After Confederation, of which you are such an advocate, the people of Albert will have to build any new roads and bridges they may want by means of direct taxation. The amount he Province is to receive for local purposes will not allow the local Government to do more than keep the present roads in some such condition as they are now in.

The holiday yesterday passed off as such holidays generally do. There was much shouting, and many attempts at singing were made by boys on sleds. The thaw almost destroyed the sleighing, but every horse in the city was out. At many corners groups of boys stood and threw snow-balls at the more fortunate boys in the sleighs or on the sleds.

He would be a great benefactor who would teach the people of St. John how to keep a holiday.

The News says:

"Mr. Tilley showed that the Freeman's calful the statements in the conditions were entirely false, and complained because they were not correct."

This is simply untrue. manner more than enough to pay the claim, Mr. Goddard has brought a suit in Maine.

The friendly relations between the parties were interrupted, but last winter Mr. Goddard proposed to Mr. Pingree to allow a man named Frost to operate on the townships they owned in common. To this Goddard says Pingree agreed. Goddard furnished Frost with the necessary supplies. Mr. Pingree became sick, and no permit was ever issued to Frost. In January—after Mr. Pingree's death we believe—a permit was sent to him which he refused to accept, as it contained conditions to which he had not agreed. Towards the end of January Frost transferred his title to all the logs he had cut to Goddard, and continued afterwards to conduct the operations for Goddard. Daniel Barker, who was appointed as "scaler" to act for Pingree, and Goddard swore that he submitted to Frost the copy of the permit which was sent to him for the purpose, and told Frost that if he did not sign this he would be dealt with as a tresspasser, but Goddard produced a letter from Barker which seemed to say that every thing was going on well about that same time. In Spring Frost having got all his logs ready—some 980 logs, measuring over 500 Mr., and worth, it was said from $18 to $20 per M.—drove them down the St. John river, and transferred the care of them to a man named Long, who drove them to the Fredericton boom. Daniel Barker received a letter from the executors of Mr. Pingree, directing him to take possession of the logs. He swore he did so, and continued in possession until he handed them over to his brother, but the Judge in his charge said this could have been at the utmost but a mere symbolical possession, the actual possession all along having been in Goddard's agents. Notice was served on the boom company by the executors, and when Goddard applied for the logs, tendering the boomage, the boom company refused to give them, but when Mr. Coe, one of the executors, demanded them, all they could get, which was nearly the whole lot, were gathered toocther, and sent

"This Federation business bodes no good to Yankee domination on this continent; hence the antipathy of the Sun. And this antipathy, we may say, is peculiar to that sheet. There are people opposed to the Colonial Union, who hate a Yankee as they do any other species of vermin; and whose loyalty to British institutions is undoubted and unquestioned. But anything which bodes ill to the Sun's protege, Mr. Lincoln, and the "glorious land of freedom" over which he holds sway, hurts our contemporary sorely. And now that Mexico has been transformed into an Empire, under the very nose of the officials at Washington; and a rival republic has set up for itself still nearer home; and this Colonial Union promises to put another nail in the coffin of the defunct Monroe doctrine, little wonder that the Sun gets riled, and poohs-poohs (deary me) the London Naval and Military Gazette, threatens it with Yankees (oh dear) and advises it (how kind) to write "in a more peaceful strain."
