STORY.

OLD UNCLE BILL.

Any one who visited Mr Norris at his fine place on the Hudson would be sure to notice, after a while, that an old man wandered about the place dressed all summer in a white shirt and linen vest and trousers and a fisherman's hat, and all winter in a woolen dressing-gown. He was a meek, tall, bald old man, and people at first took him for a superannuated old servant; but, finally, his nice linen, his neat hands, and a certain well-bred tone of voice, if by chance they heard him speak, make them ask:

"Who is that?"

If they inquired of Miss Belle, the eldest unmarried daughter, she would answer:

"An old connection of poor mama's. I can't see why pa has him here—horrid thing!"

If they ask Mr Norris' maiden sister she would reply:

"One of the blessings my late sister-in-law brought with her into the family. A miserable ne'er-do-well of a relation."

If the question was propounded Mr Norris, as he sat in his arm-chair on his piazza, or drove about his property in one of his handsome vehicles, he would answer:

"Well, that's a sort of a relation of my wife's, a ne'er-do-well. The black sheep of the flock, you know. Always is one in every family. For her sake—she was a very benevolent woman—we let him stay about. He prefers eating by himself. He's very stupid, very; but she wanted him here, and she had her way poor soul. I grudged her nothing. Yes, that's poor Bill."

But if it was Miss Phemie of whom the question was asked, she always answered:

"Why, that is Uncle Bill. He's a little eccentric, but the dearest old soul. I'm very fond of him, and he of me. Dear old Uncle Bill."

Certainly Phemie was the old man's only friend in that pompous household. She it was who went up to his little room with his meals, and sat with him while he ate them; who saw that he had the newspapers and his pipe; who had fixed that little, out-of-the-way place with a pretty carpet, book shelves, a student's lamp, lots of pretty ornaments in worsted and painted silk; who never received her monthly allowance, without buying something for him.

His pretty, snow white shirts were her gift, and she saw that they were done up properly. The flannel dressing-gown he wore in winter was of her contrivance. In fact, up in that dormer-roofed room there were hours that were more home-like than any spent in the great parlors, or the big dining room, where Miss Belle was so self-affectionate to "pa" when she wanted him to give her more money to spend; and Miss Norris, the elder sister of the master of the house, made bitter speeches in the pauses of the needle-work in which she was perpetually engaged, sometimes directed at her brother, sometimes at Belle, sometimes at Phemie, but all worded so circumspectly and clothed in such a guise of pity that no one dared resent them.

"What a comfort you are, Uncle Bill," Phemie would say, as she poured out the old man's coffee.

"And what a comfort you are, Phemie," old Uncle Bill would say. "If I was a rich uncle just home from India, like those in the plays and novels, you wouldn't make more of me."

"I shouldn't make so much of you," Phemie would answer, "for you'd be a victim to liver complaint, and that would make you ill-natured and you'd scold me and say naughty words. They all do, you know. Now you haven't any money or stocks to worry about like poor pa; and you're not irritable, and you are like mama, too. You have her eyes."

"You are sister Susan's image," the old man would say. "Do you remember the day that you came to the hospital with her?"

"Yes," said Phemie. "I was just twelve years old, and mama was crying over the telegram." "My only brother, Phemie," she said. "So sick that he may die, and so poor that he's in a hospital! Then we came and I saw you in bed, and after a while we brought you home, and ma nursed you well again."

"And died herself, just as I got about," said Uncle Bill. "And your father and the rest did not like a shabby old man around the house. Well, I was lucky to get a home. I supposed, and lukier still to find such disinterested love as yours. You're like Susan. She was the dearest girl that ever lived. Yes, you're like Susan."

But they did not always talk thus. They were very busy often, over books over Phemie's embroidery, for which he designed patterns; teaching her little dog a thousand tricks; feeding the blind kittens Phemie saved from drowning; making a little well, from which the canary drew buckets of water. And Phemie and the old man would wander off to the river side, where he would fish, seldom catching anything, and she would read or knit. None of the family knew of these intimacies. Belle, older than Phemie by six years, preferred that she should consider herself a child until Miss Norris was married. And Aunt Marcia detested her for her resemblance to the sister-in-law who had never been congenial.

No one in the house knew, but some one not of the household did and shared at times in them.

Sometimes when the old man's rod dangled over the water, a younger angler would take his place near him—a handsome young fellow with black hair and the brightest eyes in the world; and there the hours went by like hours in a dream, and Phemie felt happy as she felt when a child by her mother's side. And Uncle Bill laughed and told fishermen's stories. As for the young man, silent or talkative, he was always charming. So thought Phemie. She was well-read in romantic lore. What happened in his little life was only to be expected. In a little while two lovers sat beside old Uncle Bill on the banks of the pretty stream, and walked together as far as the little gate in the hedge that nobody else used, and did not hide from the old man that they parted with a kiss.

Fred Howard was not a flashy capable man, the only son of a poor widow who had made a bookkeeper of her boy. What holidays he had he spent at home. This was his mid-summer vacation. He was bright and good and handsome, but Mr Norris surely would have had other views for his younger daughter.

And so one day, as the two, having met accidentally on the road, were talking together with an expression on either face that made an old country lady, who drove past, remark to her husband: "Hiram, take my word for it, them's beans!" Mr Norris marched up behind the pair, and appeared like a very florid ghost between the two, with an:

"I was not aware, Mr Howard, that you had ever been introduced to my daughter."

The young man blushed, but anxiously answered: "But I have sir—by my friend her uncle."

times at Phemie, but all worded so circumspectly and clothed in such a guise of pity that no one dared resent them.

"Oh!" replied Mr Norris, lowering his tone a little. "Then you know my brother, Mr Whipple Norris, in the city? He is a relative I am proud of—worth half a million if he is a cent."

"I have often heard of Mr Whipple Norris," replied the young man frankly; "but have never met him. I owe my introduction to Miss Phemie Norris to her Uncle William—ah—ah."

The young man suddenly remembered that he did not know Uncle Bill's last name. "Her Uncle William!" repeated Mr Norris. "Euphemism, poor young Howard allude to your poor mother's unfortunate brother Bill?"

Phemie looked at him.

"Young Howard?" repeated Mr Norris. "That person has no authority to introduce my daughter. Consider yourself a stranger to her henceforth."

Phemie looked at Fred. Fred looked at Phemie.

"It is too late, sir," the latter said. "I love your daughter, and have won her heart. She has promised to be my wife."

Mr Norris stared at him, lifted his eyebrows; stared again through his double eye-glass, and spoke sternly:

"I have one daughter who is a credit to me. Lord McTab paid great attention to her last winter. He has written to ask my consent to their nuptials, which I shall give, and he will return in the fall to be married to her. An English Nobleman would hardly like a brother-in-law who makes, perhaps, twenty dollars a week. My eldest daughter, Mrs Timpkin Trotter, has married a gentleman who is esteemed the wealthiest man in Mineville. My son is with my brother in New York—a man I am proud of. Now I shall never make a fuss about Phemie. I only tell you this: If she marries you, I disown her. You can take her if she chooses. I shall never give her a penny. She may have her clothes and trinkets, and go. If she obeys me, she shall be married or single, well provided for. She is plain and unprepossessing; but I know a young clergyman who will attain eminence, who only needs my permission to propose. She might do very well with a proper portion for him. She has a thick waist, a large mouth, and ordinary features," continued Mr Norris, turning his eye-glass on his daughter: "but a clergyman should not look for beauty."

"She is the prettiest girl I know, and if I can earn her bread and butter, I can do it," said Fred Howard.

"You give her to me, sir?"

"No," replied Mr Norris. "She may give herself to you if she chooses to be a beggar."

Then he walked away.

As Phemie and Fred stood looking at each other, old Uncle Bill's head arose above the shrubbery.

"I give my permission," he said, with more than usual dignity; "I am her mother's brother. I think you will make her happy, young Fred Howard."

The maiden aunt and the sister, who was to be the bride of an English nobleman, and Phemie a sad life of it for a while; but one morning she walked out of her home in her simple church-going costume, and was married in the little chapel at St John. Old Uncle Bill, in his old-fashioned broad-cloth suit, went with them, and gave the bride away. Mrs Howard was there, and a school friend of Phemie's, and a fellow clerk of Fred's. None of the Norris family. And after the wedding they were to go upon a little trip. Phemie's trunks had been sent to Fred's mother's little house. The bride was not as happy as she might have been under other circumstances, but at home to one had ever loved her or considered her since her mother's death; and Fred loved her, and she loved him. Her only trouble was that she must leave old Uncle Bill, that she must leave old Uncle Bill, that she must leave old Uncle Bill, "very hard, Phemie." And then Fred held out his hand.

"Uncle Bill," he said, "we shall live in a very plain way, but if you will live with us, we will do our best to make you happy, and shall be happy ourselves."

"Will you be so, boy?" cried Uncle Bill. "A poor old man like me—eh! really?"

her uncle."

"Really!" cried Phemie, dancing with joy.

"Really and truly, heaven knows." And Fred grasped his hand and shook it. "You brought us together, Uncle Bill," he said.

"It's lucky," answered Uncle Bill, "for brother-in-law Norris has turned me out of his house for aiding and abetting you—told me that I might be town poor if I liked. I didn't, I just said, 'Very well, I'll go.'"

"I'll get your things and take them to mother's," said Fred. "You'll be company for her while we're gone; after that, one home for all of us."

"Then the old man looked at them with a smile; looked at Mrs Howard with another, and laughed his sweet, good-natured laugh.

"You're two good, honest, generous children," he said. "And you're Fred's mother, ma'am. But I've an explanation to make. Five years ago my sister Susan heard that I was sick and at a hospital, and took me to her house. She nursed me back to tolerable health and was very good to me. Then, sweet angel, she died. She thought that being in a hospital meant poverty. I was paying fifty dollars a week there. I have a fortune that even Mr Norris would respect, but seeing what he was I took a fancy to find out what his children were. I have. I have lived about the place, as Uncle Bill, a poor relation. I wasn't wanted, even at table I was dispised by all but Phemie. She, dear little soul, has been a daughter to me. I told sister Susan the truth on her death-bed, and promised to do my best by this sweet girl; and my money has been growing under good care for five years. Why, had I been the beggar they thought me, I'd have gone to an almshouse rather than eat Norris' bread all these years. As it was, I enjoyed the joke. To think how he would have respected me if he had known the truth. How he scorned me for being poor, when I was a wealthy man; but let all that pass; we are happy together and what need we care?"

There was great excitement at the Norris mansion when the news reached its inhabitants, and Mr Norris sent a formal forgiveness to his daughter.

She was a good girl and felt glad that this was so, but she only began to know what real happiness was in the home where she and those who truly loved her lived contentedly together for many long, pleasant years.

Dimock--Bishop.

The following is what the Tulare (California) Register says of the marriage of a former Wolfville young lady, Miss Annie Bishop, which took place at that city. The ACADIAN extends congratulations:

A quiet wedding occurred last evening at the residence of J. E. Bishop, on north L street, the contracting parties being Mr Arthur H. Dimock, formerly of Tulare, now of Seattle, and Miss Anna B. Bishop, of Tulare. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. W. Webb. The bride was tastefully attired, and to those who knew her it is needless to say that she looked beautiful. The rooms were decorated with flowers and ivy in profusion. The wedding presents were numerous and costly. An elegant lunch was served, and shortly after midnight a portion of the company dispersed, a number remaining to escort the young couple to the train, whence they left for Seattle, their future home. The Register acknowledges a liberal supply of wedding cake and extends best wishes to the young couple for their future happiness and prosperity. Those present were Mr and Mrs J. E. Bishop, Mr and Mrs D. H. Williams, Mr and Mrs L. M. Kellog, Mr and Mrs A. W. Webb, Mr and Mrs Otto Ramage, Mr and Mrs Alfred Fay, Mr and Mrs A. H. Dimock, Misses Frances Bishop, Carrie Littlefield, Gussie Woodward and Ida Egli, Mrs A. G. Woodward, Mrs Egli, Mrs A. J. Pillsbury, Messrs H. W. Bishop and James Owen, Master Louis Woodward.

It is stated that Henry M. Stanley is to deliver fifty lectures in the United States during next fall and winter, and that he is to receive $5,000 for lecturing in New York, and $2,000 in other cities.

QUICK RUN.—On Tuesday last the W. & A. R. Express under Conductor Herbert was detained at Annapolis one hour and ten minutes on account of the lateness of the steamer New Brunswick. The run was however made to Halifax in the remarkable quick time of four hours and fifty-five minutes. Driver W. Ward, one of the oldest on the road, held the lever. This is a good sign that the W. & A. R. road is being put in better condition. This is probably the best time ever made over the road from Annapolis to Halifax.—Annapolis Spectator.

"Bring your feet with you and have them fitted to a pair of common-sense shoes," is the way a Pittsburg dealer advertises. It is a good phrase, and one which attracts attention. The man who succeeds in advertising in such a way that people read his advertisement is the one who draws trade to his store as sure as a magnet draws a needle to itself. Study up quaint, witty, or warty phrases to head your advertisements, and be not too modest in the space they occupy.

FRATERNAL VISIT.—Wolfville Division paid a fraternal visit to Maple Leaf Division, of Greenwood, on Tuesday evening. The evening was pleasant and quite a number attended. A very enjoyable evening was in a prosperous condition and it is apparently doing good work. They have a fine new hall, well fitted up with the needful accessories, all of which has been paid for by the society. They deserve great credit for their perseverance and energy. May they continue to prosper.

"Paris Green" applied by the "American Brass Cyclist Pump," will fix the canker-worm every time. For sale by S. R. SLEEPER.

NARROW ESCAPE.—On Tuesday evening of last week as a two horse team attached to a heavy wagon was being driven through Wolfville the coupling tongue of the wagon became unfastened near the creek ground and several boys who had climbed upon the wagon, were tumbled off. A wheel passed over the head of one of them, Master Fred Beckwith, son of Mr. John Beckwith, of the Village House, and he was picked up in an unconscious condition. Medical aid was at once summoned, and we believe he is now doing well. It was certainly a narrow escape.

Wolfville, June 19, 1890.

Notes from Baxter's Harbor.

William Irwin is building a vessel 75 feet keel. She is intended as a coasting schooner.

The school is taught by Miss Corrie Webster and is attended by nineteen children, all of whom are under 13 years of age. The school house needs repairs to make it comfortable for a winter school.

This is a community composed principally of fishermen. For a few weeks, this spring fishing has been pretty good and a fine lot of cod and pollock have been caught and cured. The fish are now gone into deeper waters, and those who fish in boats, as in this place, cannot follow them. Further west, along the shore, are a number of weirs in which an occasional salmon is caught this summer. Two years ago some of these weirs caught 4 or 5 tons weight of salmon. No reason can be assigned why these fish are so scarce now.

Vegetation is in a very backward condition. Even the best meadow land would scarcely yield feed for cattle at the present time, and unless the weather becomes much warmer than now and reasonable showers of rain water these lands, the hay crop must prove a failure.

Personal Notes.

Barely Webster, Esq., M. P. P., has been made a Q. C.

Mr. and Mrs. John Palmer are home from the United States on a visit.

Prof. J. F. Tufts left last week for Belfast, Me., where he has gone on account of his health.

Miss Almee Huntington, who has for the past year and a half been filling the position of assistant editor of the Berwick News, has this week taken a similar position in the office of the Week Journal.

In another column will be found the notice of the marriage of Mr. Charles H. Day, Mr. Day is well known in Wolfville, having graduated at Acadia College a few years ago. He and his fair bride are now stopping in Wolfville for a few days. The Acadian extends congratulations.

At the New Baptist church worshiping in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Dr. DeBlot preached at both morning and evening services. Though youthful in appearance and age, the preacher has already given evidence of unusual ability. Dr. DeBlot graduated at Wolfville at the early age of nineteen. He has since studied at Brown's University and holds the degree of Ph. D., being the youngest doctor of Philosophy in America. —Trans. Guardian.
