CHAPTER XIII.

"It will not occur again. She has served faithfully these many years, and for the sake of her long service we should excuse a single instance of carelessness. So I took her up to my room and told her I was sure it would not occur again, and I gave her that garnet set you always thought so becoming to me for home wear."

"She is not dissatisfied now?"

"No, indeed. Toplift is too shrewd to remain dissatisfied with such good fortune as hers. She knows she has a home for life with us, and a handsome salary. She is too old to think of marrying, even if it were not for that early disappointment of hers that made her hate your sex, and her interests are so entwined with ours that she will not willingly leave us. There is no occasion to be troubled about Toplift."

And her ladyship sighed.

"About what are you troubled then, Evelyn?"

"About Lyle and Xina. I have an idea, Evert, that Lyle is in love with Alexina. The idea never occurred to me till this morning, but it has shut out all other thoughts since. What if she should return his love? What if they should make up their minds to overthrow all obstacles in the way of their union and marry each other?"

"What if the sky should fall?" said the earl in a tone of irritation. "You are imagining impossibilities. In the first place, Alexina knows that by declining to marry Lord Ashcroft she would become penniless. She is no romantic girl to prefer love and poverty to wealth and respect. We have not sown our seed upon desert ground Evelyn, and Alexina would never willingly relinquish the luxuries she has been trained to consider indispensable."

"A woman in love often loses all worldly caution."

"But Alexina would not. Her pride is a part of herself. Do you think she would submit to seeing another woman a mistress of Egremont? Do you think that Lyle Indor's love would compensate for the loss of her fortune?"

"It would seem not, Evert. To judge Xina by myself, I should say she would be true to her own interest. I know I should be. I think there is no man living for whom I would give up such prospects as she has."

The earl winced. He had a very high opinion of his personal attractions, and it was scarcely agreeable to be even indirectly informed that his wife would have made no very great sacrifice to secure him.

"Had I not better send Lyle away, Evert?" asked her ladyship.

"By no means. The Lady Lorean has taken a fancy to him, as I can see

The closed rooms were three in number, arranged en suite, and were approached through an ante-chamber hung with faded tapestry, and furnished in a style common to first class dwellings of a century since.

The inner chambers comprised a small drawing-room, once the Lady Jasmine's bower, a bedroom opening from it, and another small room, suitable for a lady's boudoir.

Contrary to the general supposition, no dust lay thickly upon the floors and furniture, no desolation reigned there, no ghostly presence filled those rooms with sighs and wallings.

Instead, the closed chambers were like a fairy's bower.

Entering the drawing-room through the dreary ante-chamber, a lovely scene was presented to the view.

The floor was covered with a Persian carpet over a thick matting, and the Oriental flowers stood up from the thick pile in life-like luxuriance, siving forth under the pressure of the foot a delicious fragrance. The walls were hung with a fine satin paper, which served admirably as a background for the many gem-like pictures and a chandelier suspended from the center of the ceiling. The furniture comprised cushions, couches fauteuils, inlaid tables, &c., and all looked fresh and bright, showing that considerable care was bestowed upon them.

The bedroom was a dainty little retreat, fitted up with pure white, with lace drapery to the low French bed, and the linen was as white and fresh as if just put upon it, and had a delicate lavender scent.

The third chamber was the gem of the collection.

The window in this room was not boarded as were those of the drawing-room, but was curtained with silk and lace, which almost concealed the green shutters underneath them. These shutters were in folds, and between these latter the sunlight came in, lighting up the room with a pleasant radiance.

There was a fire in a small grate opposite the window. The walls of this room were hung with blue silk of a lovely shade, which fell in folds to the floor, just meeting the edge of the Eastern carpet. There were pictures framed in gilt, none of them large, but all of them portraying exquisite snatches of scenery, bits of sunset skies, a section of tropical forest, or something similar, affording food for thought beyond the faultlessness of execution.

A small piano, so arranged that the musician could educe from it the softest and sweetest of music, stood in one corner. Behind it was a gold-inlaid guitar, with blue ribbon to pass around the neck of the performer. In another corner was a small easel, with a partially finished painting upon it, representing Cleopatra binding the asp about her arm. A small, richly carved bookcase, filled with the choicest works, stood at one side, and near it was a richly inlaid work-table, laden with caryags, Berlin wools, strips of embroidery, and other evidences of feminine employment, the whole crowned by a tiny gold thimble. Another table supported a portfolio of choice engravings and a collection of well executed drawings.

Upon a couch of dusk-gold, by the window, lay the priestess of this beautiful temple, the owner of all this luxury.

She was the being known as the Spectre of Egremont.

She looked angelic and ethereal enough to seem indeed a visitant from another world. Her long bronze hair, unbound from its fillet, strayed over her shoulders, and in the mingled frelight and sunlight looked like pure gold; her pure, pale face was unearthly in its beauty, and her eyes, now gazing dreamily into the fire, were more than ever glorious in their luster and loveliness.

Yet that she was no spirit was evidenced by her gentle respiration, and by the low-breathed sigh that now and then escaped her lips.

She had been reading "Childe Harold," and the small green and gold volume was still clasped in her hand, upon which sparkled the quaint set gems which had attracted Lord Ashcroft's attention.

She was engaged in that favorite occupation of the young, weaving day-dreams, and that hers were pleasant, even while slightly tinged with melancholy, was apparent by the smiles that succeeded her faint sighs.

"Back was Very Painful I am now Well Again"

Mrs. Wm. Walker, Webbwood, Ont., writes:

"I was sick for several months with my stomach, I had pains in the back, and how I used to drag away day, for my back would pain so that I couldn't lie down when night came. I also had gas on my stomach, and my appetite was so poor that sometimes I did not care whether I ate or not. The doctor gave me medicine, of which I took a number of bottles without benefit. At last I started to use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and although I have only used three boxes, I am quite well again."

Falling With a Parachute

A recent incident in Auch, France, when a woman, whose parachute failed to open, fell and was killed in the presence of 10,000 spectators, induced "Hoo" to write the following:

No one knows what may be the sensations of an unfortunate airman hurtling through the air to earth, but I can imagine them, at least in part, for I have known what it is to jump into "space," putting all my faith in the conscientiousness and skill of the aid mechanics whose job it was to pack that great spread of Japanese silk in its case.

In the experience that befell me, the approach of a German aeroplane splitting incendiary bullets at my "sausage" balloon allowed of no hesitation in climbing over the side. My partner and I did not hurry, however; we watched our enemy carefully, and then, when he was just close enough to be unhealthy, we went over.

Actually we were excited—our emotional plane had been lifted several degrees—but visibly we were not. So we dropped, one after the other, quite as in the ordinary course of things.

I can remember hanging full length from the basket and capturing my fall the fractional part of a second. Then

—O-o-o-h!—two sudden gasps, and I was floating down through the air. During those two gasps, however, I had fallen over two hundred of the four thousand feet level at which we had been flying.

H. G. Wells, in "Joan and Peter," has crowded a small lifetime into the brain of the hero who underwent a similar experience. Peter, I think, must have had an abnormal brain, for the whole drop is over in two seconds. But think of the falling past that two-second limit; think of the multiplication of gasps until the breath is mercifully driven from your body so that you lapse into unconsciousness before your body meets the earth that is rushing up at you.

Changes His Name to Gain Fortune

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame to Become Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister.

London, Nov. 26.—Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame, President of the Board of Trade, is going to do away with both of his names, but keep the hyphen.

He will need it to link up the new names he has decided to adopt. Hereafter he will be known as Sir Philip Cunliffe-Lister.

The change will mean many thousands of pounds to Sir Philip, the first Lord Masham, inherited a large part of his Lordship's £1,500,000 fortune and in turn she will be largely to the Lloyd-Greames but as stipulated in her will that the recipients must adopt the name Cunliffe-Lister, the family name of Lord Masham.

Usually in change of names due to a legacy the recipient merely adds them, but in Lloyd-Greame's case he would have meant four surnames and two or three hyphens. Apparently he decided it would be better to do away with his original name altogether than to be bothered with the flock of appellatives.

President Coolidge Declares U. S. is Not Disposed to Join the League

Chamberlain Will Inform the League of Egyptian Affairs--Halifax Police Killer Sentenced to Death--Home Bank Officials Appeal Against Sentences.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3. President Coolidge in his annual message to Congress today, advised the United States adherence to the World Court of International Justice, declared the United States was not disposed to join the League of Nations, and repeated his declaration that the United States was opposed to any cancellation of debts due by foreign governments. In the realm of domestic affairs, the President advised that the most important work Congress could do would be to sponsor a system of rigid economy to make possible the further reduction of taxes for the next fiscal year. Two new projects were announced: the President's discussion of foreign affairs, one touched on the reduction of work requirements, and the other had reference to the outlawing of war.

OUT ON BAIL.

TORONTO, Dec. 3. C. A. Barnard, of Montreal, under sentence of 18 months imprisonment, and Lieut. Col. O. F. Smith, of Montreal, under sentence of six months, in connection with charges arising out of the collapse of the Home Bank of which they were directors, were this afternoon admitted to bail in $100,000 for Barnard and $5,000 for Smith pending the appeal and hearing of their cases before the Ontario Supreme Court. This order was made by Chief Justice Mullock of the Appellate division of the court.

FRENCH LINER HAS ROUGH EXPERIENCE.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. Thirty-six hours overdue from Le-Havre after constant battling with hurricanes and snow storms, the French liner Rochambeau docked today with four injured passengers and 19 very meek bronchics. Mrs. L. C. Sheldon, of San Francisco, was the most seriously injured. On Thanksgiving Night, when a 100 mile gale was hurling 60 foot waves over the ship, she was thrown to the floor of the lounge sustaining a broken wrist. The Rochambeau emerged unscathed. Tex Austin's bronchitis returning from the Wembley Exhibition had a riotous time. The night the gale was the fiercest, terrified by the weird noises that accompanied the howling of the wind and the creaking of the tossing ship, they tore loose from their fastenings trampled down the stanchions and stamped in the ship's well where they were quartered. Intrepid sailors staged a round up and erected staterooms which the bronchics occupied during the remainder of the voyage.

It was anticipated that in view of the comparatively short sentence he would be sent to the municipal institution, should the appeal of the convicted directors fail it is expected that they will be confined in the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph.

LIONEL BARRYMORE IN "UNSEEING EYES," BIG PRODUCTION.

Characterised as the most thrilling and picturesque photoplay ever woven around a story of life in and around the majestic Canadian Rockies, "Unseeing Eyes," a screen version of an Arthur Stringer story, will have its first showing in St. John's to-night.

RICHARD HUDNUT

THREE FLOWERS FACE POWDER
This Face Powder that is Different Has the Particularly Desirable Quality of Adhering to the skin and retaining its lustrous and appealing color of Three Flowers in All Popular Shades when it begins an engagement at the Nickel Theatre.

Headed by Director E. H. Griffith and Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen, the Cosmopolitan company making the production spent more than twelve weeks in location in the rugged country around Banff, Lake Louise and other sections of Canada. More than a week was devoted in Montreal to the filming of a mid-winter Carnival, which serves as one of the pictorial high lights of the film.

According to Director Griffith, the "Unseeing Eyes" company covered more ground in an aeroplane in a day than it would have been possible to cover in that country in a year by any other means of transportation. Many of the most striking scenes were made around Castle Rock, in the Columbia Valley, between the Selkirk Range and the Canadian Rockies. Three huge planes were utilized and they soared more than 10,000 feet above sea level. While in search of a suitable location for a trading camp scene one of the planes dropped more than 100 feet in a tall spin after being caught in an air current. This occurred at a height of more than 5,000 feet, but fortunately the plane was righted.

Erno Rappee has especially composed an original musical score to accompany the picture.

Miss Eleanor Mews has selected a most attractive program of selections to render to-night, among her numbers are "One Fine Day" from the Opera "Madame Butterfly" and "A Japanese Love Song." These songs are entirely different from anything she has yet rendered and we feel sure they will appeal to the taste of the most critical.

The story that moved the heart of the world, "If Winter Comes." The picture the world waited to see.—dec23

TO-DAY'S MESSAGES

FOUR PERSONS INCINERATED IN A COLLISION.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 3. Four persons were burned to death here to-night when an interurban car en route to Toledo and Cleveland crashed into a truck loaded with turpentine at Wyandotte, a suburb. The dead were so badly burned that it has not been possible to ascertain whether they were men or women. More than a score of wounded were taken from the wreckage.

ANOTHER SPLIT IN THE LIBERAL RANKS.

LONDON, Dec. 3. The Liberal members of the House of Commons who yesterday voted against the motion which led to the appointment of Lloyd George as Sessional Chairman of the Liberal Party, or refrained from voting on the motion, have formed a nucleus of a separate radical group. The most prominent members of the group of Liberal M.P.'s are Sir Walter Runciman, Minister in Mr. Asquith's Government, and George Rennie-Thorne, member for East Wolverhampton since 1908. Other members are Lieut. Commander Jos. M. Kenworthy, member for Central Hull; Captain William Wedgwood Benn, member for Leith; Trevelyan Thomson, West Middleborough; Major H. E. Crawford, West Walthamstow; Mackenzie Livingstone, Inverness and Western Isles; R. Hopkins Morris, member for Cardigan and Frank Brien, North Lambeth. These members say they will work together in furthering Liberal principles in the House of Commons and the country.

MANIAC MURDERS WHOLE FAMILY.

BERLIN, Dec. 3. "I murdered eight of them," was the confession exacted from Director Angerstein, of a Cement Factory at Siegen Westphalia in whose home eight members of the household were found dead yesterday and Angerstein himself wounded. At the time of discovery Angerstein said that a band of 25 robbers attacked his home seeking the pay roll of the factory and killed the eight persons, seriously wounded him, and afterwards set fire to the building and fled. To-day's confession was obtained from Angerstein by the police after they had definitely concluded that the physical evidence left on the scene of carnage pointed straight to Angerstein, who is in a hospital, but whose wounds are not considered fatal. Angerstein is a paralytic and is suspected of having committed the murders owing to the fact that he was in financial difficulties. Angerstein according to the police enticed his victim, who included his wife and her mother and a sister into a room separately and killed them with an axe and a hunting knife, then poured petrol around and set fire to the house, out himself with the axe, and having stabbed himself with the knife, then screamed for help. The suspicions of the police against Angerstein were aroused by the fact that they found his bloody finger prints on the handle of the axe. Prior to the crime Angerstein had lived happily with his wife. He was known as a quiet and religious man.

ESTHONIA DISPOSES OF REVOLUTIONISTS WITH DISPATCH.

REVEL, Esthonia, Dec. 3. It was officially announced to-day that seventeen persons were tried by court martial yesterday, of whom seven were sentenced to death and the penalty carried out. Normal conditions now prevail throughout Esthonia, the announcement states, following the suppression of Monday's Communist revolution. This cost the lives of nearly a score of persons on the Government side, while some fifty of the Communists were killed during the brief but sharp fighting.

LUNENBURG BANKERS PASS INTO FRENCH HANDS.

HALIFAX, N.S., Dec. 3. Two Lunenburg schooners, the Mary Duff and Hiram McLean, owned by William Duff, M.P., of Lunenburg, said to be among the largest of the Nova Scotia fleet, are to pass under the French flag. Mr. Duff said to-night that he had sold both vessels. The name of the new owners was not divulged, but it is understood they will be registered at a French port.

GASOLINE TAX TO BE IMPOSED.

TORONTO, Dec. 4. Hon. Geo. Henry, Ontario Minister of Highways definitely stated yesterday that it was the intention to submit legislation to the Legislature which is to assemble about eight weeks hence for the imposition of a gasoline tax. Mr. Henry says the amount of the impost had not as yet been decided but he acquiesced in the suggestion as to the probability of a two cents per gallon tax. The new taxation is to be confined to motorists and it is proposed that the Legislature be submitted will provide for rebates to farmers and manufacturing concerns using gasoline for other than motoring purposes.

CHARTERS OF LOCAL UNIONS REVOKED.

SCRANTON, Pa., Dec. 4. The charters of ten locals unions of the United Mine Workers of America in Pittston District were revoked yesterday by the district board of strikers Union here. Failure of 12,000 striking miners to obey the order of the International president, John L. Lewis, to return to work was the reason assigned for the revocation. The action means that the strikers are no longer members of the Miners' Union.

STRENGTH OF RED ARMY REDUCED.

MOSCOW, Dec. 4. Soviet Russia's red army now consists of 562,000 men. Assistant Commissar of War, M. W. Frunse, announced at a plenary meeting of the War Council closing yesterday. The figure represents a reduction of 48,000 during the last year.

FRENCH WAR MINISTER SUGGESTS MOBILIZATION SCHEME.

LONDON, Dec. 4. Military service in France would be reduced under an army reform plan now being worked out at the Ministry of War, General Nollet, the War Minister, has explained to the Army Committee of the Chamber of Deputies that a reduction would be made possible by an organization permitting mobilization of all the national energies and resources without exception. In view of war, and acting independently of the army, which would remain an organ of training and defence.

SPECULATION AS TO FRANCE'S FUNDING ARRANGEMENTS.

LONDON, Dec. 4. The report that France has begun negotiations for funding her debt to the United States has aroused considerable stir in financial and political quarters here and is attracting notice in the press. Most of the comments thus far reveal an expectation that if France arranges to pay the United States, she will also arrange to pay Great Britain. It is further contended by some of the commentators that if the United States allows France exceptionally favorable terms, Great Britain would be justified in looking for a revision of her own funding arrangements with America.

ALLEGED TRAITOR ARRESTED.

PARIS, Dec. 4. Jacques Sadoul, a former French Army Captain, who returned to Paris this week in spite of a death sentence hanging over him after his conviction by default of a charge of treason in 1919, was arrested this morning in the offices of his barrister, Maurice Floch.

CENTRAL LEATHER CO.

Readjusting Production to Consumption.
(From Boston News Bureau, Nov. 26.)
N.Y.—Initiating a movement to bring excessive production capacity of sole leather industry down in proper relation to consumption, Central Leather Co. in the past few months has scrapped tanneries with aggregate daily capacity of 4,000 hides. Operating ratio has been cut to below 80% on account of shortage of hides, indicated by reduction in number of cattle hides in stock from 5,086,000 to 3,775,000 in nine months this year. If the company were operating normally, its stock of hides would not last five weeks, but at present rate it is good for eight or nine weeks. Central Leather is not buying hides at present high prices. Firm of engineers which examined properties of the company in connection with coming refinancing pronounced assets amply sufficient to underlie a refunding issue.

STEWART-WARNER SPEEDOMETER.

Chicago—President Smith of Stewart-Warner Speedometer Corporation says both Basick-Alemite and his company will benefit by consolidation, as result of larger sales and distributing system, savings in overhead expenses and lower material costs due to larger volumes of purchases.
Net earnings of Basick-Alemite for nine months ended Sept. 30, 1924, were $1,139,220 after taxes, depreciation and interest, equal to $5.89 a share on 200,000 shares outstanding, against $1,401,465, or $7 a share in the entire year 1923. Acquisition of Basick-Alemite adds entirely new line to Stewart-Warner.

An Appeal

The President of the Maternity Section of Child Welfare Work would be grateful for contributions of cocoa, condensed milk and meat extract as well as "old linen" to be used for needy Maternity cases.
Parcels addressed, Mrs. Hiscock for "Midwives Club," Public Health building will be allocated on Monday evening for distribution to urgent cases.

Portia's First Officer Returns

Mr. Fred Carter, first mate of S. S. Portia left the ship at King's Cove on the run north, and has returned to the city by rail. Mr. Carter has been replaced by Mr. Jesse Stagg of Greenspond.

Big Seizure Smuggled Goods

Last night the Customs Officials raided S. S. Silvia, of the Red Cross Line, and were successful in capturing several large packages which had been hidden away in the sailor's quarters of the ship, and for which no owner could be found. It is said that one of the packages contained a lady's fur coat valued at $400. The other packages consisted of ladies' dresses and other wearing apparel, which amounted to several hundred dollars. The goods are now held in possession of the Customs.

Masonic Dance

The first of the Masonic Dances for the winter months took place in the Masonic Club rooms last night, when upwards of 150 couples were in attendance. The dance programme was a lengthy, and well selected one, and an enjoyable evening followed, the music furnished by the Masonic Club's own orchestra. A special feature was the elimination dance which was won by Miss Jean Knowling and Mr. Cyril Duple.

To Stop Poisoning Our Foods

The Daily Mail has been carrying on a crusade against the use of preservatives and deleterious colouring matter in foods, for more vigorous measures to prevent the distribution of adulterated or contaminated milk, and to enforce cleanliness in the handling of such articles of food as are not washed before being eaten.

In the last copy received the Mail makes the following editorial comments on this subject:—

"A few months ago one of the greatest chemists in this country told the public that 'we are bombarded with chemicals and poisons in minute quantities at a time at all meals: no organism can stand it indefinitely.'"

"The use of poisonous substances and colouring matters in food has increased greatly in the last twenty-five years. It may be an accident or it may be a result of the poison in our food that in this period there has been a great increase in the mortality from cancer."

All reasonable people are agreed that one of the first tasks before the new Parliament, when the necessary routine business has been disposed of, should be the passing of an Act to stop the poisoning of the people's food. The two recent reports to the Ministry of Health on the danger from poisonous preservatives and the facts which we have given day by day in our columns leave no room for any illusions. There is need for action with the minimum possible delay.

One chemical in particular, formaldehyde, ought to be strictly forbidden here in all foods, as its use is now forbidden in many foreign countries. The peril from it is the greater because it appears to act cumulatively, for which reason the interim report of the Ministry of Health Committee singled it out as 'peculiarly objectionable.' It is not very commonly employed because popular knowledge has spread and the facts as to its extremely poisonous character have been widely diffused. But it does from time to time occur in meat and in other foods, and it ought to be sternly banned.

Nor is boric acid altogether trustworthy. Two of the best medical authorities state that while it removes the outward sign of decomposition in food, such as unpleasant smell and taste, it does not prevent the growth of dangerous bacilli. As for the artificial colouring matter with which kippers and fish and butter are dosed, they should certainly be carefully regulated."

The opinions expressed by the Mail are based on the findings of a Commission of investigation appointed by the Ministry of Health, and are endorsed by several eminent medical men in London.

That the danger is not exaggerated is shown by the following revelations made by the Commission. Samples of food taken and examined in Poplar showed that:—

All samples of lemon curd, coffee essence, fish paste, lemon squash, and lime juice cordial were adulterated. 93.6 per cent. of margarine tested was impure.

50 per cent. of the cake examined contained preservatives. 51.2 per cent. of samples of butter were adulterated.

30 per cent. of the sausages were dosed with boric acid.

All samples of cocoa (some of them labelled "pure cocoa") contained some form of added alkali.

In Fulham one in every 20 samples of food taken was adulterated. This applied to 4.5 per cent. of the milk tested, with the result that thirty milk sellers voluntarily gave up registration and others had their licenses cancelled. Foods were found stored in filthy buildings, and strong complaint was made of the manner in which foodstuffs were exposed for sale in shops.

Perhaps the most serious of the discoveries was in connection with sausages and preserved meats. Five out of sixteen samples of the former and seven out of nine of the latter were found to contain contaminated meat, or portions of flesh which in its normal state would be banned as food for human consumption.

On our desk we have a communication from a citizen making a serious charge against one of the public institutions as to the manner in which the swill is disposed of. Without corroboration of the statements made it would serve no purpose to make them public, but as it is not the first time that the complaint has been made, we have placed the matter in the hands of the committee at present making an investigation of the public institutions, and feel confident that it will receive their prompt attention.

There are other matters in connection with the local preparation of the statements, it could be improved by a stricter supervision than that which is carried out at present. Unfortunately there is no particular official directly responsible for inaugurating a system which would apply to every part of the country, and seeing that it functions, and in consequence, what is everybody's business is nobody's business.

An Interesting Lecture

The lecture delivered by Rev. Canon Jeeves, on Cambridge, in Spencer College Hall last night, was thoroughly enjoyed by the audience, and the views which were thrown on the screen by Mr. W. Gray enabled them to fully appreciate the beauty of the various buildings of the University and its surroundings. Briefly sketching the early history of this ancient seat of learning, Canon Jeeves dealt with the many objects of interest and related many humorous experiences connected with university life. A very pleasing pianoforte solo was rendered during the evening by Miss B. Green, one of the students of Spencer College.

L. C. A. S. Sale

AT METHODIST COLLEGE HALL.

The annual sale of work by the Ladies' College Aid Society, was opened in the Methodist College Hall at 4 p.m. yesterday, by Lady Allard. There was a large attendance both afternoon and evening, and judging by the business done on opening day the sale promises to equal, if not eclipse, all previous records. The spacious hall is filled with stalls, prettily decorated, and of excellent design, and contain a fine assortment of plain and fancy work, home cookery, Christmas specialties, confectionery, ice cream, candy, etc. All the booths were well stocked and the ladies in charge had no difficulty in disposing of their wares to their many patrons. The sale will be continued this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The ladies of the College Aid have a well deserved reputation for excellent work which they serve and this year they have fully lived up to it. The tables were laden down with dainties of all sorts, including the ever popular turkey, and the ladies in charge were most attentive to the wants of the large number of people who partook of the splendid menu. The children were also provided for in a special manner, whilst afternoon teas were also served. The sale will conclude with a concert to-night under the direction of Mr. Gordon Christian, L.R.A.M., in which some of the city's best talent will assist.

Missionary Society Meeting

The final meeting of the St. Thomas's Women's Home Missionary Society for 1924, was held yesterday afternoon at Canon Wood Hall, and was largely attended. Rev. A. B. S. Stirling was present and delivered an address on work in Outport Missions, in the course of which he paid a high tribute to the clergy and lay readers who are doing yeoman service in the outlying settlements and carrying on their good work in the face of adverse conditions. At the close he was accorded a hearty vote of thanks.

Not What it Appeared to Be

A day or two ago a lady, who was anxious to gratify a wish expressed by her husband for lobster salad, proceeded to the grocery store and purchased two tins of the delectable article, together with the et ceteras required in the preparation of this dish. Opening the tins upon her return home, she was astonished and by no means pleased, to find that whereas the outside of the tin decidedly said "Lobster," the inside, even more emphatically, said "Salmon." There was not a close season on hubby's remarks when he returned at the end of a hard day's work and learned of the sad deception that had been practised.

Schooner Cecil and Belle Condemned

The following message referring to the schooner Cecil and Belle which was wrecked at King's Cove on Sunday afternoon has been received from our correspondent there:—

KING'S COVE, Dec. 4. "The wrecked schooner Cecil and Belle was surveyed on Monday and condemned. All her cargo and gear have been saved by her crew assisted by some residents of the place, and taken to Port Union by the motor schooner P.P.U. The hull where it lies at present is a menace to the fishing stages in the vicinity, and should be removed immediately by the owners, or they may have to pay a "considerable bill" for damages should a strong northeaster set in." PEPYS BEHIND THE SCENES

Dec. 4th.—The weather still cold and the streets mighty slippery so needs must I go out with a spiked stick to save myself from falling. By despatches out of Barbados, news of the crew of a wrecked ship that did row some 600 miles to port and is, indeed, a wonderful feat of endurance, yet is the kind of thing that is expected of Newfoundland seamen. My wife this day informs me that I must take her to the Masons' Dance, nor would she heed my protests that my only dress shirt is gone to the laundry, but I tell me to buy me another. But Lord, what trouble it is to obtain a ticket at this late date and did I want my feet out almost before I could get one. So we at night to the dance, and on the way an nigh take-up of my feet by some boys that were sleighing, yet would have felt no grief if they had hit my wife, seeing how the wretch drags me against my will to the dance. But Lord, once I am there, I did find it a very pleasant affair, more so than I did think possible, and many there of my own age and even older. Home late and to bed, mighty tired and sleepy, and yet with great content of mind.

Schooner James Arnold Wrecked

The following message, received from the operator at Renewes, tells of another wreck which occurred last night:—

Special to Evening Telegram—RENEWES, Dec. 4. "Schr. James Arnold, Capt. Wareham, left Hr. Buffett for St. John's with a cargo of fish, oil and herring, was wrecked outside Chance Cove Head; Captain and crew landed safely last night." OPERATOR.
 The Arnold is the vessel which had such a phenomenal fishing season this year, first on the banks and later on the Labrador, a reference to which was made by the Telegram. She was then in charge of Captain Moulton and, we understand, was owned by W. W. Wareham, of Hr. Buffett.

Thrilling Experience of Shipwrecked Crew

MEN RETURNED HOME TO-DAY.

Capt. Wm. Doyle of the schr. Inspiration arrived this morning from Liverpool by S.S. Digby. He brought his crew with the exception of mate Nowgworthy, who is ill in hospital at Liverpool with him. It will be remembered that Capt. Doyle and his crew were rescued on Nov. 4th, by the Royal Mail steamer Cardingshire after their vessel had been dimasted. The Inspiration left Pernambuco on Sept. 21st in ballast for this port and according to Capt. Doyle, made a good passage until October 27th, when at 8 a.m. in lat. 41N, long. 51W, they encountered a terrific lightning storm with rain and a heavy sea. A flash of lightning hit the foremast, split it in two and carried away the mainmast and main rigging. Work of clearing the wreckage was begun, but it had not proceeded far when the turnbuckle in the main rigging gave way, and the mainmast broke off at the deck, and going over the side carried the main mast head with it. It took four hours of hard work to cut away the tangled mass of wire ropes and rigging. There was very little wind when the lightning storm broke over the vessel, but after daylight it increased in force until it blew a hurricane. Two days were spent in putting up rigging and stays to the stump of the mainmast and setting up jury sails. When this was completed the captain decided to put back to Barbados, as it was impossible to make this coast with such a fragment of canvas. In the meantime the vessel was being driven before a W.N.W. gale. On Wednesday and Thursday, 29th and 30th, light winds with heavy sea prevailed, and little progress south was made. On Saturday Capt. Doyle spoke S.S. City of Auckland, and asked to be reported to the owners, Messrs. James Balfour, Ltd. On Sunday a heavy breeze from the N.W. sprang up and continued all Monday, so that the vessel had to heave-to. During the night the rudder braces were carried away. The rudder going through the case smashed it badly, with the result that the ship began to take in water tons at a time so that work at the pumps availed nothing. When daylight broke distress signals were sent up, and at 7 a.m. on the 24th in lat. 38.50 N. Long. 42 W., the S.S. Cardingshire, Capt. Faulkner, hove in sight. Getting as near as possible the steamer launched a lifeboat containing eight Avons. The rescuers had a most difficult time in reaching the sinking vessel, and before they accomplished the task there was over two feet of water in their boat. At 8.30 a.m. the Inspiration was abandoned, and two hours afterwards all were safe on board the Cardingshire bound to Liverpool. They arrived there on Nov. 11th, and were taken to the Sailors' Home, where they remained until joining S. S. Digby. Capt. Doyle speaks highly of the treatment his captain, crew and passengers of the Cardingshire, and the officials at the Sailors' Home, Liverpool. Capt. Doyle lost all his clothing and nautical instruments, and the crew likewise suffered the loss of all their belongings in the wreck. The report in some of the English newspapers that the Inspiration was short of provisions is absolutely false, and according to the captain when the vessel was abandoned there was enough food on board to last for 30 days.

Tom Mix at the Majestic

"IF WINTER COMES," THE PRODUCTION THE WORLD WAITED FOR.

The Majestic has another attractive feature to-day, when Tom Mix will be starred in his best eight reel Western Drama entitled, "Soft Boiled." As will be seen in the advertisement, the soloist, Emmet O'Mara, and his wife Jeanne Palowa, have a series of attractive songs. All added to the extra items will surely complete an exceptionally good bill.

"If Winter Comes." The picture of the world waited for, "If Winter Comes," will be shown on Monday. This twelve-reel special extra-ordinary feature took American movie fans by storm everywhere.

The local color in the William Fox screen version of the A. S. M. Hutchinson story, "If Winter Comes," is scrupulously maintained. Director Harry Millard, who went to England to "shoot" the picture, which will be shown at the Majestic Theatre searched carefully for the correct locations. The office where Mark Sabre thought out so many of his serious problems is the result of careful thought and close attention to the description given by the author. The familiar chair and desk book-lined walls and the personal touch of its occupant that tells what manner of man he is in spite of the attempt to envelop the room with the cold and formal stateliness of the rest of the place, all are there. It is in this room after Sabre's collapse, that Hapgood turns furiously on Mr. Fortune with the command "Go for a doctor! Go like hell!" and Nona falls on her knees beside the stricken man with her cry of "Mark! Mark!"

Twynning's office, which is the scene of Sabre's interview with the father of Harold after the boy had been killed in battle and it is too late for Mark to tell the stricken man what a contemptible cur his son is—that interview ends with his patting Twynning's heaving shoulders and saying, "There, there, Twynning. Fine death. . . . Brave boy," it is in strict conformity to the other apartments, although less elaborate in furnishings.

Skipper and His Son Murdered by Hijackers

WERE SHOT AND BODIES THROWN OVERBOARD.

Five Arrests Made On Pacific Coast—Reward Of $1,000 Each Offered For Two Others.

VICTORIA, B.C., Nov. 27.—Captain W. G. Gillis, and his young son, were killed by the police to have been murdered when a raid was made on their launch, the Beryl G., were held up in the guise of the law by a hijacker in a police uniform, according to a statement made by authorities working on the case here.

The Beryl G. took on 350 cases of liquor, more than half of which was transferred to another vessel before the raid was made on her, off Sidney Island.

When evidence placed together, it is said the actual boarding was accomplished by three men who rowed across San Juan de Fuca Straits in a boat, which put out from a vessel alleged to have been operated by seven men, five of whom are now under arrest.

As the three men, one in a police uniform, boarded the launch, a shot rang out, and Captain Gillis fell, mortally wounded. Soon afterward there was a second shot and the son was killed, according to the police. Then the launch was brought alongside for transhipment of the cargo, after which, it is asserted, the two bodies were handcuffed together and dropped overboard.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 27.—Four men are held in jail here, one is in custody in Victoria, B.C., and two men are wanted by the Canadian authorities in connection with the murder case in which W. G. Gillis and his son, William, were killed when the rum boat Beryl was hi-jacked on September 18.

The alleged confession of P. Stumpkins, of Victoria, which is in the possession of the British Columbia provincial police, was responsible for the arrest of the four men here.

Divers are now at work in an effort to recover the bodies of the murdered men.

Superior Judge Gilliam fixed Dec. 10 as the date for hearing Canada's application of extradition of the four men, held here, who are: Clarence Cheatwood, Charles Morris, Harold Morris and Ray Cranmer.

 A reward of $4,000 each for the arrest or information leading to the arrest of Owen "Cannonball" Baker and Harry F. Sowash, reputed Chicago gunmen, and Puget Sound, hi-jackers, was announced last night by the Canadian Government in connection with its prosecution for the murder of W. G. Gillis, and his son, William.

FAVORS BRITISH POLICY IN EGYPT.

Great Britain's ultimatum to Egypt cannot be rightly judged if it is interpreted as a mere demand for reparation for the murder of a British general, Sir Lee Stack was the Sirdar of the Egyptian army as well as Governor-General of the Sudan, under the British-Egyptian condominium. The Egyptian Government undoubtedly deplores his assassination—a useless and terribly expensive crime in its view—and is ready to pay the money indemnity demanded. Were this personal indemnification the only thing involved the incident could easily be closed. But the Baldwin Government has apparently decided to utilize the occasion to precipitate a settlement of questions with Cairo which were pending before the murder and are only collaterally connected with it.

Egypt has become more aggressively nationalistic from year to year. The grant of independence did not promote co-operation. It stiffened the native demand for complete sovereignty. The two countries are allied in name, but the spirit of an alliance is lacking. Great Britain, with an eye on the future and sensing the past economic possibilities of the Sudan and the vital need of maintaining communications with India, has come to doubt the wisdom of the policy which abolished the protectorate and set up an ostensibly independent nation.

Great Britain has the right to hasten a settlement of the questions left open by the Treaty. She has the power to force a solution in conformity with her own interests. In dealing with Egypt her temper will be strictly nationalistic. Yet those who would have it otherwise should remember that she is in Egypt as a protector of all foreign interests and that whatever case against the present brusque intervention Egypt may have rests upon an act of generosity a couple of years ago which the London Government has since had many reasons to regret.—New York Herald-Tribune (Republican).

So far as my conversation with Zaghul Pasha turned on the question of the Sudan, I must adhere to the statements I made on the subject in the House of Commons. About that neither in Egypt nor in the Sudan should there be any doubt. If there is it will only lead to trouble.

In the meantime, the duty of preserving order in the Sudan rests in fact upon His Majesty's Government, and they will take every step necessary for this purpose.

From whose mouth fell these warning words? Not from that of a Tory Foreign Secretary, but from that of the Prime Minister of a Labor Government, known to be almost a pacifist in international relations. It was on October 7 that Ramsay MacDonald published as a White Paper a dispatch to the British High Commissioner for Egypt setting forth the abortive negotiations with Zaghul Pasha in London and laying down explicitly the British policy respecting Egypt. This covered nearly every important point in the ultimatum just sent by Austen Chamberlain to the Egyptian Government. About the tone and temper of the latter there may be two opinions. It may seem that the British Government seized upon the assassination of the Sirdar as a convenient excuse for pressing claims not connected with that crime. But it cannot be denied that what is now demanded of Egypt is fully in line with the position firmly taken by Ramsay MacDonald.

The prompt resignation of the Zaghul Ministry may mean more than resentment at the British ultimatum. It may signify that Zaghul Pasha is well pleased to be relieved of his difficult job. He has had troubles enough of his own at home. Not long ago he offered his resignation as a Minister confronted with insurmountable party and political obstacles, but was later persuaded to recall it. He is old and not in the best of health, and has been in the unhappy position of being called upon to keep the promises which he made before he took office. It was supposed that the breaking off of his negotiations with Ramsay MacDonald in London would redouble his popularity in Egypt, because he would not yield an inch to the British. Yet on his return to Cairo his reception was not enthusiastic. Apparently there are in Egypt, besides the agitating students and the political extremists, a large body of natives who desire to have the status of Egypt regularized so that life can be safe and business can be done. The new Egyptian Premier is said to be in favor of compromises which will ease the tension with England, and the English Cabinet is reported as convinced that it will not be necessary to resort to forcible measures.—New York Times (Democratic).

Warns World of Non-White Power

FORMER FRENCH GOVERNOR OF INDO-CHINA SEES GREAT WAR AS POSSIBILITY.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—(Associated Press)—Albert Sarraut, former Minister of the Colonies, former Governor-General of Indo-China, and a member of the French delegation at the Washington Arms Conference in 1921, sounded a note of alarm before a distinguished audience in Paris recently, declaring that the real menace to the future lay in the non-white third of the world's population.

"No one can think without misgivings," he said, "of the preparations Japan is making to head an Asiatic bloc against the European bloc."

He hoped that the leading spirits of Japan and the United States would avoid a conflict, "far more terrible in effect on the world than the war of 1914."

The steady increase in the colored peoples had located the centre of the world's importance somewhere in the Pacific ocean, he continued, and a colossal struggle between Japan and the United States was going on for control of that ocean. The colored element in the world's population he placed at 550,000,000 of a total of 1,750,000,000, and described them as having been taught their power by the World War in addition to being worked upon by religious hatreds and Russian Bolshevism.

Britain's slackness in connection with the French alliance was due far more to the Indian situation, he declared than any desire to favor Germany.

FROZEN ALIVE BUT NOT TO DEATH.

Prof. Pictet of Geneva, Switzerland, world-famed expert in refrigeration, recently put two dozen fresh-water fish into a deep tray containing water nearly at the freezing point. This temperature was maintained for 24 hours and the water was slowly frozen into a solid cake of ice encasing the fish. The block was kept in a freezing apparatus for two or three months at 4 deg. F. below zero and then very slowly and carefully allowed to thaw. The fish revived and swam about in the restored water. Repeated experiments have shown that the aforementioned temperature is the lowest at which the life of fresh-water can be sustained, although some other creatures can survive much lower temperatures.

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

LETTING THE PUBLIC HELP DISCIPLINE.

Is a parent ever justified in shaming a child by public reproof? Some weeks ago I included in this column a little story of the mother who shamed her son by warning the scout master of the boy's worst faults in the boy's presence.

I felt at that time that the mother was unwarrantably cruel and that instead of making her boy ashamed of his faults she would make him very resentful toward her, and with good reason.

I also felt that this would be the case in any such attempt to shame a child out of his fault.

A Letter Friend takes issue with me.

And I think her stand is well grounded.

She doesn't attempt to say anything about that particular case or to justify the mother, because she doesn't know the circumstances and the individuals.

What Other People Think.

But she thinks there are times when it is fair to bring public opinion to one's aid in trying to cure a child of faults.

Most children think their parents are prejudiced when they correct them for faults. They think parents are unreasonable and faultfinding and that other people would not feel the same.

When they grow older—these same children—they will doubtless look back and see that the parents knew a little of what they were talking about. They will have come to realize:

That the habit of disorderliness is always a handicap.

That good manners are the entree to the society of the kind of people they have ultimately come to care for.

That cheapness is not smartness. And a hundred other such revolutionary discoveries.

But They Need To Know Sooner.

But sometimes when the children suddenly see these faults through eyes other than the parental, they can catch a glimpse of how beautiful and undesirable they are at a time when such knowledge can be really helpful.

And a parent might be justified in trying to give a child such a glimpse of the way other people feel about it. There are also times, my Letter Friend thinks, when a parent might have a right to shame a child in sheer self defense.

"I have in mind," she writes, "a girl who constantly sneered at her mother, and never ceased until her mother like a turning worm, gave her a general overhauling in front of some of the girl's most cherished companions."

A Gratifying Comeuppance.

I think one feels a sense of satisfaction at that girl's comeuppance.

From my friend's "until" it is evident that the pain and embarrassment were not without their curative effect. Let's hope said effect was lasting.

There is a time when to shame a child by public reproof is cruel and unjustifiable, and there is a time when it is momentarily harsh but justifiable and healthful in the long run.

B. C. Legislature Petitions Ottawa to Reconsider Soldiers' Rights. Victoria, B.C., Nov. 28.—Unanimous approval by the legislature of British Columbia was given yesterday to a resolution fathered by Captain Ian MacKenzie, Vancouver, and seconded by Col. Cyrus Peck, V.C., having for its object the betterment of conditions for returned soldiers, pensioners and their dependents.

The resolution states the conviction of the British Columbia legislative body irrespective of party is that nothing should be left undone to provide returned soldiers and their dependents the most generous and considerate treatment.

It petitions the Government of Canada to take such steps as are necessary at the next session of Parliament, first, to resubmit to the Senate at an early date in the session, the legislation already sanctioned by the House of Commons in respect to ex-service men's affairs; second, to effect the general re-organization of such departments as have lost the confidence of the ex-service men and their dependents, and particularly the Board of Pension Commissioners, as recommended by the Royal Commission and a special Parliamentary committee in 1924.

Just Folks.

FOR THE BEST.

Once I heard you say to him "When you see your mother to-day, 'No!' and checked his passing whim. 'No, you may not longer play! Now it's time to go to rest. Come, your father knows what's best!"

Many times have you denied him, as parents all must do, God has called him to rest, And I know he doubted you, Doubted you as you expressed: "Come, your father knows what's best."

He was, oh, so young! and you, Knowing what he couldn't know, Guarded him the while, through Even though it grieved him so, Then you held him to your breast, Saying: "Father knows what's best."

Now you long to hear his shout, Now you mourn his night and day, Put aside your bitter doubt, God has called him to rest, Hear Him through this cruel test: "Come, thy Father knows what's best."

Halifax men will build a contender for the right to represent Canada at the next International Fishermen's race, so it is said by men interested in the venture. W. J. Roue, the designer of the famous Bluenose is now at work on plans for a new fishing schooner to be built, it is understood, on the order of a number of Halifax schooner race enthusiasts, principally gentlemen interested in marine affairs in a business way. While no company has yet been formed, it is understood one will be organized shortly and incorporated and stock will be placed chiefly in Halifax.

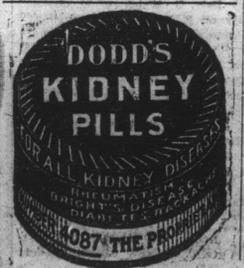

It is understood that no decision has yet been made where to have the schooner built, but Shelburne is favored. If this schooner is built she will probably be a contender for the right to represent Canada when the International Fishermen's schooner races are resumed at Gloucester next year, and if the Bluenose owners are keen to have her again defend the trophy, the people of Nova Scotia can look forward to a very exciting elimination race at Halifax, or wherever it may be held in the Province.

WALT MATCH

"I did not wed sweet Dinah Dutch," said William Jones O'Hild; "it seemed to me she talked too much, and so I let her slide. Oh, she had white and a swanlike ears, her gentle eyes were blue, and for some six or seven years I was her sweetheart true. Her queenly carriage was sublime, her tresses shone like gold; she prattled, prattled all the time, on topics new and old. She warbled gaily like a bird, the sweetest bird in town; I had no chance to say a word until my love ran down. And so it came to me, odds fish, that this would never do; when I was married I might wish to talk a round or two. Or happy in my easy chair I might desire to 'snooze'; I couldn't, if my love were there to gabble all the news. And if she once began to nag, as nervous women will, our wedded bliss would strike a snag, our sacred beans would spill. A busy wife who talked too much all happiness would queer; and so I said to Dinah Dutch, 'The stuff is off, my dear.' I talked to Dinah and she said, 'I turned poor William down; he'd no ideas in his head—the dumbest loon in town. It would be frightful and absurd, I thought, if we were wed and William wouldn't slip a word or sentence from his head.' If gentle and girls would wisely cast their thoughts ahead, I swear, divorce mills wouldn't grind so fast as they are grinding now.

When Suspects Touched Corpse

Trial of suspected murderers by touching the corpse was once common in Scotland, and several cases are on record. Andrew Smeaton was charged in 1636 with the murder of a man found dead in Belnalow Moss. At the inquest of his master, the Laird of Abercraigne, he touched the corpse as the others assembled had done. He even went further and "lifted him up and embraced him in his arms, and willingly offered to remain a space in grave with him." As no blood followed on this contact he was held innocent, as no doubt he was. In 1644, four men were drowned by the upsetting of their boat in a calm. Marlon Peebles, a noted witch, was charged with having changed herself into a porpoise, and under this form to have wrecked the boat. Conclusive proof was obtained when at her touch "one bled at the collar-bone, another in the hand and fingers; gushing out blood thereat to the great admiration of the beholders and revelation of the judgment of the Almighty." Another noted witch, Christina Wilson, quarrelled with her brother. One day in 1661 he was found dead in his own house, naked, and with a "bloodless blow" on his face. Christina was suspected. The battle and ministers hailed her to the dead man's house. As she touched the corpse the blood rushed out, staining her fingers. She was condemned.

Household Notes.

Plum pudding is excellent frozen, and served with fruit sauce. We should avoid excesses of temperatures in the foods we eat. Steamed raisin dumplings are nice served with lemon sauce. Pasteboard or paper-covered games last longer if varnished. Keys of large sardine cans can be turned with a pair of pliers. Dates are excellent stoned, stuffed with halved walnuts, and glazed. Sealing wax can be dissolved in alcohol and applied with a brush. Coffee adds richness of both flavor and color to plum pudding. Try stoning dates, filling them with soft cheese and dipping in grated cocoanut.

Forging Unseen Writing

Wonderful Powers of Man Who Told Character from Handwriting.

That there is evidence in handwriting is a fact familiar to most readers of newspaper reports of criminal cases, for at trial after trial experts on the subject are called in to prove or disprove that so-and-so wrote such-and-such a document.

Never, however, has the study been carried to such lengths as by Raphael Schermann, some of whose remarkable cases are set out by Mr. E. S. Bagger in his book "Psychographology."

Most wonderful of all, perhaps, is that Schermann, though world-known in his special circle, should have remained quite unheard of to the ordinary man in the street.

Schermann's belief was that writing was a literal photograph of the writer, and that a man could change his whole nature of mind and body. He claimed that just as one can slowly develop a photograph and so arrive at an exact idea of the person imaged in it, so a right understanding of the art of handwriting enabled the expert to construct a faithful mental portrait of the writer.

A lame man, he said, would be bound to reflect his infirmity in his penmanship, and a person sick would write slightly differently from the same man well.

In mind it was just the same, and though a swindler might deliberately try to alter his hand, he could no more readily disguise his writing than he could alter his photograph. In fact, Schermann said that he could detect the swindler before his crime, since his mental agitation would almost certainly have its effect upon his writing.

Schermann claimed, too, that a simple study of a person's face afforded a clear indication of his writing. Shown a photograph of Lord Jellicoe, whose signature he had never seen, he studied it with care, sat down, and produced an almost exact imitation of the admiral's signature.

Character, he reasoned, as was shown in such a face, would be bound to express itself in such a hand.

And it was so!

Powers such as these, of course, were not attained without an infinity of study and patience, and for years Schermann as a boy devoted himself to the study and collection of old envelopes!

He didn't want the letters inside, but only the writing on the outside. And from it he would then beg his friends to test the results at which he arrived.

Very wonderful some of them were. Such a touch a writer, he declared, must have a touch of religious mania. There was nothing in the few words written to show it—but the letters had taken on the form of tiny crosses, and examined minutely through a glass, they betrayed their writer's turn of mind. It was true.

In another case, Schermann remarked that the writer, a lady, was obviously afraid that her husband was going to shoot her. Here, however, he was wrong. For as a matter of fact the husband had made an attempt at murder—and missed—three years before, and the mental picture of the tragedy had in some marvellous way communicated itself to the wife's writing.

Happier was the story where Schermann's art actually saved a suicide. "That man is writing," he said, "tells me that he is thinking of shooting himself. His letters shape themselves like tiny pistols." Friends rushed round to the writer—just in time.

English muffins, split, toasted and buttered, are delightful at tea-time. Celery is delicious cut in two-lengths, stewed and seasoned. Crumble stale cakes and serve with a custard and fluffy meringue. Chopped raisins give a delightful fruity flavor to cream caramels.

Forty-Five Years in the Service of the Public—The Evening Telegram.

March of Canadian Corps Into Germany

SIX YEARS AGO TO-DAY FIRST AND SECOND CANADIAN INFANTRY DIVISIONS CROSSED THE BELGIAN FRONTIER AFTER HARD MARCH THROUGH THE ARDENNES.

(Written for The Canadian Press by CAPT. W. W. MURRAY.)

Six years ago at 7.55 a.m., Dec. 4, 1918—a small detachment of Canadian infantry marched silently along the quiet country road leading east from the town of Vialain in Belgium, and while the morning mists were still over the fields, they passed through the insignificant hamlet of Poteau, and into Germany. They were the Scout Section of the 2nd Canadian Infantry Battalion, (Eastern Ontario Regiment) and were commanded by an officer from Simcoe, Ont.—Lieut. George Hunter. The first body of Canadian infantry to cross the frontier, they preceded the vanguard comprised of that battalion by an hour, and they anticipated the official entry into the Rhineland of the Canadian Corps by two hours. Cavalry units had crossed the border the day before, but the date set officially as that on which the Corps should make its 'debut' in the enemy's country was Dec. 4th.

Only the 1st and 2nd Canadian Infantry Divisions had been selected for the honor of putting Canada's finishing touch to her participation in the war by occupying for a time the bridgeheads of Cologne and Bonn. The Armistice had found the former "at rest" in the vicinity of Valenciennes and it was only a matter of a few hours following the close of hostilities when they were ordered to prepare for the long and arduous march to Cologne—a distance of nearly 150 miles. The move forward began almost immediately, and on Nov. 18 the outposts of the 3rd Canadian Division, a few miles east of Mons, were passed and the Canadian Army of Occupation entered upon its final stage of activity. The retiring Germans, in accordance with the terms of the Armistice, were withdrawing seven days ahead of the Canadian advance.

The earlier days of the march were replete with features that revealed in their pathos the tragic effects of war. The roads were thronged with returning refugees. Old men and women, leathern skinned and wrinkled, trudged wearily back to their homes, pushing wheelbarrows or perambulators that held all their household properties. A table, perhaps, a rickety chair or two, a few broken ornaments and a bundle of clothes comprised their belongings. Some wagons drawn by amazingly-matched teams—a donkey hitched with dogs, or a starved-looking horse harnessed in company with a cow—and laden with domestic effects, announced the return of the peasants. The usually numerous family, each member bowed under a load, stumbled along beside the cart.

But the sight that affected the troops a great deal more and at the same time set a keen edge on their anger was that of scores of British soldiers, ex-prisoners of war, limping painfully back, many of them not yet recovered from their wounds, unshaven, unkempt, ragged and famished. The majority had been in the hands of the enemy only a comparatively short time, at the most since the disaster of March, 1918. At the Armistice the Germans had freed those who had been "caged" a short distance in rear of their lines. The men literally had to beat their way and sickness had overtaken many. It was not uncommon to locate ex-prisoners lying ill in civilian homes, tended by the kindly inhabitants. Their stories, recited with much bitterness, told of prisoners forced to work within range of the British artillery, of starvation rations, of utter indifference to the sick and wounded, of bad faith and ill-treatment.

The route of the march traversed the "cockpit of Europe," battlefields that told the story of Marlborough and Wellington, of Napoleon and his marshals, along perhaps that same road where Gruchy's cavalry had ridden in fruitless pursuit of Blucher's defeated Prussians after Ligny on the eve of Waterloo. To the troops it was an interesting sight and there are recorded instances of officers endeavoring to lighten the burden of the march by lecturing the soldiers on these things.

Until the Meuse was reached the Canadians advanced over the high-lying country, but at Sclayn—some few miles down the river from Namur —they descended precipitately into the valley and followed the course of the Meuse to Andenne and Hay. It was at the former place that they received first-hand accounts of the outrages that had taken place in August, 1914, which ended by hundreds of male civilians being machine-gunned by the Germans. Such stories were numerous in that part of the country.

At Huy the Canadians put behind them the picturesque towns of the Meuse and plunged into the Ardennes, for the most part the roads paralleled the streams. On each side rose formidable, tree-fringed cliffs, and perched at intervals on the rim were the ruins of many mediæval castles. Those relics of a past age were strongholds when Charlemagne—whose birthplace is claimed by Liege—was laying the foundations of the Holy Roman Empire; they had been the eyrie of the robber-barons whose favored pursuit was to exact tribute from the prosperous burghers of Liege and Hainaut. Marching became monotonous. The cliff-walls rolled back the rhythmic tramp and the rattle of wheeled-transport in melancholy echoes. The whole atmosphere was depressing, but the troops trudged cheerfully along.

At the commencement of the march, considerable difficulties had been encountered in the way of destroyed railways, demolished bridges and mined roads. These began to affect the troops in another form, for the task of restoring the communications was stupendous, so great indeed that the end of each day's march, the Canadians at times were reduced to foraging for food, requisitioning supplies among the small farmers of the Ardennes on the one or two occasions that the commissariat failed. The experience of commandeering rations (legitimately) was new, but not altogether unwelcome. It ensured, for one thing, a supply of fresh vegetables, and meat, was obtainable only in the form of poultry. The Canadians accepted this hardship with fortitude.

The expedient was rarely resorted to, however, and on the one or twice that it occurred the routine rations for the missing day subsequently turned up in company with those for the current 24 hours. What comment Corps Headquarters might have had to make on the situation is not recorded, but it is certain that the troops were not inconsolable over this re-inforcement.

Apparently the matter of food had also been a problem with the retiring Germans, if one could judge from the debris that littered the road through the Ardennes. Dismantled motor-lorries, some with only the chassis left, the remainder burned—lay along the route, while bloated carcasses of horses were offensive in the ditches. Whether the animals had been killed or had died of exhaustion was not inquired into. It is a fact, however, that there were almost in every case unmistakable signs that portions of flesh had been cut out of them. Gaping incisions in the flanks told part of a story, and the blackened embers of a wood fire close by furnished evidence to complete it.

The little communities of the Ardennes were remote from war. According to their inhabitants, they had not been much disturbed during the four years of occupation. They spoke of the enemy driving away cattle and complained of certain restrictions placed on their movements, but in general the German officials charged with the administration of these districts appear to have striven to soften the rigors of hostile occupation and to have centred their efforts upon winning over the population.

Before the advanced troops had reached Vialain, the Headquarters of the Canadian Corps had already been installed there. Vialain about six miles from the frontier, was attained by the infantry on Dec. 3.

The place of crossing was the small village of Poteau which stood at the junction of four roads. That running north and south marked the border line and extended through the centre of the hamlet. It presented a curious contrast. The few houses to the west were gay with bunting, the Belgian tri-color streaming from every window; those to the east were unadorned. If the inhabitants were to be credited—and there would seem to be no particular reason why they should not—Germany as a commercial nation excelled herself in the last days of occupation, for the Belgians naively unwelcome. It ensured, for one thing, a supply of fresh vegetables, and meat, was obtainable only in the form of poultry. The Canadians accepted this hardship with fortitude.

The crossing of the frontier was officially ordered for 10 a.m. on Dec. 4, when General Sir Arthur Currie, in company with Major-General Sir Archibald C. MacDonnell, would lead the main body of troops over the line, and thus begin the penetration of the Rhineland. Wartime exigencies, however, demanded the continuance of certain protective measures. One was that the principal part of the force be preceded by a van-guard, and this duty for Dec. 4, 1918 fell to the Second Battalion, commanded by Lieut-Colonel Lorrie T. McLaughlin, C.M.G., D.S.O., of Bowmanville, Ont. It was five minutes to eight o'clock in the morning when the scouts of this unit marched through the village into Germany, and they were followed after a brief interval by two companies of the battalion. At 9 o'clock, to the accompaniment of "O Canada" by the regimental band, the main body of the vanguard crossed the frontier.

The "full-dress parade" materialized later when the remaining three battalions of the 1st Brigade, the 3rd Toronto, the 4th Western Ontario and the 1st Central Ontario, in the order named, were led by the Corps Commander, Sir Arthur Currie, the Divisional Commander, Sir A. C. MacDonnell, and the brigadier, Hon. W. A. Griesbach, C.B., of Edmonton, into the enemy's country.

Nine days later the Canadians had reached over at Cologne, to take up garrison in the wooded hills about 12 miles east of the city, while the 2nd Division passed across at the university city of Bonn, about 20 miles up the river.

The Canadian troops occupied the bridgeheads for nearly five weeks.

The Result of Soviet Rule

EVERYBODY WORSE OFF.

"Everybody in Russia to-day is worse off than before the war."

"Such is the verdict on the Revolution given to the Independent Labour Party Summer School by Mr. Michael Farberman, whom we have found to be amongst the most reliable of British writers on Russia under the Soviet Government," says the Glasgow Herald.

"It is a complete condemnation, and it places Russia in a class entirely apart from all the other countries which were seriously affected by the upheavals of the last ten years."

"Even the Central European States here there was an immense destruction of man power and of ma-material, followed by violent political changes, have not the same tale to tell of loss.

"In Russia alone no one has gained; the utmost that can be said is that there are degrees of adversity. And the reason is that only in Russia has the social system been plucked up by the roots. For the first time a serious effort was made by believers in the catastrophic theory of history to bring about a clean break between the traditional, or, as they termed it, the capitalist, system and the social organization of their dreams.

"It failed, as it was bound to fail—for it took no account either of the deeper instincts of human nature or of the elaborate mechanism by which the thousand and one wants of mankind to-day are supplied—and it has led to a wretchedness and confusion unparalleled even in Poland, the greater part of whose surface was devastated by the passing of armies. Apologists for the Bolsheviks for long were able to argue that the Revolution had at least improved the lot of the peasants by transferring to them the big estates. Even of this Mr. Farberman appears doubtful.

"The peasants certainly obtained an increase in their holdings, but uneconomic working, due to scarcity of materials and implements, requisitioning, and recurrent bad seasons, have so impoverished them that they are now probably worse off relatively than the worker in the towns."

VESSEL OVERDUE.—There is general anxiety in marine circles as to the safety of the schr. Esther Hankinson, which left Cadix on October 9th, bound to Little Bay Islands with a cargo of salt. Word of her arrival is now being anxiously awaited.

A Woman's Exploits In Central Africa.

Mrs. Della J. Akeley, explorer and big game huntress, who is making her third visit to the heart of Africa, has already had some wonderful adventures in the Dark Continent.

Asked, before her departure from London, to describe her most exciting experience in hunting big game, she replied:

"The tightest place I ever was in was at Boma, where I sat up all night behind a thorn screen to get a lion. He came up to the bait at midnight, and as he stood looking at me I fired, the bullet grazing his backbone. He fell facing me, and as the moon persisted in staying behind a cloud it was impossible for me to see well enough to make a vital hit.

"So there I was, sitting behind some thorn branches, with my two black boys beside me asleep and snoring. And only twelve paces away (we measured the distance in the morning) the lion roared and whimpered. Every time he roared his breath came to my face, and as the hours passed two of his mates joined in the chorus and kept me on the ragged edge until the sun came to my rescue. I was just about a wreck when it got light enough to shoot the lion—and he was the largest I had ever seen.

"Another time—this was in Uganda—I spent four hours up a tree watching a herd of 200 elephants. They would move about, stand under trees in little groups and prod each other with their tusks, while the mother elephants fondled their children in as loving a way as a human mother might.

"Incidentally, there is a scientific theory that elephants never lie down. I know of four that did in the three years I spent in Africa. Three of these I watched for a time. Two were lying under a tree, one keeping perfectly still while the other piled earth on his side with his trunk, stopping at brief intervals to blow the cloud of dust off. This he did for four hours and still was at it when I left.

Shot Third Elephant.

"The third elephant of this party I shot—he now stands in the Field museum. He must have been lying down for hours when we came up, as there was a perfect imprint of the whole body, trunk, head and legs, in the flattened vegetation.

"After I shot him we performed a post mortem and found a bent and blackened blade four inches long eating its way into the body. In his stomach we found five or six stones of around two pounds weight each.

"I made a table as a trophy of my biggest elephant—a single ear, six feet seven inches from top to bottom. Eight persons can sit around it. This elephant had what one would call big feet, for the sole had a circumference of sixty-seven and one-half inches.

"There is quite a story attached to the killing of this animal. It was in Uganda and we were on our way down to East Africa for a lion hunt when we noticed a spoor. One can't see an elephant's spoor without turning from one's course, and following it. We came up with a herd in two hours, and got within thirty yards of the animals, which were enjoying their midday rest under some big trees.

"I chose a big, hairy elephant with large, widespread tusks, and put two bullets just below one of his eyes. He went down and we waited to see if one of his fellows would help him up, but they made off.

Charged by Wounded Beast.

"Then, to our amazement, the wounded elephant sprang to his feet and ran on. Following, we were making ready for a shot when he got our wind. Then, with wild screams of rage (the most horrible in the world, sounding like forty factory sirens blowing at once) he charged us. Our shots stopped him and we went after him again.

"A clip jammed in my rifle as I was reloading. I fell behind my companion and, to make matters worse, the latter's boy was slow in appearing with the second gun. Just as I gave up for lost my companion fired, downing the elephant for the third and last time. My tent boy was in the beast's path and escaped by a miracle. It was a narrow escape for all.

"I was so exhausted that I sat down where I stood. My legs went back on me and when my companion called to me to come and see the biggest elephant ever I could only cry, 'Bother your big elephant, I want to go home and keep house.'

"But Mrs. Akeley does not feel that way now. She says: 'I would rather meet death in Africa than live in civilization. Life here is so hum-drum. Africa gets one after a time I cannot explain it. You will have to go there to find out for yourself.'

CRISTOLAX.
We have now received a supply of Cristolax, the wonder Malt Extract with Paraffin. This preparation successfully displaces the old-fashioned drastic purgatives and aperients and has none of the bad effects so common to these. It is particularly valuable for infants, children, invalids and the aged. It is in the form of granular crystals and may be taken dry from a spoon or spread on bread and butter, and as it mixes freely with milk or water it is more frequently administered in this manner. A Two Fold Bereavement

DROWNING ACCIDENT AT PRINCETON.

Dear Sir—On Friday, November 20th, a gloom was cast over Princeton and neighbouring communities, as the result of a very sad accident which occurred there.

Two lads were broken in the family circle of Mr. Samuel Fye, Section Foreman of the Government Railway, when his two eldest boys, Edgar, aged 14 years and Cecil, aged 11 years, were drowned by falling through the ice into the chilly waters of a pond which is situated a short distance from the section-house as well as from the school.

The accident happened during the school recess period. The school children gathered around the side of the pond with its thin, tempting ice, all the more tempting because of its thinness—and these two boys, more daring than the rest, ventured out on the gleaming surface. They had gone only a short distance when the ice gave way under them, and the boys were in the water. The on-looking children failed to see the gravity of the situation, with one of the unfortunate boys had gone under and the elder boy had become exhausted, then an outcry was raised; but by the time men had arrived with a boat, the victims had been so long under the water that the vital spark had gone. With sorrow they were taken to their distressed mother, who little thought that how two happy children would return cold in death. Two hours later he father returned after a short absence. Words cannot describe the utter despair of those broken-hearted parents. Their sorrow knew no bounds, and the comforting words of friends were bound to be mingled with tears. On Saturday the bodies were conveyed to Brooklyn, where they will be interred by the side of the two other children of that family, in the Methodist Cemetery. While the train waited at the door of the home, a short simple service was conducted by the attendant clergyman, Rev. F. Pitt, and the mother and father of the children looked at the silent features for the last time on this side of the Veil.

Mr. and Mrs. Fye received the most sincere sympathy of the entire neighbourhood, in this their two-fold bereavement.

Confession of a Laughter-Maker

Homely Stories by Mark Twain, one of the World's Greatest Humorists.

When Mark Twain, or Samuel Clemens, to give him his real name, was a boy, he was a big handful as ever tried a mother's patience. On occasions when he had been more than usually naughty his mother saved the matter up and made him go to church on Sunday night.

This, he says in his Autobiography (which he stipulated should not be published until after his death, and is now issued—14 years after—by Harpers) was a penalty sometimes bearable, but as a rule it was not, and I avoided it for the sake of my constitution.

My mother would never believe that I had been to church until she had applied her test. She made me tell her what the text was. That was a simple matter—caused me no trouble. I didn't have to go to church to get a text. I selected one for myself. This worked very well until one time when my text and the one furnished by a neighbour, who had been to church didn't tally. After that my mother took other methods.

The author describes his mother as the natural ally and friend of the freethinker. Whenever anybody or any creature was being oppressed, the fears that belonged to her sex and her small stature retired to the rear and her soldierly qualities came promptly to the front.

One day in our village I saw a vicious devil of a Corsican, a common terror in the town, chasing his grown daughter past cautious male citizens.

with a heavy rope in his hand, and declaring he would wear it out on her. My mother opened her door wide to the refugee, and then, instead of closing it and locking it after her, stood in it and stretched her arms across it, barring the way.

The man threatened her with his rope, but she did not flinch or show any sign of fear. She only stood straight and fine, and lashed him, shamed him, derided him, defied him in tones not audible to the middle of the street, but audible to the man's conscience and dormant manhood.

And he asked her pardon and gave her his rope, and said that she was the bravest woman he ever saw; and he went his way without another word, and troubled her no more.

He and she were always good friends after that, for in her he had found a long-felt want—somebody who was not afraid of him.

When I was younger, Mark Twain writes, I could remember anything, whether it had happened or not; but my faculties are decaying now, and soon I shall be so that I cannot remember any but the things that never happened. It is sad, to go to pieces like this, but we all have to do it.

And so he goes on through pages and pages of delicious humour, turning from the past to the present and back again, talking of whatever interests him and dropping it as soon as he thinks of something else.

He was very popular as a lecturer and when he arrived with a companion to give a lecture at one town there was no one to meet them.

We struck up a street, he writes, in the gay moonlight, found a tide of people flowing along, judged it was on its way to the lecture hall—a correct guess—and joined it.

At the hall I tried to press in, but was stopped by the ticket-collector. "Ticket, please." I bent over and whispered: "It's all right, I am the lecturer."

He closed one eye impressively and said, loud enough for all the crowd to hear: "No, you don't. Three of you have got in up to now, but the next lecturer that goes in here to-night gets."

Of course we paid; it was the least embarrassing way out of the trouble.

One of Mark Twain's children was a charming little girl named Susy, and he has many good tales to tell of her.

Once when Susy was seven, she sat breathlessly absorbed in watching a guest of ours (he writes) adorn herself for a ball. The lady was charmed by this homage, this mute and gentle admiration, and was happy in it.

And when her pretty labours were finished, and she stood at last perfect, unimprovable, so confident and expectant, to receive from Susy's tongue the tribute that was burning in her eyes.

Susy drew an envious little sigh and said: "If I could have crooked teeth and spectacles!"

A few years later her mother was showing Susy some Christmas presents she had bought for the children of one of the servants. Among these was a handsome sled on which a stag was painted, also in gilt capitals the word "deer."

Susy was excited and joyous over everything until she came to this sled. Then she became sober and silent, yet the sled was the choicest of all the gifts. Her mother was surprised and also disappointed, and said:

"Why, Susy, doesn't it please you? Isn't it fine?"

Susy hesitated, and it was plain that she did not want to say the thing that was in her heart. However, being urged, she brought it haltingly out:

"Well, mamma, it is fine, and of course it did cost a good deal—but—why should that be mentioned?"

Seeing that she was not understood she reluctantly pointed to that word "deer." It was her spelling that was at fault, not her heart.

The author's wife used to keep as curiosities some of the odd and strange addresses on letters that came to Mark Twain from all over the earth.

One was simply a rough pen-and-ink sketch of the author's head with New York written at the side. It arrived safely!

Another came from Australia, worked thus: "Mark Twain, God Knows Where." And this was followed later by one from some stranger in a faro land worded thus: "Mark Twain, Somewhere (Try Satan). That stranger's trust was not misplaced. Satan courteously sent it along.

CUTICURA HEALS ITCHY PIMPLES

On Face, Neck and Chest. Were Hard, Large and Red. Lasted Six Months.

"My trouble began with pimples on my face, neck and chest. The pimples were hard, large and red and festered and itched very badly, especially at night. The irritation caused me to scratch and the scratching caused eruptions. The trouble lasted about six months. I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they afforded relief, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment I was healed." (Signed) Miss Harriet Gusdorf, 617 S. Cuticura Soap daily, with Cuticura Ointment occasionally, prevents pimples or other eruptions. They are pleasing to use, as is also Cuticura Talcum, an excellent deodorant.

Marriage With Relations

Why Your Wife May Be Your Aunt.

We cannot very well help marrying our relations, because we do not know who they are.

In a few generations they are numbered by thousands, and very soon we lose sight of most of them. Hence there is a large amount of inbreeding everywhere, and the number of actual ancestors that any one of us has is far less than the theoretical number—so many of them are "duplicates."

Inbreeding used to be considered injurious, but scientific opinion has changed considerably. Inbreeding is beneficial rather than otherwise in the long run, for it brings out the peculiarities of the inbred lines, whether good or bad, so that natural selection has a better chance to remove the latter.

What Inbreeding Means.

Inbreeding may be defined as a process of mating whereby an individual has fewer than the maximum number of ancestors in any generation. "It means," says Raymond Pearl, "that the number of potentially different 'blood-lines' concentrated in a given individual is fewer if the individual is inbred than if he is not."

Professor W. K. Brooks studied the ancestry of the people of a small island off America. Taking three individuals who were not near relatives at all, he found that of the maximum number of 1,146 ancestors they might theoretically have had in seven and one-half generations, the names of 452 of them, or nearly half, were recorded. But these 452 named ancestors were not 452 distinct persons, but only 149.

He says: "Few of us know even the names of all the living descendants of each of our sixty-four ancestors of the sixth generation; and, so far as our own choice is concerned, marriage with one of them may be an accident."

The New View.

If we grant that there is considerable inbreeding in any old, well-established community, and that, not knowing even the names of the descendants of each of our sixty-four ancestors of the sixth generation back, we may well marry a relative without suspecting the relationship, our next question is as to the results of such chance matings with unknown relatives.

Recently a number of experiments have been reported by various investigators on the effects of inbreeding. The older view that inbreeding is injurious is being rapidly replaced by another. In the light of the newer experimental work it seems to be clearly established that inbreeding is not injurious merely by reason of the blood relationship involved.

Kept in the Background.

The only injury proceeding from inbreeding comes from the inheritance received (write East and Jones, in "Inbreeding and Outbreeding," quoted by Mr. F. B. Hanson, writing on the subject in "The Journal of Heredity"). If undesirable characters are shown after inbreeding, it is only because they already existed in the stock and were able to persist for generations under the protection of more favourable characters which dominated them and kept them from sight. The powerful hand of natural selection was thus stayed until inbreeding tore aside the mask and the unfavourable characters were shown in all their weakness, to stand or fall on their own merits.

If the evil is brought to light, inbreeding is no more to be blamed than the detective who unearths a crime. Instead of being condemned it should be commended.

After continued inbreeding a cross-bred stock has been purified and rid of abnormalities, monstrosities, and serious weaknesses of all kinds. Only those characters can remain which either are favourable or at least are not definitely harmful to the organism.

Miss Fay the soubrette, is a real "jazz baby" and the other members of the company are of the highest class. The entire Company is under the personal direction of Mr. Charles Marshall, who enjoys the reputation of the drawing card of class and ability in the State of Massachusetts.
