Sweet Violet.

"It is Heaven's judgment upon the wicked," her mother answered, solemnly.

The two girls were soon ready for the trip, and after bidding an affectionate adieu to Mrs. Lavarre, they went down to the carriage that Cecil had waiting, and were soon driven to the train that was to take Violet back to the scenes from which she had been so cruelly torn. The journey was brief, and they talked but little, for the shadow of the tragedy at Golden Willows lay darkly on their hearts, and they wondered if Amber had indeed tried to murder her old grandfather, or if it was only an awful mistake. Perhaps she was already dead, and the mystery of the poison in her grandfather's glass might never be revealed.

The carriage was waiting for them at the station, and it was just midnight when they arrived at Golden Willows. Mrs. Shirley met Violet at the door, and robbed for joy, as she kissed and caressed her bonny favorite, whom she had so sorely missed. She gave Lena Lavarre a cordial welcome, and then told them that Judge Camden was still alive, and seemingly better, although very weak. She added that he was counting the minutes until Violet's arrival; so as soon as she had removed her heavy fur wraps, the girl hastened to his bedside.

Oh, what a cry of grief came from her sweet lips as she saw the proud, strong old man so altered, looking years older in the weeks since she had seen him—so old, so wan, so ill! She fell on her knees by his bed, and kissed his pale cheek, sobbing out all her love and her noble forgiveness.

CHAPTER L.

It almost seemed as if the news that Violet was still alive, and her return to Golden Willows, put new life into the stern old judge.

He began to rally from his extreme depression, and then Violet had staid with him—she would, he felt into a general sleep, that lasted a long morning.

Meanwhile, Cecil had hurried home to tell his mother of the startling events that had happened since he had left her at noon with Amber. Mrs. Shirley had sent a maid from Golden Willows to nurse Amber at the Melrose cottage, so he did not think it necessary to go back there.

But when he had told Mrs. Grant all the story of Amber's treachery, she sighed deeply, and said:

"Poor girl! she has been very wicked, and I am glad you escaped the marriage she planned for you. But, Cecil, we must not forget her great kindness, nor the gratitude we owe her for the loan that saved Bonny's castle."

"But, mother, it seems as if she do liberally planned the foreclosure of the mortgage, in order to work out her plan of the elopement, and to snare me in her toils," he replied, indignantly.

"Poor Amber! was she indeed so wicked? But yet I pity her, now that her sins have found her out, and she is so desolate and forsaken. And since Mrs. Shirley cannot go to her, Cecil, why it almost seems my duty to care for her now; so, early in the morning, you must take me to the Melrose cottage."

He did not gainsay her wish, and took her in a carriage the next morning.

But there was no change in Amber. She lay unconscious, as on the night before; and Cecil left his mother at the cottage, and rode to Golden Willows to see Violet.

She came to meet him, so bright, so beautiful, in her soft white cashmere morning dress, bound at the waist with a white silted cord, and all her golden curls loose about her shoulders, like ripples of spun gold. The sweet rosy-lips were lifted frankly for his fond kisses.

"Grandpa is so much better this morning. He has been talking to us—telling us—" she said, and paused.

"Of Harold Castello's death?" asked Cecil.

"Yes," she answered, "and Lena was very glad that he repented his sins before he died. He had a priest sent for, and confessed his sins and received absolution. He left a message for me, praying my pardon for his sins against me, and that I would never reveal all the evil I knew of him, since he had passed beyond earthly punishment to the bar of Heaven. Cecil," and she lifted her wistful blue eyes to his adoring face.

"What is it, my darling?"

She answered, with a catch in her breath, like a repressed sob:

"I know much evil of this man that I have never spoken. Is it right for me to keep silence now?"

"Yes, Violet, it is right. The dead are sacred. If we cannot speak in praise of them, and if silence can wrong no one, it is best."

"I am glad you think so, for his terrible suffering in death has touched my heart. And Lena forgives him now, and his wrongs against her were greater than mine."

"It is noble in you both," he said, admiringly.

"But, Cecil, there is something else that distresses me very much, but grandpa says I must accept it."

"What is it, my Violet?"

"I—I—am his widow, you know. Is it not horrible to think of, dear? But it cannot be helped, you know, for the marriage was legal. But he had no relatives, and—and—he left me all his wealth—several millions, grandpa says. I—I—wish to resign my title to the money, and let her do it. And the dying man begged I would accept it in atonement for all I had suffered through his sins."

"And you wish to refuse it, my darling? But I do not blame you. There is Lena, whom he wronged so deeply. You can give it to her, Violet."

"I have offered it to her, but she refused, for there are reasons that would make it dreadful for her to accept. And grandpa has been saying that I am very foolish to refuse this fortune. He said I might do so much with it—help the poor, you know—and—and—shyly, restore Bonny's castle when we are married. It tempted me a little, dear, for I should like to see Bonny's castle rebuilt—it will be my future home! So what shall I do, my darling?"

"You might think me mercenary if I counselled you to accept it, dear one, since you will be my wife. You must decide for yourself."

"Then I will do as Mr. Castello wished, and as grandpa counsels, for I shall then be very rich, and can do much good with the money."

Cecil did not dissuade her, for he thought that she had suffered enough at Castello's hands to merit this compensation. He did not covet the money for himself, but he knew that it would add to the happiness of his wife.

So she told Judge Camden she would accept the royal dowry, and he was well pleased.

"But, Lena, it should have been yours instead," she said, sadly; but Lena shook her head.

"You forget poor father," she said.

"No, no! I could not touch a cent morning dress, bound at the waist with a white silted cord, and all her golden curls loose about her shoulders, like ripples of spun gold. The sweet rosy-lips were lifted frankly for his fond kisses.

To Make Pure

Biscuit, cake, rolls, muffins, dumplings, etc., a pure leavening agent is indispensable.

While the Royal Baking Powder is reported absolutely pure and healthful, the official reports show most other baking powders, as well as the cream of tartar of the market depended upon by many housekeepers for raising biscuit and cake, to contain either alum, ammonia or sulphuric acid.

The Government Analyst of Ontario says:

"As a result of my investigation, I find the Royal Baking Powder far superior to the others. It is pure, contains none but wholesome ingredients, and is of greatest strength."

mother, who is fast falling in health, I shall retire into a convent to end my days."

Violet saw that there was no use urging her about the money. The wound in her heart was mortal.

She remained a few days at Golden Willows, until Judge Camden was out of danger, then returned to her home in Washington. A few weeks later her mother died, and she carried out her vow of entering a convent. The wonderful beauty that had proved her ruin was hidden beneath the black veil of the nun. When Violet donned the misty veil to become the adored bride of the man she worshipped, Lena Lavarre had already spoken the solemn vows that made her the pious bride of Heaven.

After Violet had held that conversation with Cecil, she said to him:

"I wish you to take me to see Amber. Although she has sinned against me, I forgive her, and I pity her for the jealousy that made her cruel and wicked."

"I will take you to the cottage. My mother is already there," replied Cecil.

"Violet went to her grandfather. I am going to see Amber. You must send her your forgiveness," she pleaded.

He demurred at first, but he could not refuse anything to Violet, who had forgiven so much to him; so he agreed that he would forgive Amber's sins, and let her come home if she recovered.

But the next day Amber came home to Golden Willows in her coffin.

When Cecil and Violet reached the cottage, the beautiful sinner who had risked and lost all for the sake of a mad love, had just expired, without ever fully regaining consciousness.

Violet kissed the poor, dead face, whose beauty was all marred by that ghastly fear, and wept bitterly on Mrs. Grant's motherly breast. She had hoped so much that Amber would get well and repent, but it was not to be. The fiery heart and burning brain were stilled forever.

So they robed her in snowy white, with flowers on her pulseless breast, and bore her back to her old home, and the secret of her sins was hidden in sacred silence in the breasts of the few that knew them. A few days later she had a stately funeral, and was laid to rest in the family grave-yard, under the whirling winter snow. The whole county mourned for beautiful Amber, who had come to so untimely an end, and the broken marble shaft that rose above her diamond head, told so secret of the wayward heart and mind that had driven her into sin and brought her to death.

Judge Camden was deeply moved

To the Editor of the ACADIAN.

Dear Sir,—Having just returned from the old colony of Newfoundland, and there meeting with some things of interest, some of them unique in their way, I have thought it not out of place to mention a few of them thinking perhaps there were those who possessed a little knowledge of the doings over there as I before my visit.

THE NEW REMEDY.

Nature is full of hidden forces that are being utilized and yet to be utilized for the benefit and upbuilding of mankind.

It is a great tonic and builds up the system and thereby throws off disease. It is good for almost any complaint, but particularly effective in Dyspepsia, and general debility, and is also a great remedy for sore throat, bruises, etc.

Now is a good time of the year to take it, and fortify the system for the winter. Get a circular at the druggist, which tells all about this wonderful remedy, and try it, and you will see that it is all or more than is claimed for it.

Agriculture in the island is in a primitive condition. I am convinced, however that much good land awaits the agriculturist. All vegetables, also small fruits, such as gooseberries, currants and cranberries, could be raised there in abundance, and I believe that in the most sheltered part of the country where the land is good apples of a fair quality might be produced.

Warren Guy, 214 1/2, went a half over the Yarmouth track recently in 1:05 1/2. Our friend Steadman has sent his promising young horse "Dick Nelson," by Nelson, 2:09, to Maine, U. S., to be trained, and we predict for him a record of 2:20 in 1899, and why not?

We hear that Leslie Eaton's son of "R. T. M." is yearling—hips the scales at 1150 lbs. There is a son of this illustrious and much owned sire in Wolfville that is somewhat lighter in weight but heavier in ambition.

At a recent sale in New York—the Frasier sale—some horses brought old time prices. "Star Pointer" brought $15.00, "L. L. D." $15.50, "Handspring," $31.00, "Wilderness" $28.00, "Jolly Bird" $37.00, "Kistawab," a 3-year-old, $70.00, etc.

Barnhart is the only horse owned in the Maritime Provinces who had two trotters to enter the 230 list in 1898. He is the only one also that has two trotters with records better than 2:20, and further he is the only horse ever owned in the provinces with 10 of his legs in the 230 list.

Just now the air in St. John's is pregnant with the rumor that the C. P. R. and R. G. Reid have an understanding that a line shall be built from St. John, N. B., to North Sydney, the object being to establish a transatlantic line between Canada and Europe.

What a beautiful thing a Shetland pony is! Such altogether entrancing things are these ponies that one never wants to see one without a full pocket-book and grip to carry one home in, just to put in the parlor as a bric-a-brac. TOLD BY THE EDITOR.

DURING A HOLIDAY TRIP HE VISITS THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

HE FOUND CHANGES THAT ATTESTED HIM ONE OF WHICH DESERVES THE WIDEST PUBLICATION FOR THE BENEFIT IT MAY PROVE TO OTHERS.

From the Leader and Recorder, Toronto, Ontario.

The editor of the Leader and Recorder, during a recent holiday trip through the counties of York, Peel, Dufferin and Grey, spent a few days at the old parental homestead where he was born and spent many happy years.

The old homestead is in the township of Euphrasia, Grey county, about one and a half miles south of the village of Heathcote, and about ten miles from the town of Meaford.

It is occupied by the writer's youngest brother, George J. Fawcett. The latter was the picture of health, and remembering that when he came from Detroit, where he had been living for several years, and took possession of the homestead, he was in such feeble health that his life was despaired of, the writer suggested that the bracing climate of the northern regions must be the best medicine in the world for a shattered constitution.

The reply made contained statements so remarkable that we considered it a pleasure as well as a duty to give them as wide publicity as possible through the columns of the Leader and Recorder.

A severe attack of malaria, contracted whilst in Detroit, brought the writer's brother to death's door, from which he recovered only to find himself the victim of a complication of troubles which unfitted him for work.

He was attended by some of the most eminent physicians in Detroit, but he received little or no benefit from their treatment.

Change of air was finally recommended and he removed with his family to the county of Grey.

A slight change for the better was noticeable at first, but he soon relapsed into the old condition and again sought help from the leading doctors of the district in turn.

Christian Environment.

Well is it for the child that awakens from unconscious infancy amid the prayers and praises of a pious household; that, beholding always the face of the mother or earth, even as the angels of the children are beautifully said, in Christ's words, always to behold the face of the Father in heaven.

Miss Willard's First Appearance in Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Byrd, pastor of the Central M. E. Church South, where Miss Willard had often lectured, gives the following reminiscences of his first acquaintance with her as a public speaker.

It had been announced that Miss Willard would speak in McKendree church, a startling innovation on Southern customs, where home was considered woman's sphere, and her appearance on a public platform was an unheard of occurrence.

Dr. Byrd, then a student at Vanderbilt University, had heard one Methodist pastor say to another, "Let us go to McKendree and help Brother—, for he has a woman on his hands."

"It was the last year of my student life at Vanderbilt. My room-mate and classmate was the most brilliant and interesting young man I met."

"In his companionship, intent on anything but intellectual enjoyment, I entered McKendree church. When Miss Willard stepped on the platform, in the maturity of beautiful womanhood, her first sentence appealed so powerfully to our reason and higher nature that all thoughts of mirth or criticism were dissipated, and we listened with rapt attention."

"At the close of the service, in accordance with Miss Willard's usual custom, the pledge was circulated. My mind was fully made up, and without hesitation I signed my signature, though up to that time, as a student, I have never tasted intoxicating drinks."

"Two years afterward he married one of Nashville's fairest daughters, and the wedding was as brilliant as wealth and the highest social position could make it."

"Two years later, and the Nashville American, in scolding headlines, announced the suicide of its most brilliant and popular lawyer. Disipation had resulted in defecation, and in the presence of his young wife, a pistol shot by his own hand put an end to a life no longer endurable."

"Spare the Birds. Let no woman think herself well dressed with a dead bird for an ornament. It is not true that to slay a friend is the most depraved type of atrocity."

seraps for Odd Moments.

"Why did you come dressed in such a loud check to propose to me yesterday?" "So that you could not hear my heart beating, dearest."

Keep Minards Liniment in the House. Walker Bismarck—"Such, sir, was the thunder burst of enthusiasm from the audience that I was struck all in a heap."

Meek Husband—You ought to remember, Henrietta, that just as I married me for better or worse.

Minards Liniment the Lumberman's Friend. "Clarendon Dawdler is the most hopelessly lazy man I ever knew."

The Child—"Do you slip your feet, Mrs. Blackley?" The Visitor—"Yes, sometimes. Why do you ask?"

"Intelligence has just reached me"—began Mr. Bloder as he sat down at the dinner table. "Thank goodness, if it has at last!" exclaimed Mrs. Bloder.

Giles—"I suppose you get paid for writing those magazine jokes?" "Smiles—"Sure. You didn't imagine I wrote them for fun, did you? Giles—"Oh, no; anyone could tell that by reading them."

"My daughter," said the loving father, with perhaps a shade of harshness in his voice, "what does that young man who calls on you every evening in a dress suit do for a living?"

"My dear," said Mrs. Riebleigh, to her daughter, the other evening, after young Woodley had departed, "how in the world did your hair become so charnaged?"

"Why, mamma," replied the quick-witted miss, "I guess it must be from shaking my head so much when Mr. Woodley was trying to coax me to say yes."

"And the mother suddenly remembered that she had once been a girl herself."

We believe MINARD'S LINIMENT is the best. Matthias Foley, Oil City, Ont. Joseph Snow, Norway, Me.

"My dear brudders an' sisters," remarked the venerable pastor of the only colored church in town, as he carefully cleared the table in front of him so that every niche, cut and button laid upon it would stand out in startling distinction.
