsome young husband, turned courteously toward her, extending his hand with a winning smile.

CHAPTER XIX. On the day following Rex's return home, and the morning preceding the events narrated in our last chapter, Mrs. Theodore Lyon sat in her dressing-room eagerly awaiting her son; her eyebrows met in a dark frown, and her jeweled hands were locked tightly together in her lap.

"Rex is like his father," she muttered; "he will not be coerced in this matter of marriage. He is reckless and willful, yet kind of heart. For long years I have set my heart upon this marriage between Rex and Plum."

"There will be nothing wanting for the reception of his bride," she said. "I can and in but one way," she told herself. "Rex will bring Plum home as his bride."

The Pennington Girl.

Winlow had been fishing—or pretending to—all the morning, and he was desperately thirsty. He boarded with the Beckwiths on the Riverside East Shore, but he was never in Riverside West, and he knew the Penningtons well. He had often been there for bait and milk and had listened times out of mind to Mrs. Pennington's dismal tales of her tribulations with hired girls. She never could get along with them, and they left, on an average, after a fortnight's trial. She was on the lookout for one now, he knew, and would likely be cross, but he thought she would give him a drink.

Winlow's first bewildered thought was "What a goodly lot!" and he wondered, as he politely asked for a drink, where on earth Mrs. Pennington had picked her up. She handed him a tin in hand, winking drollingly at him. "She was rather tall, and wore a somewhat limp, faded print gown, and a big sunhat beneath which a glossy curl of chestnut showed itself. Her eyes were very fair, somewhat freckled, and her mouth was delicious. As for her eyes, they were gray, but beyond that, simply defied description."

"Will you have some more?" she asked, in a soft, smiling voice. "No, thank you. That was delicious. Is Mrs. Pennington home?"

"No, she has gone away for the day. Well, I suppose I can sit down here and rest awhile. You've no serious objections, have you?"

"She carried her pain into the kitchen and took a glass of water, and a knife and a pan of apples. Sitting down on a bench under the poplars she proceeded to peel them with a disregard of his presence that piqued Winlow, who was so used to being ignored in this fashion. Besides, as a general rule, he had been quite good friends with Mrs. Pennington's hired girls. She had had three strapping ones for her own, and a cur and a weak-brained idiot."

"What is your name?" "Nelly Ray."

"Nelly Ray, I hope you'll be able to look after my garden. I've got a bit of friendly advice. Don't let the cats get into the pantry. That is what Mrs. Pennington has quarreled with nearly every one of her girls about."

"I must, it's time to get dinner. Mr. Pennington will be in from the fields soon."

There are two secrets of the gentle art of dinner-giving. The first is, keep within your means. To be definite, do not invite more guests than you can seat in comfort, or serve with ease, and do not attempt too ambitious dishes. No woman is better loved by her friends because she is a better cook than they, though many may love her in spite of the fact, keep well within your limits as to your waiters' abilities, and the number of your spoons and forks, and have an easily prepared menu. A hostess naturally wishes to give her guests her very best, but to give all her best at one dinner is to draw too heavily on her future; she should leave something for next time.

It is the absurd idea that it takes a great outlay of time, strength and money to give dinners that makes many women feel they cannot entertain at all in this way. Of course in giving a dinner there must be some unusual effort, some preparation out of the ordinary, but it should be minimized as far as possible. The neglect of the ordinary, but it should be done the day before, the silver cleaned and counted out, the china laid in piles, the orders given to the markets and the florist, the menu and dinner cards written, the places assigned, the almonds salted, the soup stock and salad dressing made. If all these little, but necessary, things are done ahead of time, a dinner ought not to derange a household or cause much excitement or hurry.

For three seconds Winlow hesitated. Then he pulled ashore and helped Nelly to alight on a jutting rock which was a curious, set expression about his fine mouth, as he marched Nelly up to Mrs. Keyton-Wells and introduced her. Mrs. Keyton-Wells' greeting was slightly cool, but very polite. She suggested Miss Ray was some little country girl with whom Burton Winlow was carrying on a summer flirtation; respectable enough no doubt, but she must be treated civilly, and an equal of wouldn't expect to be the men were more cordial. Miss Ray might be shabby, but she was distinctly fetching and Winlow looked savage.

TEARS, ALCOHOL IN RUSSIA. The New York "Sun" of a recent date says: Tea was first imported into Russia in 1638. To-day each inhabitant consumes, on the average, nearly one pound annually. The total consumption is 106,000,000 pounds and the total cost about $88,000,000. Tea and sugar together cost Russia about $255,000,000 per year. For many years the country exports annually about $560,000,000, so that something like a quarter of the whole revenues of the State are annually expended on tea, brandy, wine and beer, with sugar. Exact statistics are not forthcoming, but it appears that the use of tea is increasing rapidly relative to the alcoholic beverages—a consumption devoted to be wished. It is a remarkable fact that this change has occurred since the introduction of the machine-made teas of Ceylon and India.

It is poor economy to buy ordinary tea when Blue Ribbon Ceylon Green can be had at a reasonable price.

At the end of a fortnight Riverside West was full of talk about Winlow and the Pennington's hired girl. He was reported to be "dead gone" on her;

Then he pulled ashore and helped Nelly to alight on a jutting rock which was a curious, set expression about his fine mouth, as he marched Nelly up to Mrs. Keyton-Wells and introduced her. Mrs. Keyton-Wells' greeting was slightly cool, but very polite. She suggested Miss Ray was some little country girl with whom Burton Winlow was carrying on a summer flirtation; respectable enough no doubt, but she must be treated civilly, and an equal of wouldn't expect to be the men were more cordial. Miss Ray might be shabby, but she was distinctly fetching and Winlow looked savage.

TEARS, ALCOHOL IN RUSSIA. The New York "Sun" of a recent date says: Tea was first imported into Russia in 1638. To-day each inhabitant consumes, on the average, nearly one pound annually. The total consumption is 106,000,000 pounds and the total cost about $88,000,000. Tea and sugar together cost Russia about $255,000,000 per year. For many years the country exports annually about $560,000,000, so that something like a quarter of the whole revenues of the State are annually expended on tea, brandy, wine and beer, with sugar. Exact statistics are not forthcoming, but it appears that the use of tea is increasing rapidly relative to the alcoholic beverages—a consumption devoted to be wished. It is a remarkable fact that this change has occurred since the introduction of the machine-made teas of Ceylon and India.

There is a department which suits the figure and talents of each person; it is always lost when we quit it to assume that of another.—Rousseau.

THE SURE CURE. Fire Horse—Look, Bill! That automobile has balked. Second Horse—Wonder if that dude of a driver knows enough to build a fire under the stubborn thing?

It is poor economy to buy ordinary tea when Blue Ribbon Ceylon Green can be had at a reasonable price.

At the end of a fortnight Riverside West was full of talk about Winlow and the Pennington's hired girl. He was reported to be "dead gone" on her;
