youth, faded or gray hair to a natural, rich brown color, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use light or red hair may be darkened, thin hair thickened, and baldness often, though not always, cured.

It checks falling of the hair, and stimulates a weak and sickly growth to vigor. It prevents and cures scurf and dandruff, and heals nearly every disease peculiar to the scalp. As a Ladies' Hair Dressing, the Vigor is unequalled; it contains neither oil nor dye, renders the hair soft, glossy, and silken in appearance, and imparts a delicate, agreeable, and lasting perfume.

MR. C. P. BRICHER writes from Kirby, O., July 3, 182: "Last fall my hair commenced failing out, and in a short time I became nearly bald. I used part of a bottle of AVER'S HAIR VIGOR, which stopped the falling of the hair, and started a new growth. I have now a full head of hair growing vigorously, and am convinced that but for the use of your preparation I should have been entirely bald." J. W. BOWEN, proprietor of the McArthus (Ohio) Enquirer, says: "AYER'S HAIR VIGOR is a most excellent preparation for the hitistapea for it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair, and makes it glossy and soft, The VIGOR is also a sure cure for dandrull. Not within my knowledge has the preparation ever failed to give entire satisfaction." NEXT ABOVE C. H. THOMAS & CO., Queen Street, Fredericton. HATS AND CAPS.

Mr. ANGUS FAIRMAIRM, leader of the celebrated "Fairbairn Family" of Scottish Vocalists, writes from Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1899: "Ever since my hair began to give silvery evidence of the change which fleeting time procureth, I have used AVER'S HAIR VIGOR, and so have been able to maintain an appearance of youthfulness—a matter of considerable consequence to minister, oracra, actors, actors, and in fact every one who lives in the eyes of the public." in the eyes of the public."

MRS. O. A. PRESCOTT, writing from 18 Elm St., Charlestones, Mass., April 14, 1882, says; "Two years ago about two-thirds of my hair came off. It thinned very rapidly, and I was fast growing bald. On using ATRE'S HAIR VIGOR the falling stopped and a new growth commenced, and in about a month my head was completely covered with short hair. It has continued to grow, and is now as good as before it fell. I regularly used but one bottle of the VIGOR, but now use it occasionally as a dressing." FRANCIS DOHERTY Finest Assortment

CHAPTER XXI. A GREAT PERIL.

Mrs. Ashley recognized the step of her husband, and she sprang to meet him, while Mrs. Wentworth, with a last effort of strength, half arose, and fixed her wild black eyes upon the door.

Judge Ashley stepped in, glanced around the wretched spartment, and, in an agony of feeling, threw himself upon his kneet beside his daughter's bed. In sufficeated tones he exclaimed:

"Oh, my God, Ellinor, I never dreamed that you would be brought to such a ness as this!"

A bitter smile curled the lip of his daughter, and she faintly said:

This is nothing to the privation I have known. More than once I have literally had no place on which to lay my head.
The charity of attangen supplied to me then what my father so persistently refused.

The old man seemed overwhelmed by

I am punished by finding you too late to offer such atonement as might have been possible. Oh! Judge Ashley grose in deep emotion; he bent over the pale face of his daughter "When Leen angered me as you did by making a misalliance. I also sent him from me, though I did not east him off. That I have sought you out should prove to you that I have also forgiven you, and restored you to the place you once held in my affections."

Wentworth made a vain effort to reply. The faint spark of life which the stimulant she had taken had thus far kept alive, now fluttered, and in spite of the faded out in the agitation of meeting her long estranged father. She raised her chilled hand, placed it on the shoulder of her son, and pressing him into his grand father's arms, murmured:

"Take him—be a father to him, and forgive as I am forgiven." With the utterance of the words life passed away, though it was many mo-ments before Judge Ashley could be con-vinced that she had really perished in the overcome with grief and remorse that it tasked all his wife's efforts to console him She at length persuaded him to return to the hotel, and send such assistance as was necessary to have the body of his daughtor removed to a more respectable locality, from which it could be taken to the family burying ground at Ashurst for in-

For many hours after their return to the hotel, Judge Ashley shut himself up alone and even his darling Driver did not yenture to intend upon him. She mant the intervening hours in secthing the passion at grief of little Frank, and providing him with providing

A clothing store furnished every variety to select from, and a handsome wardrob was purchased for the lad, and packe ready for removal on the next morning use, the tangled locks of the child were clipped into short rings, which clung to Mrs. Ashley's servant gave him, and the neglected child of poverty was transformed, as if by magic, into one of the "curled arlings' of the wealthy.

For a few moments Frank hushed his sobs to admire his fine clothes, but the memory of that ghastly face again came back, and the pitiful cry of "Mammamamma; let me go to mamma!" again

Mrs. Ashley took him on her lap, spoke soothingly to him, and presently induced him to listen to her words.

"Your mamma has gone to live with the angels, Frank. The good Father of all earthly creatures has taken her to heaven, and you must be a good boy, to die in your turn."
The child raised his head and regarded her with dilating eyes; he defiantly said: "What did God want with her? He's got plenty more to stay with him, and had only poor mamma. Please, ma'am, let me go back to her, for I know she is wanting me now."

"Poor child! on this earth she will never want you again. I am your mother now, Frank. She gave you to me, and I will be, as kind to you as she could be

The child wistfully regarded her.
"You are a pretty lady, but you are not my mamma, and I don't want you for a mother. Let me go back to the old room, and get her to speak to me again."

The lad sobbed and cried piteously at this refusal; the idea of death had never before been presented to him, and he could not understand why he was separated from the mother he had left lying on her bed, looking as he had often seen Exhausted with the various exciter of the day, Mrs. Ashley at length gave Frank a composing draught, which soon quieted his moans in sleep. She lay down beside him, and fell into a light slumber which lasted more than an hour. From this she was suddenly aroused by the sound of a familiar voice which

With a cold dew bursting from her bro she started up in extreme perturbation and glanced wildly around the room. There was no one in it but herself and the sleeping child, and she listened eagerly for the voice to speak again.

The evening was warm, the transor the bustle of a great city, which takes place as twilight is gathering, enabled her to hear with distinctness every word that was uttered in the corridor near her door. With every sense strained to its utmost tension, Mrs. Ashley listened so long for something more to be said, that she began to hope it was not a vivid dream which had so startled her, when the same "I would have sworn that it was she;

The woman silently obeyed, and at the command of her mistress soon withdrew.

Left alone, Mrs. Ashley rose and paced the floor in a state of wild excitement that seemed allied to madness. Throwing her arms at intervals above her head,

"Oh! if I could retrace my steps! if could be as I was but one little year ago, how gladly would I go back to poverty—to truth—to honesty again! but it is too late—too late! Exhausted by her rapid and continuous walk to and fro, she at length sunk down what best for her to do in the dire strait in which she found herself placed.

She seemed to abrink from his caress, and after struggling to steady her voice, she replied:

"Poor Frank grieved so much, and I had such trouble to soothe him to sleep, that I felt quiet exhausted. I felt asleep beside him, and sind that is the reason

I did not come to you before."

Her voice sounded strange to herself, and its dull monotonous tones struck upon the ear of the Judge. He quickly said: "You have worn yourself out with that irritable child. Why could not Sally attend to him-what was the use of bringing her with you, if she could not spare you trouble of that kind?" "The child would not have listened her, and it was not much to do for a motherless little creature like that. Don't motherless little creature like that. Don't feel vexed with him on my account, please; I shall be well and bright to-morrow. My head aches now, but a good night's rest will cure it. I will go back to Frank for to night, if you will consent that I shall remain with him. I thought I could offer you seems content by coming could offer you some comfort by coming here, but I cannot—I cannot."

The weary head fell upon his breast, and her hysterical excitement found vent in a passionate burst of tears. Judge Ashley took her in his arms and carried her into the next room, soothing her as he might have soothed a child. She clung to his hand after he placed her upon the bed, "Would you believe that I could be guilty of a criminal action, even if others accused me of it, Judge Ashley? Would you listen to any accusation against me if I told you that I was innocent?"

Her excitement alarmed him, and he lenderly said:
"No, my darling; if all the world accused you, and you declared yourself in-nocent, I would take your word even if But you are ill, Daisy; you must be delimous to talk in such a strain as this."

low, closed her aching eyes, and made the doting old man believe that she at length slept, in the hope that he would seek the repose she knew he so greatly needed. He refused to leave his idol, and ordered a couch to be placed near the bed on which she lay, that he might watch over her through the night. It was a weary, weary vigil to his poor crushed Daisy, who could not utter in his presence the moans of anguish that arose to her lips to be forced back again upon her aching heart. She believed the wrong she had committed was almost atoned for during those hours of suffering, and laid the flattering unction to her soul that since the deed was irrevocable, she might yet find par-

Soe Manufacturers of Miller's Patent Shifting Rail. These Shifting Tops have no rival, as a glance at the cut will show for itself; it is so simple It requires only one person to take it off or put it on, and when off no one would think a Top had been on, as no unsightly ends are sticking out. When the Top is on it is as firm as a rock. It can be put on any carriage in use. Persons ordering Buggles or Canopy Top Carriages should see that they have this Rail, as it will be greatly to their interest.

These Tops were awarded a Diploma at the Provincial Exhibition in October, 1880 Particular attention given to orders. Repairing done in the best manner, and at the shortest notice
