

High-Pressure System for Fire-Fighting Husband the Spring Water for Drinking

Sir John Carling's Views on the Water Question.

MEMORIES OF LONDON IN ITS EARLY DAYS

The Veteran Statesman Deals Entertainingly With History of the Forest City—Addresses Board of Trade.

Four score years, or very close thereto, seem to have fallen lightly on the head of Sir John Carling. His hair is silvered, but he stands erect and still retains the faculty of dealing with his subjects in a clear, crisp, concise and entertaining manner. In four score years he has lived through the city's growth from a mere village to modern day. He knew the present city of London when she was in her swaddling clothes. At the board of trade meeting last night, Sir John, on the invitation of President Samuel Stevely, who is a warm personal friend of the aged statesman, outlined the history of the board of trade from its inception to the present day.

An interesting address. No man living is better able to speak on this topic, for Sir John is the only surviving member of the first board of trade of London. Incidentally he told of events in the life of London for over 50 years, going back to the days when he was a mere boy, and leading up to the time when he was elected a school trustee of London, then an alderman, then a member of the Ontario Legislature, then a member of the Parliament of Canada, and finally to the time when he was chosen a member of the cabinet of the late Sir John A. Macdonald.

The group of business-men listened to Sir John's address with the greatest interest, and he was vociferously applauded when he concluded. Mr. Adam McMahon, who moved a vote of thanks to Sir John, alluded to the address as one of the most interesting ever delivered in London.

Board Appreciated. Mr. F. E. Leonard seconded the motion, declaring that the address was the most concise, interesting and accurate on the subject of London's history that he had ever listened to, with one exception—Sir John had not given himself the credit to which he was entitled for the good work he performed for the city in the securing of the London, Huron and Bruce Railway, and also in the building of the waterworks system.

The vote was carried by a unanimous standing vote. It was decided on motion of Mr. Leonard to have the address printed, and also to hang a picture of Sir John and the other members of the first board of trade in the rooms.

BRITISH STEEL MEN GET BRITISH MARKET

A Minimum Price for Rails Fixed for the Colonies.

London, June 29.—The principal English, Irish and Welsh steel makers have entered into an agreement with competitors with a view to safeguarding their respective shippers of influence, according to the Standard. The arrangement reserves Great Britain and her colonies for British makers to the extent that a minimum price for rails has been fixed, while a higher minimum is established for South America to meet the requirements of the American trust. The European markets will be controlled by German, French and Belgian makers.

Favors High-Pressure Scheme

Sir John Carling, one of the first water commissioners of London, and who is well qualified to speak on the subject, for it was he, with the late E. W. Hyman, and later with the late John R. Minchin, who built the waterworks system we have today, last night put himself emphatically on record as in favor of the high-pressure scheme and Springbank water for domestic purposes.

"River water," said Sir John, "is just what we want for fire-fighting, street watering, manufacturing purposes, etc., and we can secure an abundant supply of it very handily."

"It has been suggested that we go to Lake Erie, or to Lake Huron, for our water supply, but we must remember that there would prove a very costly undertaking as both lakes are more than 200 feet below the level of the city of London.

"But we don't need to go to the lakes. We have spring water running away which we can secure for domestic purposes, and we all know that London for many years has held the reputation of having the finest drinking water in Canada. I have drunk London water as far east as Montreal, on Grand Trunk dining cars. People have told me that they deemed it a treat to get a drink of London water as they passed through. We should jealously guard this supply."

"The waterworks of London, construction of which was commenced and completed in the year 1878, have proven a most excellent investment for the city, and today the purity of London's water is famed. It should be our aim, and we should be in a position to make it known all over the country, that we have an abundant supply of water for manufacturing, domestic and all other purposes. I would suggest that the water commissioners call a meeting of ratepayers to discuss this most important matter. As was to be expected, the great increase of population has rendered the supply for all purposes inadequate."

"My opinion is, gentlemen, that the best means of meeting the present situation is to be found in adding so far as possible to the present supply of spring water, and an ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT HIGH-PRESSURE FIRE-FIGHTING, manufacturing and street watering system. By this means we will be able to husband the supply of pure spring water, for strictly domestic purposes."

FATALLY INJURED IN RUNAWAY; A DELIVERY DRIVER THE VICTIM

Thomas Grady, Recently Out From England, Thrown From Rig.

What may prove to be a fatal runaway accident occurred yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock near the corner of Maitland and Pall Mall streets, when a horse attached to a delivery wagon belonging to J. H. Chapman & Co., ran away, throwing out the driver, Thomas Grady and injuring him, so seriously that little hope is entertained for his recovery.

Grady, who had been driving the delivery wagon for some time had called at a house on Pall Mall street near Maitland to deliver a parcel. While he was absent the horse, which had been left untied, commenced to graze along the boulevard, and in some way it got the bridle off. Grady jumped into the rig without noticing what had happened. The horse started with a bound. Grady had no means of restraining it, the animal ran away, throwing him out over the dashboard. Whether the wagon went over the top or not is not known.

but he was injured so that a physician had to be called, and ordered him to be taken to his boarding-house at 327 Dundas street.

At first it was thought that Grady was not seriously hurt, but this morning his condition became such that Drs. Cline and Stevenson found it necessary to remove him to Victoria hospital. He is severely injured internally.

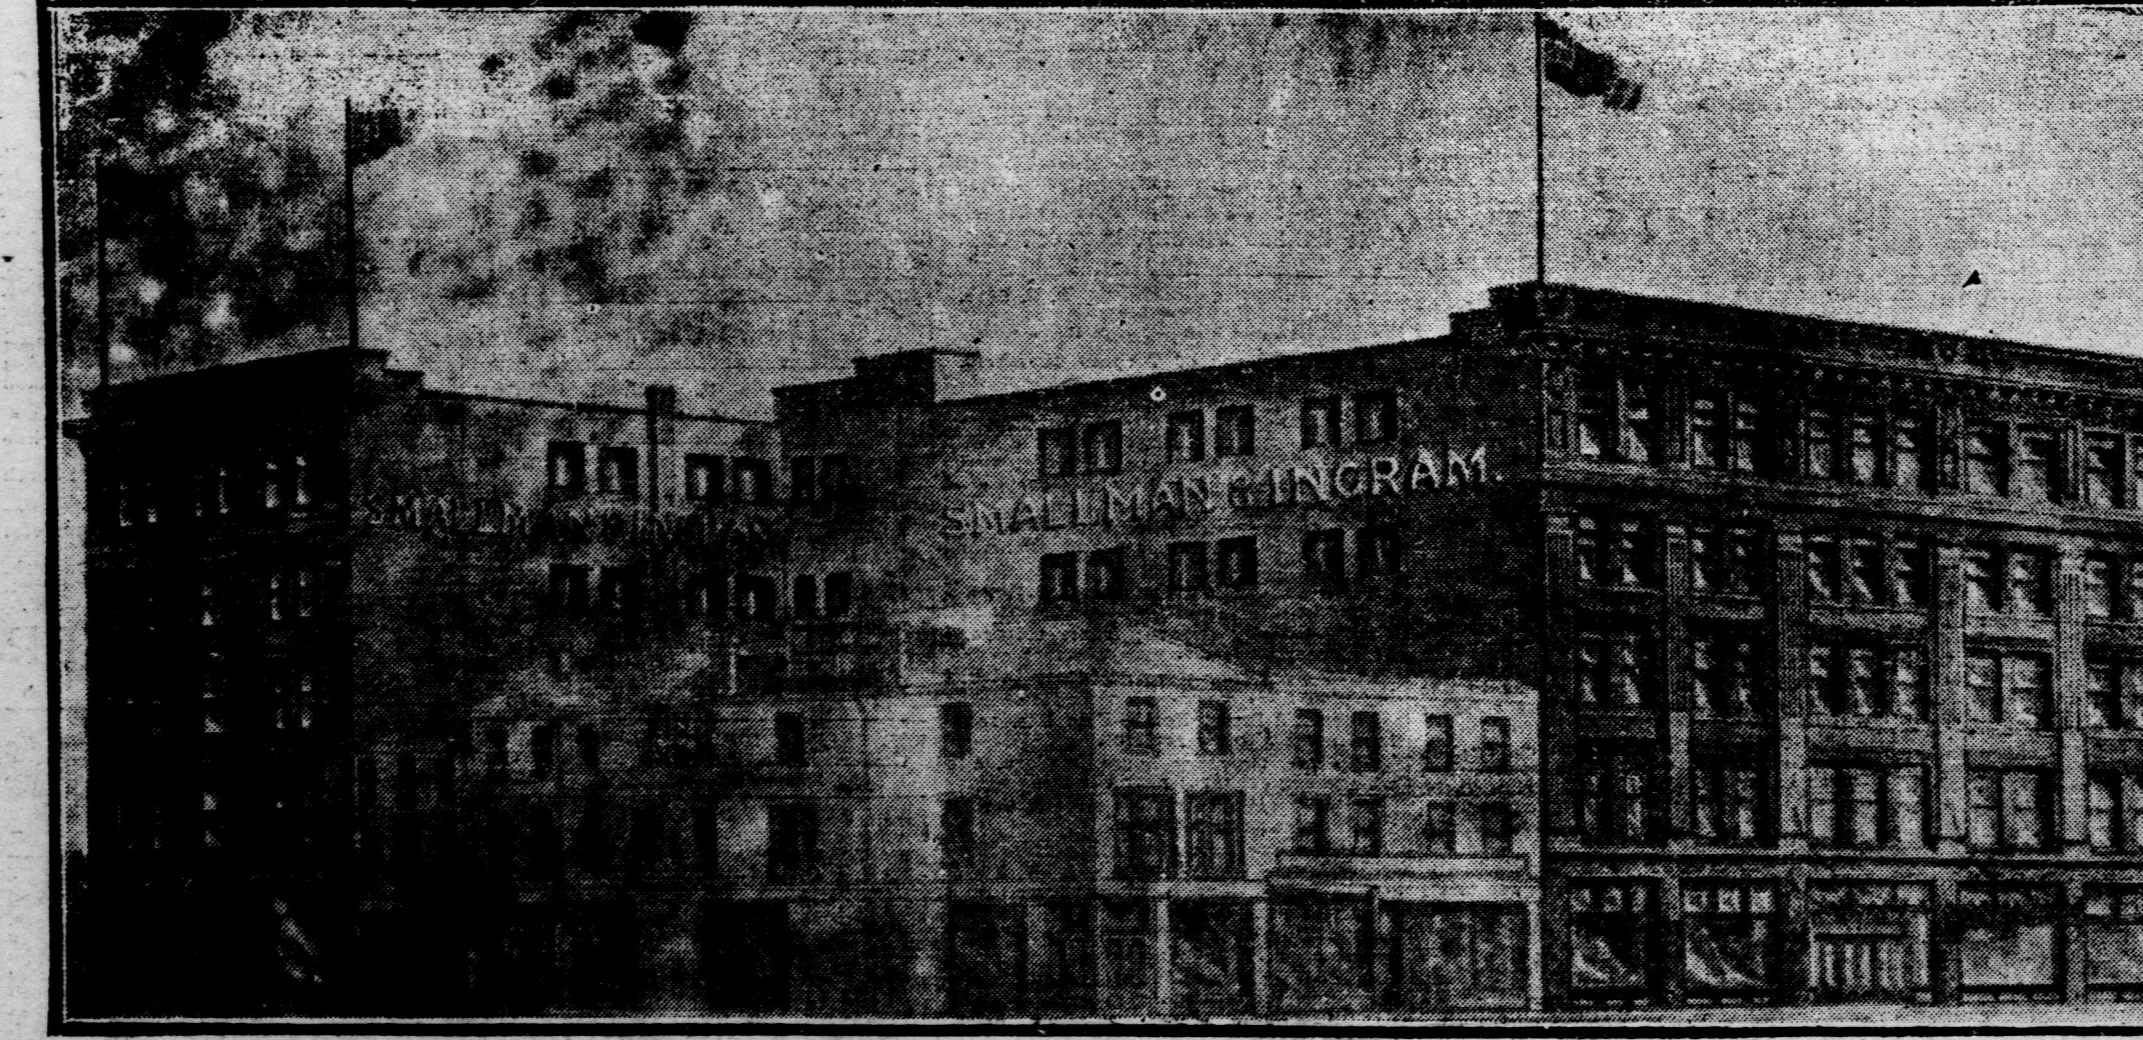

Grady is a young man of 21 years and came to this city from England some time ago.

JAMES McDONALD DEAD

Business Agent of Toronto Street Railwaymen's Union Passes Away.

Toronto, June 28.—James McDonald, business agent of the Toronto Street Railway Employees' Union, died at his home early this morning of pneumonia. He was 48 years of age and was for 20 years connected with the street railway. Mr. McDonald came into prominence at the time of the street car strike of 1902, when his leadership of the men was so successful that he was appointed business agent of the organization.

Smallman & Ingram's Mammoth Business House, as It Will Appear When Completed.

FROM DRAWINGS PREPARED BY WILLIAM G. MURRAY, ARCHT. OF LONDON.

Work is now well under way on the handsome new store to be erected for Messrs. Smallman & Ingram, on Dundas and Richmond streets. A portion of the old store on Dundas street has been torn down, while the buildings purchased for the Richmond street front have pretty well disappeared.

When completed the new home of the firm will be among the largest and most up-to-date business houses in Canada. It will have a frontage of 94 feet on Dundas street, with a depth of 140 feet, extending through to the market square, the frontage on Richmond street being 44 feet; this section of the store running back 55 feet to meet the Dundas street building.

The fronts on both Dundas and Richmond streets will be most attractive, polished granite being used for the first floor, with red brick and stone trimmings for the four remaining stories. Immense plate glass windows are to be provided for display purposes.

The building throughout is to be strictly fireproof, nothing being omitted to meet every requirement of the underwriters to make it a first-class risk in every respect. Steel is to be used throughout the structure, with concrete and cinders between the floors. In addition, an automatic sprinkler system is to be provided, with two 15,000-gallon tanks 20 feet above the roof, both to be connected with the city waterworks system.

The ground floor of the store will be devoted to the general drygoods business, while the second floor will be set apart for millinery, ladies' ready-to-wear goods, white ware, curtains, etc., ladies' waiting-rooms and a reading-room. Dressmaking, fitting-rooms, waiting-rooms and a tearoom will be on the third floor. Every part of the store will be well lighted and easy of access.

The most up-to-date fixtures only will be adopted for the store. Fine hardwood will be used for the shelving and counters, while a pneumatic tube system will be adopted for the carrying of cash from the various parts of the store to the cashiers. Two passenger elevators and one freight are to be constructed, with provision for two more. A feature of the first floor will be the erection of a massive stairway, half-way up which will be a gallery for observation purposes.

Under the entire store will be a basement, with a 10-foot 6-inch ceiling, extending under the sidewalk on both Dundas and Richmond streets,

SECURE A UNION DEPOT FOR CITY

Mr. F. E. Leonard Says Citizens Should Use Endeavors in That Direction.

Mr. F. E. Leonard, at the meeting of the board of trade last night dealt with railway improvement in London in a short but pithy speech.

Mr. Leonard declared that the city should look to the future, and that now when the Grand Trunk will be expected to erect very shortly a new depot in London, the citizens should use their best endeavors to secure for London a union depot which would be an architectural attraction, and would furnish accommodation for all the railways entering London.

Mr. Leonard expressed the opinion that if the city puts it shoulder to the wheel this end can be accomplished. "We should not look ahead five years or ten years or twenty years," he said, "but we should look far into the future and endeavor to secure a building which will furnish ample accommodation for all the railways entering London for years to come, and which will do away with several depots now in this city."

SAD CASE OF TIM FLOOD

Ottawa, June 29.—The report of Magistrate Denison in the Tim Flood case has not yet been received by the department of justice and until it is to hand it is not likely that anything can be done. While the department does not require to act upon the magistrates' or judges' reports it is customary to wait until they are received before action is taken. Should an order be made out for Flood's release it will take two or three days before it can be signed because the governor is down the St. Lawrence. The order has to be approved by the governor or deputy governor.

EXPLORER PETERS ROUGHLY HANDLED

Citizens of Munich Assault Doctor, Necessitating a Guard.

Munich, Bavaria, June 29.—Dr. Peters, the African explorer, who is using the Munchener Post, is so unpopular that the authorities are obliged to protect him coming to and leaving court. Several assaults on him have already taken place. One man has been arrested for throwing the doctor from a street car and attempting to assassinate him. Yesterday's hearing in the suit was confined to an expression of opinion by persons who have had experiences in Africa. These were mostly unfavorable to the theory of a necessity for harshness towards the natives. Some of the witnesses, however, said they considered the position of the Peters expedition called for stern measures. The case went over until next Monday.

BODY ALMOST CUT IN TWAIN

Seaforth Lady Meets Instant Death Under a Toronto Car.

[Special to The Advertiser.] Toronto, June 29.—Mrs. Weir, a visitor from Seaforth, was almost instantly killed this morning by being run over by a street car.

Mrs. Weir was crossing the road after posting a letter, when she ran in front of a car. Before the motorman could stop, the woman had rolled under the fender. When pulled out she was found to be breathing her last. The wheels had almost cut her in two across the body.

BIG BUSINESS FOR CLEARING HOUSE

For First Six Months of Year Clearings Totaled $32,500,000—Large Increase Over 1906.

A statement of the business of the London clearing house for the six months ended today has been issued by the manager, Mr. George S. Hensley. During the period named the clearings reached the immense sum of $32,500,000, while during the first six months of 1906 they only totaled $27,705,051. The increase for 1907, is, therefore, $4,794,949, or an average of $800,000 a month.

The clearings for June, 1907, amounted to $5,166,000, as against $4,677,098 for the corresponding period of 1906, showing an increase of $488,902.

The statement shows in no unmistakable manner that business continues to be very brisk.

MR. WOODYATT AND GOVT.

Brantford Police Magistrate Refuses to Resign His Position.

Toronto, June 28.—Mr. Thomas Woodyatt, police magistrate of Brantford, has written to the Attorney-General, refusing to send in his resignation, as requested by the department.

FIVE HUNDRED CHINESE DIE IN A HONG-KONG THEATER FIRE

Victoria, B. C., June 29.—A horrible holocaust is reported in mail advices from Hong Kong, where 500 Chinese of the audience of a Chinese theater, and 10 of the actors were burned to death when the native theater was destroyed by fire.

The flames spread rapidly and the building collapsed, blocking the entrance with burning debris.

The origin of the fire is said to have been due to the igniting of the explosives concealed under the floor of the theater.

Giant Growth of West in Twenty-Six Years

Population Leaps to Nearly a Million—Wheat Acreage.

Ottawa, June 29.—The census and statistics department issued today a bulletin on the progress of the Northwest provinces from 1870 to 1906. In 1870 Manitoba had a population of 12,228; in 1881 the population of Manitoba and the territories was 105,681. This included Indians. There was an area of 56,971 acres in wheat. In 1891 the population was 213,305, and the area in wheat 1,019,430 acres. In 1901 the three provinces as now constituted had a population of 419,512 and on June 24, 1906, they had 808,862, being an increase in five years of 389,351 as compared with the increase of 200,207 in the ten years, 1891—1901.

The area of wheat in 1900 was 2,495,466 acres, in barley 162,557 acres, and in oats 833,390, an aggregate yield of 43,000,000 bushels. The area in wheat, barley and oats increased from 3,491,413 acres in 1900 to 6,025,190 acres in 1906, and to 7,915,610 acres in 1906. The yield of the three crops increased from 43,252,604 bushels in 1900 to 152,244,929 bushels in 1906 and to 240,459,968 bushels in 1906. The number of farms increased from 31,815 in 1881 to 54,622 in 1901 and to 120,439 in 1906.

COMPANY MUST PAY

Finding of Jury in the Case of Engineer McKay Upheld by Appeal Court.

In the court of appeal at Toronto yesterday, in the case of McKay vs. the Wabash Railway, the defendants appealed against the jury's award of $10,000 in favor of Mrs. McKay, widow of Engineer McKay, who was killed in the collision between a Wabash special and a C. P. R. train at St. Thomas in September last.

The company contended that the verdict was against the evidence, that the proper questions were not left to the jury, that the judge's charge to the jury was misleading, and that McKay was guilty of a breach of the railway act.

The court, however, upheld the jury in its finding, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

EIGHT PERISH IN CRASH AT KENORA

C. P. R. Passenger Trains Meet on a Curve While Traveling Fast.

Winnipeg, June 28.—A head-on collision occurred at 5 o'clock this evening between the westbound express and an extra loaded with Chinese, at Butler, two stations west of Ignace. Four Chinese and M. E. O'Connor, of St. John, N. B., were probably fatally injured. Several passengers on the west-bound train were also injured, but they are not believed to be seriously hurt.

Both engines, together with the baggage and two colonist cars on the extra, were damaged. Auxiliary trains were dispatched from Kenora and Ignace, and doctors were hurried to the scene on a light engine to render every possible attention to the injured. The injured Chinamen were sent to Ft. William on a special train. Traffic was not long delayed.

Toronto, June 28.—A dispatch from Kenora says eight Chinese were killed in the week near there. Seventeen persons were injured, including five Canadians.

Guard O'Connor, in charge of the Chinese, is reported killed.

THE HOLIDAY EXODUS

"It is remarkable how many people leave their own country to take a trip to the other side on big Canadian holidays," remarked a local ticket agent this morning. "And especially is this so around Dominion Day. We are as busy as we can be selling tickets to Detroit, Buffalo and other American cities just now and have been for several days."

In all of the local ticket offices the same conditions prevailed, and if one were to judge by the number of tickets being sold one would wonder if there were going to be any Londoners left in the city by Monday.

A large number of the travelers, too, are going to Toronto to spend the big day, but the bulk of the tickets sold are for Detroit.

"Of course," said one ticket agent, "we are glad to get the business, but I can't help wondering just why Canadians should be so particularly anxious to leave Canada on national holidays. It is seldom that the Americans come to this side on July 4 or any other holiday, and why our people should run across the line on every opportunity is something I can't understand."

CHILDREN AND MANNERS.

A well-known Toronto K. C., Henry O'Brien, had his flower-beds rifled by youthful vandals, and straightway wrote to the press that Toronto children were the worst in America.

THE C. P. R.'S MAJORITY.

The Canadian Pacific Railway attained its majority this week. Whatever his views on the transportation problem may be, every Canadian is proud of the achievements of the C. P. R.

The company will signalize its majority by inaugurating next Tuesday the "Trans-Canada Limited," which will cross the continent in a little over three days and a half.

BOASTFUL RIGHTEOUSNESS. [Acheson Globe.] The man who is always boasting of his good is the one most likely to boast of his exceeding virtue.

CLERICAL ASCENDANCY. [Toronto Saturday Night.] Toronto is not a priest-ridden city. At the same time the persons are seizing and occupying the strategic points.

It may be right and proper that the Rev. J. A. McDonald should be editor of the Globe, and the Rev. Dr. Falconer president of the university, and the Rev. Dr. Chambers governor of the jail; but what a howl would have been raised if any of these appointments had gone to clergymen of the Roman Catholic faith.

SAVES THE WATER. [Galt Reformer.] London continues to face the water supply difficulty. The Advertiser advocates the general use of meters, in order to stop the enormous waste of water that is going on.

OUR IDEALS. [Jessie Mackay, in Everybody's.] Here's to the home that was never, never ours!

Here's to the life we shall never live on earth! Out for us awry, away, ages ere the birth. Set the teeth and meet it well, wind upon the shore; Like a lion, in the face look the Nevermore!

Here's to the love we were never meant to win! What of that? A many shells have a pearl within; Some are mated with the gold in the light of day, Some are buried fathoms deep in the sea away.

Here's to the selves we shall never, never be! We're the drift of the world and the tangle of the sea. It's far beyond the Pleiad, it's out beyond the sun, Where the rootless shall be rooted when the wander-year is done!

FACE TO FACE WITH WORK. [Pick-Me-Up.] "Darling, if you refuse me, I don't know what I am to do," said the collector.

EASY TERMS. [Louisville Courier-Journal.] The payment ain't so hard. "What terms?" "A dollar down, and a dollar whenever the collector catches me."

A SURE SIGN. [American Spectator.] "The Briggs' honeymoon is over." "What makes you think so?" "When they go out together on a rainy day now each carry their own umbrella."

MAKING THE DOUGH RISE. [Cornell Widow.] Mother—Why, Bobbie, what do you mean by making baby eat that yeast cake? Bobbie—Boo-hoo, he swallowed by the 50-cent piece, and I'm trying to raise the dough.

A JINGO. [Washington Star.] "Father," asked little Rolle, "what is a jingo?" "A jingo, my son, is a man who is firmly convinced that somebody other than himself ought to go out and whip somebody."

BRIDGE. [Hamilton Times.] When the report against gambling was up for discussion before the American Synod at London, several speakers spoke strongly on the subject of "bridge."

NOT LIKE HOME. [Columbia Jester.] "Home was never like this," said Mr. Heppel, as he was shown about the dead and dumb asylum.

TOOK CARBOLIC ACID BY MISTAKE

Finding of Jury in Case of John Turner, Hospital "Handy Man."

"That the said John Turner came to his death on the 26th of June, 1907, at Victoria Hospital, from an overdose of carbolic acid which was, in our opinion, taken by mistake. We further state that we consider the hospital authorities free from all blame in the matter."

The foregoing was the verdict returned by the jury at the coroner's inquest held last night at the police station to investigate the death of John Turner, a "handy man" at the institution, on Wednesday last.

Several witnesses were heard, and although none of them knew definitely how the unfortunate man came to drink the acid, the evidence tended very strongly to show that he had mistaken the carbolic acid for liquor of some kind.

The first witness called was Walter Joint, one of the orderlies, who told of seeing Turner on the night previous to his death, lying on his back. He tried to wake Turner from a sound sleep, but could not, as he did not have a key to the room. The next morning he saw him lying in the same position, and suspecting that all was not right, summoned Sidney Sare, another orderly, who in time brought House Surgeon McGillivuddy, who went into the room and found Turner dead.

THE WORLD OF HORSES

won, the eastern critics are full of excuses. In the present Suburban, for example, it is carefully explained that Electioneer was twice pocketed with fatal results. Reminiscences of previous Suburban mistakes are in order, and we hear much of such horses as Gen. Monroe, Lowlander, Loantaka, Eurus, Tillo, Lazarone, and Go Be-

At the annual Haggin sale of yearlings, Mr. Seagram bought four, and Mr. A. M. Orpen five youngsters. The prices paid ranged from $300, paid by the distiller for a bay colt by Mimico-Gulala, to $125, for which Mr. Orpen picked up four of his five. The average price for the lot bought by Canadians would be perhaps $200. Several thousand dollars was paid for some of the stars of the consignment by American sportsmen. This is the same old story, which will be finished in a couple of years from now, and then such a miserable lot of skates winning our best stakes, and why with a possible exception or two Canada has never produced a really high-class racehorse. Let us suppose that the colts and fillies will prove to be worth what was given for them, what will they amount to? A horse that doubles in value for every year he races is a good one, so that we have Mr. Seagram's best colt worth about $3,700 as a 3-year-old and $7,400 as a 4-year-old, when he is at his best. Again, the best stake a horse will win is not worth more than the horse himself, so we see Mr. Seagram's horse, even at this most generous and hopeful estimate, still not winning a $10,000 stake, which is the minimum for the classes of the United States. As regards the $125 horses we can see them in the selling classes already.

Of course, many a good colt has been picked up cheap at auction, and many a fancy priced one has gone amiss. Just as many hundred-dollar horses have turned out absolute duffers, not worth their feed. Averaging things up, the man who sell know what they are about, and get value for their offerings. Mr. Seagram is not going down to New York to "skin" Mr. Hargreaves, at least not to any appreciable extent. It is his own business what another term he must obey the call

London, June 29.—Andrew Carnegie, in an interview dealing with G. B. M. Harvey's statement in a speech at the recent Jefferson Society banquet in New York, that President Roosevelt's popularity in Europe was due to the fact that his policy had driven from France, Germany and Great Britain all thoughts of American industrial or financial rivalry, says:

"The countries and their Governments are not so savage, as to gloat over the misfortunes of other lands. No nation can prosper without Great Britain sharing its prosperity, and no nation can suffer reverses without Great Britain suffering also. The same applies to France and Germany. It is a surprising commentary on Mr. Roosevelt's administration our country has enjoyed the great extent of material prosperity ever known."

Mr. Carnegie thinks the present general decline in values in the United States is in every respect a wholesome check, and that the President's declared intention to regulate corporations is only to a trifling extent a factor in the decline. He says President Roosevelt is a truly conservative man to remedy abuses. He is the best friend of the railroads, and so far from lowering the value of bonds and shares will enhance their value and give to the European investor an element of security hitherto lacking. Mr. Carnegie also expressed the opinion that if the country calls Mr. Roosevelt for another term he must obey the call

CHAPTER I. The Risen Dead.

He had never meant to come back! Eight years ago he had left England forever. He had gone, ruined and broken, and helpless. He had been like a man dead all this time, and yet now after eight years, he had come to life again...

He drew a deep breath, and a smile crossed his lips as the girl moved away. In a few minutes he might see Hetty herself—the real Hetty—the wife of Lord Fanshawe, aide-de-camp to the King—a great lady now, the Hetty he had known and loved so well eight years ago.

A voice detaching itself from others confirmed his thought. "Fanshawe? Saw him a minute ago. Over there, I think—talking to Lord Mansel."

Geoffrey's throat was parched and his lips dry as he looked across at them, and it was with an effort that he turned to Lord Renwick.

It seemed an endless way—the grand staircase, through saloon after saloon, each one seeming more beautiful than the last, and then finally into the picture gallery, and across the top of it to the throne room.

Inside the carriage Lord Fanshawe felt back beside his father with a sudden change in his face. The sun filtering in through the glass, showed it white again, and with the debonaire, careless, reckless look gone, and instead something hard and ugly and cruel in the set of his lips and jaw.

white-gloved hands lay still upon the rug upon his knee for an instant. Then they twitched, and a faint red ran up into his old mottled face.

As the park swung past him he leaned back in his brougham, resting not the least upon the pale green of the grass, nor the busy London crowd, but the rugged old town up north, with its tall chimney stacks and belching smoke, and the castle on the hill that had frowned down upon him, when he had turned to look at it for the last time.

As his brougham neared Buckingham Palace, he leaned forward, and the sight of the British flag waving against the chill sky, of the King's Life Guards, rigidly upright on their horses, facing the crowd about the gates, struck him sharply. He was going to see the King!

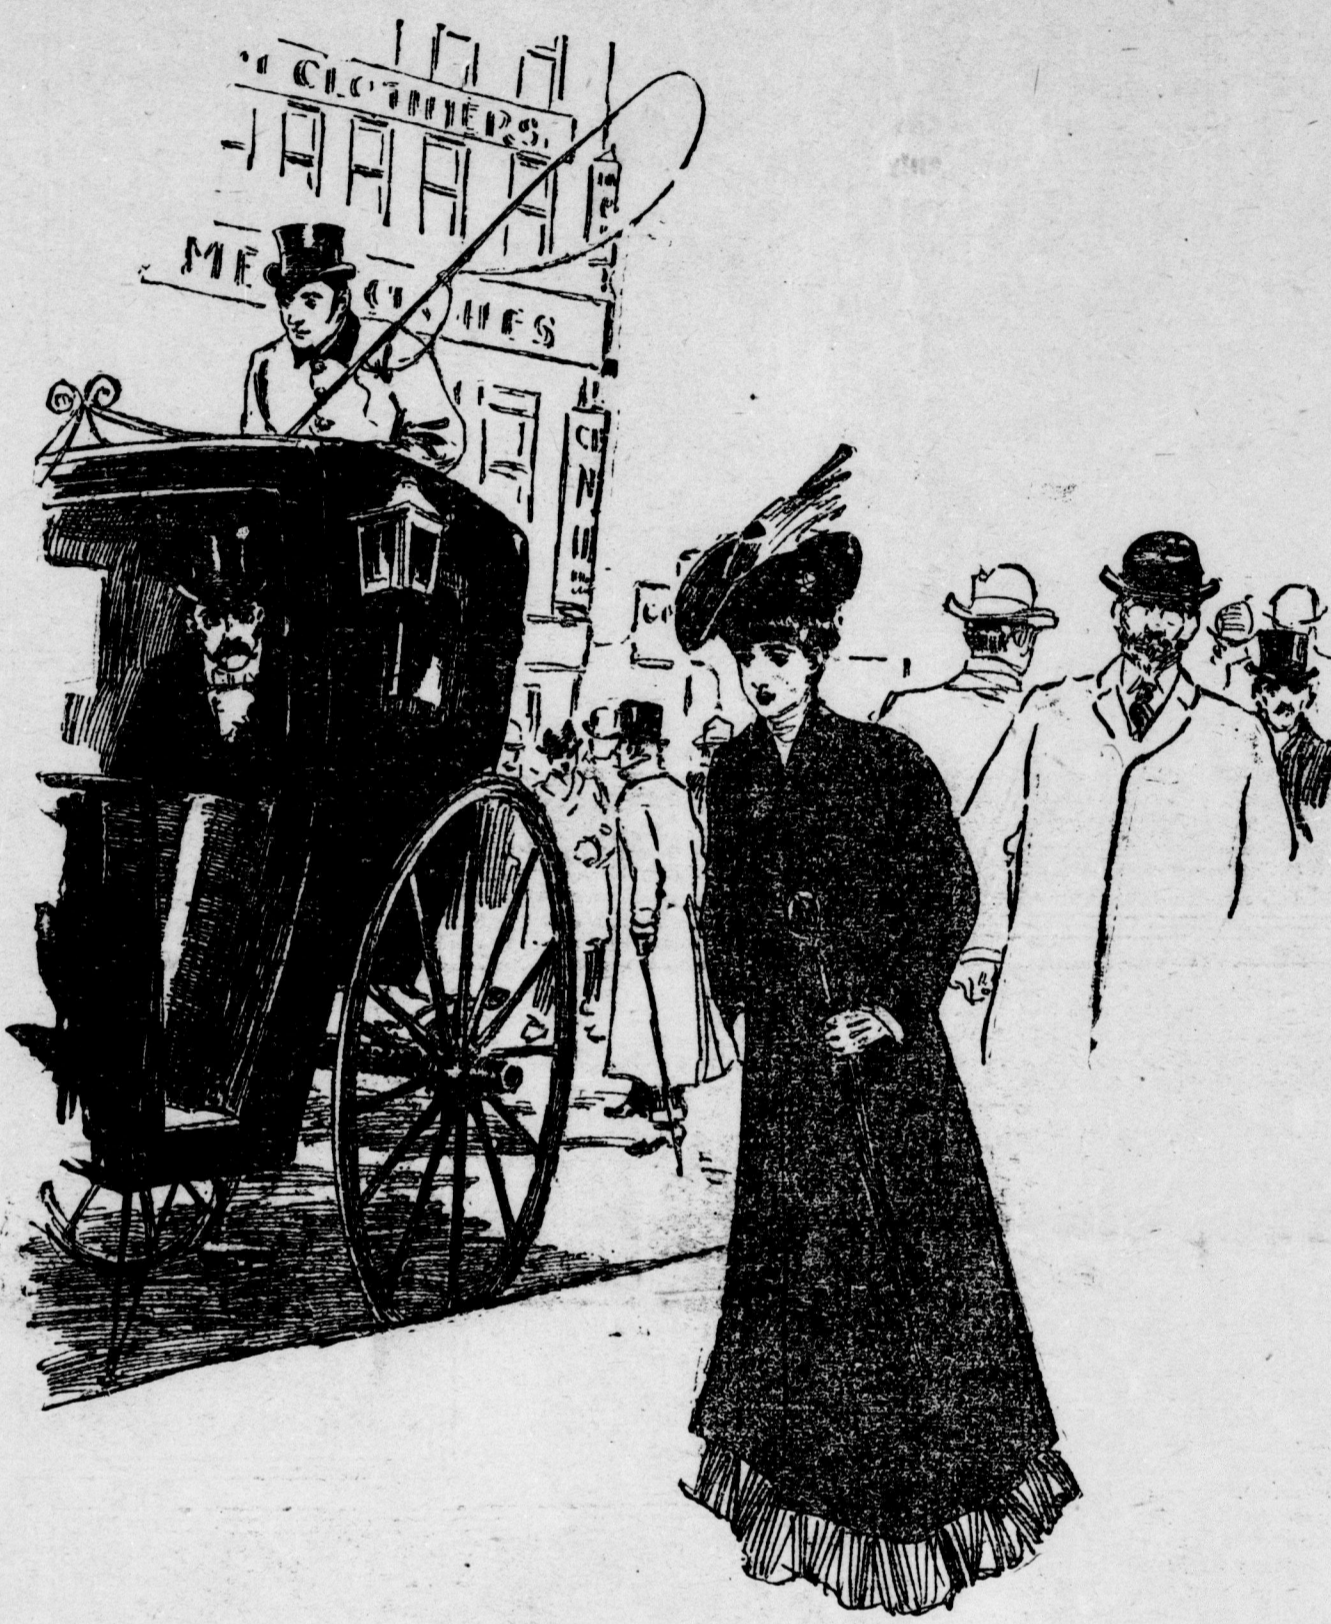

He leaned back again as people pressed forward to stare at him, and mechanically passed his hand across his face. It was scarcely likely that he would be recognized. The years had altered him, and he had become a clean-shaven youth. Now a mustache hid the bitter look about his lips, and the pain he had suffered then and the things he had gone through since had scarred his face, had given him a different look, had touched his hair with gray, though he was scarcely 30 even now.

No one could know him now, after eight years. He had grown bronzed and older. Eight years ago he had been a clean-shaven youth. Now a mustache hid the bitter look about his lips, and the pain he had suffered then and the things he had gone through since had scarred his face, had given him a different look, had touched his hair with gray, though he was scarcely 30 even now.

All the same, he shrank away from the crowd that always gathered about the palace gates on court days, and stared back at them nervously. It was scarcely likely that he would see anyone he knew or who remembered him; but curious things happened sometimes, and he looked out almost afraid lest as he did so he should encounter the eyes of someone he had known in Oldcastle eight years ago, someone who would remember and recognize him, and involuntarily there rose up before him a vision he had so often tried to crush—a memory of a girl, soft and radiant, with shining eyes and laughing lips—

He turned, and glared sharply into the King's frozen face.

"He was not a clodhopper," Lord Fanshawe said half under his breath. He was a gentleman, even though he was a nobody—a mill hand. And he might—he might have risen. That morning when he stood before us—he when he accepted his disgrace—he—he looked like a gentleman every inch."

He heard a sharp breath as he looked round the great room in which he stood himself. There was only one man he dreamed to meet there, and one woman. Hetty, now, no doubt, he was present at the court today, and he wondered mechanically, as he followed the directions given to him to go forward, what she would be like in her court dress. He could not imagine her. Eight years ago she had been only a child—a girl of 18, and the prettiest girl in all the world!

He looked just the same—scarcely older even—and of the two, although they were almost the same age, he, Geoffrey, looked older than Lord Fanshawe did.

He passed his hand across his face. It was icy cold. He was conscious that Lord Renwick was looking up at him curiously, almost nervously, but he could only think of Hetty—Hetty Lancaster, that little girl in the north, whom he had left eight years ago—the girl who ought to have been Lord Fanshawe's bride.

It was Claude, Lord Fanshawe, and his father, the Earl of Oldcastle. The earl had got in, but for a moment Lord Fanshawe had stopped to look forward, and as he did so Geoffrey moved forward.

This closing is effected at the left side under the deep pleat and may be fastened with buttons or invisibly. THOUGHTS AND REASON NEEDED PARTS OF RELIGION

By Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, D. D, Pastor Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord.—Isaiah 1, 18. The greatest of the Hebrew prophets puts these words into the mouth of God. The almighty God is represented as bewailing the fact that men do not think enough in their religion. "Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider," so runs the divine arraignment. According to Isaiah, God wishes men to think, and he wishes them to think with him. The weakness of religious people in all generations has been that they have not thought enough.

It is wicked not to think. A man gives up his manhood who does not think. We are unworthy of the Christian name if we are too timid to scrutinize and investigate and reason about every doctrine which the religion of Jesus teaches. Suppose that thinking does lead you into doubt. Doubt is oftentimes medicinal. There is more faith in honest doubt than in a creed about which you are afraid to think. Doubt is an experience which belongs to a growing life. A man must fight his way through doubt to the clear and sunlit spaces which lie beyond. He can do this only by hard and honest thinking. "Come, let us reason together, saith the Lord." This has been the exhortation of the almighty from the beginning. In the fulness of time Jesus came and in Jesus we heard God saying: "Come, now, let us reason together."

Reasoning with man. Let us pick up the things which we have lost. Let us sit down and think about that man which we fully intended to be and which, alas, we have not yet become.—Charles E. Jefferson, D.D.

What Fools We Mortals Be! The History of a Food Can Never Be Written, Because It Never Could Record the Truth, and History Knows Nought But Truth. The immortal poet who asked this important and meaningless question was one of the keenest dissectors of human nature. One of the most striking illustrations of this truth came to light a few days ago, when a man lying on his dying bed with consumption was recommended by his own brother and sister, in the presence of both of them, an hereditary predisposition to lung weakness, being somewhat strongly marked in the family. The answer was: "Yes, if the doctor recommends it." But, as was to be expected, the doctor said: "Oh, I can give just as good medicine as Psychine." Result: The doctor's patient, who got just as good medicine as Psychine," is in his cold, cold grave, today, while his brother and sister, both of whom were pronounced as hopeless consumptives by the best physicians, through taking Psychine are as healthy specimens of humanity as can be found. The brother who had been cured said to the writer, beside the grave of his brother, "What fools we mortals be," referring to his brother's following the advice of an unwise medical adviser. "I herewith send my photo and testimonial for Psychine. I was given up 16 years ago as an incurable consumptive, by Prof. Lyman, Rush Medical College, Chicago. I suffered several years after this, until I heard of Psychine, and through it I was restored to perfect health, which I have enjoyed for the past ten years. My sickness began first with catarrh of the head. I readily advise catarrh and la grippe sufferers to take Psychine. "MRS. A. WELLS. "Lyndell, Man." Psychine (pronounced Si-keen) is the most wonderful cure known to medical science for coughs, colds, la grippe, catarrh, pneumonia, pleurisy, night sweats, chills, wasting diseases, consumption and stomach troubles. ## THE PRACTICAL GIRL AND HER FADS

Placing the Stars

She Celebrates Dominion Day With Her Young Friends.

HOW to celebrate Dominion Day is ever more or less of a problem, especially for children. We cannot afford to neglect the observance of this, our nation's birthday; less than ever now that its first youth is past and there is danger of forgetting the ideals and high principles that made possible the first Dominion Day.

We cannot lay too much stress on the observance of our one distinctly national holiday. The only question is, What is the best way to keep it? It should not be merely a day of pleasure, a time for getting off to country clubs and parks, to baseball matches and races, as is becoming yearly more and more the custom. The underlying meaning of the day, with its lessons of patriotism in the highest sense, must be impressed on youthful minds; therefore the recent movement in many places to return to the old town meeting, with its spread eagle speeches and eloquent tribute to the work of our ancestors, is to be commended.

But since all cities and towns do not take upon themselves to keep Dominion Day in the good, old-fashioned way, it develops upon us to provide the growth generations with a celebration which tends to inspire patriotism.

Yet children are so impressionable that it should be very easy, if older people would but make the effort on their behalf, to have a Dominion Day celebration that would skillfully combine patriotism and pleasure. Here would be an excellent opportunity for the practical girl who has numerous young friends. Why not give a fête to boys and girls that will be so suggestive, yet pleasurable, that patriotism will be unconsciously imbued?

Too late, you say, "to plan it for this year." Not a bit of it. Children are not exigent when it comes to amusement, and often get more real pleasure from an improvised affair than from the most carefully arranged entertainment. A day or two will more than suffice to get up a delightful Dominion Day party. If possible, have it in some suburban or country home where there are good-sized grounds. A tiny back yard, however, will be large enough for a truly beautiful party. Anything is better than to attempt to celebrate indoors.

ing, or, if one does not own a tent, the table would be quite as attractive set under the trees.

It should, of course, be made as patriotic as possible.

An attractive centerpiece would be to have a circular, rather low, dishpan, turned bottoms up and covered with white tissue paper. In the center of this could stand a statue of Britannia—a doll about ten inches high, dressed in white tissue paper.

Around the sides of the pan may be draped the national colors, or it can be massed in daisies, blue cornflowers and red Rambler roses. At each corner of the table place four or five paper flags. These can be stuck in large potatoes which have been glued. Simple favors should be at each plate.

The menu can be quite simple—creamed chicken with rice, Saratoga potatoes, milk and loaf chocolate, little rolls, sandwiches tied in the national colors, ice cream and cakes and candy. Have the last three in the national colors, with, if possible, individual moulds for the ice, which all children love. At the close distribute patriotic bonbons, have the children pull them and put on the contents.

of the day until the hours become a heavy burden; but give them leave to a little irresponsibility, a little license before they settle down into staid guidance of the young and ignorant. Wise restraint, paternalism, to use an economical term, works as well with children as it sometimes seems to do with nations, but in the long run too much of it, or the wrong kind, is just as bad.

Give your little ones a firm foundation, teach them to respect right as well as to love beauty and truth for themselves alone, and you need not fear for their company or their morals. It is the first success of the home, the count most; if these are sound, the edifice may be depended on almost to build itself.

And, above all, give the blossoms room to grow that they may bloom forth as perfect flowers!

Flowers and Children

A RECENT writer has expressed a pretty thought when she says that "pretty women keep the flowers in their garden like so many charity children, bound and tied, and told where to go and how to conduct themselves, until the poor little blossoms lose all freedom to grow and become stunted and circumspect. They behave themselves well, and never disobey orders, but they take no liberties. In other gardens, on the other hand, the flowers are free to run in sweet riot over all they find, and, in a shy, wild way, to beautify the entire place by their presence.

Old Dependents

D ID YOU ever, in your walks about the city streets, watch the old men going to the market? To more than one of us it is a pathetic sight, these white-haired, trembling men, walking in the streets to avoid curbstones, each with his little basket under his arm. Involuntarily one wonders how heavy will be the load which he must carry homeward, and sighs for the tired old arms that must bear it all that long, weary stretch.

Is there not a moral here for actual parents as well? Children are much like flowers; they, too, respond easily to sunshine and soft influences, and under the frost they wither and fade. Do not bind them too closely; do not give them rules and regulations for every moment.

Of course, this does not mean that it is cruelty to send one's father or uncle or father-in-law, who lives with one, on the little errands that it is so hard for every busy housemother to attend to. There is only something inexpressibly pitiable in those long day figures that makes Lear's words rise to one's lips: "Poor wretch, has he given all to his daughters?"

Often, indeed, these dependent relatives, women and men both, are made to feel keenly the difference between the old days and the new. Where once they were sought and obeyed, now they are neglected and scouted. Like so many pieces of worn-out furniture, they are cast away in the street, on the principle of "Anything will do for grandmother's shawl."

That frequent remark leads one to believe that this real cruelty is often unintentional and mere thoughtlessness. In that case, this minute is not too soon to change your policy.

Hard though it may be to take into your house a querulous and impatient old man or woman, making impatient demands upon your time and attention at all except through marriage, may come that some day you, too, in the hour of illness, will find the bitter is the bread of idleness eaten in the home more bitter when it is doled out with unkind words and looks.

One can well understand that old crippled father whose old-time son, who but Father's "Everybody Works" went quietly out of the house and committed suicide.

In a very old book you will find a story of a man who kept his aged father in a most miserable condition, and continually abusing him he ate, usefulness. When the visiting clergyman condemned the miserly old man to mild terms, the old father inquired, "Oh, sir, I am getting poor old father, and my son grows up dependent. When he was about 20 years old I found him one day carrying a great wooden bowl from which I might expect him then and I might have expected him to be dead by now. I am being dumber, and now, too late, I see my mistake."

Few persons nowadays, let us hope this, for many a strong lesson can be drawn from the story of a miserly old man. Remember always only this: Some day they will be gone; be kind to them while you may.

Choosing Picture Frames

"THERE," said the picture dealer, as he held out a newly framed landscape, "that is what I call an artistic piece of work, if I do say it. Do you see how the dull green harmonizes with the prevailing tone of the picture and brings out its good points? Most of the people who come here don't know the least thing about framing. Why, the other day, a young lady brought me a water color of her own painting—a really good bit of work. It was a painting of the sun shining down on a wheat field, all of course in very light tones. Well, she insisted on having a wide, ornate, gilded frame. She got it, but the effect was so bad that she immediately ordered it reframed in black, which I had advised her to do in the beginning.

Cleaning an Invalid's Room

THE problem of keeping an invalid's room clean and fresh, as it must be for hygienic purposes, without working the patient to exhaustion, is somewhat difficult to solve for any one but the trained nurse.

Menageries in Jewels

THE fair Parisienne, always on the qui vive for something new, is now busy collecting a menagerie whose cage is her jewel case. The list of animals counterfeited in precious metals and stones, for purses, pins and necklaces, is almost endless. The lion, as in his own world, is king here also. He comes in tawny gold with emerald eyes, the swan is either of black enamel and silver, or of platinum, with feet of gold, neck and head of chased silver, eyes of topaz, and even diamond drops of water glistening upon his sides. The spider, emblem of good luck, is of gold and gold, while the owl, symbol of economy, is, appropriately enough, of the comparatively inexpensive silver, precious metal whose name he bears. Cats and elephants' heads, of crystal, onyx and lapis lazuli, hold sway on umbrine and platinum. The two great fads are to imitate the insect's real color by means of mosaic of enamel or precious stones, or the body may be a large opal and the wings of gem-be sprinkled gold. The snake may come in gold, silver or platinum, with ruby, diamond or emerald eyes. Finally, the peacock is the most fashionable belt buckle, his spread tail forming a setting for the most magnificent jewels.

Two Things a Boy May Make

THE average boy is of a mechanical turn of mind. His greatest joy is to create, and he finds with great delight some new amusement of this sort.

Handkerchiefs in Common

THERE is a certain family where no one person owns a handkerchief. On the shelf of a closet, accessible to all, are three piles of women's handkerchiefs—one for men, one for women, and one for children—plain marked with the family initial. These are used by any one who needs them, and the result is that there is absolutely no discussion or quarrelling about ownership.

Patriotic Toppings

cess of a child's party is assured. Remember, it is variety, not cost, that counts for children.

Have the porch hung with paper lanterns and flags. Here the hostess might receive her small guests. She should be dressed in white in a costume appropriate to the character of Britannia. A brother or cousin should be pressed into the service to represent John Bull. These costumes can easily be made at home from colored paper and cheap stamped muslins. The slight trouble in making them will be repaid a thousandfold by the delight of the young guests.

Start the games as soon as possible. Begin by having a grand march and drill over the lawn, led by John Bull and Britannia, and followed by the children, marching two and two, each carrying a flag and draped in the tricolor. This march can be made very effective by frequently forming the children into circles and squares, and dancing with raised flags in and out from the center, or winding in and out.

After the violent exercise of the drill, have some quiet game, such as pinning white stars on a flag. Fasten a large flag to a fence or porch rail at a convenient height, cover the starry surface with plain blue, and supply each child with a big paper star, through which is run a large pin to fasten it to the flag. Blindfold the children, one at a time, turn them round three times, and let them try to pin their star to the flag. This will afford lots of amusement. The ing, or, if one does not own a tent, the table would be quite as attractive set under the trees.

It should, of course, be made as patriotic as possible.

Ordinary white boxes of any size can be covered with red, white and blue paper and made very attractive. Some of these could have toy cannons pasted on them; or a larger and more elaborate box, which might be used as a prize, could be made with a layer or two of wadding pasted on top covered with a small silk flag.

Ordinary round pill boxes, an inch or two deep, should have the bottoms painted red, the sides white, and a pink line at the top. The sides can be decorated with a red and white check pattern. A lid can be made from a small, rather deep box with a slit hand pasted round the center of the sides and red, white and blue paper joining it above and below. Flat, oblong boxes may be turned into knapsacks by covering with blue paper and drawing the national colors in the center of one side. On the top end place a roll of red paper. On the top end place together with two half-inch pieces of white paper to represent straps. A small white tissue paper box may be made into a pretty favor by putting a frill of white tissue paper around the edge, held in the center with a tricolor band. On the top of the box paste a large shield in the national colors. Also have on hand cheap paper or muslin flags, one for each child, to be used in drilling, and plenty of tissue paper in patriotic colors to be around their dresses for aessia. ## CRITICISM ON DRAWINGS FROM GRADES I, II, AND III.

When these last drawings for this term were made the holidays had already begun to cast their illumination before, to dazzle your eyes with the splendours of anticipated delights. Under such circumstances it is very hard to concentrate the thoughts on work of any kind, therefore Grades I, II, and III, deserve great credit for the hard study and careful drawing it has taken to produce such good results. Out of the drawings sent in not more than a dozen altogether were considered not quite good enough for special mention, and these were not altogether failures, but there were indications in them that sufficient attention had not been paid to the instructions given. Commendation is not worth the getting unless we deserve it. Let us not be discouraged, then, but make up our minds that next term we will read the lessons more attentively both before we make our drawings, in order to know how to go about them, and after our drawings are made to see if there is some point we have forgotten, and at first there is sure to be something wrong or left undone which should be corrected before we may be satisfied to let the work leave our hands.

This week there are seven drawings reproduced. Jack Chapman is a former prize-winner, so he is out of the race till the end of the year, but his tree is much too well done not to appear among the best, and he still runs a chance of getting the prize for the best work sent in during the year. All the drawings reproduced become the property of The Advertiser. Though the maple trees in the paper are good, especially for Junior grades, they have their shortcomings.

Jack Chapman has underestimated the width of the top part in comparison with the width of the trunk. G. Glennie has made the main limbs of his tree too small. Another error in his is pointed out further on. Norah Lowe has made her foliage end in rather too straight a line across the bottom. The foliage in the one drawn by Gladys McEvoy is a little too much like the foliage of the pine-tree. The big branches are hardly heavy enough in the one done by Kathleen James.

Charlie Clare's looks as though its them when our eyes are half-closed; that is the only way in which we can get a proper estimate of their relative values.

Grade I. B. Talbot street school, sent in excellent trees, but the foliage is much too light in color. The one belonging to Kathleen James was too good not to have it reproduced, but charcoal had to be carefully put on over it in order to have it show up at all in the paper. Do not be afraid of the charcoal. We want your work to be vigorous, even if it does happen to be wrong occasionally.

The thing we manage to do best of all is the pencil stroke to express foliage. Some leaf-covered branches waved in the air like gophered ribbons; others were woolly or spiky, and one tree looked like a wild conflagration, rather like a cloud of smoke. Some trees were more like pine, others like spruce or pine or beech trees. Very few expressed the feathery edges well.

All good artists do not express foliage with the same stroke, but whatever stroke they use it does look like foliage, not like smoke, wool, sticks or shavings. The only way we can acquire a stroke which does represent foliage is to practice making it again and again. Considering what you have already done, you ought to paint foliage remarkably well before you are much older.

Please print your names distinctly. It must be very unpleasant to find your name so mutilated in the paper that you can barely recognize it, but you have yourself to blame, for you can hardly expect The Advertiser to employ an expert decipherer of hieroglyphics to make out what you have apparently been at such pains to disguise.

For nine weeks we will have rest from our labors. There will be no more lessons, drawings or criticisms on Saturday in September, when the next lesson for Grades IV, V, and VI, will appear, and probably the lesson for Grades VII, and VIII also.

Let us have a good time, now, and come back ready and eager for better work when school reopens.

A. A. POWELL.

SENATOR COFFEY.

The University of Ottawa, in conferring the degree of doctor of laws on Senator Coffey of London, did honor to him as both a statesman and a publicist. He is a prominent and respected member of the Senate, but he is also a highly respected journalist in his chosen sphere. He has long been identified with the Catholic Record, which he has been able to make a journalistic success without alienating the good-will of the Protestant community in which his lot has been cast. Dr. Coffey is an Irishman by birth, but a Canadian by education and calling, and he is a credit alike to the land of his birth and the land of his adoption.

3. Drawn by Norah Lowe, aged 8, Grade 1, Lorne Avenue School. Winner of second prize.

WINSTON SCORES HOUSE OF LORDS

ONE-THIRD OF THE LAND BELONGS TO MEMBERS OF THE SECOND CHAMBER.

Winston Churchill at Manchester: The cardinal fault about the second chamber as at present constituted was that it was not fair, that it did not judge questions on their merits, that it was the instrument of a party used for party purposes alone. (Renewed cheers.) That was what he called the function of the spoke in the wheel. (Hear, hear and laughter.) But there was another aspect to which he would refer. Lord Ridley had observed a few weeks ago that the House of Lords ought to have control over legislation because one-third of the land of the country belonged to them. What a very significant fact. (Cheers.) One-third of the whole country, these famous islands in which we dwell, which had been preserved inviolate by British courage and sacrifice through the shocks and changes of a thousand years, this soil of our fatherland which we might be called on to defend at the peril of our own lives, this soil which we guarded with our power, industry, and wealth! It did not belong to us, it did not belong to the people of the country, it did not even belong to any large proportion; one-third of it belonged to six hundred persons, who comprised the second chamber. Were they contented, those fortunate landowners, were they satisfied with the immense possessions which they had secured? (Cries of "No.") Not at all. Here in this country, where alone among civilized states, could be seen the melancholy spectacle of a landless peasantry, was also the most anachronous and blighted agriculture, and like the dog in the manger the Lords forbade to others what was admittedly of little profit to themselves. (Cheers.) He was no Socialist, if by "Socialism" was meant those wild visions and predatory appetites which Mr. Keir Hardie and his friends indulged; but the present organization of our society was not only imperfect and incomplete, it was vitiated by many features of wastefulness and unfairness, and of such such features of injustice and absurdity none were more obvious than the great twin evils connected with the Lords and with the land. As the Lords were the agents of a single party so they were also the champions of a single interest, and judgment even by the low test of being a good protection for property the existing chamber failed in its function, and was found always ready to sacrifice the commercial interests. (Cheers.)

KEEP THE CHILDREN WELL.

Stomach and bowel troubles kill thousands of little ones every year during the hot weather months. Diarrhoea, dysentery and cholera infantum often come without warning, and if prompt aid is not at hand the child may be beyond help in a few hours. If you want to keep your children healthy, rosy and full of life during the hot weather give them an occasional dose of Baby's Own Tablets. This medicine prevents illness by cleansing the stomach and bowels, and cures summer complaints when they come unexpectedly. Every mother should keep these Tablets in the home at all times. Mrs. Robert Currie, Loring, Ont., says: "Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine I know of for stomach and bowel troubles." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont.

CROWDS FLOCK TO ROOF GARDENS

NEW YORKERS PERCH THEMSELVES ON THE ROUSTOPS THESE NIGHTS.

Now that summer has come in earnest New Yorkers have perched themselves on the housetops. A few years ago the roof was a haven of rest and comfort for the sweltering and panting poor in summer. Today, clad with vines and beautiful hanging lanterns, it is the rendezvous of the wealthy who have come to the city for a day or two the playground of the middle-class pleasure-seeker, the mecca of smart diners, the refuge of invalids and the nursery for babies. On the roof garden, swinging midway between street and startling sky, Cupid moves his paws in the game which never grows old. New Yorkers are not exactly treating the air, but it isn't long since they awakened to the enormous possibilities of roof life during the hot weather. Gentle zephyrs, which could never force their way through narrow streets to stoops crowded with tired humanity, fit gayly among chimney tops and elevator hoods, and there you will find all New Yorkers in the summer nights. If a person desires to study charitable work he is hoisted by elevator to a roof nursery of a hospital for babies, there to find a perfectly equipped life-saving station, for heat-prostrated youngsters. Would he study sociology on the Eastside, he mounts to the roof of a settlement house or a public school, there to find music, children dancing or playing games and tired wage-earners resting. For a glimpse of the famed life on the Rialto he must take a flower-hung elevator to a theater in mid-air and sip his cooling drink away above the bright lights and ceaseless roar of the Great White Way. If he would dine among the elect another elevator carries him to a hotel roof which has been touched by the modern fairy wand of gold and transformed into a veritable garden of a thousand delights. If he is invited to spend an evening at a friend's home once more—this time to an apartment house roof. But the roof life in New York is not confined to the dwellers in apartments. Even the big hotels and restaurants are affected by the open air spirit. The French restaurants, Sherrys, Martins, Moquins, the Cafe Francis content themselves with flower bedecked terraces, where patrons spend the passing throng at close range. The roof garden of the Waldorf-Astoria opened tonight and those of the Astor and Hoffman houses have been in operation for three weeks.

ITCH, Mange, Prairie Scratches and every form of contagious Itch on human or animals cured in 30 minutes by Wolford's Sanitary Lotion. It never fails. Sold by Callard & McLellan.

TELEPHONES ON CARS PROVE A GREAT AID

FOUND TO BE USEFUL IN TRAIN DISPATCHING ON ELECTRIC LINES.

There are three methods followed in the application of the telephone to electric railway dispatching: 1. Fixed telephone sub-stations in booths placed at suitable points along the line. 2. Jack boxes at poles to which portable telephones carried in the cars may be hung and connected for temporary use. 3. Portable telephone sets hung upon the front of the car, the vestibule platform of which serves as a booth, and attachment made by flexible wires to jacks at numerous poles along the line.

On some railway lines, says Technical Literature, the method of connecting a telephone on the car with the line is not by means of a jack at the side of one of the poles, but by a long slender rod carrying the wires, which may be hooked upon the main lines at any place.

The telephones used on electric railroad systems must give transmission which is clear and loud, and must be of types not liable to be placed out of service by the jar of continuous transportation on a car.

Application of the telephone to train dispatching on electric railways has resulted in a marked economy of both plant and operation, in that the ability of the superintendent to be informed as to the position of the various cars and to communicate with their operators, gives a greater service efficiency to the road.

The telephone is of great service in severe snowstorms by reason of the facility which it affords for information to be given the train dispatcher as to the condition of the road. In cases of mishap, the telephone affords means for the quick clearance of the track by the facilities of obtaining wrecking cars or repair hands. In cases of accident not only can medical help be summoned for the injured, but means can be taken to produce information relative to the details of the occurrence which may be of great importance in ascertaining the liability of the company.

MARRIAGE IN GERMANY.

In Germany there are more meretricious marriages than anywhere else in the world," said William Bardel, United States consul at Hamburg, Germany. "This is not meant that they are more grasping than the people of other nations; it means that the density of population and the great number of poor people make it necessary for young folks to consider the financial side of marriage. Here in America, where we are making lots of money, few care for money more than we do."

"The young man in Germany who makes $2,000 marks a year—about $500 in our money—is considered to have a fairly good living. But how can he support a wife on that? Hence the questions before the contract of how much the young woman's family will give her on her wedding day, and how much of an inheritance the young man will have.—Washington Post.

Children Who Are Nervous.

Nervousness is often a family predisposition. We inherit tendencies to disease just as we inherit physical resemblances. Strain of study, restlessness all the time, early introductions into the duties of social life, develop all too soon nervous troubles among children. St. Vitus dance, headaches, epilepsy and kindred maladies are becoming alarmingly common among the young. Pale, wan-eyed, listless young people are met everywhere.

To neglect signs of weakening-down is criminal. Parents, by ignoring very manifest symptoms of mental and nervous strain, actually condemn their children to life-long invalidism, which dwarfs their power of work limits the possibilities of their children's lives to very narrow ranges. Upon the first sign of nervous feelings, St. Vitus dance, rundown conditions, weakness, persistent and recurring headaches get them that wonderful body, brain and nerve builder, Ferrozone. Its action is positive in this class of disease, both in old and young, and its results through its influence on the blood forming, is so permanent that the crisis is soon passed.

Strength, ability to study with comfort and perfect safety, quickly follows the use of Ferrozone. It builds up the nerves, nourishes the brain, supplies nutritive blood to the muscles. Color, endurance and vim go hand in hand with Ferrozone. Children who use it are robust and vigorous. No tonic is better, as thousands testify, just as good for the old folks as for the young. To be had in any drug store in 50-cent boxes.

Wonderful Power in My Constipation Cure

Mine is a marvelous remedy. There are others, but not one possesses the peculiar merit so prominent in mine.
With my remedy I guarantee to cure constipation.
I also guarantee to prevent it; others do not.
My preparation, which is in pill form gives tone and regularity to the bowels that quickly rid the system of effete matter, accumulations of bile and other injurious results of constipation.
I call my pills Dr. Hamilton's.
I am sure they are safe because composed of such health-giving vegetable extracts as Mandrake, Butternut, Hyoscamus and Dandelion.
My pills are not harsh or drastic. They cause no pain, no distress; they are prescribed by physicians because of their mildness and certainty to cure.
For women and children I know of no better means for keeping the system healthy. For men they are perfect.
I have proved their merit in biliousness, constipation and headache, and these troubles strongly recommend them in all similar cases.
My personal guarantee stands behind every box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills; and this means much to you in selecting your remedy.
Every dealer sells Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut, 25c per box, or five boxes for $1, and the result I guarantee. Sick, bilious and constipated headache, sick stomach and other complaints that arise when the system is clogged and constipated. Better try Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

SUNSHINE FURNACE

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE WATER-PAN

is not appreciated by many furnace manufacturers or the general public as much as it should be.

Without the moisture evaporated from the water in the pan, the hot air distributed throughout the house is dry and dusty. Cracks and opens up the furniture—is not fit to breathe into the lungs.

Yet, mind you, some furnace makers place this important water-pan where there is often not enough heat to evaporate the water. Put it out of sight in an awkward position at the side or back, where it cannot readily be filled without being juggled to replace it without spilling a big share over himself.

Note the convenient location of the large water-pan of the Sunshine—just above the fuel door. Takes but a moment or two to fill it.

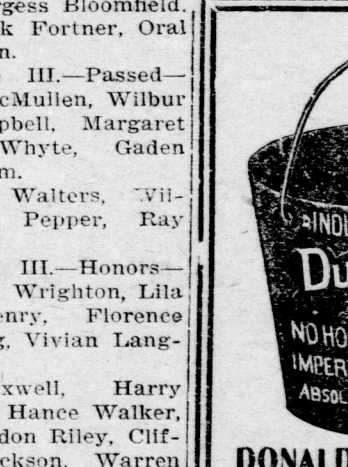

It is placed right in the path of the hot air as it circulates around the dome of the furnace. It is impossible for any heated air to pass out of the registers before extracting its due share of moisture from the water-pan. That means you breathe healthful, clarified air, free from dust and dryness.

For the sake of your furniture, your own health and peace of mind, you should decide on the Sunshine. If your local dealer does not handle the Sunshine write direct to us for FREE BOOKLET.

INDEPENDENT HIGH PRESSURE SYSTEM

tario. The same year London was surveyed. Something more than the erection of a log house was, however, needed to give the place its first impulse, and it is an interesting fact that that impulse was supplied by the administration of the law. The little village of Vittoria, in Norfolk County, had for some years been the judicial headquarters for the whole of this western district, and on the court house there being destroyed by fire it was decided by the Government, after a warm fight, in the Legislature, in which the late Capt. Matthews (father of the late Mrs. George J. Goodhue) who then represented the district of which London formed part, strove valiantly to have the location of the court house changed to London. To make London the headquarters. Accordingly, in 1827, the erection of the present court house building was commenced, and three years later it was completed. The erection of this building, at the time one of the most imposing structures to be seen for a hundred miles or more in any direction, required the services of a goodly number of workmen, to cater to whose wants, were needed shoemakers and others, so that on its completion it was found that London possessed a population of some 600 souls.

Plank Roads.

Sir John next told of London being chosen by the Imperial Government as a garrison town, of the location of two full regiments here, and the importance of the matter to the village. Incorporation as a town was obtained in 1848, when London had a population of nearly 5,000. The building of a plank road - as even, almost, as a floor - to Port Stanley - was another important step both to the municipality and the farming community. Another plank road was constructed to Hamilton, and these, with turnpikes to Sarnia and Chatham, gave the town additional outlets to the lakes. The building of bridges over the water, and the road construction. The first railway train entered London from the east in 1853, the road (the G. W. M.) being continued shortly afterward to Detroit. Sir John was among the Londoners who attended the banquet given by the Detroit city council in honor of the event. The year 1856 found London in possession of a railway of its own to Lake Erie, at a total cost of $1,200,000, and which has ever since been found of inestimable value to the city. Equally fresh in memory will be the construction of the spur line from St. Marys, which gave the city connection with the Grand Trunk running from Montreal to Sarnia; the building of the London, Huron and Bruce Railway, opening up to the London business men the trade of the rich counties to the north; the securing of connection, through our own railway, with the Michigan coast, and the building of the Pere Marquette systems, and lastly, but far from least, the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway through London, giving London direct connection with that great transcontinental road.

First Railway Train.

"And what a change all this has wrought," said Sir John. "At the time of incorporation the distance of a railway train into London was the event. Now, we have connection with four great trunk lines of railway; 120 passenger and freight trains enter and leave the city daily, and London enjoys the distinct advantage of being one of the best distributing points in the Dominion. More than that, the enterprising Londoners of today are ever on the lookout to improve these shipping facilities, the most recent evidence of which enterprise being the establishment of an inter-switching system which is of great value to shippers. With the improvement of transportation facilities, London's industrial growth has kept good pace. Fifty years ago when the board of trade was started, the factories of London might have been numbered on the fingers, and perhaps not one of them would today be considered of much importance. Now, I am informed on excellent authority, there are less than 225 industrial establishments employing an aggregate of 12,500 people, with an approximate annual pay roll of $7,840,000. Every one of London's industries is running at full capacity, many are enlarging their premises, and from time to time new industries are being added. Almost every line of manufacture is represented, among them being some of the largest of their kind in Canada, and the prospects for continued activity are most encouraging. In this connection, I might mention as an interesting fact, that the first steam engine was brought to London in the early forties, by the late Elijah Leonard, for use in his machine shop on the corner of Fullarton and Ridout streets.

A Wholesale Center.

As a wholesale center London has forged ahead until today it stands third amongst the cities of the Dominion, and second in the Province. Today the wholesale houses of London number 57, embracing the various lines and employing 400 travelers. The retail stores of the city will compare favorably with those of any city in the Dominion, and it is not easy to imagine the surprise of one who has been absent from London even for twenty years on returning and seeing the vast improvements in this respect.

"Another matter of which Londoners are justly proud is the city's position as a financial center. No less than ten charter banks have branches here, five of them being comparatively new comers. One of them has two additional sub-branches, and two of them one each. London is also the pioneer in the loan and savings business, no less than eight of such companies being established here. This, I think is evidence enough of London's financial importance.

"Londoners are proud of their market place, as well they might be, for no other city in Canada possesses one which will compare with it, as regards extent, its convenience to the business center, or the amount of trade conducted.

The Waterworks of London.

"The waterworks of London, construction of which was commenced and completed in the year 1873, have proven a most excellent investment for the city, and today the purity of London's water is famed. It should be our aim, and we should be in a position to make it known all over the country that we have an abundant supply of water for manufacturing, domestic and all other purposes. It would suggest that the water commissioners call a meeting of ratepayers to discuss this most important matter. As was to be expected, the great increase of population has rendered the supply for all purposes inadequate. My opinion is, gentlemen, that the means of meeting the present situation is to be found in adding so far as possible to the present supply of spring water, and an establishment of an independent high pressure fire fighting, manufacturing and street watering system. By this means we will be able to husband the supply of pure spring water, for strictly domestic purposes."

Introduction of Electricity.

Sir John referred to the introduction of electricity on the street railway, the establishment of government buildings, the hospitals, asylum, charitable institutions and the great expansion of the education facilities. When he was a member of the board of education in 1850, 339 was the average attendance in the schools, the enrollment being 598, with two schools and five teachers, while today there is an enrollment of 8,600, with 173 schools. In addition there are the separate schools, a number of private schools (including the Sacred Heart), bringing the total enrollment to over 10,000. The school buildings are valued at over $100,000. Sir John also referred to the Western University and its importance to the entire western district. All that is now required to make it successful is a good public support.

Sir John touched upon the holding of fairs in London, which dates back to 1835. He spoke in complimentary terms of London's daily newspapers, and finally told of the origin of the board of trade.

The Board of Trade.

"In all this city's development," he declared, "the board of trade, which has just completed its fifty years of existence, has taken no small part. This board, as you are of course aware, was organized in 1857, with a membership of forty-two. Of these, it so happens, I am the only survivor. You can imagine my feelings when I look back along the road of fifty years, and reflect that of all those fellow-members of mine I alone am left to tell of the work, for the good of the city, accomplished by these men, each of whom in his day was foremost in his efforts for the upbuilding of the commercial interests of London. From the very outset the London Board of Trade took an active interest, not only in the affairs of the city, but in national matters as well, and was ever alert to do its share in keeping the nation's law-makers in the right path, should they happen to make a mis-step. It was partly through the efforts of the board that the local market tolls were removed, and the construction of the London, Huron and Bruce Railway, in 1870, was decided on mainly through the exertions of the board. The board took an active interest in the establishment of the waterworks system, and was also prominent in securing the establishment of the present inter-switching arrangements, and in many other matters, municipal and national, its influence was made manifest. I am pleased to learn, gentlemen, that the board is showing the signs of renewed activity; that the membership has of late been materially added to, and I would recommend businessmen of London, who have not already done so, to identify themselves with it."

Canada's Progress.

Sir John then dealt with the progress of Canada as a whole, pointing out what had been done to bring about the Dominion's present proud position, and in conclusion said that there is a grand future before Canada, and one who watches the signs of the times will for a moment doubt. A foremost American statesman and diplomatist, the Hon. Joseph Choate, recently expressed the belief that as the nineteenth century was the United States' century, so the twentieth century would be Canada's. "In that connection I would point to the fact that at the opening of the last century, the population of the United States was almost identical with that of Canada, at the beginning of the present century. From the tide of immigration that is now passing to the Dominion, and the rapid filling up of our great Northwest, there is every reason to believe that 1910 will see Canada with a population equal to, if not in excess of, that of the United States one hundred years previously. Is it too much to prophesy, then, that the close of the present century will find Canada equal in population and in every other respect to that of our great neighbor-country to the south?"

EATEN UP WITH CATARRH.

It spread, so extensively through his system that life was despaired of. Such was the experience of Ubric Drebbaut, of Sweetsburg, Que. Catarrh cured him. It will cure you, too. Try it for colds, bronchitis or catarrh. Money back if it fails.

The average valuation of the paper money printed daily by Uncle Sam totals over $3,000,000.

THE CRICK IN THE BACK. - "One touch of water's meadow world kin, sings the poet. But what about the touch of rheumatism and lumbago, which is so often the result of a cold in the back, for it renders life miserable. Yet how delighted is the sense of relief when the application of Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil drives pain away. There is nothing equals it.

India's cotton average this year is nearly a million larger than last year. The output is a record, 5,105,000 bales.

MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS. The Department of Public Printing at Washington has a payroll of nearly three thousand persons.

A REGULARIZED REGULATOR. - To bring the digestive organs into symmetrical working is the aim of physicians when they find a patient suffering from stomachic irregularities, and for this purpose they can prescribe nothing better than Paroselle's Vegetable Pills, which will be found a pleasant medicine of surprising virtue in bringing the refractory organs into subjection and restoring them to normal action, in which condition only can they perform their duties properly.

Board of Trade Will Take Up Travelers' Grievances With G. T. R.

The board of trade held a largely-attended meeting last night, the weather conditions being considered. President Stevely presided, and several matters of much importance were dealt with.

Chairman Harry Buttery of the railway committee drew to the attention of the board certain grievances of the travelers in regard to the new timetable lately put into effect by the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. Buttery said that the L. H. and B. train, which leaves London at 8:30, is held at Clinton until the arrival of the train which leaves Toronto at 7:10, to make connections. Sometimes travelers and other passengers are detained at Clinton fully two hours. This is a great inconvenience to the travelers, and Mr. Buttery suggested that the railway be asked to have the train from Toronto leave that city an hour earlier in the morning, so that the delay at Clinton necessary to make connections may be done away with as far as possible.

Other Grievances.

Mr. Buttery also pointed out that train No. 11, from the west, arrives here at 10:40, and people who come to London to shop have not time to do so properly, because the only train leaving London in the afternoon or evening for the west, which stops at all stations, is the 2 o'clock train.

The same grievance exists in regard to train No. 12, from the east, and this gives Hamilton wholesale houses a big advantage over London.

It was decided by the board to take up the matters with the railway authorities at once.

New Members.

The following new members were elected by unanimous votes: Hume Cronyn, manager of the Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company; F. E. Leonard, of E. Leonard & Sons; Harry Ranshan, grocer; John D. Wilson, M. D., and A. M. Oldham, district manager of the Ogilvie Milling Company.

The salary of the efficient secretary, Mr. J. A. Nelles, was increased to $240 per annum, it formerly having been but $100.

A communication was received from Mr. A. W. Throop, assistant secretary of the postoffice department at Ottawa, stating that the department is not aware that letters at London are at times not back-stamped, and that the department will at once investigate the matter.

Prospective Industry.

E. J. Evans, of 30 Herbert road, Smithwick, England, wrote the board that it would be advantageous to both the Dominion of Canada and his firm if the factory - the firm makes steel writing paper, and which is removed to this country. He is thinking of establishing at least a branch in Canada, and he asked to be supplied with all information concerning the minerals, etc., of this district, and in the event of his visiting London that he be accorded an interview with the board of trade.

It was decided to have the secretary furnish Mr. Evans with all information at once, and his communication sent to the industrial committee of the board.

As Mr. Evans also desires to know if the city would assist his firm by granting him an exemption from taxation for a term of years, the matter will likely be laid before the city council.

MR. ARMSTRONG ON IRISH MATTERS

London Ex-Alderman Gives His Views of Politics in the Green Isle.

Dublin, June 16.--I have traveled the whole length of Ireland on the eastern side and turned the corners at both ends towards the west from Queenstown to Rossmore, North and have thus visited the centers of thought into which Ireland is divided. I have conversed with Roman Catholic priests, Presbyterian clergymen, lawyers, tradesmen and farmers (men who drive jaunting cars both furiously and gently) in fact, with all sorts and conditions of men. I have been in Ireland about ten days, long enough, I suppose, to have felt the religious, political and domestic pulse of the nation, and am, in consequence, able to speak with authority and to find a remedy for the woes of Ireland which have defied the most persistent efforts of some of the greatest statesmen of our world-wide Empire. Superficial traveling is a fine way of solving national problems about which the traveler can boast the supreme ignorance. It is, as you know, the fact in the south of Ireland the loudest tongue shout: "Home rule." In the north the people exclaim: "Statu quo"--remain as we are.

The latter is the most definite and best understood, for I find that "home rule" is subject to various interpretations, varying in degree. To some it is freedom from the despotic rule of the Saxon; to others it means management of local affairs according to local ideas, which means subdivision--some peaceably and by some, the more warlike process.

I found the peasantry, as a rule, not strongly disaffected against the English. There are patriotic organizations--composed of men ambitious to rule Ireland and supersede the British. The last effort of the British Government to "conciliate Ireland" was rejected by the organized societies, but the feeling among the "people" seems to be that it was an honest endeavour to give the nation the rest it so much needs and to allow it to turn its attention to other affairs which will tend to promote its commercial and social well-being.

Canada's constitution would be acceptable, and in my humble judgment, and entitled to something of the sort, subject, of course, to changes and modifications, such as changes of location and conditions demand. Independence is not so much thought of except by a few of the more hot-headed and ardent politicians.

NEWSY NOTES FROM EMBRO. Guests Come and Go--Two Weddings--Death at Rayside.

Embros, June 27.--The home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ross, 18th line, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, when their eldest son, Miss Laura May, was married to Mr. Angus Laing, of Rayside. The ceremony took place on the lawn in front of a bank of ferns and lilacs, and the wedding march from "Lohengrin" was played by Miss Isabella Murray. Rev. James Barber, the newly-ordained pastor of Knox Church, officiated at the ceremony which united for good and all the two popular Zorra people. The bride's dress was of cream chiffon, with satin trimmings, and she carried a bouquet of cream roses. She was unattended by two little girls, Beatrice Forbes, sister of the groom, and Florence Langdon, cousin of the bride, who were wearing pale blue ballies, and acted as bridesmaids. After congratulations had been offered the assembly, numbering about 125 guests, sat down to a dainty repast, and the evening was pleasantly spent in music and dancing. The beautiful and costly array of presents testify to the esteem in which the young couple are held. Mr. and Mrs. Forbes will reside in Rayside, where they have a beautiful home. The marriage was solemnized in Toronto, at the home of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cochran, Brunswick avenue, of their eldest daughter, Miss Mary Condit, of Mr. John C. Ross, M.A., representative of the Toronto Globe in Montreal. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. McDonald, assisted by Rev. W. G. Wallace, D.D. The bride was attired in a becoming gown of cream lace over chiffon tulle, and her attendant was her sister, Miss Fair Cook, who wore a dress of pale blue silk and white. Rev. William A. Amos, B.A., of All Saints, supported the groom. The bride's going-away gown was champagne broad, with hat to match. After a honeymoon spent on the Saguenay and lower St. Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. Ross will take up residence in Montreal. Mr. Ross is an old Embro boy, and a son of Mr. Hugh Ross, Kirkhill Farm. His many friends wish him and his bride a happy married life.

Miss Margaret Anderson, of Woodstock, is visiting at Mr. John Fairhair's. Miss Margaret Bushfield, of the Glasgow House, has left for her home in Lakelet. Miss May Middleton is spending two weeks in Lakelet. Mr. William A. Tillsonburg, is here for a few days. He and Mr. Kennedy, of our public school, are conducting the entrance examinations.

Mrs. James E. McKay and Misses Bessie and Jean Ross were in Toronto, attending the wedding of their brother, Mr. John C. Ross. Miss Jean Patterson has gone to Montreal, where she will make her home in the future. Mrs. (Dr.) G. A. Sutherland and sister, Miss Agnes Munro, are visiting their aunt, Miss Jessie Munro, in Quebec. Miss Winnie Murray is visiting in Parkhill.

The death took place at her home in Rayside of Annie Elliott, beloved wife of Mr. John M. Sutherland. Besides her sorrowing husband, she leaves two daughters, the youngest but three weeks old, and two sons, who have the sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon at North Embro Cemetery, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

HUGHES HAS CURB FOR CORPORATIONS

New York State to Appoint Public Utilities Commission.

Albany, N. Y., June 28.--Powers of the most extraordinary and sweeping character have been given the public utilities commission appointed by Governor Hughes today.

The bill creating the commissions which was earnestly advocated by Governor Hughes marked what was probably one of the most important steps to meet the present demand throughout the country for stricter and more detailed supervision of corporations.

The commissions will have free-handed control and will be required to enforce the regulations provided for in the measure for the conduct of public service plants, except telephone and telegraph plants.

It will be their duty to compel all corporations to give safe and adequate service at just and reasonable rates; to prevent all rebates and discriminations in rates between different classes of shippers or passengers or kinds of traffic; to compel all common carriers to have sufficient cars and motive power to meet all requirements for the transportation of passengers and property which may be reasonably anticipated, and to see that every common carrier is held liable for loss or damage due to delay in transit occasioned by negligence.

The bill prohibits free passes, except in a few limited instances. It provides that no franchises shall be capitalized in excess of the amount actually paid to the State as consideration for granting the franchise; that the capital stock of a corporation formed by the merger or consolidation of two or more corporations shall not exceed the sum of the capital stock of the corporations so consolidated at their par value, or such sums and any additional sums actually paid in cash; that no contract for consolidation or lease shall be capitalized in the stock of any corporation whatever; and that no corporation shall hereinafter issue any bonds against or as a lien upon any contract for consolidation or merger; and that no corporation shall purchase or hold stock in another such corporation or common carrier unless authorized by the commission.

A NOTABLE GATHERING. The McAll Mission Auxiliary, of London, held their June meeting in the First Presbyterian Church at Wilton Grove, on Thursday, as the guests of Dr. and Mrs. McCrae and the ladies of Westminster. Between forty and fifty ladies were present from the city and altogether the attendance was about 70. After the meeting tea was served on the beautiful lawn and a delightful time was spent. The thanks of the ladies of the society was voiced in the most beautiful terms by Mrs. McMechan and Mrs. Leonard. Mrs. McCrae in felicitous words replied. Dr. McCrae and Mr. A. Stewart, K. C., also gave brief and humorous addresses.

Rev. Dr. McCrae has returned from the grand camp meeting of the Sons of Scotland at Niagara Falls. He reports the meeting a splendid success.

Mr. Walter L. Nichol, B. A., a graduate of Knox College and a son of Mr. Adam Nichol, has just returned from a year spent in Glasgow, in post-graduate study. Mr. Nichol, who is a licentiate of the Presbyterian Church will soon be settled in a regular charge in Ontario.

The picnic of the Westminster Sunday school will take place at Port Stanley on Tuesday next, the second of July. All the day schools of Westminster have been invited to join in the picnic. On account of the large number of picnic takers, the annual picnic of the Westminster schools has been changed to Tuesday the second of July.

Rev. Jas. Rollins, B. A., will preach at St. Andrew's Church, Glanworth, on Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Mr. Rollins is always a favorite in Westminster.

Advertiser Correspondence. Mill Owners and the River. To the Editor of The Advertiser: Dear Sir--As your contemporary appears to be a very strong advocate for river water, judging from their editorials, as well as the publication of all and sundry articles favorable to this view of the water supply, we should like very much to be informed through your columns, if those strenuous advocates have ever approached the three mill owners, Messrs. Saunby, Dexter, and Sutherland as to the probable indemnity these men would ask in the event of the city taking water from them. These mills were placed in their present situation solely on account of the water privileges they enjoy for power to their mills, and which privilege is protected to them by a crown charter. At present they require all the water the river affords, and when even a very moderate dry spell occurs, it is perfectly powerless to drive their mills, and has to be supplemented by steam power. Should the city appropriate the river water, their mills would not be worth "an old song" to them, where they are presently situated, so that the property-owners of the city would have to go down pretty deep into their pockets to pay not only for the relocation of their property, but also for the loss of a very valuable business attached thereto, which has cost these gentlemen years of painstaking care, energy and expense to build up to the very considerable proportions which two of them, at least, at present enjoy.

Let the taxpayers have a little more light on the subject before taking a vote, and give them as near as possible a full, tabulated estimate of the cost of this river water scheme, including the large indemnity these mill-owners would certainly require to be paid. Yours truly, L. V. LUDWIG, London, June 28.

Beautiful Women in the Ranks of Royalty

None Has So Prolonged a Reputation for Loveliness as the Queen of England—The Bewitching Princess Henry of Pless—The Romance of the Czarina of Russia.

Perhaps no woman of royal blood has had so great or so prolonged a reputation for beauty as the present Queen of England. There are many women in English society who are infinitely more beautiful, whose figures conform far more closely to the artistic ideal, and above all there are many who possess keener wit, more brilliant speech and all the delicate charms of the feminine nature that are so difficult to define. Yet, whenever and wherever the Queen appears, all other women seem to fade and pale beside her. She is the grandmother of numerous royal babies, but that does not hinder her from being the belle of every gathering.

She remains amazingly youthful in appearance. The matter of preserving her good looks has been a very important one for her. She has been the follower of every legitimate and sensible fad for keeping young. For many, many years the Queen of England has had her daily facial treatment and in this way has ward off the unpleasant marks of time. She has assisted this process of complexion beautifying by keeping close to a certain simple diet. Her slender, perfectly rounded figure has been given outdoor exercise, no matter what the state of the weather.

For thirty years she has dressed her hair in precisely the same manner. This alone shows the soundness of her ideas and the levelness of her brain. No other style is so becoming to her peculiarly delicate forehead and profile. As in her princess days, her eyes are still brilliant with interest and humor, her head has the same regal poise and her shoulders the upright staidness.

Aside from these delightful qualities the Queen of England has a sweet, gracious, kindly manner that wins everyone to her. It is not personality or magnetism, or any of the charms that prove extremely and irresistibly fascinating. It is the kind of womanliness that could never create jealousy and a sort of saintliness that would make a friend of the most embittered enemy.

While the lovely Alexandra has never had a wide reputation for remarkable intellectual brilliancy, she has been singularly free from such mistakes as might be made by a woman who for forty-two years, has been continually and unceasingly exposed to the full glare of publicity. She has known in her own friendly and easy manner and those people with it was desirable she should know. She has steered clear of those whom it were better she should not meet. She has kept close within her own queenly atmosphere of perfect refinement and not one breath of scandal has ever tarnished the fair name of English Queen.

Considering the difficulties of her position and the exquisite tact with which she has met and overcome them, the Queen must be credited with tremendous cleverness, which is in most delightful contrast to her immediate predecessor, the Princess Alexandra, the appalling gross and vulgar consort of King George IV.

There is a very pretty story concerning the first meeting of the King and Queen of England. It was as a little child that Queen Alexandra first went to England. Her aunt, the Duchess of Cambridge, had invited her for a brief visit, and was very much pleased with the child. As she grew up there was hardly time for the Danish people to conjecture who would wed their eldest princess, before it was whispered that Queen Victoria's son was smitten with her charms.

Actually the first occasion on which the Prince of Wales had seen Princess Alexandra was in 1861 when he was traveling on the continent, and happened to enter the beautiful cathedral at Worms as she and her father were being shown the famous frescoes. It was a case of love at first sight. The prince went on to see his married sister (afterward the Empress Frederick) at Heidelberg, and the Princess Alexandra was invited to meet him there.

You will count no convivial occasion complete without this pure charged water, once you discover the zest it adds to spirits and its thirst-quenching qualities. We vouch for its absolute excellence, even compared with the few imported waters which are nearly as good. Of course, you can pay more for them if you see fit, but—why should you?

In the prince consort's diary there occurs this remark concerning their second meeting: "The young people seem to have taken a warm liking for each other." But although matters had reached this promising stage there was no formal betrothal, and the prince resumed his studies at Cambridge.

One of the reigning beauties of Europe, and probably the most photographed one is Princess Henry of Pless. She is the elder of the two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Cornwallis West, and was born in Wales in 1873. Her beauty made such a sensation when she was presented at court that she was at once looked upon as the debutante of the year, for her tall, slight figure and exquisite coloring proclaimed her to be a true type of English loveliness. She met Prince Henry at a small dance during her first season in society and the marriage took place in December, 1891.

Princess Henry has grown even more beautiful with each advancing year. Her brilliantly fair skin, her dazzling blue eyes and her bright golden hair make her noticeable everywhere. She is a fervent yachtswoman. She has a charming voice and has been perfectly taught, singing with the greatest ease and most remarkable sweetness. She has inherited her loveliness from her mother, Mrs. Cornwallis West, who was one of the most famous beauties of her day, rivaling the celebrated Lily Langtry.

The fair princess has long had a reputation for not allowing the forms and conventions which hedge about royalty to interfere with her own wishes, and it is not therefore surprising that she has offended her German subjects by her mannish sports. The princess would much prefer to go hunting than to receive prim noble ladies in her pretty little court. It was for her beauty and wit and wonderful talents in almost every line of art that the prince loved her, since he is himself a wealthy individual, whose title and lineage appear at great length in the Almanach de Gotha. He is captain in the Prussian cavalry, a good friend of the Emperor and the Palace of Potsdam in Prussian Silesia, to which he carried home his bride, is one of the finest and most ancient of the German castles.

Here Princess Henry spends her summers, going to Berlin for the winter festivities and invariably to London and Wales for the spring season, and her beauty outshines the fame of her mother's loveliness. With her blue eyes, golden hair, admirable shoulders and an almost perfect figure she is surely designed to be an ornament of the courts. Her jewels are chiefly pearls, and her collar and coronet of these alone are valued at many thousands of dollars. When waiting on the sovereigns either at Buckingham Palace or the imperial home in Berlin she wears the scarf and order of Queen Louise, which were given to her by the German Emperor.

The Dowager Queen of Portugal is the reverse of lovely. But what she lacks in beauty she makes up in elegance of dress, and the great courtesiers of Paris have no more extravagant customer than this daughter of King Victor Emmanuel II. of Italy. When just past her twentieth birthday, she was wedded to a man whom she had never seen before, the marriage having taken place by proxy in Italy. She has shown herself to be a woman of great spirit and character.

Princess Frederick of Hanover and of Great Britain enjoys the distinction of having declined more offers of marriage than any royal lady now living. Although her once golden hair has now become snowwhite, she still retains her superb figure and carriage and the late Queen Victoria declared many a time that there was no one whom she knew whose appearance was more regal and impressive. The Princess Frederick cares little for dress and nearly always appears in black. Her career has been signalized by a great deal of romance. From her earliest childhood she was the constant companion of her blind father, the late King of Hanover. It was her devotion to him that caused her to refuse numerous offers of marriage. Although many princes of blood sought her hand, she remained with her afflicted father until his death.

To the intense amazement of the public and the great indignation of the nobleman of the name of Baron Pawell-Ramingen. The news of her betrothal so incensed her brother that he immediately stopped her allowance. Since the Baron had no fortune whatever, the young couple would have been in a sad plight had not Queen Victoria invited them to Windsor Castle, where the marriage was celebrated. The Queen not only settled on them an allowance of $20,000 a year, but gave to them the use of a beautiful furnished apartment in the royal palace of Hampton Court. While the princess has since become reconciled with her family, they have refused to recognize her husband, who was formerly a mere subaltern of the old king's household.

A very beautiful royal lady of whom the public hears a great deal is the Czarina of Russia. Her life has been most romantic. Her youth and loveliness, the gloom and which her marriage to Nicholas I. took place and the melancholy, lonely splendor of the Russian throne, all unite to make her position most unusual, while her personal character and attainments would attract attention, even if she were a less exalted personage. Her imperial majesty is the youngest surviving daughter of Princess Alice of England, and the granddaughter of the English queen. Ever since her eighteenth birthday her life has been a lesson in duty. It is said that she declared to her father that she would marry no other prince. For there were several difficulties in the way, and it was nearly five years later when their formal betrothal took place, while even then the course of true love did not run smoothly.

The Russian law enacts that the wife of the heir apparent to the Russian throne must belong to the Greek Orthodox Church, and Princess Alix was determined to be thoroughly convinced before she gave up the religion of her youth. When all other objections had been removed, she absolutely refused to declare (as is required to a convert to the Greek church) that her former religion was absolutely true, and for a long time the Greek priests wavered on the point. The situation began to look serious, but when the ecclesiastical powers had recovered from the shock of having a feminine will opposed to theirs, they agreed to see the light and modified their views. The courageous young woman had her way, and was received into the Greek church on her own terms.

During this time Alexander III. was suffering from the illness from which he died, and when he saw that

T. P. O'CONNOR IN HIS ANECDOTAGE; THE FALL OF NAPOLEON

By T. P. O'Connor M. P. in T. P.'s Weekly.

NAPOLEON'S COURAGE.

In Mr. Oscar Browning's "The Fall of Napoleon" I came upon an instance of the Emperor's courage which, though I have read a whole library of Napoleonic literature, was new to me, and may perhaps be new also to my readers. When Schwarzenberg fell unexpectedly upon the French positions at Arzis and Torcy—situated on either side of the Aube—and drove them back in wild confusion, Napoleon, riding to the end of the bridge across which the fugitives were pouring pell-mell, he faced them, and cried in a voice of thunder, "Who will dare to cross the bridge before me?" And when even the guard seemed to waver, he rode his horse close up to a shell and remained till it exploded. The horse was killed, but the Emperor was uninjured. After that no one did or could show the white feather.

A DARING MARCH.

On his amazing march to Paris after his escape from Elba—surely the most striking episode, not in his history only, but in all history—Napoleon found a battalion drawn up in a defile at Laffrey with strict orders to shoot him at sight. Ordering his few soldiers to carry their muskets under their left arms he advanced alone against the battalion. Captain Randon cried, "There he is! Fire!" The soldiers were livid, their limbs shook, and their hearts cried in terror, "Advance till he was within pistol-shot." Napoleon cried: "Soldiers of the Fifth Regiment, recognize me!" Advancing a few steps further he threw open his overcoat and exclaimed, "If there's amongst you a single soldier who wishes to be killed, he can fire. Here I am!" A great shout arose, "Vive l'Empereur!" The ranks were broken, white cockades strewn the ground, shakos were elevated at the point of the bayonet, the soldiers rushed to their Emperor, surrounded him, cheered him, and cried in a voice of triumph, "The Emperor is here, he is here!"

A FATAL MISREADING.

How different might have been the history of France and of Europe if Napoleon had beaten the Prussians so thoroughly at Ligny as to prevent their reinforcement of the English at Waterloo! Yes, in coming upon an ill-written order in pencil from the Emperor to Ney. The Emperor scribbled the following pencilled order to Ney: "The Prussian army is lost. If you act vigorously, the fate of France is in your hands, if you march at once on the heights of St. Amand and Brye." Unfortunately, d'Erton, to whom Ney forwarded the message, misread "sur la hauteur de Saint Amand" for "a la hauteur de St. Amand," and so the Prussian army escaped annihilation. Again, on the day of Waterloo, Grouchy received at 5 p.m. the following dispatch sent by Soult at 3:30 p.m.: "At this moment the battle is engaged on the line of Waterloo in front of the forest of Solignes. We think we see Bulow on the heights of St. Lambert. Do not lose a moment in coming to us and crushing Bulow." This message, being also ill-written in pencil, was misinterpreted by Grouchy: "La bataille est engagée" being read by him, "La bataille est gagnée"—"engaged" misread for "gained!"

WELLINGTON ON WATERLOO.

It was touch and go that Waterloo was not gained by the French, as Wellington admitted on the day after the battle to Creedy. "It has been a d— serious business," he said to Creedy. "Blucher and I have lost 30,000 men. It has been a d— nice thing—the nearest-run thing you ever saw in your life. Blucher lost 14,000 on Friday night, and got so damnably licked I could not find him of his ideas concerning the New Scale Williams Piano.

Watkin Mills Talks

Perhaps no one in the musical world is so particular of critical in regard to a piano as Mr. Watkin Mills, the great English pianist. The following letter received from him by the Williams Piano Co., May 28, 1906, tells its own story:

The Williams Piano Co., Ottawa, Ont. Dear Sirs,—I have heard you New Scale Williams Piano, and consider it a very fine instrument. It is the most satisfying and beautiful quality, both for solo work and ordinary use. It will hold its own with the very best made of the continent. Very truly yours, (Signed) W. WATKIN MILLS.

The Williams Piano Company, Limited, 28 Dundas Street, London, Ont. E. H. Champ, manager.

the end was near he expressed a wish to see his son married to the Princess Alix before his death. She was accordingly sent for, and the formal betrothal, which in Russia is as binding as marriage, took place, the marriage ceremony being performed soon after the Czar's death. Since her marriage the Czarina has devoted herself to her husband and his people. She very soon began to interest herself in the education of women, and it is certain that the Russian women will have, and already have, cause for deep thankfulness to their Empress for the efforts she is making in their behalf.

Her majesty inherited from her mother a deep interest in everything relating to her sex, and sees the necessity of more liberty in their education, although she is not altogether in favor of them entering public life. In conclusion it may be said that the Empress of Germany, though neither beautiful nor even striking in appearance, is, nevertheless, one of the most admirable and universally popular princesses of the old world. Without any pretensions to brilliancy of intellect of the statecraft, she has exercised a most important influence upon the affairs of Germany.

To the German Empress may be ascribed the extraordinary religious revival which has taken place in her husband's dominions since his accession to the throne.

on Saturday morning, so I was obliged to fall back to keep up my communications with him." Then, as he walked about he praised greatly those guards which had kept the farm against the repeated attacks of his troops, uttering repeated expressions of astonishment at our men's courage. He repeated so often "It's being so nice a thing—so nearly-run a thing," that I asked him if the French had fought better than he had ever seen them do before. "No," he said, "they have always fought the same ever since I first saw them at Vimiera." Then he said: "By G—! I don't think it would have done if I had not been there!"

NAPOLEON ON WATERLOO.

Two remarks made by Napoleon on witnessing the defeat of Waterloo have been recorded by Flahault, who heard the first was "Is not me!" "They are mixed in confusion." The second was this tribute to the stubborn courage of the English: "It has always been the same since Crocy!"

NAPOLEON ON FRENCH FICKLENESS.

When forced after Waterloo to abdicate Napoleon said: "How depend upon a nation who are placed at the discretion of the enemy by the loss of a single battle? If I had been chosen by the English as I have been chosen by the French, I might have lost the battle of Waterloo without losing a single vote in Parliament." This is certainly true; but, on the other hand, he would never have been chosen by the English on his escape from Elba, nor would he have been chosen by the French to their advantage. The scene of the defile at Laffrey, described above, would have been impossible in England.

FRENCH COURAGE.

Wellington paid a just compliment to the bravery of the French in saying that they had always fought as gallantly as he did at Waterloo. When the Allies were marching 200,000 strong on Paris they came upon a few thousand National Guards escorting a large convoy of provisions and munitions of war. The escort fought with heroic courage and were cut down to a man rather than surrender. "The Emperor of Russia, who witnessed the close of this engagement, never forgot the lesson which it taught."

NAPOLEON'S NAMELESS COFFIN.

Mr. Oscar Browning's "The Fall of Napoleon" set me re-reading Lord Rosebery's "Napoleon: The Last Phase—a humiliating record of all the vindictive meannesses of Sir Hudson Lowe of all these ungenerous meannesses that Sir Hudson's refusal to allow the Emperor's coffin-plate to be inscribed simply "Napoleon," with the date and place of his birth and death. "It may be," said Hudson, "'Napoleon Bonaparte' or nothing." As the Emperor's suite declined to accept a style which in life he had resented, the coffin had to be buried without a name!

SIR HUDSON LOWE.

Sir Hudson Lowe owed his promotion to his post as Napoleon's jailer in part to his being the most odious choice of the Emperor's point of view that could have been made. He had commanded the Corsican Republic, a regiment of Napoleon's subjects and fellow-countrymen who had rebelled against him and France. Then, unfortunately, and by universal admission, Lowe was never generous towards Napoleon, who was concerned, admitted this. Even the commissioners, all hostile to Napoleon, admitted it. The French commissioner, Montehenu, who was the most favorable to Lowe, writes of him in despair: "Ah! What a man! I am convinced that with every possible search one could not discover the like of him anywhere!" Sturmer, the Austrian commissioner, writes of Lowe: "He makes himself odious. The English dread him, the French laugh at him, the commissioners complain of him, and all are agreed that he is half-crazy." Balmain, the Russian commissioner, who was a favorite guest of Lowe's and married his step-daughter, writes of him: "Lowe is troublesome and unreasonable beyond endurance; he can get on with no one."

body, and sees everywhere nothing but treason and traitors."

TREASON IN BEANS.

That Lowe really was half-crazy is suggested by two letters of his to Lord Bathurst, the secretary of war and the colonies, in an offer of some beans for seed, made by Montehenu to the French commissioner, Montehenu. As these seeds happened to be both white and green, Lowe writes of them thus in a state paper to Bathurst: "Whether the harlequin, white and green, or less humorous to the white and green colors of the Bourbons and of General Bonaparte respectively, I am unable to say; but the Marquis de Montehenu, it appears to me, would have acted with more propriety if he had declined receiving either, or limited himself to the white alone."

UGANDA'S RAILWAY HUMOROUS AFFAIR

SHOULD BE DEALT WITH IN COMIC OPERA—STATION AGENTS' TROUBLES.

The Uganda Railway has always impressed us as being one which, to do it full justice, should be dealt with in comic opera, says the Colonizer. Named after a colony through which it does not run, starting from a terminus carefully placed as far away as possible from the port it serves, though reaching the island on which that port is situated by a bridge built at great expense, running for a long extent through natural game preserves, with the result that its trains are held up from time to time by objecting animals, every mile on the line has a more or less humorous tale attached to it.

In the early days while construction was still proceeding, and while only a part of the line was open for traffic—in fact, until quite recently, life on the line must always have been interesting and occasionally very exciting. In August, 1905, for instance, the traffic manager at Mombasa received from the Babu station master at Simba the following telegram, marked urgent: "Lion is on the platform. Please instruct guard and driver to proceed carefully and without delay in yard. Guard to advise passengers not to get out here, and be careful when coming into booking office." The touching piece of advice included seemed somewhat superfluous. However, one bold sportsman did get out, and ascending a convenient tree managed to "get" a lioness and a lion, within a few minutes. He further wounded another lion, the one waiting on the platform. However, the latter, after being wounded, disappeared and could not be found, so the sportsman went along the siding to look for him. He found him—suddenly—but owing to his swiftness in getting in a blow from the shoulder on the lion's jaw after an exciting rough and tumble he found himself on the top when the lion bolted into the bush.

A little later in the day the traffic manager received a further wire from the station master, who appeared to be somewhat recovering confidence, as it was not marked urgent: "One African injured again by a lion. Please send cartridges by next train certain." The same afternoon this was followed by a second touching telegram: "Pointsmen is surrounded by two lions while returning from distant signal, and then pointsman went on top of telegraph post, near water tanks. Train to stop there and take him on train and then proceed."

It is not "big game" alone, however, that causes annoyance, for from a station close to Nairobi about five years ago the following report was received: "Rats running about eating holes in the ceiling and biting off pointsman's toes. Send rat-traps."

WHERE STAGES STILL ARE RUN AND RAILROADS ARE BARRED

DISTRICT OF ENGLAND MAINTAINS DEFENSE AGAINST MODERN MEANS OF TRAVEL—SCENERY HAS A GLAMOR AND CHARM THAT ARE IRRESISTIBLE—THE CLIFF CLIMBERS.

The lake district of Westmoreland and Cumberland owes its pre-eminence as a holiday country to the stout defense it has maintained against the invasion of railways and the other auxiliaries of our modern steam and iron age.

Its scenery has a glamor and charm that are irresistible. This soft and tender purity of the wandering air, the light music of the waters as they break in tiny waves all round the quiet isles, the velvet texture of all the earth's covering, the pale azure of the cloudless sky, the deep blue of the lonely island sea—all these things built up into dreams of another life and world, as if these were the sapphire floors of heaven, and these its islets of rest.

But it is my conviction that the great attraction that the lake district possesses is the complete absence of all signs of manufacture or of the hurry and bustle of commercial life. When you disembark at one of the rail-heads you are merely at the edge of the lake country, and if you wish to explore its beautiful vales, you must bid farewell to speedy locomotion and depend upon your great-grandfather's methods.

The institution of the place is the stage coach, and you will miss the full flavor of a tour if you have to substitute for the coach a charabanc or a private carriage.

A COUNTRY SCENE.

The ordinary tourist cannot fail to be impressed by the hills and lakes, even if he dismisses its poetry without a second thought; but the most distinct picture in his mind's gallery will be one of an old-fashioned, whitewashed inn, with a jovial landlord framed in the doorway. The hostlers are busy changing horses, while the liberated steeds are drinking their fill at the stone trough; the guard is handing out sundry packages, and maybe, mail-bags; our coachman is strutting about the yard like a king, and a knot of idlers are hanging on his words of wisdom; one or two foot-hounds are basking in the sun, and bantams and fat-tail pigeons are hopping about the horses' feet.

The passenger feels himself to be part of an old sporting print, and living in the good old times that have been portrayed by Dickens and Washington Irving, or in the pages of "Tom Brown's School-days."

The coaching tourist never penetrates to the heart of the lake district. At the center is a cluster of the highest mountains, and the main valleys, such as Langdale and Borrowdale radiate from thence like the spokes of a wheel. The coach roads thread these dales as far as is practicable, when they reach the highlands they break off at a tangent to this mountain circle, and crossing the lower flanks of the mountains, find another valley, and so return home.

Those who are "coach-borne," to use an apt phrase, do not really come in contact with such giants as Scawfell and Great Gable, and perhaps it is as well if they wish to be perfectly consistent in their renascence of the old coaching days, for the quest of the mountains is quite a modern feeling.

If you turn up an old edition of "Paterson's Roads," a road book published before Queen Victoria's reign, and a capital companion on the box-seat, you will find evidence of the Georgian Englishman's idea of mountains. Take his description of the road up Borrowdale—one of the finest driving excursions on the lakes, revealing a valley that is exquisitely beautiful in every minute detail.

"To the south of the Derwent-Water is the rocky chasm of Borrowdale, a tremendous pass, at the entrance of which dark caverns yawn, terrific as the wildness of a maniac; and then you discover a narrow strait running between huge mountains that possess almost every possible form of horror."

An old Yorkshire proverb says: "There's never a brow but there's a slack" which means that after every uphill struggle there is an easy descent to compensate for it. This saying is literally true of the lake district, and to balance the deep depressions where the lakes lie, we have the huge elevations of the mountains.

THE CLIFF-CLIMBERS.

There is another class of visitors to the lake district, and they take much account of the rich verdure of its lowlands. They hurry over the high roads and are not happy until they have shaken the dust from off their feet. They are anxious to scale the huge cliffs that hide in with in that inner mountain circle, the heart of the lake district. The upland farm-houses that appear from a coach seat to be the ultimate limit of a tourist's penetration, are to these climbers but the commencement of their province, the bases from which they can make their daily excursions into the wilderness.

They see an altogether different side of the same district. We don't suppose there is anyone nowadays who suffers the same experience in Borrowdale as is narrated by the compiler of the old road book, that has been questioned; but people do feel a tinge of horror mixed with their admiration of the scene, and the crags on either side can strike them with some amount of awe.

But those who stay at the whitewashed house of Scawfell, and plod their way up Grain Gill in the early morning, feasting their eyes on the craggy bastion of Great End, are sure to turn round many a time to enjoy the retrospect. From such a viewpoint, Borrowdale and Derwent-Water are perfect miniature in jewels and enamels, and a striking contrast to the forbidding, savage grandeur of the mountains near at hand. The crags that appear inaccessible from the coach road are seen to be mere lumps when viewed from a position where they may be measured by the standard of a real cliff.

These mountaineers are not content with throwing off the excrescences of the last century, they want to be rid of the whole of the evidence of man's work. They long for such a complete change from their everyday life that a cultivated field annoys them, as it records a certain artificiality and interference with nature. They long to be where neither plow nor spade has wounded the earth, and their chief delight is to stand where the foot of man has never trod before.

To satisfy their desire for a primeval world, they have tracked out difficult and dangerous routes up the very faces of the mightiest cliffs, and climbing—used in its technical meaning—in the lake district is one of the most difficult branches of the great sport.

The experts in the craft come here in winter, because snow and ice make the problem harder; and the two cold holidays of the year—Christmas and Easter—pack these mountain farm-houses full of enthusiastic youths, while at the same time the hotels of Bownes are dormant and deserted.

To the outsider, climbing is a fool's errand, but to those who are initiated in the art, it is a noble and unreasonably mania, but to the initiated it is the most fascinating pursuit. One of the reasons for its hold on its votaries is undoubtedly the lure of the sport. Many famous livers have confessed that mountaineering is their recreation and have attempted to record the impressions they have received from the sublimest scenes that this earth can furnish.

True, the Cumberland Mountains are no Alps, but the tourist who spends a few days in gaining a close acquaintance with these noble forms will receive a fair dose of mountain pleasure, and it is well worth while deserting the coaches for a short time, in order to plunge into this fair wilderness.

COACHES AND COMPATIBILITY. But having tasted of the fruit of knowledge, you will never be content with the coach view of them again. Mountains and coaches are not compatible.

Dr. Johnson, the typical eighteenth century Englishman, said, if he had no duties and no reference to futurity, he would like to spend his life behind four fast horses; and he considered a mountainous country to be a dreary country, "a most dolorous country!" It may well be that the average tourist persuaded to toil up Scawfell might be cheered like Dr. Johnson, when he got back to the sight of a road marked with cart-wheels. But that would prove to the mountaineer that his feet were not worthy to tread the grand temple.

Anyone who would experience the beneficent influence of the English lake district, should devote part of his time to an expedition into this inner mountain heart, not for the mere purpose of peat-bogging, but to open his soul to the subtle and poignant feelings that the great hills impart.

Grasmere is a name that can conjure up wonderful memories, but Wastdale can also draw indelible pictures from the imagination, and every visitor to the lakes should be able to say: "Right in the heart of silent, lone Wastdale. The towering mountains with a mighty belt of shadow rose all round me, and I felt. Beneath their awfulness my heart to quail: For his own house God claimed this solemn vale. And throned amid the eternal hills he dwelt. Gable, Great End, Yewbarrow and Lingmell, Climbed with their scarr'd and giant forms on high. By honest Scawfell led."

—Halifax (England) Correspondence of New York Evening Post.

Why does the ordinary man use his right hand more than his left? And, this being so, is it desirable that he should continue the habit? Statistics as to right and left-handedness amongst civilized and uncivilized nations, and birds, do not agree. Recently Dr. E. Audenino read an interesting paper on this subject before the Congress of Criminal Anthropology in Turin, which was printed in the "Archivio di Psichiatria."

Dr. Audenino said: "To start with, are animals right and left-handed? The observations of naturalists are not in accord; Rollet (1833) found in anthropoid apes a preponderance of 64 per cent in favor of the left limbs; Brinton, on the contrary (1836), says that anthropoids are generally ambidextrous." Osawa (1904) believes that monkeys are sometimes right-handed, sometimes ambidextrous, and rarely left-handed, and that birds that grasp their food with the claw do so more often with the left.

Baldwin is of opinion that we cannot tell animals either left or right-handed, but that nevertheless, according to Vierordt, Livingstone and Ogilvie-parakeets, lions and apes appear to be left-handed in certain of their acts. And Morselli (in his "Lessons in Anthropology") affirms that the primates use one or the other arm, indifferently.

Also, the statistics do not agree, but there is unquestionably a preponderance of right-handed persons in more or less civilized communities. Dr. Audenino believes that the reason for right-handedness is connected with the position of the heart on the left side. "He who fights with one arm, the right, for instance, is more often wounded in the adjoining parts of the body, because the adversary seeks to ward off the blow aimed by the right arm; it thus comes to pass that, since the heart, the most vital organ, is found on the left side, those who use the right arm are able most easily to survive the combat, because they are not so apt as the left-handed to receive mortal wounds. Consequently, in the struggle for life, the left-handed succumb, while the right-handed triumph, and so right-handedness is transmitted by heredity, and the greater part of men, even criminals, are right-handed. The child who represents, in the modern epoch, the primitive man, is, like him, ambidextrous." How is it, then, that any savages or animals are left-handed? This fact seems, according to the writer, to puzzle the anthropologists. He believes that this arises from the fact that it is hard to define ambidextrous exactly. Animals or people that right-handed persons are apt to consider left-handed, because they use their left hand with facility, may be really able to use the right with equal ease.

The extent of which the narcotic prevails in the French navy was illustrated by the proceedings of a court-martial at Brest. The defendants were half a dozen seamen of ordinary rating, who were charged with a considerable number of robberies. All the men were victims of the opium or the ether habit, or both combined, and were in the habit of bemuddling themselves daily with these drugs and the robberies had been committed to gratify their passion. Severe sentences were passed.

Stomach Troubles of Long Standing WERE CURED BY DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS WHEN DOCTORS' TREATMENT FAILED.

Doctors failed to cure Mr. De Courcy because they were satisfied to treat the stomach instead of getting at the cause of trouble in the liver and bowels.

The most complicated and deep-seated digestive troubles yield to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills because of their direct and combined action on the liver, kidney and bowels. We are continually receiving such letters as the following one in regard to the failure of mere stomach treatment:

Mr. Patrick De Courcy, Midgell, lot 40, P. E. I., writes: "For some time I had stomach trouble, and was scarcely able to do anything at all. I was treated by doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I did so to very great advantage, for my old trouble has disappeared, and though past middle age I feel young and hearty again. I have great confidence in Dr. Chase's medicine." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanon, Bates & Co., Toronto.

robber came to the ground I rose and interfered. With two or three blows with a switch I induced the snake to release the bird and seek its own safety by a hasty flight to the long grass, where it eluded pursuit.

The freed bird fluttered about on the ground a few seconds, in a dazed way, its mate darting frantically around it, and then they both flew back to the tree, where they sat on a limb and chattered long and excitedly over the alarming incident. By and by the female resumed her place on the nest.

Her mate perched himself on guard near by, in evident expectation of another attack from the foe, twittering reassuringly to his wife the while. During the succeeding half-hour that I tarried there for further observation the snake did not show itself again, but when I quit the scene of that striking manifestation of the passions that move even the unreasoning creatures of the wildwood, that faithful little cock, sparrow was still standing guard over his nesting mate."

IS THE TELEPHONE SUCH A NUISANCE

NEW YORK WORLD SAYS 'PHONE AND TYPEWRITER HAVE SPOILED CIVILITY.

Health Commissioner Darlington has his telephone disconnected at night. He found there were too many people who woke him up on the theory that he was a universal complaint bureau. Instead of writing a formal complaint and sending it by mail to the office, it was easier to get off a spell of sudden wrath by calling the commissioner up on the telephone at his house.

Dr. Darlington is not the only man who has to safeguard himself against the annoyances which the telephone has brought into modern life. It is a big nuisance as it is a convenience. Welcome as it was at first, the time has come when some systematic method must be devised for checking the nuisances which the abuse of the telephone breeds.

The telephone and the typewriter have been two most effective instruments in destroying civility and conciseness in business intercourse. They are also destroying social formality, which it would be better to keep, because formality is the opposite to familiarity, and familiarity is destructive to friendships.

So long as a man had to write his letters pen in hand he was not given to many words, because the physical effort of writing restrained him. He wrote only when he had something he really meant to say, and he better stopped when he had said it. Now, with abundant stenographers, the effort of writing a letter is no more than that of ordinary conversation, copy-books have increased in volume, correspondence has grown to interminable lengths, and even judicial opinions take many more words than when the judges had to do the transcribing themselves. On the whole it is doubtful whether stenography and typewriting save time.

In like manner with the telephone. He who is about to make an important decision to say anything to another man he either wrote or went to see him. The result was that many trivial things were left unsaid and matters of little consequence were passed over.

With the telephone at his elbow, especially if he has some clerk or typewriter to make the calls and attend to the connections, a man is very prone to do too much telephoning. A matter occurs to him and he telephones about it at once. If he had not been able to telephone, four times out of five he would have found a way to dispose of it without either writing the letter or making a call.

The telephone habit grows upon most people. This is seen in the increasing number of calls in every house or office where a telephone is installed, and it becomes a bad habit. Women had far better do their marketing in person than over the telephone. They would then see what they buy, they could compare prices and they would save money. A man had far better to see a woman in person than to talk to her over the telephone. A talk is always more effective where the parties are face to face. Arrangements thus made are better understood and their carrying out is more harmonious.

The telephone is indispensable for certain purposes. It is a convenient way to make appointments. It is a substitute for the telegraph. It is the quickest way to get the doctor. But the man who invents an adjustable telephone padlock will make a moderate fortune.—New York World.

LARGEST FLOATING DOCKYARD. In a few weeks there will be launched from the shipyard of Sir James Laing & Sons, Sunderland, where she has been converted from a liner, a unique vessel which will be a valuable acquisition to the navy.

The Cyclops is a vessel of 11,000 tons, and her dimensions are: Length, 460 feet; breadth, 55 feet; depth, 35 feet. The lowest deck is fitted up as a complete foundry, with cupolas where castings can be made to replace damaged parts. Above is a boiler shop, where boiler or ship plates can be dealt with by punching and shearing machines are there, just as in a shipyard. Then there are carpenters, blacksmiths and armorer's shops, fully equipped with tools, electrical and copper smelting departments.

A large ice-breaking plant is carried, and a set of gigantic condensers, capable of supplying a whole fleet with fresh water, can be dealt with by electricity. The plant is one of the vessel's most remarkable features. The Cyclops will have a full complement of about 300 men, mainly artificers.—London Chronicle.

CHOIR BOYS ARE HARD TO FIND

ONE PRECENTOR WHO OFFERS A BONUS FOR REALLY GOOD VOICES.

How scarce choir boys are, may be inferred from the fact that one leading New York choirmaster is offering a bonus of five dollars to his boys for every likely newcomer they bring into the choir. If hard pressed for new material, he raises this bonus to ten dollars.

Any boy with a naturally true ear and a clear voice—though it may be weak—can do this work. From 9 to 10 years, to 15 years of age, in some cases, their voices are serviceable, unless the reprehensible practice of retaining them as alto is resorted to. The boy alto is so very rare, that most of the larger boy choirs have men altos. Three men altos give sufficient body for a choir of 35. Even the famous choirs are not often larger than this.

Training one of these choirs is more a task for a patient fisherman than for the emotional musician. After the boy voice is caught, it must be gently handled, nursed and protected; and at the moment when all his faculties are trained for the work, and the boy's imaginative power is developing so that he really interprets as he sings, snap goes the line, and the precious voice is lost. Only by keeping up the inflow and having boys in all stages of growth can a choirmaster insure against the future. If it were not for this constant change of personnel, the work of a long and well-trained choir of boys would approximate perfection. So nice are their perceptions, so alert do they become, so wonderfully do they acquire the musician's equipment of reading, rhythm, and expression, that it is the greatest satisfaction to work in this field for those who possess the necessary qualities of head and heart.

The average choir boy is a manly little fellow, with a love of mischief and fair play. An appeal to the generous side of his nature is always successful. The greatest difficulty of a choirmaster is, however, not the training of the boy, but teaching him to take care of his health and voice. How hard a task this is, even when the boys are under constant supervision, any parent will realize. Above all things, a boy loves to shout and make extraordinary noises with his vocal apparatus. Besides, no boy willingly encumbers himself with overcoat or rubbers, nor can he refrain easily from snowdrifts and puddles.

In old St. Luke's Cathedral at Portland, Me., twenty years ago, it was a regular custom for a new boy to be initiated by ducking him in a snowdrift after his first rehearsal in winter. In summer other customs, equally disadvantageous to the voice, prevailed. With what tremors the new boy, after gazing as long as possible, started through the dark cloister, on either side of him the huge Maine drifts, in front of him a hidden group of ominously quiet "old-boys." A chorus of shouts and yells, a rush and a push, and over the rail the neophyte went down ten feet into a six-foot drift. This memory will always have its thrill and ecstasy.—New York Evening Post.

MIRACLES OF MEDICINE CURED GARGEL IN ONE

When King Edward VII. came to the throne reductions were made in all departments, and it was no longer possible for his majesty to provide horses and carriages from the stables at Buckingham Palace for the rest of the royal family. So, after a certain time, the King gave each of his sisters a carriage and a pair of horses; thenceforward they had to provide their own stables and all things connected with them.

Of course most of the royal princess and princesses have motors nowadays; not so, however, the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, who go about in a roomy brougham, adorned with two corners and two posts-of-arms. The duke, however, takes a great deal of exercise, and may often be seen walking back to Kensington Palace for luncheon; or, indeed, if the weather be bad, taking advantage, at a pinch, of the humble Hammermith bus—T-B-Bits.

A WONDERFUL BABY.

Down at Camaguey, Cuba, not long ago, I found a wonderful baby—a little girl 10 months old—who can walk and speak 20 languages. She is the daughter of Rev. Mr. Gilbert, a Methodist clergyman, formerly from Atlanta. He has charge of the mission schools in Puerto Principe Province, and has been there five years. His wife is a Cuban, and a very attractive woman. She talks very little English, and when it is with her the precocious child hears nothing but Spanish. When with her

History Repeats Itself Even in Railway Matters

People of Early London Had Difficulty with the G. W. R. Over Proposed Route.

There's nothing new under the sun. Study the history of peoples and nations and you'll find that the troubles and differences which agitated those of early days are very often repeated in the history of our own day.

It's the same with the history of cities, and London is no exception to the rule. London is and has been for years wrestling with the track-elevation question, the location of the depot and other railway matters.

And last night at the board of trade meeting, Sir John Carling told of how far back as 1850, when the Great Western Railway was projected, the people of London were divided as to the route that should take through the city, and the agitation against the route chosen by the company became so powerful, that in order to avoid trouble with the city officials, the line was changed and was run through London on the present survey.

As is known to most residents of this city, what is now the Grand Trunk Railway was in the olden days the Great Western Railway. It was a line projected from Hamilton to Windsor.

Promises of Financial Aid. The scheme behind the scheme came to the different places the line would touch and secured promises of financial assistance. London gave a huge bonus to the concern, and at the time the council was satisfied with the route proposed.

The survey showed that the railway was to run on what is now the route of the C. P. T. north of Pall Mall street, and running out of the city north of Oxford street and across the old Stiles farm.

Large gangs of men started work on the route. The forest of the district was primeval at the time, and an engineering party went through the woods and blazed the way as far as Detroit.

At the time there was no wharf at Windsor, and boats simply tied up as near as they could get to the bank. Detroit, it is said, boasted of about 25,000 people, and Jefferson avenue, not Woodward avenue, was the main thoroughfare.

London was a little place of about 3,000 at the time, but the rival interests of the people of the different sections of the town were as keen as they are today.

London was a little place of about 3,000 at the time, but the rival interests of the people of the different sections of the town were as keen as they are today.

Protest Against Route.

A great hue and cry was raised that if the railway was run on the route proposed by the G. W. R., the city of London would be injured. The postoffice, banks, and chief business houses were at the time centered about the court house, on the corner of Dundas and Ridout streets, and there were rail fences around what is now the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets. It is not known to many people that what was known as lot 1, east of the Wharncliffe road, began at the corner of Dundas and the Wharncliffe and had its eastern terminal at the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets. This was a farm lot surveyed by Governor Simcoe, and a lot took in the river Thames north of where the bridge now stands, the people to this day on either side own deeds which run to the center of the river.

The outcry against the route of the railway became so general that meetings were held and the city finally informed the company that unless the line was diverted south, there would be no bonus forthcoming from London.

Company Met People's Wishes. As the company was anything but strong financially, and as it could not afford to have the city give the project a black eye by withdrawing from the scheme, the line was diverted, and the present route adopted.

The change meant hundreds of thousands of dollars to the company, and delayed the opening of the line for six months.

Instead of crossing the Thames but once, as would have been the case if the old route had been adhered to, the company was compelled to build a bridge over the Thames south of York street, and another bridge at the coves.

Then the huge hill this side of Hyde Park, on the Sifton farm was encountered, and what was known as Sifton's Cut, and one of the mightiest pieces of engineering work of that day resulted.

The cut was so deep it kept back the opening of the railway, as stated, for six months, and at this late date the Grand Trunk has found it necessary to spend $1,000,000 to reduce the grade, which was ruinous to locomotives and a great consumer of coal.

It is said that every time an engine went up the old grade it cost the company $5. This is why Mr. F. H. McGuigan was so anxious to wipe out the grade.

This, it is then that the people of London were seen as hard to please in regard to railway matters as they are today.

FIVE FOUNTAINS HAVE DISAPPEARED

Moved From the City Streets, and Temperance People Will Ask Why.

What has become of the drinking fountains which formerly stood at a number of the street corners of London?

This is the question being asked by the local W. C. T. U., and also by very many temperance men of London.

The city council and the water commissioners are to be asked to answer the question forthwith.

Some years ago the W. C. T. U. bought, out of its own funds, seven drinking fountains.

These were placed in different parts of the city.

They had a small trough at the base for dogs to drink from, a large trough in the center for horses, and at the top a couple of small streams flowed to furnish drink for humanity.

It is alleged that the fountains were looked upon by hotelmen with disfavor, because they felt they affected the bar trade.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY ST. GEORGE'S

Deciding Game in the Public School League Series Played Yesterday.

The Public School Baseball League season closed yesterday afternoon, when the St. George's nine met and defeated the Princess avenue school team by a score of 7 to 5.

A rather remarkable feature of the contest was that while the losing team made three hits more than the victors they made two runs less.

The season as a whole has been very successful, and the boys have had abundance of sport out of the seven-teen contests played.

Yesterday's game by innings: St. George's 1 0 3 0 1 2 x—7; Princess Avenue—2 0 1 0 1 0—5.

Umpire—C. M. R. Graham. Owing to the fact that one of the teams violated an important bylaw of the league it was decided to transfer one of their games to the Victoria school team under protest.

The correct standing of the league is as follows: Won Lost St. George's 15 3; Rectory 14 3; Lorne 12 5; West London 8 7; Colborne 8 9; Princess 7 10; Victoria 4 11; Simcoe 4 14; Talbot 3 14; Aberdeen 3 6.

QUESTION OF A LICENSE

Can It Be Transferred From One Person to Another.

Can an auctioneer's license be transferred from one person to another? This is the question which is agitating the members of No. 3 committee now.

It is said that Aid. Cooper is anxious to purchase at a 50-per-cent reduction the license secured by Auctioneer Harris, of Chicago, before he could sell the stock of W. J. Reid & Co., on Dundas street. Mr. Harris has practically concluded his task, and as he must return to Chicago, he is offering to sell for a year, and for which he paid $40, will be of no value to him.

Ald. Cooper wants to buy it for $20, but the members of No. 3 committee do not know whether a license can be transferred from one man to another.

HOUSES REEK WITH FILTH

Dr. George Wilson Says Many in London Should Be Wiped Out.

Dr. George D. Wilson called at the city hall today and made two pointed statements. One was that the city has passed foolish bylaws until now there is not a post left in the city to which to tie a horse, and the numbers of runaways are increasing right along.

A city bylaw says that horses shall not be left tied to a post.

Dr. Wilson also stated that there are so many houses in London reeking with filth that they are a danger to the community, and it is up to the board of health to show that it is alive and do something to wipe out such places.

July was relatively weak throughout the day. The early decline was never recovered, although strenuous efforts were made to change the trend. The Southwest became insistent upon too much rain for harvest, and was apprehensive of further loss, but the market did not prove at all responsive. STOCK MARKET. H. C. Becker, stockbroker, received the following by private wire from Bartlett, Frazier & Carrington today: Chicago, June 28.—Wheat—The market was weak today in anticipation of heavy deliveries in July contracts on Monday, and influenced by rains in the spring wheat belt and the conditions now. July was relatively weak throughout the day. The early decline was never recovered, although strenuous efforts were made to change the trend. The Southwest became insistent upon too much rain for harvest, and was apprehensive of further loss, but the market did not prove at all responsive. Our reports indicate spring wheat in this country and in the Canadian Northwest is making nice progress under favorable weather conditions. Corn 38. Corn sold off early on offers from cash houses, some country realizing and influenced by the weakness in wheat. The market was quite steady at the decline. The weather is entirely favorable for the crop. There is no general cause for concern. Cattle 42 1/2. Cattle averaged weak in anticipation of liberal deliveries in contracts and on realizing. DIES WHILE ASLEEP.

Toronto, June 28.—Sarah Coulter, 70 years of age, an inmate of the House of Industry, saying she felt ill, asked yesterday to be allowed to go to the General Hospital. She started to walk to the hospital, and when opposite the house of Mrs. Ellen Powers, 26 Terrace street, became faint and requested the people of the house to let her rest for a while. She was put in one of the bedrooms, where she went to sleep. At 2 o'clock this morning the old lady was found dead in bed.

A RELIC OF NORSEMAN.

Krookston, Minn., June 28.—The contractors, ditching at the State Experiment Farm, yesterday found a ship's anchor of ancient pattern, buried at a depth of 6 feet in solid clay under sod never before broken. The anchor is similar to those used by Norsemen about nine centuries ago. The anchor, it is surmised, is a relic of a Norse expedition during an era when the Red River valley was a portion of Lake Winnipeg, and could be reached by sail from the Atlantic.

NOTHING DOING THIS YEAR.
That the Grand Trunk Railway has no intention of doing anything in the way of track elevation in London for some time is shown by the fact that during the past few days several carloads of timber and equipment which were brought to this city when the company thought that the elevation would be proceeded with, have been shipped to points east, presumably to Toronto, where the company has much work under contemplation.

Cousins and Miss Maud Laur, of Belmont, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. McCrae, of Westminster. The bride was gowned in a traveling suit of light gray check, with white plumed hat. The young couple, who have the best wishes of a host of friends, will reside on con. 7, lot 4, Westminster.
PATTERSON—MOORE.
On Wednesday last one of the prettiest of June weddings took place, at Maplehurst, the residence of Mr. W. Moore, when his sister, Mary, was united in marriage to Mr. Wm. Patterson, of North Dorchester. The house was prettily decorated. A large number of relatives and friends assembled on the lawn, where the happy event took place. Rev. Mr. Snell, of Thornedale, officiating. The strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by Miss Bessie Short, of London, announced the bride's coming, leaning on the arm of her cousin, Mr. Atkinson, of London, and looking very becoming in an exquisite gown of cream crepe de chine, elaborately trimmed with ribbon and lace, and carrying white carnations. The bride was attended by Miss Josephine Patterson, of Toronto, gowned in pale gray mull with touches of pink, and carrying pink carnations. Mr. Arnold Hogg, of Thamesford, attended the groom. The groom's gift to the bride was a sunburst of pearls, to the bridesmaid a pearl crescent, and to the groomsmen a scarf-pin. Among the numerous and costly presents was a valuable silver tea-service, the gift of the bride's brothers in Calgary. Guests were invited from Calgary, New York, Toronto, Detroit, Woodstock, Ingersoll and London.

They underwent the many hardships endured by the pioneers in which they lived until shortly after the death of Mr. Wilson, her husband, in 1894. They were widely known and greatly esteemed by all. They were both life-long members of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Wilson is survived by five sons and six daughters, two sons having died a few years ago. Her remains were laid at rest in Birr Cemetery, beside those of her husband.

CAMPAIGN FOR PLAYGROUNDS
Local Association Decides to Begin One—Mr. Pearce's Address.
Parks Commissioner Pearce last night addressed the local Playgrounds Association on the subject of his recent visit to Chicago, when he attended the convention of American Playgrounds Associations. Mr. Pearce said that so far as he was able to learn he was the only Canadian representative at the convention.
When Mr. Pearce had concluded, the association decided on motion of Mr. Fraser, seconded by Mr. Saunders, to appoint a committee to wait on No. 2 committee of the city council, and also on the board of education, with a view to having all school-yards fitted with sand heaps, apparatus for furnishing exercise for the children, etc., as an experiment of the playgrounds system in London.
If the civic bodies agree to the proposal the grounds will be thrown open to the children of the school section. The separate school board is also to be approached on the subject.
Mr. Pearce explained the park system in Chicago, stating that the parks boards are made up of judges of the surrogate court, who are under the control of no one, and who have the power to levy their own taxes for parks purposes.
The south side park commissioners alone have spent over $10,500,000 on parks.
Each park is fitted with swimming pools, and every other day is set aside for women and girls.
There are also field houses in each park, where food is supplied at cost. In these buildings are also gymnasiums and auditoriums, where meetings may be held, and dancing is permitted.
Mr. Pearce took occasion to say that he believes in dancing for the youth in properly regulated places. Young people will dance anyway, he said, and if proper places were furnished them they would be kept away from the dance halls.
Mr. Pearce paid a tribute to the managers of the children of Chicago. He had spent many hours in the parks there and had seen thousands of children at play, but he had never heard a bad word, or an unkind word, from any of them. And many of them were foreigners.
On Saturday last there was a big field day in the parks, when the children gave demonstrations of the uses of the different apparatus used for exercise.
In conclusion, Mr. Pearce said that it is becoming a recognized fact that one of the best means to fight lunacy, criminality, and physical disease, is to supply the young with playgrounds, parks, and plenty of means of exercise.
The local association thought it would be wise to begin an educational campaign in this city, so as to bring the people and the governing bodies to a proper appreciation of the good which can be done by the means referred to.
