Mr. BRODER. Well, the hon. member for Red Deer has taken to the woods. I want to ask the hon. member for Nanaimo why he is so anxious to get into the most highly protected country to get his blessing? Why does he not go to some free trade country for his blessing? Why argue that a 25 per cent tariff is a curse to Canada, and then go for his blessing to the United States where they have a 40 per cent tariff? He is so anxious to fall into the arms of the United States to get his blessing that he will leave a country with a 25 per cent tariff for the sake of a country with a 40 per cent tariff. Is there any consistency in wanting to get into the United States? Oh, well, one man said to me the other day, don't you want that 90,000,000 market? I said: Let us look at that for a moment; how would you care to have 90,000,000 people in your woods carrying your timber off to the United States and making wood pulp worth $6 a ton into a product worth $35 or $40 a ton by American labour instead of Canadian labour? Why should we send our rough lumber to the United States, let them manufacture it into furniture and then send it back into Canada in its finished condition? What about my hon. friend's consumer? It is all very well to talk about these free trade principles. I think the government, notwithstanding all their free trade advocacy for years, deserve credit, because when they came into power and took the responsibilities of government, they did not think it wise to put into practice their pre-election pledges.

An hon. MEMBER. They were afraid to do it.

Mr. BRODER. We will give them credit for watching the interests of the country in that sense. My hon. friend from Nanaimo, although he did not agree with them, supported them right along. I venture to say that if the men on this side of the House had been in power, and had done exactly what his friends have done he would have been kicking high dudgeon. He talks about a mandate. He came into this House as an independent member. Where is his mandate? He was elected two or three times as an independent member; he ran on all fours with the government last time—I will give him credit for that—but up to that period he had no mandate to support this government, and yet he supported them. He came as an independent man, but he did not act as an independent man. He supported this government. Where was his mandate? He went on to show that there would be no difficulty about apples in the United States, as the apple product of that country had fallen away two-thirds. Now, here is the American Year-book of 1909, which ought to be an authority on the subject, and it states that the export of apples in barrels in 1905 was 1,409.942 barrels, in 1906 1,208.980 barrels, in 1907 1,539,267 barrels, in 1908 1,049,545 barrels, in 1909 896,729 barrels, a falling off only about 400,000 barrels.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). My correspondent was referring to the total production, not the exports.

Mr. BRODER. The hon. gentleman does not propose to say that 90,000,000 people eat less that 70,000,000. If so, that country is not giving the people more to eat but giving them less. As their exports have kept up nearly, they must produce more, because with their increased population they naturally consume more. So the letter is not founded on fact.

Now, I want to refer to this treaty on its merits. I am not going to discuss the hon. ministers who went to Washington. If we were going to pick out from that government two gentlemen to send away from home, perhaps these are the two that we would wish to send. I am not saying that the Hon. Mr. Fielding and the Hon. Mr. Paterson did not make the best bargain they could in the interests of this country from their standpoint. When we send men to a foreign country to make a bargain, we ought to stand by them until they make the bargain, and then whip them if they do not make a good one. We ought to show any foreign country that the people are behind the men who in the meantime are representing the interests of Canada. I am sorry the Prime Minister is not present, because I want to say something that I would like him to hear.

What brought about the reciprocity treaty of 1854? The agitation of the western farmers, who wanted to get access to the navigation of the St. Lawrence river, and one of the articles of that treaty gave them that right. They wanted an outlet for their products. When the war came on the Mississippi river was blockaded, and they could not get their produce out that way, so they looked to the St. Lawrence river as an outlet. The same influence that led to the abrogation of that treaty may cause trouble with this treaty. When the Canadian government in 1857 proposed to increase the duties on articles not included in the treaty, the manufacturers of the United States protested. They said the Canadian people had no right to do that, as it was understood when the treaty was made that they would not interfere with their tariff while it existed; hence the agitation for its abrogation. Something of the same kind may occur again with respect to this treaty and disturb the financial conditions of the country.

Now, who brought about this treaty? My hon. friend said it was Taft. It was not Taft; it was the western farmers. They came down here, 500 of them, and demanded certain things. The government said they had a mandate, because these 500 gentlemen came from the west. If their demand was a mandate, they had also a mandate to take the duty off agricultural implements. Why did they not carry out that? The right hon. leader of the government and his friends said to the manufacturers: This is an assurance to you that we will not interfere with you; we have settled the western agitation by this proposed treaty; therefore, you need not be alarmed about your interest; you will be taken care of. The manufacturer is a more logical man than that, and he says: You cannot stop where you are; if you take the protection off farm products, you have to take it off what the farmer uses. When these men from the west came down here, they said to my right hon. friend: Give us a slice of that free trade loaf which you have had in the oven these 20 years. But he said: No, that is shewbread; that is in the holy of holies; you can not have that; that is for the wild westerner; that is for the high priests of my party. But the agitation was too strenuous, and in order to pacify it, he proposed to get this treaty. So the two ministers went to Washington, and they expected to have to use political dentistry and pull teeth to get anything. Instead of that, they got their laps full. It was not a question of getting, but a question of carrying home. They could have got more than they brought home. They got too much—they durst not bring it home. But my hon. friend is satisfied with what they got. If they had not got anything, he would have been satisfied.

What effect is this treaty to have on the interests of the farmers? After all, it is the cold question of business. There are localities in the country which it will no doubt help. It will help the country in spots. How is the farmer in Ontario to be affected? It will affect four large industries adversely—the hog market, the horse market, the egg market, and the apple market. These are four principal products of Ontario and Quebec. There are others, but these I will deal with. Why do I say that it will affect the hog market? There are in the United States 49,000,000 hogs, and there are something less than 3,000,000 in Canada. That is 16 to 1, and it is worse than Bryan's. I intend to make a comparison of the average price for five years in Montreal and Chicago. Some people take Buffalo, but it is not a centre compared with Chicago, which is the principal centre for hogs. Here are the yearly average prices of the hogs for five years in Montreal and Chicago:

Year.	Chicago.	Montreal.
1907	6.10	7.43
1908	5.70	7.10
1909	7.35	8.64
1910	8.90	9.60
Average for the five years	$6.85	$8.10

I shall take the average in another way. They have 16 hogs to our one. Hogs in the slaughter houses in the United States and Canada average a little more than 200 pounds each, we will say 200 pounds, and they are 16 hogs ahead. Their 16 hogs at $6.85 a hundredweight will each be worth $13.70, while our one at $8.10 will be worth $16.20. Striking an average for the 17 hogs you have a loss to the Canadian farmer of $1.18 per hundredweight. In other words a loss of $2.36 per hog taking a five years' average for these two places. No man will pretend to say that the Canadian one hog will control the market, that would not be reasonable. The 16 hogs will decide what the market price shall be.

What about horses? There are 21,000,000 horses in the United States. There are 12 states lying along either side of the Mississippi river which are adjacent to our western country, and in those 12 states, one-quarter of the whole United States in number, you find 11,600,000 horses. Does any one pretend to say that our western market, which is our best market for heavy horses, will not be supplied from those states? In the first place the horses are more easily got into that market, and with less risk to the buyer. What is the average price given by the American authority? $108.19 on the farm, old and young and all. Again the American authority gives the average of the Canadian horses on the farm at $133, almost $25 difference in favour of the Canadian price. Does any man pretend to say to me that these figures will not affect the interests of the Canadian farmer? What will be the effect of that competition? They will drive the heavy horses out of our market because the demand in the west will be supplied from these western states, and we will have to breed a lighter horse here to compete with the horses raised in Maine, New Hampshire, and other eastern states. Any horse-breeder knows that when you undertake to raise saddle or coach horses, you may raise 1,000 colts and not have one fit for the market; the heavy horse is raised with greater safety by the farmer; if he is blemished, he will still do for a work horse, and will pay for his raising, but that is not so of the coach or saddle horse, if he is not a success he is a loss. No logic or argument or high-faluting business will remove that fact.

Mr. PATERSON. Are the figures the hon. gentleman has given taken from the census?

Mr. BRODER. The price of American horses is taken from the American yearbook; the Canadian price is given in the message of the President of the United States to Congress.

Mr. PATERSON. I suppose the only definite information we can get on these matters is to be obtained from the decennial census.

Mr. BRODER. I do not know how they arrive at the conclusion, they simply give the facts. I think they must have means of gathering statistics outside the census, because they give them every year.

Mr. TAYLOR. You had no facts or figures over there, but they had them all.

Mr. PATERSON. We had all that they had.

Mr. McCOLL (Northumberland). In averaging the price of horses, are you taking inthe western rangy scrubby mustangs with the well-bred horses?

Mr. BRODER. I do not know that, I am simply giving the American authorities.

Mr. McCOLL (Northumberland). Does it include that class of horses?

Mr. BRODER. Of course if the Americans take in our scrubby mustangs our price would not be $133 the price would be still higher if you threw them out. I hope he has taken them in, because the argument is still stronger.

Reverting to the hog industry previous to 1891, we had only four packers in this country, excepting some small ones who bought hogs in the fall from the farmers, and for a short time packed pork. We had Davies' at Toronto, Fearman's at Hamilton, and the Ingersoll packing house. Now, we have packing factories established from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Up to 1892 many hogs were brought in in bond and killed in the packing houses because they could not get a continuous supply in Canada. When the United States put a duty of 20 cents a bushel on barley the effect was virtually to shut our barley out of the United States. What occurred? Coincident with this fact grew up a larger supply of hogs in Canada and our packing houses had a continuous supply. The feeding of the barley to the pork instead of shipping it gave better results, and has increased the hog product of this country. I have here a statement showing the average delivery of hogs at inspected packing houses during last year, 1910, which shows how continuous the supply was :

January	112,814
February	75,088
March	116,574
April	106,995
May	107,263
June	103,082
July	93,017
August	79,203
September	108,926
October	142,847
November	147,504
December	138,898
Total	1,332,211

That is a very important matter in the interests of the industry, a continuous supply of hogs. That has grown out of the fact that we have raised a great deal of barley but instead of exporting it we have fed it to hogs and given the finished product, so far as the farmer is concerned, to the factories of the country and we made more money. I need not refer to the exports of meat which have been falling off to some extent owing to the larger consumption of hog products in the western country. I do not look upon that question of barley as of much interest to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. We will never become the producers of that malt barley which they sought after a few years ago. That is a strong statement to make but I wish to show why I make it. I live in a section of country which 25 or 30 years ago produced one of the finest malt barleys in the Dominion—mellow, rich and high grade. The American malster and the Montreal malster always looked after that grain for malting purposes. But a strange thing occurred. I had some experience in the barley market some 25 or 30 years ago, and in 1891 this happened. I had bought ten to fifteen thousand bushels and undertook to place them with Canadian malsters. But what did I find? I went to the malster of Dows brewery, an old gentleman of long experience and told him the locality from which the barley came. He said that they used to seek after it but did not want it any longer because it did not malt properly. I then took it to a broker who had a German instrument for testing barley for malting purposes and he found that 30 per cent of it would not sprout in time to malt with that which first sprouted, and it was simply feed barley. That is the position in which we will be so far as the American market is concerned. We will be simply shipping feed instead of malt barley.

There is another reason. New York State used to be the great malting centre of the United States but that centre has moved to Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis. That western country has come to be the finest barley producing country in the world and grows the largest barley crop in the United States. Thus we have lost our position in that respect and cannot regain it. The value of barley in the State of New York has fallen from $9,000,000 to $7,000,000, and the whole business has been transferred to the western states which formerly was done in New York. So that whatever effect this agreement might have on the western provinces, it will not have the effect in Canada which some people think it will.

Besides if a policy which encourages people to ship out their raw product is not the proper policy, why revert to it? Why should the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), reverse his teaching of the last 15 or 20 years. We have been telling the farmers to feed their hay to their stock and make their farms profitable. We have been telling them to feed their coarse grains to their cattle. A bushel of oats sells at from 25 to 30 cents but it is worth 45 cents made into butter. We are therefore now simply reversing our teaching of the last 25 years, which is a great mistake. It is no kindness to the province of Quebec to encourage its farmers to ship their hay. But it would be a kindness to induce them to feed that hay to their stock at home. An hon. member spoke of hay growing on the shores of Lake St. Peter for hundreds of years, but that is coarse fibrous hay which is not fit for export and which will grow for thousands of years. It is not timothy. It is a mistake to ship our hay out of the country. It may be well enough in the case of those marshes in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia which are always replenished by the sea water, but it is not a good policy in the case of other agricultural lands. If a farmer can use his hay at home, it is much better for him to do so and convert it into a finished product.

While on this subject I want to say that the United States have two great factors in their agricultural wealth which we can never hope to have to the same extent. They have their corn and cotton. We grow corn of course in a limited area in Ontario and Quebec and some in Nova Scotia but not to any considerable extent. It is impossible for our farmers to raise pork on peas, oats and barley, which is a superior article, and compete with the cheaper corn fed product in the United States. Last year the United States produced 3,125,000,000 bushels of corn, the largest crop in their history. What does that mean? That means that the country during 120 days of sunshine and moisture produced $15,000,000 a day. Is that all they can do? My hon. friend from South Grey (Mr. Miller), says the United States have about reached their agricultural limit. Why, the man who says that has not studied conditions there.

Mr. MILLER. I did not make that statement from my own personal knowledge but on the highest authority in the United States.

Mr. BRODER. Well, the authority my hon. friend quoted did not know what he was talking about. What is the fact? It is simply this, that the United States, with their enormous acreage, have only improved 50 per cent of their farm acreage. But is that the limit of their farm acreage? Why, we have no idea of that limit. This country is producing wheat 13 bushels to the acre. The crop in England is 33 bushels to the acre. Now the United States have increased their product per acre about a bushel in the last eight years. If they would adopt scientific farming and a proper agricultural system, then they could double their product, which would give 26 bushels per acre, and still be seven bushels per acre less than England, and they would then export 700,000,000 bushels of wheat. That is the position in which we are when dealing with these people in an agricultural sense.

What about their corn? They have started in the south what they call corn clubs. We hear a good deal about our boy scouts, but I am not sure that it would not be better to put these boys into corn clubs, and get them to work the corn fields. They have 1,043 boys, from 10 to 18 years of age, under the instruction of scientific teachers. Each boy has an acre of corn to take care of. His father ploughs the ground and seeds it. What happens?

On page 158 of their year book of 1909 I find some figures in this matter. That year book gives the results of a corn contest by the boys in one of the counties on the Mississippi. The average production was 74 bushels per acre on the land cared for by these boys while the average production on the other farm lands was less than 20 bushels per acre in the whole state.

And here is one boy who had a measured acre and produced 152½ bushels, while the average in the state was less than 16 bushels. These figures show the possibilities of that great country in these matters in which some of us say they have reached their limit. There is not a State in the Union that does not raise corn in quantities except Nevada. If they adopted advanced methods, what would it mean? It would mean cheaper beef and cheaper pork. Ah, but you say, beef went up in the United States within the last three or four years. Yes, but why? In 1906 or 1907, I have forgotten which, the federal government passed what is called the 'no fence' law. This interfered with the rancher. the ranchers were being broken up and divided among settlers. This threw the cattle off the ranches, and many of them went into the slaughter-house. Consequently beef went down in the United States—They had reached their climax in beef production on the ranches. Those animals that were not sent to the slaughter-houses were taken to the barns to be fed on corn. That lessened the pork product, and pork went up. What has happened and is happening now? In January, 1911, they had 1,400,000 more hogs on United States farms than they had in the January before. And pork in Chicago, the day before yesterday—there was no quotation yesterday, being a holiday—was $15.70 for May pork a barrel, while mess pork in Montreal was $23 a barrel. And, while we are on this subject, let me quote some figures in reference to pork in the United States. These figures are taken from a book issued by Bartlett, Fraser & Co., grain and provisions, Chicago, and it is sent to me by J. S. Bache & Co., a large brokerage house of good standing. These figures generally are made up from the official documents of the United States. One table gives the price of mess pork for fourteen years past. In January, 1910, it was $22.50 a barrel, while in 1897 it was $7.55 a barrel; that is, $7.55 for 200 lbs. of pork. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Smith, Nanaimo) what about the consumer in 1897, when he got pork for 3½ cents a pound, was he as well off as he is to-day when he has to pay $20 a barrel? These figures show that the price was highest in 1910. There is a good deal of speculative market in the United States. This does not help our farmers, because before they can get into the market the prices change. He cannot contract on these figures, but has to go into the market, and take the price he finds when he gets there. Now the average price for seven years, as given in this book is $6.22 per hundred weight, live weight, and the average price for five years, as I quoted, is $6.85 per hundredweight.

Now, a good deal has been said about eggs. Eggs are being shipped freely into this country by the United States to-day. Why do they come in here? Because the United States market is better than ours? No man would say that. The fact is the owners find a better market here. Now, as to the consumer, the consumer will get from the American jobber a good deal of inferior produce as compared with that which he has at home. Are these eggs that are being shipped in from Chicago the kind of food that our consumer wants? And what about the apples they will ship into our western country? There are what may be called tramp cars of apples—three sent to Ogdensburg, four sent to Malone, twenty sent to Buffalo, and so on to be sold at any price that can be got, and sent by a dealer, who is willing to leave the grade of production in order to make his own profit. Do our people want the market flooded with this poor stuff, while the American eats the best? And what does this admission of our wheat into the northern states mean? It means that the American will eat the better grades of wheat and will have a better opportunity to ship the worse grades to Europe, and so we shall lose our distinctive character as a wheat producing country. Now, these are the problems that we ought to look in the face. We in Canada to-day have a milling capacity for 13,000,000 people. When our western farmer looks over to some point in North Dakota or Minnesota, he may find wheat 8 cents a bushel higher than on our side. Well, how is that? The area of hard wheat in the United States is confined to a very small limit, and the competition by the American millers to get hard wheat to mix with the softer wheat has put the price up. But when our wheat goes in, that distinction will be gone. But some may say: We have had for ten years the right to ship wheat in bond and grind it in bond. Yes, but they could not sell the by-product to their own people; the bran and shorts had to go out of the country as well as the flour, and it could not be shipped successfully because of its bulk and the high freights in consequence. That is the reason they did not avail themselves more of the grinding of wheat in bond. What will be the effect of transferring our milling interests to Minneapolis and other points in the American northwest? It means that the shorts and bran will be sent to the western states, instead of being sent east as at present. You can ship the bran on the wheat, but you cannot ship it in bulk after it has gone to the grindstone. These things affect our people, and we ought to deal with them in a common sense way. But some people say our western people have a perfect right to get a better market. True, but any one who knows the west must know that the west must go into mixed farming in order to really succeed. I wish to call the attention of the House to this point. Our western country is not likely to repeat the history, in an agricultural sense, of the western states. The reason is that these western states grow great quantities of corn, and corn is a cleaning crop for their land. They plant corn and cultivate it, and clean their land. Then they can sow wheat and raise a clean crop of wheat. Is that the case in our country? The serious problem of our western country is to keep the land clean, and that is a problem the government ought to take in hand. For even the eastern country is being injured by noxious weeds coming in from the west in carloads of wheat and being scattered along the railway. A very serious matter for Ontario and Quebec. We have not got the cleaning crop that renovates the land, and it produces a better crop of wheat after the corn crop has cleaned the land. That is something our people ought to think about.

Then there is another feature. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars opening up our western country, and we have spent a good many anxious hours. I venture to say that hon. gentlemen sitting on the treasury benches have spent a good many anxious hours dealing with the problems of the western country. Well, are those who have not spent a dollar, who have not spent an anxious hour, to go in there and participate in the markets of the west, or are the people who have spent their money, and their anxious hours in opening up that country to have the right to go in there and feed those people with the articles they cannot produce? If you go down to Nova Scotia we find immense coal fields. We have spent millions of dollars on the development of that great province and no honest Canadian will grumble at it. Is the American who has not spent a dollar to come in and participate in that market? When it is Canada that has made the sacrifice, ought she not to have some benefit in going into the markets of Nova Scotia? These are questions we are supposed to look squarely in the face. My hon. friend yonder was talking about potatoes in New Brunswick. Well, so far as I am concerned—to use plain English—I dont want to see New Brunswick made the potato patch of the United States, nor that the future occupation of those noble people in New Brunswick should be the extermination of potato bugs in order that the citizens of Boston and New York may have potatoes for dinner. I say they are worth something better than that. Then the noble little island of Prince Edward. I would rather build a tunnel across Northumberland straits than to see the future destiny of that little island tied up to the Boston wharfs. These are problems that should appeal to the Canadian people, and we must deal with them. Oh, well, we are old, our geographical position is difficult. That is very true. But nature's God intended the Canadian people should be strong, and able to overcome difficulties. Is there a Canadian who is not proud of British Columbia? That province with her great range of mountains, holds in her rugged embrace the record of the ages, and she may hold also the future destiny of the Canadian people. I am not disposed to say that the Canadian people cannot work out their great problems on this northern half of the continent, and I am not disposed to say that the Canadian people should be carried away into political annexation with the United States because they happen to deal with these people. But I say this, and I say it after a good deal of consideration, when you look into the conditions of commercial life in this country and in the United States, what do you find? The man who says that a few capitalists in Toronto shall not dictate to the western farmers, is he willing to jump into the arms of the great American trusts, that may one day embrace the Canadian business and the Canadian people? I say that the day of the village and the small town, as a business and social centre, has largely gone in this country. Where are the people to look for their ideals? Where are they to look for their business methods? Into the great centres? And what shall become of our great western country looking into the great centres of the United States? What do we find? Starting from the Atlantic coast you will find these great centres between the Atlantic and the Pacific, and what are they? Why it is enough to make a man with the welfare of his country at heart feel very serious when he looks at the condition that confronts us to the south. You have Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Kansas city, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Portland, Oregon, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle—the energies of that whole people centring in these great centres of population, their network of business, their great capital, their business methods. Does any man want to see our people getting their ideals from these great centres, and come under the influence of those great trusts which, with their body in the United States, will reach out their arms to control our Canadian interests? What do you find further? Ex-president Roosevelt, under an Act of Congress, undertook to prosecute the Standard Oil Company. They spent two millions and a half, and they never collected one dollar of a fine, they never curtailed one solitary interest. And if the Standard Oil Company is stronger than the United States Congress and its president, will it not be stronger than the eight millions of Canadians who will come under its power? That is a question before the Canadian people to consider. The Steel Trust controls seventy per cent of all the iron in the United States, a handful of lumbermen control eighty per cent of the lumber, the Standard Oil Company controls all the oil in that country, and then there are trusts that control coal and meat. These are things that Canada must consider in viewing this proposed agreement. The United States are after our raw material, I do not blame them for that. The hon. gentlemen who went to Washington must realize that the conditions of this country have changed. Our position is very different from what it was 25 or 30 years ago. And there is this to be said, that we have this vantage ground over the United States and many other countries in that our great resources are still largely undeveloped. That is something that every Canadian should be proud of. Why? Because a wilful waste of the country's resources now will astound the economist of the future. I tell you that what the American wants to-day is the raw material of this country, and the question is whether, with our business equipment, and with our business men, as keen as any in the world, shall be allowed to develop these resources instead of allowing Americans to come in and take away our raw material into their own country, and make it worth twice its original value by the labour they put into it.

Now people have said a good deal about loyalty. Well, I am always willing to fight for my country when she needs me. I am glad she has not needed me very often. If it is necessary, I believe the Canadian people will stand to their guns irrespective of party. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) the other day referred to Sir John A. Macdonald as the Premier who waved the flag. Well, there were days when it was necessary to wave the flag, and I think everybody admits that it is a wise thing to do when it is necessary. Our friends opposite make a lot of noise about the British preference. Well, let us look at this thing. I have figured out, or a better man has figured out, the proposition. The free list from the United States in 1910 amounted to $106,000,000. What about the free list from England?—$23,000,000. The average rate of duty on goods imported from the United States, free and dutiable, was 13·71 per cent. Some of you say that there is a lot of raw material. That is not a consistent argument for a free trader to use because he is not supposed to hurt one country to help another. In 1910 the average rate of duty on goods from Great Britain was 19·9 per cent, over 5 per cent higher than the average rate of duty on goods coming from the United States. It is a strange thing that the overseas trade shows a much higher duty than that coming from the United States. The average rate of duty on goods coming from the whole British Empire was 18·06 per cent, and from all foreign countries 15·31 per cent, or less than from Great Britain. The average rate of duty on goods coming from foreign countries, exclusive of the United States, was 26·9 per cent.

They have done a great deal more shouting about their little loyalty than the Conservatives do about the big bulk they have on hand. They say: The free list is large. But why should the free list be so large, particularly for free traders? I do not think there should be so much said about this loyalty question when you come to look at the matter squarely in the face. I could enumerate a lot of articles that come from these favoured nation countries, and remember that under the treaty of 1854 there was no favoured nation clause. It simply applied to the United States and no other country. As my hon. friends know, at that time England did not have treaties affecting this question and obliging us to give to other nations what we gave to any single foreign country. That is a distinction that we ought to bear in mind because in 1854 there was nothing of that sort facing the people of Canada.

We are making history. When the northmen came down they settled in that part of France called Normandy. They went over and conquered the Saxons in the eleventh century, and for 400 years they had control of these Saxons. What happened? I do not want to refer to history in so far as our country is concerned. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) the other night talked about his ox. If he is going to stay in his stall with his ox I am quite willing that he shall, but do not ask me to stay in the stall with the ox. While the Saxon was taking care of the ox, feeding him, getting him ready for the Norman's use, it was Saxon, but when the ox was placed upon the table of the Norman it was beef, it was French. When the hog was in the pen, and the Saxon was looking after him, and was carrying the swill, to use plain language, it was hog, but when it got up on the other man's table it was pork, it was French. It was hog in one place, but it was pork in the other. While the Saxon was herding the sheep in the fields it was Saxon, it was sheep, but when it got on the other fellow's table it was mutton, it was French. When the Saxon was running after the calf in the field, and trying to feed him and it is no small matter, I would have you understand—it was calf, it was Saxon, but when it got on the table of the Frenchman, with all the other viands around, it was veal, it was French. That is what we are coming to with the United States: we will take care of the ox in the stall, it will leave Canada as the ox, but when it gets on brother Jonathan's table it will be beef, it will be United States. So it will be, with the hogs, the horses, and the sheep. When my hon. friend, the Minister of Customs was talking about delving in the mines of Frontenac I wondered who would use the picks and shovels. They would be Canadians, but when the product gets into the finished springs of the automobile in which Brother Jonathan is riding around at his ease it will be United States. I say, make it Canadian. I am not disposed to carry swill to feed the hogs to feed Brother Jonathan. If my hon. friends want to do it they can give lots of their friends jobs; we do not want them. Yes, they can give them jobs out in the west or anywhere else that they like. The Canadian people are made of better stuff. The hon. gentlemen who went to Washington are made of better stuff than that and they would not want such an effect, and I believe that they now realize that this bargain will not work out as they first thought.

The right hon. leader of the government and his friends went behind the backs of the people once in their history. It is said that they went to the manufacturers and assured them that they would not hurt them in 1896, or a strong friend of theirs who is now in his grave, did it for them. If they would go behind the backs of the people before, let them wake up those old men over there in the Senate and tell them to strangle this child born out of due season because if they do so it will do this country a lot of good. I hope that the common sense of these hon. gentlemen will induce them to adopt this course. Let us have a decent funeral and we will all go as pallbearers.

On motion of Mr. Fielding the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 6, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. GERMAN presented the third report of the Privileges and Elections Committee.

Mr. MONK. Are all the proceedings of the committee and the evidence now before the House?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose that the report includes the proceedings, the evidence and everything.

Mr. MONK. If they are before the House, I would like to ask when it is intended to take into consideration the report of that committee. There were no draft reports, and I suppose that, as is usual, a time will be fixed for the consideration of the report.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I had not thought of fixing any date. We are approaching the Easter recess, and I suppose it was not intended to take this report up before Easter.

Mr. MONK. Am I to understand it will be taken up after the Easter recess?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Unless there is some reason to the contrary, that is my intention.

Mr. PERLEY. I understood from the chief government whip that the Prime Minister would arrange a time for taking up this important report, so that it might be understood on both sides when the discussion would take place.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will give due notice. We will fix a date across the floor as usual for the consideration of the matter.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

VALUE OF CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. BRADBURY:

What was the total product of the farms in Canada, including animals and the dairy products, for the years 1908, 1909 and 1910?

Mr. FISHER:

The estimated value of field crops in Canada in 1908 was $432,534,000, in 1909 $532,992,100, and in 1910 $507,185,500.

The estimated value of dairy products of Canada in 1908 was $96,000,000, in 1909 $98,000,000, and in 1910 $100,000,000.

The estimated value of farm animals in Canada in 1908 was $531,000,000, in 1909 $557,223,000, and in 1910 $593,768,000.

QUEBEC BRIDGE—FAIR WAGE SCHEDULE.

Mr. AMES:

1. Does the Department of Labour intend to establish a minimum scale for those who shall be employed upon the Quebec bridge?

2. Does the schedule contain a minimum wage for bridge workers, and will such schedule form part of any and every contract, or sub-contract, that shall be made with those who shall build the bridge?

Mr. KING. 1 and 2. The following clause prepared by the Department of Labour was inserted in the form of tender for the contract for this work and appears as part of the contract:

All mechanics, labourers or other persons who perform labour in the construction of the work hereby contracted for, shall be paid such wages as are generally accepted as current for competent workmen in the district in which the work is being performed, and if there is no current rate in such district, then a fair and reasonable rate, and shall not be required to work for longer hours than those fixed by the custom of the trade in the district where the work is carried on, except for the protection of life or property, or in the case of other emergencies. In the event of a dispute arising as to what is the current or a fair and reasonable rate of wages or what are the current hours fixed by the custom of the trade it shall be determined by the Minister of Labour, whose decision shall be final.

These conditions shall extend and apply to moneys payable for the use or hire of horses or teams, and the persons entitled to payment for the use or hire of horses or teams shall have like right in respect of moneys owing to them as if such moneys were payable to them in respect of wages.

In the event of default being made in payment of and money owing in respect of wages of any mechanic, labourer or other person employed on the said work, and if a claim therefor is filed in the office of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and proof thereof satisfactory to the minister is furnished, the Minister may pay such claim out of any moneys at any time payable by His Majesty under such contract, and the amounts so paid shall be deemed payments to the company.

The company shall post in a conspicuous place on the works under construction the general clause above mentioned for the protection of the workmen employed.

The company shall keep a record of payments made to workmen in its employ, and the books or documents containing such record shall be open for inspection by the fair wages officers of the government at any time it may be expedient to the Minister of Labour to have the same inspected.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the twelfth instant, it stand adjourned to Wednesday, the 19th of April.

Motion agreed to.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. SPROULE. Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance a question. I notice in this morning's 'Citizen' a statement that the Anglo-Japanese Treaty has been ratified at Tokio. May I inquire whether there has been any correspondence between the Canadian government and the imperial government with regard to the advisability of not including the favoured nation clause in this treaty so as to affect Canada; or, if Canada is included in this treaty, was there any correspondence between the Canadian and imperial governments on the question?

Mr. FIELDING. The question of whether or not Canada will desire to adhere to this treaty or make an independent treaty is now under consideration. But the treaty does not touch Canada at all.

Mr. SPROULE. As to the favoured nation clause?

Mr. FIELDING. We have not yet a copy of the treaty, and whether it includes the favoured nation clause or not we are not informed. We shall have a copy, no doubt, in due course, and then the question will have to be considered whether Canada shall seek to adhere to the treaty or make a special treaty.

SOREL SHIPYARDS—OFFICIAL INQUIRY.

Mr. MONK. Has an inquiry been instituted at Sorel by the government? If so, who is conducting it, and what is the object of that inquiry?

Mr. BRODEUR. Immediately after the charges were made in the House, as it referred to the department, an inquiry was entered into by the inspector of agencies and the agent.

Mr. MONK. Who is conducting the inquiry and what is the subject of the inquiry?

Mr. BRODEUR. Statements were made in the affidavits filed before the House that affected the department, and we are investigating these allegations. Previous to that, certain statements were brought to the attention of the department, and these also are being investigated.

Mr. MONK. When was the investigation ordered?

Mr. BRODEUR. After the charges were made.

Mr. MONK. Is that inquiry being conducted by Mr. Wiallard, the private secretary of the minister?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, but by the agent of the department in Montreal and the inspector of agencies.

Mr. MONK. That is, by Mr. Wiallard?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Wiallard is one, Mr. Boyd is the other.

Mr. MONK. Is Mr. Wiallard the private secretary to the minister?

Mr. BRODEUR. He was formerly my private secretary, but not now.

MANITOBA SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) with regard to an article that has appeared in several Manitoba Liberal papers to the effect that this government is willing to concede to the province of Manitoba, 6,000,000 acres of swamp lands in addition to the 2,000,000 acres the province is already getting. I would like to know whether this article is true, and whether the government endorses the ideas of the Minister of the Interior in this instance?

Mr. OLIVER. There is an arrangement between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion of Canada, dated many years ago, whereby the swamp lands within the province become the property of the province after survey and examination and decision that they are swamp lands. No person is able to make an offer to the provincial governments of the swamp lands, for they belong to the province under that agreement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That does not cover exactly what is contained in the Winnipeg papers. May I ask the minister if he wrote a letter for publication to any of the papers in Winnipeg with regard to an additional grant of land in Manitoba?

Mr. OLIVER. I have written several letters both to persons and newspapers, and amongst these letters I have written to papers in Winnipeg explaining the position, as I understood it, of the Dominion government; and, in the letters which I have seen published, an estimate is made that the province of Manitoba will become entitled to about 8,000,000 acres of swamp lands altogether under the agreement that I mentioned.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is not anything outside of that agreement, this is no new grant, it is only to carry out the terms of the old agreement.

Mr. OLIVER. In any document I have ever written or seen published, there was no suggestion that the Dominion government was going to make any additional grant in regard to swamp lands. The statement was merely made that there was an agreement, and an estimate was made of the area of those swamp lands.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have brought this up because a wrong interpretation has been put on the letter of my hon. friend published in a Winnipeg newspaper. I would like to ask further if it is the intention of his department to hurry on a survey of those swamp lands in Manitoba, so that at some time in the life-time of people living there now, the province will get some benefit from the lands? I say that for this reason, that the Manitoba government have adopted a policy of drainage, and the swamp lands that are now unsurveyed, and for that reason cannot be handed over by the Dominion to the province, will be in a year or two dry land through the efforts of the province and of others, and the land they should have will be taken away from them. If the Dominion will give some guarantee that they will hurry up the survey, I think it will be well received in the west.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to surveys, I want to say that in the province of Manitoba they have been pushed, if not as fast as in other provinces, they have been pushed further in advance of the demand for settlement than in any other province, with a view of bringing into play the agreement in favour of the province that I have already mentioned. The government is quite prepared from time to time to hand over those swamp lands after survey. I can hardly think that the condition is such as my hon friend has suggested, that the province is so far ahead of the present survey in the matter of its requirements of swamp lands, that our failure to make more rapid surveys constitutes a detriment to the province in its schemes of reclamation. I would be glad if my hon. friend would give me any instances of that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The minister misunderstands me. The lands are surveyed, I admit that, but after the survey the swamp lands have to be examined by certain commissioners, and the work of these commissioners is so far behind the requirements of the province, and the rapid movement of the government in its drainage policy, that the lands that ought to belong to them, had they been gone over and examined by the commissioners, are not being reclaimed, and the province is losing its right to those lands. I can instance Glenella and the McCreary district, up northerly and northeasterly from these two points, where big drainage works have been made.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure we have no desire to do anything except to carry out the exact agreement made with the province of Manitoba. It is true that the commissioners are not able to make an examination of the swamp lands as fast as they are surveyed, but I can assure my hon. friend that as regards any drainage schemes of the province, if we are made aware of those schemes, we will see that the lands are inspected, and will see that no advantage will be taken of the province such as my hon. friend suggests. There is no desire at all to allow that.

MARKEY FISHING LEASE.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before you leave the Chair, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), to recur again to a subject that must be getting distasteful to him and to this House, in regard to the Markey lease. It is over two years since the Minister of Marine and Fisheries decided to cancel the lease, and he handed it over, I understand, to the Department of Justice. Up to date nothing has been done, and the fact that nothing has been done militates against the interest of the people in that district. Those leases cover a very large territory, and no man outside the Hudson Bay Company can get a fishing lease. Now, surely something can be done to expedite this cancellation, so as to throw open the fishing that otherwise would be open under the law. I would ask the minister if he cannot do something at once, so that even before the cancellation has taken place, private individuals can get an ordinary fishing license to operate there.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. This is a matter of considerable importance, and I can assure my hon. friend one of very considerable difficulty from the standpoint of a lawyer trying to ascertain what is best to be done. I think it would not be in the public interest that any public statement should be made in regard to the difficulties which impress my mind, at any rate, in connection with the legal position. But I should be glad to discuss the whole subject in the most full and frank manner, either with my hon. friend or with any other gentleman interested, who would like to know the exact way in which the matter strikes my mind. It is now, I think, nearly two years since the whole subject was referred by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the Department of Justice for advice and action. Circumstances with which every one in the House is acquainted, have made it practically impossible, up to the present time, to make much progress in the way of actual litigation. I was not in the country for some four or five months immediately following the reference of the matter to the Department of Justice; and again was absent from the country for an even longer time during the season of 1910. After considering the subject as fully as I was able, I thought it a case in which I ought to have the best legal assistance I could secure, and shortly after returning to Canada in the fall of 1909 I took the matter up with Mr. Shepley, of Toronto. We had a discussion of it between ourselves for some time, and we thought we had better have a conference with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and Mr. Shepley and I separated at that time with the arrangement that we would get together with my colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, at the earliest opportunity. Not long after that he was seized with a very serious illness, which made it impossible for me or anybody else to see him up to the time when I left Canada in May last. Upon the return of Mr. Shepley and myself to Canada in October last, only a few days intervened until Mr. Shepley was seized with an illness of equal seriousness. In that situation, and in the impossibility which now appears of having any assistance from Mr. Shepley in the matter for some time to come, I have consulted Mr. Chrysler of this city, and all the papers in connection with this matter are now in his hands, with the intention that at the earliest day possible he will advise with me and with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to the course that should be adopted. That is the exact position in which the matter is. Just one word as to the consequences or effect of the unfortunate delay which has taken place. Every one, I think, is agreed that in the public interest these leases should be got rid of, if it is possible by legal means. When any litigation is decided upon it is in the interest of every one concerned that it should be brought to a close at the earliest date possible, but in this matter, fortunately, I think no actual harm takes place by the delay, no change of condition upon the ground takes place so far as I understand, and, in any event, the leases would probably be impregnable as far as the original term of some few years is concerned. That original term is still current in each case, and in that state of matters, while action and result are, in every sense, most desirable, the Crown is in no worse position by the circumstance that no definite action has yet been taken.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Allen Aylesworth) does not intend to recompense this party for the cancellation of the leases.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that I cannot allow any debate on the orders of the day. Perhaps, when the motion is made to go into committee, the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark). I am just making an inquiry; I am not going to discuss the matter at all. If such is the intention of the hon. gentleman I must lodge my protest because this is as nefarious a transaction as ever was perpetrated by any government, giving all those immense waters in the Northwest Territories to a lawyer in Montreal for no other purpose that selling the privilege and making money out of it.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. You will see, Mr. Speaker, that it is no question of governmental or departmental action. It is a question simply of whether we can obtain from the court a judgment declaring the leases at an end, and the matter will be entirely one for action by the court, not for action by the government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice on what he bases his remarks that there is no change in the condition on the ground there. There is going to be a tremendous change of condition on the ground with reference to these fishing leases the moment the Hudson Bay railway is built, as it runs through a great portion of the territory covered by these leases, and I would like to ask the minister if the fact that he knows now that there will be a change of condition will incite him to quick action.

Mr. BRODEUR. What my hon. friend the Minister of Justice said was that there was no change in so far as the legal position of the government was concerned, that whether there has been a delay of a year or two the situation is not changed in so far as our legal rights are concerned.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any doubt about the government being able to cancel these leases?

Mr. BRODEUR. That would be a question for the courts to decide, because that is the question which is going to be submitted to the courts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Under existing conditions is it possible, while this matter is sub judice, for an ordinary fishing lease to be granted to any one up in that district authorizing him to catch fish in these waters, or are the waters to be tied up indefinitely?

Mr. BRODEUR. For my part I would see no objection to anybody else getting a license.

Mr. HAGGART (Lanark).

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a question. When this matter was before the Public Accounts Committee I think Mr. Markey stated that he was quite willing that all the leases he had should be cancelled. He did not think them of great value, he was only paying $10 a year for them, and we had a promise in this House that they would be immediately cancelled. If I understand, this parliament is supreme, and can cancel them. Does the Prime Minister intend to cancel these leases absolutely? If it is a question for the courts, or if there is any doubt about it, will he cancel the leases rather than submit the question to the courts? I think the matter is of so much importance to the northwest in the future that if there is any question about their cancellation we had better bring it before parliament, and ask parliament to cancel them. It would save the country the expense of going to the courts, and this submission to the courts would seem to be needless in view of the fact that Mr. Markey was quite willing to cancel the leases at the time he appeared before the Public Accounts Committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend, I am sure, on reflection, will not persist in this advice that parliament should substitute itself for the courts, and, acting on its own wisdom, cancel this contract. A contract was entered into, whether wisely or unwisely I have no opinion to express at this moment, but certainly the contract having been entered into, it should be set aside by the court, and my hon. friend, I am sure, will not persist in advising that parliament should substitute its authority for that of the court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) misunderstood my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid). My hon. friend said that the lessee was perfectly willing to have these leases cancelled and, therefore, there was no need to go to the court, as parliament could cancel the leases with the consent of both parties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If Mr. Markey is willing to cancel his contract there is no need for coming to parliament at all. The government can act upon the consent.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand that at the Public Accounts Committee Mr. Markey was willing that the leases should be cancelled. He had spent only a small amount, some few thousand dollars, and he was willing that they should be cancelled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But now perhaps he is making up claims on account of the different position created by the railway going through there. Is the Prime Minister going to allow this thing to go on year after year until there is an immense claim on a $10 lease, or is the question to be decided immediately, because, if that is the position that the Prime Minister is going to take, I think we had better have it up in parliament and let parliament decide. If the Prime Minister is going to allow the matter to go on year after year I for one think that we should bring it up in this House and see what the position is, because it was distinctly intimated by the government across the floor of this House—I am satisfied I can look it up in 'Hansard'—that the lease was cancelled or would be cancelled immediately.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and I cannot say what took place there, but if Mr. Markey has stated that he is willing to cancel the lease the thing is at an end and he has only to register his consent. If he is not willing, we have no authority to do anything except to refer the matter to the courts.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This parliament has authority to cancel the leases.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not think that my hon. friend would ask that parliament should interfere with and set aside a contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think parliament has a right to set aside a contract that is unfair and unjust.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the reason for granting such an absurd lease in the first place?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is another matter.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The evidence with regard to this matter is contained in the Journals of 1907. What surprises me is that when I go to the Library to inquire for it, I am informed that that particular volume is not in the Library and never was there. May I ask the Prime Minister if he will see that one of these books is placed in the Library at once, so that members may see the evidence showing the position taken by Mr. Markey at that time?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend knows that the Library is not under the control of the government, but under the control of the Senate and the House of Commons. Why the public documents cannot be found in the Library I do not know. I will ask the officers of the House to look into the matter.

Mr. REID (Grenville). It has always been understood that all public documents are kept in the Library, and if so, I want now to see that Journal. I suppose the Prime Minister admits that I am entitled to see it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will he tell me where I can see it, or have a copy of it placed in the Library. It is the only volume that is missing since Confederation. If there is only one left, and the Prime Minister will let me see it, I will send it back to any department he wishes.

SETTLEMENT OF NORTHERN ONTARIO.

Mr. GORDON (Nipissing). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege for the purpose of directing the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to a statement made by him which I find in 'Hansard' of March 13, page 196, in which he said:

> We have not taken up the question of the settlement of northern Ontario for the reason that until the Grand Trunk Pacific is in operation, the clay belt which has been spoken of so much is not available for settlement. There is land along the line of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway between North Bay and Cochrane, but I do not know that the field for settlement there is sufficiently desirable to warrant the government in making any special effort. But as soon as the clay belt is made available by the construction of the Transcontinental and its operation, no doubt the government will be ready to take up the question of directing colonization into that part of the country.

I would like to point out to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) that immediate steps should be taken to direct colonization into that part of the Dominion. From New Liskeard or from Haileybury up to Cochrane where the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway reaches the Transcontinental railway, is a distance of 150 miles, and the Transcontinental is now practically built at least 50 miles east and west of Cochrane. Between Cochrane and New Liskeard on the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario there are several hundred thousand acres of land which is as fertile as is to be found anywhere on this continent, and better than which there is none in the Northwest. This year agricultural implement firms have shipped into that country no less than forty cars of machinery, and I myself have seen places where forty bushels to the acre of wheat was produced. No time longer should be lost in waiting until the completion of the Transcontinental before the minister takes that energetic action he is capable of, and which he has been applying to the Northwest territories, to induce settlers to take up this land. Ontario has been paying into the Dominion treasury something like 40 per cent of the gross revenue, and Ontario is more entitled to consideration than it has been getting in the past from the Dominion Immigration Department. One reason why agriculture has not been more rapidly developed in that country is that the rich mining districts in the vicinity allure those who otherwise would settle on the land. I trust the Minister of the Interior will do me and the country the justice of investigating for himself the facts which I have presented with regard to the fertility of that land.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure the House has heard with a great deal of attention the evidence given by my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) as to the agricultural capabilities of the country lying between Haileybury and Cochrane, and no doubt it will be a field for agricultural settlement in the future.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It is now.

Mr. OLIVER. The business of the Immigration Department is to draw the attention of possible immigrants to the advantage of any particular section of the country; and as my hon. friend has pointed out, people are being attracted to that country, or its immediate vicinity, in thousands, without any effort on the part of the Dominion Immigration Department. If we want to use our resources to the best advantage it seems to me that our money should be spent in attracting people to parts of the country which are themselves desirable, but to which people are not otherwise attracted. It does not appear to me, even on the showing of my hon. friend, that there is the same necessity for effort on the part of the Dominion government to attract people to that section as there is to attract them to a part of the country further removed from that magnificent mineral development, namely, to what is known as the clay belt along the Grand Trunk Pacific, and where, so far as we know at present, there is no great mineral development. The province of Ontario is not by any means ignored in the efforts of the Immigration Department. The amount of money expended by the department in attracting people to Ontario, and dealing with them after they have come there, has been given to the House in a former statement, and although the particular section of the country which my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) represents, has not been directly dealt with, the province of Ontario has been dealt with directly just as well as other parts of the Dominion.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. OWEN (East Northumberland). I rise to a question of privilege. The Toronto 'Globe' stated a few days ago that I found the travel in my riding very hard because I was an opponent of reciprocity, and I have noticed in a later issue of the 'Globe' the statement that East Northumberland was in favour of reciprocity. I received a letter this morning from my own town, stating that in one manufacturing place there which employs 47 men, they have taken a vote on the question of reciprocity, and 46 were against reciprocity and one for it. I make this statement in the hope that it may be of some consolation to the 'Globe.'

WAYS AND MEANS—CONDITION OF THE PARLIAMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the most delightful and odoriferous scene which presents itself to those of the general public who may approach the parliament buildings. The Minister of Public Works has evidently in charge of these grounds some antediluvian gentleman selected from the sons of toil in the remote regions of Ontario or Quebec, and, the minister has evidently in charge of the parliament building itself some one who is familiar with cow stables, horse stables and barns, because if the minister visits almost any of the lavatories, or wash rooms connected with this institution, he will find that they are not up to the standard of any second-class hotel in any part of the Dominion. The scene that presents itself on Wellington street, on the approach to these grounds, is not such as can be found in any farm-yard in Canada. No farmer would have such a horrible exhibition. I direct the minister's attention to it as he may not have seen it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know the particular locality to which my hon. friend refers, but I will see that the attention of the proper officials is called to it.

Mr. HUGHES. Look at the lawn in front.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We expect to see the hon. minister out there with his shovel.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH LINES.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON. I would like to invite the attention of the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Graham) to a subject that is of deep import to the people of the maritime provinces, who are particularly interested in the Intercolonial railway. Hon. members will recall the fact that there was legislation at the last session of this parliament, initiated by the government, with respect to the acquisition of the branch lines of railway connecting with the Intercolonial, to serve as feeders to that railway. So far as I know, no action has been taken by the government to give effect to that legislation, and I would like to ask if any action has been taken, or if any action will be taken during the session, towards carrying out the spirit and the letter of the Act to which I have referred.

Mr. GRAHAM. The question of acquiring the branch lines, under the statute passed at the last session of parliament, has not escaped the attention of the government. That statute, if I remember correctly, required that the recommendation should be made by the board of management and the chief engineer along certain lines. I have had both of these examine the lines, and have asked them to furnish me with a memorandum as to what lines might be considered branch lines. It may be that the statute of last session will be found to be so restrictive that to adhere strictly to it would preclude us from leasing the branch lines, but it may be possible to make provision that they can be taken over by certain expenditures being made upon them. However, I hope during the recess at Easter to get further advanced in the matter, so that I can make some definite announcement to the House after the vacation.

Mr. RHODES. I believe it is now something like ten months since the commissioners examined the branch lines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and it seems to me that there has been ample time for their report to be in the hands of the minister and to be placed before the House. I would urge upon the minister the necessity of having this report brought down at the earliest possible moment, because the question of taking over the branch lines is one of vital importance to the maritime provinces, and is also in the interest of the Intercolonial itself.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is in error in supposing that any report was to be presented to the House by the officials named. That was not the intention. The Act provided that no railway should be taken over unless it was recommended by these officials, and these reports were for the consideration of the government.

Mr. RHODES. The minister misunderstands me. What I asked was that the minister should take the House into his confidence as to the nature of the report made by the commission on these branch lines.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Mr. Speaker, the question of the proposed reciprocity agreement, which has been discussed in this House for some time, is probably the most important one that has come before parliament for the last twenty years. Whatever any one may think on the subject, whatever may be said for or against this proposed pact, I think we all agree that it is absolutely necessary and reasonable that every information should be available to this parliament and to the people of Canada when the matter is being discussed. This compact, if carried out, will undoubtedly make great changes in this country. It will alter the laws of trade and change our point of view in a business way and in a national way. The result may be good or evil, some think one and some the other, but whatever any of us may think we must all agree that we ought to have every necessary information, all the statistics possible to enable us and the country to understand this great question and to make up our minds reasonably about it. For this purpose no statistics are more necessary than the statistics of the comparative prices and cost of production in the United States, in Canada, and in the most favoured nation countries, to enable us to make comparisons with regard to all the items included in this proposed agreement. We on this side have been endeavouring, without success, to get some of this information. The day after the Minister of Finance introduced his proposal, the hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), asked the Prime Minister whether there were any other documents to be brought down in connection with the proposal presented the day before by the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), suggested at that time:

> Before we go on with the debate we should have some commercial statistics to guide us, and give us a basis of information.

On January 30, the hon. member for North Toronto again brought this question up, and amongst other things said:

> Just as soon as possible the statistics of trade bearing upon the arrangement which the Finance Minister laid before the House on Thursday should be put into the possession of members of the House.

On the 2nd of March the same hon. member said:

> I would like to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the message sent by President Taft in reply to a request from the Senate, in which statistics are given as to the different items affected by the schedule in the agreement now under discussion. These statistics include the prices of various commodities such as beef, pork, butter, &c., in Canada and the United States for a series of years, and especially for the last year. In reply to the request the President sent down a list which gave the exact information required by the Senate.

Mr. Fielding in his answer said:

Of course we had to use our own sources of information and hon. gentleman who criticise the agreement will have to do likewise.

In other words, the government from the start have taken the position that they are not under any obligation to provide anybody with facts and figures necessary for a proper discussion of this question. They say: We have a staff of clerks in the service who are employed by both Conservatives and Liberals in this country but if we get any information from them, we will keep it for ourselves and you can hunt up what information you require for yourselves.

On March 9, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), brought this question up again. He said:

I wish to mention to the Prime Minister that very important and valuable statistics have been brought down to the Senate of the United States, compiled I believe by the Statistical Department or the Tariff Board, and that we seem to be entirely without similar information in this House. I have not had an opportunity of looking over this pamphlet which I received only this morning, but it seems to give a great deal of information as to industrial conditions, as to wages, and more than that as to the price of commodities in both countries. I would ask whether or not any information of a similar character is available here, and if so whether it is the intention of the government to lay it upon the table of the House?

Further on he said:

Perhaps I have overlooked it, but I would ask whether there has been any information submitted, with regard to wages, price of commodities and things of that kind.

Mr. Fielding in his reply said:

One hon. gentleman in debating the matter in the House referred to information to some extent of that character which will be found in the book of the Minister of Labour which is accessible to us all. The question of prices was dealt with rather fully and statistics brought down by the Minister of Agriculture. There is no other information available.

In other words, the Minister of Finance referred us at that time to the report of the Minister of Labour which had a few figures in this connection. But what we need and what we want is an official report similar to that provided in the United States.

On Monday last I again brought this question up in connection with an answer to a return. A return had been asked for by the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe), of a statement showing the average prices of butter and eggs in London, England, for the past five years, in comparison with the prices respectively in the Eastern Provinces, in Montreal, in Toronto, in Minneapolis, in Chicago, in Detroit, in Buffalo, in Boston and in New York.

A reply was sent by the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Under-Secretary of State which I read at that time:

Trade and Commerce Department,
Ottawa, 25th March, 1911.

Order of the House.

Sir,—I beg to return you herewith your reference No. 172 for statement showing comparative prices of butter and eggs in London, England, and certain points in Canada and the United States. This department has no information upon the subject. Such average prices of butter and eggs, however, are published in trade papers all over the world which can be referred to by any one desiring the information.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. C. T. O'HARA,
Deputy Minister.

Thomas Mulvey, Esq.,
Under secretary of State,
Ottawa.

I may say in this connection that knowing Mr. O'Hara as I do, I am quite satisfied he did not intend to be discourteous himself, and I can imagine how much he disliked signing a letter of this kind in his official capacity. He has since written me a letter which I shall read later on, telling me that this communication of his was sent to the Under-Secretary of State and was not intended to be read in the House. But I can imagine how his chief, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, may have said to him in his gruff way: Oh let them go and hunt it up themselves, and that meant that Mr. O'Hara had to write a letter of this kind. The St. John 'Daily Telegraph' in referring to this discussion of last Monday says:

The somewhat frank intimation that the opposition is beginning to realize that it has too hastily taken an unpopular and indefensible position was bolstered up by petulant complaints that the government was responsible for their misfortune.

And in another place:

Even Mr. Perley, the chief whip of the party, added that it was impossible for the opposition to express a reasonable opinion on the merits of the proposal without further information.

I simply wish to say positively that we have not taken the unpopular and indefensible position with regard to this question. We have taken the position which the great majority of this country would commend, and will commend when they thoroughly understand this proposal. As it is being understood and threshed out in the country I firmly believe that every day the people of this country are becoming more strongly opposed to this extraordinary reciprocity agreement, and that they will continue to become more opposed to it the more clearly they understand it. We have a great mass of private information and private figures regarding this question. We have taken the trouble to inform ourselves, and to my mind it is evident that we know far more about what effect this arrangement will have upon the country than the government themselves know. But what we ask for, and what we asked for on Monday last, was an official statement by this government, figures that could not be denied or gainsaid by them. The Liberal newspapers and Liberal speakers are claiming that the agreement will raise prices for the farmer. We know that in most cases that is incorrect. But we wish to have statistics in official form which cannot be denied. We all know, those of us who have rural constituencies, what happens at the meeting in the country schoolhouse. One of the Conservative speakers makes a statement that is absolutely correct and truthful and, unless he has the book for it, the Liberal speaker denies it. Then the poor voter says: 'It's the same old story; one side says one thing and the other side says the other; and how am I to tell which is true?' We claim that we are entitled to a comparative statement of prices and cost of production in Canada and the United States, that cannot be gainsaid throughout this country, so that the government may be prevented from trying to bunco the people as they are evidently trying to do today. On Monday, I asked a question of the Minister of Customs, (Mr. Paterson), and that question and its answer are as follows:

Mr. PERLEY. Did the hon. the minister, or did he not, in Washington, have the statistics of comparative prices of the various farm products as between the United States and Canada when he was making this agreement?

Mr. PATERSON. We had all the information that we thought was necessary to justify us in making the agreement.

In other words, the minister practically acknowledged that he had not the information in his possession. I see that last night, during the speech of my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) the following occurred:

Mr TAYLOR. You had no facts or figures over there, but they had them all.

Mr. PATERSON. We had all that they had.

In other words, the Minister of Customs had no information as to prices and cost of production, but what Mr. Taft and Mr. Knox were kind enough to hand over, and on that he decided. These ministers journeyed to Washington, having no mandate from the people of this country to discuss this question, and no mandate even from the Liberal members of this House, for we have been told in the House that the Liberal members of parliament did not know any more about this matter, until it was brought into the House on the 26th of January last, than did the members on this side. Then the government forced these Liberal members into caucus and forced them to support this agreement whether they wished to or not—that is, they forced all they were able to, but three gentlemen at least had the courage of their convictions, and, if rumour speaks true, there are others. These ministers had no information to show what effect this agreement would have upon the trade of this country, what effect it would have upon prices, and, particularly, what effect it would have upon the farmers. So far as we have been able to find out—and we have tried hard—they had not such information; they had not any information whatever with regard to prices. In other words, these gentlemen went to Washington and made an agreement with the American president and Secretary of State, when they were in the dark; they come back here and ask their supporters to agree to it in the dark, and now they want this House and parliament to allow it to pass, still in the dark. To show that this is correct, I will read a letter received yesterday from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. O'Hara:

Ottawa, April 4, 1911.

Dear Mr. Perley,—I much regret that my letter of the 25th March to Mr. Mulvey has been interpreted as an act of discourtesy to a member of the House. This was furthest from my intention. When I wrote to Mr. Mulvey, I was not aware that my letter would be sent down to the House. The Department of Secretary of State in certain cases prepare composite answers from information received from the various departments. In this case, I thought perhaps some of the information might also have been requested from the Department of Agriculture, inasmuch as they have much to do with agricultural produce such as butter, eggs, cheese, &c. The last sentence in my communication was intended for the information of Mr. Mulvey.

I have already said, I do not accuse Mr. O'Hara of any discourtesy. At the same time, I think it a most extraordinary thing that the government should allow a reply of that kind to be sent in as part of a return to an order of this House.

The compilation of statistics such as that requested in the return has more than once engaged the attention of this department, but we found that it required very considerable work which this department has as yet been unable to undertake. The work of the department has developed with such enormous strides that to-day we have not desk room for a single additional clerk.

That seems a very extraordinary excuse. If this information is considered necessary for a return, it strikes me very forcibly that it is the duty of this government to employ some one to prepare that return.

I have searched in vain through the regular United States publications for the information requested in the return. In the 'Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance' of the United States they publish some exhaustive statements as to 'wholesale weekly prices of leading articles in United States markets.' This must have entailed an enormous amount of labour, but no reference is made to eggs, butter or cheese.

The only items contained under the heading 'Provisions' are lard, oleostearine, tallow, pork and beef. I am quite aware that the information requested would be of value could it be obtained with any reliability, but prices are fluctuating so constantly that the department might not, even were the information obtainable, be able to hand it out as official. We have found prices to materially differ in the same commodity on the same day in the same market.

That is all very true we all understand it, but at the same time the United States government has been able to prepare such a statement. They knew all about it in the United States before we made this pact at all, and while it is impossible to give definite prices, that is, prices that may not vary the fraction of a cent, it is easy to give a statement fairly accurate for all practical purposes.

But in general I may say that this department, as well as other departments of the government, suffers considerably in comparison with the work done by corresponding departments in the United States, those offering criticism quite forgetting that they are expecting Canada with its population and revenue to do the same exhaustive work as that performed by the Federal Departments of the United States, a country with nearly 100 million people and a revenue of over $600,000,000.

Now, Sir, to my mind that is a most extraordinary excuse, that this country is so poor, that it has so small a revenue, it cannot afford to provide these statistics which the United States have provided, and which are absolutely necessary to a complete understanding of this agreement. This country is so poor that it cannot do that, but at the same time it is ready to enter into an important agreement of this kind absolutely in the dark with regard to these figures.

We are daily sending out exhaustive statements specially prepared, which we do not consider any trouble, and we are always glad to furnish the fullest possible information, but this is one of those cases where the facilities at the disposal of the department are not adequate to the demand.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd) F. C. T. O'HARA.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Who is that letter addressed to?

Mr. PERLEY.

Mr. PERLEY. It is addressed to me. Now, I wonder why the government refuses to give this information, and on thinking it over, it seems to me that there can be only one reason. This government pretends to say that this agreement is going to be of great benefit to the farmers, particularly to those of the northwest; but they want to deceive the farmers. They make statements to them that this agreement will give them larger prices, but they do not want the actual facts to come out; they want the farmers to believe their statements without any proof. Now, I want the farmers of this country to know that this government entered into this important agreement in Washington without having before them the facts regarding the comparative prices, and cost of production with regard to agriculture in Canada and the United States. There can be no question about that, this letter I have just read shows that plainly. This government have been asked several times to bring such figures down, but they have refused to do so. Now, I propose to show that these statements of the hon. gentlemen, that the farmers of this country are going to obtain more for their farm produce under this agreement than they do at present, are contrary to the facts, because I can show that prices are higher in the United States than in Canada. I have here the Senate white-book, 849. I wish to prove my contention that this government do not want the facts to come out to the farmers, do not want them made official; they want to be able to assert that the farmers will benefit without giving anything to prove it. In this white-book, 849, on page 110, there is a statement with regard to the average value per head of live stock on the farm in various states and provinces, in 1910. In the United States the average price of horses was $108.19, in Canada, $133; dairy cows, in the United States, $35.79; in Canada, $43.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN (South Huron). Mr. Speaker, I ask you if this is in order.

Mr. PERLEY. Before you give your decision, I would like to say that all I wish to do is to quote a few figures to prove my contention that this government does not want to supply these statistics.

Mr. SMITH (Middlesex). Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the quality of the animal is the same in the United States as in Canada?

Mr. PERLEY. I am giving the average over a great many states, and over all the provinces. Dairy cows in the United States, $35.79, in Canada, $43; other cattle, in the United States, $19.41, in Canada, $31; sheep, in the United States, $4.08, in Canada, $6; swine, in the United States, $9.14, in Canada, $11. On another page they give the prices of mill feed in the United States and Canada. I wish you to note, Mr. Speaker, that in these cases prices are higher in the United States; in other words, this government, if they brought down a blue-book containing these facts, would be showing that under this agreement the farmers of this country will have to pay a larger amount of money for their feed than they do at present. In January, 1910, the price of bran in Minneapolis was $22.50, and of middlings, $22.50. In Winnipeg, bran was $17, and middlings $18. In Toronto bran was $21, and middlings $23. In Buffalo, bran was $25.50, and middlings $25.50. In Montreal, bran was $22, and middlings $23.50. Now, I will make another quotation from this Senate white-book, found on page 132, with regard to the wholesale prices of beef per hundred pounds. In February, 1911, No. 1 beef carcass was $9.50 in Chicago, and $9.50 in Toronto. No. 2 beef carcass was $8 in Chicago, and $9 in Toronto. Lamb was $8.50 to $9 in Chicago, and $12 in Toronto. Mutton was $6 in Chicago, and 9 in Toronto. Pork was $10 to $12 in Chicago, and $10.50 in Toronto. Now, I submit that it is not to the advantage of hon. gentlemen opposite to provide these statistics in an official form to this House, in order that they may be able to deny them. We want to put them in black and white so that hon. gentlemen opposite cannot deny them. I have a letter here to show how detailed information of this kind can be obtained by the government. It shows how the farmers on our side of the St. Lawrence are going to be very much fooled if they think they will get better prices for their milk and cheese under this proposed reciprocity agreement.

Rockport, Ont., March 31, 1911.

Mr. John G. Mitchell,
Mitchellville, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Many thanks for the pamphlets you sent me some weeks ago which I received all O.K., and I enjoyed reading them very much. I have been away from home for a few days over the river in Jefferson county, right among the farmers, and having one brother and two cousins in charge of milk stations, I was able to gather some valuable information regarding the price of milk and cheese. At all three milk stations they are refusing the milk of the nearby farmers. The supply is greater than the demand at $1.25 per hundred pounds, and that price is only given to those who contracted last fall. And the milk stations where they have the apparatus for manufacturing the over-production of milk up into cheese, they are offering only 65 cents per hundred pounds for the hay milk, as they call it; and they are offering only 9 cents per pound for the March and April cheese. One of the largest farmers and dairymen in the town of Theresa, Jefferson county, New York, told me that his opinion was that they would be shipping their cheese through Canada the same as they have done before, and that would be a very short time, perhaps in three months, as there was such a slump in the milk and cheese market of the United States. If some of our farmers would only take the pains to go over even just to Watertown and see how prices are on farm produce they would come back home, and I am sure be well satisfied that reciprocity would do them no good. Horses and cattle are much lower in prices over there than they are over here. Fresh eggs, 16 cents; butter, 20 cents, and many other things on the same basis.

Well, John, I must close for now.

Yours truly,
J. F. FITZSIMMONS.

We ought to have an official blue-book issued by this government showing the statistics regarding the comparative prices and cost of production in the United States and Canada of the various articles and commodities that are going to be affected by this proposed reciprocity agreement. This country is not rich enough to afford to make this agreement without having those facts. These hon. gentlemen who went down to Washington without having those facts did something they had no right to do, seeing that it was utterly impossible for them to give proper consideration to this agreement unless they had these facts and figures before them officially. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Finance whether he would be willing to exchange his house and the contents, down here on Metcalfe street, in this city, with a keen friend in Washington for his house and contents, provided that that friend knew all about both houses and he, the Minister of Finance, knew nothing except about his own. I would like to ask whether he would agree to make a trade with a keen American friend when the American friend knew more about value and costs than he did. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Customs whether he personally would have made a bargain for his own account if he were as much in ignorance as he was with regard to prices and cost of production of these articles in Canada and the United States? I would ask him whether, if a carload of biscuits got down to Washington by mistake and some friend in Washington who had seen this carload of biscuits said: I have a carload of biscuits at Montreal that got there by mistake and I will trade with you, he would trade with his keen friend in Washington without looking at the biscuits in Montreal or having them looked at. Would he trade, or would he not want to find out whether the biscuits in Montreal were toothsome biscuits, such as my hon. friend makes, sweetened biscuits, biscuits full of butter and eggs, or whether they were only plain white water biscuits which the gentleman in the United States was trying to palm off on him? He has gone down to Washington as a minister of the Crown not knowing anything about it, he acknowledges that he did not have any of these facts or statistics, and he allows the people down there to palm off water biscuits on him for the toothsome, sweetened biscuits that we have on this side.

I believe that there is some truth in the rumour that there is a reciprocity microbe floating about, and that it must have affected these two hon. gentlemen when they went to Washington. I was told a couple of days ago about an old lady talking of the hard luck here in Ottawa this winter, and who said: We have had all sorts of trouble—first typhoid, then measles, and then this reciprocity. So, I think these hon. gentlemen have been affected by the microbe.

Mr. BLACK. There are lots of old women opposed to it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Speak for yourself.

Mr. PERLEY. Yes, and there are a good many who know more than my hon. friend does. I wish to enter my protest against the action of the government in refusing to bring down proper official information that cannot be gainsaid, that cannot be denied by their own followers. It seems to me that the government were derelict in their duty to go to Washington and make such an agreement as they have done, without having the facts and figures which were absolutely essential to them to enable them to make up their minds properly regarding this question.

It strikes me that this is one of the most extraordinary business transactions that I ever knew of. What makes it far worse is that now the government refuse to provide any one with this information, and they are trying to force the agreement through parliament without knowing what its effect is going to be, without providing these facts and figures about the prices of commodities and the cost of production which will enable the farmer, the manufacturer, every voter in this country, to decide for himself whether the price of commodities is going to be increased or reduced in this country. They keep them in the dark, and they want the House and the country to swallow this thing, they want to gag us and prevent us from knowing officially the whole of the facts regarding it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move,—

That all the words after the word 'that' in the proposed motion be left out and the following substituted therefor:

The government should cause to be forthwith laid on the table of the House in respect to the products and commodities included in the proposed reciprocity agreement with the United States, full and reliable information respecting prices and cost of production (a) in Canada, (b) in the United States, and (c) in the twelve other countries to which Canadian markets will be open under said proposal.

And that the government has been neglectful of the public interest in hitherto failing to prepare such information and to submit the same to parliament.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, there is only one part of the address of my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) with which I can sympathize; it is that in which he takes exception to the terms of the returns made by one department of the government to an Order of the House. I want to say frankly, that I think that, while no discourtesy was intended, the return was not one which ought to have been sent to the House. I do not regard it as a reference to any particular member; it is an Order of the House. And, although we might not have the information available, nevertheless when the Order of the House passed I think we should make an effort to obtain the information. I do not hesitate to express my regret at the terms in which the return was couched. I am quite sure no discourtesy was intended, but I recognize at once that hon. gentlemen opposite may have the right to take exception to the form of that return.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It is a proof that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is kicking some.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no indication of anybody kicking on this side of the House. Can my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) say as much with regard to his side?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Ask the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) whether he is kicking or not?

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) had better not talk about kicking; there is no kicking among the Liberals.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no division among the Liberals; my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will find that an unprofitable question to raise. I do not agree with the mover of the motion as respects the lack of or the need for information. In the first place I call the attention of the House to the fact that very much information has been given about this matter from the beginning down to the present day. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in the exercise of their right, have from day to day asked numerous questions and made numerous motions for information, and they have got the information they asked for. I am not prepared to say that in every respect it was of great value to them, but they were the judges of that, and the information has been supplied. So, I think there is more information on the subject than hon. gentlemen opposite are willing to acknowledge. Then, with regard to what took place at Washington, I want to say to my hon. friend that we had abundance of statistics. We had the various documents and public books of the United States and Canada, to which we were able to refer from time to time, and we did not fail to make use of them. We also had in the matter of price lists, comparisons which have been included in the information which has been laid before the House. But while I say that, I wish to add that in my judgment that information, for the purpose of this agreement, was not necessary at all. The United States have been proposing a new and radical departure from their tariff policy of many years. They have had a tariff commission at work for many months gathering information—not particularly with regard to the reciprocity agreement, because that came up incidentally—but with regard to the work of tariff revision generally. There is a sufficient movement on that question in the United States to call for a variety of information and for that purpose a tariff commission was appointed about a year ago. That commission has been conducting investigations not only here but in other countries, and the information was probably necessary for our American neighbours, when they were entering upon a new and radical departure from their past fiscal policy. No such tariff commission and no such information was required to enable this government to deal with the question of reciprocity in natural products. There was no need of statistics to satisfy this government that reciprocity in natural products was a good thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was not Canada's departure from her fiscal policy just as radical as that of the United States from hers?

Mr. FIELDING. No. What we have done is no departure from the policy of Canada; it is in accordance with the policy of Canada for forty years. There is no more reason for statistics and price lists to-day than there was when the Conservative party brought in the National Policy, and included in it practically the same offer of reciprocity in natural products to the United States. When the Conservative party in 1879 put into their National Policy the offer of reciprocity in natural products to the United States, and which the United States could have accepted at any moment for many years, nobody then asked what was the price of wheat in Argentine.

Mr. LANCASTER. What did you do in 1907; you changed all that then.

Mr. FIELDING. No, we did not change anything in 1907. The Conservative party from confederation down to 1896, when they went out of office, stood for reciprocity with the United States, and their public offer of reciprocity was on record. When they offered reciprocity to the United States in 1879 did they send to inquire what was the price of wheat in Bolivia? Nobody moved in this House then to inquire what was the price of eggs in Venezuela? Nobody thought that was necessary, and nobody seriously thinks it to-day. In 1885, when they sent Sir Charles Tupper to the United States and offered reciprocity in natural products, did anybody then inquire what was the price of wheat in Bolivia? Year after year it was the acknowledged policy of all parties in Canada, to have reciprocity in natural products and no one wanted statistics, no one had any doubt about its value. We frankly say that in the matter of manufactured goods the larger capital and the specialized organization of the United States give them an advantage over us, but when you come to what may be called the natural products of the country, what Canadian is prepared to admit that the people of the United States are in any respect superior to us. Is not our soil as good as theirs; is not our climate as good, and in some respects better; are our people not as intelligent as theirs; in what respect have we any reason to fear competition with the people of the United States in natural products? No man has hitherto ever questioned in this parliament the value of reciprocity; all parties had acknowledged that reciprocity in natural products was a thing to be sought for and obtained if possible.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the Minister of Finance say that reciprocity with the United States has always been the acknowledged policy of the Prime Minister?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes; reciprocity has never ceased to be the desire of any public man in this Dominion until the day this agreement was brought before the House. If there did come a time when reciprocity ceased to be talked about it was not because it was not desirable, but because there was no prospect whatever of obtaining it. So long as the Americans continued in that attitude reciprocity was with us a forgotten issue, but when we found that our American neighbours had come to saner and better views it was our duty to meet them in the right spirit, and the economic conditions which existed before continuing to exist, that is why we want reciprocity in natural products.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it true that when the Canadian representatives met President Taft at Albany in regard to the maximum and minimum tariff question, a year ago, that the only condition upon which the government of Canada would enter into the reciprocal discussion on that occasion was that it would be followed, as it has been followed, by this reciprocity compact?

Mr. FIELDING. Well, if it were true, what harm?

Mr. HUGHES. I am just asking the question.

Mr. FIELDING. As a matter of fact it is absolutely untrue, but I do not see what bearing it has on the question. We now come down to the year 1888, when Sir Charles Tupper went to Washington, seeking reciprocity, and was only able to make a partial treaty, and nobody demanded statistics then, nobody ever questioned the desirability of it. And when, in 1891, the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald put in the last speech to the throne that he ever prepared for a Governor General, the declaration that he wanted reciprocity and was going to the United States to get it, did any one ask statistics then; did any one want to know the price of wheat in Bolivia? And, when the old chief had passed away and others succeeded him, and Sir Charles Tupper and Mr. Foster, and the late Sir John Thompson went to Washington in 1891, and almost begged for reciprocity in natural products, did any one demand statistics, and ask the price of wheat in Venezuela?

Mr. LANCASTER. They had the statistics.

Mr. FIELDING. If they had them they would be in the department, and they are not there. Does the hon. member want it to be inferred that they had the information and stowed it away somewhere else?

Mr. LANCASTER. If the Minister of Finance will look for those statistics he will find them there.

Mr. FIELDING. I would be glad if my hon. friend would be more exact, and I will look for them. I think he will find that he is speaking without knowledge of the facts.

Mr. LANCASTER. They were in my hands when I was making speeches at that time on the hustings, taken from the official records. You cannot bluff me that way.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not want to bluff anybody.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is what you are trying to do.

Mr. FIELDING. I can assure my hon. friend that I do not quite know the meaning of the word.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman found out the meaning at Washington. He was pretty well bluffed there.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. FIELDING. Oh, no. My hon. friend must have had experience in Washington which I have not. Down to the last day of the Conservative party in office, they were demanding reciprocity in natural products, and nobody in those days ever worried his soul about what was the price of wheat in Venezuela and Bolivia. There is an important difference in the position of the United States government then and now. They were proposing a radical departure from the policy of the country, and they may have needed information of that sort to support their case, but we certainly did not.

Mr. PERLEY. How can a Canadian farmer determine whether he is going to get a better price for horses, wheat or hogs under this agreement unless he has the comparative prices?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the farmer will find that in some circumstances he will get a larger price and in some circumstances he will not.

Mr. PERLEY. How can he tell?

Mr. FIELDING. Because the price statistics will fluctuate. Somebody has said that there are three forms of unveracity: there is the lie, the blank lie, and statistics. You can make statistics prove pretty nearly anything; but there are kinds of statistics which are reliable and valuable.

Mr. BOYCE. That is a curious proposition to lay down in view of the hon. gentleman's budget speech.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will notice that I did not give many statistics in the budget speech this year. The facts were so strong that they did not need statistics. There is a homely phrase which says that money talks, and with the pleasant and cheerful statement of a surplus of $30,000,000 it did not need many statistics to impress that on the mind. I cannot hope that I have satisfied our hon. friends opposite that they do not need these statistics; and yet the dreadful thought occurs to me, is it just possible, after all the denunciations of this agreement by hon. gentlemen opposite, after not only showing to their own satisfaction if not to others that it is going to ruin our country and disrupt the empire, that if we gave them only a few more statistics, they would support the agreement? Surely my hon. friend is not going gravely to assert that if I could give him the price lists of cows in Buffalo and in Toronto, he would withdraw all his opposition to this agreement.

Mr. LENNOX. Not by any means.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is right.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the hon. minister have any objection to placing before the House all the statistics and information which he and the Minister of Customs had when they went to Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid that I would have to place on the table a large number of blue-books, and my hon. friend would then say that I had invited him to dig out the facts for himself, as we had to dig them out as we required the information. If I brought all those blue-books, my hon. friend would say that I was not treating him with proper counrtesy.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it possible that the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs went to Washington with only a lot of blue-books in their possession and without definite knowledge as to prices or statistics bearing on the subject they dealt with?

Mr. FIELDING. We had a definite knowledge obtained from the history of the question, and we have brought down some statistics that we used at Washington, and they are already before the House. Our point of difference is that I do not agree with my hon. friend that those statistics were necessary for the consideration of what was the settled policy of the Dominion of Canada for the last 40 years. I am prepared to defend anywhere in this country the declaration that reciprocity in natural products was the settled policy of all political parties in this country, and that we did not need price lists or statistics to support such a policy. We founded our belief in reciprocity in natural products upon our faith in the resources of Canada, the conditions of our soil and climate, the intelligence of our people, and we said: By the common rule of business if to that intelligence, that good soil, that good northern climate—to the products of all that—we could open up the wider market of 90,000,000 people on this continent, it would be a good thing for the people of Canada. My hon. friend, however, was not content to deal merely with the question of information. He broadened out the discussion into the effect of this agreement on the farmer generally. I did not think this was quite the right moment for that. I rather thought that was a phase of the matter that we could better discuss in Committee of the Whole. But my hon. friend has departed from that rule and has emphasized the great harm that it was going to do to the farmer of Canada and the great good that it was going to do to the American farmer. He says that the American farmer is going to get all the advantage and the Canadian farmer is not going to get any. I want to call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that in the face of all these statistics which he has from the United States government, in the face of the comparison of prices which he has read partially, the agricultural classes of the United States to-day are largely opposing this arrangement.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Mr. FIELDING. I will tell my hon. friend why, in the language of one of the farmers themselves. The National Grange of the United States, speaking in the name of 1,000,000 farmers——

Mr. HUGHES. 6,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING. 1,000,000 they claim to represent. That only goes to show that they are a modest and sincere people, and would not magnify one into six, as some hon. gentlemen opposite would. The National Grange, claiming to represent a million farmers, has filed strong objections to this treaty. I read from a despatch:

> The machinery of the National Grange, an organization claiming a membership of 1,000,000 farmers in thirty States, has been started to defeat the ratification by Congress of the Canadian reciprocity treaty.

It is very strange that they should want to defeat it if it is so much in their favour.

> The legislative committee of the Grange, at a special meeting to-day in the hotel Manhattan, adopted a resolution protesting against the enactment of the Reciprocity Bill, called upon the membership to exert pressure upon Congressmen from their various districts to vote against the measure, and decided to go to Washington to map out a campaign there.

They have issued a manifesto on the subject, and have given the reason why.

Mr. HUGHES. And did they not give evidence at Washington?

Mr. FIELDING. Very likely. This is part of their manifesto, one of the reasons why they thought this reciprocity agreement was not a good thing for the United States. They say:

> The Canadian farmers by reason of their lower general tariff and their preferential trade arrangements, can buy manufactured goods at lower prices than those prevailing in this country. The prices of farm lands in Canada are much lower than in the United States. These conditions give the Canadian farmers an advantage over us and the free admission of their products will submit us to unfair competition.

They had all these statistics——

Mr. AMES. Would the minister read the entire resolution and state all the reasons why they objected.

Mr. FIELDING. I would have no objection to reading it but I have not the whole resolution here. I happen to have made their clipping.

Mr. AMES. Has the minister the evidence submitted before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. AMES. If he will send it over to me I will give him the whole resolution.

Mr. FIELDING. I have not it under my hand now.

Mr. AMES. Will you read the entire resolution?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I have not it here.

Mr. AMES. Will you produce it and read it?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. AMES. I do not think the minister is justified in reading one clause out of a resolution without reading the remainder.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that is quite a legitimate interruption.

Mr. AMES. The resolution contains a number of reasons.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member can speak after the minister concludes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. AMES. Oh, those members who can only bawl——

Mr. FIELDING. I was answering the question put to me by the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. AMES. Do I understand that the minister has that evidence?

Mr. FIELDING. I have not it here; I have seen it and I have the published volume, but I do not agree with my hon. friend that it at all affects the consideration. The point I am giving now is the advantage which, in my judgment, the Canadian farmer possesses under this agreement.

Mr. AMES. But I think it does affect the situation very much to know why the National Grange passed the resolution. The other reasons given in the resolution are quite as important only they do not suit the hon. gentleman's book quite so well.

Mr. FIELDING. The general tenor of the resolution or manifesto was that the farmers ought to have a general reduction of tariff all round. That I remember was the general tenor of it, and they complained that while they were going to lose their protection the United States manufacturer was going to retain his protection.

Mr. HUGHES. Hear, hear.

Mr. FIELDING. Speaking from memory that was the general tenor of their report. But this does not alter the fact which I gave to my hon. friend that they said under this agreement the Canadian farmer is going to have a substantial advantage over them. I do not insist that this is correct. Our American friends naturally make the best case they can for their agreement. I make what I consider from the Canadian point of view, the best case I can, and if somebody at Washington to-morrow were to say that Mr. Fielding had said that this is a beneficial agreement to Canada and therefore it must be bad for the United States that would be a very foolish reason, just as quoting what has been said on the American side, is foolish. I do not blame the Americans for making the best case they can in support of the agreement. I desire to make the best case I can in support of it from the Canadian point of view, and it is quite possible and I hope it is true, that both countries will prosper under this agreement.

I have here an extract from an authority which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes), should accept. I shall only give the headlines. I think a great deal of public opinion has been created in this matter by headlines, and this happens to be in the Toronto 'Mail,' referring to representations made to the United States Senate:

UNITED STATES SENATE WAS DELUGED WITH FARMER'S PROTESTS.
DECLARED THAT ADOPTION OF CANADIAN RECIPROCITY WILL SET BACK THE INDUSTRY ONE HUNDRED YEARS.
WILL BE PARTICULARLY DETRIMENTAL ALONG THE AMERICAN SIDE OF THE CANADIAN BOUNDARY.
AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS NEVER SO ROUSED SINCE THE DAY FORT SUMTER WAS FIRED ON

And that after all these statistics had been unloaded on the farmers of the United States. They do not seem to take them as cordially as my hon. friend. My hon. friend from St. Antoine division of Montreal (Mr. Ames), was good enough to ask a question or two, which I do not complain of, and I am glad to be able to quote another Ames on this question. I have here an article which reads:

SENATOR AMES SHOWS CANADIAN TREATY WILL INJURE THE IOWA FARMER.

Senator Asa L. Ames, of the Benton-Tama district, and one of the best informed and most successful farmers of Iowa, is very much concerned about the proposed trade agreement with Canada.

In an interview in the Des Moines Capital he says he believes that such an agreement simply means disaster to the farming industries of Iowa. He saw Senator Young just prior to his departure for Washington Saturday night and urged him to do everything in his power in Washington to defeat this trade agreement. Senator Young gave him his personal assurance that he would do that very thing.

In discussing the proposed trade agreement with Canada, Senator Ames said:

This proposed trade agreement with Canada spells disaster for the farming interests of Iowa. Lands in Iowa are now worth as high as $200 per acre. Those same lands will be worth less than a hundred dollars per acre if this proposed trade agreement is adopted. Not only will lands be affected, but this agreement will take forty dollars from the price of the Iowa horse.

What about those statistics about the prices of horses in the United States and Canada? I do not want to weary the House with long extract. I could spend the next hour in reading quotations from the representative farmers and public men of the United States who take the ground that this treaty is going to be a great damage to the farmers of the United States.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister allow me to quote from the National Grange the evidence submitted before the Committee of Ways and Means on February 9, 1911. This is what the chairman said:

We wish to enter our emphatic protest against the proposed reciprocity agreement with Canada.

I have been a working farmer all my life; have been actively identified with the Grange, or patrons of husbandry, for more than 20 years, and was for eight years master of the National Grange. I have gone among the farmers in every state of the Union, and have met thousands of them at various state and national grange meetings. I am thoroughly familiar with their views on this and other public questions, and I am here to declare that the farmers of the country are unalterably opposed to the reciprocity bill which you are now considering, and that they believe it would inflict a serious and permanent injury to their industry.

The principle on which the protective policy has been defended during the past 20 years is that all classes and interests of the country should receive protection against the competition of foreign products. It was to carry out this principle that the duties on farm products were imposed by the McKinley law and re-imposed by the Dingley and Payne tariff Acts. Had it not been for the tariff on farm products the protective system would long ago have been abolished.

Further on:

In view of these undeniable facts the farmers have learned with amazement and indignation the proposition to abolish the comparatively slight protection now given them and to establish free trade in practically everything that they produce. Let there be no mistake about the effect of this reciprocity bill. The only country from which any considerable quantity of farm products can be imported in the United States is Canada. We do not fear the competition of other countries. The purpose of the tariff on farm products has been to exclude those of Canda from our markets, and if this bill becomes law it means the end of protection so far as farmers are concerned.

Now the entire argument is based on the allegation that protection to be justifiable at all must be general, but that protection is made class legislation, which is the principal thing that the National Grange objects to.

Mr. FIELDING. I have already intimated that the farmers of the United States as the farmers of our own west, take the view that they want lower tariffs generally. Surely that did not require any explanation, we all understand that, My hon. friend, at an earlier period of the session—I had not intended to refer to it—laid down as a proposition that, where you have free trade in natural products, you must necessarily have free trade in manufactures—that the two must go together.

Mr. AMES. I said it logically followed.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. My hon. friend is a supporter of the old National Policy. He and I are young men, but we have read of these things. What has he to say, then, of the actions of his friends who, in the very Act in which they fixed these protective duties for manufactures, made a standing offer of free trade in natural products to the United States?

Mr. AMES. I support the National Policy of the year 1911.

Mr. FIELDING. I must say I had not expected that of my hon. friend. I thought he wanted to get in under the mantle of Sir John Macdonald and to support the National Policy of 1879. But, after all, I ought not to be surprised that he repudiates Sir John Macdonald on the National Policy. He has certainly repudiated Sir John Macdonald on the question of reciprocity, and he might as well repudiate him also on the National Policy of 1879.

Mr. AMES. I am not too old to change.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, if the hon. gentleman is not too old to change, I hope he will see the error of his ways and support this arrangement which, on reflection, his judgment must tell him, is for the good of Canada. Let me give you one or two more. Here is a paper published in Illinois, the 'Centralia Democrat' which thus summarizes public opinion:

The Taft reciprocity treaty with Canada is violently opposed by farmers in states along the Canadian border. They say they will be ruined if Canadian agricultural products are permitted to come across the line duty free. They vehemently declare they cannot sell their products in free competition with Canadian farmers, and that they must be protected or they will be destroyed.

Yet we have hon. gentlemen here who tell us that we cannot sell any of our products in the United States, that the prices there are lower than the prices in Canada. To those who think the prices are lower in the United States than in Canada, I can only say that there is nothing in this agreement to oblige a Canadian farmer to send his products to the United States. Unless the prices suit him, he need not send his goods across the border.

Mr. MACDONELL (Toronto). Yes, but the Yankee stuff will come in here.

Mr. FIELDING. I am frank enough to say there are times and places when and where the American stuff will come in. And we are glad it will come in, to give the working classes in our great cities a chance sometimes to get some of the products of American soil free of duty. I have not found it possible to understand the attitude of my hon. friends opposite on this question of farm products. Last night I heard my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder), and I always listen to him with interest; he is a good fellow and has a quaint way of putting things which is always agreeable. He spent most of his time in knocking down the greatest argument which has been set up against this agreement. We were told that trade was going to be taken from our transportation lines; that the National Transcontinental railway, the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern railway would be ruined. Why? Because our wheat would go southward into the United States. The tariff reform journals in England expressed the fear—which is loudly re-echoed in Toronto Conservative papers—that England would not get our wheat, because the United States would take it and consume it. But the hon. member for Dundas spent most of his time in proving that the United States do not want our wheat at all. He says that the producing power of that country is only a trifle of what it can be made; that the Americans can produce and will produce a vastly greater quantity of farm products than at present, and they will not want ours. This is one of the things in which we are helped by hon. gentlemen opposite. Very few of the arguments which were advanced against this arrangement at the beginning of the discussion have not been answered by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. MACDONELL (Toronto). With the hon. gentleman's permission, I would like to ask a question. He and his friends have stated that this arrangement will improve the prices the farmers will get for their products. They also say that it will reduce the cost of living in the big cities. How can these two positions be reconciled? Moreover, what statistical information was before the minister at Washington when this pact was formed by which he could prove that the people of large centres such as Toronto would buy their stuff cheaper and thereby have an advantage over the people similarly situated in large American communities, such as Buffalo?

Mr. FIELDING. I have a second cousin, far removed, who is Irish, and that gives me the right to answer a question by asking another. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonell, Toronto) and his friends are telling the farmers that they will get no better prices for their products as a result of this arrangement; and his friends who are canvassing Montreal, Toronto, and other large centres for signatures to petitions tell the people to oppose this agreement on the ground that it will increase the cost of living. How does the hon. gentleman reconcile these two things? Will he, since he has asked me the question, give me his own opinion?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What does the minister——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend (Mr. Middlebro) is asking a perfectly fair question. If he will repeat it, I will try to answer it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The government is bringing this proposal before the people. and claiming that it is going to have certain effects. What facts has the minister to show that these effects will follow?

Mr. FIELDING. I thought I had rather explained that. I lay it down as a principle that wherever you create a wider market, you give the producer a better chance. And if we have that faith which we ought to have—and my hon. friends opposite do not do themselves justice in that matter; the inference that will be drawn from their speeches is that they have no faith in the farming interest of Canada, they do not think we can meet competition, but I think that in reality they have the same faith that I have in the quality of our soil, in the character of our climate, in the intelligence and industry of our people—if, I say, we have the faith we ought to have, we shall see that when you give the people a wider market for their products, that must be a good thing for them. Is that a fair answer to the question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MACDONELL (Toronto). Words, words, words.

Mr. FIELDING. But I have asked my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell, Toronto) his view, and he has not even given us words. I have quoted some extracts of several weeks ago. In the face of the statistics which my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) has quoted, statistics which, he says, prove that the prices of farm products are much better in Canada than in the United States, and therefore, that this arrangement is of no advantage to us to get that market, I have quoted the opinions of eminent public men—one bearing the excellent name of Ames—and of representative farmers in the United States, which show that these people are much disturbed by this arrangement. The fact is that protection, like conscience, makes cowards of us all. Why, if you were to put two factories on the Niagara river, one on the Canadian side and one on the American, and both were engaged in the production of icicles, I believe that each would be afraid that if the products of the other were allowed to cross the border its business would be ruined. So, the effort is made to frighten our farmers by telling them that this arrangement will result in harm to them, and there are people across the line playing the same game, trying to frighten the farmers of the United States. Let me give one quotation from yesterday's paper. This is a despatch from Grand Forks, North Dakota:

> Six hundred delegates, representing every county in the State, assembled in this city to-day to protest against the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity agreement. They will seek to form a combination with other agricultural States for a nation-wide fight.

Why, it is absolutely clear that on both sides of the line men are needlessly disturbed and alarmed. We had the fruit-growers here in great numbers to make representations on the subject. My information is that many of them have since revised their judgment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, that may be a matter of opinion. But I know whereof I speak. Well, it is a matter of opinion. But I say it is a natural condition of things that the people on either side of the line should be alarmed at any change. When I find the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) trying to scare the farmers on the one side, and certain people on the other side of the line trying to scare the farmers there, I think we may put one statement against the other.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. After the minister has read all the messages from the different newspapers in the United States, is he trying to lead the people of Canada to believe that the statistics prepared by the experts in Washington are not founded on facts?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I think probably in most cases they are accurate, and in some cases they are a matter of controversy; but I do not question their accuracy. I have no doubt the statistics are prepared in good faith. But statistics are matters as to which there are differences of opinion, they are incapable of mathematical proof one way or the other.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister observed the statement attributed to Mr. J. J. Hill on more than one occasion, that the passage of these two Bills would head off any possible chance of Britain giving preferential treatment to her colonies in matters of trade, and that they have now got Britain where they wanted?

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter of opinion. I do not wish to enter into a broad statement on this question.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the United States view.

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Hill is an American citizen, and his views ought to be taken for what they are worth. They are not conclusive. Even the opinions of the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), while entitled to great respect, are not always conclusive. I submit that these alarms on either side of the line are uncalled for.

Mr. RHODES. In view of the argument that the minister is just making, I would ask him why he did not put manufactured articles in the reciprocity arrangement?

Mr. FIELDING. I have already stated frankly that I regard the manufacturing interests of the United States as so strongly organized, with greater accumulation of capital, with a special organization in certain lines, that I do not think we can compete with them on even terms, and I am not such a strong free trader that I would like to wipe out the manufactures of Canada that at the present time are flourishing. If they can be sustained by a moderate duty, I am going to stand for that moderate duty.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the exact argument that the 800 fruit growers put up.

Mr. FIELDING. That only shows that great minds run in the same channels, and if our argument is confirmed by 800 fruit growers, that shows excellent judgment on one side or the other. I do not wish to read these extracts further, but I do want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the claim that this agreement is to ruin the farmers is entirely unwarranted, and when you can point to the fact that on the other side of the line there is precisely the same cry against the agreement, I think the public may come to the conclusion that they should not be led away by it.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister has given us a lot of evidence to show that on either side of the line the farmers generally think this agreement will ruin them. Does not that indicate that the farmers have not sufficient data to show them the facts, and that they need more information?

Mr. FIELDING. I certainly did not contend that the farmers, speaking generally, had any doubt on the matter. I say that on each side of the line there are farmers who, I think, are needlessly alarmed. But in Canada there is no doubt that most of the farmers are in favour of this agreement. We have brought the evidence and submitted it from day to day, and it is now on the records of this House. Undoubtedly there are a few farmers here and there who dissent from it, some of them, I think, on political grounds, but they have a right to dissent on political grounds if they like. I say there is a great breaking away from political parties on this question to-day; and I say that the farmers of this country, irrespective of politics, except a comparatively few who are strong party men—and I am not going to quarrel with a man for that, because I am one of that kind myself—I say that with the exception of a few men whose party feeling is so strong that they will not break away at all, the farmers of this country, in every province, are supporting this agreement, as my hon. friends, before long, will have an opportunity of finding out. Let it be remembered that this is not a treaty, this is an agreement which we make for the time being, and emblazoned on that agreement—

Mr. COWAN. For how long a time?

Mr. FIELDING. It is not for any fixed time.

Mr. COWAN. Is it for any time?

Mr. FIELDING. Until either party makes up its mind that it don't want it any longer. Why, the hon. gentleman's friends were dreadfully alarmed that we were going to make a formal treaty. The whole cry of the hon. gentlemen was that we do not want any entanglements with the United States, we do not want to be tied up with them. Well, we are not tied up with them.

An hon. MEMBER. Yes, you are.

Mr. FIELDING. If we pass this agreement, as pass it we shall, and if, within a comparatively few months, how many it is not for me to say, in the natural order of things, before many months pass there will be an appeal to the people of this country, and we are putting our judgment at issue. We are telling the people that this is an agreement for their benefit and their advancement, and when the time comes we will make that a prominent issue with hon. gentlemen opposite. Hon. gentlemen opposite, if they find that the people are hostile, as they say, will effect a change. We will go out and they will come in, and they will repeal the agreement. No, I won't say that, I won't say that they will repeal it. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I venture to predict that it will not be repealed. But nothing is gained. If this were a long term treaty there might be some force in the contention that before we make it we should consult the people, although that was not always the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite. But this is an agreement for a short time. Within a few months, before many months, we will go to the people on this question, and if we are wrong we will pay the penalty of our error, and hon. gentlemen will come back, and they can repeal the agreement, and the empire will be saved. So what is wrong?

Mr. BOYCE. Did the hon. gentleman say that this treaty was to be in force only a short time?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I did not say that.

Mr. BOYCE. It slipped out of the minister's lips, I think, possibly unwittingly. But I would ask whether it was not the intention of both parties that it should remain in force for a considerable period?

Mr. FIELDING. The letter which forms the basis of the agreement declares that it would certainly not be wise for the two governments to devote the time and labour to this matter unless they both had the expectation that, if approved by Congress and by Parliament, it would remain in force for a considerable time.

Mr. AMES. What would the minister consider a reasonable time?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think there ought to be any doubt about this, and since the point has been raised, let us see what the exact statement is:

> The governments of the two countries having made this agreement from the conviction that, if confirmed by the necessary legislative authorities, it will benefit the people on both sides of the border line, we may reasonably hope and expect that the arrangement, if so confirmed, will remain in operation for a considerable period. Only this expectation on the part of both governments would justify the time and labour that have been employed in the maturing of the proposed measures. Nevertheless, it is distinctly understood that we do not attempt to bind for the future the action of the United States congress or the parliament of Canada, but that each of these authorities shall be absolutely free to make any changes of tariff policy or of any other matter covered by the present arrangement that may be deemed expedient. We look for the continuance of the arrangement, not because either party is bound to it, but because of our conviction that the more liberal trade policy thus to be established will be viewed by the people of the United States and Canada as one which will strengthen the friendly relations now happily prevailing and promote the commercial interests of both countries.

So, I repeat what I said a few moments ago that in the natural course of things, before many months pass, we shall have a constitutional appeal to the people. If we are right on this question and on the general record of this government, then these ministers will come back and continue the agreement. If we are wrong, the people will so declare and those who come after us will be absolutely free to strike down this agreement and make any change they desire. We stand by the agreement in the firm faith that it is a good thing for Canada and a good thing for the United States, that, while here and there, there may be some particular section, or even some particular individuals, who may feel for the moment that they are affected, looked at in the large, it is a good thing for the Dominion and for every province in the Dominion and as such we ask this House to proceed to pass it.

Mr. PERLEY. The hon. Minister of Finance states that there is a good deal of difference of opinion regarding this question on both sides of the House. In order to determine it I would like to ask the minister whether he does not think it would be better to give us the official information regarding the various facts rather than to read newspaper reports and unofficial statements as he has done this afternoon.

Mr. FIELDING. I regret to say that I do not believe I could produce any information which would satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. W. S. MIDDLEBRO (North Grey). Mr. Speaker, about a year prior to the negotiations with respect to the proposed agreement, the President of the United States attempted to put into force what is known as the Payne-Aldrich tariff; that is that unless Canada would make some concession to the United States he would place the maximum tariff, imposing an extra duty of 25 per cent, upon goods going from Canada into the United States. The President was either acting in good faith in that matter or he was not. We have a statement from the Minister of Finance himself that the concessions which he made to the President of the United States were so small and trifling that the President simply wanted a decent excuse for not enforcing the Payne-Aldrich tariff. I want to ask the Minister of Finance if it ever occurred to him that the reason the President of the United States flourished the Payne-Aldrich club over his head was not for the sake of the slight concessions which the President required Canada to make but was really for the purpose of extracting from the Finance Minister a promise that he would come back again a year later and negotiate a reciprocity treaty. The Minister of Finance himself says that the concessions which he made were so small and trifling that nobody ever observed their effect. Now, does he suppose that the President of the United States, for the sake of those small and trifling concessions, would give to the Canadian people the concession of not enforcing that extra 25 per cent tariff? Not a bit of it. What the President of the United States desired was not the granting of these trifling concessions, but the securing of a guarantee from the Minister of Finance that he would come back a year later and enter into a negotiation for the treaty that he proposes to put on the statute-book to-day.

All we are asking for to-day by this resolution is for information from some official source as to the prices of articles in the United States included in the present agreement. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim that the object of this agreement is to get the farmers of this country better prices for the agricultural products which they have to sell and which they say are going to go into the United States. These agricultural products are not going to go into the United States unless the prices upon the other side are higher. If the government are going to convince the people that this pact is in the interest of the country then they have to convince them that such a state of affairs exists, as will enable them to get more for their agricultural products on the other side of the line and if they cannot do that the whole object that they have in view is gone. That being the case I think it was essential that the ministers should have had the information before they went down there so as to enable them to compare the prices on the American side with what they are on the Canadian side. Does the Minister of Finance tell me that when he negotiated that treaty he had in front of him the current prices of the products included in this agreement in the United States compared with the prices of similar commodities in Canada? I venture to believe that he will not say that. If he had it was his duty to have laid that information before the House so that we would have had the same information as he had and would have had the same means of forming a judgment upon it.

Just as soon as President Taft got the promise that the Minister of Finance would negotiate this treaty he got his experts to work and during the whole year prior to the time when these gentlemen went over to negotiate this treaty these experts on the American side were busily engaged doing for their own country what the Minister of Finance has refused to do for us, namely, getting a comparative statement of the prices on the American and Canadian sides. We had a greater right to expect information in this respect, because while the United States only had to consider the prices of these articles coming from Canada into the United States, we have to consider not only the prices of these articles coming from the United States into Canada but we have to consider the prices of these very same articles coming from thirteen other countries as well as the British colonial possessions. Does the Finance Minister undertake to say that he had any information as to the production of similar articles included in this treaty coming from these thirteen other nations? He tells us that it is immaterial to him. Is it immaterial to him that the Argentine in the last 25 years has increased its production of wheat from about 20,000,000 to 106,000,000 bushels per year? Is it immaterial to him that, as his own Postmaster General points out, you can employ labour in the Argentine Republic for 64 cents a day without board? Is it immaterial that they can produce wheat more cheaply and ship it here for 5⅞ cents a bushel as compared with 16 cents a bushel from Saskatchewan, our wheat centre, to Halifax? All these things are absolutely immaterial to the Minister of Finance. But, they are matters of first importance to us. How is he going to know unless he has this 106,000,000 bushels of wheat from the Argentine Republic is not going to be dumped into eastern Canada to compete with our western wheat when he removes the duty of 25 cents per bushel?

Mr. FIELDING. Does the hon. gentleman know that, when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), went to Washington, he and his friends made a standing offer of reciprocal trade in agricultural products and they offered it at the same time to the Argentine?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Well, I may ask my hon. friend this question: Does he not know that up to 25 years ago the Argentine Republic was shipping no wheat at all practically while, if the minister had had the information he would have known that to-day they are shipping 106,000,000 bushels?

Mr. FIELDING. Will my hon. friend permit me a question? I will not interrupt him again—Does he know that when the standing offer was made and when the Conservative ministers went to Washington seeking reciprocity in natural products, that they offered free butter to Denmark?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the Minister of Finance know that the conditions in Canada to-day are totally different from what they were 25 years ago?

Mr. FIELDING. But the conditions in Denmark, in the matter of butter, are not.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the minister of Finance know that to-day Denmark is producing from 10 to 15 times as much butter as she did then? Does the Minister of Finance know that under the intensive system of farming in Denmark, (the best system of farming in the world to-day), we have got in Denmark a competitor ten times more active than we had then. Does the minister know—he does not know, because he did not have the figures—that there was an export from the Argentine Republic last year of $21,000,000 worth of chilled beef and frozen beef. Does he know that 1,200 carcases of mutton came from New Zealand through St. John, New Brunswick, under the present tariff a few weeks ago, and undersold the local mutton in Montreal, and Toronto, and other Canadian cities. What will it do when the tariff is more than cut in two? The minister evidently does not know these things, and we have had to gather that information for ourselves. When I was preparing the few remarks I delivered on the question in this House I sent a communication to the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the humiliating reply came back: We have no information as to the price of any articles in any of these other countries or the United States; we have no information as to what it costs to bring agricultural products from these 13 different countries into Canada, and consequently we have not the least information as to whether they can compete with us or not. I am ashamed to say that I had for instance to write down to the produce exchange in New York to ask what was the rate for carrying grain from the Argentine to Canada, and then I found that you can carry grain from the Argentine Republic to Halifax for 5⅞ cents per bushel, while it costs, to carry it on the Canadian Pacific railway from Regina a centre of our western wheat growing district, to Halifax, 16 cents a bushel. And I came to the conclusion, as any sane man would come to the conclusion, that as Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec consume more wheat than they raise, and if, as the Postmaster General told us the other night, you can grow this grain so much more cheaply in the Argentine Republic where the climate is more favourable and where you can get cheap labour at 64 cents a day—I came to the conclusion that in the eastern portion of Canada where we consume more wheat than we raise, the inevitable consequence will be that if you take off the duty of 25 cents per bushel eastern Canada will be supplied with Argentine wheat. Why did not the government place this information before the House? They either had it or they did not have it, and if they had it why should they keep it from the House? If they did not have it then they negotiated a treaty without having the necessary information before them. I can imagine the Minister of Customs sitting down in solemn conclave at the table in Washington, and when the question of the tariff comes up the American commissioner says: Will you give us free talc, and the Minister of Customs replies: Why certainly we will give you free talc, that is an article for aiding in promoting the beauty of ladies, and we will allow the exportation of raw talc for the purpose of stimulating that industry, but the Minister of Customs did not know that talc is an article that goes to the United States for the purpose of stimulating the manufacture of paper.

Mr. PATERSON. How clever.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am surprised at the Minister of Customs.

Mr. PATERSON. Because the hon. member knew that we were particularly requested to get the Americans to add talc to the free list and that there is a gentleman in this House who is very pleased we got it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Yes, and the Minister of Customs was sending Canadian raw material to stimulate the industries of the United States when he thought he was only assisting in promoting the personal beauty of the American ladies. The other evening, for 20 minutes, the Postmaster General delighted the House with a dissertation on what great advantages this treaty would be to the province of Nova Scotia, because under it they would be able to send lobsters into the United States market free of duty, but the wind was knocked out of his sails when the member for Digby asked him if he knew that lobsters had been on the free list for several years. And here we have the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce writing that the department had no information.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is he?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Mr. O'Hara. I am not blaming him, because he can not do what he is not authorized to do, but we had the Minister of Finance getting up in this House the day before yesterday, telling us that the country had a surplus of $30,000,000 this year, the largest ever, and that the trade of the country is from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 more than it ever was before, and yet the government has not enough money to get out a little book which would give information that would tell us whether or not this very reciprocity arrangement is going to kill the trade about which they are boasting. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) told us that political and fiscal resolutions never came about unless there was discontent. But here we have the Minister of Finance telling us that he never saw a time in the history of Canada when the people were so prosperous, and yet in this very time he proposed a drastic fiscal revolution. I confess I am unable to understand upon what basis the government is proceeding. The onus is upon the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada to say what the effect of this treaty is going to be. They are on the affirmative, they are bringing in the measure, they have to prove what the effect of it will be; they claim it is a benefit to the country, but they must prove it, and in order that it may be proved or disproved we ask the government to give us the information which will enable us to come to an intelligent conclusion on the question. The government cannot say in one breath that it is going to benefit the farmer and in the next that it is going to benefit the consumer. How are you going to benefit the consumer by lessening the quantity of agricultural products in this country? If you decrease the quantity of agricultural products here you must of necessity increase the price to the consumer. How are you going to enhance the price to the Canadian farmer if he sends his products to the United States when by increasing the quantity there you must decrease the price? The government is forced to take one side of the question or the other, and it has pleased them to take the side of the question which says that this arrangement is going to benefit the farmer. My answer is: If you are going to benefit the farmer in the way you say, you must surely injure the consumer. We want the government to prove their side of the case that it is going to benefit the farmer, because we say that we think it is going to injure the farmers of this country. And, if gentlemen on the other side of the House deny that statement, then we say: Give us the information which we ask, if you think it will prove your case, and if you don't the country will naturally conclude they are afraid now to give the information because it will prove beyond a doubt that the treaty will injure the farmers of Canada.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the position taken by the Finance Minister on this question, because the resolution submitted to the House is certainly a reasonable one and worthy of our consideration. Unless we have the necessary data to give to the people in reference to the matters under discussion, we may expect that many of the men who are supporting the government on this question will say that we are presenting false statistics. I am surprised indeed that many members of the government are not anxious to have a number of such statistics as we have been asking for, so that they may be able to convince the people of this country that they have taken the right position on this question, if they have confidence in that position. I would like to ask the Finance Minister, what harm would be done to any industry in this country or to the people in general by presenting to this House a number of statistics such as those that have been presented to the Congress at Washington. I have here Folio Document No. 849, presented by President Taft to Congress, and in a letter accompanying that document he makes the following statement:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of February 23, 1911, requesting the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate all the information secured and the tables and statistics prepared by the board of experts, composed of Henry C. Emery, James B. Reynolds, and Alvin H. Saunders, relating to the various articles and commodities named in the Canadian reciprocity measure, and especially to the following: Pulp wood, wood pulp, and paper of whatever value; wool, whether raw or further advanced in manufacture; woollen thread, cloth, and clothing; cotton thread, cloth and clothing; carpets; boots and shoes; iron ore, pig iron, and manufactured iron and steel, agricultural implements; coal; meats; flour, and lumber; I transmit herewith a report from the tariff board giving the information in its possession relating to pulp wood, pulp, and news-print paper, and farm products (including live stock), and current relative prices in Canada and the United States of wheat, barley, and food products of the farm, including meats, poultry, eggs, dairy products and vegetables.

These are some of the statistics that are contained in this report. On the 20th of April the President presented another report containing a lot of valuable information with reference to the prices of commodities on both sides of the line, wages, and other matters of public interest. When we asked the Finance Minister if he would be good enough to present to this House the statistics that he had before him when he went to interview the commissioners who had charge of tariff matters at Washington, all that we were able to obtain from him was the statement that he had with him the blue-books from which we would be able to get just as many statistics as he did. I can only say that if that is all the statistics that the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs had to go by, they were certainly in a humiliating position. When you compare the small amount of knowledge that these two men going to Washington had as to the prices on both sides of the line with the statistics which were gathered in the past year by the seventeen experts in the United States and presented to the Congress and to the Tariff Commission at Washington, you can readily see that our two representatives were placed at a very unfair advantage. Let me go further. In to-day's 'Globe' you will find a report of President Taft's message to Congress, which bears out the statement which has been made time and again on the floor of parliament that the two representatives of this government who went to Washington went there practically with their hands tied. Let me read a portion of this message:

This agreement was the consummation of earnest efforts extending over a period of nearly a year, on the part of both governments, to effect a trade arrangement, which, supplementing as it did the amicable settlement of various questions of diplomatic and political character that has been reached, would mutually promote commerce and would strengthen the friendly relations now existing.

I ask the Finance Minister how is it that, in face of the fact that he knew a year ago that he was going to be asked to enter into some kind of trade arrangement, he did not feel it his duty to gather statistics, as the United States experts gathered them, so as to be able to present to this House such an array of figures as were presented to the United States Congress? If the United States government saw fit to place a body of men in the field to gather these statistics, so that their representatives could deal with this question intelligently, it was the duty of the Finance Minister, a year ago, when he knew that he was likely to enter into such a trade arrangement, to gather up statistics not only for himself but to assist the members on both sides of this House to come to some kind of reasonable conclusion on this question. The President further says in his message to Congress yesterday:

I felt assured that the sentiment of the people of the United States was such that they would welcome a measure which would result in increase of trade on both sides of the boundary line, would open up the reserve productive resources of Canada to the great mass of our own consumers on advantageous conditions, and at the same time offer a broader outlet for the excess products of our farms and many of our industries. Details regarding a negotiation of this kind necessarily could not be made public while the conference was pending.

Evidently the President of the United States believed that he was giving to the farmers of the United States a great boon in opening up to them the Canadian market; and if you follow up the statements in the report which he sent to Congress, made by his experts, you cannot come to any other conclusion than that the farmers of Canada, instead of reaping an advantage from this reciprocity arrangement, are going to reap a very great disadvantage. Let me call attention to one matter which I would like the Minister of Agriculture to explain. Why is it that on page 94 of these statistics that have been furnished to Congress, we find that the average price of spring wheat in the whole of the United States is only 90 cents per bushel, while the average price in the Dominion of Canada is 93 cents per bushel? But what I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture is if he can furnish statistics to show the reason why wheat in the province of Quebec is worth $1.19, while in the province of Ontario it is worth 89 cents.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know anything about these facts, and I am not going to try to explain them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is the same story, that is just what we might expect from the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. I have not been studying American statistics.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is very true, but the minister was studying some of our own statistics. In his speech he made statements in reference to the agriculturists of this country altogether in opposition to what should be the aim of the Agricultural Department, of which he is the head.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. gentleman give the different points in Canada which he takes into consideration in arriving at the average price of Canadian wheat?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is the average price in all the provinces of Canada.

Mr. TALBOT. Are these Canadian or American statistics?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They are American statistics, they are the only statistics we have.

Mr. TALBOT. At what time?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. These statistics were furnished by the United States on February 23, 1911.

Mr. CARVELL. Would the hon. gentleman give the prices in each province?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The prices are as follows:

Prince Edward Island	$0 95⅞
Nova Scotia..	1 12
New Brunswick..	1 12⅝
Quebec..	1 19⅞
Ontario..	0 89.4
Manitoba..	0 80
Saskatchewan..	0 69⅛
Alberta..	0 67⅞

This is the statement for last year.

Mr. CARVELL. Has my hon. friend taken any means to find out whether wheat is worth $1.12 in Quebec to-day?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is what I was trying to ascertain from the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CARVELL. I am asking my hon. friend if he has verified the figures.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt my hon. friend. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FIELDING. I support the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). I do not think the hon. member should be interrupted. I was interrupted twenty times, but I do not think any opposition member should be interrupted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend think it is fair in striking an average to take a province like New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, where there is comparatively little wheat, and add that to the province of Saskatchewan, which raises 70,000,000 bushels, and simply strike an average as to the prices in the different provinces without taking into consideration the quantities?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I did not strike an average. These are statistics gathered from the United States.

Mr. TALBOT. You struck a snag.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Oh, no, if I struck as many snags as my good friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), I would have lots of trouble. The same statistics apply to the United States. It is very plain that the Finance Minister did not have the necessary information with him at Washington, in comparison with the splendid lot of statistics which, as the President of the United States has distinctly said, the tariff experts in that country have been gathering for a year, so that they could deal with this question on its merits, but on the other hand, we find the Minister of Finance practically making the statement to-day that he went over there taking with him the blue-books which any of us could obtain from the library of parliament, and that he gathered out of these sufficient to convince him that he had obtained a very great concession from the United States. I feel that the opposition would be justified in constantly demanding, day after day, from the Minister of Finance, such information as is asked for in the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) and that the Bill should be held over until that information is furnished. We need the commercial statistics to guide us, we should know the prices and wages in the different countries. The Finance Minister claimed that he did not need these statistics, he said that he had given the House all the statistics he had and that the farmers were in favour of the agreement, while the consumers would be greatly benefited by it.

I observe in the Toronto 'Globe' of today a most unfair comment on the splendid speech made yesterday by my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury). The 'Globe' heads its comment on his speech 'Mr. Bradbury is a political gymnast.' I feel that this is a most unjust and unfair reflection for any paper to make. Widely differing views on this agreement have been presented by different members. For instance the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) speaking at a meeting at Mount Brydges, western Ontario, is reported to have said:

> Mr. Ross thought that more might have been done in reducing rates on agricultural implements. He saw no reason why the duties should not now be taken off entirely.

Surely he must have been in possession of statistics that would lead him to believe he was justified in making that statement. I cannot but feel that the people of his constituency will not appreciate these remarks of his unless he had some statistics with which to back up his statements.

I heartily support the resolution presented by the hon. member for Argenteuil, and I am sorry the Minister of Finance has taken the position he has on this question, because we are in need of this information, and we are entitled to have it placed before us.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). There is not much need of any answer to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) because he answered himself in the course of his remarks. He put forward the proposition that no inquiry is necessary into prices, or the cost of production in the United States, or in the other twelve countries to which our markets will be opened by these proposals; and almost in the same breath he said that the markets of this country should not be opened to the manufacturers of the United States because the manufacturers of that country are highly specialized, and their industries more thoroughly organized, so that their cost of production is less than in Canada, and Canadian manufacturers could not be expected to hold their own in competition. I state his argument as I understood it, and I think I am stating it fairly. He was promptly asked by my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) whether that was not precisely the argument put forward by the men engaged in the fruit industry in Canada, and he had to admit that it was. But instead of meeting the point made by my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo, he evaded it, he simply said that the men engaged in the fruit industry had the same idea on this subject that he had. Well, if he had the same idea on the subject as the men engaged in the fruit industry had, why did he not apply the same principle to them that he is applying to those engaged in manufacturing industry? Why did he give these men the answer: 'It is too late'? When the Minister of Finance says that there is no need of inquiry into this question, he surely speaks either without reflection or with utter recklessness of that which he is putting before the country. Upon what does he base his proposition that our manufacturers should not be exposed to competition with the manufacturers of the United States? Upon the principle, I suppose, that, for the reasons of which I have spoken, the competition would be absolutely destructive to our manufacturing industries. Then, is it not necessary, before exposing our farmers to the competition of the United States, and twelve other countries, to inquire into the cost of production in these countries, and at what prices their products can be laid down in Canada to compete with the products of this country. If such an inquiry is necessary so far as the manufacturers are concerned, are not the same considerations to be regarded with respect to the farming and fruit-growing industries, and many others?

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. member (Mr. Borden, Halifax) think for a moment that the prices of farm products can be controlled as readily as those of our manufacturing industries? Let me illustrate the question by stating that in my own county I have seen potatoes selling one year at 19 cents, and in the following year at 75 cents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite see the point of the hon. gentleman's question, or suggestion. The prices of agricultural products may vary greatly here or in the United States. But is it not, after all, a question of the cost of production in either country? There is also the question of supply and demand, but does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Talbot) believe that, if beef can be laid down in this country from the Argentine at less than seven cents a pound that will not affect the market for our farmers who have been receiving a much better price?

Mr. TALBOT. Not that year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the prices of that product in the Argentine vary in the way he suggests? I have not heard that they do, and I do not think that facts can be adduced to show that they do. But that is not the point of this motion. The point is that before we enter into an arrangement of this kind we should have definite, and reliable information upon the very point to which my hon. friend has called attention.

The United States Congress did not enter into this agreement blindfold. Before they took this arrangement into consideration, they had in the first place, a thorough hearing before the Ways and Means Committee of their House of Representatives. We had copies of it here—hundreds of pages setting forth the views of persons who were heard before that committee. In the second place, they had a similar hearing before the Ways and Means Committee of their Senate. We have had this in our hands also, another pamphlet of hundreds of pages. Then there was brought down to the Senate of the United States, in a message from the President, every scrap of information on the points connected with this treaty which could be made available by the Tariff Board or Commission of the United States, and all the experts whose services were at the command of that commission under the law of that country. And what have we had in this parliament? Absolutely nothing. What did the Minister of Finance and Minister of Customs have when they entered into this arrangement with the United States? So far as we know to-day, absolutely nothing. So, this arrangement was not only conceived in secrecy at Washington, but so far as our representatives are concerned, it was conceived in the most absolute ignorance of the conditions which would result therefrom.

As I have said, the Minister of Finance answered himself. He evaded some very pertinent questions that were put to him. I must admit that a great many questions were put to him in the course of his remarks, and I must admit also that to the great majority of these questions he did not give a very straight answer, or one that contained much information of service to parliament. He has told us that, apart altogether from the question of price, wider markets are good for the farmers of this country. Is it any advantage to our farmers to have opened to them a wider market in which the prices are from twenty-five to fifty per cent lower than in Canada? He puts it as an inconvertible proposition that the mere opening of a wider market is of advantage to our farmers. It is only of advantage provided our farmers can sell in that market at a profit, and no such arrangement should be entered into with the idea of advantage to the farmer unless the farmer can sell his products in that market at better prices than he can sell them in Canada. What has been the argument of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher)? During this very session he has told us that population in Canada was increasing faster than the production of farm products. There is no doubt about that. If our home market is so good as the Minister of Agriculture suggests, why was it necessary, in a time of prosperity and progress in this country, to go into a proposal of this kind, the outcome of which no man at present can foretell so far as economic considerations are concerned?

I think my hon. friend from Argenteuil has done good service to the country in bringing this matter before parliament. My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, harped upon the same old string. He did not deal very fully with the proposal of my hon. friend from Argenteuil, indeed I think I may go further and say that he did not deal with it at all, but he harped on the same old string that reciprocity had been asked for in this country from 1867 down to 1891. When he says that it has been the policy of this country for the last forty years to seek reciprocity with the United States, I take issue with him, and I say that ever since 1891 the idea of reciprocity has been absolutely dead in this country—except on one occasion when he and some other members of the government went to Washington and asked for it, without success. They came back from Washington on that occasion, and declared to the people of Canada that so far as they and their party were concerned, there would be no further demand for reciprocity with the United States. I say that since 1897 there has been absolutely no thought or desire in the minds of the people of this country for reciprocity with the United States, until these hon. gentlemen saw fit to enter into negotiations about a year ago, which have finally resulted in the proposals now before parliament.

Now, how is it possible, I ask hon. gentlemen in this House, how is it possible to get any idea whatever of the economic results which will follow the adoption of these proposals, unless we know about the cost of production in the United States and in the twelve other countries to which our markets are open, as well as in the British possessions which are likely to enter into competition with our farmers in the markets of Canada? How is it possible to arrive at any correct estimate as to the economic results of this treaty unless we have these data before us? Not only have we not such data before us, but it is abundantly clear from the statement of the Minister of Finance, and from the statement of the Minister of Customs, that these gentlemen entered into this treaty arrangement without having the most elementary idea of these considerations to which I have adverted, and without the least knowledge as to what would be the outcome of these proposals. Now, under these circumstances what does the hon. member for Argenteuil ask? He simply asks:

That the government shall, at the earliest possible moment, place upon the table of this House full and reliable information respecting prices and cost of production in Canada, in the United States, and in the twelve other countries to which the Canadian market will be opened under said proposal.

A reasonable proposition to put forward, a proposition which I think ought to commend itself to the government in the first instance. Because I affirm that when the government of Canada laid that proposal upon the table of this parliament for our approval, a proposal affecting the future destiny of this country to a remarkable extent, not only from a national but from an economic point of view, when the government, I say, laid that proposal upon the table of this House, they should have accompanied it with full and reliable information respecting all these matters which is now demanded by the motion of the member for Argenteuil. I say that too much time has been lost by the government already, and that it is their first duty, without one hour's unnecessary delay, to give to parliament that information which is absolutely essential in order that this matter may be debated with any degree of intelligence. What is the use of beating the air with regard to all these matters? What is the use of hon. gentlemen opposite making assertions with regard to the cost of production and prices in all these different countries, in the United States, in Canada, in the twelve other nations, and in the British possessions which are also admitted to the benefits of this treaty? Why, such discussion is simply beating the air, until we have reliable information, information which must be in the possession of the government, which ought to be in possession of the government, and which ought to have been laid on the table of this House before parliament was ever invited to discuss this proposal. I say, therefore, that I support most heartily the proposal my hon. friend from Argenteuil has made in his amendemnt to the motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I do not propose to traverse the ground which has already been so well covered this afternoon by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. The statements which he then made have not been controverted, the arguments he then put forward have not been traversed. But there are one or two points which perhaps are worthy of a little consideration by the House. First, let me say a word to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition who has just taken his seat. He asked why we did not consider the case of the farmers and the protection of their products while we were so jealous in regard to the protection of the manufacturing industries of Canada.

The reason is very obvious. The manufacturers have come before the government from time to time, and pleaded that they could not stand outside competition, and they protested against reciprocity in manufactured articles. But the farmers of Canada came and asked for reciprocity in natural products; the manufacturers did not. I venture to think, with all due deference, that the farmers understand their own business and know what they want, and are well able to take care of themselves.

Mr. BEST. If the farmers asked for free trade in farm products, did they not also ask for free implements, and when they got the one why did they not get the other?

Mr. FISHER. In the one case the farmers were dealing with other people's products, in the other case they were dealing with their own products, and they have a better knowledge of their own business and their own products than they have of those of other people.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have not the fruit growers also?

Mr. FISHER. The fruit growers were represented in that delegation, which I think my hon. friend the leader of the opposition listened to, and other farmers were also represented. That delegation were representative of the farmers of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. There were something like 400 from the west, 250 from Ontario, and over 100 from east of Ontario. They represented not only themselves, but they represented the farmers' organizations for whom they spoke. Those organizations had carefully considered these matters and discussed them in their meetings all over Canada, and in resolutions had formulated their desires and their opinions in regard to these tariff matters.

Mr. BLAIN. Does my hon. friend not know that the market gardeners of Canada, on more than one occasion interviewed this government for an increase of duty? Does he not know also that the farmers' representing the pork industry asked for an increase of duty on pork; and does he not know that the day or two after that deputation was here, another deputation came and asked the Prime Minister to leave the duties as they were on farm products?

Mr. FISHER. I am aware of that, and I am also aware of the fact that that delegation that came here represented the farmers at large. There are interests among the farmers, as there are amongst other classes in the community, and those interests may have special desires. At the same time I know, and it cannot be denied, that the organization which came here and made those representations before parliament, were representative of the great farming organizations of this country who had considered this question from all sides, considered every little interest that was affected, and they spoke as representing the farming classes of the whole community.

My hon. friends opposite are very fond indeed of saying that the manufacturers and business men are best able to deal with their subjects and best able to answer for themselves. That is, I dare say, to a certain extent, true, but they do not seem to be willing to allow that the farmers can do the same with regard to themselves and that they can speak for themselves. I do not wish at all to enter into an argument with regard to the general question of reciprocity. That is not the particular question before us at this moment, but I would just like to say that the farmers, under this arrangement, are given the option of selling their products in three markets instead of in two, but they are no more obliged in the future to sell their products in the United States than they have been in the past. If they desire, they can still sell their products in the English, the American or the Canadian market, as they have in the past, and I have confidence enough in the business capacity and judgment of the farmers at large to believe that they are quite able to decide for themselves in which market and in what form they will sell their product. I have confidence enough in the farmers' judgment and business capacity to believe that they will sell their products wherever they can get the highest price and the largest return for their toil. If they can do that in the United States this arrangement gives them the opportunity. To-day they do not have that opportunity, or they do not have it to the extent that they will have it. They have it to-day to a certain extent and, last year, speaking from memory, I think they sold some $30,000,000 worth of agricultural products in the United States, notwithstanding the high duties, notwithstanding the fact that they were prevented as far as possible from doing so. But, in future, they will be able to do it more easily and they need not do it if they do not want to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister has been telling us that the farmers would receive a still higher price than that which they have received in days gone by. Does the minister not believe that when cheap cheese and butter come in here from the United States stamped as Canadian, when they go out to the British market as Canadian and are sold on the same platform with Canadian, it will reduce the value of our Canadian products?

Mr. FISHER. I am not going to argue on false premises. The statement that the hon. gentleman has just made is impossible of completion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Why so?

Mr. FISHER. Because cheap cheese from the United States cannot come into Canada and go to England marked 'Canadian' because the officers of my department will see that it is not done. No American cheese can leave a Canadian port marked 'Canadian' cheese. They tried it and they were stopped, they have been fined for trying it and they will not be able to do it in the future any more than they have in the past. Canadian laws governing the manufacture and commerce in and marking of cheese and butter and dealing with oleomargarine, butterine and all those false products, are just as strict to-day as they have been since they were put on the statute-book, they will be just as strict when this agreement goes into force and they will be just as effectively administered in order to maintain the credit of Canadian products in the European or other markets as they are to-day. But the very legislation which has given that credit and reputation to Canadian products in the British markets will govern them also on the American market, and I venture to think that Canadian butter and cheese, when it is exhibited on the New York, Boston and other markets, will get a higher price than American butter and cheese because we have those laws for the purposes referred to while the Americans, unfortunately for themselves, perhaps fortunately for us in our world competition, have not got, there is no danger and the premise which my hon. friend alleged as a foundation upon which to base his argument is entirely false.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Is it not a fact that the price of butter was better in Canada last year and has been so far this year than in the United States?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. SEXSMITH. Well how is it that they sold so much butter to the Canadian people last year if they had a better market over there?

Mr. FISHER. Because it happened that certain parts of Canada were more convenient to the butter producing districts of the United States, and the butter was able to come in. Now, I have a bone to pick with my hon. friends at the present moment. These hon. gentlemen want statistics, but when we give them statistics they will not accept them.

Mr. PRICE. We say they are no good.

Mr. FISHER. We have given these hon. gentlemen statistics but they say they are no good.

Mr. LANCASTER. Your Finance Minister said that.

Mr. FISHER. Excuse me; I might just recall to the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite one incident that occurred a little while ago in this Chamber. I was speaking on this question and I referred to certain statistics which had been prepared by a valued and efficient officer of my department, with regard to the comparative prices of certain articles in Canada and the United States. I had a statement for some time and I did not wish to read over the full list, day by day, week by week, and month by month, I asked to be allowed to summarize the figures, which I did, and to lay on the table the statement and have it printed in 'Hansard,' but hon. gentlemen opposite refused to allow me. I offered them my statistics, and I asked to have them put in 'Hansard,' so that they might have them at their command. These were just the kind of statistics that they are reproaching us for not giving to them. I offered this statement to them and they would not have it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why did you not put your figures in proper form and then we would have accepted them.

Mr. FISHER. They were in the form of truth, and because they are true hon. gentlemen opposite do not like them. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) refused to agree to have them put on 'Hansard.' A couple of days after the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) asked for them, and a day or two after that I laid them on the table. They are before the hon. gentlemen opposite. They have had an opportunity of consulting and examining them and yet they have themselves brought up other statistics, which they say conflict with these and disprove them. What is the use of our bringing up statistics, laying them on the table and giving them to hon. gentlemen opposite if they will not accept them, if they ignore them? First of all, they refuse to let us put them on 'Hansard,' then, another hon. gentleman asks for them, not knowing, probably, what had occurred a few days before, then they ignore them, and only last night my hon. friend the member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) made a speech in which he himself brought other statistics, other figures, and said that these were the only true ones. I can only say this for the statistics that I laid on the table, that they were prepared by the chief officer of my Extension of Market Division, a man who has been working now for ten years almost in that particular division, dealing with the exports and imports of agricultural products, keeping close track of the prices of these goods all over the world, watching the markets with the aid of the papers which we receive in the department, in all the producing countries, and in the consuming countries, like England and the United States, and keeping track of all this information. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about information, but when that officer has compiled a statement and I offer to put it on 'Hansard' they will not allow me to do so and, when I lay it on the table, they will not acknowledge it. That is enough to show the insincerity of the arguments, the statements and the motion which these hon. gentlemen have brought forward to-night. I leave the case there because I am satisfied that while to-night these gentlemen opposite want to vote on this motion, to-morrow they will want to vote on some other, and they will continue to do everything in their power to avoid voting on the main motion. And, Sir, on the main motion itself there are men over there who are afraid to vote yea, and then again there are men over there who are afraid to vote nay, and they will take every step they possibly can to put themselves on record on some little side issue, so as to avoid voting on the main motion. But I want to warn them that before this session ends they will have to vote on the main motion, and put themselves on record, and go before their constituents and answer for their vote.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I have listened to the Minister of Agriculture on three or four occasions telling this House he was prevented putting a certain statement on 'Hansard.'

Mr. FISHER. This is the first time I have alluded to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman's memory is not good, because I have heard him say so on different occasions, and the peculiar part of it is that there is not one member on this side of the House or on the other side of the House either who could have prevented it. He had an absolute right to put his statement on 'Hansard' if he wanted to and therefore he has no right to reflect on any member of this House because the statement is not published. There is no foundation whatever for such a statement.

Mr. FISHER. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. HENDERSON. I also take issue with the hon. gentleman when he said that the deputation that came here on the 16th December represented the farmers all over this Dominion. It did not. A comparatively small number of the farmers all over this country were represented by that deputation, and we know perfectly well that the deputation did not represent the farmers all over Canada. I am sorry the Minister of Finance is going out of the Chamber.

Mr. FIELDING. I will be happy to come back and listen to my hon. friend.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall refer to a statement made by the Minister of Finance this afternoon and on three or four other times during the session. He stated there was no necessity for bringing down information because reciprocity had been the policy of the Conservative party for 40 years, and I think he also said it had been the policy of the Liberal party. So far as the Liberal party is concerned he can take that to himself, but when he says that reciprocity has been the policy of the Conservative party for a great many years I take issue with him. In 1879, Sir John Macdonald did place in the tariff a standing offer and why he did it I cannot say. I assume that he wanted to show a friendly feeling to the people of the United States, and possibly he wanted to show a friendly feeling to those who were then in opposition to him. He was bringing down a tariff which was a radical change in the fiscal policy of the country, and possibly he was not sure he could carry it, and he said: Here is an alternative. But it is a remarkable thing that in the debate on the tariff of 1879 Sir John Macdonald never made the first reference to this reciprocity clause at all; he never advocated it, he never said it was his policy.

Mr. FIELDING. Does my hon. friend mean that he put it in the tariff because it was not his policy?

Mr. HENDERSON. I mean to say that he put it there not as his policy. His policy was a protectionist tariff to build up the home market.

Mr. TALBOT. With a bribe to the farmer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly he put it in to show a friendly feeling to the people of the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. And sacrifice the Canadian farmer.

Mr. HENDERSON. And to show a friendly feeling to the Liberal party because they had sent Hon. George Brown to Washington to negotiate a treaty. But, what I do contend is that though it was put in there, Sir John Macdonald or Sir Leonard Tilley never opened their mouths in support of it.

Mr. TALBOT. He never meant it?

Mr. HENDERSON. Possibly he did not. He showed conclusively that it was not his policy because his policy was to build up the home markets and reciprocity being diametrically opposed to that, how could it be his policy?

Mr. KING. In to-day's 'Citizen' under the heading 'Just twenty years ago to-day' I read:

The Canadian ministers, Messrs. Tupper, Thompson and Foster have returned from the Tariff conference at Washington. The conference has been postponed.

Would my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) tell me what conference they were attending and what they were trying to get?

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do, and it is not necessary for me to educate him on that point. At any rate, so far as the 'Citizen' is concerned I do not know what it was 20 years ago, but I am not responsible for it to-day, and I take very little stock in its editorials.

Mr. FISHER. You cannot escape from the facts.

Mr. HENDERSON. What I maintain is that so far as I am personally concerned, and I think I can speak for a great many on this side of the House, whether or not Sir John Macdonald did place that resolution in the tariff of 1879, is the Conservative party of to-day to be bound by a policy announced 32 years ago under conditions entirely different from those which now exist? No sane man would say so. I do not believe the Minister of Customs would say that he would be bound by the policy of his leader 32 years ago.

Mr. PATERSON. This is only twenty years ago.

Mr. BROWN. During the by-election in the county of Huntingdon, which took place twenty years ago, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper spoke from the public platform, and he there stated that he came as the unworthy representative of his father who had gone to Washington to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States. Does the hon. member (Mr. Henderson) say those words are not correct?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not saying whether they are correct or not correct. I know nothing about them; I am not responsible for them in any way. I understand that in 1879 the hon. Minister of Customs favoured free coal in this country. Is he bound by that policy to-day? Does he not remember voting for it in 1879?

Mr. PATERSON. I do not deny it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Did the hon. minister put free coal into the pact that he made at Washington a short time ago? Yet he voted for it in 1879, with his then leader, the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, and with his present leader, the right hon. the Prime Minister. They were all free coal men then, but we hear nothing about it now. They say that the Conservative party ought to be bound by a resolution in favour of reciprocity which Sir John Macdonald put into the tariff of 1879, but they go back on their own resolution in favour of free coal. Will the Minister of Finance go down to Nova Scotia and tell the people that free coal is his policy because his leader voted for it in 1879? There would be just as much sense in that as there is in asking us to be bound by a reciprocity resolution that was placed in the tariff of the same year. I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite should be bound by that free-coal resolution, because conditions have changed; neither can they justly say that the Conservative party are bound by a resolution put in the tariff of 1879 under very different conditions.

Mr. LANCASTER. Which they took out in 1897.

Mr. HENDERSON. Just to show how these reciprocity clauses were played with, let me say that when Sir Charles Tupper returned from Washington after negotiating a fishery treaty, the government framed a new standing offer which was very much objected to by a number of us. I remember that men from the Niagara peninsula made a strong protest because it offered reciprocity in fruit. I remember myself strongly protesting with Sir John Macdonald, and what was his answer? I give it just to show that he was not so anxious about reciprocity

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will use the other word if hon. gentlemen wish, because he was not sincere he was playing with the Americans. I am not afraid to make the statement. Sir John Macdonald was very anxious that the fishery treaty which Sir Charles Tupper had just negotiated should be ratified, and he wanted to show the most friendly feeling towards the people of the United States, and therefore, one night he drew up this reciprocity resolution and placed it in the Votes and Proceedings. As I say, we protested against it, and he gave this as an excuse: We are anxious to have that fishery treaty ratified,and we have made this offer in order to gain the friendly ear of the Americans; and if they do not ratify the treaty we will cancel the standing offer. That was about all the sincerity there was in it. We said: Suppose they do ratify the treaty. He said he would cancel the offer anyway. I mention that circumstance to show that the standing offer has been played with, I fancy. by both Liberal-Conservatives and Liberals, for a great many years.

Mr. FIELDING. We did not have any.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am very sorry you began the business this year. I am very sorry you made an offer which is more than a standing offer perhaps. I am very sorry you have gone as far as you have gone.

Mr. FOSTER. So are they.

Mr. HENDERSON. I take this stand: I do not feel myself bound, nor do I believe the Conservative party feels itself bound, by a standing offer put in the tariff of 1879 any more than the Liberal party are bound to vote for free coal because the right hon. leader of the government and the Minister of Customs and the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Richard Cartwright all voted for free coal, with every other member of the Liberal party at that time. Is the hon. Minister of Customs prepared to vote for free coal to-day? Why did he not put it into this reciprocity agreement?

Mr. PATERSON. Because we put in something else.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. gentleman wants to hold the Conservative party bound by an offer that was made by Sir John Macdonald in 1879, and he will not be bound by what he and his leader voted for at the same time. I mention this to show the inconsistency of the hon. gentleman's position. I hope we shall hear no more about this standing offer being the policy of the Conservative party.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, this seems to me to be a very simple question. We have a motion censuring the government for not giving the House sufficient information. As the Minister of Finance is not here at present, I would like to ask the Minister of Customs if he is prepared to furnish us any more information or not? I think we are entitled to an answer, yes or no. I would like to put that question direct.

Mr. PATERSON. When we get to the details, we will endeavour to give you all you can ask.

Mr. PRICE. An answer of that sort is not good enough for us or for the people of this country. We do not intend to be humbugged by this kind of thing. We want this answer: yes or no. The Minister of Customs may laugh at this, but we want to know. Are you afraid to give us this information, or are you not? My hon. and genial friend smiles sweetly; but he dare not give this information.

Mr. PATERSON. So you say.

Mr. PRICE. And why? Simply because you have not got it.

Mr. PATERSON. That would be a good reason.

Mr. PRICE. Two representatives of this government went to Washington to negotiate—two men calling themselves business men to deal with members of the American government, to deal with some of the cleverest men on this continent. And what do they take with them? Do they take statistics? They take a lot of blue-books, and when they get to Washington, do any of us imagine they were looking into these blue-books all the time? They simply made up their minds, as the Minister of Finance told us, that reciprocity was the platform of both the Liberal and Conservative parties. So far as the Conservative party is concerned, I will not go back to how many years, but for a number of years reciprocity has not been part of our platform. You may say what you like, it has not. I want to ask the Minister of Customs whether in the elections of 1900, 1904 and 1908 this was part of the Liberal platform. Did you ever mention it?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, it was part.

Mr. PRICE. When did you mention it?

Mr. PATERSON. On the platform.

Mr. PRICE. Where?

Mr. PATERSON. I spoke in a great many places.

Mr. PRICE. Where?

Mr. PATERSON. I spoke of it in many places on many platforms.

Mr. PRICE. On reciprocity as part of the Liberal programme?

Mr. PATERSON. Read the Liberal platform and you will see it is there, it has been there ever since the platform was enacted.

Mr. PRICE. And the leader of the government had it as part of his platform?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes. You do not seem to understand. It is part of the platform, read it.

Mr. PRICE. Of the Liberal platform?

Mr. PATERSON. The platform of the Liberal party.

Mr. PRICE. For what year?

Mr. PATERSON. It was enacted in 1893 and has been there ever since and is there now.

Mr. PRICE. The platform of 1893? We all know that the platform of 1893 has been considerably changed. The hon. the leader of the government for instance was given the Cobden medal for being a free trader, still he and his government were quite ready and did actually steal the Liberal Conservative platform.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the Minister of Customs if he can deny that?

Mr. TALBOT. It was not worth stealing.

Mr. PRICE. Well you have taken it. I think I am entitled to an answer on that question.

Mr. PATERSON. I certainly did not steal it, but the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) this afternoon dropped it. He said he supported the National Policy of 1911.

Mr. PRICE. That kind of wit may do for Brant, but I do not think it does for us here. I want an answer to this question. If you have got such an awfully good policy in this reciprocity surely you ought to be ready to come out and give us the information we want. You do not seem to give any. My hon. friend you may laugh as much as you like, but this is a pretty serious question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PRICE. You may laugh as much as you like, but I tell you it is a much more serious question than you think it is. You cannot answer a question when it is put to you.

Mr. PATERSON. Let me ask you one.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec). Was it a good thing that we got $1.25 taken off the American duty on lumber?

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Fair play.

Mr. HARTY. What about your interruptions this afternoon. Nobody dared to say a word to you.

Mr. PATERSON. I say that was one good feature, was it not?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Stand up.

Mr. PRICE. It seems to me a very extraordinary thing that after this motion has been moved the Minister of Finance should get up and talk all around the question, and that he will not give us an answer. What are we to understand by this? Instead of being frank and plain about it he started in on all sorts of side issues saying that this was the policy of the Conservative party. We deny that it is the policy of the Conservative party. The leader of the government the other day took up about three-quarters of an hour to prove that it was the policy of the opposition. He may talk for an hour and a half today, and he cannot prove that because it is not the policy of this opposition. The Minister of Agriculture also talked around the question. Are you all afraid to come out frankly and tell us?. It seems to me a most extraordinary thing that this strong government cannot answer a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. PRICE. No, you are not through with me yet.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec). What about lumber?

Mr. PRICE. Lumber will be all right under this so far as that goes, but I do not consider my own personal interests in this matter. I am not elected by my people to represent them in parliament, and think of my personal interests, and I will stand no insinuations of that sort on my character; I am not that kind of a man. After the exhibition of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, and the Minister of Agriculture I have no doubt whatever, what the people of Canada will say when it comes to the next election.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, there are two or three points of interest in this which I think it would be well for us to consider for a very short time. The Minister of Finance, in answering the hon. member who introduced this subject, said: I do not agree with the hon. gentleman who made this motion in regard to lack of information, or need of information; in the first place I do not agree with him that there is any lack of information; in the second place I do not agree with him that there is any need of information. Is it possible to furnish too much information? Is it possible to furnish more than we have had? If we have not got it, and do not need it there can be only one assumption, and that is that we are willing to go it blind. Is this House willing to take up such an important question without information, and go it blind? If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) would get closer together, they could speak without being heard.

Mr. PATERSON. Mr. Speaker, remarks such as the hon. gentleman has made just now come with very bad grace from him, and those on the other side of the House. If I have occasion to say a word quietly to my colleague I can do it. When the Minister of Finance was speaking this afternoon, two or three of the hon. gentlemen opposite were on their feet at the same time, so that it was absolutely impossible for my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) to make himself heard. I want the hon. gentleman to remember this——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. PATERSON—that a minister of the Crown——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPROULE. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson), seems to display a good deal of temper about nothing. I say —and, in my judgment—I say that when a member is addressing ministers of the Crown he has a right to expect that they will show him the common courtesy of listening to him. I say that that is demanded by the rules of the House and by the courtesy of parliament. When two or three ministers are talking among themselves, they do not show the courtesy to the hon. member who happens to be addressing the House at the time, to which he is entitled.

Some hon. MEMBERS, Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. I would like to say something if the hon. gentleman would permit me.

Mr. SPROULE. To say something, or to ask a question?

Mr. PATERSON. I would like to say something on the question the hon. gentleman is discussing.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson), has had his say for the present. If he wishes to ask a question, I shall be glad to give him the floor. But if he wants to debate, I think he has had sufficient opportunity till I have finished.

I was referring to the statement the Minister of Finance made. He does not agree that there is any want of information on the part of the House or any need of it. If there is no want of it, it must be that the information is all supplied. Have we had a reasonable supply of information? I think I can leave that to this House and the country. What has been furnished us? We have the speech of the Minister of Finance giving the articles included in the treaty, and also a small blue-book with a similar list of articles. That is practically all that has been furnished to the House. Yet the minister does not think there is any need of information. If the House is satisfied there is only one conclusion we can reach, and that is that this House is willing to go it blind, for the fact is we have not sufficient information. If we do not desire information, we show no interest in the very vital and important question on which we are asked to legislate binding the people of this country for the future. Is that consistent with what is expected of parliament and members of parliament? In my judgment it is not. Then, is there any need of information? Surely we cannot have too much information. If there is any information to be had with which we have not been furnished, surely we are entitled to it. We are the representatives of the people, and we are asked to enact a law that will bind the people for weal or woe.

Mr. FOWKE. With the hon. gentleman's permission, I would like to ask a question. He is one of the diligent members of this House and in that respect is an exemplar to many younger members. He has stated that all the information before the House is contained in the blue-book brought down by the minister when he made his report to the House. I am aware that other information has been laid on the table. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he is quite certain that he has availed himself of all the information that is in the possession of the House?

Mr. SPROULE. I think I have. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowke) has more, he may profit by it. Now, what information was supplied to the House and the Senate at Washington which have to deal with this same question? Have they only the same information as was furnished to us? I have here the evidence that was given before the Committee on Ways and Means, a book containing 340 pages of evidence, upon which the members could base their judgment. This House has been sitting as a Committee of Ways and Means on this measure, but what information has been given us? But consider how many interests have been heard before the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the United States? I find the following list in this report to which I have referred: Allen Shingle Company, Portland, Oregon; American Hay Company, New York city; W. O. Andrews, Gloucester, Massachusetts, (Fish); Edgar G. Barrett, New York city (wood pulp and paper); Herbert W. Blanchard, Boston, Massachusetts, (lumber); J. H. Miller, Gloucester, Mass., (fish); Arthur L. Millett, Bureau of Fisheries, Gloucester (fish); National Grange (reciprocity); National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, president of; Theo. G. Nelson, Indianapolis, Ind. (reciprocity); N. Y. and Pennsylvania Company, N. Y. city (paper and board); John Norris (wood pulp and paper); P. J. O'Brien & Co., Gloucester, Mass. (fish); Occidental Fish Co., Seattle, Wash.; Senator George T. Oliver, Washington, D.C., (letter to); Oregon and Washington Lumber Manufacturers' Association, Portland, Oregon (lumber); Augustus G. Paine, New York city (paper and board); Isaac Patch, Mayor, Gloucester, Mass., (fish); Capt. George H. Peoples, Gloucester, Mass., (fish); Port Blakeley Mill Co., Port Blakeley, Wash., (lumber); Herman Ridder; Edwin Ripley, Seattle, Wash., (fish); Charles J. Roberts, Bradford, Mass., (fish); D. Rothschild, Grain Co., Davenport, Iowa (barley and barley malt); Don. C. Seitz (wood pulp and paper); Senate and House of Representatives of the state of Washington (reciprocity); F. J. Sensenbrenner, Neenah, Wis., (wood pulp and paper); Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, San Francisco, Cal., (lumber); D. E. Skinner, Seattle, Wash., (lumber); Capt. Sylvanus Smith, Gloucester, Mass., (fish); L. G. Spencer, Columbus, Ohio; Stanwood & Co., Gloucester, Mass., and others (fish); University Lumber and Shingle Co., Portland, Oregon. Then we have the western Codfish Company, on fish, we have the Whitehead North Carolina Lumber Company, and we have two or three other men on fish.

Now all the evidence of these various men representing those industries was taken before that Committee on Ways and Means. They needed that information before they could deal with this question. The question is put to the chairman of that commission: Could this reciprocity pact be amended? The answer is, Yes. I take that large volume of 342 pages, I have gone through a large portion of it, and I find that a great many of the most important industries affected by this reciprocity pact are dealt with, and evidence concerning them is given by experts in those various lines. For what purpose? To give the Committee of Ways and Means the necessary information, information which was furnished to them, but which is not furnished to us. We are told that we do not require any more information. If the American congressmen require this information in order to deal intelligently with this question, do we not also require like information? Is it not our right to have this information? Is it not the duty of the government to furnish it to us? I say that the government is granting scant courtesy to the representatives of the Canadian people in withholding this information. We cannot take evidence. Two ministers go down to Washington to make that compact without calling before them a single representative of the various industries that are going to be affected. We have in this volume a mass of evidence of the most valuable character laid before the Committee of Ways and Means, all of which we are denied. I say it is an insult to deny us that information, which we need in the interest of our constituents. Then I come to another item of information. What is that? Canadian reciprocity. This is from the American standpoint. A list of articles is furnished that are likely to come into that country on account of this treaty, it shows the price of those articles in the countries where they are sold, the current prices to-day, and the prices in the United States, in order to enable them to make a comparison to ascertain in which country they are the better price. That is what they require, that is what this government have not deigned to give us. Then they stand up and tell us that we do not need it, that we have got all the information we require. I go over these items of barley, wheat, horses, cattle, sheep, dairy products, pulp-wood, manufactured and partly manufactured, and lumber, every article accompanied with comparative prices of it in each country, to show what will be the result if this treaty passes. They require that information, and it has been furnished to them, but our government refuses to furnish it to us. Is that doing justice to the representatives of the Canadian people? I go over that return, and I find everything is included in it that will be affected by this reciprocity treaty. It shows how it will affect the various prices, how it will affect the lumberman's prices, how it will affect the fisherman's prices. All this is given to the American congress, not one iota is given to us, we are told we have all the information we want. I have before me here another report of that Committee on Ways and Means, full of practical information. Then they have the tariff negotiations between the United States and foreign countries, containing a great deal of most valuable information. Have we anything of that kind? Not a word; we are denied it. We are sitting here as a Committee of Ways and Means, and nothing is furnished to us. We are expected to cope with the able men of the American congress in holding up our side of the bargain, and we are expected to do it without any information. I take up two or three more reports of the same kind furnished to them, and nothing of the kind is furnished to us. Is that doing justice to the Canadian people? In my judgment it is not. I say that when any minister of the Crown stands up here in face of the evidence furnished to the American congress, and tells us that we have all the information we want, he is insulting the intelligence of this House, and showing that he is not fit to discharge the important duties assigned to a minister of the Crown. If we ask them why they made this bargain without calling before them the representatives of the various industries the answer is: We did not require it, we have all the information. I assume that the members of the American congress will compare favourably, man for man, with the representatives of this House in intelligence. They wanted that information; the United States Executive furnished them that information. But we are told that we do not need it, we can go it blind, and bind the people of this country, no matter how injuriously they may be affected. Then I say that we can go it in haste, and regret it at leisure. I want the people to know how their representatives are treated in this House, that they may judge as to whether the government have done their duty in failing to furnish us with the information that they ought to provide to enable this House to do its duty properly.

Mr. BEST. The hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), said that the newspapers did not bear out the assertion that the price of grain was higher in Canada than in the United States. I will refer him to to-day's 'Globe,' and surely that is an authority to which he will give weight. Wheat for May delivery is quoted in Winnipeg at 90⅛, while the quotation for Chicago is 86¼.

Mr. CARVELL. Will my hon. friend read the quotation for Duluth and Minneapolis?

Mr. BEST. Yes. For July delivery the price in Winnipeg was 91¾ and in Chicago 85⅞.

Mr. CARVELL. What about Duluth?

Mr. BEST. Wait just a moment—or a difference in favour of Winnipeg of six cents.

Mr. CARVELL. Will my hon. friend read Duluth?

Mr. BEST. A difference, as I said, of six cents in favour of Winnipeg. Now, I will give the balance. In Minneapolis the price for May delivery is 92⅛——

Mr. CARVELL. Ah.

Mr. BEST. And for July 93¾. In Duluth the prices are 94⅝ and 92⅝.

Mr. CARVELL. What about that?

Mr. BEST. Now, we come to oats: May, Chicago, 30½; Winnipeg, 33. If that does not prove that prices are higher in Canada than they are in the United States I do not know what does.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? How many pounds would there be in a bushel of Chicago oats?

Mr. BEST. I am giving you the markets in your own paper. You have contradicted the statements that we have made.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman to answer my question. How many pounds would he get in a bushel of Chicago oats?

Mr. BEST. If you get your arithmetic you will see.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). How many pounds are there in a bushel of Canadian oats?

Mr. LENNOX. We do not want Chicago oats at all.

An hon. MEMBER. He does not know.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). No, but he should find out.

Mr. BEST. As far as I know there are 60 pounds in a bushel of wheat on both sides.

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). It is oats I am talking about. You are not talking about the same grades. I would like to inform the hon. gentleman that there are only 32 pounds in a bushel of oats in the United States while in Canada there are 34 pounds in a standard bushel of oats.

Mr. BEST. I would ask my hon. friend if he denies that they are higher in Canada than in the United States?

Mr. MARTIN (Wellington). It would depend on the grade.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish to say only a word on this motion before it passes. The hon. minister (Mr. Fisher), has stated that information was laid on the table of the House and that it was here for the use of members. When he lays a return such as he stated on the table of the House, and when he says that members have it for their own personal use he is hardly putting it in a fair way because one member will take that return and probably keep it for a week or two. It is not printed. All the members of the House who are entitled to examine these records cannot get a return such as this until the member who has taken it away has finished with it.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Reid, Grenville) is an old enough member to know that he can ask to have it printed and it will be done at once.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I might not have been in when it was laid on the table of the House. Why should not the Minister of Agriculture, when he is preparing information on such an important question as this, have it printed so that we could all see it? We are all anxious to see these returns, but he does not do that. Another point that the minister tried to emphasize was that a deputation of farmers came down here and asked for reciprocal trade with the United States. But, when that deputation was here, the Minister of Agriculture, representing the farmers, did not tell them that in making an agreement with Washington they must understand that the products of every other country in the world would be allowed to come in under the same terms as those allowed to Washington, so that the agreement would not be entirely with the United States. Neither did he explain to them that this agreement would do away with the Inspection Act, thus permitting butter and cheese to come in here without inspection. All they will have to do is to bring their products to this side and enter it free of duty; then, they are allowed to do what they like with it. Under the present Act we are able to stop the false branding of cheese. They used to ship it here in bond, brand it as Canadian and then ship it through. But, we have prevented them from exporting cheese branded as Canadian. Cheese going through in bond cannot be so branded, but the moment they bring it in, enter it, and make it so that it does not go through in bond, they can brand it in any way they like?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is no way of preventing them.

Mr. FISHER. Do not be alarmed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And that is exactly what will happen.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then there is another thing. This motion asks for prices. There is no doubt that that is what we should have. We should have statistics showing the trade between each of these countries so that we can show the farmers who are being affected by this agreement exactly the condition of trade not only between the United States and Canada but between the other countries that are going to have the same advantages as those accorded to the United States. I went over to the Department of Customs, and asked them if they would give me some information or if they would make up some statistics for me. They very kindly did so, and no doubt it was perfectly right for them to do it. I am sure my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) is willing, if there is any information in his department of use to any member of parliament, that he should have it. I have this document that I got from this department, and I think it will be so useful to all the members of this House that I am going to have it put in 'Hansard' so that every hon. member can see it, because if the government will not give us information we are only too glad to furnish it so that members of the Liberal party and the farmers of the country can have it. I asked for a statement showing the quantity and value of the undermentioned articles entered for consumption in Canada by countries during the fiscal years 1905 to 1910 inclusive, and here are the articles that were mentioned: Butter, eggs, potatoes, cheese, beef, bacon and hams, mutton, pork in brine, poultry and game, other meat products, cattle, horses, sheep, swine, barley, beans, buckwheat, oats, pease, rye wheat, hay, flax seed, apples, vegetables, all kinds except potatoes. The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the other day emphasized the statement that we did not do any business with these twelve favoured nations, or practically with the British possessions. He led people to believe that that business amounted to nothing. Although the farmers have a very high protection at the present time I find by this statement that in each of the years mentioned we purchased butter, from Great Britain, Australia, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Norway, France, Italy, Turkey, and the United States, and that last year we imported from the United States $16,163 worth of butter. We buy eggs from Hong Kong, Great Britain, China, Newfoundland, France, Japan, and the United States, and last year we purchased $177,577 worth of eggs from the United States.

We are importing potatoes from Great Britain, Australia, Hong Kong, British West Indies, China, Hawaii, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Japan, Spain and the United States, and from the United States last year we purchased $179,849 worth of potatoes and paid the 27 cents a bushel duty. We are great exporters of cheese, but we imported cheese last year from Great Britain, Belgium, China, Greece, Holland, Italy, Norway, St. Pierre, Roumania, Switzerland, Turkey, and from the United States alone we imported $45,319 worth. We purchose beef from many countries, but from the United States alone we purchased last year 1,444,272 pounds valued at $75,864. Of bacon and hams we purchased from a number of countries and from the United States alone we imported bacon and hams to the value of $816,042. We imported mutton from Australia and the United States last year and from the United States alone to the value of $165,749. We purchased pork last year from the United States to the value of $930,000. I will not take time naming all the countries we purchased from because they will appear in this table. We purchased poultry from the United States last year to the value of $52,597 worth, and from all the favoured nations we also purchased pork. We purchased cattle from the United States last year to the value of $25,150. We purchased horses from the United States last year to the value of $401,503, and yet they tell us that under reciprocity we are going to do a great trade with the United States in selling horses to them. We purchased barley from the United States last year to the value of $99,810. This statement I will ask to be allowed to go on 'Hansard.' We purchased, in vegetables of all kinds except potatoes, from the United States last year to the value of $821,236. We purchased these vegetables from almost every country in the world. This is a statement we should have in addition to the prices because this shows all the articles we purchase from the United States, and yet we are told that we will do business with the United States in these articles, notwithstanding that we paid heavy duties on all the articles coming in. What will the result be when these duties are taken off. I have a statement here as to all these matters, and I will put it on 'Hansard' because I got it from the Trade and Commerce Department, showing the business done with all these favoured nations that will enjoy the benefit of this pact, and this statement shows that we are already doing an enormous business with these countries. The Minister of Customs is afraid to give us statistics. He should have a statement of this kind prepared and laid on the table for the benefit of every member of the House. He should have statements prepared showing the prices of these articles in the several countries. It is not too late yet for him to do so. If he gives us this information it will be interesting to the farmers, but he dare not do it because he knows that if he does do it the figures would be considered as official and he would have to stand by them and assume the responsibility for them. That is the reason why we cannot get these statistics. The Minister of Customs tells us that he had all this information before him in Washington, and that he got it from blue books, and if so, these documents are official, and we are entitled to them just as much as he and the Minister of Finance were. If the minister had any documents at Washington why does he not lay them on the table of the House?

Mr. PATERSON. I think you have had most of them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You are only thinking, but I want to know if we hav had them all.

Mr. PATERSON. Go on with your speech.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Minister of Customs is afraid to lay the documents on the table of the House because they will condemn him and his government. The whole thing leads us to believe that the information which came from Washington that the two ministers were acting like school boys the whole time they were there and did not know what they were doing. I have read part of the statement, and I ask that it be printed in 'Hansard' in order that the Liberal members may have it as well as the Conservative members, because I believe that if the Liberals get information such as this and more that we will be able to give them, by the time this vote is taken, we will have them convinced they are wrong and will vote with us. The Minister of Customs and the government are trying to deceive the farmers of this country, and they withhold information, but if that information is given I am satisfied there will be such a howl all over the country that the government dare not try to force reciprocity through, and I am satisfied that if the statement of the Minister of Agriculture is carried out, and that we will have an opportunity of voting on this question, the government will be defeated in this House, and if they are not defeated in the House they will be defeated in the country when the people get an opportunity to vote.

Mr. D. A. LAFORTUNE (Montcalm.) (Translation.) Sir, I would not consider myself true to my mandate if I did not make any observations regarding the motion submitted to you, and I beg leave to answer as briefly as possible the remarks made during this discussion.

The hon. member who just took his seat is a proud man; he challenges the Minister of Customs and treats him impertinently saying: 'You acted as a school-boy'. When this gentleman has the experience acquired by the hon. minister who is a white-haired man, perhaps he will speak more prudently. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) who is presently leaving the House, tells us that if the government is not defeated in this House on this question, it will surely be when the people is called to vote. Prophet, prophet of evil who tells us: 'You shall be beaten.' In my turn, I answer: 'You and your party shall be beaten.' We are awaiting them and we do not fear to face with these gentlemen the opinion of the people.

It is easy to say: 'You shall be beaten.' The experience of these gentlemen is so broad in the matter, they were so often beaten, so often and so well, still they must commence and beat us. Let them take it easy, we both parties must be in it.

I listened with much pleasure but little interest, because indeed I did not learn much from the speakers of the opposition. They spoke about agriculture, but they said nothing new for the farmers. These gentlemen throw blame on the hon. Minister of Agriculture, they are serious men to attack as able a man as the hon. Mr. Fisher who is the natural most legitimate and most qualified protector of agriculturists' interest. This protector of the farmers' interests is on our side, and he and his colleagues took these gentlemen's places, they who closed their yearly accounts with great deficits. Now, we have surplus, and they dare blame these ministers who passed their lives studying these questions, men of such experience as the hon. Minister of Agriculture. These things are unconceivable. These gentlemen try to teach him. I declare this to remind me of the sexton who tried to tell the priest how to say mass.

I listened to these distinguished speakers of the opposition; but some amongst them are not very famous.

When I hear these gentlemen talk about agriculture, and represent themselves as unable to conciliate the producers' interest with that of the consumer, that is evidence to me that they do not know what they are talking about. How can you contend, they ask, that the farmers will have a better market, will have better outlets for their products, while at the same time the consumer will not be called upon to pay more. Well, there is no need of going to school very long to be in a position to answer such a question. For a great many years, I have been taking an interest in farming and breeding; I claim I have a thorough knowledge of all that relates to breeding and agriculture. These gentlemen do not seem to realize that when the farmer is provided with an additional outlet for his products, the sale of these products will thereby be facilitated; even should the prices not be any higher, we will be in a position to sell larger quantities of them, and therein lies the profit. If prices should fall, so much the better for the consumer. The farmer is not anxious to control the whole market; but he may reasonably expect that, through the opening up at his doors of a further market of 92 millions of people, he will have a better chance to sell his products. Buyers will be more numerous, and for instance, instead of piling up our potatoes in sheds, or dumping them in pits, we shall dispose of them and do away with the risk of losing them through spoiling; in that way, will our profits be increased.

I remember that, under the reciprocity treaty which was in force from 1854 to 1866, we had a good market for our horses, and they brought satisfactory prices. Then, following on the termination of that treaty, we had to give up horse breeding, which had become an altogether too risky business. When these reciprocity proposals are in force and we no longer have to pay duties of 45 per cent to get our products on the other side of the line, we will once more be in a position to take up breeding and secure profitable returns.

Honourable gentlemen have referred to market gardening. It is just possible Mr. Speaker, that when that treaty or tariff arrangement comes in force, it will not be entirely satisfactory to all of us. It may be that a minority suffer from it. The remedy will then be to alter our system of farming, of husbandry, and to take up new and more profitable lines in place of those which may be affected by the new tariff.

Were we called upon to conclude a treaty for a period of ten, fifteen or twenty years, I might agree as to the possibility of there being some danger to us in binding ourselves for such a long time. But in this case, what risk is there for us? None whatever. We are not running any risk at all, for both parties to the treaty have the right to terminate it without even assigning any reason in justification of such action. Why then should we not try the experiment? At the expiry of two or three years, should we find trade conditions to be unfavourable to us, nothing can prevent us from repealing the agreement.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds.) (Text.) I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not speaking to the amendment, but he is making a speech on reciprocity.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation.) I am answering the arguments brought forward by hon. gentlemen opposite, and if my hon. friend is unable to follow me, that is not through any fault of mine.

Mr. SPEAKER (Text.) I have allowed a great deal of latitude during this debate to the members on both sides of the House who have spoken.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds.) I think that the rule limits the debate to the question before the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER (Translation.) I wish to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the point of order which has been taken. Under the rules of the House, when an amendment is proposed to the main motion, the discussion should bear entirely on the subject-matter of the amendment. I stated a moment ago that it was rather difficult for me to enforce that rule very strictly, seeing that the trend of the debate had drifted to such an extent, without nobody objecting. For that reason, I did not consider it necessary to interfere. However, now that objection has been taken, I pray the hon. member to restrict himself to discussing the amendment and to confine his remarks to the question implied.

Mr. LAFORTUNE. (Translation.) That is what I am trying to do, and, as I have considerable ground to cover, I do not in the least feel inclined to go beyond.

What efforts have not Conservatives and Liberals made towards restoring the reciprocity arrangement we had with the United States. From the day it was repealed, to what lengths have not both political parties gone in the hope that this treaty would once more be concluded, but always without success.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Did you call the hon. member to order?

Mr. SPEAKER. (Translation.) I stated that the hon. member should restrict himself to discussing the amendement, though acknowleding at the same time that it was rather difficult for me to keep the debate within such bonds, owing to the excessive freedom granted to those who preceded him. However, I shall once more request the hon. gentleman to restrict himself to discussing the amendment.

Mr. LAFORTUNE (Translation.) I am discussing the amendment, and if the hon. gentleman is unable to follow me because I speak French, there is no fault of mine. But his prompter knows well that I am speaking to the question.

I want to show—and I think it will be an easy task—in answer to hon. gentlemen opposite who complain of not being possessed of all necessary information, that they, after all, have more information than they say. When these hon. gentlemen have spent their political life in search of some means of reaching the very object we now have in view, how can they want us to believe that they are not conversant with the proposed treaty, that they have not the required information, blaming the ministers for their groping in the dark, calling them schoolboys because they were not sufficiently acquainted with the necessary documents to represent us properly in Washington? When you make such statements, you are not serious, not any more serious than the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) who stated a little while ago before this House and this country that when his leader, the late Sir John A. Macdonald did put in the statute a resolution offering reciprocity to the United States, the Conservative leader was not serious. Who does the hon. gentleman want to believe that? I have been very sorry to see that there has not been one man on the other side of the House to protest against such an outrage on the memory of the leader of the Conservative party. This contention that Sir John Macdonald did put that reciprocity offer in the statute in order to please the Liberals is simply absurd, to say the least. He liked us the way we generally cherish a mother-in-law.

It has been stated on the other side of the House a moment ago that we have stolen their programme on the national policy. Well, when we have the main motion put through, you will see those hon. gentlemen turning round and say: 'They have stolen our programme; that programme belonged to the Conservative party.' That is the way they will give evidence of their great sincerity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I represent an agricultural riding; I represent a district where the people are conversant with agricultural matters, and I may say I would fail in my duty if I did not make before my country the statement that we are very anxious to get that treaty. And I may add for hon. gentlemen opposite that if they are not informed on this question, we on this side of the House do not lack information. We have studied the question and we do not want any additional information. In this matter, we trust to the long experience gained by the hon. Minister of Customs, the hon. Minister of Finance and my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture. And above all, we have the leader who guides us in whom we have confidence; whenever he asks us for something, it is because it is necessary in the interest of our country.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Perley).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. PERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask if the vote of the hon. member for Labelle has been counted?

Mr. SPEAKER. Did the hon. member for Labelle hear the question put?

Mr. MAJOR. I heard it read in French.

Mr. PERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would not like to question anything the hon. member says, but I think he will remember that you had read the greater part of the resolution in French before he came into the Chamber.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Speaker, I was observing the hon. member for Labelle when he entered this chamber. You, Mr. Speaker, had begun the reading of the motion in French, and had partly read it. There were loud cries of order, and I looked over and saw the hon. member for Labelle passing in, and stooping behind the back row of seats.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I took particular notice when the hon. member for Labelle took his seat, and I remember perfectly well that as soon as he took his seat you began to read the motion in French.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER. My duty consists in asking the member whether he heard the question put. If he answers in the affirmative, the matter ends there.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to question your ruling; but I want to say, in reference to the statement of the hon. member for Bellechasse, that I had the opportunity of seeing and he had not, and that his statement is not in accordance with the fact.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have it settled and understood that if the hon. member only heard the motion partly read, he certainly ought not to record his vote. There is no doubt that a portion of the amendment was read in French before the hon. gentleman entered the Chamber.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HENDERSON. If we are bound to accept the hon. gentleman's word when he says that he heard the motion put, I tell you I would rather not be the hon. gentleman.

Mr. C. B. MAJOR (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, perhaps I have not heard the reading of the motion in English, but I think that I have heard the reading of the whole motion in French.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking on this amendment a few moments ago, I had a statement, which was prepared by the Customs Department, and which contained a great deal of valuable information. It was information that I thought every member of this House should have and that the farmers of this country should have. I read a part of it, but I did not take time to read the whole of it, because it is quite a lengthy document; but I am informed now from the 'Hansard' department that for some reason or other it cannot be printed. I mentioned it, and of course only intended to save time by not reading it. I want this statement printed, and I do not think the government should object to having it printed. There is not any rule that will prevent it being printed when I read it, and I intend now to read it. In addition to that, I have two other statements here. I did not intend to take up the time of the House this evening, but I am going to do it in order to give the people the information.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom of this House to accept statements from the Finance Minister, and from other ministers again and again to be handed in and printed. I think it is quite unfair that any hon. member should have to rise and read a statement that has been prepared by the government. If it were something from a newspaper, I would not object; but this is a return prepared by the government and laid on the table, and I see no reason why the hon. member should not have this handed in and printed in 'Hansard.'

Mr. REID (Grenville). It is a statement that I got prepared in the Customs Department. I have another statement here, prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is practically an official document. I went to the deputy minister and asked him to give me the exports of butter, cheese, eggs, beef, bacon, hams and other meats, taken from the official blue-books of favoured-nation countries, and I have the official document here. I also asked the Trade and Commerce Department for a statement of the imports from favoured nation countries, of various articles such as animals, fruits, grain, meat products, and so on. These are official statements from the departments, and they should be placed before the people of this country. I am very sorry to have to keep the House here to-night in order to place them in 'Hansard.' If the government will take them as official and print them in 'Hansard,' I will not read them, but I take it for granted that the government has stopped the printing of them, and I am going to read them.

The next is a statement showing the exports of products from several countries as taken from their official reports.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds), Might I appeal to the right hon. the Prime Minister? These are official documents from the Department. It would take fully two hours to read these other statements.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I am not talking to hon. gentlemen opposite; I am appealing to the Prime Minister. I never make an unreasonable appeal, and I think this is a reasonable one. I am prepared to stay, but the Prime Minister and I are both about 70 years of age, and we ought to get to bed by 12 o'clock, and I think that with the permission of the House these statements, which are official from the department, might be put in 'Hansard.'

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that on the motion of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), the hon. member for Grenville might have made the same speech and put in the same papers. He seemed to accuse the government of preventing them from being printed in 'Hansard.' The government had nothing at all to do with it. No order was given by the government to the 'Hansard' reporters; we have no power to give orders to the 'Hansard' reporters, and the hon. gentleman was in error in blaming the government because the papers were not accepted by 'Hansard,' That is no fault of ours. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection. It is the rule of the House that nothing should go into 'Hansard' that is not read except with the permission of the House itself. For my part I have no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If the House has no objection, they might go in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. Then these documents were accepted by the House. There was no objection made when the hon. member for Grenville brought the matter up, and we want to know now who gave the tip not to put them in.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It did not come from me or so far as I know from any member of the government.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may say to the Prime Minister that when I made my remarks I referred to this statement and read some of it, but I said that it would take considerable time to read it all, and that if the House would permit me I would hand it in. There was not the slightest objection raised. Then I got a note from 'Hansard' that it was against the rules of the House to print it. But I felt that when there was no objection raised I was entitled to put it in, the same as the Finance Minister did with his budget the other day.

Mr. FIELDING. I assure my hon. friend that the other day nothing appeared in 'Hansard' beyond what I read.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may be wrong there, but he has handed in statements such as I have stated.

Mr. FIELDING. Really not such long documents as the hon. gentleman has read. I am not offering any objection, but there is no comparison between the statements he is reading and the short statistical statements that I have made.

Mr. LENNOX. If there is any reason for handing them in, it is because they are long, not because they are short.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I appeal to the Prime Minister. These documents are very important, and I want them put on 'Hansard' because I want the members to see them. I suppose there are a dozen members wanting to see them. I have only the one copy, and the only way I can get the documents before them is to have them printed in 'Hansard.' I submit that it is hardly fair to compel me to read them when the House never objected to other documents being handed in.

Mr. HUGHES. I take this position, Mr. Speaker, that these papers are already accepted by this House, and are or should be in 'Hansard.' What minister or what member of this House has dared to interfere with 'Hansard'? When these papers were presented by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), were accepted by the House and were sent into 'Hansard,' I want to know who tipped the wink to 'Hansard' not to publish these papers. I claim that the papers are already before 'Hansard' and the House has no jurisdiction.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The order of the House is well known, and I think it should be observed——

Mr. HUGHES. It was observed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER—that nothing should go into 'Hansard except what is spoken. We do not want to come to the American system of having a speech handed over to 'Hansard' without being read. The Minister of Finance and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who is the financial critic on the opposition side, have been allowed, on different occasions, to put in tables of figures. I was not present in the House when the hon.

member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) spoke a moment ago, but I have understood that the figures had been allowed to be taken in. If that be so there is nothing more to be said. But I must say to my hon. friend that if I had been here I think I would have taken exception to the publication of these statements being allowed. The Minister of Finance has to speak officially for the government, and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has to speak officially for the opposition, and they may be allowed to take some liberties of that kind, with the rule of the House, but I do not think this privilege should be allowed to any one member of the House. I understand the matter has been allowed before, and I do not object, for my part, as a member of the government and leader of the House.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not think that any one member of the House has any more right to put in official documents than any other member. There is no one representing me in this House excepting myself, on this side of the House at any rate. Here is an official document from the government that I cannot get printed in any other way than by putting it in 'Hansard,' yet the Prime Minister says there are certain gentlemen, one on that side, and only one, and one on this side, and only one, who are allowed to put in official documents without reading them.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that at this very session others have put their documents in. I may instance the member from Brantford.

Mr. FIELDING. And objection has been taken on the other side to their going in.

Mr. BLAIN. I am pointing out that it is not confined to the Minister of Finance, or to the hon. member for North Toronto.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There has been a misapprehension. I think the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) was under the impression that his figures had been accepted, and so far let it go. I know it has been done; we have allowed others to put in figures; I think my hon. friend from North Simcoe did it, but it is a practice that should be discouraged and not encouraged, I think every one will agree in that.

Mr. BARKER. The question is not about what the practice is. I understand that it was understood those papers should go in. Gentlemen on this side of the House will accept the right hon. gentleman's statement if he will make it, that there has been no attempt to stop the publication of these figures. If the right hon. gentleman says there has not, we are quite content.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are all official figures, there is no objection at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There is no doubt it was agreed by the House that the statement should have gone in. If any objection had been raised at the time, I would have gone on and read the tables, but there was no objection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have these other two, and I shall put them all in at the same time. The others are official documents prepared by the Minister of Trade and Commerce or his department. They contain very valuable information, and I would like to put them on.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Carried.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I shall read them as fast as I can.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not necessary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the Prime Minister would consent I would be very glad.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Life is short and we want to prorogue.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I asked the Minister of Trade and Congress to prepare me a statement showing the exports from the several countries, of animals, fruit, grain, hay, meat products, &c., products of the farm, and he has given me that statement and also the exports of butter, cheese, eggs and grain. They are very interesting to every member of this House, and for that reason I would like to have them printed.

Mr. REID (Grenville)

Mr. PATERSON. I think, perhaps it would be just as well to put a little appendix to the statement that will appear at length. I have no objection to it, in fact I am rather pleased it has gone in. I was going to ask the hon. member what his object is in putting this in.

Mr. BARKER. If the hon. gentleman is pleased that they have gone in we need not waste time in discussing it.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. gentleman attaches importance to it. What I want to point out is that he has placed on 'Hansard' these tables that have taken a very long time to read. His object, I believe, is that this committee may come to an understanding as to the wisdom of this arrangement that has been made. Therefore, it is valuable for that reason. He stated very positively that my colleague and myself went it blind in Washington, we had no figures, and did not know where we were. He said that time and again, and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) said it last night. You have been listening for an hour or two to figures that he says are absolutely necessary to get at a proper understanding of this matter. My colleague (Mr. Fielding), and myself, had this in our possession all the time, all the information for all the years, and yet we are told we have gone it blind. We had it, we had it all. More than that, let me remind these gentlemen who complain that we did not have it, that on the day this session opened, I believe before the address was presented to His Excellency, every one of these hon. gentlemen opposite had these figures in his possession.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where?

Mr. PATERSON. In your desk.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No.

Mr. PATERSON. But here they are, they were taken out of this blue-book which I hold in my hand, taken out of this exactly.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is only one year?

Mr. PATERSON. One year, yes, but we had a knowledge of all the years when we were in Washington. That was the very information these gentlemen have asked for, that they have been cavilling for: they had it on their desks all the time.

Mr. BARKER. No.

Mr. PATERSON. The reason I want to put in this appendix is that this goes to the hon. gentleman's constituents with his remarks.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then why did it take several days to prepare it?

Mr. PATERSON. That is what I am coming to. When this goes to the hon. gentleman's constituents with his remarks, and they read my remarks they will understand that five years ago he had the returns for 1905, which were printed at great expense, and of which three copies were given to him. In 1906, as soon as parliament opened, he had three copies given to him. So in 1907, so in 1908, so in 1909, so in 1910. What I want to bring to the attention of those who read his remarks, especially his own constituents, is the fact that he had these figures in his possession. They will say: you have had these figures for five years to study for yourself; when we sent you to parliament, we did not send you there to sit dumb, and do nothing but play around, why did not you look these things up? They have been printed for you, and given to you. I want to say that in the hearing of the constituents of all the hon. gentlemen who are opposite.

Mr. HUGHES. That voice will nearly reach them.

Mr. PATERSON. That voice has been played on just the same as the biscuits have. I wish it was loud enough to reach the ears of all, that they might understand the utter absurdity of the position these hon. gentlemen take and that their constituents who send them here—and these hon. gentlemen are paid just as much as a minister of the Crown is paid as a member of parliament and just as much bound to do work in parliament as is a minister of the Crown——might see that these hon. gentlemen have absolutely neglected their duty and have confessed ignorance with reference to figures that have been given them year by year. I would like the constituents of these hon. gentlemen to ask them how they think they are earning their money. As to this information you have been clamouring for, you have had it here; you had it all the time. And we had it when we were in Washington making this bargain. Suppose that you had been there, what would you have done?

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. PATERSON. I have a right to speak——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has a right to state his point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. minister (Mr. Paterson) has been making reflections upon you, Sir, accusing you of ignorance——

Mr. TALBOT. Is that the point of order?

Mr. HUGHES. If the hon. minister is not referring to you, Sir, but to the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), he should speak of him as the hon. member for Grenville and not address him directly as 'you.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and I think it is well that it should be taken. The habit has grown up of addressing members directly in the second person which is wrong. A member of parliament should be referred to in the third person, and the Speaker or Chairman addressed.

Mr. PATERSON. I was not aware that I had, perhaps, in the warmth of debate, overlooked that point.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) will understand that, in speaking as I did, I had reference to a habit that has grown up rather than to his individual infraction of the rule.

Mr. PATERSON. It is one of the wisest rules that a deliberative assembly can adopt, for it tends to avoid anything like personal feeling. I was not aware that I had made the mistake, but, having made it, I am sorry. I was pointing out that hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, are sent to understand and discuss public questions. Under the rules of the House they are provided with information of which it is supposed they will make use. But when we find hon. gentlemen with that information in their possession, some of it in their possession for years, and yet saying that they cannot discuss a public question intelligently because they have not the information, what are we to think? I was going to say that those hon. gentlemen might remember another rule of the House —also a good one. I would remind them that a minister of the Crown is also a member of parliament. He is no better, and professes to be no better, or of any higher standing, than any other member. But he is of equal standing with those in this House who oppose him. It is the duty of a minister, when asked a question, to give a courteous answer; that is becoming in a deliberative assembly of gentlemen. But it must not be lost sight of that it is equally incumbent upon every member of the House, in propounding questions to a minister, to propound them as to one who has equal rights with themselves and is equally entitled to courtesy. I think that this is something that ought to be declared. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) —I am sorry he is not in his place—rose to speak. I had occasion to speak to my colleague who sits near me—only two chairs between him and me. I only whispered to my colleague, and I do not think the hon. member for East Grey heard me. But he interposed and was quite cross about it. If we were lacking in any courtesy, I regret it. But I would like to impress on the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite the fact that if there are any members of this House who seem to me to forget themselves oftener than others, they are gentlemen on the other side.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. Let me ask, in all fairness, was there ever any speaker in this House more interrupted than was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to-day? Over and over again two or three members on the other side were on their feet at once, asking questions, breaking in in the middle of a sentence, interrupting almost constantly. Will these hon. gentlemen tell me that any member on that side ever received such treatment from any member of the government?

Mr. BLAIN. May I ask a question. Were not these interruptions made with the consent of the Finance Minister?

Mr. PATERSON. He gave his consent, it is true. But I know my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) does not think it was just the proper proceeding to interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) as he was interrupted this afternoon. Often, he had the second question before the first was answered. Now, as to going to Washington——

Mr. LENNOX. Might I, without interrupting the minister too much, ask a question on the point he raises. Does not he think that there is some difference between members on this side talking to each other while a minister of the Crown is speaking, and a minister who is being addressed carrying on conversation with some member in his neighbourhood? It was to that, as I understood, that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) took objection. He was, of course, formally speaking, addressing the Chair, but he was directing his remarks to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), I think, and he felt sensitive because the Minister of Customs was addressing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). In the same way—if the minister (Mr. Paterson) will not think I am interrupting too long—perhaps we are more entitled to some indulgence in the way of asking questions, of the ministers of the Crown than we would necessarily show to other members. For we naturally look to ministers of the Crown to give us information. I do not think the ministers ought to think that it is done offensively, I think it is done in perfect good faith; and the Minister of Finance, I thought, enjoyed it very much, it helped him very much in his speech.

Mr. PATERSON. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman said. Only there are times, maybe I am a little hasty, when questions are put in a manner and with a tone that seem to carry the idea that a member of the House has a right to adopt a more arrogant, I will not say, insolent, tone in addressing a minister than necessary. I am not finding any fault. But when hon. gentlemen opposite have said that my colleague and myself went down to Washington, that we went down blind, that we did not know what we wanted, that Taft had the whole thing planned right out, that he gave it to us, and we had to sign the document—of course it was a very silly thing to say, remembering what other hon. gentlemen have said that Taft was able to get everything he wanted, and others have said that he wanted to get reciprocity in manufactured articles and was denied. Now, let us look at the bargain we did make. Here is the answer that is given. We had all those figures that were given here to-night.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Can the minister state now that all the figures I put in to-night have been before the members of this House for the last five years? Is that right?

Mr. PATERSON. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have put on the 'Hansard' statements showing the exports from the twelve favoured nations as taken from the official blue-books of those nations, and I never had them submitted to me by this government or any other government. They are not on the records in the Library, they are not sent to us each year, there is not a single place in the city of Ottawa where you can get these records except the Trade and Commerce Department of Ottawa. When the Minister of Customs makes the statement that for the last five years I have had all these figures before me, it is a statement that he cannot possibly justify, because it is absolutely untrue.

Mr. PATERSON. That is not very courteous either. My statement was with reference to the figures that he read and that were put on the 'Hansard.'

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am speaking of the official documents I presented here to-night.

Mr. PATERSON. I make the statement with reference to the figures the hon. gentleman took so much time in reading, that he had these. I knew that he did not get them from the Trade and Commerce Department, I have not seen them, and he did not read them. But I say with reference to what he was basing his argument upon that he had all these, and we had them all the time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They were not compiled as I gave them to-night. We never had that statement compiled as I gave it to-night. We never had that statement compiled until I read it to-night, and the department he presides over never had them on file, because his officials told me they were never compiled.

Mr. PATERSON. What I say is that the hon. gentleman would expect it to be part of his duty to compile these.

Mr. PRICE. Why should that be so? It is the duty of the minister to give us these.

Mr. PATERSON. What are the blue-books placed in the hands of members for except for their information?

Mr. BARKER. Did the Minister of Customs compile the figures for the five years, or did he go to Washington without doing so?

Mr. PATERSON. No, I did not compile them.

Mr. BARKER. You did not know then?

Mr. PATERSON. Did we not have the blue-books with us? Certainly we did. But we are charged with going down there blind, that Taft handed this out to us and we signed it. Another gentleman says that we were carried away; two or three of them say: You did not have the figures with you and you dare not deny it. Another gentleman says that we did not know what talc was. Because I was making an allusion to the fact that in its highly finished state it was used for an adornment of the person, he thought we did not know that it was used in manufactures. But it is not necessary to contradict that. We had men here who were interested in the business, they came to us and explained it to us, they gave it to us in writing, we took it up at Washington with full knowledge of what the rate of duty was, and with that knowledge we had the duty cast off, and we had an important industry established in one of the eastern counties of Ontario that I believe will employ hundreds of men, according to the statements that we have from these gentlemen. Then we are met with the charge: You have given away the natural resources of Canada to the Yankee.

Mr. PRICE. May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. PATERSON. No, sit down. We are charged with giving away the natural resources of Canada. Why, according to what they are telling us, these natural resources would lay there for centuries so far as Canada is concerned, producing no wealth, and forming no active asset of the wealth of this country, unless we had got the duty removed. Yet these gentlemen say: You went down blind, you did not know what you were talking about. Others say: You did not get what you wanted, but you took what you could get. Then again you say that the president got everything from us that he wanted to get, yet they themselves admit that President Taft was anxious to get reciprocity in manufactured articles, and he did not get it. But let us take some of these items. Is it not funny that hon. gentlemen are seeking so much information? Has not the hon. member for North Toronto denounced this? Has not my hon. friend standing up (Mr. Macdonell) denounced this agreement? Now he says he did not understand it, now he wants information to make up his mind. We cannot pronounce intelligently on this agreement, they say, and yet they did pronounce against it, and pronounced positively that it was an injury to this country. That is the positioin they are in. Why didn't they wait until we got the information?

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The hon. gentleman, I think unwittingly, has said that at least in regard to one industry, namely, talc, the government held secret conferences with certain persons who were about to establish that industry, from which persons information regarding the talc industry was obtained, and with that knowledge so obtained in that private manner, behind closed doors, the hon. gentleman goes to Washington, and in the light of that private information of which the public knew nothing, that transaction with regard to talc was made. May I ask the hon. gentleman was that course pursued with regard to each and every other item or industry that is affected by this pact? Was the pact formed by secret conferences behind closed doors with private information got in that way and acted upon without public knowledge?

Mr. PATERSON. Every one that wished to make representations to the government in reference to the articles that he had knowledge of, and in which he was interested was at liberty to come and make such representations in the very same, open manner in which these gentlemen came, and in every case they were heard and their arguments considered.

Mr. PRICE. May I ask the minister——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman refuses the privilege of asking a question.

Mr. PATERSON. And more than that we were in correspondence with people who were not down there. People were writing to us down there.

Mr. PRICE. Have you laid that correspondence on the table?

Mr. PATERSON. No.

Mr. PRICE. Why not?

Mr. PATERSON. Because it was private correspondence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. Does the hon. gentleman understand that these gentlemen were writing to us, giving us the details of their business, and are such communications to be laid on the table of the House? You have the result in this agreement.

Mr. BARKER. We want to know all about it.

Mr. PATERSON. About the details?

Mr. BARKER. Yes, everything.

Mr. PATERSON. I will tell you one thing; I will tell you what the malt interests told us. They said what they wanted and they said that if the duty were so and so it would be ruinous to them. What did we do with the malt business?

Mr. BOYCE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PATERSON. Oh, no. What did we do with the malt business, if you want a common sample of it? They had a duty on malt and they said that they wanted their interest guarded. What was done? We left our malt duty on just as it was in the tariff. The American duty was about two and a half times as high as ours and we had the American government reduce their duty to our duty. So, it was with respect to other questions when they came up. We knew this, yet, these hon. gentlemen say that we do not know anything about it, that we went it blind. They have the information now; let us see all that would happen if these eggs and cheese and butter should be allowed in. Of eggs 750,456 dozen came into this country. This is going to ruin the farmers! If you multiply the dozens by twelve that gives you 9,000,000 of eggs. Thus, every man, woman and child in this country will get an egg and an eighth a year. You asked for information! I am giving it to you and you will not believe it. We have heard about butter; 389,462 pounds of butter came into this Dominion not only from these twelve countries, but from all countries. I reduce it into ounces and I find that 6,231,392 ounces of butter came into this country—three-quarters of an ounce of butter, for every man, woman and child in this country in a year! Now that you have that information, do you think it will help you to make up your mind whether you are in favour of this agreement or not? But here is another thing. The cheese industry is going to be ruined! 662,568 pounds of cheese coming into this country! This man Fielding went down there and had President Taft gold brick him!

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PATERSON. Reduced to ounces it represents a little over 10,000,000. That is worse than the butter, because it is an ounce and a quarter for every man, woman and child in this country in a year.

Mr. PRICE. How many pounds are coming in when reciprocity agreement goes through?

Mr. PATERSON. That is what you will have to make up now with the information you are getting. We got this out of the same blue-books that the hon. gentleman had all the time.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Give us biscuits too.

Mr. PATERSON. I agree with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Price), said, when he candidly admitted that as a lumberman this arrangement was in his favour but he was not sent here to represent his own interests. He took the right view of it. No gentleman ever hears me discussing my own business. I do not think it is very good taste to do so.

Mr. HUGHES. Do they not taste well?

Mr. PATERSON. Sometimes some hon. gentlemen want to give the impression that, somehow or other, from my being in the ministry and having something to do with framing the tariff, the duty on that article was by that means raised higher than it was under the previous government. Well now, I am not saying anything about it and I do not want to say anything about it, but if hon. gentlemen entertain that idea they are entertaining an absolutely fallacious one, an untrue one, because the fact is that the duty on that article has been reduced. It was reduced when we inaugurated our own policy and it is further reduced and largely reduced under this agreement. But, I do not want to talk of my own business. I do not know that it is right. I heard my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), and while I sympathize with him if he thinks he is hurt I think it would be better taste for a man to leave the advocacy of business in his own interest to some one who is not connected with it. Therefore you never hear me talk about my own business at all. I find myself maligned. I find statements made in a public manner that give that idea to the people; in fact, it has been absolutely stated in the public prints and I have not taken the trouble to deny it. If it is any fun to hon. gentlemen opposite, if it is a mark of superior wit and wisdom that was manifested by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster)—I do not think it elevated his position in the House to undertake to picture me sitting on a biscuit box or something—but if it amuses hon. gentlemen opposite, I am sure that I do not begrudge them the merriment it gives them. I do not think I have said as much as this in my life. Of course, I am not connected and I have not been connected in any active way with any business since I took office under my leader.

Mr. HUGHES. Just a sleeping partner.

Mr. PATERSON. I have a little money invested. It has to be invested in something, but as to drawing salary or getting any remuneration, I have never done that. If that company is fortunate enough to have any dividends I hope to share in them the same as you gentlemen do. I do not suppose that you wish me to take what little money I have and wrap it up in a handkerchief. I make this statement in the presence of gentlemen. I shall find out whether they are gentlemen or not, I shall find out which of them makes a suggestion of this kind which carries with it the inference that Paterson is in there in his own interest. I agree with the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Price), that no man should come here to forward his own interests. He is sent here to exercise his best judgment in the interest of the country. I have told you simply how we conducted these proceedings in Washington and how we arrived at our conclusion. When we were at Washington we knew that last year there were 662,568 pounds of cheese imported into Canada but we knew we exported 180,000,000 lbs. of cheese and we took it for granted that in view of this we could hold our own in cheese with the United States. As to potatoes, it is true that while 513,735 bushels were imported last year from all sources, we exported 1,923,595 bushels.

An hon. MEMBER. Where to.

Mr. PATERSON. We exported 780,632 bushels to the United States, which is 150,000 bushels more than we imported. The Minister of Finance told you that he did not think it necessary to have statistics on all these things, but we knew about the exports and imports of lumber just as hon. gentlemen opposite could know if they took the trouble to open the blue-books. The hon. gentleman who interrupted me so often knows something about the business, and we knew it too. We knew there was a duty of $1.25 on lumber going into the United States, and we believed from the information we had that it would be a good thing for the lumber interests of this country if without putting a duty on lumber here we could get the Americans to take their duty off lumber, and so far as I am concerned I made up my mind that if we got the Americans to do that I would agree to it, statistics or no statistics.

Mr. PRICE. Did the hon. gentleman ever consider that the new Congress might possibly make lumber free?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What difference does that make?

Mr. PRICE. It makes all the difference in the world to the lumberman.

Mr. PATERSON. If the Democrats should make lumber free, and this agreement goes through——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Though it is rather late in the day I think I should interfere. The hon. member (Mr. Paterson) was allowed to address the House in answer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Grenville in reference to statistics and figures. The hon. member is now addressing the House on the question of reciprocity which is not before the House in any form at present. The question before the Chair is simply: Shall the House go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the discussion should be confined to what that question allows. The question as to the information to be brought before the House arising out of the motion was discussed very broadly, and the amendment to the motion has been voted down. On the motion now before the Chair it is not permissible to discuss matters that are to be discussed in committee, or matters that are before the House in some other form.

Mr. PATERSON. I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and in explanation I may say that I was endeavouring to point out that the statistical information has been before hon. members for years, and that now it is before the committee. However, I will not pursue the question further.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask a question?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the question applies to this——

Mr. HUGHES. It is absolutely relevant. I was waiting for him to get through with his irrelevant talk in order that I might put the question. He has been telling us that all the information is within our reach, but I would like to ask him where, in any Canadian official record a member of this House can obtain the following information: The price and cost of production in Canada of the articles referred to in the reciprocity treaty; the price and cost of production of these articles in the United States, and in the dozen other favoured nations who come in under this arrangement. I have some of this information, but I have not been able to get it from any Canadian records. The minister cannot show where we have received that data, or had any opportunity of getting it.

Mr. PATERSON. No, I do not think you can get all you ask for there. You will find in a publication of the Department of Labour, a partial answer to that. When the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) was speaking last night, making a practical speech, and giving the figures of quantities of oxen, sheep, grains, &c., I asked him where he got those figures. I said that I did not know of any place of getting them that could be depended upon except the census, which was taken only once in ten years. He said they had some way of getting that information interim.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That was the United States book.

Mr. PATERSON. It was the United States book, but it must have been compiled from some source. When you estimate the total crop, you will be able to form an idea, but I do not think you can get the absolute figures, nor do I know that you can get them from any other country.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). May I ask the Prime Minister if it is not now time to adjourn?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The way to adjourn is to carry this motion and go into Committee of Ways and Means, and adjourn afterwards.

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, there are one or two matters to which I wish to call the attention of the House, arising out of the long and irrelevant dissertation of the Minister of Customs. He has read the opposition a lecture on courtesy, but has absolutely ignored the manner in which the members on his own side of the House have conducted themselves, and he himself, during the whole time he was speaking, was out of order, and was so ruled by you, Mr. Speaker. I do not rise for the purpose of endeavouring in any way to retaliate on the Minister of Customs, although he did not accord to me the courtesy which I might have expected from him. I rose to ask a question quite relevant to his remarks, and he answered me by shouting at the top of his voice: 'No.' The hon. gentleman has given the House a great deal of information and insight into the transactions that took place in the negotiations at Washington. Some curious things have been stated by the Minister of Customs, who seems to be suffering from a state of mental aberation to-night.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the expression 'mental aberation' is out of order.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I will say that this is perhaps in the minister's normal condition of mind, or absence of mind. I cheerfully concur in your ruling. But the hon. gentleman has let some feline animals out of the bag to-night. He has diametrically contradicted the Minister of Finance, and this House has to judge which statement is true, that of the Minister of Finance or that of the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Customs says there was a lot of information which they had before them which was not in the blue-books at all. That this is absolutely true is shown by the statements of exports of favoured nations to different countries of products which are the subjects of that treaty. That information was before them; it is not before this House. He stated that he had corresponded with a number of firms whose business was affected, or was likely to be affected by the pact under consideration. That correspondence was before him; it is not before this House. And yet what did the Minister of Finance say on his responsibility as a minister in this House, when asked for that information on March 9? He said: 'Whatever information has been available in reference to the reciprocity matter has already been placed before this House.' That statement will be found in 'Hansard' at page 4931. What does the Minister of Customs say to that? These hon. gentlemen, when lecturing the House on courtesy and manners, are demonstrating that they are wanting at any rate in accuracy in their statements, because the Minister of Customs, in the long dissertation to which he treated us, told us of a lot of information which no hon. member yet knows anything about; and yet the Minister of Finance states, in answer to the leader of the opposition, that whatever information they had was already before the House. But the Minister of Finance went further.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is the hon. member quoting from a previous debate in this House?

Mr. BOYCE. I am speaking of a question which appears on the records of this House at page 493.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not at liberty to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. BOYCE. I will say this, then, that the Minister of Finance has attempted to show this House that all the efforts of the opposition to-day to obtain information from the government upon which this agreement was based were entirely unavailing, as the information has already been in the hands of the members for a long period of time. The Minister of Customs says that whatever information was available has been brought down to the House. The Minister of Customs says, practically, there are mountains of information which we have and which we do not propose to disclose. Which is true? Therefore, in conclusion, I desire to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones, and before he starts out at a late hour and after a protracted debate to bully the opposition, who are pursuing the proper course in asking for information to which they are entitled, he should make sure that he is right himself.

Mr. PATERSON. May I be forgiven.

Mr. EDWARDS. I wish to ask the Minister of Customs a question. As I understand from the minister the statements as to exports from these various countries which will be included under this arrangement if it goes through, inasmuch as they will have the right to send their goods into this country on the same terms as the United States, are obtainable only from the Department of Trade and Commerce, that is that department has certain documents which they obtained from these various countries which are not available to all members of the House as they are to the Department of Trade and Commerce and to the cabinet. But in addition to that we have a statement here to-night from the Minister of Customs that he was provided while at Washington with certain private correspondence in relation to the matters which they were discussing bearing on this arrangement. Thus the Minister of Customs has admitted that he and his friends on that side of the House were in possession of information not available to members on this side of the House, and I put it to you, in all fairness, if the members of this House were supposed to arrive at an honest conclusion in regard to this matter should not the members on this side have had all the information that was available to the members on the other side of the House? Why should the Minister of Customs and his colleague, the Minister of Finance, and others on that side of the House have in their possession correspondence which was denied to us? That does not seem to be treating all sides fairly. I do not think we have had the information which we should have had; I do not think there has been a disposition on the part of the government to give us that information. When this matter first came up it was difficult to get the information from the Finance Minister that these twelve favoured nations would come in on the same terms as the United States; it was only after great effort that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), fairly drew that information out of the Finance Minister. The Minister of Agriculture has referred to the farmers and has said that we should be willing to let the farmers say what they want. But the farmers have been telling this government for years that they want a lower duty on agricultural implements. That has been the demand of the farmers from end to end of this country. There was no disposition on the part of the government to accede to that request. The Minister of Agriculture is willing to accept an expression of opinion from the farmers when it suits him, but not to accept an expression of their opinion made in much stronger terms when it does not suit him because the manufacturers have to be protected. To-night he has more confidence in the judgment of the farmers than he had some years ago. In 1909 he charged the farmers of Canada with being a slipshod, lazy and indifferent class of people. His remarks will be found at page 2029 of 'Hansard.' These are the same gentlemen on whose intelligence the minister to-day says we should rely. To what extent will he rely on their intelligence? Just to the extent it suits his purpose in carrying this agreement through, but no further. The manufacturers must be protected, the manufacturers who were represented in this country from end to end.

Mr. NESBITT. I rise to a point or order. The hon. gentleman has been discussing the agreement for the last five minutes.

Mr. BOYCE. Why not?

Mr. NESBITT. Because it is out of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A discussion of the reciprocity agreement which is now before the Committee of Ways and Means is not in order at the present time. If the hon. gentleman is applying his remarks to that, he is out of order.

Mr. EDWARDS. I thought I was in order in referring to remarks of the Minister of Agriculture to-night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That would be referring to remarks made on the amendment, which has been disposed of.

Mr. EDWARDS. I wish to ask the Minister of Customs a question. In considering this matter, we have to take into consideration not only the United States and Canada, but these 12 favoured nations. In doing so we should consider the exports of these countries, the prices of articles in them and what it costs to transport these articles in to this country in case they come into competition with us. The minister says he was in possession of certain facts when he was at Washington negotiating this treaty. Did they have a compilation of the exports of these several countries which, if this agreement is ratified, will come into competition with this country? Did they have before them a compilation of the exports of these countries, the prices in them and the cost of exportation of the goods of these countries to Canada?

Mr. PATERSON. No, we certainly did not have that. We did not think it was necessary to have that; we do not think it is necessary yet. We had with us in the documents which are now before the House and which are being published in 'Hansard,' what concerns us, that is the shipments of these countries to Canada and the exports of Canada to them. That shows the trade with these countries. For instance, in considering the exports of Argentine, you consider what our trade with Argentine has been. From Argentine, I think, the imports were about $2,100,000. Of that $2,000,000 was hides. As to these other countries, we have no trade with them that amounted to anything that would interfere in any way with our industry.

Mr. EDWARDS. The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) has made the very frank admission that he had not these figures before entering into the consideration of this matter. I think he will not dispute my statement when I say that, in considering how this country would be affected by the ratification of this agreement, the cost of production of things in other countries that come in competition with what is produced by our people should be taken into account, and also the cost of transportation to this country. It is all right to give the exports of these countries, but it is also necessary for us to know what it costs to produce these things. Take, for instance, the wheat of Argentine. It has been said that the wages in that country are 64 cents a day. Surely this fact is something to be taken into account when we are considering a change of trade relations that would throw the farmer of Canada into competition with the farmers of that country. If the Minister of Customs had not—and we must accept his statement that he had not—these facts before him, I do not see how this House can arrive at any conclusion with regard to this matter, a sensible, logical conclusion as to how this arrangement would affect this country, without having these facts before us.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I wish to ask a question which, perhaps, will help us to arrive at a determination in this business. So far as the hon. gentleman from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) is concerned, he has indulged in a great deal of nonsense—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish)—to which nobody could give serious consideration. But I would like to put a question to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain). He is a gentleman whom we all recognize as an authority on all questions that pertain to agriculture. Coming from an agricultural constituency, as I do, and being slightly in the dark—not so very much, because I have heard the question discussed on both sides—I am always open to hear something from the hon. member for Peel. The question I wish to ask is: Can the hon. member for Peel give us some wise remarks on something that pertains to something agricultural?

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 1.05 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY April 7, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WATER CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

Mr. BRODEUR moved:

That the Committee on Marine and Fisheries in view of the complaints made concerning the clause 10 of the Water Carriage of Goods Act, be empowered to investigate those complaints, send for persons and papers and report from time to time.

He said: This motion is made at the suggestion of the Committee of Marine and Fisheries. Last year a clause was inserted in the Water Carriage of Goods Act providing that ship owners in the case of wood goods would not be liable for the measurement of those goods but simply for the quantity of goods put on the bill of lading. This appears to have created a very great disturbance in the trade if we are to judge from complaints which have reached us. However, as this Bill was not before the committee it was impossible for them to investigate the matter. I understand there is a very strong delegation in Ottawa to be heard by the government and also by the committee, and this is to give to the committee the right to hear those persons.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the motion is a very proper motion. My attention has been called to some complaints against the section the minister has mentioned, section 10, and if I am not mistaken, the legislature of the province of New Brunswick has passed a resolution on the subject calling attention to the fact that certain shipping interests in that province are very injuriously affected by the clause as it stands now.

Motion agreed to.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the orders of the day are taken up, I wish to refer to a question asked yesterday and to my mind the answer was not clear. I noticed a statement that the Anglo-Japanese treaty had been ratified, and I wished to inquire whether there was any correspondence between the Canadian government and the imperial government with reference to the advisability of not including Canada in the favoured-nation clause of that treaty. The answer to my question was:

The question of whether or not Canada will desire to adhere to this treaty or to make an independent treaty, is now under consideration.

Now, that does not give any information at all. I took it for granted that there probably had been some correspondence between the Canadian government and the imperial government with reference to this treaty before it was made, and that the Canadian government had expressed the desire either to be included or excluded. Then I asked as to the favoured-nation clause, and the answer was:

We have not yet a copy of the treaty, and whether it includes the favoured-nation clause or not we are not informed. We should have a copy, no doubt, in due course, and then the question will have to be considered whether Canada should seek to adhere to the treaty or make a special treaty.

I desire to get information in view of the reciprocity pact that is before us, and because it has come out that we are affected already by the trade of twelve or thirteen other countries who will take advantage of the favoured nation clause. I thought it was desirable that we should not in future be under the favoured-nation clause, in any new treaties made, and I thought there would probably have been some correspondence before now on that subject with the imperial government, advising them not to include Canada in the favoured-nation clause.

Mr. FIELDING. We have been advised by the imperial government that they were negotiating a treaty with Japan, and we have been asked whether it is our desire to be included in a joint treaty, or whether we should remain separate. Our reply was that we did not wish at present to be included, but so soon as the British treaty was concluded we would be very glad to have a copy, and then we would consider what action Canada ought to take. I do not recollect that there was any special correspondence on that particular item of favoured nations. All that has happened is that we have been informed that this treaty was under negotiation. We expressed a willingness to consider the matter, but we preferred the British government should complete their treaty, and then we would determine upon the part Canada should take. That is where Canada stands at the present moment.

Mr. FOSTER. I should judge from something I have seen in late telegrams, that some little change has been made by the British government in her method of arranging such treaties, namely, to allow the overseas dominions, or any one of them who wished, either to accede to a treaty or to get out of the treaty by a year's notice, without this having any effect upon the treaty as a whole. That would be a very desirable thing, I think. Very often a whole treaty would go by the board if any part of it were denounced; the general consideration overrides the special one. If, however, the self-governing dominions were brought into the negotiations, and the treaty were so framed that they could give notice of its denunciation without affecting the treaty as a whole, it would seem that would be a special favour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The whole view of the treaty referred to by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is answered by the fact that this government is not included in the Japanese treaty now negotiated by Great Britain.

DESIGN FOR A CANADIAN POSTAGE STAMP.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether it is a fact that the imperial authorities submitted to him a design of a stamp to be used this year, and that he has told His Excellency that he does not consider it appropriate, and intends to get an entirely Canadian design of a stamp for the present year?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have made no such declaration. It is true that I received a design, but I have passed no judgment on it yet. I am much surprised that such information has reached my hon. friend.

THE FARMERS' DELEGATION.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that some time ago an order of the House was granted for copies of the proceedings on the occasion of the visit of the farmers' delegation to this House on the 16th of December last. Very few copies seem to have been printed. I have had requests from eighteen delegates in my constituency for copies, and I have been unable to supply them because of the insufficiency of the number printed. I think we should have a larger number printed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand there are copies available. I do not know how many have been printed, but if my hon. friend applies, he can get copies at the present time.

COAL STRIKE IN THE WEST.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to inquire from the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) if he has any late news concerning the strike in the Crowsnest Pass, and how matters are proceeding there.

Mr. KING. In reply to my hon. friend, perhaps I could not do better than to indicate just what has been done by the government since the cessation of operations at the mines in southern British Columbia and Alberta. When my hon. friend asked about this question previously, I read to him then a message that had been sent by myself to the miners interested in the dispute, and I had not at that time received a reply from them. The reply came just on the eve of the cessation of operations, and as it sets forth the position of the miners, perhaps I could not do better than to read it to the House. It is dated Michel, March 30:

Our agreement provides that we meet at least thirty days prior and in some cases more, to the expiration of our agreement, and having complied with this we believe that we have thoroughly complied with the spirit of the Act.

My inquiry was whether they intended to cease operations without first having an investigation under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

The operators have not shown any disposition to renew the agreement along any lines that would be fair to ourselves, but have placed themselves in such a position that they could continue the present conditions of affairs until such time as they could force from us the concessions they desire. We are not of the opinion that our action can be construed as being a breach of the Act, and would like to draw attention to the fact that we have at all times complied with the law and have no intention of doing otherwise.

When that wire was received, I communicated with Mr. McNiven, who is the officer of the department at present in southern British Columbia, and asked him to endeavour to have each of the parties, in view of their liability under the Act, refer their differences to a board in accordance with the provisions of that measure. He did that, but was met at the outset with the circumstance that the international executive in Indianapolis was considering the alleged strike and that they might pass upon it in a manner which would end the matter summarily. Consequently, Mr. McNiven was unable to get any direct statement from either of the parties as to what they would do until word had come from Indianapolis as to the position which would be taken by the international executive. It seemed to me prudent under those circumstances to send a communication to the international executive informing them that the government was informed that they had under consideration this situation in southern Alberta and British Columbia, and ask what their attitude would be with regard to any strike which might be contrary to the laws of this country. The reply that was received from the international executive was in the following words:

Indianapolis, Ind.,
April 5, 1911.

F. A. Acland,
Deputy Minister Labour,
Ottawa.

Question of negotiating wage contracts is a prerogative of Canadian miners district organization. We believe in a strict compliance with the laws of Canada at all times. Are advised that the miners of Canada have not in any sense violated the Industrial Disputes Act. We believe in the trades agreement method of settling industrial disputes and in a rigid observance of all wage agreements.

By order of the executive.

JOHN P. WHITE,
President.
EDWIN PERRY,
Secretary.

The position thus taken by both the miners in British Columbia, and southern Alberta, and by the international executive is that the present cessation of operations does not constitute a strike under the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. Whether they are right or wrong in that position is a matter which can be decided by procedure under the Act. The Act in this respect has been tested on different occasions. I mentioned the other day in reply to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that a company in which he was interested in Alberta locked out its men while a board was carrying on an investigation, and that the men proceeded under the Act to enforce the penalty against the company for so doing, and recovered the penalty provided by the law. If, in the present case, the miners are wrong in the contention which they are making, it is open to the operators, if they are affected by the suspension of operations, to seek redress in the same manner.

However, that is only one part of the case. The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act was intended for two puroses, one, to enable the parties to an industrial dispute to find a more satisfactory way of settling their difficulties than by resort to a strike or lock-out, and the other, to enable the public to ascertain who is in the right, and who is in the wrong with regard to a situation which affects itself. The parties apparently have not chosen to take advantage of the Act to adjust their difference. They may have their own motives for that, but, on the other hand, there is the other purpose of the law, as to permitting the public to know the true inwardness of the situation. Accordingly, when it becomes apparent that the parties were not going to submit their differences to a board of investigation, I thought it desirable to communicate with the officer whom we have in British Columbia, and have him see each of the parties, and point out to them that it was open to either employers or the men to ask for an investigation under the provisions of the Act. I shall read to the House the message that was sent because it has an important bearing on the present situation:

Ottawa, April 3, 1911.

J. E. McNiven,
Fernie, B.C.

Section 5 of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act provides that: 'Whenever any dispute exists between an employer and any of his employees, and the parties thereto are unable to adjust it, either of the parties to the dispute may make application to the minister for the appointment of a board of conciliation and investigation, to which the dispute may be referred under the provisions of this Act.'

A dispute of the kind referred to in this section exists at the present time in southern British Columbia and Alberta. It is open, therefore, to either of the parties to make application for a board. The Act has been framed with a view of enabling the public to intelligently appreciate the right or wrong of actions of parties to a dispute likely to affect public interest, and with matters as they now stand, either party refusing to make application places itself before the public in a position of appearing to be unwilling to have the public made fully aware of its real position.

Please show this wire to the representatives of each of the parties to the present dispute, and point out that it would appear to be in the public interest, not less than in the interests of the parties, that all circumstances connected with the present dispute should be fully investigated and disclosed; also, in order that responsibility may be definitely fixed and that the government may have the information on which to base such further action as may be necessary, please ascertain whether, with the representations herein contained, each of the parties definitely state that they are unwilling to make application for board.

Please wire information as soon as possible to obtain same.

(Sgd.) W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Minister of Labour.

That wire was presented by Mr. McNiven to each of the parties, and on account of their meeting in different localities it took him a day or two to see both employers and men. I received from him a communication this morning in which he states that:

Neither party will state positively that they will not apply.

He has been endeavouring to get each or either of them to make application for a board of investigation, but up to the present time neither of them will apply, and neither of them has stated definitely that they will not apply. That brings up a situation never contemplated when this legislation was introduced some years ago, namely, that a difference could exist between two parties in which neither would ask to have public opinion brought to bear in support of its contentions. It would appear from the attitude of the parties at the present moment that each side is interested in some way in not having the full facts brought to light. It is hardly conceivable that if there is nothing back of this difference but some arbitrary action on the part of one side or the other that the side which is being injuriously affected would hesitate to ask for an investigation so that the public might be fully informed as to who was in the right and who was in the wrong.

Mr. GOODEVE. Might it not be that it is because both parties have lost confidence in the utility of the Act that they have refused to apply?

Mr. KING. They have had no reason to lose confidence because they have not taken advantage of the provisions of the Act, and, in so far as the Act is concerned, as I mentioned in the House the other day, there have been something like one hundred applications, and in ninety out of the hundred the Act has been the means of averting anything in the nature of industrial strife. When my hon. friend (Mr. Goodeve) interrupted me I was trying to make it clear that there must be, from the attitude of the parties at the present moment, reason to believe that each of them, for some reason best known to themselves, do not desire to have the public fully informed of the true inwardness of the situation. The purpose of the Industrial Disputes Act was to see that the public was informed in a matter which materially affects itself. I purpose, therefore, communicating with the parties again to-day, and stating that unless they see their way one or the other, to immediately make application for a board under the Act, the government will proceed with an investigation of its own to find out who is in the right, and who is in the wrong in the present difficulty. The significance of that action may be understood when I point out that if either party makes application for a board they have the opportunity of naming their own representatives on the board. If the operators to-day ask for a board of investigation under this Act then, following the provisions of the Act, they are entitled to have a representative on that board. Similarly, the miners are entitled to have a representative if they ask for an investigation, but the government, under the Act, as it is framed, cannot take the initiative in the appointing of the board, without an application from one side or the other, and consequently we have to wait to see whether either side will make application.

The policy of the government being one of conciliation and one of endeavour to terminate the difficulties it has seemed wise to proceed slowly and deliberately and to give each of the parties full opportunity to have their case presented to the public on their own initiative. There is one other feature that is of importance. Mr. Ashworth, the manager of the Crowsnest Coal Company, which is the largest company concerned, resigned a few days ago and Mr. W. R. Wilson, former general manager, has been appointed and is expected to arrive in Fernie to-morrow. In view of the fact that a new manager is taking charge of the Crowsnest Pass Company in the present situation, it would seem only reasonable that he should be given an opportunity, along with the other operators to see whether he can settle the difficulties or apply for a board of investigation. I think if he and the other operators and the miners are given until Monday night next to either settle this dispute or to send in an application for a board under this Act, the government will be allowing them sufficient time to consider all the bearings of the situation. But if no request comes in by Monday night next, I think the House will support the government if it takes action to investigate this dispute without consulting either of the parties as to the personnel of the individual, or body, which may make the inquiry. They have that opportunity before them at the present time, and if they see their way to ask for a board and strengthen their position before the public in so doing, they will get a board and have an opportunity of naming a member on it. But if they do not, and if each side persists in the attitude it is taking at present of appearing to desire to burk investigation, they will have to take the consequences whatever they may be of a pretty searching investigation into the whole situation.

Mr. RHODES. Now that this subject has arisen, I would like to ask the minister a few questions. Boiled down the remarks of the Minister of Labour mean that this industrial disputes investigation Act is meant for the entertainment of the public, or to use the words of the Minister of Labour, for the information of the public. One could fancy that this was a sort of dispute or combat between the men on one hand, and the companies on the other, and that this Act had been designed only to provide the public with information with respect to the dispute. But the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), when he was Minister of Labour, was frank enough to state that this Act was designed not for the benefit of either the company or the men, but to protect the public. The present Minister of Labour seems to recede from that position.

Mr. KING. Not at all.

Mr. RHODES. In view of the fact that the men take the stand that as they have been working under contract with the company the Act is not applicable to them, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if he believes that position is tenable, and if he purposes permitting that position to be taken in other cases under similar conditions?

Mr. KING. I would point out that the present situation in British Columbia is a very, very critical one indeed, and I feel that we cannot discuss it too carefully in this House. For me to express an opinion as to whether the miners are right in the construction they put upon the Act or whether the operators are right in the stand they are taking would be to precipitate into the present situation an element which I think would add embarrassment to it. The law is there; it is open to any one who thinks the miners are taking a wrong position to apply to the courts for an interpretation, and any opinion expressed by me would not serve either as a ground for an action or as a bar to an action which might be brought under this Act. The courts are there to enforce the law, and the statute speaks for itself.

Mr. RHODES. Does the Minister of Labour recede from the position taken two years ago by the present Postmaster General when he was Minister of Labour: That this Act was designed for the benefit of the public?

Mr. KING. Certainly not. The position that is being taken by the government today in insisting that there shall be investigation whether the parties wish it or not is the strongest evidence of the fact that the government is determined to allow the public to get at the inwardness of the whole situation and to get at it thoroughly and speedily.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. RHODES. I want to put one more question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion is out of order.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to put a question, and it is this: If the statute is designed for the protection of the public, can it be possible that the government has no idea of what this statute means, because that is practically the position the Minister of Labour takes. He says the public can judge for themselves, and that the government, whose duty it is to administer the law, have really no idea of what the law means.

FISHERY LEASES—MR. MARKEY.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I wish to inform the Prime Minister that I have obtained from the Clerk of the House a copy of the document which I asked for yesterday, but it has not yet been supplied to the Library. I want to ask the Prime Minister the exact situation at present with regard to the Markey lease. I have looked over the journals, and I find that Mr. Markey was at that time willing to give up his lease. In one instance he states that he has expended a certain amount of money, and he asks to have that refunded, and he is willing that the lease be cancelled. In another part of his evidence he admits that the government can cancel his lease without paying him anything if they think it is not being operated in the public interest. Did the government at that time notify Mr. Markey that they were going to cancel the lease, and have they cancelled it, and is it only a question of settling the amount due him, or, is Mr. Markey still operating, and if so, will we be liable for any more than the former amount claimed in case it should go to the courts?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend has put me several questions, one of which is whether Mr. Markey is still operating, and that I can answer at once. I do not think he has ever been operating at all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Exactly, and consequently not entitled to any damages.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As to the other questions, I shall have to look into the matter, and if the hon. gentleman repeats his question on Monday I shall give an answer.

PENSIONS.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). May I ask when the government intends moving the House into Supply to discuss the item dealing with pensions. This question of mine is due to the fact that last night I was waited upon by one of the veterans of the 1885 rebellion, who told me that he had not as yet received his pension, although he has been accustomed to receiving it on or about the 1st of April each year. He was anxious to know when this vote would be passed, because some time ago he had arranged to meet certain obligations at the present time.

Mr. FIELDING. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to send me the name of the person privately I will be happy to investigate and let him know what the difficulty is, if there be any.

MANITOBA AND SOUTHEASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior, if, without an order, he would be kind enough to bring down an order in council dated May 6, 1907, with reference to certain lands of the Manitoba and Southeastern railway.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. REID (Grenville)

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL (Dauphin). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words owing to some remarks offered to the House yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture. I do not know whether I am perfectly in order to go into the question at any length; but the question that was in his mind was that of reciprocity and how the members on this side of the House were liable to vote. I will read what he said, if it is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is a personal explanation or a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman cannot refer to a past debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no intention of referring to a past debate. I just wish to say to the Minister of Agriculture that none of us on this side of the House are afraid to let the country know where we stand in this matter. His remarks to which I take exception are as follows:

> And, Sir, on the main motion itself there are men over there who are afraid to vote yea, and then again there are men over there who are afraid to vote nay, and they will take every step they possibly can to put themselves on record on some little side issue, so as to avoid voting on the main motion. But I want to warn them that before this session ends they will have to vote on the main motion, and put themselves on record, and go before their constituents and answer for their vote.

The Minister of Agriculture referred to members on this side of the House. I had not put myself on record. There were some gentlemen of his own party in what we call the segregated area, who also had not put themselves on record, and I would like to know whether he was referring to me or to the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Sealey). If that hon. gentleman is as willing, at any time, to voice his views on this matter, before the House, as I am, I would like to hear him get up and follow me were he present. I rise now for reasons that I have no control over, because I have to go away to-night, and I do not desire for one moment that even the Minister of Agriculture should think that I am afraid to put myself on record. In his remarks the other day he appealed to the farmers for their support in regard to reciprocity. I wonder if he appeals to them because of the estimate he put upon them some time ago, when he referred to them as slip-shod, indifferent, lazy, and unintelligent, and for these reasons expects them to support him in this matter of reciprocity. If this is his reason, I can readily understand why he expects the farmers to support him; but I can assure him that he is far from the mark if he believes for one moment that the farmers as a class can be designated in that way. As a farmer myself I resent it as strongly as it is possible to resent anything. I can tell the Minister of Agriculture, and you, Mr. Speaker, and this House, why the farmers have begun to think that something drastic has to be done to alleviate their disabilities, and I can say it in a very short word—the absolute inefficiency of the Minister of Agriculture of this country for the last 14 or 15 years. He has never advanced agriculture in any new way, has never initiated anything off his own bat; he has followed the footsteps of his predecessors in office. Like a car running down hill without a motorman or conductor, the Department of Agriculture has run on its way. The electricity had absolutely given out and something drastic had to be done. The farmers in the west have realized that. They do not know the conditions that prevail here in Ottawa; they do not know that we have a minister who is absolutely inefficient, who has been allowing ministers of other departments to take the hard-earned money of the farmers that has been paid in duties and deflects it in other directions. They do not know that as we know it here, and for that reason they are looking for some move to be made that will alleviate their condition. They have thought that our verbose Minister of Agriculture has been attending to their interests, because if words will convince any one, surely the words which emanate from him are enough to convince not only the people of Canada, but the people of the whole continent. The west to-day is in a state of evolution. We have too much land out there; we are too rich in land; we are short in population. The result is that the farmers have got into a condition of being skimmers of the land to a certain extent; they have not been going into mixed farming as have the people of the older provinces, and they realize that something is wanting to advance their interests. In the past they have been at the mercy of the railway companies, and of the beef ring, and they have been praying for different markets—for some motive power to take from their shoulders the disabilities under which they have been suffering. To-day the conditions are beginning to change there; we are beginning to get a population. The farmers are beginning to realize that the local governments—I refer particularly to the government of Manitoba—have seen that something is necessary with regard to the beef industry, and are doing their best to establish union stockyards and public abattoirs and free markets where the farmers of the west can get better prices for their products in their own province, or in their own Dominion. I think that in a year or two a solution of that problem will be found satisfactory to the farmers of the west. The Minister of Agriculture in his remarks yesterday practically dared us from the west to vote against the reciprocity agreement—I took it to myself, as I had not troubled the House on this matter, wishing to leave the debate to men very much better able to voice the sentiments of the people of Canada than I was. He practically called us cowards, though he did not use the term, saying that we would not come out and declare ourselves either for or against the agreement; but he held out a threat that he would compel us to do so before the end of this debate. We need no compulsion, Mr. Speaker; we are quite ready. I am perfectly willing to tell the House that I am against this agreement first, last and all the time. I say that, not merely as a member of the Conservative party, but speaking as a farmer, representing the farmers, and desirous all the time to vote in their best interests.

We hear it stated in this House that this proposed reciprocity agreement is giving the farmers what they want, and what they asked for when they came down here on the 16th of December. I deny that absolutely. The farmers desire a great many things, and this interchange of farm products is, in their opinion, a secondary thing altogether.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been brought to the front perhaps since then by a certain element who pose as representing the farmers. I refer to these men, Roderick MacKenzie and Henders, who stand high in the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba. They say that reciprocity is what the farmers want. Well, they are farmers of a kind I admit, but if any man in this House who knows anything about agriculture should happen to go down to their farm, he would not think they were farmers at all. These men pose as the representatives of the farmers, but in my opinion they are the agents, paid or otherwise, of the Grit party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In all their lives, I do not believe that either of them ever voted Tory. Previous to the election of 1903, both these men came to the Manitoba government, as representing the grain growers of that province, and said: We want you to do certain things with regard to the charter of the grain exchange. Previous to the end of the session, the Manitoba government said to them: We shall make arrangements to have a convention of all the interests which are entitled to be heard with regard to this matter, and we shall have you represent the agricultural grain growers, and when that convention arrives at a solution, we shall put that into law in the most effective way possible. That was the solemn pledge given by the government of Manitoba to these men who were representing the grain growers. The farmers of Manitoba believed Mr. Roblin, the Prime Minister of the government, but what did these two gentlemen, Mr. MacKenzie and Mr. Henders do? They stumped whatever parts of Manitoba they could get into, to try and persuade the people that Mr. Roblin was not sincere, and that they ought not to put any faith in him. But what was the result? The people of Manitoba believed Mr. Roblin. The convention that he called together was held. The farmers, with the help of Mr. MacKenzie and Mr. Henders and other officials, made a draft of what they wanted, and Mr. Roblin, when returned to power, passed legislation according to that draft. Surely those men, Grits though they were, ought to have acknowledged that Mr. Roblin and his government were sincere.

Then another election came on and the question of internal elevators was before the people. That whole question was brought up by the grain growers, and again they had an interview with the government. Mr. Roblin gave them a pledge. He said: Put us back into power and we will take hold of the elevator system as you suggest, if the farmers want us to do it. What happened again in that campaign? These same two gentlemen, Mr. MacKenzie and Mr. Henders, did everything to defeat the government. They said that the government were not sincere. But what happened after Mr. Roblin was returned? His government again fulfilled its pledges. Why, those men MacKenzie and Henders, are Grits first, last and all the time, and it would not be possible for them to do anything else but vote Grit, regardless altogether of what the country owed the Tories, they were born that way, and cannot help themselves.

When I began I was referring to what the farmers of Manitoba, as represented by the grain growers on the 16th of December last, asked for. They asked for various things, but among these reciprocity in farm products was a very minor detail. One of the things they asked for was government ownership of the terminal elevators. That is a question which had already been before the House. My hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner) had brought it up in the hope of inducing this government to take the matter up, and meet the desires of the western farmers. The case of the farmers could not have been better argued than it was by my hon. friend from Souris (Mr. Schaffner), and I supported him both by voice and vote. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), however, voted against this resolution, and so did the government majority behind him. The question is one very pertinent to reciprocity, and which has been engaging the attention of the farmers of the west for years. What we desire is government ownership or provincial ownership of the internal elevators, and also the government ownership of terminal elevators, and one strong reason for this is our desire that our western wheat should not be mixed, but should go to the old country as it leaves Manitoba and the other western provinces. We desire to have our wheat shipped unmixed so that it may have the same high grade when it reaches the markets of the world as it had when it left the starting point. But supposing this reciprocity pact goes through, what will be the effect? It will mean that our wheat will be deflected down into the south; and instead of our keeping control of it, and keeping the grade distinct, it will reach the markets of the world in a condition most unfavourable to the producers, in point of price as well as quality, and will be no longer an advertisement of what we can grow. I wish to quote from the remarks of Mr. H. W. Richardson, who spoke in this House when the deputation addressed the Prime Minister as follows:

> I noticed a statement in a newspaper some time ago that it might be good policy to adopt the Minnesota law. Gentlemen, I think our trouble is all from Minnesota. All the wrinkles, all the knowledge gained in thirty-five or forty years of elevator terminals there has been brought to Canada and used in Canada. We were doing much better before the Minnesota people came in. Do not let us go there to look for help. Surely, we are able to help ourselves.

That was with regard to the very point I was adducing, that they mixed the wheat, spoiled the grades and injured our markets. Reciprocity will lead to that system, and for that reason I am against it. The First Minister himself, in speaking to the farmers, said:

> When the grain is delivered at Buffalo, we have no control over it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is what we all say on this side, that is why we do not want to have it delivered at Buffalo.

> We hand it over to the control of our American friends. It was stated by Captain Richardson that the Minnesota operator has transferred his usefulness—or want of usefulness—to Port Arthur.

Surely the Prime Minister will not vote for reciprocity after I quote what he himself said. He said:

> But when we can carry our grain in Canada to Montreal, and load it on the ship at Montreal, and see that it leaves the port as it left Winnipeg, we shall have solved the problem.

His own words are one great reason why I am going to vote against reciprocity. I want to support the farmers in their contention, because I know their contention is good in that particular regard, and I know the First Minister also thinks so, because he has said so, no matter how he votes when the hour comes.

The farmers also brought up the matter of the duties on farm implements, a subject which has been of great interest to them since the inception of farming in the west. I have dozens and dozens of resolutions, as the Prime Minister has, and almost every one of them is to the effect that the petitioners desire free trade in agricultural implements.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do not the same resolutions ask the hon. gentleman to support the reciprocity agreement?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No. A few of those that I have received are those which have been sent out by Henders & MacKenzie, and they are all worded in the same way. I now simply read the first paragraph of these, and I know the rest of the resolution.

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not know who framed the resolution. I would ask the hon. member if he is ready to go on 'Hansard' and have the 'Hansard' go before his constituents containing his statement that he has not received many such resolutions from his constituents, asking him to support the reciprocity agreement. I ask if he will make that statement here?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a pity that my hon. friend is a lawyer and that I am only a farmer.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am a farmer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because I think our positions should have been reversed. I make the statement that this resolution had been framed by Mr. MacKenzie or Mr. Henders, or some one in Mr. MacKenzie's office.

Mr. KNOWLES. Quite possibly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Because I have in my desk an identical copy with Mr. Henders' signature at the bottom of it. Perhaps my farmer-lawyer friend has his answer?

Mr. KNOWLES. The signature makes it all the better.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was referring to the high duty on agricultural implements. We on this side of the House, certainly I myself, have been strongly in favour of a reduction of duty on these. A gentleman who was my leader in the province of Manitoba, a man for whom I have the greatest possible regard, the Hon. Hugh John Macdonald, conducted a contest in the west on that subject, and his word was given to every man in the west that were he returned to power he would do everything in his power to put agricultural implements on the free list for the benefit of the farmers. In that he had my support. I believe in that. The Minister of Agriculture is not behind that movement, that is, if he supports the First Minister in the message he sent to the people of Woodstock the other day, through the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), that he was not going to tamper any further with the duty on agricultural implements. I am for the farmer, the Minister of Agriculture is not in that particular regard. I do not think the Prime Minister is in that regard either, if his sentiments, as voiced in this House, are correct. These are two things in which I am behind the farmers. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) brought up the question of public owned abattoirs a few days ago. Where was the Minister of Agriculture? Against everything the farmers wanted. The farmers came here and demanded that from the First Minister. The First Minister said he would take it into his serious consideration, but he voted against it, and he whipped all his followers into voting for it. The Conservatives in the House were all solid behind the farmers, and because we cannot see eye to eye with the First Minister with regard to giving the farmers of the States free access into our markets, are we going to be blamed too severely? I do not think so.

Two years ago a resolution was introduced by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) calling for the appointment of a representative of the farmers on the Railway Board. We on this side then showed that we were more desirous than the First Minister and the Minister of Agriculture and all their followers to procure what the farmers wanted. I spoke in favour of it, I voted in favour of it. What did the Minister of Agriculture do? He voted against it, of course, and so did the First Minister and every follower he has in the chamber. They again defeated the wishes of the farmer. It is surprising to me that a man in the position of the Minister of Agriculture should get up here and taunt us, who have by our votes been supporting almost everything the farmers have asked for, that because we will not fall into line with him on this reciprocity pact we are afraid to voice our sentiments. Sir, there is certainly no fear in our hearts on that question. A few days ago the member for Provencher (Mr. Molloy), when supporting the policy of the government with regard to reciprocity, issued an invitation to any one of us from Manitoba who dared to vote against the government to go to Proven-cher and run against him. Well, it sounded well, but when you know, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend from Provencher has the distribution of all the patronage in the province of Manitoba, and will have the saying when Manitoba is cut up, as it probably will be before the next election, and can, therefore, make himself perfectly safe, I say, Sir, that when you know this you can easily understand his bravery in challenging us to meet him. I wish to tell the Minister of Agriculture that if there is an election to be held, sooner or later, I will be pleased if he will come up to Dauphin with his little old reciprocity pact and fight me on the platform. I can tell him that, though I am not a prophet, he will go back to the woods where he belongs. I admit that I am making a somewhat strong statement, because I am at a disadvantage in fighting with the Minister of Agriculture. In the first place, he is a minister, and I am only a backbencher on the opposition side; he is an old parliamentarian, and I only a tyro in the art; he is one of the longest speakers perhaps in Canada, while I am rather retiring in that respect. He also has in his power the appointment of every officer in any campaign where he takes part, he has behind him the whole force of the government, and he poses in the farmers' ridings as the great agriculturalist of Canada. Nevertheless, I challenge him to come and meet me there, because I honestly believe that in a short time the farmers will come to realize the true inwardness of this reciprocity pact. At first, the farmers may not realize that the vote I am going to give against reciprocity is in their own interest, but before long they will realize it; they will understand that the vote I am going to give in this House will be in the best interest, not only of my constituents, but of Canada as a whole. After all, Mr. Speaker, if we choose to forget party, I believe it is in the heart of every man in this House that we would rather remain cubs of the old lion than help to add another star on the flag across the line.

JUDICIAL VACANCIES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. A. L. FRASER (Kings, P.E.I.). Before you leave the Chair, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the matter of the vacancies existing in the province of Prince Edward Island. I have already called this matter to his attention on a previous occasion. One vacancy exists in the Supreme Court bench, and another in the Senate. I said a few words on this matter on the 20th of January last, and I do not at this time intend to take up the time of the House by giving the history of those two vacancies, because it is well known to the Prime Minister. At that time he gave as an excuse that he was pressed with business, and had not time to attend to that small matter. Well, that statement was taken for what it was worth, perhaps a poor excuse is better than none. But I think the Prime Minister will be a great deal more busy in the future than he has been in the past, and if these vacancies are not filled very soon, then we may expect that they will remain open for at least another year. But there was one statement the Prime Minister made at that time which carried some assurance that these vacancies would be filled in a very short time, to use his own words. That was three months ago, and I regret to say that the Prime Minister has not kept his word. Although this government has a great unenviable reputation of carrying out all its promises promptly, I regret that this promise has never been carried out, and I trust the Prime Minister will at an early date see fit to fill these vacancies. It may be a matter of small moment to the Prime Minister, perhaps, that the vacancy in the Senate should remain unfilled. But he knows the state of our representation in that body to-day, he knows that at present we have only one Senator there when we should have four. It is a regrettable thing that two of them should be prevented from attending by sickness and old age. One of them, who is at present in this town, is one of the oldest Senators in Canada, and it is a matter of regret that he is unable to fulfil his duties in the Senate. The other, Senator Robinson, is sick at home, and is unable to come here. But the other vacancy has existed now nearly two years, and there is no sign of filling it. It may be a new way of reforming the Senate that this government has adopted. The reform of the Senate was one of the things promised some years ago, and it has been reformed during the last year to a very great extent, it has been reformed, as Mr. Dooley would say, 'Almost stiff.'

But, Mr. Speaker, the vacancy in which our people are most vitally concerned, is that on the Supreme Court Bench. These vacancies have occurred before. Now I wish to tell you the difference between the treatment accorded by other governments in the past. The records show that vacancies never have existed in that province on the Supreme Court Bench longer than ten days. There are only three judges there, and three of them are required to sit as a court of appeal. There have been cases on the docket waiting to be heard in the Court of Appeal in Equity since 1908. Three judges have to sit in Court of Appeal in Equity to hear these cases and during the last two years one of these judges has been sick. I do not attach any blame to the government for that, his resignation took place last fall, some time in October. That is quite a while ago, yet no appointment has been made since, and I think there are seven cases waiting to be heard. The conditions are such that the people of that province, on both sides of politics, consider that this matter has now become a public scandal. I could quote from newspapers statements bearing out what I am now saying. For instance, a paper that is independent but which, at the present time, is supporting this government, in its editorial two or three days ago, spoke of it as a public scandal to allow party politics to interfere with appointments to the bench, and the administration of justice in the courts of law. Besides that, it is a pernicious precedent that this government is setting which will be handed down to future times. Governments coming after this will point back to this precedent. I would remind the Prime Minister that the evil that men do live after them. It is nothing more than a public scandal that these appointments are not made. I have had some letters and telegrams asking me to bring this up. I did not wish to trouble the Prime Minister during the last month or two, but on the 20th January I brought it to his attention, and at that time he gave me to understand that the appointments would be made in a very short time. That is nearly three months ago, and we do not seem to be any nearer to these appointments now than we were then.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Speaker, I want to enter my protest with my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) who has just taken his seat. That hon. member has just stated that this government have been noted for promptly carrying out the promises that they had made. It is easy to see that he has not been in this House very long. One promise that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made in 1893 was to reform the Senate, but there has not been a single thing done so far as that is concerned except to put in a Liberal when a Conservative died. The Hon. Mr. Ferguson died two years ago, and the Prime Minister has been keeping that position dangling for political purposes in Prince Edward Island, and there has been no appointment. He is keeping that position vacant in order that it may have its effect when the campaign is on. The vacancy on the bench he is holding for the premier of Prince Edward Island. There is only one of a majority in Prince Edward Island, and the position is kept for the premier of the province when he is defeated at the next election. They are holding it so that they can land him safely in that position, and in the meantime the people of Prince Edward Island have to suffer. It is not fair to the people to have their cases held up in the courts. There is no doubt about the object of the Prime Minister in holding up vacancies. If I remember rightly he had a member sitting behind him with a letter from him in his pocket, promising him a judgeship down in Quebec if he would vote right. He was kicking at that time. He was given the position all right enough, and you can see now by the look of several hon. members on the other side of the House that they have received promises of positions to induce them to vote for reciprocity. They would not vote for the Prime Minister if it were not that he is able to tell them that they will be all right when the vote is over. In this case the Prime Minister told my hon. friend from Kings, P.E.I. (Mr. Fraser) in January that the appointment would be made, and he offered the explanation that he had been busy for two years. All these appointments are recommended by some gentleman in Prince Edward Island, and he is going to carry out the promise. The Prime Minister knows just as well as he did two years ago who is going to get this position, and all he has to do is to pass an order in council, and it will be filled. But, the Prime Minister is playing the game of politics, and that is the reason that these positions are not filled. The people of Prince Edward Island surely know that, and if they want any more evidence of it, we can give them other cases of vacancies that are being held up in the same way. This is the game that the Prime Minister has played for the last twelve or fourteen years. Take, for instance, the position that was filled by the appointment of the late Speaker of the House; he was promised a judgeship, everybody knows that he was commencing to get sore and he had to have some promise made or else he would have voted with us on this reciprocity question to-day. But, the vacancy was made and he was put in there. There are many cases of the same kind. The right hon. gentleman must admit that he is dangling these positions that have been referred to here to-day in order to gain a political advantage. There is only one of a majority in the local House in Prince Edward Island and these positions are held up before several influential men, the senatorship more particularly—support this government, or the local government, and you will get the position. Any member who goes down and makes inquiry in Prince Edward Island will be told that there are from twelve to twenty of the leading men in the province who have all been promised by some one that they will get that senatorship if they return so many members at the next election. The judgeship is going to one man. We will see if the remarks which I am now making do not come true. Premier Haszard is going to get that judgeship if he can maintain his government until some one else is called to fill his position. Will the Prime Minister say that the premier of Prince Edward Island will not get that position? I would like him to just say that. I believe that the Prime Minister has promised it to him, and that he will give it to him when he can let him out safely, and still try to hold the government. That has been going on for two years and in the meantime the people have been suffering. I want to enter my protest, and I hope that the Prime Minister will soon remedy the situation and give the people down there an opportunity of having their cases tried.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no fault to find with my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Fraser) bringing this matter again to the attention of the House, and to my own. The remarks which he made were in excellent temper, and I repeat that in bringing this matter to the attention of the House he has done something that he has a right to do. I do not think, however, that the case has been improved by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) jumping into the question. The hon. member for Grenville has a lot of information; I do not know where he got it, but I had not heard of the circumstances to which he refers up to the present time. If I am to receive the information which he has laid before me it is that I have promised this senatorship to thirteen or fourteen different men. I am reminded of an annecdote of the late Sir John Macdonald. He was taunted, as I have been taunted, of making a promise of some office to thirteen different people. Well, said Sir John, it may be true, but none of them got it. I can only say that no one has got this position, and I am not conscious of making a promise even to one. I plead guilty to the fact that when my hon. friend, on the 20th of January last, called my attention to the long vacancies which have occurred in Prince Edward Island, and especially the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court, I promised that the appointment would be made at an early date. I plead guilty also to the fact that I have not redeemed my promise. But, he was kind enough, generous enough and truthful enough to say at the same time that this government has been characterized by the prompt manner in which it has implemented its promises. It is the first time that I have heard justice done to this government from the opposition side of the House, and it was so extraordinary that I could not help but notice it. I am gratified to find that there is at least one Conservative member who can be just and fair to his opponents, and I thank my hon. friend for the acknowledgment he has made. But, I plead guilty that I did not fulfil the promise which I made when I told him that these vacancies would be filled in a short time. I might plead the fact that I have been busy, but that would not be a good excuse. A man cannot be so busy that he cannot fulfil the duties with which he is entrusted. But, we are going to have the Easter recess, we shall have more leisure and perhaps when we meet again we can talk over the matter further, and I will try to give satisfaction to my hon. friend.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman apparently did not recognize the tone of sarcasm in the voice of my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) when he spoke of the remarkable record of the government for fulfilling its promises, and it certainly has been a remarkable record in the respect that the government never does fulfil its promises. The Prime Minister has not given the slightest answer to the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fraser). Under our constitution the province of Prince Edward Island has the right to be represented in the Senate of Canada by four members. One of the Senators from that province died in August or September, 1909. The late Senator Ferguson was a man of high type, a most useful and admirable man in the public life of this country, and a man who had rendered splendid services to the Dominion and to his provinces. It is now April, 1911, nearly two years have passed since the death of Senator Ferguson, and during all that time Prince Edward Island has been deprived of one fourth of the representation to which, under the British North America Act it is entitled in the Senate of Canada. Is there any just excuse for such dereliction of duty on the part of the government; has the Prime Minister offered one word in extenuation of this extraordinary disregard of the rights of one of the provinces. Not one word has been offered by him in excuse for depriving Prince Edward Island of that voice in the Senate to which it is entitled. The neglect to fill a vacancy on the judicial bench of the province is not so great in point of time, but there are circumstances surrounding the matter which should have called upon the government for prompt action. During a considerable period before he tendered his resignation, Mr. Justice Hodgson had been unable to discharge his duties because of indisposition, his friends hoping that his health would be restored and that he would be able once more to take his place on the bench. Mr. Justice Hodgson was a very eminent man, a very able lawyer, and his services as a judge were very valuable to the people of his native province. On or about the 8th of October last, now six months ago, Mr. Justice Hodgson resigned. The whole judicial machinery of the province had been more or less out of gear during the period of his ill-health, and one would naturally suppose that the government would have deemed it its plain duty to appoint his successor so soon as he resigned, in order that cases which have been standing for nearly three years upon the docket of the Supreme Court might be disposed of at the earliest possible moment. There are many good lawyers at the bar of Prince Edward Island who could discharge judicial duties with satisfaction to the bar and to the people of the province, but the government has left the vacancy unfilled for six months during which time there has been a practical denial of justice to every man whose case remains unheard. Is that a proper spectacle for the government to present to the people of Canada? Worse still, there is absolutely no reason for it except the reason of political expediency, and that reason has made itself manifest not only in Prince Edward Island, but in my own province of Nova Scotia, where for nearly a year there was a vacancy on the Supreme court bench and case after case remained unheard just because the government had declined to discharge its plain duty. I submit, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think I am going beyond what the occasion demands, that such delay in filling judicial offices for reasons of political expediency amounts to no more nor less than a trafficking in the appointments to the judicial bench of this country; it is absolutely nothing short of that. That may seem a harsh expression, but I am not afraid in the face of the Prime Minister of Canada and his government to characterize it in that way. To hold these judicial appointments back, to allow vacancies to remain on the bench of the courts of the various provinces for reasons of political expediency and nothing else, amounts to no more and no less than trafficking in judicial appointments for political purposes. I say, Sir, that there should not be one more hour's delay in filling this judicial appointment, and removing this disgrace to the administration of justice in Canada.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT.

Mr. E. N. RHODES (Cumberland). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to briefly refer to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. I submit—and if I am not right in this the Minister of Labour will correct me—that this Act has been invoked perhaps more in Nova Scotia than in any other province of the Dominion, and after some years of experience in that province there is a wholesale condemnation of that Act on the part of the miners who are the only men to whom the Act has been applied there. So strong is this condemnation that there has come to the members representing Nova Scotia a request from all of the united mine workers' lodges covering the whole field of the province of Nova Scotia, a demand that the Act be repealed in so far as it affects that province. In the province of British Columbia a like feeling towards this Act exists, and the United Mine Workers of America, which includes in its membership I believe all of the mine workers of British Columbia and Alberta, have the same opinion of this Act as their brethren in Nova Scotia, and ask that it be repealed. They believe that by reason of its operation it constitutes an oppression upon the working classes of this country; they believe that there is no beneficial feature in the Act to compensate the labouring man for the loss of these 30 days during which he is precluded from striking, and which interval enables the employer to fortify himself against a strike which is almost sure to follow after the Act has been brought into operation. Let me cite section 59 of the Act:

> Any employee who goes on strike contrary to the provisions of this Act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50 for each day or part of a day that such employee is on strike.

There are upwards of 10,000 men at present on strike in the coal fields of British Columbia and Alberta, and, applying the minimum fine to each of these men, we find that if this Act is operative, and they have gone on strike contrary to its provisions, they are liable to a penalty amounting to not less than one hundred thousand dollars a day, which is a somewhat extensive fine for labouring men to stand. It means practically that the miners are so strongly incensed against this Act that they are willing to risk incurring such a penalty rather than come under its provisions. In view of these facts I asked the Minister of Labour a short time ago what the department proposed to do with reference to the question raised by the miners of British Columbia, namely, that since the three-year contract under which the miners had been working had expired, they were not therefore employees, and did not come under the provisions of the Act. His reply virtually meant: the Act is on the statute-book, it is for the employer to invoke its provisions, and if it applies, the men will be liable to the penalty. I think the position the minister ought to take is this. This is paternal legislation; it has gone beyond any legislation that we have had before in this country; the government by this statute steps in between the employer and the employee, and says, you must not do certain things, you must work a certain period until you invoke the provisions of this Act, or you are liable to a penalty of not less than $10 or more than $50 a day for each man. Since this is paternal legislation, the Minister of Labour ought at least to have the provisions of the Act made clear. There is a delicate position in the province of British Columbia at the present time, and there will be delicate positions all over this country if it is left uncertain whether this Act applies where the men in the employ of a given company are working under contract, and I would urge the minister, in the interests of labour and industrial conditions in this country, to have such amendments made in the Act as will make its provisions clear beyond peradventure.

Mr. KING. I am somewhat surprised at my hon. friend bringing up this matter in the form in which he has at this moment, inasmuch as the question of the interpretation of the Act one way or the other, is likely to form a serious part of the dispute, and I think it would be much more in the interest of industrial peace that that matter should be settled in the courts of British Columbia and Alberta, rather than be made a matter of party controversy in this House.

Mr. RHODES. If there is a question as to the interpretation of the Act, why not settle it with an amendment to the Act here and now, rather than involve the miners of British Columbia in needless expense over litigation?

Mr. KING. That is not the point. The question of the enforcement of the Industrial Disputes Act is the same as the question of the enforcement of any other statute or provision of the criminal law. I do not see any reason why the government should make an exception of this case and become public prosecutor when with regard to other offences against the criminal law they would not be prepared to take that course. I wish to make quite clear the position which the department desires to take on this matter. There is a larger work than the settlement of any single industrial dispute, and if the department is going to carry on that work successfully, it will be by maintaining as far as possible an attitude of strict neutrality between the parties, making efforts at conciliation as far as that may be possible, and not putting itself in the position of being coercive or adverse towards one side or the other. That seems to be the only reasonable and possible attitude which a government can take that hopes to do anything effective in the settlement of industrial disputes. My hon. friend knows that a labour controversy is a very different thing from an action which is in the nature of a violation of some criminal law.

Mr. RHODES. That is just what I have been saying.

Mr. KING. My hon. friend wants us to take the position of public prosecutor, and I am not prepared to do that.

Mr. RHODES. Not at all. I want you to make the Act clear, so that the men and the companies may not be ground between two legal millstones. Perhaps in that connection the minister will allow me to read what section 3 of the Act says: 'The Minister of Labour shall have the administration of this Act.

Mr. KING. I am not able to see in what particular the Act is not clear. In that respect I do not think the Act requires any amendment. But where I do differ from my hon. friend is in his saying that the men are out in British Columbia at the present time because of the feeling they have against this Act.

Mr. RHODES. I never said that.

Mr. KING. I must refer my hon. friend to his own remarks as they will appear tomorrow in 'Hansard.' He said that the feeling among the men was such that they were willing to bear the penalties of the Act provided rather than submit to its provisions.

Mr. RHODES. That does not mean that they are striking because they are opposed to the Act. Just the contrary: they are striking in spite of the Act.

Mr. KING. As I have read to the House the men in British Columbia state they do not think they are violating any provisions of the Act. I then took the matter up with the International Executive, which is a body with the power to sanction or to refrain from sanctioning any dispute, and the answer they have sent me is this:

> We believe in a strict compliance with the laws of Canada at all times, and are advised that the miners of Canada have not in any sense violated the Industrial Disputes Act.

Then they go on to mention their policy in the matter of trade agreements. The United Mine Workers made their position clear, that they believe in respecting the laws of the country, and believe that the miners have in no way violated them.

Mr. RHODES. They have put this question to the minister; what does he say? That is the whole point of my question.

Mr. KING. I have already answered that question.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. minister says he has his opinion, but he has not given it to the House.

Mr. KING. For the very good reason that where you have 8,000 or 10,000 miners fighting several corporations, the more careful and restrained outside parties are in the language they use and the opinions they express, the better it will be in the long run for the situation. If I hesitate in expressing an opinion at this moment it is because I do not wish to precipitate into the discussion any opinion one way or the other. My hon. friend knows that if I said that I thought the miners were absolutely in the right, the operators would to-morrow say, what right has any member of the government to come out against us? and if I were to say that the miners were wrong it would only add to the intensity of the struggle and the bitterness of feeling against the operators and would lead to the charge that we were siding with the large corporations. I am sure that my hon. friend, if he were in the position which I happen for the moment to occupy, would see that the only course for the government to take in the public interest — and I am sure that is what my hon. friend desires—is to make its position perfectly clear and show that all it wants is justice between the two parties so that the one which is in the right shall be sustained. The only means to achieve that object is for the government to bring to light all the facts of the situation. That is the fundamental principle of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. I think every one will admit that if the facts can be brought to light so that public opinion may be enabled to pass judgment on them, that public opinion will be a strong factor in bringing about an adjustment of the difficulties. And the machinery of the Act has been devised in order to make it possible for the public to be intelligibly informed as to the right or wrong on either side, in the belief that such information will operate as a material and powerful factor in promoting a settlement. But such a situation as at present exists, one in which both parties to the controversy appear to be unwilling that the public should know their side of the case, was never contemplated. That, however, is the position at present in Alberta and British Columbia. The mine owners have every opportunity to ask for an investigation. They have been told by the officers of the government that they are at liberty to have the machinery of the Act set in motion and have their side of the case presented to the public with a representative of their own on the board. The men have been told the same thing but equally without result; and the only inference I can draw is that neither side wants the facts to come out, and that there is something back of the situation which is responsible for the parties taking that position.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister know what that is?

Mr. KING. No, but I am bound to find out. I am going to see that the facts are made public. If by Monday night of next week, the parties do not ask for an investigation, if they do not avail themselves of the provisions of the Act, the government will take speedy means of having a very searching inquiry into the whole situation so that the public will see who is right and who is wrong in the matter.

But my hon. friend seeks to make the point that this Industrial Investigation Disputes Act is not serving its purpose because it is condemned by miners in Nova Scotia. Well, I would point out to him that the laws of this parliament are enacted for the good of the people as a whole, irrespective of any particular class or group of men in the community; and if any particular group of men in the community were to take the position that because they choose to stand out against the public interest, every Act passed in the public interest should be repealed, I should oppose them to the very last ditch.

Mr. CROSBY. Does the minister say that the men who are standing out in Nova Scotia to-day are standing out against the public interest?

Mr. KING. I am not taking that stand at all.

Mr. CROSBY. You are now shifting your position.

Mr. KING. No, I am not. The men who are out in Nova Scotia to-day complied with the law. They did not go out until after an investigation had taken place. But that is not the point I am discussing. I am taking the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Rhodes), who says that the miners of Nova Scotia have condemned the Act in a wholesale fashion and therefore the Act should be repealed. At any rate the latter is the inference I draw from his words.

Mr. RHODES. I have no hesitation in answering my hon. friend. I would like to see this Act put into proper shape. I was simply giving expression to the opinion of the miners of Nova Scotia. What I do say is this, that the Act should either be repealed, in so far as it affects Nova Scotia, or it should be so amended as to make it an equitable measure as between the miners and the operators. Until you get the Act into that condition, it will not be satisfactory either to the public or the men themselves.

Mr. KING. I must differ with my hon. friend on that point. Because a certain group of men in Nova Scotia condemn the Act is no reason why it should be repealed or changed. Their views of course are certainly entitled to every consideration, but so are the views of other men in the same locality and of other industries in other parts of the Dominion. In Nova Scotia there are, as my hon. friend well knows, two camps of organized labour. There are the Provincial Mine Workers Association and the United Mine Workers. The former have endorsed this Act just as strongly as the latter have condemned it.

Mr. CROSBY. But those who endorse it are only a small number.

Mr. KING. They are entitled to have their opinions respected as much as the others.

Mr. CROSBY. Only twenty per cent of the men in the mines of Cape Breton belonged to the Provincial Mine Workers' Association when they went out on strike.

Mr. KING. The question of numbers is apart from the question of principle altogether.

Mr. RHODES. The hon. minister has made a statement to which I take strong objection. He says that I know perfectly well there are two camps in Nova Scotia, and that one of them is in favour of the Act. But that one is very limited in number. The United Mine Workers', who constitute the great bulk of miners in Nova Scotia, are opposed to the Act. The Provincial Mine Workers' Association, which was the only association of employees prior to the incoming of the United Mine Workers' of America, met in Halifax in convention in August, 1908, and they expressed the same condemnation of the Act at that time as do now the United Mine Workers'; but there was a dispute in Cape Breton between the United Mine Workers' on the one hand, and the Provincial Mine Workers' Association on the other into which dispute politics entered; and because the United Mine Workers' took ground in opposition to the Act, the others took ground in its favour. But so far as the feeling of the mine workers in general is concerned, it is almost unanimous against the Act as I have said.

Mr. KING. I am afraid that politics are responsible for a good deal of the difficulty. But as against the opinion which my hon. friend has expressed condemnatory of the Act, I would quote opinions which have come from other labour organizations. This Act has been for some years the subject of discussion by the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, in which body are representatives of all the labour organizations; and on each occasion that congress has strongly endorsed this legislation. This congress represents a number of labour unions throughout the Dominion. There is also another association, the Canadian Federation of Labour composed largely of labour unions in the province of Quebec. Not only have these unions endorsed this legislation, but they have asked that it be extended beyond its present scope. At present it is restricted to public utilities, and the Canadian Federation of Labour has asked that it be extended to the boot and shoe industry, and other industries. Again I might quote the views of the railway men. Last year some amendments were made to the Act to meet certain objections of the railway men. At that time I read to the House a communication I had received from representatives of all the railway brotherhoods in this country, and every one of them endorsed the legislation with these amendments added to it. If a census were taken I am quite convinced that, while there might be a few miners in different parts of this country who have never from the outset supported the Act, the overwhelming majority of workingmen in this country strongly endorse it. But I would say to my hon. friend that there are other interests as well as the one particular group to which he is referring, and parliament has to consider every interest. Speaking on behalf of labour I would say with the responsibility I feel in that connection, that I think workingmen do not ask to be especially considered in the matter of any legislation, what they want is the public good, and anything that is contrary to the public good, simply because it appeals to them particularly, I do not think they are pressing for. If my hon. friend looks over the results of this legislation, he will see that it has saved the workingmen of this country several hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars; it has saved to the employers hundreds of thousands of dollars in loss of profits, and has saved the community a great deal of confusion and industrial strife.

Mr. RHODES. I cannot assent to that.

Mr. KING. I will mention one instance, which is well known to many members. Last September in Toronto every one was afraid that the street railway service was going to be held up completely. The exhibition was coming on, and the dispute attracted great attention. Had it not been for this Act there would have been a serious strike at that time.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend know?

Mr. KING. Because it was with the greatest possible effort that the parties were restrained, even with this legislation. They had prepared for a strike, and it was only at the very last moment that the board, in virtue of its conciliatory action, were able to get the parties together and bring about an agreement.

Mr. BLAIN. The people up there do not think that.

Mr. KING. I think they do, if my hon. friend understood their views. There has been a case in the last two or three days. We do not hear as much of the disputes that are settled as of the few exceptions where settlements are not effected. Within the last week a strike was threatened on the Canadian Pacific railway, affecting something like 4,000 maintenance-of-way men. A board investigated the matter, went into it very fully, but were unable to agree. The representatives of the men and the chairman filed a majority report, the company's representative filed a minority report, and for a time it seemed as though the company might not accept the award. Had it not been accepted, in all probability the Canadian Pacific railway system would have been tied up with a strike. However, the company took the position taken in regard to most of these boards and said: In the interest of industrial peace we think we should accept the report of the board. I have received from the president of the maintenance of way men, a strong letter, expressing the greatest gratification in regard to that legislation, and saying that they had been able to get fair conditions of employment without having to go out on strike and inconvenience the public. There have been several other cases, and certainly if the Act is to be judged by what it has accomplished on behalf of the public it is entitled to the strongest endorsation.

Mr. RHODES. That is not true in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KING. That may all be. If my hon. friend has anything better to suggest, if he can think of any measure which, on the whole, will help to further industrial peace more effectively than this measure, and will present it to the House, I can promise him that it will receive favourable consideration on this side of the House. I must confess that I think it is impossible for parliament to frame a measure that will absolutely prevent industrial strife. The most that can be hoped for is that some legislation will be passed that will aid in preventing strikes. In no country has an Act been passed that has absolutely stopped strikes. They have tried in New Zealand and Australia, but if you compare the figures it will be seen that the Canadian Act has saved more industrial strikes than theirs. No other country in the world has framed a measure, which, on the whole, has served both labour and capital and the public as well, as the Industrial Disputes Act has served this Dominion, and the best evidence of that is that in other countries they are beginning to copy this legislation, for the simple reason that they feel that while they cannot hope to prevent industrial strikes altogether this act has tended to reduce them in large measure. I would appeal to my hon. friend, particularly when a situation like that in Alberta and British Columbia arises, to co-operate with the government in our endeavour, with what machinery we have, to do the best we can to terminate a situation which, if continued, may prove a very serious injury to the country. We cannot put an end to industrial strife, but we have done a great deal towards reducing it, and if any suggestion can be made whereby the legislation now existing can be made more effective, I can promise my hon. friend I will be only too happy to do all I can to put it on the statute-book. In the absence of anything better I ask from him support to such legislation as has been already framed.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that in New Zealand the compulsory Act is much more effective than any other Act in force, and that taking into account the number of people employed in industrial lines, there have been fewer strikes there than in any other part of the world?

Mr. KING. I have gone pretty carefully into the legislation in New Zealand. From the reports of that government and from special reports we have had from our trade commissioner on the workings of their legislation, there is no question as to the difference between the two measures, if allowance is made for the difference in population of the two countries. Our measure has been infinitely better in suppressing strikes and saving industrial waste. I shall be glad to show my hon. friend a comparative statement. An unbiassed study of the effect of the two measures will show strongly the superiority of the Canadian legislation.

Mr. RHODES. Is the minister not aware that I suggested to his predecessor in office, the present Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) four or five amendments to the Lemieux Act within one month of the time I first entered this parliament, three years ago?

Mr. KING. I regret to say I do not remember my hon. friend having done so. I may have known of it, but if so, it has escaped my memory. I do not recollect his ever having done it. If he submitted any to me, I should be glad to consider them.

Mr. RHODES. You will find them in 'Hansard.'

Mr. BLAIN. I have been listening with great interest to my hon. friend the Minister of Labour. I was anxious to find out what the trouble was in the west, and to find out whether his legislation, on which he compliments himself so much this afternoon, would reach the trouble. My hon. friend has an important department in this government. I do not wish to say anything at this time that would interfere with a settlement of the trouble in the west, and I do not think any member on either side of the House would wish to do so. We are all anxious to give our support to the hon. gentleman in helping to bring about a settlement of the conflict in western Canada. After all, I think we all feel that what is needed on this occasion is some legislation that will meet cases of this kind.

Mr. KING. Suggest it.

Mr. BLAIN. We have a Labour Department now, a full fledged minister, and we have a 'Labour Gazette' published, and in face of a difficulty of this kind, the best my hon. friend can offer is that he has an Act which will not reach the case. Now he asks me to make a suggestion. Well, I would suppose that a suggestion would come better from the minister himself, who is devoting all his attention to this matter. He is always complimenting himself upon the splendid service he is giving to the labour question in Canada. He knows that is the chief text, in the House and out of the House, and if he was to take that out of his speech this afternoon, there would not be very much left. The other day I asked him whether he was in favour of free labour or organized labour, and his answer was: I stand in the happy position between the two, I am neither in favour of free labour nor am I in favour of organized labour.

Mr. KING. May I ask the hon. gentleman one question? Will he please state to the House which of the two he is in favour of?

Mr. BLAIN. I am debating this question.

Mr. KING. Well, I am asking the question. If the hon. member expects me to give an answer to that question, let him first answer it himself, and I will give him my answer in direct terms.

Mr. BLAIN. I asked the question across the floor of the House a few days ago whether himself and his department were in favour of free labour or organized labour, and his answer was, that he was neither in favour of the one nor the other, in other words, that he had no views on this question at all.

Mr. KING. Assuming that is my answer, what answer does my hon. friend give?

Mr. BLAIN. My complaint is that we have an organized Labour Department of this government, that my hon. friend, with a full staff of officers, and a journal at his disposal, sent all over the country, receiving suggestions on the labour question from every part of Canada, has not yet decided on any policy with regard to this great question. When we ask whether he is in favour of free labour or organized labour, he is not able to answer. Every man knows, no one better than my hon. friend, the Minister of Labour, that, brushing everything aside, every time this question comes up in the House or in the country, whether it be in Nova Scotia, or British Columbia, or Toronto, every man knows full well that in nine cases out of ten the question is whether organized labour shall be recognized or not. That is the great problem that my hon. friend has to meet, and I say he is trifling with it——

Mr. KING. I do not think my hon. friend would be justified in saying that, because I regard the whole question as much too serious.

Mr. BLAIN. I know my hon. friend has taken it seriously. But our complaint is that when a difficulty arises such as we have had in Nova Scotia for many months, his Act does not measure up to it. Now we have a very serious difficulty in western Canada. I agree with my hon. friend it is not a matter that should be trifled with, it is a very important question, and one that was threatening the public for many weeks before the strike took place. I think our past experience clearly shows that we do not require more legislation, but some one who will enforce the legislation we have at the present time. I repeat, however, that the question is whether it is right that Canada should throw its influence upon the side of free labour or upon the side of organized labour. I do not profess to know anything about the question in comparison with what my hon. friend knows, who has travelled in other countries in search of information, who has taken a part in the legislation that has been passed in this House, and who indeed has occupied a foremost position in the supposed settlement that took place between the strikers and the Grand Trunk Railway Company a few months ago. He talked this afternoon about the Canadian Pacific railway. Every time a conflict takes place, or is settled, he points to that and says: Only for this Act in my department having been applied, no man can tell what the conflict would have been, how great the losses would have been. We had a conflict of that kind in the case of the Grand Trunk strike. Every day we read reports in the newspapers that possibly this strike would extend to the Canadian Pacific railway, and that great disasters would befall the interests of this country. I suppose my hon. friend takes credit for his Act, and will say that because he stepped in, the strike did not reach the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. KING I may say to my hon. friend that the dispute between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and its men was referred under the Act, and the settlement that was made was based on the award given by the board.

Mr. BLAIN. I know all that, everybody knows it. In my opinion, and I think my opinion will be endorsed by the people of this country, if the Labour Department is to be of any service to Canada it must have a policy upon the labour question, it must decide either that it is right for the people of Canada, in their commercial interests, to have organized labour, or that we should have free labour. That is the position after all. I say that if my hon. friend wishes to do something in the interest of the people of Canada, he and his department should have some fixed policy.

Mr. KING. I wish to clear this question up with my hon. friend. He says we should have a policy either for organized labour or for free labour. Does he mean to say that he regards organized labour as other than free? Because if he does, that is a new point of view, and one that will not be appreciated by the working men.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend is trifling, he is not serious.

Mr. KING. He is serious. My hon. friend says that the government should have a policy as between organized labour and free labour. I ask him if organized labour is not just as free as any other labour in the country?

Mr. BLAIN. Did anybody suggest putting hobbles around labour because it was organized?

Mr. KING. The workingmen will make their own interpretation.

Mr. BLAIN. I will risk the workingmen. The workingmen have a good many things in their minds about my hon. friend —if he wants to stir that up. The people of this country understand very well the position my hon. friend took in the Grand Trunk strike. My hon. friend is complimenting himself now and again with respect to the important part that he and the Minister of Militia took in the settlement of the question. They came together. The point that overshadowed every other point, in so far as the men were concerned, in that strike, was as to whether or not these men should be taken back by the Grand Trunk Railway Company and reinstated in their positions. That point, more important than all the others, was left out of the agreement altogether, and my hon. friend the Minister of Labour was a party to leaving it out.

Mr. KING. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain), but when he makes a statement of that kind he must know, if he has looked at the facts——

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not correct?

Mr. KING. No, it is not correct, and when the hon. gentleman says that I am a party to something being left out of the agreement and tries to imply that through some action of mine an injustice was done to a certain class of men, am I to sit here and allow his remarks to pass unchallenged? If he will state in any particular that I did anything in connection with the Grand Trunk strike other than what was in the best interests of the parties I will be very glad to hear him.

Mr. BLAIN. That is not the question at all. I make the statement that the one important point in connection with the strike on the Grand Trunk a few months ago was as to whether or not the men should be reinstated in their former positions. My hon. friend was a party to the agreement that was signed. My hon. friend surely will not deny that?

Mr. KING. The agreement was made between the two parties to the controversy.

Mr. BLAIN. I understand that.

Mr. KING. Then why does my hon. friend say I was a party to the agreement?

Mr. BLAIN. If my hon. friend does not know I think I can inform him. My hon. friend knows very well that the important point I am referring to was left out. How was it left out? Was it put in the agreement in the interest of the men? Not at all. The agreement does not contain any such statement. How was the question to be settled?—settled just in the way that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Militia said it should be settled. It was left out entirely.

Mr. KING. The hon. member is absolutely wrong when he makes that statement.

Mr. BLAIN. I am not wrong.

Mr. KING. Absolutely wrong. There was no understanding that either the Minister of Militia or myself should have anything further to do with the controversy one way or the other after the agreement was signed between the parties. There was an understanding as to the meaning of the words 'as soon as possible.'

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Grand Trunk Railway Company did not wish to give definite meaning to those words.

Mr. BLAIN. Who was to interpret the meaning of those words?

Mr. KING. No one was to interpret the meaning. The meaning was to be put beyond any possibility of misinterpretation. The Grand Trunk was forced to give a definite meaning to these words and the meaning they gave to them was three months. The Minister of Militia and myself undertook to see that if ever a question should be raised as to the meaning of these words, 'as soon as possible', the interpretation should be given to them that was at that time placed upon them. Although the Grand Trunk did not put it in writing, they gave these words the meaning of three months. That is the position we took, and that is the position I am prepared to take now and prepared to take always.

Mr. BLAIN. Why did not my hon. friend have that embodied in the agreement?

Mr. KING. I will explain to my hon. friend. Possibly if he were more familiar with industrial matters he would not ask this question. In the endeavour to settle a big controversy of this kind the parties naturally have their feelings somewhat aroused, and the Grand Trunk did not wish it to appear before the public that they had been obliged to name a definite time. The men said: All right, if you want to save your face, we do not care about that; we will allow you to put in whatever words you please, present any face you like to the public, but what we want to know is what you mean by the words 'as soon as possible,' and if you tell us what you mean and tell us in the presence of Sir Frederick Borden and Mr. King, we will be perfectly satisfied. The men would not regard the agreement as final until some definite meaning was put upon the words 'as soon as possible.' First they tried to get 'immediately' inserted, but that was out of the question; then the question of one month was talked about and finally three months was accepted. I do not remember just who made the suggestion, but the suggestion was made three months. They thought that if the Grand Trunk was sincere in saying that they were going to take these men back as soon as possible, three months was quite sufficient. The men said: You may put in 'as soon as possible,' but give Sir Frederick Borden and Mr. King that assurance in our presence, and let them stand as vouchers for the fact that the words 'as soon as possible' will mean three months. If the Grand Trunk had put back the men in the form in which they expected, and in the form in which I expected, the public to this day would never have known that these words 'as soon as possible' meant three months.

Mr. KING.

Mr. BLAIN. How did my hon. friend expect the men would be put back?

Mr. KING. I expected they would be put back pretty quickly.

Mr. BLAIN. In their former positions?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIN. Why did not my hon. friend have that embodied in the agreement?

Mr. KING. I was not drawing the agreement. The agreement was being drawn between the parties. This was a matter of negotiation between the Grand Trunk and certain men who represented the organizations and brotherhoods. They were here from their headquarters in the United States. The negotiation of the agreement occupied the greater part of a day between the Grand Trunk Company and these men and neither the Minister of Militia nor myself suggested one syllable in the agreement. We had not any suggestion to make. the whole matter was discussed by the parties themselves. We were brought into it by that suggestion to which I have just referred and that only. We did not have anything to do with the terms of the agreement. It was not our agreement.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, my hon. friend is always complimenting himself and his department on the fact that they settled the strike and now, when we are discussing it in the House, he declares that they had nothing to do with the settlement.

Mr. KING. No, I do not declare that.

Mr. BLAIN. Well, that is what it must mean.

Mr. KING. It is an entirely different thing to say that I was not a party to the agreement and that I did nothing to bring about the settlement. What I have stated is that the Grand Trunk and the men would never have come to sufficiently close quarters to permit of an agreement being drawn but for the pressure which was brought to bear upon them through the government. They never would have got that far, but for that they would not have had an agreement to the extent to which the agreement went.

Mr. BLAIN. It is only a question of opinion as to that.

Mr. KING. I am quite content that it should remain such.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend has not stated one thing but what he stated on the floor of this House some weeks ago when the matter was up for discussion. He is a little roused because I say that the men who were connected with the strike have their own opinion of the Labour Department. A few weeks ago I was on the train and a gentleman said to me: What about that matter between the employees of the Grand Trunk and the company? I said: That matter was settled by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Militia, and he replied: We have no faith in those gentlemen. We were disappointed. I am only giving my hon. friend a statement of one man but a very important man. He was not reinstated and he is not in the employ of the company at the present time thus losing his superannuation. However, I am not going to discuss that. I think the Minister of Labour and his department should have a fixed policy as to whether it is in the best interests of the country, of manufacturing concerns and of the people of Canada generally that these men should be banded together in organizations such as they have in some instances now, or whether it would be better in the interest of the public that there should be no organized labour. That after all is the point. Every once in a while we hear of a conflict between employer and employee and in the main, while the parties agree as to wages, the difficulty comes in as to whether the employers will or will not recognize the union. If the Labour Department had a fixed policy on that point; if they said to the people of Canada, whether in their opinion it was better to have free labour or organized labour the people of the country could be guided. But the Minister of Labour will not pronounce himself.

Mr. KING. I entertain the view that organized labour is free labour, and I could not frame a policy which distinguishes between the two.

Mr. BLAIN. That is only a quibble, and no one understands it better than the Minister of Labour. The minister thinks it better to say that the government stands in the position of happy indifference between the two, and so long as the government adopts that attitude they will never be able to settle such disputes as we have in western Canada at present. As soon as the minister and the government have a fixed policy as to whether they are in favour of organized labour or unorganized labour the people of Canada will then decide whether or not the view of the government should receive their support. I shall continue to repeat in this House my view that the department organized for the express purpose of settling these industrial conflicts, should have some fixed policy to submit to the people with regard to them. The records of the department will show that in most cases the conflict is as to whether the employer shall or shall not recognize organized labour, and so long as the minister and the government refuse to adopt a fixed policy on that question so long will there be trouble, between capital and labour.

Mr. SPROULE. In to-day's paper I read:

Prince Rupert, B.C., August 7.—A mob of strikers and a force of police clashed here yesterday and a sanguinary fight followed. Pistols, stones and clubs were freely used, and the rioters were finally subdued. One of the strikers was killed by the police and many were injured on both sides. The situation is serious, and it is feared that further conflicts will follow. Forty arrests have been made.

Has the Industrial Disputes Act been applied to settle this strike? Can the Minister of Labour give any information with regard to it?

Mr. SPEAKER. As the minister has already spoken I trust he will limit his remarks strictly to an answer to the question.

Mr. SPROULE. Personally I am in favour of allowing considerable latitude to a minister when the House requires information.

Mr. SPEAKER. I quite agree with the hon. member in that, but I deem it my duty occasionally to call attention to the fact that an hon. member has no right to speak more than once. The Minister of Labour has spoken quite a number of times, and I thought it advisable to suggest that his remarks be limited to an answer to the question so that further discussion may not arise in regard to it.

Mr. HENDERSON. With the consent of the House, I think the Minister of Labour should answer this question. We will all be pleased to hear what he has to say in reference to a matter of such importance.

Mr. CROSBY. I do not think the Minister of Labour has any desire to answer the question.

Mr. KING. I am entirely ready to answer the question. The substance of the report which my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) has just read came to the attention of the government to-day for the first time, and the government has taken steps to get full particulars. I judge from the item that the event was something in the nature of a riot which came up suddenly, but I cannot speak with authority on the matter until I get further information.

Mr. GOODEVE. I take exception to the statement of the Minister of Labour that a condition had arisen in the Crowsnest coal strike that was not contemplated by the framers of the Act, in that both parties to this dispute fear a public investigation and appear to have something they desire to keep hidden. I do not think that statement should be allowed to go unchallenged, particularly as the minister made it much more forcible by coupling that statement with the threat that if after a specified number of days neither party applies to the department for the application of the Act, the government would see that a proper investigation was made. I do not think the inference drawn by the minister is a fair one. I am inclined to believe the view taken by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) is the correct one, namely, that both employers and employed have lost confidence in the Act. Over and over again not only the men, but the employers have stated that in the disputes which have taken place in British Columbia, at all events, they would have done much better had there been no such legislation, I cannot help but believe that the reason why neither party to this dispute has asked for the application of that Act, is on account of that feeling. This is too serious a question to make political capital out of, and I have no desire to do so or to criticise unduly the efforts of the Department of Labour to effect a settlement, but I do say that the minister above all others should be careful not to make use of such an expression as I have called attention to. I think it is an unfair statement, I do not think there is any basis for it, in fact, all the evidence points the other way. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) has called my attention to 'Hansard,' volume 1, 1909, page 660 in which the four amendments to the Act to which he referred are set forth. The first of these amendments suggested by him is that the third arbitrator should be appointed by a judge and not by the department. The unions asked for this particular amendment on the ground that it was desirable that this matter should be absolutely taken out of politics, and I think both sides of the House will agree in the statement made by the minister to-day that there should be no politics in a question of this kind. It was on that ground that I believe the miners of Nova Scotia asked for that particular amendment. The second amendment was that those who had been appointed to settle disputes should be compelled to visit the various works so that they might be made familiar with the conditions which they were endeavouring to settle. It seems to me that was a reasonable amendment. The third was that the fees of the witnesses should be increased. I understand that that has been acted upon.

Mr. KING. I think the allowance to the members of the board has increased, but the witness fees are to be such as prevail in the local courts.

Mr. GOODEVE. The fourth amendment was that they desired to be placed in the same category as a party in a civil case, so that one party could invoke the aid of the Act, and if the second party refused to appear the decision should be in favour of the party appearing. I am not discussing these amendments; I am only calling attention to the fact that they were placed before the House by the hon. member for Cumberland as he stated this afternoon.

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to protest against the manner in which the Minister of Labour treated the remark of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) about free labour and organized labour. The Minister of Labour is not here for that purpose; he is here for the purpose of advising and giving information on labour matters. He knew that when the hon. member for Peel spoke of free labour, he meant labour free from organization; and yet the minister said, 'I call all labour free labour.' The Minister of Labour claimed that the Labour Department had settled a great many strikes. He takes the credit of having settled every little complication that takes place anywhere in Canada. If so he must surely be responsible for what he has not settled throughout the Dominion, and that amounts to a great deal to-day. We have never had a worse condition among the labouring classes in eastern Canada than we have had since the Lemieux Act came into operation. We have a condition of things in the county of Cumberland that is a disgrace to the Labour Department. After nearly two years of trouble and destitution, a great many workmen there are still out of work, and my hon. friend does not say a word about that. He does not want to take the onus of that trouble; but if any dispute anywhere in Canada has been settled, he takes the credit. We had labour disputes in Canada before the Lemieux Act came into operation and before the Labour Department was established, and many of them were settled satisfactorily by arbitration. I am in favour of the Labour Department, but I want it to be of some benefit to the country. We have never had such strikes or labour troubles in eastern Canada as we have had within the last two years, since the hon. member took the position of Minister of Labour. What has he to say about the condition that prevails at Springhill, or about the condition in the county of Cape Breton, where the dispute has never been settled, but where the men were compelled by coercion to go back to work after suffering great trouble and distress. He does not say that the Labour Department is responsible for that. The Minister of Labour cannot show a case in which the Lemieux Act has been of any advantage to warrant it remaining on the statute-book. The Minister of Labour says that he is willing to hear suggestions from the hon. member from Cumberland or from any other member for the improvement of the Act or for the better settlement of labour disputes. I have no doubt that the hon. minister has that desire; but if he has, how can he show it better than by putting into effect the suggestions of the hon. member for Cumberland and others who have an intimate knowledge of labour conditions? After the experience we have had in the province of Nova Scotia, that Act cannot be considered by any means to be a perfect Act. We all desire to have a workable Act, and the number of boards that have sat on the Springhill dispute and other disputes that have occurred in Nova Scotia, without bringing about a settlement, must convince us that some amendments to the Act are necessary to bring about a better condition of things than exists to-day.

This Conciliation Act is not acceptable either by the working classes or their employers. Neither side is satisfied with it. What we want is a law which will give justice to all. But the present Act neither protects the workingman nor does it give special advantages to the employer. Under it both stand apart, and there is no way of bringing them together. Its term 'Conciliation Act' is a misnomer. There is no conciliation in it. There is nothing in it to bring about a settlement such as the public generally desire because the public do not desire that our men should be locked out, and the condition of things in Springhill and Cape Breton is nothing else. As my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) has said: the Minister of Labour (Mr. King) is an adept at throwing bouquets at himself and eulogizing himself or what he has done; but as a matter of fact there are conditions both in eastern and western Canada which are discreditable to the Labour Department and the minister himself. No effort has been made by the minister or his department to bring about a settlement of the Springhill strike. The only thing which keeps the men out there is their membership of the United Mine Workers' Association, and it is time that the minister should interfere and insist that these men have a perfect right to belong to any chartered organization or any organization which is not a menace to the general public. It is up to the minister to see that these people are taken back and allowed to earn their living, for they have suffered a great deal for the last twenty or twenty-four months.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

WESTERN ALBERTA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 135) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.

On section 10,

Mr. SPROULE. I have often thought in connection with clauses like this, giving power to put up telephone and telegraph lines, even with the safeguard which is introduced in this case that they must first have the consent of the municipality, that we ought to go further and provide that this shall not be a perpetual right. As long as that company was the user, I would regard it as proper for them to have, and to enjoy that right. But it sometimes happens that a company may amalgamate with another, or sell out a portion of the line, and substitute something else. For instance, a telegraph system may become a telephone system, and still continue to have and enjoy the right of keeping up their poles and their lines, and even of selling out to some one else, and still enjoy that right. I think there ought to be something in these Acts that would make the right null and void once they dispose of it for some other purpose, or because it was not any longer needed to keep up the service for which they obtained the right in the first instance. We have an example of that in our locality at the present time. A telegraph company, many miles in length erected poles between thirty and forty years ago, they used them for many years, and then amalgamated with another company, and now the other company do not require to use them. They have put up a telephone service, but they have sold it to one individual, still keeping their poles standing on the highways with their wires up. Sometimes accidents happen as the result of these poles, which cause the municipalities considerable money in damages to a man who ran against a telegraph pole, and was injured. Yet the municipality have not the right to compel them either to take down these poles, or to take down the wires, or do away with the poles, notwithstanding that the company do not require them themselves, and they are lying idle. I think there ought to be some provision in this Act that the right would revert to the municipality once the original owner had failed to continue to use it.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is considerable in what my hon. friend says. A good many of our roads and streets have been marred, as well as rendered dangerous at times by the numerous telegraph poles and wires. It strikes me it would be a difficult clause to work into an Act of this kind. These rights were given in some cases without the consent of the municipality, a municipality under the old Act did not have anything to say about it. I know in some towns under old charters telegraph companies have the right to go along through shade trees, but in the new Act that has been changed, so that the municipality must give its consent by by-law, and can make any terms it likes in that by-law to govern points that may arise.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case it does not provide 'upon such terms as the municipality may agree upon;' it says they may give their consent by by-law, but without specifying any terms.

Mr. GRAHAM. Could not they make that a portion of their consent, if they give their consent by by-law?

Mr. SPROULE. We would have the same condition that was brought out under the old Bell Telephone Company years ago. The special charter carries with it the right to cross a municipality, and that was construed to mean that a municipality that a municipality must give its consent. Yet the Act containing the right to cross, I think, would be held by the courts to compel the municipality to allow the company to cross. That was the question brought up with the old Bell Telephone Company, and I think it would be in this instance. I do not see where there could be any difficulty in putting in a clause providing that as soon as the company ceases to use the line, they shall take down their wires, and cut down their poles, and let the people have the full use and benefit of the highways as originally.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 159) to change the name of the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Tolmie.

Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the British Columbia and White River Railway Company—Mr. Congdon.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 161) to incorporate the Canadian Baptist Foreign Mission Board.—Mr. Fowke.

Bill (No. 162) respecting the Alsek and Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 163) for the relief of Mary Jane Beatty.—Mr. Congdon.

HUDSON BAY MORTGAGE CORPORATION.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 56) to incorporate the Hudson Bay Mortgage Corporation.—Mr. Knowles.

On the motion that the Bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce committee;

Mr. KNOWLES. I do not understand the rule, but I do not think it is necessary to refer it to the Banking and Commerce committee. The amendments are very trivial. They are taking away from us certain rights, and we have agreed to the amendments.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that it is the request of the government that this Bill be referred back to the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The amendments proposed are very important; you could not do otherwise.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH UNITED STATES.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. E. L. CASH (Mackenzie). Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in the debate on the question of tariff relations between Canada and the United States, I do so with full confidence that the agreement now pending before the House will be passed as proposed. I lived in the United States for about 25 years and know very well the sentiment of the people in the western part of that country, and it is that the tariff there has become a great burden, that it conduces to the formation of trusts and combines and that it should be very much reduced. I have heard tariff matters discussed here in the House and throughout Canada, and it pleases me very much to know that our people appreciate fully that the tariff is a tax. It is a fact that in collecting this tax it has been very easy to deceive the people as to the amount they are paying. The ordinary man, when he wants to purchase an article, goes to the place where he can buy it cheapest. He does not realize the amount he is paying in the shape of duty when he pays for what he purchases and he does not know the amount that is added to the cost of the article on account of the tariff. The people, however, are awakening to the idea that they are very heavily taxed, and also to a realizatien of the fact that a large amount that they are paying on account of the tariff does not go into the coffers of the government, but into the hands of the manufacturer. I do not propose to go into the details with regard to this subject, but I would just say that a farmer who purchases an engine or something of the kind in the United States, and has to pay therefor, we will say, $1,000 in cash, and in addition probably $250 or $300 by way of duty, realizes fully that he is being taxed. He also realizes that he is being taxed when he finds out that in trying to purchase the same piece of machinery in Canada he has to pay the full price that he would have to pay in the United States with the duty added, and in this case he knows that the duty, instead of going into the hands of the government, goes into the hands of the manufacture.

It gives me a great deal of satisfaction to know that the Liberal party are true to the principles of Liberalism, and that their policy has been along the same lines since they came into power. When they came into power they were put up against the National Policy which was then in full swing. The National Policy was conceived not in the interest of Canada, but in the interest of the Tory party. It was conceived with the idea of having the manufacturers come to the assistance of the Conservatives in order to help them to get into power. I have here a quotation from a speech which Sir John A. Macdonald made in Hamilton, in which this aspect of the National Policy is fully brought out. During the speech he was asked what protection he was prepared to give the manufacturers, and his accommodating answer was:

> I cannot tell what protection you require. But let each manufacturer tell us what he wants and we will try to give him what he needs.

This shows very plainly the object of Sir John Macdonald in promulgating the National Policy. I submit, that the changes made by the Liberal government in the tariff have always been made in the right direction and that the government while desirous to aid every industry in Canada and to injure none, is at the same time making an honest effort to protect the consumers from unduly enhanced prices. The present government, in lowering the tariff has aimed at not injuring these industries and at the same time it has given the people who consume manufactured products a chance to obtain them at a fair price. We are aware that the United States has about reached its limit of production. At one time they were large exporters of farm products, but the prospect now is that in a few years it will be necessary for that country to import farm products instead of exporting them. This, I consider, was the main object the United States had in view in coming to Canada with the reciprocity proposals we now have before us. I think it ill becomes our manufacturers who are in the minority in this country, but who have grown rich out of the earnings of the majority, to object to those who have to purchase their high priced products, obtaining in turn a fair price for their products. I do not wish to go into the general question of reciprocity in detail but I might for a few minutes dwell on it from the point of view in which it affects my constituency. Before doing so, as there was a great demand last evening from our friends opposite for information, I wish to place on record a comparison of the prices of grain in Winnipeg and Minneapolis, as well as some other points in Dakota, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. If I am permitted to do as the hon, member for Grenville (Mr. Reid), did last night I will place it on 'Hansard' without reading it. It is information which was presented to the American Congress by the Hon. Mr. Hanna, congressman for North Dakota, who was opposed to this arrangement and made a speech against it. In this statement, I would particularly wish to call attention to the comparison of the prices at Portal and North Portal; North Portal being on the Canadian side and Portal being on the American side, and the price of wheat in North Portal was 75 cents, and in Portal it was 86 cents. I would like an opportunity of placing this on 'Hansard,' as I think it would be interesting to the House and to the people of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to say a word with reference to this practice because it is capable of leading to great abuse if it is allowed. I speak with a little hesitancy because I am told that last night an hon. member was permitted to place on 'Hansard' a paper something like this. That is exactly how the custom grew up in the House of Representatives at Washington some years ago and which resulted in loading up the Congressional record with a great many papers. A few figures at the beginning were read, there was no opportunity to verify whether they came from official or reliable sources or not, and they were printed and afterwards regarded as official. I have always thought ministers of the Crown might be allowed considerable latitude in placing these tables on record, for instance the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, but I never thought it would be a good plan to allow private members of the House the same privilege to any great extent. Sometimes you may have a short paper handed to 'Hansard' and at other times it may be very lengthy, and judging by the paper the hon. gentleman has in his hand it seems to be of considerable length.

Mr CASH. It is only one page of the Congressional Record.

Mr. SPROULE. What figures are they?

Mr. CASH. They are figures quoted in a speech by Congressman Hanna, of Dakota, and furnished by the collector of customs at Pembina. It is interesting information. If the House prefers I should read it I shall do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Personally I prefer the paper should be read because of the great evil that may be the outcome of this practice.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is said that if a man lives long enough he will be on every side of every question. Last night considerable time of the House was occupied by the member from Grenville reading a long statement.

Mr. LAKE. These were official figures.

Mr. GRAHAM. They were figures compiled for the hon. member for Grenville, but half of them or more were figures taken from statistics of other countries.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. GRAHAM. Because the member for Grenville stated so and I am prepared to take his word. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), that the practice is a very bad one, but in this debate many figures are being introduced and statistics are taken from different sources, and now that we have started it I do not know that we had better discontinue it so far as the reciprocity question is concerned. I admit that the practice could be very much abused. I believe that in the United States a whole volume of Henry George was placed on the Congressional Record in this way.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the very point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax), I think the rule decided on so far in this debate is that after a member reads for an hour and a quarter he can have the balance of the documents placed on 'Hansard.' After the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cash), has read for an hour and a quarter I shall be quite content that the remainder be published in 'Hansard.'

Mr. CASH. What is your ruling, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The Chairman is not empowered to give any ruling in this matter other than to mention that the custom is that 'Hansard' will report merely what is read or spoken, and without the unanimous consent of the House I think 'Hansard' would not feel itself justified in printing anything that had not been read. The expression of feeling is rather antagonistic to granting the hon. member the privilege he asks for.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). The practice has been established for this week of allowing these documents to be printed without being read, and I should think it might continue for the last day of the week, and that we might commence another practice next week.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. member had better read the document; it will be a precedent.

Mr. CASH. Then, I will read it. It is contained in a speech of the Hon. Louis B Hanna, of North Dakota, in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, February 14, 1911:

> Official figures show what protection does—Differences in prices of grain shown by official figures—Figures furnished by Collector of Customs at Pembina—Towns compared are located in same territory.

Now that the Canadian reciprocity treaty is an issue before the people of the nation and especially to the business and farming interests of the Northwest, by reason of the fact that by the terms of the proposed agreement between the United States and Canada, grains are put on the free list. A comparative table of actual conditions as to prices on three of the great staples—wheat, flax, and barley—is of interest. The following figures speak for themselves, and were furnished by the collector of customs at Pembina for the use of our congressional delegation at Washington. The tables are quite interesting, and show the prices in the United States and in Canada, the first being this side of the boundary and the second in Manitoba, and in most every instance with less than a mile separating the stations. It would seem as if there might be considerable force in the action of the North Dakota legislative assembly in their action in protesting against the removal of the duty on our farm products.

WHEAT.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Are the grades of the different grains given?

Mr. CASH. Nothing is said about grades, but the towns compared are in the same territory.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If there are no grades mentioned, you cannot tell the difference in value.

Mr. CASH. Now, I will give you a comparison of closing prices at Winnipeg and Minneapolis on the same dates, with the difference in prices:

Average, a fraction over 10½ cents, Minneapolis and Winnipeg price.

My particular object in reading this statement was to have hon. members opposite in particular understand why we in the west are so much in favour of reciprocity. The free interchange of natural products is a matter which affects us very materially. If I had the reports I would have been pleased to show you the prices of cattle in Montreal and Chicago or Montreal and Toronto, so that you might see what advantage it would be to us to have free access to the American market.

I now propose to take up the question which affects more particularly my own constituency, and in order to do so effectively, I find it necessary to give you a very brief history of the Mackenzie district. The total area of the district is 5,300,000 acres, at least 75 per cent of which is suitable for grain cultivation, giving a total tract suitable for growing grain of some 4,000,000 acres. In my constituency the chief interest is the growing of grain. The town of Yorkton, the commercial capital of my district, and also, I may say, of the northeast part of Saskatchewan, has a total elevator capacity of 320,000 bushels, and ranks second only to the town of Indian Head in that respect. Indian Head exceeds Yorkton in elevator capacity by some 7,000 bushels.

In the year 1909 we had areas under grain as follows:

	Acres.
Oats	225,150
Barley	32,600

I have not the figures for 1910, but those of 1909 will serve for the purpose of my argument. We raise abundant crops of these grains in Mackenzie, and I think I am safe in allowing for the yields of the different grains per acre. For oats, 50 bushels; for wheat, 25 bushels; for barley, 40 bushels, which from the acreage figures I have given for 1909 would show results as follows: Oats, 11,255,000 bushels; wheat, 2, 247,500 bushels; barley, 1,304,000 bushels; total, 14,806,500 bushels.

These are large figures, but consider the possible expansion. The four million acres I claim as capable of grain production, if producing to the full and in the same proportion, would produce totals as follows: Oats, 128,000,000 bushels; wheat, 26,000,000 bushels; barley, 16,000,000 bushels; total, 170,000,000 bushels for my constituency alone.

I, as representing Mackenzie, ask, how can our grain production be increased in accordance with the figures I have given, which are for oats and wheat, ten-fold, and for barley, thirteen-fold.

In other words, how can my constituency be encouraged to reach its reasonable maximum of production in its best products?

The subject of wheat and the favourable effect of this agreement in stimulating its production on the prairie has been dealt with by my hon. friend from Humboldt and other speakers. I want to say a word about oats and barley. Large portions of the Canadian west are peculiarly adapted for the growth of these cereals. The true prairie perhaps produces the finest wheat, but the park country, where the prairie alternates with clumps of trees, with its rich soil, seems peculiarly adapted for the growth of oats and barley. With the high quality of those grains produced in our northern climate, an advantage, let it be remembered, that can be claimed for nearly all our agricultural products, and for the same reason can there be any doubt that a constant and increasing demand in the American market of 92,000,000 people, is a certainty. A few days ago the announcement was made that the highest award, being a trophy of the value of $1,500, had been awarded at the National Corn Exposition at Columbus, Ohio, to a grain-grower, a Barr colonist from near Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, in competition with the world, for oats grown on his own land. This is no surprise to western people. We know that in quality and yield of oats we lead, and I can assert confidently that these prize oats from Lloydminster can be duplicated in my own constituency by many of our farmers, and in almost any year. Last year at the exhibition in connection with the Dry Farming Congress at Spokane, the province of Alberta swept all the highest awards, including those for oats and barley, in competition with exhibits from all over the United States, and as in the case of the Lloydminster oats, I assert that what the Alberta exhibit did last year in oats and barley can be done by many farmers in my own constituency.

I would just remark, in speaking of the average quantity of grain per acre raised in my constituency, and of what are the possibilities there in that connection, that while we have a great many very good farmers there, we also have a considerable number from central Europe and other points who are rather inferior, who are not well up in our methods of cultivation. This necessarily pulls down to some extent the average, but even with this drawback, our average, according to the 'Free Press' report, was 65 bushels of oats per acre.

What is the use of opponents of this agreement talking to the farmers of Mackenzie about the beauties of interprovincial trade? If we western farmers look to see our production of oats and barley increased by shipping to other provinces, we find we are up against the long railway haul and the following figures of production in these grains for the eastern provinces and which are the figures for 1910, given me by the Census and Statistical Bureau:

OATS AND BARLEY PRODUCTION FOR 1910 OF CERTAIN PROVINCES.

	Oats. Bushels.	Barley. Bushels.
Ontario	128,917,000	20,727,000
Quebec	48,927,000	2,547,000
New Brunswick	6,351,000	73,000
Nova Scotia	5,723,000	264,000
Prince Edward Island	6,778,000	159,600
Totals	196,696,000	23,770,600

Flax is another production of the Canadian west which is capable of enormous expansion in production. In my own constituency the production is at present very small, perhaps 2,000 or 2,500 acres under flax last year, and production, say, 50,000 bushels. Owing to a short crop in the United States in 1910, high prices were received for our western flax, the price ranging from $2 to $2.40 per bushel. The total product of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in 1910 was 3,802,000 bushels, of which 90 per cent was raised in my province, Saskatchewan.

The export of flax to the United States in the first eight months of the fiscal year 1910-11 was $2,321,000, and this against a duty of 25 cents per bushel.

Flax is easily first among our exports of grain products to the United States. From the Trade and Navigation returns for the eight months referred to, I have taken the following figures for the purpose of comparison.

Exported to the United States for the first eight months of the fiscal year 1910-11:

Flax	$2,321,000
Barley	25,246
Beans	32,540
Oats	15,565
Pease	132,562
Rye	541
Wheat	81,395
Split pease	24,622
Hay	614,041
Potatoes	18,195

It is not necessary to take time to follow the same line of argument with respect to cattle and their products.

The natural feed of the western prairies produces the very finest cattle and the enlarged market is certain to enormously stimulate production. I have claimed 75 per cent of the area of my constituency to be suitable for grain production, and that this is a conservative estimate, but in respect of area suitable for the growth of cattle no deduction is necessary, for the land is all good for such purpose and the feed of the very best.

The argument I have endeavoured to make for my own constituency applies with equal force to every constituency in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and to the great undeveloped districts north of the present settled areas in those provinces.

The area surveyed at this date, that is the known area of agricultural lands (for the surveys are only carried on as settlement demands and where the land is suitable for settlement), is 150,000,000 acres. To this can be added for the area in the north, yet unsurveyed, but suitable for agriculture, at least 40,000,000 acres. Total, 190,000,000 acres. Reducing this by one half would surely leave a residue of land upon which it would be safe to make some calculations for the future. Ninety-five million acres, if devoted exclusively to oats and yielding 40 bushels to the acre, would produce 3,840,000,000 bushels; or if exclusively to wheat at 25 bushels to the acre, 2,375,000,000 bushels; or in barley at 30 bushels to the acre, 2,850,000,000 bushels.

I would not attempt to claim that any of these enormous totals will ever be reached in any one grain, but the figures can be very much scaled down and still show imposing totals, totals which force the conclusion that the development of grain production is the necessary policy for our true progress.

The representative from the west can, therefore, feel no doubt that new and rapidly growing markets are both desirable and necessary if his part of the Dominion is going to prosper as it should and in voting for this measure he is but doing his duty to his constituency and to his part of Canada.

Now, if this measure means far greater prosperity for my constituents and for the western prairies generally, is that inconsistent with the welfare of Canada? Are we not by our increase of prosperity going to become better buyers and consume far more goods? and certainly in my constituency we will be content to confine our attention to agriculture and let the manufacturer of eastern Canada have the full share he can show he is entitled to in supplying our needs.

I prefer to stand on the argument I have made for my own constituency and for the part of Canada in which I live and leave to others from the other provinces the discussion of the effect on their particular interests. I may be permitted, however, to refer to two items affecting the eastern provinces, and especially the maritime provinces, viz., hay and potatoes. In 1910 there was produced in the eastern provinces as follows:

PRODUCTION OF HAY AND POTATOES IN CERTAIN PROVINCES IN THE YEAR 1910.

Provinces.	Hay. Tons.	Potatoes. Bushels.
Ontario..	6,749,000	26,163,000
Quebec..	5,502,000	21 271,000
New Brunswick..	1,261,000	7,486,000
Nova Scotia..	1,284,000	6,432,000
Prince Edward Island..	495,000	4,915,000
Totals..	15,291,000	66,267,000

In potatoes I find that there were exported to Cuba in the first eight months of the present fiscal year a total of $387,692 worth, while to the whole of the United States was exported in the same period, as I have already pointed out, only $12,195 worth. Surely the remission of 25 cents per bushel duty will give the eastern farmer a more advantageous market for his potatoes than carrying them all the way to Cuba.

In the matter of hay it is well known hay was being carried by rail last fall from Quebec all the way to Vancouver, and I am told that a freight charge of $15 was paid. This is interprovincial trade and perhaps is so far satisfactory, but when we find that last year we exported $614,041 worth of hay to the United States from Canada, and that against a duty of $4 per ton, and that hay is now to be made free, I think the eastern farmer can be excused if he looks forward with satisfaction to greatly increased production in hay as the result of the opening of near-by markets.

There is still another feature of the case that I would like to refer to, and that is the importation into Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan of horses. The number of horses entered for consumption into the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1910, was as follows:

	No.	Value.
Manitoba..	575	$ 54,970
Alberta..	1,297	89 846
Saskatchewan..	3,486	113,632

Also the importation into British Columbia of fruits. The quantity and value of the undermentioned fruit and vegetables entered for consumption in the province of British Columbia during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1910, was as follows:

Fruits and Vegetables.	Unit of Quantity.	Quality.	Value.
Apples, green..	..Brls.	28,103	$138,599
Blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries, &c..	..Lbs.	332 656	34,365
Cherries..	..Lbs.	113 689	13,805
Cranberries..	..Bush.	2,183	6,331
Currants..	..Lbs.	25	2
Grapes..	..Lbs.	532,536	31,808
Peaches..	..Lbs.	706,460	31,571
Plums..	..Bush.	7,803	22,374
Quinces, apricots, pears..	Lbs.	657,086	28 223
Nectarines..		.....	$ 132
All other green fruits, N.O.P., ...		.....	.....

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend permit me a question? Has he any figures showing the number of horses going west from Ontario?

Mr. CASH. I have not, such a trade would be interprovincial, and I am figuring on the trade between the United States and the prairie provinces. There are many horses going from Ontario to the west, but as a rule they are not the best horses, they are often decrepid in some shape or other, some wind trouble, or something of that kind. I think the greater number of our horses come from the United States, and these also are not the best horses. Our best horses I think are raised in the province.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that an estimate has been given that last year there were 20,000 horses went from Ontario to western Canada.

Mr. CASH (reading):

Vegetables, viz.	Unit of Quantity.	Quantity	Value.
Melons..	..No.	160,736	$ 13,493
Potatoes..	..Bush.	58,094	44,202
Potatoes, sweet & yams.	Bush.	7,389	6,846
Tomatoes, fresh..	Bush.	3,389	8,864
Vegetables, N.O.P.. .. $		.....	110,938
			$491,493

Now while the importation of these articles may affect a few individuals, who are raising horses, or raising fruit, yet the number affected in this way is so small compared with those who will be benefited, and who will rejoice at the idea of having horses and fruit free, that I think the positive benefit secured by the multitude far exceeds the injury which is anticipated by the horse raiser or the fruit grower. Now then let us take a simultaneous conspectus of the whole situation. Great Britain has a revenue of over one billion two hundred million dollars ($1,200,000,000), and has placed a serious and unreasonable embargo upon one of our most important industries. I refer to our cattle. Canada, on the other hand, has granted to Great Britain a preference in her tariff, and I think we can let the matter rest there, as showing what Canada is willing to do for Great Britain. Now let me give the United States production in 1909, and I call attention to this, because it emphasizes what I said in the early part of my remarks, as to the ultimate end of production for export in the United States:

UNITED STATES PRODUCTION IN 1909.

	Bushels.
Wheat..	713,286 923
Oats..	923,984,609
Barley..	173,210,916

This means 8 bushels wheat per head, 10 bushels oats per head, and 2 bushels barley per head.

CANADA PRODUCED IN 1909.

	Bushels.
Wheat..	166,752,540
Oats..	353 451 648
Barley..	55,377,626

This means 21 bushels wheat per head, 44 bushels oats per head, and 7 bushels barley per head.

Now should we not take advantage of the offer in these negotiations with our neighbours to the south, and develop our natural resources to their utmost, thus increasing our value to them and their value to us from a strictly business view point? We still retain the idea that we have an advantage on our side, that our system of government is more desirable; that our laws are better and better administered; that our stamp of manhood and of citizenship is of a little higher order. I see no reason, therefore, why we should not trade with these people, when it is evidently to the advantage of both to do so, or with any other country on fair terms, helping them and benefiting ourselves, but continuing to be as in the past:

'Daughter in my mother's house, but, Mistress in my own.'

Mr. C. JAMESON (Digby). The importance of these resolutions before the House cannot be overestimated by any person. I think there is a very general feeling throughout Canada that we would like to see better trade relations with every nation under the sun. But while we take that view, we also take the view that any trade relations which are established for Canada should constitute a good bargain for this country. Now, the outstanding features of the agreement between Canada and the United States, which the government is asking us to endorse, is that, while it takes the form of legislation, and while it claims the merits of legislation, which in the light of better information can be amended yet as a matter of fact these resolutions are like the laws of the Medes and Persians that alter not, because they must be adopted in their present form, and in no other form can they be adopted. I think the arrangement which has been made involves the payment of too high a price for the advantages which are to accrue to this country, and it is making the farmers and fishermen, the producers generally, pay that price. Now, I was somewhat interested to hear a remark which the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Cash) just made. Referring to the manufacturers he said they were complaining of this agreement, and he does not see why they should complain. He went on to say that the National Policy was conceived by the Tory party for the benefit of the manufacturers, and that Sir John A. Macdonald once said to the manufacturers: Let us know what you want, and we will give you what you need. The hon. member seemed to think that was rather a bad policy, but I think that if the policy of the Conservative party at that time was not to give the manufacturers what they wanted, but what they needed, it was a very good policy, indeed. It was a statesmanlike policy, and it was a policy which, from that day down to the people of this country.

But why are the manufacturers complaining to-day? Some one says: We are not touching them, why are they complaining? The reason is obvious. The manufacturers knew very well, as sensible business men, that they cannot prosper unless the farmers and fishermen prosper, and they know that this arrangement which the government has made and proposes to force through this House, is going to injure the farmers and fishermen, and consequently it is going to injure the manufacturers. Now, what is the policy of the present administration with regard to the manufacturers? We all remember seeing within the last few days a very important declaration made by the right hon. the Prime Minister with regard to the manufacturers. Telegraphing to one of his friends in the city of Toronto, he said: We have not hurt the manufacturers, and we shall not do so.

That is the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister for the purpose of placating the manufacturers. But he misapprehends the position altogether. The manufacturers are not complaining against the arrangement by reason of the fact that they are hurt, but because the producers of this country are hurt, and because without their prosperity there can be no prosperity for them, the manufacturers.

During the course of the discussion which has taken place in this House there has been considerable reference made to the late reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States, which was in force between 1854 and 1866. In this connection I would say that recently a letter appeared in the Halifax 'Chronicle,' the foremost Liberal organ in Nova Scotia, over the signature of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), in which he gave his reasons for supporting this trade pact. One of the reasons which he gave for his support of this arrangement was that, inasmuch as the reciprocity treaty of 1854-1866 was a great benefit to the country, and inasmuch as he thought the conditions were the same to-day, and similar benefits would follow another treaty of this character, he would support it. I wish to point out that there are many differences between the conditions which existed then and the conditions which exist to-day. In the first place, in 1854, the Crimean war broke out and raged until 1856. During those years, and for some time thereafter, the prices of all commodities in this country were very high. Wheat sold in Canada for over $2 per bushel. In 1861 the civil war broke out between the northern and southern states, and lasted until 1865. During the progress of that war the prices of farm commodities were tremendously enhanced. Five million men were withdrawn from peaceful avocations; production in the United States declined; there was a false condition of affairs, and, as a result of the war, and of the reduction in production in the United States, the prices of the various commodities rose to the very highest limit. It was not unnatural that Canada, having trade relations with the United States at that time, which were very satisfactory, should reap a very great advantage, and undoubtedly a very great advantage did accrue because of the fact that we found a ready market for everything we had to sell in the United States, while they had so small a production they did not hurt our home market.

But, Sir, there are differences between our condition then and to-day in regard not only to the state of the markets but also in regard to the markets which we enjoyed. In 1854, for example, we had no west and in 1871 we had secured the west but we had no railway to that country. In 1891, when there were some further negotiations towards reciprocity with the United States, we had a railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but we had no market in the west, because the population there was comparatively trifling. In 1897, when there was a further looking to Washington, on the part of this administration, we had very little market in the west. The branch lines were just beginning to creep out over the prairies, and follow the settlers into those great regions.

But, in 1911, we stand in an entirely different position. We have one transcontinental railway in operation from sea to sea, we have two in course of construction; the western country is gridironed with branch lines, and this parliament every year is granting charters for the construction of thousands of miles more of railway into that country, settlers are pouring in; the market is very much improved in a diversity of ways, and transportation is cheaper and more rapid. In those earlier days, too, we were more of an agricultural and fishing country, and less of a manufacturing country, and consequently we had at that time more products that we could market, and we consumed less within ourselves. To-day, things are somewhat different. Under the National Policy manufactures have sprung up in this country and Canada is now consuming 85 per cent of her farm products. Eighty-five per cent of the remainder finds a quick and profitable market in Great Britain, and altogether there is no similarity in conditions between those days to which I have alluded and the present time.

England is also as near relatively to-day, with modern systems of transportation, as the United States was during the reciprocity treaty of 1854-66. Again, in 1897, this government placed upon the statute-books in this country that piece of legislation which is known as the British preference. They have very frequently referred to that as the crowning credit of the Liberal administration. They have pointed it out and said: Look at what the British preference has done for Canada, and look at what Canada, by the British preference has done for the mother country. They point to the imports and exports. In 1897 the imports from Great Britain into Canada amounted to $29,401,000, and in 1910 they amounted to $95,336,000. In 1897 the exports from Canada to Great Britain amounted to $77,227,000 and in 1910 to $149,630,000. That is the condition which has developed as the result of the British preference.

There is a further difference between those bygone days, when the reciprocity treaty was in force, and when thereafter reciprocity was sought and the present time, and that is the fact that when we open our markets under this agreement to the United States, we have to meet the competition of those favoured nations which have, within the last fifteen years, become great exporters of the very products which we have to sell. Transportation also has changed to such an extent that they are able to place within our markets all they have to sell in the primest condition. With the assistance of refrigeration they can ship their meats and other products of that character and lay them down in this country in competition with what the producers of Canada have to market. Under this pact the following countries will get the same terms in the Canadian market as will be accorded to the United States. I place this statement on 'Hansard' because I think it very desirable that the people of this country, from one side of it to the other, should know just exactly what the situation will be:

Argentine Republic, Australia, Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela; all these countries come in automatically under the favoured nation clause of their treaty by the granting of these concessions to the United States. But, by the resolutions which are before the House the same privileges are to be extended also to the United Kingdom, and the several British colonies and possessions including of course, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. It will be readily seen that with competition such as that, the position of the matter will be entirely different from what it would be if we were merely opening the Canadian market to the American exporter. It is well that the people of Canada should have a proper appreciation of the condition of affairs in view of the fact that they are going to meet with this very great competition in their own market. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), in the letter to which I have alluded, stated that reciprocity was a problem which the statesmen of this country had been endeavouring to solve for the last forty years. I take issue with him there; I do not think the facts will bear out that statement. My hon. friend (Mr. Sinclair) is a very ardent supporter of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and the right hon. gentleman has not within the last ten years been seeking reciprocity with the United States. In fact the right hon. gentleman has openly declared himself against it, and thrice have the people of this country endorsed him in that declaration. In the year 1899 the right hon. gentleman said on the floor of this House:

> If we know the hearts and minds of our people at present I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling of Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with the hon. gentleman himself, would have given many things to obtain the American market. There was a time not long ago when the market of the great cities of the Union was the only market we had for many of our products but thank Heaven these days are past and over. We are not dependent upon the American market as we were at one time.

This was the declaration of the right hon. gentleman made in this House, and to the people of Canada in the year 1899, and he has received threefold approval of it from the electorate of the Dominion, in the years 1900, 1904 and 1908, and yet the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) would say that the statesmen of Canada have been for forty years endeavouring to solve the problem of reciprocity with the United States. Now, why are we met with such a change of policy on the part of the right hon. the Prime Minister; why this reversal of the policy which he announced in 1899, and to which—because when he alluded to the British preference he was alluding practically to this new non-reciprocity policy—to which he afterwards pointed with every degree of pride. I think, Sir, that the reason is that the right hon. gentleman has been seeking some means to cover up and cloak the naval issue in this country. I believe, Sir, that if it were not for the unpopular naval policy of the right hon. gentleman and his government we would never have had these reciprocity resolutions placed before the House. But, Sir, I say this: That I believe the right hon. gentleman in exchanging the naval policy for the policy of reciprocity will learn, it may be too late for himself, that he has merely swapped his Satanic Majesty for a Witch. And, when the right hon. gentleman and his government have been asked to consult the people on this question, the Minister of Finance rises in his place and on behalf of the government answers: Canada's honour is pledged to give legislative effect to this agreement. To whom is Canada's honour pledged? Why to the United States. But is not the honour of the right hon. the Prime Minister pledged to the House and to this country? The right hon. gentleman at the opening of the present session of this parliament standing in his place in this House stated to the people of Canada that there would be no revision of the tariff without a thorough investigation, and he hinted also that a tariff commission would be appointed in order that the investigation would be most thorough, most systematic, and most complete. Why should the right hon. gentleman sacrifice this solemn pledge to the parliament and people of Canada? If the United States can induce or compel the right hon. gentleman to break faith with the people of this country now, what can they not do if they get us tied up and involved in this reciprocity agreement. The Prime Minister derides the suggestion: Let well enough alone, but why should he not let well enough alone until after he had investigated. The right hon. gentleman exclaims: Is this China or is it Canada? Well, from the manner in which he has been acting throughout in regard to this trade pact one would almost think he had concluded that this country was China, because he acts just as some Chinese dictator would act, the difference being that if this were China—fortunately for the right hon. gentleman it is not—and if the right hon. gentleman had acted in China as he has acted in Canada the chances are that he would lose his material head, whereas as it is, it is only his official head that will fall into the basket; a fact about which I have no doubt whatever. Now, what has this reciprocity policy of his cost the right hon. gentleman already? It has cost him, we know, the support of three of his most able followers in parliament. It has cost him the support of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), and of the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris), each one of whom arose in his place, and in the presence and hearing of the Prime Minister denounced this pact in no unmeasured terms. And, there are others sitting on that side of the House whom we know to be wavering. I have not yet heard what the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) thinks of this trade pact; I observe, however, that during the various speeches which have been made on the subject he has not joined in the applause with his old-time political friends.

He has not seemingly enjoyed the situation very much, and I can imagine that the right hon. gentleman, when he contemplates the position in which he finds himself, when he sees the predicament with which he is confronted, when he hears the grumblings from the waverers in his own ranks, would give a good deal if he could turn back the hand upon the dial of time and be his own man once more. I believe that if the right hon. gentleman could turn back the hand of time to the 1st day of January last, we would never see these resolutions on this table; and I can imagine that when he thinks of what they have already cost him, and when, with his foresight, he forecasts what they will cost him in the future, and when he views the situation in which his following have been placed by this unhappy arrangement, he often soliloquises to himself, and his soliloquy would probably be along the line of a paraphrase of those lines with which we are all more or less familiar. I think the soliloquy of the right hon. gentleman, when he left this chamber last night, for example, would be something like this:

> Backward, turn backward, Oh time in thy flight,
> Cancel this Pact for me just for to-night;
> Give me my tariff and freedom to say
> How I shall mould it from day unto day.
> Give me hope the last glimmer of light,
> Cancel this Pact for me just for to-night.

I fancy that would be the soliloquy of the right hon. gentleman, very frequently of late, when he has left this House after the House rose.

Now, Sir, why has there been this break-neck haste to enter into this pact, when it was known that the new United States Congress, which would be controlled by the Democratic party, would take an entirely different view of reciprocity and trade relations generally from that taken by the old Congress and the Republican party? The Democratic party, as is well known, has pledged itself to cut and slash the American tariff, and had the right hon. gentleman and his Cabinet decided to enter into a trade arrangement with the United States, they could have selected no more unhappy hour than the time they did select to make this agreement. It was absolutely a leap in the dark, and I think the right hon. gentleman regrets it very much now.

I wish to refer for a few moments to the manner in which this reciprocity pact is going to affect the farmers and the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend the member for North Cape Breton (Mr. Mackenzie), during the course of his remarks on this subject, read a list of farm products from which the duty was removed, and he implied by his remarks that as a result of Canada getting free trade with the United States there would be greater exports of those products from the province of Nova Scotia to the United States markets. But I wonder if my hon. friend remembered that Nova Scotia is now a very large importer of farm products. As a matter of fact, Nova Scotia is the importer of farm products to the value of over $3,000,000 per annum, an amount in excess of the apple exports of that province, of which export all Nova Scotians are proud, and very justly proud. In this connection I wish to quote Mr. Cumming, the principal of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College, and the Secretary of Agriculture of the province. In the 'Halifax Morning Chronicle' of January 2, 1911, Mr. Cumming had a very able article on the subject of Agriculture in the province of Nova Scotia, from which I will read. He said:

It is a notorious fact that, although Nova Scotia exports a large amount of apples and a considerable amount of beef, butter, lambs, eggs, &c., yet she imports far greater quantities of these and other agricultural products which she might easily raise herself. It is difficult to get at the exact amount of the agricultural products which are imported into our country. Recently the Department of Industries and Immigration corresponded with the principal wholesale houses in Nova Scotia and ascertained from them what agricultural products they were buying. I have these figures to hand, and may comment on them by stating that these amounts have actually been imported, and there is no doubt that a great deal more, of which I have no record, has been imported. I will only deal with those products which I think we could largely raise at home, and not with such products for example as flour, of which we import $2 000,000 worth per year.

The figures I have, however, indicate that we imported last year 550,000 pounds of butter, worth $137,500. We also imported 4 000 tons of fresh beef and 5,500 barrels of barreled beef, worth about $1,100,000; 300 tons of fresh pork and 4,000 barrels of barreled pork, worth $210,000. Adding to this bacon and hams, imported by smaller dealers, and also the amount of lamb and mutton, of which I have no record, it must be evident that we import at least $2,000,000 worth of beef, swine and mutton products, which could easily be raised in our province, i.e. more than the value of our present fruit export trade. Of oats we imported, according to similar figures, 1,500,000 bushels, worth $750,000. Besides we imported vegetables, cheese, eggs, poultry and many other products to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, all of which should be raised by our own farmers.

These imports were largely from other parts of Canada, and they were brought into the province of Nova Scotia because that province was not producing enough of these various articles to supply the home demand. How is this trade pact going to benefit the farmers of Nova Scotia by letting United States farm products come in free? I would like any hon. gentleman to tell me that. I will tell you what it will do. It will discourage the farmers of Nova Scotia; it will tend to drive them away, and will absolutely prevent settlers from coming into that province, an object to which the government of Nova Scotia and the government of Canada have been bestowing considerable attention. I have here some information with regard to the value of farm stock which I will place on 'Hansard,' but which under the rule of the House I will read, although it may not be very interesting. This information I have secured from the American Handbook on reciprocity with Canada, because we have not anything of a similar character available here, and I am using this in default of any similar handbook being furnished us by this government.

Information contained in a message from President of United States to the United States Senate: compiled from Census Statistics Monthly of Canada, January, 1911, and crop reports, United States February, 1911.

Average value per head of live stock on farms by classes.

—	Horses.	Dairy Cows.	Other Cattle.	Sheep.	Swine.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
United States...	108 19	35 79	19 41	4 08	9 14
Canada..... ..	133 00	43 00	31 00	6 00	11 00
Nova Scotia.....	113 00	37 00	23 00	4 00	11 00

These figures show that a higher value prevailed in Nova Scotia as compared with the United States in the matter of live stock. I have here the comparative prices of farm products:

—	Spring Wheat, per bushel.	Barley, per bushel.	Oats, per bush.	Potatoes, per bushel.	Hay, per ton.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts	$ cts.
U.S., average price	0 89 9/10	0 57 8/10	0 34	0 53	12 26
Nova Scotia	1 12	0 76 6/10	0 48 8/10	0 8:	9 70

In all of these, with the one exception of hay, the Nova Scotia prices exceed those of the United States; and in western Nova Scotia I know, as a matter of fact, that hay is very frequently imported. The Digby correspondent of the Halifax 'Chronicle' on January 28, 1911, made the following report:

Mr. Johnson, of H. T. Wame & Co., Ltd., when interviewed said he did not think Digby county farmers can compete with the potato prices in Maine.

This is an opinion from western Nova Scotia and I shall now give a fact from the eastern part of that province. Here is a copy of an advertisement which appeared in the Glace Bay 'Standard' of March 31, 1911:

Carload of potatoes to arrive Wednesday, March 22 will be sold at car at ninety cents a bushel.

I do not think it will be any encouragement to the farmers of Nova Scotia to allow potatoes to be brought in free of duty from the United States when the high prices I have mentioned prevail in that province. The Maine dealers have been selling large quantities of potatoes in Montreal and St. John and in different parts of Nova Scotia, including Halifax, and paying duty and freight and making good profits.

I wish also to give the opinion of a very well informed gentleman with regard to the dairy business in Nova Scotia, Mr. C. H. Black, of Amherst, in the annual report of the secretary of Agriculture of Nova Scotia, for the year 1908, said:

The number of mining and manufacturing towns and villages in the province, which are sure to increase in size and number, provide us a market right at our door for all the dairy products we can produce for many years to come.

That is a statement which is just as true to-day as it was in 1908. There can be no question but that the best market which the dairymen of Nova Scotia can find lies right at their own doors.

Something has been said on the question of eggs and the prices in Canada and the United States. That question seems to be a fairly important one in the United States although the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), last night became rather jocose on the subject. It was, however, of sufficient importance in the eyes of our neighbours to be discussed at considerable length by a very prominent member of the United States official staff. This statement appeared in the Montreal 'Star' of March 25, 1911:

Need not fear Canadian eggs. If Canadian farmers are dreaming that reciprocity will give them better market for their eggs they might as well wake up now.

Charles M. Pepper of the United States.

We all remember Mr. Pepper as the gentleman who came to Ottawa last year for the purpose of negotiating with the government with regard to these reciprocity matters:

Charles M. Pepper, of the United States Bureau of Trade Relations, is telling the farmers in the States that they have nothing to fear from the Canadian hen.

He notes that every year, under the present arrangements, the States send 1,000,000 dozen eggs to Canada, and Canada only 35,000 dozen to the States, and that Canada has practically ceased to export, and is importing eggs even from China. Then he quotes wholesale prices of January, 1911.

At that time the wholesale price of eggs in Buffalo was 36 cents per dozen, in Toronto 40 cents. At Bangor, Eastport and Calais, Me., prices were from 26 to 30 cents; while across the line at St. Stephens, N.B., the price was 33c. At Manchester, N.H., the price was 27 cents; at Sherbrooke, Que., 35 cents; at Ogdensburg, N.Y., the price was 30 cents; at Prescott, Canada, 32 cents; at Burlington, Vt., the price was 27 cents; at Montreal, 35 cents.

One word with regard to a consignment of New Zealand chilled lamb which came into our Canadian market within the last couple of weeks. 750 carcasses were landed at St. John. They paid the duty of 3 cents per pound, and part of this lamb went as far west as Toronto and was sold there at 1 cent per pound less than the local producers were getting for their lamb. What would happen if the duty were taken off—and let me say that New Zealand is one of the British colonies which will come in under this pact and get free entry for its chilled lamb and any other commodities which the United States can supply to Canada free of duty—what will be the effect if the duty is thrown off and the market of Canada is opened wide to all the productions of these different colonies? Taking this shipment of lamb as an illustration, it would simply mean that the colony of New Zealand can lay down chilled lamb in this country at 4 cents per pound less than the prevailing price amongst our Canadian producers. If the government wants to kill farming in Nova Scotia let it take away the protection which our farmers have at present and give the producers of the United States and other countries free entry to our market. That is just what the government are doing. What the farmers of Nova Scotia want, however, is not to get less for what they have to sell but to pay less for the manufactured goods they have to buy. But what did the right hon. the Prime Minister telegraph to Toronto the other day with regard to manufactured goods? We have not hurt the manufacturers, he said, and do not intend to do so. That is the present situation and hon. gentlemen opposite know it well.

I have dealt very briefly and imperfectly with the matter of agricultural products, and in the time at my disposal I could not go into that question more fully; but I wish to deal now with another subject of special interest in Nova Scotia, and that is lumber, and I may say, if I happen to be a little provincial, that this is owing to the fact that the legislature of Nova Scotia recently adopted a resolution endorsing this particular pact and intends, it is said, to go to the country upon reciprocity. It is significant, however, that the resolution was moved by the hon. member for Yarmouth, and that it was not spoken to by the hon. the Attorney General of that province. It is a significant fact that the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, the one man I think in the provincial legislature who has occupied a seat in this House, and who therefore, would have what I might call a Canadian outlook, did not speak in favour of this resolution, although apparently the government of Nova Scotia is going to the country upon that issue.

I wish to quote the opinions of some gentlemen in Nova Scotia who are familiar with the lumber conditions there with regard to the very important subject of lumber, and in doing so I shall quote from the Halifax 'Chronicle' which is the gospel of Liberalism in that province. In November last, Mr. J. M. Fraser, a member of the Halifax 'Chronicle' editorial staff visited the principle centres west of Halifax to ascertain the opinions of the people with regard to reciprocity, and its probable effect on business. As the opinions which I shall quote were given before this reciprocity pact was brought down, and before any party feeling had developed, I think they will be of special value.

I quote first the opinion of Mr. T. W. Pickles, of Annapolis Royal, a gentleman who has had a large experience in the lumber business, and who I think is a very staunch Liberal. Mr. Pickles said:

> We ship almost all our lumber to the West Indies and South America. This is true of all western Nova Scotia. If they want our lumber in the States they will pay the price, duty or no duty. The removal of the duty would not affect us in the least. We do not derive the benefit of the present reduction, they get that. Dressed lumber cannot be shipped in vessels, as it will have to be redried, and it suffers damage beside.

The last reduction of duty on lumber, to which reference was made, was a reduction of 75 cents a thousand and, according to Mr. Pickles, the American consumer, and not the Nova Scotia shipper gets the benefit of that reduction of duty. It never made any change, as I am informed, in the market price of lumber in our province.

I quote now from an opinion expressed by H. T. Warne, a lumberman and general dealer in Digby. He said:

> The limits here are in such a condition that I do not see how we could cut a satisfactory American schedule, while we can for South America.

This goes right to the root of the matter. Mr. Warne's statement is conclusive. If the timber areas in western Nova Scotia at least, and he is making direct reference to them, are in such condition that they cannot cut a satisfactory American schedule at the present time, how is the reciprocity in lumber, or the free admission of lumber into the United States going to change these conditions? According to the statement of Mr. Warne, who is an ardent Liberal, there is to be absolutely no benefit from the removal of the duty on lumber.

Mr. Fraser, after interviewing the Yarmouth dealers, and I believe that Yarmouth is said to be a great centre of reciprocity sentiment, says:

> Most of the Yarmouth lumber goes to South America; the removal of the duty would not affect the industry much, as the United States market is a poor one.

None of these expressions of opinion from the western portions of Nova Scotia favour the idea of the reduction on lumber with a view to improving their own market or enhancing the value of lumber to themselves. These opinions, as I have said, were given before the reciprocity pact was brought down.

I shall now give the opinion of a gentleman, expressed after the reciprocity pact had been brought down, and the agreement made known. This appeared in the Halifax 'Chronicle' of March 28, 1911, and is I think, a most important declaration. It is from Mr. W. G. Clarke, of Bear River, one of the best informed men in western Nova Scotia, not only with regard to lumber, but with regard to kindred subjects relating to trade in that province. He is also a very strong and ardent Liberal, one of the most prominent men in the Liberal party in western Nova Scotia. He was asked for his opinion after the reciprocity pact had been brought down, and replied. The statement reads :

HOW IT AFFECTS THE LUMBERMAN.

Mr. W. G. Clarke, of Bear River, one of Nova Scotia's leading lumber operators, in response to the 'Morning Chronicle's' request, wired the following on the effect of the reciprocity agreement on the lumber trade:

'I consider the abolition of the duty on rough lumber will not materially affect the situation. We have better markets for pine and spruce than America offers. The reduction on laths and staves should prove advantageous. The danger of increased cutting consequent upon the reductions in duty may prove a menace to our forest reserve. Viewed together the proposed changes should be of advantage to Nova Scotia producers.'

This opinion was expressed after the agreement was entered into, and the pact brought down, and proclaimed as one of the greatest and most marvellous tariff arrangements ever entered into by any government in Canada, and more especially advantageous with reference to the province of Nova Scotia, yet the best that Mr. Clarke found to say was:

The reduction on laths and staves should prove advantageous.

But he prefaced this with the statement:

We have better markets for pine and spruce than America offers.

And he concludes:

The danger of increased cutting consequent upon the reduction in duty may prove a menace to our forest reserve.

Taking that statement at the time it was made, and from the gentleman who made it, we may conclude that so far as free lumber is concerned, there is not very much profit in it to the people of Nova Scotia who are interested in the lumber business.

There are some other commodities which are now, and have for some time been admitted free to the United States, but which have been confused by some newspaper men with some other articles which are now to secure free entry to the United States markets. These articles are: Firewood, sawn and split, and what is known as Rockland wood, logs and round and unmanufactured timber and piling. These articles have been going into the United States free of duty for years and so will not be affected in the slightest degree by this reciprocity pact.

While on the subject of the free entry of Canadian products into the United States market, I would like to ask the Minister of Customs or the Minister of Finance, neither of whom, I am sorry to see, are in their places, whether, in concluding this agreement with the United States, the United States authorities were pressed and consented to remove the tax now being imposed upon our shippers in the way of a consular fee for certified invoices. The United States authorities oblige us to pay this tax on shipments which we make to the United States, but we do not require them to make a corresponding expenditure for invoices upon shipments made into Canada. This impost really amounts to an export tax upon our shipments made in our own country by the United States government, and with increasing trade of course that tax would grow. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Customs, if they were present, whether any attempt was made to secure the removal of that impost? Perhaps some other member of the cabinet could give us that information.

Now, if this is a poor bargain for the farmers of the province of Nova Scotia, it is a much worse bargain for the fishermen of Nova Scotia, it is absolutely a retrograde step so far as our fisheries are concerned. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), speaking in favour of these resolutions some time ago, made a reference to fish sold by Canadian fishermen to the United States, and he instanced the item of canned lobsters, the value of which sold to the United States last year, he said, amounted to $1,137,000. In looking over the handbook which this government has issued relating to our shipments to the United States last year, I find this item stated as $732,000. I dare say that was merely a clerical error on the part of the hon. gentleman in preparing his table. But I wish particularly to observe that the hon. gentleman seemed to think we had no Canadian market for our fish, and that the upper Canadian and western market was not a profitable one for the fish of the maritime provinces. I think the statement which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has made on several occasions in this House with reference to the development of the fish trade between the maritime provinces and the central and western provinces, is a complete answer to the statement of my hon. friend from Richmond. The minister knows that the trade has increased wonderfully, and he has rightly congratulated himself and his department upon the manner in which it was brought about, first, by raising the duty from a half cent to a cent a pound, and secondly, by assisting in the payment of transportation rates to give the Canadian shippers from the east an advantage over American shippers who formerly controlled our markets.

Now, my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) also alluded to the subject of the fisheries during the course of his remarks on these resolutions. He stated that there would be a very profitable trade in lobsters carried on if this free trade arrangement went through. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was in possession of the information that lobsters had been on the free list for some time. But if he was not, it clearly shows the grasp which the members of the cabinet have of this subject, and if he was in possession of that information, he was perhaps merely speaking for his own constituents and having in view the effect it might have on them. How free trade in fish is going to help the lobster business with the United States when lobsters now go in free of duty, is something which I cannot understand, and which I shall have to leave to the Postmaster General to explain to his constituents. On this point I wish to quote from a very informing letter written from Yarmouth, which appeared in the Montreal 'Star' a short time ago, signed Nova Scotian. I will read to the House the following extract:

While the United States is our only foreign market for fresh lobsters, and they are now free, we ship over two millions and a half dollars worth of canned lobsters to the markets of the world, of which our neighbours only take $732,000 worth, or sixteen thousand dollars worth less than Great Britain and nearly a quarter of a million dollars worth less than France consumes. Yet canned lobsters are on the free list of the United States and have been for years.

This shows that if the United States wants our fish they will take them, whether there is a duty on them or not; and if they do not want them, they will not take them, even if they are on the free list. There are other places to which we can send them. Now, I wish to refer to the trade returns with reference to the fisheries. First, I will deal with the United States market, and with the exception of the first two lines, the figures I shall read are taken from the government reports of this country. For the purpose of my argument, I am assuming that these figures are absolutely correct, they are at least the figures which this government has given to the people of this country, and unless the government repudiates them, we must assume that they are correct:

UNITED STATES MARKET.

Imports of fish into United States for year ended June, 1910.... ..		$13,835 968
Imports not affected by reciprocity—
Lobsters and shell fish, now free..	$1,839,680
Fish packed in oil, duty not changed.. ..	2,987,938
		4,827 618
Imports on which duty is removed..		9,008,350
Canada sold to the United States last year...	4,592 419
Of which were free.... ..	1,263,197
		3,329 222
Extent of United States market to be won by displacing fish from other countries..		5,679 128

Let me say that within the last three years the United States imports of fish have increased a million and a half, and the United States exports of fish have increased almost four million dollars. Now I will refer to the Canadian market.

CANADIAN MARKET.

Value of fish catch year 1910 in Canada..		$29,629,169
Value of exports to United States..	$ 4,592,419
Value of exports to other countries..	10,709,252
		15,301,671
		$14,327,498
Fish imported into Canada for home consumption..		1,665,050
Home market for fish in Canada..		$15,992,548

So that while we sell $10,709,252 worth of fish to other countries and only $4,592,419 worth of fish to the United States, of which only $3,329,222 are now dutiable, we are going to give the United States the Canadian market of nearly $16,000,000, according to the government figures. For what? For the privilege of getting $3,329,222 worth of our fish in duty free, and the doubtful chance of displacing $5,500,000 worth of fish sold now to the United States by other countries. In other words, we are going to certainly exchange the substance for the shadow. The hon. member for Guysborough, in that letter to which I have already made reference, made the statement that the United States was the largest individual market for Canadian fish. The figures which I have taken from the government report absolutely disprove that statement and show that Canada is the best market for Canadian fish at the present time. The Canadian market is a growing market, it is a steady market, we are getting into the western market, and, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has said in this House on several occasions in regard to the increase of trade between the maritime provinces and the central and western portions of this country, the market of the west is growing, and a prosperous business can be carried on. He has also given us to understand that under the system that is now in vogue, the United States fish is being displaced by Canadian fish, a condition of affairs with which we are all pleased and of which we ought all to be very justly proud. The home market will naturally increase, it will take all our fresh and light cured fish at good prices, and as soon as transportation is provided there will be no difficulty whatever in marketing all our fish in Canada. After building up that trade it is proposed to hand it over to the United States because, with the removal of the duty Boston, Portland and Gloucester will absolutely dominate the Canadian market simply because with a shorter rail haul they can get to the centre and the west of our country at a less cost than can the people of the maritime provinces. They did it before this duty was levied, they will do it after the duty is removed, and the people of the maritime provinces are going absolutely to lose the Canadian market if the duty on fish is removed.

There is another feature in connection with this matter which must not be overlooked, and it is that besides losing our market to the United States we are liable to meet with other very serious competition. By this reciprocity agreement we would have the following values of fish at present exported by the countries named getting free entry into the Canadian market. I have alluded to a list of countries which are going to get the same freedom in our markets as the United States does if this agreement goes through, and these are countries which are fish-exporting countries. This is the value of their yearly fish exports:

Norway..	$12,000,000
Sweden..	1,880 000
Denmark..	1,850 000
Japan..	1 000,000
United States..	9,652,088
Newfoundland (now free)..	7,962,000
Total..	$34,344,088

Which will come into direct competition with the fish of this country.

Now, we know that trade always seeks the best markets, and that an increased price in Canada would be followed by imports from any country which is seeking to sell its fish. Nova Scotia dealers at times now purchase from the fish dealers of Newfoundland. I do not know what you may think of this, Mr. Chairman, but I think it is better for us to preserve the Canadian markets for Canadian fishermen rather than to throw these markets open to the fishermen of the world.

I will refer to that letter signed 'Nova Scotian' again, which appeared in the Montreal 'Star,' because it embodied a thought which is now, I believe, entertained by a good many people in this country. It says:

> The annexation of the British West Indies would be of infinitely greater value to the fishing industry of Canada than the passing of the Taft-Fielding pact. Our sub-tropical fellow subjects take many times as much of our chief product, salt cod, as the United States does.

I wish to quote some opinions of some of the best informed fish dealers and those most familiar with the fish business of Nova Scotia, as gathered by Mr. Fraser, to whom I have already alluded, and published in the Halifax 'Chronicle.' Mr. Zwicker, of Zwicker & Company, Lunenburg, when interviewed by Mr. Fraser, as reported in the 'Chronicle' of November 16, 1910, said:

> Free fishing in exchange for United States markets and her colonies, including Porto Rico, do not include lobsters. Twenty-five years ago we had more fish than we could handle. Recently I have bought surplus Gloucester fish and brought them here.

The next gentleman whom I shall quote is a very ardent Liberal and a man who has been identified with the fishing business of Nova Scotia for many years. Mr. William Duff, of the Atlantic Fish Company, said:

> Under reciprocity there would be only a small quantity of fish shipped to the United States. In 20 years most of our fish will be going to western Canada and we will be getting better prices.

Mr. T. M. Irvine, M.P.P., also a good Liberal, and a member of the legislature of Nova Scotia, delivers himself as follows:

> This question of reciprocity is not so important as it was years ago. Our own fish are beginning to find their way to our own markets, and with good storage and transportation, Nova Scotia fish will soon be able to supply the greater part of the needs in western Canada, now largely supplied from the New England markets.

Mr. Irvine absolutely hits the nail on the head. The United States want to get a grip on our Canadian market which we have been wresting from them and if we enter into this arrangement they will secure that market. Here is the opinion of another representative gentleman—Mr. George A. Cox, ex-M.P.P. for Shelburne, also a good Liberal. He says:

> I do not consider the benefit to our fresh fish market will be so great as it is now. I think in a short time we can capture the fresh fish market (of Canada) from them—(United States). We have found a better market in Montreal and Toronto than in the United States. With a little better railway facilities to the upper provinces all our fish would go there.

There is no uncertain sound about that. The values of our fish depend largely on transportation and as an illustration of this I may say that the fishermen of the eastern portion of Nova Scotia, although they have always had the privilege of getting lobsters free into the United States, have been getting poor prices for lobsters. It is the same with any other class of fish. The question is largely one of transportation and it is the duty of any government to assist the fishermen of the maritime provinces by improving the transportation facilities in so far as it can be done. I will quote now from Mr. F. C. Whitman, of Annapolis Royal, a large fish dealer and a strong Liberal. Mr. Whitman says:

Reciprocity in fish would not help our dried fish business. Our best market is the West Indies and South America.

Every one who knows Mr. Whitman will respect the opinion he gives. Mayor Wolf, of Lunenburg, is reported in the Halifax 'Chronicle' as saying:

We require more men to enlist in our fishing navy. . .
There need be no fear as to our markets, the time is coming when our own Dominion will require large quantities of fish.

At Digby, Mr. Fraser interviewed several fish dealers whose opinions I intend to give. Mr. H. B. Short, local manager of the Maritime Fish Company, said:

They shipped fresh and smoked fish from Halifax to Vancouver. He thought the Canadian market was their market for fresh and smoked fish, and for salt fish, South America and the West Indies. There are times when they could send fish to the States, usually when the United States catch was off. When the Canadian government increased the duty on fish from ½ cent to 1 cent per pound, Nova Scotia captured the upper Canadian market. If fish were admitted free, the Americans would secure the Canadian market again.

That is the statement of Mr. Short who has been identified with the fish business for years, and who knows full well whereof he speaks. Now, I give the opinion of Capt. Howard Anderson, one of the leading Liberals of Digby county, a fish dealer, who says:

When I came here twenty years ago the fish dealers were calling for reciprocity, but I never agreed with them. We have a fine market right here in the Dominion for our fish, and it is only a short time till we will consume in this Dominion all we can produce. I believe reciprocity would kill our fresh fish business in Montreal and the west generally.

Now, Sir, in the Bay of Fundy district winter fishing is carried on, and the prices paid generally are higher than those prevailing in the United States, and they are more steady. I quote the opinion of Mr. E. M. Robertson, wholesale fish dealer of Digby, formerly of St. John, who was interviewed by the Digby correspondent of the 'Chronicle,' and who made this statement on January 28, 1911, after this reciprocity compact had been submitted to parliament. Mr. Robertson said:

It is a big thing to consider, but on the whole will benefit the wholesale fish firms, and be liable to injure the vessel and boat fishermen. For instance, fresh haddock are offered at Gloucester at present for $1.60 per 100 pounds, while they are $2.75 here. They can be imported by our firms cheaper than they can be bought from our own fishermen. Nova Scotia fish has a good market in the upper provinces at present, a business worked up by our dealers during the past twenty years. This will now be entered by the Americans, and we in turn will have to get into their markets.

That is a very clear expression of opinion from a man who has been for years identified with the fish business, and it is an opinion that is worthy of credit, and of very careful consideration. The Maritime Fish Corporation at times import fish from the United States, when the prices in the United States are low enough to enable them to pay the duty of one cent a pound on this fish, and the transportation charges, and lay them down at the place of business cheaper than they could purchase from Canadian fishermen. I believe that Mr. H. A. Brittain, of Montreal, general manager of the Maritime Fish Corporation, is in favour of this reciprocity agreement. Well, why would that be—it is because Mr. Brittain wishes to get cheaper fish. But would the fishermen of Nova Scotia or the maritime provinces favour reciprocity for the same reason? I think not. Mr. Brittain for instance is in favour of beam trawling, but the fishermen of the maritime provinces are opposed to it. Mr. Brittain is a business man, Mr. Brittain is a general manager of the Maritime Fish Corporation, Mr. Brittain's buisness is to make dividends for the stockholders of that corporation, and he is out to get the raw material at the cheapest possible price, and if he can get it cheaper in the United States as at times he can, and pay the duty and transportation charges, and lay it down cheaper in Digby than he is able to purchase it locally, I think that is a very good reason why Mr. Brittain should favour free fish. Simmered down then these opinions mean: The reciprocity agreement may help the fish dealers, but it will hurt the fishermen; it will not help the dry fish business upon the evidence I have given from all these gentlemen; the Canadian market is the best market for our fresh fish, and is a rapidly growing market, and that market we will lose to the United States according to the opinions of these gentlemen. Lobsters now go into the United States free, the Postmaster General to the contrary notwithstanding. Change this and while you may benefit the United States dealers you are bound to hurt the Canadian fishermen. There is another feature in connection with this question which I think has not yet been considered, and that is the combine danger. It is known to those who make a study of such matters that the control of 45 per cent of any commodity gives the people who control it a monopoly of the market. Now, what would happen, to our fishermen scattered around our coasts if a monopoly developed in the fish business? In British Columbia the combines practically control the buying and selling price of salmon and halibut. The price of halibut is controlled by the New England Fish Company, and the price of salmon is controlled by the Alaska Packers Association and the Fraser River Canners' Association, and the government of this country permits this to continue. Possibly it may be impossible to prevent it, but at all events I am credibly informed that such is the condition of affairs. Now, if the United States combine were to get a foothold in the maritime provinces what would happen? The fishermen of the maritime provinces must control the marketing of their own fish in order to get the most out of it, and if they lose that control and if it is not within their power to at least make the selling price of fish, then they become little better than slaves and that condition I think we would all deplore.

There is another question which we must consider, and that is the question of bounties which I think will probably become a very serious matter. The United States may say to the government of Canada: You are paying a bounty to your fishermen and if you continue we will also pay a bounty to our American fishermen. Well, as soon as that is done the conditions upon which Canada entered into this agreement are changed, and changed prejudicially to the fishermen of Canada. I may say in passing that the same thing applies to the steel industry. The bounty upon steel rods expires and the government, as the Minister of Finance announced, has no intention of renewing these bounties. The government could not consistently renew the bounties under the terms of this agreement, because that would be giving an undue advantage to the Canadian producer, and to all intents and purposes it would be breaking faith with the United States government, and breaking the compact which has been entered into. Well, the American government might say: You will have to discontinue that fishing bounty because we will not permit bounty fed fish to come into the United States as free fish. And if the government of the United States should say that, what would happen? It would simply mean that Canadians would lose the United States market or that the Canadian government would have to discontinue the payment of the bounties. We have had as we know tangles with the United States before now in reference to matters which developed very unexpectedly because there was no clear expression with regard to them. I may remind the committee that a day or two ago I asked the Minister of Finance, and also the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whether there was any understanding with the government of the United States that the Canadian government might continue the payment of these bounties to Canadian fishermen, and the reply was that there had been no understanding, that the matter had not been discussed, and that the matter would have to be dealt with when it came up.

How is it going to be dealt with? Who can say what the outcome of it will be? We know that the United States administration is always very ready to take advantage of Canada when it can do so in connection with these trade agreements. We know what happened in connection with the agreement of years ago, under which Canada had free entry for our fish into the United States market. We had free fish, but when we went to export it into the United States market, they imposed a duty upon the packages containing the fish, and it was absolutely impossible for us to get our fish in there. In other words, they defeated the very purpose and object of the agreement; and the same thing may occur again in connection with these bounties. We know also that in more recent instances we have not found the United States very eager to live up to its arrangements. We had the matter of the boundary waters fishery regulations brought to our attention the other day by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor). He pointed out to this House that two years ago a treaty was entered into between the United States and Great Britain on behalf of Canada, with reference to the fisheries of the boundary waters, and that under that treaty, regulations were made by the Joint Commission which was appointed on behalf of the United States and Canada, and that it was clearly and distinctly provided that those regulations should be given legislative sanction as soon as possible, and that while they had received the sanction of this parliament the sanction of the Senate of the United States had been withheld up to the present time. That is only one of the instances to which I might refer showing that we cannot take things for granted when we are doing business with any foreign country. We must have the whole agreement expressed on the face of the document, and if we do not insist upon that we are not doing our duty to the people of this country. Take the matter of the Canadian fishing bounties, and what do we find? It is a very important matter to the Canadian fishermen. The number of fishermen receiving bounties in 1909 was: in Nova Scotia, 14,082; in New Brunswick, 2,004; in Prince Edward Island, 1,696; in Quebec, 7,340; a total of 25,122. The amount of money paid was $155,221.85, a very large sum of money distributed amongst a large number of people. Mr. Cowie, an officer of the Marine and Fisheries Department, in a report to the department, which appears in the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of the past year, states that the existing system of distribution of these bounties is wrong. Now, that seems to me to be a very significant statement. Is it in contemplation by the government to make any change in the payment of these bounties? Was it in contemplation at the time the representatives of this government proceeded to Washington and entered into these negotiations? And was that the reason why no definite statement was had from the United States authorities as to whether any objection would be taken by them to the continuance of these bounties in connection with the free entry of Canadian fish into the United States market?

Now, Sir, I am going to allude to another feature in connection with the fisheries, and in this connection I wish to say that this agreement is the most extravagant that was ever made in connection with the fisheries of Canada. The United States fishermen are 400 miles farther from the fishing grounds than are our fishermen. They could not in any large number successfully prosecute the Atlantic fisheries unless they got our ice, our bait, and crews from our ports. Under the old treaty of 1818 between Great Britain and the United States, the United States had long claimed certain rights in our waters for their fishermen. The United States fishermen were poaching in Canadian waters. The Canadian government was seizing vessels and confiscating them, and in the year 1887 the two countries were almost on the brink of open hostilities. In the year 1888 an agreement known as the modus vivendi was entered into pending other arrangements. Under that agreement licenses were issued to United States fishermen at the rate of $1.50 per ton. These licenses enabled the United States fishermen to enter Canadian ports for the purpose of purchasing ice, bait, and supplies, for the transhipment of their catch, and for the shipping of their crews. The effect of these licenses to United States fishermen was to give to the United States vessels all the privileges in Canadian ports which the Canadian fishermen had, with the solitary exception of the sale of their fish duty free, and, of course, the United States vessels also had in the United States ports all the privileges which belonged to them as United States vessels. The effect of this was that in the course of time thousands of dollars of Canadian money was invested in United States fishing vessels, and hundreds of fishermen from our maritime provinces went into those United States vessels and prosecuted the fisheries from United States ports; and I may say that they will never again return to Canadian vessels while the United States fishing fleet has this advantage. On the contrary, with free fish into the United States, and the United States having control of the Canadian markets, which they certainly will have under this trade pact, the United States will draw still more of our money to go into their ships and still more of our fishermen to form their crews to operate those vessels. The discontinuance of these licenses to United States fishing vessels is something which should have taken place immediately after the decision of the Hague Tribunal. The hon. Attorney General of the province of Nova Scotia, when he occupied a seat in this House, spoke very forcibly against the continuance of those licenses to the United States fishing vessels, and that was before the Tribunal at the Hague had pronounced with reference to our rights in our own territorial waters. But I would like to point out to the minister that we have reached an entirely different point—that we come to a new starting point, in fact—after the award of the Hague Tribunal. That disposed of all the difficult questions which had arisen under the treaty of 1818, and owing to which the licenses were originally granted to the United States fishing vessels, so that there was no reason to continue those licenses, and as a matter of fact I venture to say that the United States never expected but what they would be discontinued. Yet what do we find? After ninety years of these difficulties which had arisen under this old treaty, and after the government of this country has taken all the kudos to itself for the result of the arbitration at the Hague, it is absolutely giving away all the advantages we gained from that tribunal by continuing these modus vivendi licenses to the American fishermen. And we are getting absolutely nothing in return. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was in his place I would ask him what the Canadian fisherman gets for continuing these licenses to the American fishing vessels, but as the Minister of Finance is not in his place, I would put that question to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur)?

Mr. BRODEUR. The situation to-day of our Canadian fishermen is much better than the one they had under the treaty of 1888.

Mr. JAMESON. I do not understand what the hon. minister means, but I would like him to answer my question, and then I shall answer any question he may propound with regard to that treaty of 1888. What are our fishermen getting for the continuance of those licenses to the Americans?

Mr. BRODEUR. They get much better treatment than under the treaty of 1888?

Mr. JAMESON. If the minister will not answer that question, I shall ask him another. What are our fishermen getting for granting these licenses free to the United States vessels now?

Mr. BRODEUR. We are having the United States markets for our fish.

Mr. JAMESON. What do our fishermen get for giving the United States the Canadian market? I pause for a reply. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) takes a very different view from that which is taken by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie). The hon. minister says that the fishermen get better advantages to-day under this proposed arrangement than they did under the treaty of 1888. Well, I shall deal with that later on. What I say now is that Canada is actually paying three prices for getting her fish into the United States markets. In the first place, we are continuing the granting of licenses to American fishermen under the modus vivendi and that is something which, under the award of the Hague Tribunal, there is absolutely no reason for our doing. In the second place those licenses are being issued free, or at the rate of $1 per vessel, instead of $1.50 per ton. They would be cheap, so far as Canadian fishermen are concerned, at $500 per license, and in the third place we are giving the United States the Canadian market, because when we take down the tariff wall, the United States fishermen will absolutely control our market.

The right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) waived aside in a lordly fashion all idea as to what might happen with regard to this country and its resources as a result of their policy. But what has already happened to our Atlantic fisheries? In spite of the fact that the highest tribunal in the world lately declared that Canadian fishermen have exclusive rights in Canadian territorial waters, with the exception of the Bay of Fundy, which was not, I am sorry to say, dealt with, this government has by this agreement actually taken the United States fishermen into partnership. In other words, what our fishermen should have gained under the award to the Hague Tribunal this government is taking from them by this ill-advised deal; and with the help of this government, the United States have already largely annexed the Canadian fisheries. No one contemplated the continuing of these licenses, the issuing of free licenses, and the giving of our markets to the United States fishermen in exchange for the United States market. The most any one expected was that we would give them free licenses in exchange of their market; and as to the continuance of these licenses, I am confident that the Minister of Marine (Mr. Brodeur) himself, if he would speak his mind, would like to see that done away with.

I shall now cite a few opinions regarding the question of these licenses to United States fishing vessels. These views were expressed by certain gentlemen to Mr. Fraser, staff correspondent of the Halifax 'Chronicle,' who interviewed them in November last, and they were published in that newspaper. Mr. Fraser, the staff correspondent of the 'Chronicle,' reported as follows:

> The general consensus of opinion in Lunenburg was free fish for free fishing under the modus vivendi.
> Mr. Fraser's conclusion was that the United States might be given the privileges they now enjoy under the modus vivendi, and the tonnage tax be removed in return for free fish.

The Lunenburg special correspondent of the Halifax 'Chronicle' wrote to that paper on January 2, 1911, as follows:

> Our citizens would be willing to concede to the United States the right to purchase bait and supplies in return for the free admission of our fish.

In the Halifax 'Chronicle' there appeared also a statement from Mr. Moses H. Nickerson, M.P.P. On being interviewed, Mr. Nickerson said:

> The sentiment of fishermen west of Lunenburg, as he understood it, would be that they would gladly welcome any reciprocal arrangements admitting free fish of all kinds to the United States in return for the privilege enjoyed by the American vessels under the modus vivendi, even with a reduction or abolition of the license fee.
> I think the fishermen would be willing to have the duty taken off gasoline engines, as a return for free fish. These are the only concessions they would be willing to make.

Our ministers when they entered into this agreement, were uninformed or indifferent as to the conditions, or they never would have given three prices for the American market. I would like to inquire of the Minister of Finance if he were here, about taking the duty off gasoline engines to which Mr. Nickerson refers. There was a resolution of the Fishermen's Union of Nova Scotia transmitted to the Finance Minister a year ago, asking him to have the duty removed, and he replied that he would give that request consideration. Well, I have not learned up to to-day that the duty has been taken off or reduced, but I do observe that there is a reduction in the duty on automobiles. Of course, we know that this pact has been negotiated in the interests of the toiling masses of this country. At least that is what the Finance Minister tells us, and this reduction of five per cent in the duty on automobiles will no doubt in his opinion, be of great benefit to our toiling masses and fishermen, who are large users of automobiles. Would it not have been more satisfactory to the fishermen and to the toiling masses of this country if the duty on gasoline engines had been removed and the duty on automobiles had been allowed to remain?

I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if Canadian vessels under this agreement will have the same privileges in United States ports as United States fishing vessels will have in Canadian ports?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware that there is any provision in the treaty with regard to fishing vessels.

Mr. JAMESON. I am sorry the minister cannot answer the question. I suppose this is another matter about which there was no understanding, and which will have to be dealt with when it arises. It will probably then develop that it was a misunderstanding. The minister has said that under this arrangement the Canadian fishermen are getting better terms than they did under the treaty of 1888. He referred then to the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty which was negotiated by Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Bayard and Sir Charles Tupper. That treaty, while ratified by the parliament of Canada, was never ratified by the Senate of the United States. Under article 10 of that treaty it was provided that United States fishing vessels shall conform to harbour regulations common to them and to fishing vessels of Canada, and by article 12 that fishing vessels of Canada shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this treaty to United States fishing vessels on the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

The minister has taken the responsibility of saying that this is a better agreement for the Canadian fishermen than the Chamberlain-Bayard treaty of 1888, and yet when I asked him whether the Canadian fishing vessels would have the same privileges in United States ports under this agreement as United States fishing vessels are going to have in Canadian ports, he says he cannot answer.

Under the licenses issued to United States fishing vessels, and under this pact, United States fishing vessels have all the privileges in Canadian ports that Canadian vessels have. They can come and go at their will and the government is granting these licenses practically free, at a nominal fee of $1 per vessel. There are now 93 United States vessels paying an average fee of $125 a year for licenses. If these licenses are made free, does it not follow almost every United States vessel will take out a license? Mr. J. B. Osborne, chief of the United States Bureau of Foreign Commerce and a member of the Reciprocity Commission, speaking at Portland on March 15, 1911, said:

The New England fishing vessels would benefit largely by the reduction of the Canadian license fee from $1.50 per ton to $1 per vessel.

Of course they will. Mr. Osborne knows what he is talking about. This reduction of duty from $1.50 a ton, which meant an average of $125 a vessel to $1 a vessel, means practically a bonus of $124 a year to each American vessel that chooses to take out a license, a bonus granted by the government of Canada to bring United States vessels into direct competition with Canadian fishing vessels.

I think, Sir, that the people in the province of Nova Scotia or in the maritme provinces who wish to have these licenses continued to United States fishing vessels are largely the vessel outfitters at the ports frequented by United States fishing vessels. They make money out of supplying and outfitting the American vessels. The Canadian fishermen do not want the licenses continued, they do not want to meet American competition any more than they can help and consequently it is not the Canadian fishermen who are anxious to have these licenses continued, but a comparatively few dealers and outfitters who have the ear of the government while the Canadian fishermen, scattered around the coast, cannot get the ear of this government.

Under this pact this feature will work out to the very great disadvantage of our Canadian fishermen. Let us take, for instance, the matter of fresh fish. A Canadian vessel and an American vessel, let us say, reach an American port at the same time. The American vessel ties up at the wharf and throws her fish out at once. She has a license from the United States authorities which permits her to discharge her cargo without the formality of reporting at the custom house. The Canadian fishing vessel ties up perhaps at the same wharf, but the captain has to report to the customs. He would probably have to take with him a customs broker to enter his fish, because all fish landed by Canadian vessels must be entered under this compact in a formal way, and the American regulations in that regard are extremely formal. He must have a permit before he can land, and it is possible he may have to prove the origin of his fish. I would ask the minister whether, as a matter of fact, when a Canadian fishing vessel goes into a United States port, the captain has to prove the origin of those fish by a consular certificate issued by an American consular agent at a Canadian port.

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware that in the agreement such regulations are provided for.

Mr. JAMESON. At the present time that is the agreement, and I would like to know whether, under this agreement, that provision has been done away with, and this disadvantage under which our Canadian fishermen would labour has been removed. The minister says no.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think there is any provision in the agreement to that effect.

Mr. JAMESON. I know there is no provision in the agreement on its face, and unless it appears on the face of the agreement itself I understand there is no 'understanding.' I conclude from the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Canadian fisherman, if he goes into American ports, even if he does not have to prove the origin of his fish, would have to report at the customs house to get his permit to land and possibly has to pay a customs broker for doing this business. There is delay, there is expense, and when he comes to sell his fish he finds that he is perhaps two or three hours behind the American fisherman who entered the harbour at the same time as he did, but who could place his fish immediately on the market and get the top price, while the Canadian would have to take a lesser price. The prices of fresh fish in the United States markets are as mercurial as the prices of stocks on the New York stock exchange, and they will vary from hour to hour, according to the arrival of fish, or according to the demand for fish and the supply of that article. Now the United States fishermen can leave a Canadian port and sail to the fishing ground, and I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether a Canadian vessel can leave a United States port and clear for the fishing ground under this agreement.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is not to be supposed that Canadian fishing vessels from Nova Scotia will go and get a clearance from the United States to go on the fishing grounds.

Mr. JAMESON. Supposing the captain of a Canadian fishing vessel finds that under this agreement he can get a little more for his fish in a United States port than in a Canadian port, and he goes to that port and sells his fish there, can he clear from that port to the fishing grounds?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not aware of such a regulation.

Mr. JAMESON. That just shows the lack of information on the part of this government. I want to tell the minister that there is at the present time a United States regulation which prevents a clearance being given to a foreign fishing vessel from a United States port to the fishing grounds, in other words, they will not grant her what is known as a clearance for an irresolute voyage. If the vessel be a foreign vessel, as a Canadian vessel would be in a United States port, she must clear for some other port, and she would consequently have to clear from the United States port to a Canadian port, and from a Canadian port she would have to clear for the fishing grounds, and if she wanted to sell her fish in the United States, again she would have to sail from the fishing ground to the United States port. In other words, Canadian fishing vessels must sail over three sides of a triangle, while United States fishing vessels can clear either from a Canadian port to the fishing grounds, or from a United States port to the fishing grounds, and she has to sail over only two sides of the triangle. In other words, one goes direct and the other does not go direct. We will take the United States fishermen absolutely into partnership, and when we get into their ports they treat us as strangers, and the ministers are satisfied to have it so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman considered the question of bait supplies in cold storage?

Mr. JAMESON. I intend to go fully into the bait question, even though the hour is late. Now I ask, will this agreement tend to bring home the fishermen of the maritime provinces who are at present on United States fishing vessels, who have left their homes to operate these vessels, or will it have a tendency to drive to United States fishing vessels those fishermen who are now sailing under the Canadian flag? The advantages are obviously with the United States fishing vessels, and the disadvantages with the Canadian fishing vessels. I cannot see that there is any doubt as to what the result will be. It will drive our Canadian fishermen to sail on United States fishing vessels and become United States citizens. As such they will supply the United States market, the United States will supply the upper Canadian market, because we have it on the evidence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that we only get that market under present conditions because we are protected by a duty of one cent per pound, and the Canadian fisherman who stands by his nationality and his flag must find a new market for his fish. Now, I have shown that if the Canadian market is the best at any time, the United States fisherman can come in and sell his fish in the Canadian market exactly on the same terms as the Canadian fisherman; and if the United States market is the best, the Canadian must face regulations which will place him at a serious disadvantage as compared to the American. I have also shown that we are going to lose the upper Canadian and western markets to the United States, and that we must fight at a considerable disadvantage to displace the United States fisherman from the United States market. In other words, this agreement is going to build up the United States fisheries, and it will tend to depress and injure the Canadian fisheries. Let me point out another feature. It is going to injure Canadian shipbuilding yards. I have seen it stated in the press, and I think it was stated by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) in that letter, that this agreement is going to result in great activity in the shipbuilding yards in the maritime provinces. I say it will have a contrary effect. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has not been very liberal in the information he has given me to-night, to give me a little information on another subject; I would ask him whether any arrangement has been made with the United States during the progress of these negotiations whereby they would discontinue the restrictive regulations which prevent a Canadian vessel from coming under the United States flag?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows exactly what there is in the agreement. I do not see anything of the kind.

Mr. JAMESON. The condition at present is this, that no foreign built vessel can go under the American flag. A vessel, to sail under the American flag, must be built in the United States and of United States materials. Now, if we are unable to increase our own fishing fleets under this agreement, and I have shown conclusively that it is going to interfere with our fishing operations; if we are not going to increase the fishing vessels of the Canadian fleet, and if we cannot, under existing regulations, get the privilege of selling our fishing vessels to the United States, how are we going to increase operations in the shipbuilding yards of the maritime provinces? It is an absolute fallacy. That was another of the matters which this government should have settled definitely at the time that they entered into this agreement. The United States were the suitors, according to what the government tell us, Canada was not seeking these reciprocal arrangements, it was the United States who was pleading for them almost on bended knee. If that is the case, as we are led to believe by statements which are made by hon. gentlemen occupying seats on the treasury benches, why on earth did not the government say: Here are certain things which we want you to do in order to place us in a position where we can reasonably negotiate this treaty to the advantage of our people? If the Minister of Finance were present I have several questions which I would like to have addressed to him.

The question of bait supply has been referred to by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), and I want to say the control of the bait supply means the control of the fisheries and the lack of bait means that fishing vessels must lie idle. The shortage of bait in the maritime provinces led this government, as far back as the year 1900, to take steps for the purpose of remedying the situation in that regard. Between 1900 and 1909, $143,000 was expended by this government in aids and bonuses to bait freezers and cold storage for the purpose of providing bait for the fishermen. I may say that the condition which obtains at the present is not perhaps very satisfactory. According to the report of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the last year, out of 61 of these government-aided bait freezers, 20 reported. Of these reports 10 were favourable and 11 unfavourable, while 40 did not report at all. Since then we have heard rumours of fraud, forgery and criminal prosecutions in connection with the expenditure of money in regard to these bait freezers, but, as Kipling says, 'that is another story,' and we will not deal with it at the present time. What I wish to point out is that as far back as 1900 this government recognized that something must be done to aid the bait situation and to provide the requisite amount of bait and now we find that after the expenditure of this money for the purpose of aiding the situation with regard to bait for Canadian fishermen, they are actually bonusing these bait freezers for the purpose of furnishing bait to United States fishing vessels to enter into competition with our Canadian fishermen. We know that the bait supply in the Bay of Fundy is at times altogether inadequate and that the prices charged Canadian fishermen by the Grand Manan weir operators have been very high. In the answer that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave me some time ago to a question that I asked him as to the prices paid for bait at Grand Manan, he gave me the prices of bait in July last as $7.50 per hogshead and in November $16.75. I am informed that during the course of last year the price went as high as $20, $25 and even $30 per hogshead, continuing these licenses to United States vessels affects the bait supply. At the present time there are 93 of these American vessels taking these licenses and paying $1.50 per ton which averages $125 per year. We can assume that many, if not all other, United States fishing vessels will take these licenses if they only have to pay a dollar for them. The Canadian fishermen are brought into direct competition with the United States fishing vessels in regard to bait, in regard to crews, and in regard to the sale of fish. Our own fishing vessels cannot secure sufficient bait at times and have to go idle, and that is a condition which, even under existing circumstances, prevails at times. I have known fishing vessels and boats as well to be laid up for days at the time when fishing is most profitable in the whole year, and if they allow United States fishermen to come in and compete with our fishermen for the supply of bait, we know that the condition will become much more serious.

The government, in continuing to allow United States fishing vessels to share our bait supply by issuing these licenses to them is keeping a competitor in business whom it was the business of this government to put out of business, in order to secure the trade for our own fishermen. By sharing the available bait with the United States fishing vessels this government is hampering our vessels in getting a sufficient bait supply, and this action of the government is preventing the fishermen of the maritime provinces who have left home and gone to sail on American vessels, from returning home. I see a danger both to our fishermen and to our fisheries from this agreement. As the price of meat advances, we know that fish will become more generally used and will command a higher price. We know that the United States have fished out their waters and they want to get at ours. Canada and Newfoundland control the only remaining fisheries in the western hemisphere and this government proposes to take the United States into partnership. We have lost control of our lobster fisheries to the United States when we cannot prevent them taking lobsters outside of the three-mile limit during the close season, according to a statement which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries made to me in this House a few days ago. This agreement will work out to the disadvantage of our fishermen in every respect. The government had the situation absolutely in their own hands. If they had withheld the issuance of these licenses to United States fishing vessels, if they had backed up the government of Newfoundland, they would have deprived the United States fishermen of a base of operations, and we would have got free fish into the United States without making any concession whatever in return for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what this government should have required from the United States as the basis of any agreement with regard to the Atlantic fisheries was:

1. The prohibition of beam trawling in North Atlantic waters by United States and Canadian fishermen.

2. Prohibition of lobster fishing by United States fishermen in the Bay of Fundy and outside the three-mile limit on the Canadian coast during the Canadian close season.

3. Relaxation of United States regulations which prevent our Canadian fishermen from clearing direct for the fishing grounds after landing their fares at United States ports.

4. Relaxation of the United States regulations so that Canadian vessels in United States ports would have the same advantages as United States fishing vessels in Canadian ports.

5. Relaxation of United States regulations to enable Canadian builders to sell fishing vessels to the United States fishermen.

6. That bounties now paid to Canadian fishermen should be continued without United States retaliation.

As I have said, the United States were the suitors, they came to the government of this country, they want this reciprocal arrangement and, as the basis for the negotiation of this reciprocal arrangement, it was obviously the duty of this government, if they desired to protect Canadian fishermen, if they desired to improve the position of Canadian fishermen, to have laid down those or similar propositions and asked the United States, if they would not accept all, to accept what they would. And when I ask the Minister of Marine, as I ask him now, whether as a matter of fact any of these stipulations were made to the United States authorities, I anticipate that his answer will be either 'no,' or that he does not know. What does the minister say?

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows the agreement.

Mr. JAMESON. Quite so, and the agreement does not mention these things at all and does not protect the Canadian fishermen.

Mr. BRODEUR. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to show that this agreement was less advantageous to Canada than the agreement of 1888.

Mr. JAMESON. I have already shown that to the minister, and if I have not made it clear to him it was not my fault.

An hon. MEMBER. He was asleep.

Mr. JAMESON. I think perhaps he was taking forty winks. However, if I did not make it clear to the minister I will go over the ground again.

Mr. BRODEUR. I followed the hon. gentleman closely, but I did not notice that he proved that the arrangement of 1888 was more advantageous than the present agreement. In 1888 we gave to the Americans the right to come and fish in our waters, and the property in fish that belonged to us, but no such concession has been made under this agreement.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister says that the present arrangement is more advantageous than the arrangement of 1888, and yet he cannot tell us that Canadian fishing vessels in United States ports will have the same privileges that United States vessels will have in Canadian ports, a thing that was expressly provided for in the treaty of 1888. Under the agreement of 1888 we got the same treatment in United States ports for our fishing vessels as they got in our ports, and in the second place, if we gave the United States rights within the three-mile limit, they gave us in return rights within their territorial waters.

Mr. BRODEUR. And that was worth a great deal to us.

Mr. JAMESON. That is the minister's opinion, but I will show what the opinion of the United States authorities was——

Mr. BRODEUR. I would like to have the opinion of the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. JAMESON. I will give the minister an authority that he will not dispute.

Mr. BRODEUR. What is the opinion of the hon. member for Digby?

Mr. JAMESON. If the minister permits me to give him one answer at a time, he will get all the information he wants before he is through. In 1887 the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations made a report dealing with the Atlantic fisheries, from which I read:

From the investigations made by the committee during the last summer and fall, and as the result of the great mass of testimony taken by it and herewith returned, the committee believe it to be clear, beyond all dispute, that the right to fish within 3 miles of the Dominion shores is of no practical advantage whatever to American fishermen. The cod and halibut fishing has been for many years almost entirely carried on at long distances from the shores in deep waters, on banks, &c.; and it is believed that were there absolute liberty for Americans to fish, without such restriction or regulation of any kind, within three miles of the Dominion shores, no such fisherman would ever think of going there for the purpose of catching cod or halibut.

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand that the hon. member (Mr. Jameson) would be willing that we should concede to the Americans the right to fish within the three-mile limit?

Mr. JAMESON. Not at all. But what I say is that the government has practically done that in this agreement, and that is why I complain. Nay, more——

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; he is referring to the treaty made by Sir Charles Tupper in 1888. We have made no such concession this time.

Mr. JAMESON. The minister is trying to draw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. GRAHAM. It's a halibut.

Mr. JAMESON. Perhaps the Postmaster General thinks it's a lobster. I say that under this arrangement the Americans are getting all the advantages they require within the three-mile limit, because great advantages within the three-mile limit pertain to the catching of bait. This bait is caught by Canadian fishermen, it is stored in government-bonused freezers, and the government of Canada is going to permit United States fishermen to take advantage of that bait and enter into competition with our fishermen at times when there is scarcity of bait, and not sufficient for Canadian fishermen.

Mr. BRODEUR. All the profit goes to the Canadians. The fish have to be caught by Canadian fishing vessels, and all the business is to be done by Canadians, whereas under the 1888 arrangement it was done by the Americans. I know my hon. friend will agree that this arrangement is far better than the arrangement of 1888.

Mr. JAMESON. Is the minister serious in the statement that under the treaty of 1888 the Americans were going to get within the three-mile limit to fish?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly.

Mr. JAMESON. Is he not thinking of the treaty of Washington of 1871, which was negotiated by Sir John Macdonald, and by which the United States fishermen had the privilege of taking our fish within the three-mile limit, and the Canadian fishermen had corresponding privileges in United States waters, and there was distinct provision in the treaty that there should be a reference on the question as to which country had the greater advantage, and when the question was arbitrated at Halifax, the Halifax award called upon the United States to pay $5,500,000 because the balance of advantage was in their favour, and $1,000,000 of that was handed over to Newfoundland, which was a partner in the treaty.

Mr. CROSBY. And it should be a partner in the treaty to-day.

Mr. JAMESON. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax in that; and the balance, $4,500,000, is the basis of the payment of these fishing bounties to these Canadian fishermen. That is the way treaties were negotiated by the Conservatives. That is a treaty that was advantageous to the fishermen of this country and which continues to be an advantage to them to the present day.

Mr. LOGGIE. Would not that be an absolute answer to the hon. gentleman as to the value of our inshore fisheries to-day?

Mr. JAMESON. Exactly so. That is why I am finding fault with the government for giving to the United States fishermen all the advantages which are to be derived from those inshore fisheries in the way of bait.

Mr. LOGGIE. The hon. member is very unfair. It is not because of the bait. There are other fish caught in the inshore fisheries.

Mr. CROSBY. No.

Mr. LOGGIE. What about mackerel?

Mr. JAMESON. I do not mind an occasional question. I have answered more questions to-night than the hon. minister has; but I don't want too many speeches made during the course of my remarks. Now, I am opposed to this reciprocity agreement in its present form, for the reasons which I have stated, as well as for the following: The government is paying to the United States three prices for their market—first, by continuing the licensing system in force at all; second, by giving practically free licenses to United States fishermen; third, by giving them the Canadian market for their fish. This threefold payment to the United States for their market makes more difficult the obtaining of bait by Canadian fishermen, robs them of their own market, and hampers them in securing the market of the United States, and will drive them to United States fishing vessels. Our lobster fisheries in the Bay of Fundy, and three miles off our coasts are open to United States fishermen, and during the close season, when our fishermen cannot legally take them, United States fishermen perhaps can enter the Canadian market under this agreement, and sell lobsters taken off our own coasts. I will ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether it would be possible for United States fishermen during the Canadian close season, to take lobsters outside the three-mile limit, along the Canadian coast, and sell them in the Canadian market.

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly not. American fishermen will not have the right, during the close season, to sell lobsters in Canada.

Mr. JAMESON. I understand, then, that the minister has laid it down that the United States fishermen will not have the privilege of selling in Canada during the close season lobsters that have been taken off the Canadian coast, outside of the three-mile limit. If that is the case, the Canadian lobster fishermen, I presume, are on the same footing, and cannot sell in Canada lobsters taken beyond the three-mile limit off the Canadian coast?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly not. The law is very clear. Nobody has a right to be in possession of lobsters during the close season.

Mr. JAMESON. Lobsters go out into deep water, and large lobsters are very often taken in very deep water, sometimes four or five miles off the coast; and the situation is that United States vessels can take these lobsters three miles and upwards off our shores and can market them in the United States during the Canadian close season. I think the minister will admit that.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. JAMESON. While Canadians cannot take lobsters three miles and upwards off our shores and sell them in the Canadian market at the same time.

Mr. BRODEUR. They can sell those lobsters to the Americans. If Canadian fishing vessels caught lobsters outside the three-mile limit during the close season, those lobsters could be sold in Boston. There is nothing to prevent that.

Mr. JAMESON. That just shows that the United States fishermen can catch lobsters off our coast and sell them in their own market, while Canadian fishermen if they catch lobsters off our coast during the close season, cannot sell them in the Canadian market, but have to go to a foreign market to sell them. I venture to say that if this government had said to the United States authorities at the time they were making arrangements for this agreement, we want to prohibit the catching of lobsters on the Canadian coast, and in the Bay of Fundy, three miles off the shore during the Canadian close season, for the purpose of protecting and preserving the lobster fisheries, they could have had that agreement made. The United States would have conceded it, because it is a most reasonable provision. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not say that that arrangement has been made, or even asked for, and yet his department has been aware of the fact that American fishermen have been taking lobsters off the Canadian coast beyond the three-mile limit for a couple of years.

Mr. BRODEUR. What makes the hon. gentleman believe that the Americans would have accepted such a position? They have no close season for lobsters.

Mr. JAMESON. We have a close season in Canada, which gives the Americans the privilege of catching lobsters outside of the three-mile limit, and selling them in the markets of the United States at a time when they cannot be sold in Canada, and the minister is apparently satisfied with it. Another reason why I am opposed to this agreement is that while our fishermen get only the United States market, the fishermen of the United States, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Japan, are given our market. Another reason is that Canadian fishermen are not guaranteed such favourable treatment in the United States ports as American fishermen will have in Canadian ports.

Now, it is not because they are unselfish or that they wish to help us that the United States are making this move—not at all. Senator Beveridge, the chief mouthpiece of the American administration at Washington in this reciprocity movement, said, speaking of the present tariff wall between Canada and the United States:

That policy has driven American manufacturers across the Canadian borders, built vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workmen to supply trade. That capital should be kept at home to employ American workingmen to supply the Canadian demand.

It is to weaken Canada and to prevent United States capital coming into our country that the United States are so anxious to enter into this agreement. Mr. Osborne, of the United States State Department, already quoted, said further, with regard to the employment of American labour:

The free entry of Canadian fish into United States markets would benefit the New England canneries and build up an important industry in the curing and preserving of this cheap and palatable food staple.

If reciprocity works out in the way the United States expect, they will get this business and we will lose it; and the fishing business has reached a stage where not only the taking of the fish, but the labour incidental to preparing them for market, must be thought of.

Financial and business men of Canada are beginning to forecast the result of this trade pact; and as an indication of what they think, here is an extract from a circular sent out by one of the members of the Montreal Stock Exchange. It reads:

Why should I invest in American enterprises when there are as many Canadian enterprises just as good?

And the circular goes on to say:

Now that there is so much talk of reciprocity between Canada and the United States we strongly recommend the investment of funds not only in Canada but also across the border as should reciprocity or other tariff changes adversely affect Canadian securities they would benefit American securities.

This is a pretty broad hint of what capitalists think is likely to result. I wish to quote once more from the Halifax 'Chronicle' of January 22, 1911, from an article written by Mr. W. G. Clarke, of Bear River, the same gentleman whose opinion on the lumber business I quoted before. Mr. Clarke, in the course of a very able article on the lumber resources of Nova Scotia, makes this statement:

Since Nova Scotia possesses large pulp-wood areas and excellent water-power awaiting the magic call of capital to spring into industrial life would it not seem that an attractive field was open either to Nova Scotia or foreign capitalists?

That we should conserve our resources for the up-building the developing of our own provinces and the repatriation of our sons and daughters, who for lack of employment have found homes in other lands, rather than be regarded as a base of supplies for raw materials, to be drawn upon at will by industries already located on foreign soil, where the entire profit of manufacture, and the attendant increase of population, must accrue to the country in which are located the manufacturing centres, is an argument which will, I think, appeal to every patriotic Canadian.

That is the opinion expressed by a prominent and ardent Liberal who is very thoroughly informed as to the condition of affairs in Nova Scotia. I think he takes a high minded view of the situation, and I think that taking it in connection with the opinions of other men on both sides of the line, it clearly shows that this particular pact, if we enter into it, is bound to result to our disadvantage.

For the reasons I have given already, and from the best consideration I have been able to give this important question, I am absolutely opposed to this pact. I say it is hostile to the best interests of our country, and in particular to the best interests of the maritime provinces. I do not wish to speak from a provincial point of view, but I do say that this pact, if carried into effect, will in my opinion work most serious hardships to our people, and cause them loss and detriment. For these reasons I intend to vote against this resolution when the opportunity comes, and shall oppose it as vigorously as I can upon every occasion possible.

Mr. A. B. HUNT (Compton). On rising to address you, Mr. Speaker, on this important question of reciprocity, I feel it my duty, coming as I do from the province of Quebec, and representing one of the border counties in that province, to place my views on 'Hansard' with regard to this great question—a world wide question as it is, attracting the attention at the present time of not only the Dominion of Canada, and the British Empire, but the United States as well. I feel first that it is my duty to congratulate our Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and our Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) on the splendid agreement they have been able to obtain from our neighbours to the south of us. I am sure it is an agreement much better than could have been expected by any hon. member on this side of the House; and I am proud to think that we have such men in our party, men who have the courage of their convictions, and who are prepared to stand by this agreement until it becomes law, notwithstanding the undue and unfair criticism made against it by the party opposite, and the opposition press of this country.

Two delegations have already waited upon this government, numbering 1,000 each or thereabouts, and the one in direct opposition to the other—the one asking for free trade in every particular, and the other for higher protection. Consequently you can readily see that this is one of the difficult questions of the day—a question that cannot be decided by the views of the delegations which may wait on this government as their views will be as discordant as are those of the press of this country, each looking at the situation from his own standpoint or from the little selfish circle that may be drawn around him. We must learn to make, at some time during our lifetime, certain sacrifices for the benefit of our country, and the upbuilding of the nation, or otherwise we can never expect to be a prosperous people or a prosperous country. Therefore, this is one of those great questions that must be settled so as to do the most good for the greatest number. A tariff cannot be adapted to the views and wants of every one, people must, to some extent, adapt themselves to the tariff, and the situation around them and raise what the markets call for, what this country is adapted to raise and what the lands are suitable to grow. There is no use in any one trying to grow oranges in the province of Quebec, and then asking the government to protect him with a tariff from the rest of the world until such time as his oranges are ripe. Any one who does this will simply hinder the trade of this country. Yet, that is the position in which some of the Canadian fruit growers are at present when they object to this agreement. In visiting the fruit exhibit on Sparks street from British Columbia, an hon. member who was with me from the province of Quebec, said that the fruit looked very nice, but he did not think that the apples had as good a flavour as the apples grown in the province of Quebec. Well, said the exhibitor, that merely shows a difference of opinion; and to prove that they had the best fruit in the world out in British Columbia, he said that for two years they had taken the first prizes and gold medal in every exhibition in which they had made a display both in Canada and in the United States. Now, it seems, however, that these fruit growers in British Columbia are putting up a great cry with regard to the proposed agreement now before us, and are asking to be protected against the rest of the world. But if they have the best fruit in the world why should they desire protection? One could understand the objection coming from those who are trying to grow fruit where nature never intended it should grow.

Just a word concerning the manufacturers of this country, and the railway transportation companies. I believe that the agreement now before this House will benefit our manufacturers instead of injuring them, and our manufacturers are the last people on the face of the earth who should make any objection whatever to it. Knowing, as they do, the clamour raised all over the Dominion for free farm implements, they are making a mistake in fighting this proposed agreement. Inasmuch as it affects only a reduction of from 2½ to 5 per cent on agricultural implements, leaving a duty of 15 per cent in their favour, and giving them a market of 92,000,000 people more to deal with, and inasmuch as their factories, I understand are paying, 22 per cent dividends, I cannot see what they have to complain of. They should be able to manufacture as cheaply as our neighbours to the south.

Coming to the great question of transportation and the objection raised by the opposition that the traffic will be changed north and south instead of east and west, I think that is looking too far ahead for trouble. But imaginary trouble is trouble of the worst kind. In speaking the other day to an old gentleman, whose head was white as snow, he said that if there was any one thing which had made his head grey faster than another, it was the imaginary troubles that he had to meet through life, and I think that is exactly the position in which the Conservatives are at present as regards this agreement. No one can tell just how it is going to affect the traffic of this country. The railways are able to take care of themselves and railway stocks have been increasing in price from day to day ever since it has been talked of. And after all it is only an agreement that can be cancelled at any time whenever we find it is not working to the general advantage of Canada. We can cancel any part of it, or all of it, any time we see fit, and the United States have the same privilege. If the argument set forth by the opposition be true and the traffic of our railways and canals is going to be so seriously affected, what is to prevent the United States from taking the duty off our products at any time they see fit, as they are master of the situation at present so far as the levying of their own duties is concerned. But I do not believe that our railways are in any such flimsy condition. I believe they are able to take care of themselves.

We can also see that it is not plain sailing on the other side of the line by any means. While there are objections on this side, there are still more on the other side. While delegations are waiting upon this government objecting in the strongest terms to this agreement, there are still more delegations waiting upon the United States government and putting up the same cry as the opposition are doing here.

My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson) has said that the prices are better in the province of Quebec than on the other side of the line, and he quoted figures to prove that statement. He also quoted figures to show that prices were better on farm produce in the province of Quebec than in the United States, but I think that I shall be able to show before I get through that such is not the case. One of the greatest proofs is that the young people along the border line in the different counties in the province of Quebec are selling their old homesteads and crossing over the line. They are buying farms on the other side and paying $2,000 more for the same amount of land in the same climate and on the same soil, but with this difference, that there they have the United States market and they feel that they can sacrifice the old homestead for the sake of getting that market.

I do not think that we have it all our own way so far as this treaty is concerned, neither do I think that the United States have it all their way. In my opinion it is a fair and square deal between the two countries; and if we are an honest straightforward people we ought not to ask for anything more, as no other kind of an agreement can last.

Viewing this matter from the standpoint of the province of Quebec, and especially the constituency I represent, I have looked up the exports and imports to see whether the balance of trade was in our favour, or against us, and I can come only to one conclusion, that is that we have everything to gain and nothing to lose by this agreement. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Jameson) says that trade will seek the higher markets. I have taken the imports and exports for Quebec alone in order to show just what the balance of trade is. He also stated that horses, cattle, sheep, and other things, were bringing a better price in Canada than in the United States. I find that in the year ending March 31, 1910, we exported to the United States from the province of Quebec alone horses to the value of $72,255, and we received back from the United States $17,911, giving a balance of trade in horses alone of $54,344. Of cattle we sent 2,970 head valued at $17,210, and 27½ per cent duty was paid on them. No cattle were imported into the province of Quebec from the United States. Of lambs we exported from Quebec to the United States, 22,941 valued at $98,084, and 75 cents duty was paid on each lamb. No lambs were imported to Quebec from the United States. This shows that there must be a better market in the United States or these animals would not have been exported from Canada.

Of hay we exported 80,027 tons, valued at $611,116, and there was a duty on that hay of $4 a ton. Still it went to the United States market. My hon. friend from Brandon the other night said it was poor farming in the province of Quebec to sell hay. Let me tell you, as was stated by the Minister of Agriculture, that there are parts of the province of Quebec, where, if they did not sell hay it would be considered bad farming. I cannot better explain this than by quoting the words of the Prime Minister at page 4853 of 'Hansard' on March 7, 1911, where he says:

> Along the two shores of Lake St. Peter there are natural meadows a few inches only above the level of the water, which are yearly flooded, and which, to the knowledge of every one in the province, have been for a hundred years or more growing hay and nothing else. The counties of Berthier, Montmagny and St. Maurice, on the north shore, and the counties of Nicolet, Yamaska and Richelieu on the south, are so situated that they have a population of, perhaps, 1,000, who are growers of hay and for whom this treaty, if it becomes law, will be the most positive boon.

That shows you that these people have been growing hay for a very long time. As that land is overflown with water every year, the sediment enriches the soil, so that it will grow hay for hundreds of years. For that reason if they did not sell hay it would be considered bad farming. What I consider is good farming is that which enables a man to make the most of his farm, not for one year, but year after year.

Of milk and cream we exported 147,250 gallons valued at $141,599, against a duty of 5 cents a gallon. None of these products were imported into Canada.

Of butter we exported 761,000 lbs., valued at $138,969, and 6 cents a pound duty was paid on that butter.

We also exported cheese, potatoes, maple syrup, and many other agricultural products. We have recently had people going through our county lecturing the people and we find reports in the Montreal 'Star' headed: 'Farmers urged to oppose reciprocity.' These gentlemen say that in 1910 in the United States there was an overproduction of butter. Perhaps I cannot do better than to read what he said. He said:

Last year there was more butter and cheese made in the United States than could be consumed in that country. This has been put away in cold storage during last season, until now the best of authorities agree that there is in four of the principal cities of the United States, 880,000 packages of butter weighing about 60 pounds each, nearly double the quantity that there was the year before. This surplus could not be consumed in the United States and had to be exported. It was now being exported to Great Britain and other countries. Supposing, said he, that the reciprocity arrangement was in force now, a portion at least of this great quantity of butter would be slaughtered on the markets of Canada. It is only the three cents per pound duty that keeps it from competition with the Canadian article.

It was a mistaken idea to think that the United States did not produce as much or even more butter and cheese than they consume at home.

We find that in the same year with such an overproduction of butter in United States we exported from the province of Quebec alone 761,000 pounds of butter after paying a duty of 6 cents a lb. Thus if the United States had as much butter as the hon. member says they had that year, why did they import from the province of Quebec 761,000 lbs?

The other gentleman who spoke at this meeting said that this butter was kept in cold storage in the United States until it reached the enormous price of 40 cents a lb., and then they sold it. If that is the case I do not think there is much danger of butter coming from the United States and competing in our market.

I would like to place on 'Hansard' a few of the principal articles that interest the farmers of Quebec, which will, under this agreement, be on the free list, with a statement of the duties which are now being paid on them. That list is as follows:

Cattle, less than one year old, $2.
Cattle valued at more than $14, 27½ per cent.
Horses value at $150, $30 per head.
Horses valued at over $150, 25 per cent.
Swine, $1.50 each
Sheep and lambs, less than one year, 75 cents each.
Sheep and lambs one year and over, $1.50 each.
Poultry alive, 3 cents per pound.
Poultry dead, 5 cents per pound.
Oats, 15 cents per bushel.
Barley, 15 cents per bushel.
Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel.
Turnips, 25 per cent.
Cabbage, 2 cents each.
Apples, 25 cents per bushel.
Berries of all kinds, 1 cent per quart.
Dried apples, 2 cents per pound.
Butter, 6 cents per pound.
Cheese, 6 cents per pound.
Eggs, 5 cents per dozen.
Hay, $4 per ton.
Straw, $1.50 per ton.

This shows you that the balance of trade for the province of Quebec alone in the few articles I have mentioned, is very heavily in our favour. While we exported $1,500,000 of farm products to the United States we received back only $17,911 worth, giving us a balance of trade of about $1,500,000 in our favour. The duty on our lambs alone in the province of Quebec in 1910 came to over $60,000, and the duty on our hay to $320,000. I do not think that we will get the full amount of this duty added to the price of our products in Quebec, but I do think we will have an active market and no doubt will get a higher price for our lambs and other farm products.

I would also like to place on 'Hansard' a few of the principal exports and imports of Canada that affect the farmers. I find that we have shipped from Canada $642,674 worth of cattle to the United States, and we received back $25,150 worth. I have here a table showing, in the first three columns, the exports to the United States during the year ending March 31, 1910, and in the next three columns, the imports from the United States during the same period:

In regard to horses, I may mention that we have received more horses than in former years on account of the west being settled up so fast that the farmers have had to go across the line and buy horses there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have spoken of the railways and of the manufacturers, and we admit that they are deserving of our consideration in discussing this matter. But as a farmer, and as representing one of the banner counties in the province of Quebec, I thought it my duty to explain my views and the views of my constituents in regard to this great question. I could have spoken from the lumberman's standpoint, and perhaps have made a great deal better showing than from a farmer's standpoint. But as the farmers comprise about sixty per cent of the population of Canada, and as their holdings are far more important than those of the manufacturing and transportation interests put together, it must be admitted that the larger class of people deserve the more consideration from this House. From the figures already quoted I have shown that the agreement now before this parliament will benefit the farmers. I know that the government cannot satisfy every one on this great question, any great question is sure to meet with opposition. Even the overruling power above has failed to satisfy everybody with the weather, and if a delegation could be received, the corners of the streets would be thronged with people waiting their turn to go up and enter their protest in regard to the weather. This is not a new measure, it has been discussed before, and I am sure the Liberal party will not deny its past as being always the friend of the farmer. Just one word more. They say that Sir Wilfrid has lost his hold in the province of Quebec, and is now endeavouring to capture the west. Well, let him capture the west by this agreement, as I know he will. Let me say, as one of the members from the province of Quebec, that the people of that province are just as loyal to Sir Wilfrid as ever they were, they are just as loyal to the Liberal party as ever they were, and they are just as loyal to the Dominion of Canada and to the British Empire as the people of any other province. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up any more of the time of this House, I merely wish to say that I should give my hearty support to this agreement now under consideration.

Mr. STANFIELD moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Brodeur, House adjourned at 12.22 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 10, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

APPOINTMENT OF TRANSLATOR.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved:

That it be resolved, that the recommendation of the Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons, laid on the table of the House with other papers on the subject, on Friday the 7th instant, that Mr. H. M. Vital LaRose be appointed, pursuant to section 21 of the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, as translator in the translation branch of the House of Commons, with the rank of an officer in subdivision A of the second division, be concurred in.

Mr. HUGHES. Before this motion passes I would like to have an undertsanding as to the status of the committee known as the Debates Committee. It is well known that we are ornamental, that goes without any question. Have we any use, have we andany function is the next question which impresses itself upon us. I have no hesitation in saying that I shall never sit on the Debates Committee again, after the manner in which it has been operated lately, as it now seems to be the rule that we are to have no word in the appointment or even in the suggestion of officials. I shall never sit on the committee again and the Prime Minister may take my name off whenever he chooses.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know the reasons which have induced my hon. friend to make use of this very severe language. I know that there is a report of the Debates Committee before the House which has not yet been adopted. I understand that the committee have made certain recommendations of appointments, and it is claimed that these appointments should be made by the Speaker of the House under the authority of the House. This is a question of law as to which I would not be ready to give an opinion as I am not sufficiently familiar with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. The House will remember that when the new Civil Service Act was passed three years ago, it was provided that the officers of the House should be appointed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, the clerk taking the place of the deputy minister, the Speaker taking the place of the minister, and the House taking the place of the Governor in Council, all appointments to be made with the approval of the Civil Service Commission. If the committee to which my hon. friend belongs has infringed upon that rule I am sure he will agree, on reflection, that the law must be observed.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the object of the Debates Committee if all the functions of that committee are to exercised by the Speaker? I am told that the clerk, the servant of the House, has authority to make appointments, that his recommendation must be taken, and that the members of the House of Commons who constitute the committee have not a word to say in the matter. If that is the law it is a very peculiar state of affairs. It would make the committee quite useless, only ornamental, and not much at that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is not only ornamental but useful also. The committee was organized before 1880. Its powers at that time were to supervise the debates of this House. Whatever may have been the intention of the committee at that time it is now admitted that the law which prevails in the matter is the Civil Service Act of 1908, when, after long debate, it was agreed that all appointments should be made under the Civil Service Commission, that is to say, by competition, and upon recommendation to and approval by the Civil Service Commissioners. There is also another part of the report which is before the House, which has not been approved or brought up for approval. The committee actually recommends and sets forth that an additional employee should be taken into the service. I understand that the position is taken that this is an infringement on the well known law that all such appointments must come from the Crown. The committee, of course, can be very useful in advising the government. If the committee should advise the government that another reporter had to be appointed, that the present staff was insufficient and not able to carry on the work, of course such a recommendation would be very useful to the government.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the House not know that? Have we not known for a long time that reporters are wanted here? All we have to do is to read the debates, and we can see that two or three require changing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The committee has to advise the House of this. It may be within the knowledge of all, but it has to be put in concrete form before the House so that action can be taken.

Mr. HUGHES. Why should not the Speaker and the clerk run that business? You had better dissolve the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. It would seem to me that some one should be charged with the responsibility of looking into the qualifications of those who are to be put on that staff, and I do not know of any committee or set of men in the House likely to be more competent to do that than the Debates Committee who have to scrutinize and analyse what the reporters are doing and how the 'Hansard' is made up. While technically the law may provide that the clerk and the Speaker have the right to appoint, they ought to get some competent information from some source to justify their appointment. It might naturally be presumed that the most reliable source from which that would be likely to come would be from the Debates Committee. I would think that the law would be carried out without any trouble and without ignoring that committee, but it would rather seem now that you are completely ignoring it and rendering its work absolutely valueless.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, as far as I remember the provision of the Civil Service Amendment Act, they amount to this; in certain cases an officer has to be appointed upon the report of the deputy minister, followed by the recommendation of the minister and, upon that report and recommendation, an order in council is made appointing the officer to the position. If I remember the position correctly with respect to appointments to the staff of the House of Commons, the report of the clerk of the House is substituted for the report of the deputy minister, the recommendation of the Speaker is substituted for the recommendation of the minister and the order of this House, by its vote, is substituted for the order in council. Appointments to the House of Commons, I think, are made in that way under the Civil Service Act. I am not quite sure of it, but that is my recollection.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not absolutely certain, but I think it works out somewhat in that way. In all cases, of course, there must be a report from the Civil Service Commission. In some cases there must be a report made upon examination; in other cases there must be a report made upon inquiry. That is common both to appointments in any department of the government and to appointments to the staff of the House of Commons. Assuming that the provision of the Civil Service Act had been complied with in that respect, it is worked out in that way, and it would seem that the course provided by the law has been pursued in this instance. That leaves out entirely the question as to what should be the functions of the Debates Committee in that regard. I do not know whether the officer now proposed to be appointed is exclusively concerned with the Debates or not.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is for translation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He is concerned with the translation of the debates.

Mr. FISHER. Not even that; it has nothing to do with the debates.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. His duties are to translate reports, journals, everything of that kind which comes before this House. The debates are outside of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that the reference made by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) is not so much to this particular instance as to some other instance in which it would appear that the Debates Committee, according to his view, have been overruled or that a recommendation that they have brought to the attention of the House has been passed over. I am not offering any opinion upon it at the present time, because I do not know anything about it, but, in so far as this is concerned, if I remember the provisions of the Civil Service Act correctly, I believe they have been carried out.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) is quite correct. This is an appointment which has nothing to do with the debates. It is the appointment of a translator and according to the statement of the resolution which is here before us, the Civil Service Act has been complied with in every respect. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down explained the Act correctly. In so far as officers of the House are concerned, the House takes the place of the government, in recommendation and in action, the clerk of the House takes the place of the deputy minister and the Speaker takes the place of the minister. But the Speaker's action as minister has to be confirmed by the House just in the same way as the minister's action has to be confirmed by council. My hon friend the leader of the opposition explained it quite correctly. This resolution has nothing whatever to do with the Debates Committee. The Debates Committee does not deal with this officer, and has nothing to do with him at all.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear the language used by the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) clearly enough to understand him. I thought he was ignoring a report sent in by the Debates Committee last week recommending some appointments. It was because I misunderstood him that I brought up the question.

Mr. BRODEUR. With regard to the powers of the Debates Committee concerning appointments, its position is about the same as the position of the Board of Internal Economy. This board used to make appointments of officers to this House, the Debates Committee also presented reports suggesting appointments to the House, and the actions of each had to be confirmed by the House. Now, by the Civil Service Act, the powers which were formerly exercised by the Board of Internal Economy and the Debates Committee have been transferred to the Civil Service Commission and to the clerk, the Speaker and the House. The Board of Internal Economy has no more to do with appointments than the Debates Committee. That is my way of reading the law.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not abandon the Debates Committee?

Mr. BRODEUR. The Debates Committee has a great deal to do outside of that. It has to do with the supervision of debates generally. For instance, the important question might arise some day as to whether we should allow members to hand in their speeches without delivering them in the House and have them printed in 'Hansard.'

Mr. HUGHES. The Minister of Finance always settles that.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are other important questions that might come up as well and the Debates Committee would be the committee to deal with that. The Debates Committee was appointed in 1874 or 1875, for the purpose, not only of looking after appointments, but of making contracts for the publication of 'Hansard.' Later on it was decided to entrust the publication of 'Hansard' to the Printing Bureau, and so the powers of the committee decreased to that extent. Now, the situation of the Debates Committee is absolutely the same as that of the Board of Internal Economy as far as appointments are concerned. The powers that were vested formerly in that respect are being now exercised by the Civil Service Commission and the House.

Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Restigouche Riparian Association.—Mr. Geoffrion.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 177) to amend the Indian Act. He said: This Bill has two objects. First, under the existing law a railway or any public work authorized by this parliament can be authorized to pass through an Indian reserve by the Governor in Council. The object of the Bill is, that if any similar work is ordered under provincial statute the Governor in Council may by order in council permit it to pass through an Indian reserve. The second object of the Bill is to deal with a question which is becoming of considerable interest in view of the rapid development of the country, and especially so in British Columbia. There are Indian reserves in British Columbia which are now situated in the vicinity of growing towns such as the Songhee reserve in Victoria and the reserve in the vicinity of Vancouver. The Indians are on these reserves by virtue of an arrangement made with the Crown, and it is the boast of Britain that faith must be kept absolutely with the aborigines. Every one knows that when Indians are located in the vicinity of these growing places they are an impediment to their development, but they are there by virtue of a compact with the Crown and hitherto the government has not thought it advisable to dispossess them. We have been negotiating with the Indians on the Songhee Indian reserve for 15 years, and I am happy to say that an agreement has recently been made which is satisfactory to the Indians, to the people of the province, and to the citizens of Victoria. There are other reserves with regard to which it is not possible to come to a settlement, and it is suggested that where such a condition has arisen in the case of a reserve within ten miles of a city application can be made to the Exchequer court on behalf of the Indians to decide whether or not it would be advisable to dispossess the Indians from that reserve, and place them elsewhere, and if so on what terms that should be accomplished.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By whom is the application to be made on behalf of the Indians?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. By the superintendent general. The clause says, that in the case of such reserves the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the superintendent general may refer to a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report the question as to whether it is expedient, having regard to the interests of the public and of the Indians, that the Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it. The Bill provides, if the question is resolved by the court in the affirmative, the procedure that shall be taken for the preservation of the rights of the Indians.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Bill make provision for the manner in which the Indian reserve shall be disposed of. I presume the Fort William Indian reserve would come within the scope of the Bill. How are these Indian reserves to be disposed of?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have provided for that.

Mr. HUGHES. It is provided for in this Bill?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. BLAIN. I call attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the following advertisement which appears in the Elora 'Express' of February 8, last:

Pilkington Liberal Association.
Notice of meeting.

A meeting of the Liberal Association of the township of Pilkington will be held on Friday the 10th of February, 1911, at three o'clock p.m.

At the residence of the undersigned in Elora, for the purpose of naming census enumerators for the township of Pilkington.

THOMAS MARSHALL,
President.

Elora January 31, 1911.

I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether any recommendations for the appointment of enumerators in the province of Ontario have come in this way and whether all the enumerators for the province have yet been appointed?

Mr. FISHER. No enumerators have yet been appointed for Ontario or any other province.

Mr. BLAIN. None have been appointed?

Mr. FISHER. None. I know nothing about that recommendation, and I take my recommendations where I think I have the greatest need to.

Mr. BLAIN. If a similar request comes from the Conservative association of my own county will it be complied with?

Mr. FISHER. I will take the recommendation and act upon it according to my judgment.

PRIVILEGE—CUSTOMS DUTIES, 1906-1910.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I desire, Mr. Speaker, to avail myself, I think for the first time, of the rule respecting a question of privilege, not to ventilate any grievance, for I have none, but to call attention to a matter which perhaps I cannot at the present stage present in any other way. It relates to a conflict of statement between my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and myself in the short budget debate. I had stated in the budget speech that the liberal revenues which we were receiving came to us under a customs tariff that was on the whole lower than the tariff of the preceding government. With that statement as a text my hon. friend from North Toronto proceeded to say:

Now we have discussed that question from my standpoint in this House, and other hon. members have discussed it. I propose to discuss it to-day from the government standpoint. I have here a return which was prepared by the government. This return simply makes a calculation of the rate of duty actually paid upon actual importation in 1896 and in 1910, and puts them side by side. And what is the result? The result is that the rate of taxation paid in 1910 is much greater than the rate of taxation paid in 1896. Here is the table:

Then my hon. friend read a very lengthy list, occupying nearly two pages of 'Hansard,' setting forth the rates of duty in 1896 and the rates of duty in 1910, and purporting to show that while in a few cases the rates of duty are lower at present, yet in the great majority of cases the rates of duty in 1910 are substantially higher than the rates of duty in 1896; and having given the two columns in this way, my hon. friend concluded:

Now, that takes in the whole list of articles imported into this country which are subject to ad valorem duties, and a comparison of the list shows that with very few exceptions the real duty levied on the actual imports in 1896 was lower than the real duty levied on the actual imports in 1910. With respect to nine-tenths of all the articles that is true, with respect to the other one-tenth or about that there is either an equality, or the 1896 duty was a little bit higher. I think that is a convincing argument out of the return of the government itself prepared at the order of the House, which will set at rest as far as that is concerned the debate which has been between the two sides of the House for the last 15 years.

I was rather surprised, I am bound to say, at the conclusions which my hon. friend drew from his statement, and I was not able to follow him at the moment; but I have since had the return brought to my notice, and have caused some inquiry to be made into it, and I find, if I am correctly informed, that my hon. friend made a simple but very extraordinary mistake. He took the figures of 1896 and placed them under the heading of 1910, so that in every instance in which this statement purports to show an increase in 1910, the facts appear to be just the reverse. In every instance in which his statement purports to show an increase, it really shows a decrease. I merely wish to call the attention of my hon. friend to the matter, and I am sure that if he finds that he is in error, he will, himself, draw attention to the mistake.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, if I find that I am in error, I will acknowledge the corn, and do it very cheerfully, but I do not acknowledge that yet. I will immediately look into the figures and see.

While we are having some of these little differences adjusted, I might call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), to an error into which I think he fell the other night in reference to the treaty of 1888, that is, the treaty passed by this House, but not by the Senate of the United States. If I read 'Hansard' rightly, the hon. minister stated that that treaty provided for free fishing in our inland waters by American fishermen.

Mr. BRODEUR. I perhaps said 1888, but it was in 1871 that the right of fishing was given.

Mr. FOSTER. It was given in 1871, and I notice that my hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Jameson), called the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to that fact, saying that he must have meant the treaty 1871; but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries denied that he meant the treaty of 1871, and said that he meant the treaty of 1888.

CONDITION OF THE PARLIAMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. HUGHES. I presume that the hon. Minister of Public Works, since I drew his attention a day or two ago to the condition of the parliament grounds and of Wellington Street, in front of the buildings, has consulted his officers with a view to having something done. I understand that the government has charge of Wellington Street from the post office to Bank Street. It would be hard to find in the Dominion of Canada any farmyard in a more disreputable state, even in the spring of the year, than that street is in to-day; and the condition of the grounds in front of the building is simply disgraceful. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what he has done with regard to the matter?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that my hon. friend refers to the lawn in front of the building.

Mr. HUGHES. I mean the grounds right up to the doors of this building, where the horse-manure this morning was several inches thick.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is said that some people see double, and I am satisfied that my hon. friend has seen double the quantity. I walked up to-day with a gentleman of some discernment, and he remarked how quickly the avenue was drying up and how well it looked.

Mr. HUGHES. Was the minister coming from a luncheon and seeing double?

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to the lawn, perhaps my hon. friend is not a farmer, and does not know that the fertilizing of a lawn is absolutely necessary. The fertilizer is spread all over the lawn to-day, and if my hon. friend waits for a few days, he will see the green grass coming up, and will then be glad that the department has fertilized it in that way. With regard to Wellington Street, the employees of the department are having it cleaned up. But there are six inches of ice on the street, and to remove that would cost several hundred dollars; but in a few days the sun will melt it away. If my hon. friend will have a little patience, everything will be lovely in a few days.

Mr. HUGHES. We would not have to wait for a few days if the hon. minister had in his department officers who understood the proper method of fertilizing lawns. I am a farmer myself, though I did not grow up between two rows of corn like some gentlemen who claim to be farmers. This kind of fertilizing with manure is done in the remote parts of the country, but not in towns.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is where I did my farming—in the country.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the trouble with the minister.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that Wellington Street might be put into a much better condition at the crossings. It is often almost impossible for people leaving the parliament grounds to cross the street without going through manure and debris which, to say the least, is very unsightly and uncleanly. If the crossings were put into proper shape, and that could be done without hauling away the ice, people could cross the street with some comfort. If the old saying be true that 'cleanliness is next to godliness,' the Minister of Public Works does not seem to be very anxious to get towards heaven, judging by the state of the crossings on Wellington Street. The crossings at Metcalfe Street, O'Connor Street and Elgin Street could be made passable at a very small cost.

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS IN GREAT LAKES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax):

1. Referring to the armament of the United States warships or training ships on the Great Lakes, and to the answer of the Prime Minister given in the House of Commons on the 30th day of March, 1908, in which he stated the armament of the 'Nashville' to be 8 4-inch guns, 4 6-pounder quick-firers and 4 machine guns, what is the armament of the following United States warships or training ships, respectively: The 'Essex,' the 'Don Juan de Austria,' the 'Wolverine,' the 'Dorothea,' the 'Wasp' and the 'Sandoval'?

2. Are these ships still stationed on the Great Lakes?

SIR WILFRID LAURIER:

1. According to the latest information in the possession of the government the armaments of these vessels were as follows:

'Wasp'—4 6-pounders, 2 6-mm. Colts' rapid fire rifles.

2. With the exception of the 'Wasp', which has never entered the Great Lakes, being too large to pass through the canals, all these vessels are still stationed on the Great Lakes.

RECIPROCITY CONFERENCES.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. What was the length of the session of the United States and Canadian representatives held in Ottawa to discuss reciprocity?

2. What was the length of the sessions held in Washington?

3. How many plenipotentiaries and assistants represented the United States at Ottawa during the discussion?

4. How many plenipotentiaries and assistants represented Canada at Washington during the conference?

5. What was the expense at Ottawa and at Washington?

6. What portion did Canada pay?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. The United States representatives were in Ottawa a week.

2. The Canadian representatives were in Washington fifteen days.

3. The negotiations at Ottawa were conducted on the part of the United States by two representatives of the State Department at Washington and the United States Consul General at Ottawa, and on the part of Canada by two ministers of the government.

4. At the Washington conference the United States was represented by the Secretary of State and two officers of his department. Canada was represented by two ministers of the government. After some progress had been made the Canadian ministers called in the assistance of two officers of their departments and thereupon the United States representatives called in the services of two officers of their departments.

5 and 6. As the accounts have not been closed the exact amount of the expense cannot now be stated, but it will be quite small.

RECIPROCITY STATISTICS.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario):

1. Was the purpose of entering into negotiations for reciprocity with the United States to secure better prices for Canadian produce?

2. Were the representatives of Canada before entering upon the negotiations supplied with comprehensive data and statistics collected by experts and officials covering a considerable period and showing a comparative list of prices of all products in the principal markets of Canada and the United States?

3. If so, will data and statistics be available to the members of the House by laying them on the table of the House?

4. Generally speaking, how do the prices of farm produce in the United States compare with prices in Canada?

5. Upon what information is the answer to the preceding question based?

Mr. FIELDING:

1. The purpose of entering into negotiations for reciprocity with the United States was to obtain that expansion of market for Canadian products which has been sought by all governments in Canada since the formation of the Dominion.

2 to 5. These questions have been fully discussed in the House since the hon. member placed his question on the notice paper and the views of the government thereon have been stated.

CHEMIN GOUIN POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. AMES:

Who is the postmaster at Chemin Gouin, P.Q., what salary does he draw, and when was he appointed?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A. C. Miquelon is postmaster at Chemin Gouin, Quebec. He was appointed on October 16, 1908. The revenue of the office entitles him to payment at the rate of $99 per annum, this including night and rent allowance.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. C. J. THORNTON (Durham). Mr. Chairman, as the farmer representative of an agricultural constituency which is one of the best in Ontario and one of the best in the Dominion, it becomes me to have something to say on this question of reciprocity, because of the effect that reciprocity will have on the farming industry of this country. I desire to be brief, because there are so many to speak and because so much time has already been consumed in the discussion of this question.

I consider this the greatest question that has been before this House, perhaps, since 1878. A change is contemplated in our tariff affecting between 250 and 300 articles on the list. If this goes into effect, it will be revolutionary in its operation. Now, let me say at the start, I believe that, in a few localities and from a local standpoint, benefits will arise from the adoption of this proposed resolution. But at the same time, it is not to be forgotten that this is legislation for a country which is at least 4,000 miles from east to west, and 2,000 miles or so from north to south; and I think that we, as members of this House, ought to look at the question from the broad national standpoint, considering what is best for the country and not what is best for any particular locality.

In this discussion a great deal has been said about the reciprocity treaty which was in force from 1854 until January, 1866, and of the prosperity that Canada—the older provinces—enjoyed while that reciprocity was in force. A very unfair conclusion is reached sometimes in considering the operation of that treaty. I can remember distinctly as a boy—and I took an intense interest even as a boy in public questions—how reciprocity at that time worked, and I remember some of the reasons why it worked as it did. It is well known that the Crimean war was on during the early years of that treaty, and that, because of that war, wheat reached a price that, perhaps, it never reached before or since, in the history of this country. I remember distinctly that some farmers got as high as $2.50 a bushel for wheat. But very shortly after that war closed wheat went down to 70 cents a bushel—in some cases, indeed, below that, but that was the general price during the years 1857-8. While the war was on and prices of wheat were high, there was an abundance of money in the country. Times were good; there can be no question on that point. But this was followed, from 1857 to 1860 by the hardest times, I think, that Canada has ever experienced—the hardest times for Canada within my recollection, at least. Immediately following that, from 1861 to 1865, came the war of the American rebellion. The Americans were fighting instead of raising the produce to feed their people, and the result was that there was an unlimited demand for Canadian products. The result was beneficial from a commercial standpoint to the Canadians. That treaty was abrogated in January 18, 1866. We are apt to look back at that period and say that the commercial prosperity that Canada experienced during these years was due to the treaty, when practically it was not. Every man who is familiar with the history of Canada at that time knows this.

I shall perhaps discuss this question from the standpoint of the farmer, but while I do so I do not wish to be understood as desiring any favouritism in legislation for a class. It is most important that we in this country should recognize that our interests, no matter what our occupation or profession, are all identical, that we are interdependent, one on the other, and that when the country prospers, or when any one class prospers the good effects must be felt among other classes. I recognize that agriculture is the basic industry in Canada, and that this proposition will affect agriculture directly perhaps more than it will any other branch of industry; but indirectly it may affect, and I believe will affect other classes, especially the traders, the manufacturers, and the transportation companies. Thus, we should look at this question from the broad standpoint of what is best for the country, and for the great majority of the people, and not in any sense from a class standpoint. During the past 30 years, the farmers suffered on occasions from adverse times. Speaking particularly of the country between Toronto and Kingston, and to some extent of Western Ontario, when the McKinley tariff went into effect in the United States, in 1890, increasing the duty on barley, from 10 cents to 30 cents per bushel, it seemed a serious blow to our agriculture. Barley was the staple product of the farmers of a great portion of Ontario at that time, and money had been made out of it by the farmers beyond question. In fact they had raised barley so much that the land began to get barley sick, and even now it would not be possible to raise such crops of barley as were produced prior to 1890. When the American duty was raised the farmers thought it was a calamity, but experience has shown them, I think, that perhaps it was a blessing in disguise. The farmers have so regarded it since 1890. Because of the pinch they felt when that tariff was put on they were compelled to devote their attention to other systems of farming, to go into a class of farming different from anything they had practised before. In Ontario the farmers turned their attention to the raising of cattle, hogs, poultry, butter, cheese and eggs. When this change in methods took place they had not had the experience necessary to enable them to make the most complete success of the new system of farming, especially in the raising of hogs. I am safe in saying it took the farmers of Ontario at least 10 years to learn how to breed and feed hogs properly so as to make money. The acquiring of that knowledge was a slow process. There is just as much science in the breeding and feeding of the proper kind of hogs as there is in taking care of the product and properly curing it after it has been raised. I know that the majority of people are apt to lose sight of this fact, and to think that any fool can raise hogs, but it is a great mistake for any person to think that; it takes years to learn how to breed and feed hogs properly, to produce the right kind of hog to make the right kind of bacon to suit the demand both in Canada, and in the British market. It also took the packers years to learn how to handle and treat the hogs so as to make the industry profitable. There has been, in the past, complaint of unfair treatment of the farmers by the packers. I shall not say how much truth there is in that accusation, although I believe there has been reason for complaint in some instances on the part of farmers because of treatment they have had at the hands of packers. If the government had devoted their attention to remedying difficulties where they may have crept up as between occupations they would have done something which would have resulted in good to this country. If there were differences between the packers and the farmers, I think that proper legislation would easily have corrected whatever trouble there was. But wherever the business of the hog raiser and the packer was threatened by unfair competition, you found the packer and the farmer pulling together. That was the case in point in a question that came before this House. A deputation of farmers and packers waited upon the government and urged them to remedy evils that existed in connection with the marketing of foreign pork in Canada. You will find every time that the farmers' and packers interests are bound up together. Whenever their interests are threatened by unfair means in connection with outside competition, you will find them pulling together, and there will be no difference in that respect. If ever there was a time when the farmers and packers ought to combine to protect their interests, this is the time. I will return to this question of the hog industry again.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had considerable to say in addressing the House on this question as to why the government introduced this question in connection with reciprocity. He tried to convince this House that the government had a mandate from the people to introduce reciprocity legislation. I am glad the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is in his place, and I would like if the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) had been here, because I want to quote something that has been said by both these hon. gentlemen, which I believe will show what the mandate was that the government had. I said a few minutes ago that there never had been a time in the history of this country when such great changes were contemplated in connection with the revision of the tariff. I am sorry that the right hon. gentleman has gone out because there are things in connection with this question that I want to bring to his attention; indeed, I believe it is the duty of the right hon. Prime Minister, and of the Minister of Finance to stay here every minute while this question is being discussed.

Mr. BLAIN. Try the Minister of Customs.

Mr. THORNTON. Well, the Minister of Customs has his hands full of biscuits. But, here are the deliverances of the right hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance on the question of the tariff, which I think are pertinent to this question. If ever it was plain what the mandate of the government was in connection with the revision of the tariff it is plain on this question. I find in 'Hansard,' volume L, May 2, 1899, page 2476, that the hon. Minister of Finance said:

> In the first place, a certain reasonable degree of tariff stability is always important if we are to have that confidence in business without which we cannot hope to have prosperous times. Therefore, even though in all respects the tariff may not be as we would like it, it is better to bear some imperfections than to enter upon revisions which might create disturbance in the business of the country.

If ever there was a declaration which was direct on the question of what should be the policy of the government in connection with the revision of the tariff this is a distinct, emphatic declaration, and it is that there must be stability of the tariff. He says further on:

> Nevertheless it is true that the demand for reciprocal trade relations with our neighbours to the south is by no means so strong as it was a few years ago.

Remember this was said by the Finance Minister in 1899.

> Whatever our American friends may have intended by their trade policy, there is one thing that they certainly have done; they have made Canadians more independent and self-reliant and have caused them to look more steadily than before to their home market and to their markets over the sea, where there is an open door. Especially have our producers given attention to the British market during the past two years, when our trade relations with the mother country have been so developed and increased by the preferential tariff. Therefore, the market of our friends to the south of us is much less important to us than it was a few years ago, and we are better able to do without reciprocity than we have been at any previous time in the history of Canada.

This was said by the Minister of Finance twelve years ago. If that was the case twelve years ago, how much more so is it the case to-day? In 1902, three years afterwards, this was the declaration of the Minister of Finance, and it will be found in 'Hansard,' volume 1, page 1309, March 17, 1902:

> When the moment for tariff revision arrives, the public of Canada may rest assured that the government will undertake the work in the spirit of moderation and caution that has prevailed in their past actions in tariff affairs, avoiding the extremes which almost always find advocates, and having regard for what is best; not for particular industries or particular sections of the country, but for the interests of the people of the whole of the Dominion.

There is a declaration that caution was the watchword of the government in connection with tariff revision,—avoiding the extremes which almost always find advocates, he said. The right hon. First Minister, on April 15, 1902, on the floor of this House, made the following declaration:

> What the Canadian people are looking for at the present time is the improvement of the trade relations which exist between the mother country and the colonies.

There runs all through these declarations the idea of tariff stability, that no unusual changes should take place in the tariff without looking carefully into the question to see how these changes would affect the country. Then, the principle is also laid down that the first duty of the government of this country was to cultivate trade with Great Britain for all it was worth. We find again, in 1905, on the floor of this House, that the Minister of Finance, in his Budget speech, said, as reported in 'Hansard,' page 8906:

Now, I said in the earlier part of my remarks that it would not be anticipated that there would be any extensive tariff changes this session for the reason that it was the policy of the government to have an inquiry into the tariff before extensive changes were made.

Here was the avowed policy of the government on the question of the tariff changes laid down by the Minister of Finance and that policy, definitely stated, was that there would be an exhaustive inquiry into the tariff before extensive changes were made. Here is the most drastic change that was ever contemplated perhaps in the tariff since 1878, made without any warning, without any investigation, without any inquiry whatever after the declaration that no change should take place without inquiry being made. He said further:

That inquiry will be made by what is called a tariff commission, which is a committee practically of members of the cabinet. The advantages of a public inquiry will be quite apparent.

I would like the House to pay attention to what the minister further said on that occasion:

There is a decided advantage therefore in having a public inquiry so that the people who are interested in the tariff rates on one side or the other may know what representations are being made, and if they see fit to do so may come forward and present their views.

Now, I ask, previous to this being sprung on the House and the country, what chance was there for any industry or class to present their views to the government or to parliament? No chance whatever was afforded, and without a moment's warning we have this radical change sprung upon the people of Canada, who are deprived of the opportunity which was promised to them on the faith of the government of Canada. In the same speech the Minister of Finance said:

It will be the policy of the government to have that inquiry made throughout the Dominion with the utmost care . . . care will be taken to afford opportunity to every class who wish to present their views to come and state in what respect they think either that the tariff is right and should be maintained or that it is defective and what changes they believe should be made.

You will notice that he repeats it was to be the 'policy' of the government and that inquiry was to be made with the greatest care. In the year 1909, speaking in this House, the minister said:

But we remember that it is only two years since our tariff was revised and we think that the idea of tariff stability is worth something to the business of the country. We thought the business men of the country other than the particular ones who would like particular changes will readily concur in the view that tariff changes should not be made very frequently.

Here again we have a declaration as to the necessity for tariff stability. Again, in 1906 (page 286, 'Hansard,' 1906) the Finance Minister, after saying that under the tariff up to this time, we had developed a marvellous condition of prosperity, stated:

Our desire has been to encourage a large degree of tariff stability, not a slavish adherence to every item in the tariff.

But we have been desirous that the impression should go abroad that the government were not willing to make changes hastily. That they were rather slow to do anything in that line, and only when a case became of extreme urgency would we undertake to make changes.

Here is a declaration of the Finance Minister that only in a case of extreme urgency would the government undertake to make any change in the tariff. What was the extreme urgency that caused the government at this particular time to bring down this radical change in the tariff without notice to the people, and who was urging them? Had there been any demand on the part of the people of Canada generally that such drastic legislation should be enacted at this particular juncture? If there had been, I failed to see it. The Minister of Finance continued:

We have therefore from time to time resisted many applications for changes, not because in some instances there may not have been something in the argument, but because it was not wise to make changes too often, and if in one or two cases there was some reason perhaps to justify a change I do not think anybody has suffered any serious loss by the delay.'

Now that we are approaching the question of a general Tariff revision we again wish to keep in mind this idea of tariff stability. We do not desire to make radical changes.

We feel that the general condition of Canada to-day is such that no radical changes in the tariff are called for.

Here we have declarations from time to time that tariff stability is the policy of the government, and not only did the Minister of Finance make this emphatic declaration but the Prime Minister was also emphatic in his pronouncement upon what should be the policy of the government. On November 21, 1910, early in the present session the right hon. gentleman said:

But the people of the west are now asking for a reduction of duty on certain articles which they consume. That is a proper subject for investigation, and we intend to investigate it.

I stated to the people of the northwest during my recent trip, that it would be our duty to consider their requests and to deal with them in the spirit in which we have always dealt with requests from the people. And I repeat that now.

In this speech the right hon. gentleman told us that the request which came from the west was in respect to a reduction in the duty on articles that the people of the west consumed, but he said nothing whatever with regard to the matters which this reciprocal arrangement deals with. He continued:

I stated that we would have a commission of investigation before we undertook a revision of the tariff . . .The statement made by myself and quoted by the hon. gentleman that we would have an investigation by commission before we altered the tariff called forth a special cheer from hon. members opposite. Does any member on the other side take issue with the promise I made? Would any of them advocate rushing into a revision of the tariff without previous investigation? . . . This work of investigation will be carried out at the proper time.

That is what the right hon. gentleman said this session. Some people have been, I was going to say foolish enough to state, that this proposal submitted to us does not amount to a tariff change, but if it is not a tariff change I would like to know what it is. I want to quote another authority on the importance of tariff stability, and it is an authority that gentlemen opposite will not dispute; I refer to the Hon. Edward Blake, who, in 1891, speaking on the question of reciprocal negotiations with the United States, said:

Uncertainty would alarm capital and paralyse enterprise and therefore I repeat that permanence is essential to success.

Speaking of our retaining control over changes in the tariff and discussing reciprocity, Mr. Blake further said:

I see no plan for combining the two elements of permanency of the treaty and variability of the tariff which does not involve the practical control of the latter (the tariff) by the United States.

The reorganization to which our neighbours look is of course the unification of the continent.

That speech refers to the control of our tariff by the United States, and that is one of the difficulties in which we are placed to-day. The people of Canada have been asking how it came about that there was a proposition to make such drastic changes in the tariff as this agreement contemplates and they have come to the conclusion generally that the dictator is at Washington, who in future will dictate what the tariff of Canada shall be. And, if for a moment we admit that the President of the United States shall dictate to Canada what our fiscal policy shall be, how long will it be before he will dictate what our political policy shall be?

Mr. THORNTON.

Without a question, it is the entering of the thin end of the wedge, as President Taft has said: There is the danger that faces us. I know that there are many people who say there is no danger in that connection. Mr. Blake recognized the danger in his time, and warned the country of it. It is important to recall the utterances of the right hon. the First Minister and the hon. the Finance Minister in regard to the policy which they had adopted, and which they declared time and again was the policy of this government; and if they had a mandate at all from the people, they had a mandate in favour of the policy of thorough investigation before changing the tariff, because that was the policy that was endorsed by the people. In 1899 the right hon. the First Minister said:

If we know the hearts and minds of our people, I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling in Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with the hon. gentleman himself, would have given many things to have the American market; there was a time not long ago when the market of the great cities of the union was the only market we had for any of our products. But thank Heaven, these days are past and over now. We are not dependent on the American market as we were at one time.

The right hon. the First Minister said further:

We have removed from our limbs the shackles which were impediments to the great trade within the broad domains of our empire and the policy which we have thus introduced we shall pursue with care and prudence and without undue haste.

The hon. the Finance Minister, on the question of the British preference in 1906 said this:

We adhere to the principle of the British preference, because notwithstanding some criticisms which have been made, we believe it has been a good thing for Canada.

We are satisfied that it has given Canada prominence in the eyes of the empire and all over the world; and we believe that it has brought us commerical advantages. Advantages derived from sentiment—but advantages which are substantial. It has also had a most desirable effect in increasing the interest in Great Britain in Canadian products.

The Finance Minister said further:

We desire to turn trade to Great Britain wherever we can properly do so, because Great Britain is our best customer, and if by any arrangement that we can properly make, we can turn trade from people who will not buy from us to people who do buy from us, then we think we ought to do so.

There was no question about the stand taken by both the right hon. the First Minister and the hon. the Finance Minister on the question of what Canada ought to do in regard to the tariff and trade of the country. I might also quote a declaration which was made by the right hon. the First Minister in a speech delivered at the Canadian Club banquet to Sir James Bryce, at Ottawa, on April 1, 1907. He said:

We are turning our hopes towards the old mother land. We have introduced the doctrine and policy of preference to Great Britain and towards all the British Empire, and this is the policy by which we stand at the present time. Not for my part that I do not value American trade; not for my part that I do not value all that we would have to gain if our relations were on a better footing. But this is a matter on which we shall have no more pilgrimages to Washington. This is the simple message I have to convey to your guests at the present moment.

Here was the avowed policy of this government on the question of the tariff and on the question of British trade; and I notice, by the way, that neither the First Minister nor the Finance Minister nor the Minister of Agriculture nor the Minister of Customs is at present in his place in the House.

Before proceeding to touch on the economic side of this question, I want to say a word or two as to why this policy was pressed by the United States on Canada. A great deal has been said as to the motives that actuate leading politicians in the United States. Some quotations have been made from speeches made by the Speaker of the new House of Representatives of the United States, Mr. Champ Clarke, and I know that an effort has been made in this country to discount anything he may have said in regard to this reciprocity proposition, because it is said that he was speaking jocularly or in a spirit of braggadocio. But let us see what he did say. He said:

I look forward to the time when the American flag will fly over every square foot of British North America up to the north pole. The people of Canada are of our blood and our language. If the treaty of 1854 never had been abrogated, our countries would be much further advanced than now towards this end.

Mr. Martin of South Dakota—Will the gentleman favour the abrogation of our tariff law entirely so far as Canada is concerned, and make free trade on all products?

Mr. Clarke—By taking Canada in, to become a part of the United States—Yes.

Mr. Norris of Nebraska—As I understand it, the gentleman favours the Bill for at least one reason, that it will have a tendency in the end to bring Canada into the union?

Mr. Clarke—Yes, I have no doubt about that.

Now, with regard to Mr. Champ Clarke's standing and his ability as a statesman, I want to quote what the 'North American Review' says of him editorially, in the month of January of this year:

He is the one commanding figure, resolute, though amiable; careful, yet courageous, broad, thoughtful and above all, in his place at this time, experienced.

The editor of the 'North American Review' knows Mr. Champ Clarke personally, and this is the high estimate he places on his ability as a statesman, which is not what we have been told of him here in Canada. Mr. Champ Clarke knew well what he was saying when he said that he hoped the time was not far distant when the American flag would float over the whole of the North American continent. There is no mistaking the idea American statesmen had in making this proposition to the Canadian government. Not only was it the opinion of Mr. Clarke that it would lead to the annexation of Canada to the United States, but it was also the opinion of W. R. Hearst, the proprietor of the New York 'American,' who a few months ago said: 'Let us have commercial union first and political union afterwards.' Mr. Henry M. Whitney, a Boston financier, made practically the same statement, when he said:

What might ultimately be the political effect of the establishment of friendly relations between Canada and the United States is a problem that had best be left to work itself out in years to come. It is quite possible, I think indeed quite likely, considering the number of questions of domestic and foreign policy which might arise under such a condition, that the two nations would in the end become practically one.

There can be no mistaking the intention of the Americans in connection with this proposition. I have here a declaration made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) which seems to me very pertinent at present. I know it has frequently been said that the hon. minister has political sympathies with the United States. I know the charge has frequently been made against him that he is not just as true to Canada as he ought to be. For my part, however, I am not going to make any charge against him in that connection, but shall merely quote what he said in this House during this discussion. I do not know whether we can read anything between the lines or not, but here is a significant declaration made by him on February 22:

If the United States, which has too often treated us with indifference and almost contempt——

Here, therefore, is an admission on the part of the Finance Minister himself that the treatment which Canada has received from the United States was anything but what it ought to have been. He went on to say:

—if the United States, which has too often treated us with indifference and contempt has come to a different view, if the people of the United States, if their public men feel that Canada is worth cultivating, whether in the form of better trade relations or any other form, why should we complain?

If the United States have come to the conclusion that Canada is worth cultivating and that the products of our forests and fields and mines are to be poured into the United States to be manufactured there—and that is the idea which is at the bottom of this movement, as the Finance Minister admits—what objection, he asks, ought we to make. Well, as a member of this House, and a citizen of this country, I object in the most emphatic way I can to our exporting our raw material from this country to be manufactured in the United States for the benefit of the people of the United States. I think we ought to enter our solemn protest against any such policy. Can there be any mistake as to the intention of the United States wanting the raw produce of Canada? What, for instance, do they want our wheat for? Let me read what the Northwestern 'Miller' said on February 8, last, on this point:

When it is considered that owing to the high quality and superior strength of the wheat grown in the newly opened Canadian northwest, one bushel mixed with three bushels of the less virile wheat grown in the United States, and ground into flour, is sufficient to raise the whole to high value, it is apparent that the free importations of this wheat would not only fail to depress the price of American wheat, but would actually give it added value because it would enable the American miller to use the Canadian product as a leaven to raise the value of his mixture; thus every bushel of Canadian wheat exported as flour by the American miller would carry with it a much greater amount of wheat grown in the United States.

The miller who is able to grind this enormous crop will be the miller of the future, and where he is there will be the great mills of the world.

With free Canadian wheat secured, the prospect is a grand one. With this enormous and steadily increasing crop free to pursue its natural geographical and commercial channel flowing into the mills and elevators of the States, a splendid tide of activity and prosperity would follow in its wake.

Assured of their future supply of raw material, the mills of America would go forward on their developing course continuing the march of progress which has brought them to the front. New mills would be built and capacities enlarged. New markets abroad would be sought and conquered.

The returns from this renewal and extended activity would be felt in increased commercial prosperity. New railways would be extended into the wheat-growing territory; American railways carrying the flour from the mills would secure additional freights; American banks would obtain increased deposits, and greatly enlarged exchange accounts; American mill operators would be in demand, and pay-rolls would be increased; mill machinery, bags, barrels and other mill supplies would be required in larger quantities; more money would be in circulation and the benefit would be felt in every artery of industrial life by milling.

There would be an increase in grain firms, in elevators and in every branch of the grain handling and flour making interests.

This would be felt in the added value of real estate and in the solid and substantial development of every undertaking and enterprise that makes a community prosperous.

Here is a declaration by the American millers that the profit on our Canadian wheat shipped to the United States and ground there, would amount to millions of dollars a year, which would go to the American millers. I know that the Americans have the power to take off the duty without any proposition of the kind coming from Canada and get Canadian wheat free of duty, but what would Canada then do? Canada would lose exactly what the Americans claim they would gain. The Americans claim that they would gain great profits in the transportation of immense quantities of Canadian wheat. Canada would lose to the same extent. We have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in our lines of transportation with the avowed purpose of transporting the products of the west to the east, and goods, stock and products to the west. Nobody on either side will dispute that such was the policy of both parties. That policy was to keep building and keep up lines of transportation for the transporting of the products of our own country west to east and east to west. But by this new departure we would lose in transportation; we would lose in manufacturing; we would lose in the wages paid to expert labour, in the wages paid working men, in the supply of machinery, bags and barrels, and other things required in that business. But our greatest loss would be in the by-products. In Ontario and Quebec especially the development of business has led to an almost unlimited demand for farm products in the shape of butter, cheese, eggs, cream, pork, lard and other articles of that description. These by-products, bran and shorts, which we get from the milling of wheat, are needed in these eastern provinces to feed our stock and enable us to provide our industrial population with food. It will be a serious loss to Canada if that great flow of wheat is changed—if the spout is made at Minneapolis instead of at Port Arthur and Fort William.

Now, as I have already said, I am a farmer. I was born on the farm on which I live, and on which I have passed nearly all my life. I know what the farmer has to contend with. I know what the adversity of the past has brought him, and I know the splendid prospect ahead of him if the present commercial policy of Canada is followed out to its legitimate end. There has been an increase of prosperity for years. There has been no great demand for any change in the commercial policy of this country. I do not care to deal at length with the question of the demand of the west; but I have travelled in the west and know something of the conditions there. I think, that in many respects, the people of the west are making a serious mistake. I travelled over hundreds of miles through the west, not on trains, but driving. And the gentleman who drove me more than any other was a warm supporter of this government. He was in favour of what the farmers' delegation from the Northwest asked of this government. I put this question to him: Who is the most prosperous man in the west? And his answer was: Outside the places where the drought or hail may have struck the country, the farmer is the most prosperous man in the west. In the course of a half day's driving he could point out to me the homes of a dozen men who were worth from $25,000 to $100,000 apiece. You can drive for the whole day in my section and you could not strike more than two or three worth $25,000. The farmers of the west, man for man, are wealthier than the farmers of Ontario. And they have made their wealth in the west, according to their own showing, in a very few years. They may have something serious to complain of; I think they have in connection with the mixing of their grain in the elevators. I cite these things to show that, perhaps, some of their grievances may be imaginary. But, in connection with the state of business with the farmers of Ontario, it is pertinent for us to inquire closely into prices at this time. I am sorry the government did not see fit to do as the American government did, institute a most searching inquiry into the subject of prices and supply and demand. The government could have given us, I think, a great deal of information which they have not given us. The main products of the farmers of Ontario—and I presume this will apply to Quebec to some extent—are hogs, horses, butter, cheese and cattle, and, in some localities, hay. In my own section of country, as I stated early in my remarks, the farmers, during the years of the McKinley Bill, were compelled to change their lines of agricultural production. They devoted their attention to the raising of horses and hogs more than to any other line of farming, and they are making money out of this line to-day. I think I am safe in saying that more money has come to the Ontario farmer inside in the last fifteen years from one staple product, hogs, than from any other. According to the statistics the farmers of Canada to-day are producing, besides enough for their own use, about $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 worth of hog products. As I said before, it took the farmers years to find out what was the best kind of hog for the production of bacon, and how to breed and feed that kind of hog. It might look easy, perhaps, to those who are not in the business, but it is very difficult indeed. The breeding of hogs with a view to the production of a certain kind of bacon has resulted, within the last few years, in changing very markedly the shape of the hog. This has been accomplished by very careful breeding for years and years. The result is that Canada to-day produces, perhaps, the best bacon hog in the world. Not only that, but the farmers have succeeded in breeding and feeding the hog so that, I am safe in saying, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand hogs are good. Time was in the history of hog breeding and feeding in Canada—and only fifteen or twenty years ago—when it was usual for the farmer to have what are called 'crippled' pigs, because of his want of knowledge in properly breeding and feeding; now it is a rare thing for a farmer to have a 'crippled' pig or to find any of these going on the market at all. Not only has it been necessary for the farmers to exercise great care in breeding and feeding, but it has been necessary for the packer to exercise great care in handling the product from the time it came into his hands until it was shipped to the market. And not only the farmer and the packer, but the government also has had to exercise great care, for it has been their duty to protect this industry. I find that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) claims to have been very busy in protecting the hog industry. He said on the floor of this House, as recorded in 'Hansard' of 1907-8, page 221:

Now, the hog industry is one in which I have taken a great deal of interest. I believe it is one of the most satisfactory branches of agriculture in Canada. I have always advised farmers to go into that industry, because I was satisfied they could make money in it. I protected the interests of the Canadian hog-raiser and feeder, and saw that he had a chance to raise animals which were to be made into Canadian bacon and that alone.

Mark these words, Mr. Chairman, because they are pertinent in connection with the discussion of the bacon industry in Canada. He said that he was careful to see that the farmers had a chance to raise animals which were to be made into Canadian bacon and that alone, and that nobody else should be allowed to raise animals that were afterwards going to be converted into a product that was to be sold as Canadian bacon. He was jealous of the reputation of Canadian bacon.

Mr. BLAIN. A delegation waited upon the minister asking him to increase the protection on hogs.

Mr. THORNTON. I shall refer to that in a moment. The Minister of Agriculture wanted us to believe that he was looking with great care after the bacon industry in this country. Now the proposition, and he boasts of it, is that Canadian hogs shall go into the United States. Then what becomes of the reputation of Canadian bacon? If, as statistics show, there are sixteen American hogs to one Canadian, and the Canadian hog goes into the United States market, as he boasts it will, what will become of Canadian bacon and its reputation? An hon. member suggests that there will be nothing but the squeal left. Sir, there will not be any squeal.

The minister's statement that he was jealous of the Canadian bacon trade, and that he was gong to be careful that Canadian farmers should be protected in connection with the raising and marketing of the bacon hog, arose out of a discussion on the floor of this House. A deputation waited on the government to ask them for protection. Protection against what? Protection against cheap American pork. You will find at page 5160 of the 'Hansard' of 1908, under date March 17, the reply of the Minister of Finance to the deputation. He said:

> The production of pork, particularly of bacon and hams, has become in Canada a very large and important trade, and we should be very careful to see that everything possible is done to encourage it. I am hopeful that the result of the investigation by the Minister of Customs and of the application of the law, if necessary, in a stricter form, will give these gentlemen the relief that they desire.
> Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Does the minister mean by that that the Chicago article is now flooding the Canadian market?
> Mr. FIELDING. The complaint made is that a considerable quantity is coming in and sold at prices that they cannot fairly compete with; they suggested that there was something illegitimate in the prices.
> Mr. BRODER. Was the deputations composed of people outside the trade?
> Mr. FIELDING. They were chiefly representing the farming interests, I believe, some of the gentlemen were more or less connected with the packing trade, too.

Here was a case in which the packers and the farmers combined to protect their interests when the trade was threatened. Then an hon. gentleman asked:

> Was the deputation composed of people outside the trade?
> Mr. FIELDING. They were chiefly representing the farming interest, I believe, and I think some of the gentlemen were more or less connected with the packing trade, too . . .
> I understand that the deputation was chiefly representing the farming interest. Although there were one or two gentlemen having some interest in the packing trade farmers' interest was the one most strongly represented to us.

Mr. BLAIN.

It is claimed by the supporters of this proposition that the farmer will find a market in the United States for his hogs. Either the Canadian hog will go to the United States or it will not. If the Canadian hog goes to the United States (and if there is a better price there it will go), then what becomes of the identity of Canadian bacon. What becomes of the Canadian packing house? If the Canadian hog goes to the United States its identity will be lost in the greater quantity of bacon made in the United States, the identity of Canadian bacon will be nowhere. Not only that, but if the Canadian hog goes to the United States the Canadian packing house will have to close. If the Canadian packer has to close up his business, what will be the result? All competition in that line is keen in our market in the old country from Denmark, the Argentine and Australia. It is said that if this pact goes into force and it does not work well it can be changed at any time. Assuming that it can be changed, and that it is changed, then if the market for the Canadian hog is in the United States, and the Canadian packing houses have been closed, the Canadian packer will have lost his market in the old country because he cannot supply it. Do you think the Canadian packer, if he reopens his packing house in the event of this bargain being rescinded after being put into operation, could ever recover his trade? Let me tell you of a case that came under my own observation. A Canadian packer had for some years filled a contract for a weekly shipment of forty boxes of the best Canadian bacon. During the scarcity of hogs some years ago he was not able to supply that bacon for two or three weeks. When he was ready to supply it again he asked his customers in England to give him the order again, but they said they could not, that they had given the order to some one in Denmark, and he has never recovered that order since. Where competition is keen, it is very hard to recover trade once lost.

I do not know of anything that is more delicate, that should be guarded more carefully than the production of hogs by the farmer and the making of the best class of bacon by the packer. Once that trade is disturbed, as this promises to disturb it, I think it will be a disastrous thing for the Canadian bacon trade.

I wish to quote a few figures in regard to prices in this trade, but I shall do so briefly as I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, and as I think there has been a tendency during this debate to quote figures which should not have been quoted.

There is an impression among the people that the American farmer gets a better price for hogs than the Canadian farmer.

There is something a little peculiar about it and it is that, with regard to some lines of hog products, the United States duty on imports into that country is less than the Canadian duty on certain lines coming into Canada. I presume it is not generally known that, as a matter of fact, lard is one of the principal products of the bacon trade, and the duty on lard coming into Canada is half a cent a pound higher than the duty on lard going from Canada into the United States. You would think, if the duty affected the price, and if there was a trade flowing in either direction, the Canadian trade would flow towards the United States. But, strange to say, while the Canadian duty is higher on lard than the United States duty, the amount of lard going from Canada into the United States is almost nothing compared with that coming from the United States into Canada. Let me quote these figures which were given in an answer to a question asked in the House during this session. Canada imported from the United States for the year ended March 31, 1910, of lard alone, $1,347,887 worth. That is an immense sum just for one of the products of the hog industry. The duty on that was two cents a pound. This is the most absolute proof that the American farmer cannot and does not get as much for his hogs as the Canadian farmer does. On the other hand, what was the amount of lard exported to the United States against a duty of only 1½ cents per pound, or half a cent lower than the duty on lard coming into Canada? It was only $2,555 worth as against $1,347,887 worth imported by Canada from the United States. These figures alone ought to open the eyes of the Minister of Agriculture who ought to know something about hogs. On the question of bacon, hams, shoulders and sides, Canada imported from the United States $816,042 worth, whereas, the exports of Canadian bacon and hams to the United States were only $14,892. That shows conclusively which way the trade in hog products is flowing; it is from the United States into Canada. The pork packers are alarmed today. Why? Because if the duty is placed where this proposal places it the American packers can flood the Canadian market with American hog products.

What are the facts in so far as prices are concerned? I want to quote the price of hogs in Buffalo, Chicago, Toronto, Peterborough and Hull, and I want to say that these are the prices that the drovers receive from the packers. They are drovers prices in every one of the places I name. I shall give the prices for the years 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1910. These are the average prices, taken from the weekly returns made by the drovers themselves, they agree with the prices paid by the packers, and if anybody doubts these figures the books of the drovers and packers are open for inspection. In 1907 the average price in Buffalo for live hogs was $6.67; Chicago, $6.10; Toronto, $6.94; Peterborough, $7.01; Hull, $7.02. I am quoting these prices because, in Ontario and Quebec, we are close to this market. We are close to the market in Toronto, in my section of the country we are close to the market in Peterborough, and in this part of Ontario and Quebec we are close to the Hull market. These are the prices actually paid to the drovers, by the packers. You will see that the price was higher in every one of the Canadian markets than it was in Buffalo and Chicago. In 1908 the average prices were, Buffalo, $6.22; Chicago, $5.70; Toronto, $6.57; Peterborough, $6.71; Hull, $6.79. In every case the prices in Canada were higher than in Buffalo and Chicago. In 1909, the prices were: Buffalo, $7.92; Chicago, $7.35; Toronto, $8.06; Peterborough, $8.25; Hull, $8.55—higher in every case in the Canadian market than in the American. In 1910, the statement shows that the price was slightly higher in Buffalo than in the Canadian centres. The prices were as follows: Buffalo, $9.58; Chicago, $8.90; Toronto, $9.13; Peterborough, $9.26; Hull, $9.30. The total average for the four years is: Buffalo, $7.60; Chicago, $7.02; Toronto, $7.68; Peterborough, $7.81; Hull, 7.92. There is the most conclusive proof that the best market that the Ontario and Quebec farmers have for the bacon hog is right at home.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend explain the big market at Peterborough? Is it because you have a porkpacking establishment there?

Mr. THORNTON. Yes, one of the largest porkpacking establishments in Canada is located at Peterborough. The farmers of my section of country sell their hogs to the porkpacking factory at Peterborough.

Mr. BRODER. That establishment is operated by the people who control the factory in Hull?

Mr. THORNTON. Yes, and the same firm, I believe, have a packing-house in Brantford. It is not necessary that I should quote further on the question of the price of hogs. I would deeply deplore the loss of the trade that the Canadian farmer has in hogs and of the profits that he makes out of the hog industry. It is the most easily discouraged trade that the farmers have. You will remember that the price of hogs went down, some three or four years ago, so low that it was impossible for the farmers to raise hogs and make it pay; indeed, they were raising hogs at a loss. The result was that the farmer sold his brood sows and went out of business and a scarcity of hogs in Canada followed.

It is a delicate business, a business that it is difficult for the farmer to get into it, it takes him some time to get into it and once he gets out of it, once the prices go down below the cost of producing, he is afraid to take it up again because of the danger of some future disturbance of the business.

I am satisfied, considering the scarcity of labour in Ontario and its present market value, that it will be very difficult for the farmers of Ontario to again start raising hogs. The supply has been steadily met for a great many years and the hog industry has represented to the farmers of Canada between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000 a year, they having marketed about 1,300,000 hogs per annum. The perfection that has been attained in the quality of our bacon is a great asset in our industrial resources, and I hope that nothing will be done to interfere with the industry. When adversity overtook the farmers of Canada some years ago they had to look round for other sources of profit, and many of them turned their attention to horse raising. If it was difficult for them to find the right grade of hog for the market it was still more difficult to get into the raising of horses to meet the demand. The fact is the demand for heavy horses is increasing while the demand for light horses is decreasing, due no doubt somewhat to the increasing use of automobiles. Never has there been in Ontario, and I presume in Quebec, such a demand for heavy horses as there is to-day. It is pertinent to inquire where the demand comes from and the result of the inquiry is that there are three sources, namely, first, the home market afforded by the towns and cities, next, the lumbering camps of northern Ontario and Quebec, and next the Canadian west. Let me say that the home market always is the best market for the products of the farmer, and success has never come to the farmer so much as when he has a home market; the dwellers in towns and cities either, if they have not suitable food products close to their doors. Therefore, the best market the farmer has for his horses is the home market afforded by the towns and cities of Ontario. I might mention that there are four times as many horses used in the city of Toronto as there were seventeen years ago, and in one instance which has come under my observation the Dominion Express Company in the city of Toronto used eighteen horses seventeen years ago, where to-day they require seventy-five. Then, the demand for heavy horses in the Canadian lumber camps has been a great source of revenue to the Canadian horse raiser. The market of the Canadian west has also been a remunerative one, and the protection—because that is what the small duty means to him—that the Canadian farmer has enjoyed has assisted him in securing that market for his horses. It required for the farmers, years to build up the horse raising industry; it is a slow process for a farmer to get to the point where he can sell two or three or four horses a year, but even if he only sells one horse a year at $200 it is something well worth taking into account. Now, we find from the United States returns, because the United States authorities have gone very carefully into the question of comparative prices, that the average price of a horse to-day is $108 in the United States as against $133 in Canada which shows that the Canadian market for Canadian horses is by all odds better than the American market. Some people have told us that the market in New York state is the best market for Ontario horses, but after careful inquiry I am satisfied that such is not the case, because the average price of horses in New York state is $125 while it is $133 in Ontario as proved by the United States Commission of Inquiry, a conclusive proof that the home market is better than the market across the border. What advantage can be gained by our giving our western horse market and our market in our lumber camps to the Americans, because that is what this arrangement will do? There are in the western states close to the Canadian frontier an unlimited supply of horses that will find a market in the Canadian west and crowd our horses out. My candid opinion is that if this proposition goes into effect it will ruin the horse trade of Ontario. I should be very sorry indeed to see that, but I fear there is no other outlook for us. There are other things which farmers produce in large quantities and which find their best market at home. These are what might be considered the less important products, or at least so they were considered a few years ago, but they have become staple products to-day, and are sold at remunerative prices. There is a large demand all through our section of the country for cream for consumption in the cities, but the chief demand is for butter and eggs. Let me say in this connection that I believe the poultry industry is capable of being developed 100 per cent over what it is to-day, and if the Minister of Agriculture were wide awake he could easily devise means to bring about that result. The results obtained in the production of eggs on our experimental farm at Ottawa are far from satisfactory, and in the Agriculture Committee a short time ago we succeeded in eliciting the fact, which had been demonstrated time and again, that the poultry department was not receiving that attention from the Minister of Agriculture that it ought to receive. We succeeded in eliciting from him this fact, that the poultry manager had asked for 25 acres of land on which to demonstrate what poultry would do, and yet the minister would not give him another foot of land. There is no question that the egg output of Canada could be doubled if it were rightly taken hold of. The great staple product of the United States to-day is corn, of which they produce $800,000,000 worth. What comes next? It will perhaps surprise most members of this House to learn that next to corn, eggs are the greatest industry of the United States—that they produce over $700,000,000 worth of eggs in a year, and the consumption is keeping ahead of the supply all the time, and it is the same here in Canada. These figures show what can be done with proper effort along this line.

It is claimed that a greatly increased revenue would come to the farmers of Canada if the markets of the United States were opened up to their potatoes. It is true, there are times when there is an abundant supply of potatoes in Canada, and a shortage in the United States. Potatoes are a very peculiar crop. There are sometimes whole districts, or perhaps even states, where in one year the crop is a failure, and other districts where the crop is wonderfully prolific. If there is a big crop in the United States and a light one in Canada, then the Canadian market will be the best, and vice versa. What are the facts to-day? We find, by the evidence given before the Committee of the Senate of the United States, that in the month of February last farmers in the state of New York were selling potatoes to buyers for 30 cents a bushel, and the farmers in the state of New Hampshire were selling them at 33 cents a bushel. At the same time, I find by the market reports that Ontario farmers were getting from 40 to 50 cents a bushel for potatoes. So that in this year at least our market is the best market. In some other years it might be different. But is it not better that we should, by a small protection, hold the markets of Canada which for years we have been so carefully and diligently building up, and which have been such a source of prosperity to the country?

There is another question that looms large and is perhaps the most important in connection with this reciprocity proposition. It is a fact, which perhaps the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs were not fully aware of, that twelve other countries can send their products into the markets of Canada without any customs barrier, while the markets of all these countries are practically closed to Canadian farm products. It is said, and frequently said, that we need not fear any of these other countries sending their products to Canada. But, as a matter of fact, during the month of January of this year there was over $100,000 worth of butter and eggs imported into Canada. The butter paid a duty of four cents a pound, and the eggs a duty of three cents a dozen; yet in the face of the duty they were imported and lowered the prices of these products. It has been claimed that this reciprocity pact is a wonderful elixir for all ills, that it is not going to hurt the manufacturer, that it is going to benefit the farmer, giving him more money for his products, and that the consumer is going to get the food he needs for his family at a lower price. I think the right hon. the First Minister made these claims for it. I think he sent a telegram, which was spread broadcast all over this country, stating that it was going to help everybody. Let me tell you what I think it will do for the farmer, because he is the man next to the consumer who is specially interested in this reciprocity proposition; and the consumer is mightily interested in it. I met two red-hot friends of the government one day. One was a trader and the other a farmer. They were conversing together, and I said to the farmer: 'What do you think of the reciprocity proposition?' He said: 'I think it is all right; we want the markets of the United States.' I said, 'What for?' He said, 'So that we can get more for our stuff.' I said to the trader, who was a boot and shoe dealer: 'Do you pay enough for the food of your family?' He said, 'Yes'. I said, 'Couldn't you stand a little more?' He said, 'I don't think we could.' I said, 'If what the farmer says is correct, that he is to get more for his produce, you must pay more for the food of your family.' He said, 'Well, we cannot stand to pay any more.' Let me tell you what I think this reciprocity pact will do when it opens the markets of Canada not only to the products of 90,000,000 who are raising the same kind of things that we do, but to the products of twelve other countries in the same line. If there is a glut in any one of those countries, where will it find a market? There is nothing in the world to prevent it being dumped on the Canadian market. The result beyond any question will be that the price will go down to the consumer; but I ask, what benefit is that going to be to the consumer? For instance, what benefit would it be to the consumers of Ottawa if fifty carloads of oranges were dumped down here to-day? The oranges might sell for ten cents a dozen, but would that be a benefit? I claim that if large quantities of produce are dumped on the Canadian market, while it would lower the price to the consumer for a time, it would have the effect of driving the Canadian farmer out of business. Take, for instance, garden stuff. Here is a farmer with a few acres of land who with his wife raises vegetables for the near-by market.

If a large quantity of vegetables are to be dumped into our markets, that will mean that our farmers will not be able to sell their products in that line to advantage. What will be the result? Our farmers will go out of the business, prices will fluctate to a greater degree than ever, and there will be very high and very low prices; but the average price to the consumer will not be one cent lower than before. This also will cripple the home market. It will drive a number of our farmers, especially the small farmers, out of business. The result will be a decrease in production, and such a decrease will have the effect of causing less money to be circulated in Canada. It will also decrease the buying power of our people, and that will react on the traders in the towns. You can easily see how it cannot help the consumer in the long run, how it will lessen the income of the farmers and consequently injure the business of the trader.

I deplore the prospect which is facing us because of this proposition. It seems to me that the government ought to have done what they pledged themselves repeatedly to do. Ever since 1897, year after year, they have declared that there would be no revision of the tariff until trade matters were thoroughly investigated. But they have gone back on this pledge, and I deplore the want of candour exhibited by the right hon. the Prime Minister, and his colleague the Minister of Finance. Why did they repeatedly make this pledge year after year? Why did the right hon. the Prime Minister pledge himself that there would be no change in the tariff and then not carry out his pledge. At this very session he said there would be no change until a thorough investigation had taken place. But he has since cast that pledge to the four winds. It is indeed lamentable that we cannot have more candour on the part of the right hon. gentleman. I believe that if the Prime Minister, and the Finance Minister, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) had any idea at all of the way this proposition would work out in connection with our agricultural interests, they would not have consented to a pact which is bound to revolutionize our farming industry, and perhaps ruin it along many lines. There ought to have been the most careful inquiry before negotiating any such measure as this. I regret exceedingly that this proposition has been made to us. I wish from the bottom of my heart that a thorough investigation into all the facts in connection with the trade between the two countries had been made before any move in this direction was taken. Thousands and thousands of facts pertinent to this discussion ought to be made public. I have considerable more material which I might use, but I think I have taken up already too much of the time of the House, and have only very feebly expressed what I desired to say in this connection. In my opinion a most thorough investigation into the facts concerning all the industries that might be affected, directly or indirectly, by this proposition ought to have been made, before entering into a hard and fast bargain which will tie us up to a country that the Finance Minister himself acknowledges has hitherto treated us with contempt and indifference. To my mind we cannot be too careful before entering into any alliance with a people who have treated us in this way.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Mr. Chairman, we listened this afternoon to a speech replete with facts; if the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Thornton) will permit me, I would say a very fair speech, well argued. I feel confident that if he had been speaking for reciprocity instead of against reciprocity his speech would have been a great deal stronger. Since 1866, when the last treaty of reciprocity was abrogated, no question has arisen in this House or in this country which would call for more serious consideration than the motion which is now under debate. In the few remarks I propose to make, I shall try to constantly keep in view the different aspects of the case as they affect the producer and the consumer, and before I conclude I shall have a word or two to say about certain phases of the question introduced by certain hon. members opposite, and some writers in a section of the press opposed to the government, and having reference to the political position of Canada in the Empire.

It has been argued by some hon. gentlemen opposite that reciprocal trade relations with the United States will affect their particular provinces adversely; by others that our market will be overcrowded with American products; by others that our transportation routes will be diverted from east and west to north and south; by others that the gardeners and fruit growers will be ruined, and by a few that we shall be absorbed by the United States and shall awaken some morning to find ourselves under the star-spangled banner. Let me at once say that I am a great admirer of the United States of America. I find that no country has made such progress in the time which it has been a nation except perhaps Canada. The Americans have made great progress; with the population which they have to-day their industries are flourishing and they are progressing. But in proportion to population ours are much greater. But greatly as I admire the United States of America, I am proud to be Canadian born; and I say without vainglory that I want to live and die under the free flag which floats over this Chamber, free from any political alliance with any other country outside of the British Empire. We in Canada are proud, very proud, of our connection. And no two men have done more to foster the spirit of Canadian patriotism than the late right hon. Sir John Macdonald and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads this government. I approach this question, therefore, not from a sectional or provincial point of view but from a purely Canadian point of view. And before giving the reasons which prompt me to support what I believe to be a measure all to the advantage of Canada and of the different classes within this country, I would like to deal with some of the objections which are offered by hon. gentlemen opposite to this reciprocal pact. The first objection, and one that we find mentioned in practically every speech delivered by a Conservative in this country, and in practically every newspaper opposed to this government, is that negotiations were entered into without the will of the people. I am not going to weary the House by repeating what has been so often said, that the reciprocity pact is an agreement which was fostered by both political parties in this country, and one which has met with favour from Conservatives as well as Liberals. But supposing that the reciprocity pact had never been spoken of before in Canada, yet, the fact that it is to the general advantage and good of this country is proof enough that this parliament has a perfect right to legislate upon it. But the second objection is that the negotiations were not sufficiently made public whilst details were in course of arrangement. That seems at least to those on this side of the House, futile. There has been no agreement yet sanctioned between the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada. There is no agreement yet which is in force in this country or in the States providing for free trade in the articles mentioned in the statement brought down to the House; there can be no agreement until it is sanctioned by the people through their authorized representatives in this House. Let me assure hon. gentlemen opposite that if the people of this country are not in favour of reciprocity, and if their authorized representatives in this House were to vote in favour of reciprocity, then, at the time fixed by the constitution for an appeal to the people the pact upon which we are now entering could be set aside. That is one of the terms of the arrangement which has been concluded, or is about to be concluded, between the United States and Canada. But, further, it is not in accordance with British usage to make public the details of a treaty, not even to the representatives of the people in parliament assembled. Do you require proof of that? You have simply to refer to the history of England, or to the debates of the British House of Commons, and you will find instance after instance in which it has been laid down as a rule of parliamentary practice in England, not to make public the negotiations preliminary to treaty making. Let me cite, for instance, words used in the British House of Commons, of 15th February, 1904, of an eminent member of the British House, Mr. Wyndham:

> In the case of the Cobden treaty, the negotiations took place in the year before—1859—and in the 'Life of Mr. Gladstone,' written by the right hon. gentleman who moved the amendment, we read that there was some perturbation in the cabinet over this project of entering into negotiations for altering certain duties without the knowledge of parliament. But these fears did not weigh with the cabinet of the day and the treaty was concluded, and what was the result? Why, in, I think, Mr. Gladstone's words, France was persuaded to lower her duties on a number of articles of British production and export, and more especially upon iron, which Cobden called the daily bread of other industries. If it was legitimate—and it was legitimate—in 1860 for the cabinet without the knowledge of parliament to enter into diplomatic relations with another country and to state that it was the policy of that government to alter certain duties and thereby get a reduction of duties on articles of British production and export, is it illegitimate to-day to do the same thing?

It is not illegitimate.

And further on Mr. Wyndham said:

> I may say, in order to reply to the right hon. gentleman, that negotiations are likely to be embarrassed if, before negotiation begins, ministers are asked to state, step by step, all the arguments that will be used. Negotiations begin with nothing more than a bland smile——

And I know the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) is capable of a bland smile.

> —and a warm welcome, and they are embarrassed if any further indications are given.

That is language, Sir, that cannot be gainsaid, that is language which should guide us in dealing with this question. The great objection urged against the reciprocal agreement is that such action is disloyal and will tend towards annexation. I must say I was amused when I saw a little flag float from an ink stand in this House. I respect the flag but I like to see it fly at the top of the institution in which we now find ourselves. I do not think that it is necessary in this House, in order to prove our loyalty, to carry a little flag in our waistcoat pocket. The relations which exist between the members on both sides of this House are such that no one will say that any member in this House is disloyal to his country. It is well known that there is no more loyal portion of the British Empire than is the Dominion of Canada, and therefore, on this side of the House, we consider such manifestations of loyalty rodomontade, we consider them filibustering loyalty, and we do not bring our little flags with us every time we come here to discuss a question affecting Canada. I do not believe that loyalty follows trade, or that trade follows loyalty. If trade followed loyalty or if loyalty followed trade, then England would be the most disloyal country in the British Empire. Do you suppose for a moment that England considers Canada when she goes on to the markets of the world to purchase? Do you suppose that the Englishman is not a wiser purchaser than to be governed in his purchases by his loyalty? The Englishman buys where he gets the best bargain, he sells where he can get the best price, and we all admire him for it; we simply want to do the same thing ourselves. England, I protest is not more loyal to Russia or to Germany or to Denmark than she is to Canada. England is no more loyal to the United States of America than she is to Canada. Have hon. gentlemen opposite ever examined the English trade reports to find out where England buys her goods? England buys from Canada about 19,000,000 cwt. of wheat, it is true, but she buys from the United States nearly 15,000,000 cwt., and she buys from Russia over 26,000,000 cwt. She buys nearly 10,000,000 cwt. more wheat from Russia than she buys from Canada, and yet nobody claims that England is trying to annex Russia or that Russia is trying to annex England. I find that she buys in a year from Canada of wheat meal and flour 2,800,000 odd cwt.; but she buys from Germany over 6,000,000 cwt. Will any hon. gentleman opposite say that England is trying to curry favour with Germany because she prefers to go to Germany to buy her wheat, meal and flour rather than to come to Canada, or from the circumstance that she buys more from Germany than from Canada? I find that she bought last year 24,417 cwt. of butter from Canada. At the same time she bought over 1,600,000 cwt. from Denmark. She bought 572,000 cwt. from Russia, and only a little over 24,000 cwt. from Canada. I hope that none of my hon. friends opposite will become more disloyal on this account, because it would be foolish. I am simply pointing out to them how it is that England does not consider that her loyalty is dependent on her trade.

The hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Thornton) was very keen this afternoon about Canadian trade in eggs. He was afraid that if we had reciprocity the price of eggs might be affected. I find that England, so keen about the egg industry of Canada, bought from Canada last year 3,969 cwt. of eggs, but she bought at the same time from Denmark 3,500,000 cwt.; from Russia about 9,000,000 cwt., and from other countries over 2,000,000 cwt. The hon. member was also very keen about the bacon industry. I find that England bought from Canada last year 391,000 odd cwt. of bacon, but she bought from Denmark 1,701,000 odd, and from the United States of America, the very country that we want to deal with, in order to show us an example, she bought not 391,000 cwt., as from Canada—she did not go to some other British colony, but she went where the star spangled banner floats and bought 1,500,000 cwt. When she looked around to purchase hams she could only buy 39,000 cwt. from Canada, but over 59,000 cwt. from the United States.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose she could not buy more from Canada than Canada had to sell.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the hon. gentleman vouch for it that Canada had no more to sell?

Mr. BLAIN. It all found a market either at home or abroad.

Mr. DEVLIN. Which goes to prove exactly that this government has done so much good for the farmers of Canada that while they could not get a market prior to 1896, to-day they can get a market anywhere they want to go.

I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that England, for years, has been trying to do exactly what we have succeeded in doing, but England has not succeeded. England has been seeking for an open market in the United States. England did not send to Canada to ask whether Canada would consider her conduct disloyal. Let me go back to the 'Hansard' of the English House of Commons, and I am going to quote Sir Michael Hicks-Beach and Mr. Balfour, two authorities that, I think, will be accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Balfour, speaking on the 8th February, 1904, said this:

> Now, if we cannot induce the United States to lower their tariff——

They were trying to induce the United States to lower their tariff, but at that time they did not succeed.

> If we cannot induce the United States to lower their tariff, at least, it will be possible for us to provide against the kind of bounty which arises from the combination of producers operating from behind the shelter of a protection system. It is possible to put on duties if necessary.

Mr. Balfour is not a Liberal politician. He is one of the members of the Tory party in England and he was speaking as a Tory leader. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach goes farther than that. Speaking on the same day, here is the language that he used which of course, if used in this country towards England would be considered disloyal, but, used by him and used in the British House of Commons, it must be accepted as loyal and if we are bound to follow the English House of Commons in the making of history, we must not be considered disloyal in doing the very acts which they have been doing for years and teaching us to do. He said:

There is one thing I should say, however, that you must dissociate this matter from the question of colonial preference.

There was a question then before the House of Commons of giving Canada a preference.

In my belief the two things, under certain circumstances at any rate, would be found incompatible. What is the principle of retaliation? Surely, that you should treat other countries as they treat you. What is the principle of colonial preference? Surely, that you should treat a colony better than any other country, because it is part of the empire. How are you to work the two things together? Now, let us see. Suppose 2 shillings a quarter were imposed upon all corn coming from the United States, and Canada was exempted from that duty. Suppose the result was what those who would promote colonial preference desire—that a great deal of our corn supply were to come from Canada instead of from the United States, and suppose that the corn growers in the United States induced their government to propose to this government that if they would remit the 2 shillings duty on United States corn, they, the United States, would remit certain of their protective duties which pressed most hardly upon our manufactured goods, and the remission of which would do enormous benefit to the trade and commerce of this country. What must the answer be under colonial preference? Surely this, 'Our word is pledged to Canada; we cannot remit the duty.' Yet the offer from America might be infinitely more valuable to our trade and industries——

Note too 'our' trade and industries.

—here than anything that Canada had given in return for preference or could possibly give. Would not that be a dangerous limitation to the freedom of bargaining which His Majesty's government desire to resume with reference to this matter? Would it not excite bitter feelings in this country on the part of those interested, whether as employers or workmen, in the industries which might be enormously benefited by the remission of these United States duties. Would that tend towards the unity of the empire? I am afraid it would be found in working that difficulties of this sort would constantly and continually arise. I would say this. It is a very inconvenient thing to bind this country by treaty not to impose duties; but it is something more than an inconvenient thing to bind this country by treaty not to take off duties in circumstances which no man can possibly foresee.

Had Champ Clarke used that language it would have been quoted all over this country. I would like to ask my hon. friends opposite, whether, in the declining years of their party, and we must consider the present year as one of the declining years of the Conservative party, are they sincere in their cry of loyalty? Let me put a test. What hon. gentleman, from the leader to the humblest of the party is ready to sacrifice the manufacturers of this country for loyalty? Not one. England is not affected one jot or tittle by the present agreement, but the English House of Commons and the English people have been clamouring for an increased preference upon manufactured goods coming from England. Will any hon. gentleman on the opposite side say that he is ready, out of the loyalty of his heart, to give a preference on manufactured goods to England and answer the call of England which has been heard during these long years? Not one. Mr. Chairman, I think that with the few words which I have spoken up to this I have found most of the objections which are thrown against this reciprocity agreement. There are others in detail but they are not serious.

I assume that it will be conceded by hon. gentlemen in this House that Canada is essentially an agricultural country, with four times the wealth invested in agriculture as in manufacture and if it is proved that the farming classes are benefited by reciprocity it must of necessity be a good thing for Canada. I take direct issue with the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), who stated in the House the other day that the farmer is getting more than his share of the prosperity of the community. The farmer cannot get more than his share of the prosperity of this country, the farmer is the very backbone of Canada, and it must become the imperative duty of this House to see to it that the farmer is protected beyond all classes in this country, because, if you make the farmer wealthy, you will make all classes wealthy. The money which goes into the farmer's pocket goes out of the farmer's pocket to benefit the different classes of Canada. I especially call the attention of the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Gilbert), to this fact, and I hope that when the vote is taken he will vote for the farmers of Canada to be consistent with the line of conduct which he took in his election, that prior to 1896 the manufacturers were protected. They have not been disturbed yet. It is not the idea on this side of the House to cripple the manufacturers of Canada, but instead of the manufacturers always looming highest in the eye of the government, this government has cast its eye at times upon the poor farmer who was neglected by hon. gentlemen opposite prior to 1896. The government asked the farmers to come forward and lay their grievances before them; and they answered by that monstrous delegation which met in this Chamber on the 16th December last, and in which the farmers of the different provinces were well represented. There was a unanimous demand from that monster delegation for reciprocal trade arrangements in agricultural products with the United States.

Mr. BLAIN. No.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. member for Peel deny it?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN. Well, I did not want to weary the House with quotations, but it is well that the hon. member (Mr. Blain) and the country should know what the farmers demanded. Mr. Scallion of Virden, Manitoba, speaking in the name of the farmers of that province said:

> Our protective tariff is held to be a great burden upon the agricultural industry of Canada and upon the great body of protected commodities . . . No trade arrangement which the Canadian government could enter into with any country would meet with greater favour or stronger support from the farmers of this country than a wide measure of reciprocal trade with United States.

What does the hon. member for Peel think of that. Did the hon. member read what Mr. Drury of western Ontario, secretary of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, said. If not, I cite it for him:

> In the increased British preference and ultimate free trade with England we look for relief from the general tariff burden. To this proposal we hope for little opposition from our manufacturers since it gives the man opportunity to show in a practical form what their much vaunted loyalty to the empire amounts to. Would the hon. member for Peel in answer to that request coming from western Ontario allow free trade with England in manufactured goods?

The hon. gentleman is as dumb as an oyster. Did the hon. member (Mr. Blain) read what Mr. Thomas McMillan of western Ontario, a member of the executive committee of the Dominion grange and of the Canadian Council of Agriculture said: did he read what Colonel Fraser said, did he say what Mr. Fawcett said; did he read what Mr. Parker said; did he read what Mr. Robert Sellars said; did he read what every farmer representing every agricultural industry of that country said at that great meeting. And why do we want reciprocity?

It is our view that Canada is a prosperous country, it is our view that since 1896, when this government came to office we have had successive years of untold prosperity. Why do we want reciprocity? the answer is simple; it is because the United States affords us our nearest market and is our natural market for our perishable goods. Let us drop the flag for a minute.

Mr. BEATTIE. What have we done with our perishable goods for the last 20 years?

Mr. DEVLIN. That is a pretty broad question.

Mr. BEATTIE. We did not have the American market, and we did well without it.

Mr. DEVLIN. Well, our goods were consumed, and that is about the best answer I can give to the hon. gentleman, but I will go further and tell him that prior to 1896 our products in a great portion perished. Since 1896, due to the cold storage facilities afforded by the government to the farmers of this country, we have been able to export our goods in a condition that enables them to find a market abroad. Is the hon. gentleman satisfied with that answer?

Mr. BEATTIE. No, I am not.

Mr. DEVLIN. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beattie) is one of the most genial members of this House, but when it comes to a political question I fear there is nothing I might say which would satisfy him. Let us consider what would happen in the United States if any one state of the union had built around it a high protective wall. Would that state be as prosperous, do you think, as the other states of the union which had unrestricted free trade between them. Speaking purely from a business standpoint are we not geographically bordering the United States for 3,500 miles, and if the individual states have succeeded is it not a natural sequence that by taking down the tariff wall which separates Canada and the United States the provinces of Canada will succeed just as well as the different states of the union. But of course, hon. gentlemen must not construe my words to mean the taking down of the political wall. There is no question—and I want to lay emphasis upon that point—there is no question in any of these arrangements of either commercial union or annexation. It is true that Mr. Champ Clarke has been quoted, and certain newspapers, notably the Montreal 'Star' which carries on an anti-reciprocity campaign picks out the words of any man in the United States whether he is responsible or irresponsible, and publishes those words if they bear in the most remote degree upon the question of political union between the countries. But that is not the sentiment which actuates the statesmen of the neighbouring republic. Let me quote a representative American, Mr. Root, who, speaking to an American audience upon American soil, and in the presence of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, said:

Canada has become the home of a great people increasing in population and in wealth. The stirrings of a national sentiment are to be felt. In the relation to England, one can see that while still loyal to their mother country and a loyal part of the British Empire they the growing up, and, as the boy is to his parents when he attains manhood, they are a personality of themselves. In their relations to us they have become a sister nation. With their enormous national wealth, with their vigour and energy following the pathway that we have followed,——

And I think I have here the meaning of the reference to the parting of the ways which has been so often quoted:

—following the pathway that we have followed.

Protecting their industries as we have protected ours, proud of their country as we are proud of ours, they are no longer the little remnant upon our borders; they are a great and powerful sister nation. And the people of America look with no grudging or jealous eye upon this development. We bid them Godspeed in their growth in greatness and in power, in their capacity to do their part for civilization, for peace and justice, for liberty and righteousness among the nations. . . . But with us, eighty-nine years ago, by simple exchange of notes, the British and American governments agreed upon the disarmament on the great international waters between Canada and the United States, and to-day millions of people, thriving cities, wealth beyond computation, are free from wars, from alarms of wars, as safe without a cannon or a fort as if they were in the centre of this great land. Long may this condition continue. Never may it cease. It will not cease.

This is the kind of language that is found in the mouth of more than one statesman of the American Union. Did the Conservative party ever do the slightest thing to foster British trade? When they were in power, they taxed British goods more than they taxed the goods coming from the United States. Hon. gentlemen on this side must be amazed to know that hon. gentlemen opposite, who boast so loudly of their loyalty, when in power and in a position to help old England, imposed more taxes on goods coming from England than they did on goods coming from the United States. Under Conservative rule our imports from Great Britain amounted to $43,000,000 and they taxed $9,576,000. At the same time we imported $52,000,000, from the United States, and they were only taxed $8,220.-000, a discrimination against England. But they did more; they opposed a British preference. When this government proposed in 1897, to give, and did give, a British preference to England, hon. gentlemen opposite opposed the resolution. The hon. leader of the opposition, speaking in this House—his words are to be found in 'Hansard' of 1897, volume 2, page 2900—said:

Either it—the preferential clause—is bound to bring this country into direct conflict with the mother country on this point, or else it is bound to bring the mother country into direct conflict with Germany. One or other of these results must follow.

Mr. McGREGOR. Let us have it, then, and we will know where we stand.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend opposite says: Let us have it. I suppose the hon. gentleman thinks that it is a fitting contribution to Her Majesty in her jubilee year that we should bring ourselves into direct conflict with the mother country, &c.

He was not answered; and the hon. member for North Toronto, speaking immediately afterwards, chided hon. gentlemen on this side of the House for not answering what he termed the unanswerable argument of the opposition.

Mr. GOODEVE. Might I ask the hon. gentlemen if he is aware that during the last six years the average rate of duty on goods imported from Great Britain was 18.64 per cent as against 13.4 per cent on goods from the United States, greater than it was in the years he speaks of.

Mr. DEVLIN. That rate of duty was not that.

Mr. GOODEVE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I will give the figures.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman is wrong in his calculation. This country is doing greater trade to-day than it did prior to 1896. Not to go as far back as that, I will tell the hon. gentleman that our total export trade for twelve months ending November, 1901, amounted to $203,966,038; in 1910 it amounted to $309,647,124, an increase of over $100,000,000. The hon. gentleman has not taken the exact rate of duty. He has imposed duty upon the total imports into the country, and then he has divided up.

Mr. GOODEVE. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. In either way the duty is greater. If you take the average duty on the dutiable goods it is 24·78 per cent for Great Britain as against 24·26 per cent for the United States; but if you take the dutiable and free goods together, it is 18·64 per cent for Great Britain, against 13·4 per cent for the United States.

Mr. DEVLIN. That must depend on the quality of the goods. What do the Conservative newspapers of this country say in regard to the cry of annexation? I do not believe in quoting newspapers, but let me just quote one for which I have the greatest possible respect—the Ottawa 'Citizen,' which is generally found supporting hon. gentlemen opposite. In its issue of February 16, 1911, it had an editorial entitled, 'Saving the empire again,' in which it said:

'Save the Empire' appeals are now being made in Britain by the prominent newspapers opposed to the ratification of the agreement between Canada and the United States. The situation is not altogether novel nor is it so in its relation to Canadian affairs. No study of Canadian fiscal history is necessary to show that appeals to patriotism in Britain is one of the favourite methods of stirring up popular enthusiasm in support of a cause lacking more substantial claims to consideration as a matter of public policy.

All the arguments or, rather appeals, which did service a year ago are once more being put forward as earnestly and as persistently as at that time. The whole thing is a little discouraging because of the poverty of imagination revealed in this harking back to old disguises to alarm the Conservative Britisher who, however, refuses to be terrified to any appreciable extent. Even a more gloomy forecast, introduced by reasons more convincing than those based on foreign machinations, would be welcome because of its freshness. As it is, the skeleton in Punch and Judy has been thrust out from behind the curtain so often of late that it has lost all its terrors, if it ever really had any, even for those irrepressible characters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Canada is to-day in a position to grant reciprocity because Canada's surplus production of agricultural products for exportation is constantly increasing, whereas that of the United States is decreasing. In 1900 there were 2,495,466 acres of wheat under cultivation. In 1910 there were 8,395,400. In 1900 there were 833,390 acres of oats under cultivation; to-day there are over 4,000,000 acres. In 1900 there were only 162,000 acres of barley under cultivation in our northwest provinces; to-day there are over 1,000,000.

In 1900 those 2,495,000 acres of wheat yielded 23,456,859 bushels; in 1910 our yield of wheat was 128,891,000. In 1910 the yield of oats in the Northwest was 126,753,000 bushels, and of barley, 21,377,000.

When we consider that the wheat field of Canada is four times that of the wheat field of the United States, when we consider the rapidly increasing production in Canada, may we not ask whether we are not in a position to compete for all time to come, not only with the United States, but with any other country?

Professor Frank T. Shutt, in his bulletin of August, 1910, says:

It is not our intention to burden this bulletin with statistics, but it will be of interest here to make one or two statements respecting the extent of these western lands and the possibilities that exist for expansion in wheat production and general farming. It is estimated that there are in the three western provinces about 180,000,000 acres suitable for cultivation, the greater part of which is adapted to wheat growing. Of this area, probably not more than 6 per cent is at present under cultivation. A further territory to the north of Alberta and Saskatchewan, within the boundaries of Mackenzie, Keewatin, Ungava and Yukon, contains more than 6,000,000 acres, and it has already been shown that wheat can be successfully grown at several points within this immense area.

We find also in the report of Professor Ruddick, dated 6th December, 1910:

The export of cream continued to the United States, and the quantity shipped from April 1 to November 30 last represents a value of about $1,000,000. The writer was across the border in northern New York lately anl learned that the dairymen there are beginning to agitate for an increase of duty to stop the importation of cream from Canada.

What is the lesson to be derived from this? Canada's agricultural production is constantly on the increase, but what about the production of the United States? Two recent bulletins of the United States Bureau of Statistics show that in 1907 the farm products in the United States were 43·7, in 1898, 45·2, and in 1899, 48·7, of the value of the total imports. The exports of domestic farm products from the United States in 1909 were valued, in round figures, at $903,000,000, a decrease compared with 1907 and 1908 of $151,000,000 and $114,000,000, respectively. The total exports in 1909 were valued at $1,638,355,593, the exports of farm products being 55·1 per cent of the total. The ratio of farm products to total exports has been gradually decreasing for many years. These facts I have taken from two recent bulletins of the United States Bureau of Statistics. I do not see, therefore, why hon. gentlemen opposite should dread the coming into force of this part of the agreement with the United States.

To those who have little faith in their country, let me say that Canada is becoming one of the great nations of the world. No one can estimate what the future has in store for our Dominion. When we consider that Canada is the size of thirty United Kingdoms, twice the size of British India, almost a Europe in itself, and larger than the United States, when we consider that she has the largest consecutive wheat fields in the world, the greatest extent of sea fisheries, and the largest grain mills in the British Empire, can we not say that our farmers, who possess the wealth of this great nation, need not fear competition from any corner of the globe. If by an interchange of products with the United States wealth should flow into this country, as it inevitably will, then our government will have done something for which it will be blessed by future generations. It will have added to the wealth and development of this country, and our progress will be more rapid than it has been even since 1896. Canada will become the foremost nation within the British Empire. She will not merely be the sister nation of the United States, as she is to-day, but is bound to become a greater nation, and will for all time be the proudest gem in the British Crown.

Mr. T. W. CROTHERS (West Elgin). Perhaps no similar international proposition has ever attracted such wide attention as that which we are now considering. That is not surprising because it involves not merely the price of wheat, cattle, butter, flour and other agricultural products, but because, in the best judgment of many capable statesmen and experienced businessmen, it involves the commercial and political future of this great continent. It raises the question whether republican institutions are to compass the whole, and one flag float from the Pole to Panama, or whether two peoples sprung from a common stock, speaking the same language, reading the same literature, worshipping at the same altars, living under institutions founded on like ideals, shall share this almost illimitable territory, each people working out their own destiny in their own way, in independent friendliness, and rivals only in the arts of peace. This is not a time for the phrase-monger, it is no time for declarations of discourse; it is a time for earnest thought and plain speech. Between the Gulf of Mexico and the Arctic ocean, a hundred millions are thinking and talking about the proposals now being considered by this committee but with this difference: That the ninety-two millions living in the United States, during the last two years and six months have, on two occasions at the ballot box, demanded a general and substantial reduction in their customs duties, and to that extent expressed their approval of the reciprocity agreement, while the eight millions living in Canada have during the last ten years, on three several occasions at the ballot box, declared that they do not want reciprocity with the United States, or, at least, did not declare that they did want it. Let us, for a few minutes, follow the circumstances in which the respective parties reached negotiations which ended in this agreement.

It will be remembered that the Democratic party in the United States for a great many years advocated a material reduction in their tariff. And they had so impressed the people of the United States that the Republican party deemed it prudent, in their national convention in 1908, to declare for a revision downward of their tariff. They said to the people of the United States: We, the authors of this system of protection are better qualified to revise it than can be our opponents. Well, the people of the United States took them at their word, in November, 1908, they elected a Republican president and a Republican Congress. That Congress met in 1909, and passed what is known as the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Bill, assented to by President Taft, and justified by him on many platforms in the United States. That tariff Bill provided for a minimum and a maximum tariff. That minimum tariff provided about double the rates which our tariff provides. But, in addition, there was provided 25 per cent, but, authorized the President to strike off that 25 per cent as applied to any country which did not in any way discriminate against the United States in favour of a third country. At that time Congress passed that Payne-Aldrich Bill in August, 1909, the President of the United States was aware that there was in existence a treaty between Canada and France —not of a very extensive character—and the Congress of the United States also knew of the existence of that treaty. That Act passed in August, 1909, was to come into effect, if I remember rightly, on the 1st of March, 1910. A few days before that date the President of the United States sent a message to the government of Canada to say: The Payne-Aldrich tariff enacted by the Congress of the United States, and assented to by myself places me in an awkward and embarrassing position, I shall be unable to strike off that maximum duty unless you give me an inducement to do so. What was the position taken by this government at that time? Did they take the position that a proud and self-respecting people would desire them to take?

What did we do? We became alarmed, rushed off to Washington, after having a trip down to Albany, bowed our head beneath the big stick that was held over it, agreed to put thirteen classes of articles upon the list advantageous to the United States over and above other countries if they would withhold the coming down of that big stick and strike off the maximum tariff of 25 per cent. We did more than that. We gave the President of the United States at that time a promise that we would consider later a broader trade deal with the government of the United States. If I remember aright, when our representatives who went to Washington on that occasion returned, they did not tell us that they had given that promise.

It transpired later that that promise was made. That, it seems to me, was a humiliating position in which to place the people of Canada. Mr. Taft should have been reminded that the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Bill was the work of the Congress of the United States, approved and justified by him before his own people, and he should have been informed in a firm but friendly manner that if that Act placed him in an embarrassing and undesirable position he should seek relief at the hands of its authors, and that Canada's laws are enacted at Ottawa, and not at Washington. Such a stand and statement given by a proud and self-respecting people of 8,000,000 would have commanded the respect and admiration of a proud and self-respecting people of 90,000,000. But to meekly yield to the threat presented was a humiliating spectacle to the people of Canada.. In approaching us, as he did a year ago, Mr. Taft was not acting the part of a national philanthropist. Under a smooth exterior, he was laying well and deep the plans for the aggrandizement of his own country. Whoever knew an American to enter into a bargain for the benefit of the other party to it? Let us not allow ourselves to be flattered into a false security in that way. In the autumn of 1910 there was another election in the United States, a large number of Republicans contended that the Republican Congress that had been elected in 1908 had not, by the Payne-Aldrich Bill, fulfilled the pledges given to the people prior to the election, and a number of Republican senators and others became what were known as the insurgents in the Republican party and they, together with the Democrats, in the general election of 1910, elected a Democratic Congress. These negotiations which had been talked of between our Finance Minister and Mr. Taft in February, 1910, were initiated by the President of the United States by sending representatives here to this government in November, 1910. What should the answer of our government have been to these people at that time? What were the facts? The Republican party in the United States had been defeated; the electors in the United States had expressed their want of confidence in that party, and this government might very properly have said: Your party has lost the confidence of the people in your country, you have been defeated at the polls, your party is not in a position to negotiate with us now, and we will wait until the Democratic party are in a position to enact law, and we will deal with them, and not with you, the defeated party. But instead of saying that, they seemed to jump at the suggestion that they should go to Washington, and endeavour to negotiate a treaty there.

So much for the course of events on the other side leading up to the beginning of these negotiations; let us look at the events in Canada. For three or four years prior to 1878, the people of Canada had suffered a very severe depression. All sorts of industrial institutions were tumbling to pieces, factories were closed or running short hours, artisans and labourers were out of labour, no industry was thriving in this country except the soup kitchen. Sir John Macdonald promised a remedy for that. He proposed that there should be introduced into out tariff system the principle of protection, and on September 17, 1878 the people of Canada, by an overwhelming majority, said: We approve of your suggestion. In 1879 that principle was introduced into the tariff of Canada. Of course it was objected to then by the Liberal party, and they continued to object to it until 1896, when they substantially accepted it, and they have been substantially administering it ever since. No fair-minded, moderate Liberal will contend for one moment that when they came into power in 1896 or since they have eliminated from our tariff the principle of protection. It has been in the tariff ever since 1879, for 32 years, and what has been the result? Under that system we made great progress, more than we ever made before. Every class of our people is in a prosperous condition to-day, and none more prosperous than our farmers. They are enjoying abundant crops and high prices. Manufacturers are doing a thriving and profitable business. Merchants are doing a profitable business. Artisans and labourers are employed full time at large wages. There never was a time in the history of Canada when our people were so prosperous as they are to-day. What is the proposition now? The proposition now is to make us better. We will take a homely illustration. Supposing that a couple of old friends, both distinguished physicians, met a third friend whom they had not seen for a number of years, and one of them said to him: How are you getting along, John? Well, for three or four years prior to 32 years ago, I was in a very bad condition, I was getting weaker day by day, I lost my nerve, I was getting weaker all the time. A distinguished physician prescribed a new diet for me, which I began 32 years ago. I have been getting stronger every year on that prescription, I can run faster than I could 32 years ago, jump higher, sleep better, and my nerves are better; I am better in every way. One of his friends says to him: Oh, I can make you even better than that; you can lift only 200 pounds now, you are in a healthy condition, but I have a remedy that will enable you to lift 300 pounds. Change the old diet, and take the new. John asks the other physician: What do you think about that proposition? Don't on your life, make a change, it will kill you if you do. We both admit that you never can get back to the old diet if you change. Now, what are you going to do about it? What would a wise man do about it? Would he take his chance, and change that prescription? Swap a certainty for an uncertainty. It seems to me it would not be the part of wisdom to do so, but that is what it is proposed to do now in this country by those who are at the head of affairs. The last speaker referred to the will of the people, and all that sort of thing, as many others have done. It will be remembered that when the Liberal party came into power in 1896 they did make an effort to secure reciprocity with the United States. What was known as the Joint High Commission was appointed. They met several times, but did not succeed in securing any arrangement with the government at Washington. We have heard many times what the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said in this House in 1899 when he used these words which have become familiar, I have no doubt, to every member of the House:

If we know the hearts and minds of our people at present I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling of Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with the hon. gentleman himself, would have given many things to obtain the American market. There was a time not long ago when the market of the great cities of the Union was the only market we had for many of our products but thank Heaven these days are past and over. We are not dependent upon the American market we were at one time. It is possible they may come to us, if they do, we will teach them the lesson they have taught us.

What is the fair translation of that speech delivered in this House in 1899? The people of Canada are not in favour of reciprocity, the right hon. gentleman said. There was a time when we were in favour of it, but now we have another market; now we are not dependent upon the American market and we no longer want reciprocity. These words cannot have any double meaning. The general feeling in Canada is no longer in favour of reciprocity; we were in favour of reciprocity because we had no other market than that of the United States; we are not in favour of it now because we have become independent of the American market. There is no getting away from that. Mr. Chairman, are we less independent of the people of the United States to-day than we were twelve years ago? Are we not infinitely more independent of them than we were then? The Prime Minister said then that we did not want reciprocity because we were no longer dependent on the American market. Do we want it now when we are infinitely more independent of the American market than we were then?

Our friends went down to Washington and they are not willing to let well enough alone. The right hon. First Minister told us that the only one who desires to let well enough alone is the Chinaman. You will remember the words that he used in that regard. He said on the 7th March in this House:

Well, what is this country? What are we? Is this Canada, or is this China?

The Chinese have left well enough alone for 4,000 years. 4,000 years ago they were probably the first nation on earth, and so satisfied were they that they refused to move. They let well enough alone for 4,000 years. If a reformer showed his head among them he was ruthlessly put down and told to let well enough alone.

The hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), was interviewed in Boston on the 28th October last and he is reported in the Montreal 'Herald,' the Liberal organ in that city, as saying:

The attitude of the Canadian people now is to let well enough alone.

On the 28th October last we had at least one Chinaman in the holy of holies right here and I am not sure that we have not some more in the cabinet. I have already read the remarks of the Prime Minister when he said:

The people of Canada do not want reciprocity because we have become independent of the American market.

I think the free translation of that is, that the people of Canada to-day want to let well enough alone, so that not only the Minister of War is a Chinaman, but the right hon. gentleman himself is a Chinaman and, according to his statement, the great majority of the people of Canada are Chinamen because they want to let well enough alone, as he then stated. But, as I said, our friends went down to Washington. Did the hon. Minister of Finance seem to think that it was necessary to have any information at all down at Washington? Why, the very mention of reciprocity was sufficient to induce him to jump at it. Did he not say to this House on the 6th April:

There is a sufficient movement on that question in the United States to call for a variety of information and for that purpose a tariff commission was appointed about a year ago. That commission has been conducting investigations not only here but in other countries, and the information was probably necessary for our American neighbours, when they were entering upon a new and radical departure from their past fiscal policy. No such tariff commission and no such information was required to enable this government to deal with the question of reciprocity in natural products. There was no need of statistics to satisfy this government that reciprocity in natnral products was a good thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Was not Canada's departure from her fiscal policy just as radical as that of the United States from hers?

Mr. FIELDING. No. What we have done is no departure from the policy of Canada; it is in accordance with the policy of Canada for forty years. . . .

There is an important difference in the position of the United States government then and now. They were proposing a radical departure from the policy of the country, and they may have needed information of that sort to support their case, but we certainly did not . . . .

We had a definite knowledge obtained from the history of the question, and we have brought down some statistics that we used at Washington, and they are already before the House. Our point of difference is that I do not agree with my hon. friend that those statistics were necessary for the consideration of what was the settled policy of the Dominion of Canada for the last 40 years. . . .

We founded our belief in reciprocity in natural products upon our faith in the resources of Canada, the conditions of our soil and climate, the intelligence of our people.

So we have the Minister of Finance saying in this House on the 6th April that reciprocity had been the settled policy of both political parties in this House for the last forty years. The hon. gentleman on the other side (Mr. Devlin), who preceded me in this debate, made the statement. This statement is inconsistent with the statement made by the Prime Minister in 1899 when he said that the people of Canada did not want reciprocity, and gave as a reason that they were independent of the American market. So, when the Minister of Finance says that both political parties in this country, for the last forty years, have been in favour of reciprocity with the United States he is not speaking by the book. He has told us that it was not necessary to have any facts, any statistics, it was not necessary to have any information when they went to Washington. Why, the mere statement of reciprocity in natural products was in itself quite sufficient. He seemed to regard reciprocity as if it were like the law of gravitation, or the precepts of the decalogue, an immutable truth dictated to us by Providence, away above and beyond the possibility of question or criticism. That is the way he seemed to regard reciprocity when he went to Washington—no information necessary, not necessary to make an inquiry as to prices, not necessary to ascertain what effect it would have upon interprovincial trade, not necessary to discover what effect it would have upon the hog industry, not necessary to make any inquiry as to how it would affect the milling industry—no information necessary, the offer of reciprocity in natural products, jumped at immediately without any information whatever. That was the position that the Minister of Finance took when he went o Washington. Not only did they agree to a free exchange of natural products, but they agreed upon a lower duty on more than one hundred manufactured articles.

Then, it has been said over and over again that the Prime Minister promised to appoint a commission of investigation before making any radical change in the tariff. He said in this House at the beginning of the session:

> I stated that we would have a commission of investigation before we undertook a revision of the tariff. Does any member on the other side of the House take issue with the promise I make. Would any of them advocate rushing into a revision of the tariff without previous investigation. Honourable members laugh at that but they will not dare to say they would favour such a course.

Let us look at the course of events. The Minister of Finance had been down at Washington in February, 1910. He had promised President Taft that later he would enter into a discussion with him with the view of establishing some such agreement as we have to-day. I think it is fair to assume that the Minister of Finance communicated to the Prime Minister what he had promised the President of the United States, that the Prime Minister knew, before he went on his western tour, that the Minister of Finance had promised the President of the United States to at least enter into a discussion respecting our trade relations. Knowing that, the Prime Minister, on his western tour, told the people that he would make no general change in our tariff without having first appointed a commission to inquire into and consult the various industries of this country. Has this been done? Why was it not done? We have no answer to that. The right hon. gentleman admits that he made the promise and he admits that he has not carried it out. Why? No reason given.

What is the agreement that these hon. gentlemen who went to Washington made with the government of the United States without any information? Those who were negotiating the treaty on the other side had any amount of information. They had books published. The government of the United States had taken great pains to provide their representatives with all the information which might be necessary. They had the president's message with statistics of trade, they had the evidence before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, they had the evidence of the Senate Committee, they had Senate document No. 849 of the world's prices, and so on, they had tariff series No. 26, published by the Department of Commerce and Labour describing Canadian prices and they had the advance sheet of the American census. They had all that information; we had not any. Our representatives knew the whole thing intuitively. We had been in favour of reciprocity for forty years; we did not require any information. The people of the United States did not enter into it in that way.

What have we? We have, speaking generally, a free interchange of natural products, all kinds of grain, live animals, dairy products, fish, salt, cheese, butter, and eggs. That is not all, Mr. Chairman; it is not confined to natural products. There are about a hundred manufactured articles that are included in this agreement in addition to natural products. This is a bargain that we have made not only with the United States but with thirteen countries because twelve others come under this agreement as proposed automatically. These other countries have been named before, but I shall name them again; The Argentine, Austria-Hungary, Bolivia, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Switzerland, and Venezuela. We permit the products of thirteen countries to come into Canada to compete with our farmers and we get the right to send our products into one country. That seems to be a jug handled policy. I have never met a farmer yet, since this treaty was suggested, who approves of it when you tell him that these thirteen other countries will come into our market and we have only the right to get into one. This agreement may be approached from two points of view: the economic and the sentimental. Gentlemen who advocate the agreement say that it should be approached from the business view point only, and in that they follow in the footsteps of their leader who many years ago said that business and not allegiance or blood was the foundation of trade. In order to get at what the Prime Minister's ideas really are on this agreement, I call attention to what he said in this House, just after an election on the 1st of May, 1891: ('Hansard,' 1891, page 27):

While they commit the mistake of basing their trade policy upon uniformity of allegiance and a mere sentiment, we of the Liberal party maintain that the policy of this country must be based not upon sentiment but upon business principles; and, fresh as we come from the people, I say that the only policy which will benefit this country is unrestricted reciprocity and continental freedom of trade. Sir Charles Tupper says in an article published a few days ago in the 'North American Review,' that the delusion, as he calls it, of unrestricted reciprocity was dead and buried. I am as good an authority on this subject as is Sir Charles Tupper, and I say it is more alive than ever.

Let me say in passing that it seems to me it is about to be resurrected if this agreement be adopted. At page 28, 'Hansard,' the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

Shall we be so diffident of our manhood that we dare not do what we think best for our interests, because, forsooth, some one might be dragged away from his allegiance to his country in favour of American citizenship.

That is exactly what he is saying to-day, and that is what gentlemen on the other side are saying. They say: Are we to lose the benefit of increased prices in horses and eggs, &c., because it may affect the allegiance of this country in favour of American citizenship? At page 29, 'Hansard,' Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

The right hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) said that this policy was hostile to Great Britain. Again I deny it; but, Sir, I am free to admit that I, for one, when I made up my mind in favour of this policy, looked up first and last to the interest of Canada and not to the interest of England. . . The hon. gentleman must have foreseen since this was to be a nation, that some day or other the interest of this young nation would come in contact with the interest of the mother land. It is absurd to suppose that situated as we are the interest of Canada will always be identical with the interest of Great Britain. Some day must come when the interests will clash and, whatever the hon. gentleman may be, for my part whenever it comes to that, and however much I must regret the necessity, I will stand by my native land. . . Now, Sir, we are agitating and we have agitated this policy of unrestricted reciprocity because we believe it is in the best interest of the country and not because we love England less, but because we love Canada more.

He (referring to Mr. Foster) speaks as if Canada were to remain for ever a colony, but I say that Canada is not always to remain a colony. Light as our dependence may be on the mother country that dependence is not to remain for ever. If we were to admit that, if we were to say that we were always to remain in a dependent condition, we would be the scorn of the world, and it would be scorn well deserved. . . We have self-government, we have a constitution of our own, we have interests which are separate and distinct from these which we hold in common with the empire of which we form a part, and our energies must seek wider fields abroad. Perhaps the next step may be said to be complete independence, but there is no desire to have complete independence in Canada to-day. Even with those who like myself look to independence as the supreme goal, there remains a love for the mother land and a desire to remain in connection with it, but in the nature of things our relations must be compatible with our interests. . . There is no desire to change our allegiance, but the conditions of our relations with the empire must be changed.

It is the destiny of the colonies to become nations as it is the destiny of a child to become a man, and while no doubt the idea of separation from the mother land causes a pang in the heart of every one, yet there is not a child who leaves his father's house who does not do so with a pang if his heart is in the proper place. There is a grander idea yet. John Bright truly said that England is the living mother of nations, and we may yet hope to see British communities dotting the earth's surface which I hold to be a grander idea than that of welding together a gigantic British Empire on the face of the earth. For my part that is the view I favour. I say, as I declared in Boston, that I should like to see a commercial alliance of all nations sprung from England. This is the policy I have favoured. But the fact remains, however, that our colonial citizenship is inferior and must be reformed. . . For, in the opinion of all, what Canada wants at this moment is foreign markets. . .

There is not a country on the face of the earth which ever achieved its independence except at the cost of blood and war and enmity with the parent state. I hold out to my fellow countrymen the idea of independence, but whenever the day comes it must come by the consent of both countries, and we should continue to keep the good feeling and the good will of the mother land. If we are true to our record we will again exhibit to the world the unique, the unprecedented example of a nation achieving its independence by slow degrees and as naturally as the severing of the ripe fruit from the parent tree.

Is there a Canadian anywhere who would not hail with joy the day when we would be deprived of the services of British diplomacy —British diplomacy so far as Canada is concerned has been a record of failure and of surrender and sacrifice.

I said that allegiance could not be the basis of trade. My hon. friend takes exception to that. He pretends that allegiance ought to be the basis of trade, that business is not to be the consideration, but that the consideration is to be the blood between the two countries. The hon. gentleman no doubt would prefer an English shilling to a Yankee dollar; but for my part I am differently constituted. I am ready any day, whether I am charged with annexation or not, to take a Yankee dollar in preferenec to an English shilling. That is the extent of my annexation. . . I have again and again repeated that the goal of my aspirations is the independenec of Canada, to see Canada an independent nation in due course of time.

That is what the right hon. gentleman says to-day. He says that he is simply looking at enhancing the price of the commodities of this country, and in a speech delivered by him on the 7th of March last he used these words:

I stated a moment ago that the agreement we made is simply to get better prices for the products of the Canadian farmer.

That is the whole object he had in view. That is the way he talked in 1891. Allegiance had nothing to do with it, it was a matter of trade, if allegiance suffered, so much the worse for allegiance. The hon. gentleman from Wright (Mr. Devlin) referred to the British preference, and I said a moment ago that those who advocated the adoption of this agreement say that it should be approached from the economical viewpoint, and that alone; that it should not be approached from the sentimental viewpoint, that there is no such thing as sentiment in business. Well, we find hon. gentlemen opposite boasting of the British preference. Whenever they desire to point to something that they have done to illustrate their loyalty—and I am not questioning their loyalty at all—they refer to the British preference. I remember the hon. the Postmaster General—and I was surprised to hear him do so—in a speech which he delivered in this House on the 3rd of February, 1910, referring to the British preference as an evidence of the loyalty of the Liberal party. He said on that occasion:

Were we disloyal when in 1897, of our own free will, as the first act of the Liberal administration, we granted to Great Britain what is called the British preference? At the time of the South African war were we disloyal when in spite of varying circumstances, we sent to South Africa the young men of this country to fight the battles of Great Britain?

So that the Postmaster General referred to the British preference not merely as a business transaction, but as an evidence of loyalty, as an evidence of sentiment. Why claim any loyalty for the British preference if the basis of trade is solely business? Now, let us look for a moment at this British preference to which our hon. friends on the other side of the House refer as if it were a sort of sacred sacro sanctity which it would be absolutely profane to discuss or criticise or question. I do not think there is any British preference about it at all; I do not think they are entitled to any credit for it at all. They never intended to give Great Britain any preference in that regard, and they are only entitled to credit for what they intended to do. I remember hearing of a couple of men who were at church one day, and one of them by mistake put a half-sovereign on the collection plate instead of a halfpenny, and when he got out of church, on his way home he discovered the mistake he had made. So he went back to the sexton and offered to give him a halfpenny and get back the half-sovereign. 'Oh, no,' said the sexton, 'you cannot do that; you put the half-sovereign on the plate, and there it must remain.' The man consoled himself by saying: 'Well, keep the half-sovereign; I will get credit for it on the judgment day.' 'Oh, no,' said the sexton, 'you will only get credit for the halfpenny you intended to give.'

Our hon. friends on the other side of the House take credit for the British preference; but they never intended to give a British preference, as I will endeavour to establish. Our friends came into power in the early part of July, 1896. They did not do anything by way of tariff revision that year; but in the session of 1897 they passed the Act which they now call the British preference, and let me read the section of the Act which bears upon it. 'An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the duties of customs,' assented to 29th June, 1897. Section 17 is in these words:

When the custom tariff of any country admits the product of Canada on terms which, on the whole, are as favourable to Canada as the terms of the reciprocal tariff herein referred to are to the countries to which it may apply, articles which are the growth, produce or manufacture of such country, when imported direct therefrom, may then be entered for duty, or taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada, at the reduced rates of duty provided in the reciprocal tariff set forth in schedule D to this Act.

Schedule D is in these words:

On all the products of countries entitled to the benefits of this reciprocal tariff, under the provisions of section 17, the duties mentioned in schedule A shall be reduced as follows:

On and after the 23rd of April, 1897, until the 30th day of June, 1898, inclusive, the reduction shall in every case be one-eighth of the duty mentioned in schedule A, and the duty to be levied, collected and paid shall be seven-eighths of the duty mentioned in schedule A.

On and after the 1st day of July, 1898, the reduction shall in every case be one-fourth of the duty mentioned in schedule A, and the duty to be levied, collected and paid shall be three-fourths of the duty mentioned in schedule A.

I have read the whole Act, and British preference is not mentioned in it at all; there is no reference in it to any preference to Great Britain. The offer is made to all countries of the world, and in introducing the tariff the Finance Minister took pride in saying that they were not giving anything to Great Britain. Here is what he said of the customs tariff of 1897, as reported in 'Hansard' of that year:

We do not by our resolution offer anything to Great Britain alone. We make our offer, not to Great Britain, but to every nation that is prepared to accept it. We make it to every country which is willing to establish fair and reasonable trade relations with Canada.

So that when they passed what is known as the British preference Act, or the section of the Customs Act in 1897, they had no intention of conferring any preference on Great Britain, but it was an offer made to all the nations of the world. But before the next session of parliament they found that they had got into difficulties owing to certain treaties that were in existence, and then they amended the Act, compelled to amend it by reason of those treaties, other countries claiming the right to come in under the provision as it stood in the Act of 1897. They amended that Act in these words—was assented to on the 13th June, 1898, section 2:

On and after the 1st day of August, 1898, section 17 of the said Act shall be repealed and the following shall be substituted therefor:

Articles which are the growth, produce or manufacture of any of the following countries——

Not of any countries of the world, as the Act of 1897 said:

—may, when imported directly into Canada from any such country, be entered for duty or taken out of warehouse for consumption in Canada at the reduced rate of duty provided in the British preferential tariff set forth in schedule D to this Act.

It goes on to specify the different countries, and then says:

Any other British colony or possession the customs tariff of which is, on the whole, as favourable to Canada as the British preferential tariff herein referred to is to such colony or possession.

So that these hon. gentlemen did not intend to give Great Britain any preference whatever when they passed the Act in 1897. They opened out the offer to the whole world, but a year afterwards, when they discovered that they had blundered, they were obliged to repeal that Act of 1897 and confine it to British possessions. So I hope our hon. friends will never again refer to the British preference as a manifestation of their loyalty. They are not entitled to any credit whatever for it, because they did not intend to confer any favour on Great Britain.

As my hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve) pointed out, it is no preference whatever. Why? Because we are permitting goods from the United States to come into this country at an average rate of 13 per cent and a very small fraction. I am speaking now of all the goods that come in from the United States, both dutiable and free. The average duty paid on all these last year was 13 per cent, while those that came from Great Britain were charged nearly 19 per cent on an average, taking both dutiable and free, and last year we imported from the United States free of duty $106,000,000 worth, and from Great Britain $23,000,000 worth. Still hon. gentlemen opposite will boast of the British preference and of their loyalty. But, with all that preference, there was a difference in favour of the United States last year of over 5 per cent and there has been that difference during many years. It is no answer to say that a large portion of the goods from the United States are brought in as raw material. What difference does that make to the country from which we import them? What difference does it make to Great Britain whether we allow these goods to come in from the United States free? What she is interested in is in getting her goods into Canada at a lower duty. But instead of charging a lower rate of duty on the average on goods imported from Great Britain as compared with goods imported from the United States, we are charging between 5 and 6 per cent higher, so that there is no British preference whatever. All these years there has been a difference in favour of the United States, and we are now asked to increase that preference by voting for this proposed agreement.

What will be the effect of adopting this agreement? Nobody can tell us what it will be because nobody knows. The whole thing is mere theory. We often hear the Reciprocity treaty of 1854 referred to as evidence that the pact now proposed will be beneficial to both countries. But we get no comfort whatever from history. The old Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 was in force some twelve years. In the first place, I deny that we were prosperous during the whole of that period; and in the second place I deny that the measure of prosperity which we did enjoy came to us by reason of that reciprocal agreement. What was going on in the world in 1854 when the farmers of this country were getting as high as $2.50 per bush for their wheat? An old gentleman in Elgin county told me that in those days he got $2.50 per bushel for his wheat in Port Stanley. Why did our farmers in those days get that high price? Was it because we had reciprocity with the United States? No, it was because two of the greatest nations on earth were at war in the Crimea. That is why we in Canada were prosperous in those years; but when peace was concluded between Russia and England in March, 1856, wheat dropped to 70 cents per bushel. What was the cause of that tumble? It was due to the fact that the war was over; and there are hon. gentlemen within the sound of my voice who know that the severest depression Canada ever suffered was in the years 1857, 1858 and 1859, during which we had all the benefits supposed to flow from this beautiful treaty of reciprocity. Banks were then tumbling to pieces, factories were closing, the farmers were selling their pianos to buy necessaries, and every one was suffering, yet these were the years when we had all the benefits of trading with the United States. Then there were other conditions prevailing during the last five years of that treaty which must not be lost sight of. Hundreds of thousands of American farmers, instead of sowing wheat and planting corn in their broad acres, were sowing death on the battle field, and consequently the United States were in absolute need of everything the farmers of this country could produce. In those days they bought everything we had to sell. Therefore, I have abundantly shown not only that we were not prosperous throughout the whole of the period during which the old reciprocity treaty lasted, but enjoyed only a measure of prosperity, and that measure of prosperity was not the result of reciprocity with the United States, but of the war between Great Britain and Russia in the first part of that period, and the civil war between the North and South in the latter part. So that we get no help whatever from history.

Who stand to benefit by any trade treaty? It is no advantage to two farmers to trade with each other, because they are both producing the same products. Each one has more wheat and corn and cattle and other agricultural products than he knows what to do with. To whom does the farmer look to trade with? He looks to the man who is making coats and shoes and binders and other things which the farmer requires, and who is prepared to buy in return the things which the farmer grows. I regret that there are some hon. gentlemen in this House who seem desirous to set up class against class. They appear to lose sight of the fact that the farmer requires the manufacturer, the artisan, the labourer, the merchant and the professional man, and that all these require the farmer. We are all dependent the one upon the other, and he is an enemy of his country who tries to set class against class, whether religious, racial or industrial. The prosperity in this country depends upon all these classes, and we require the whole of them; and in order to secure the best interests of this country, all these different classes must work together, and he is no friend of his country who attempts to set the one against the other. If we had a country like England lying alongside of us, it would be a great benefit to us to make trade as free as possible between the two, because the people of that country are manufacturers and consumers of our agricultural products. But it would be no advantage for two countries lying alongside of each other, both farming countries, to trade with each other. But of what class are the men with whom we are talking about making this agreement? Are they all manufacturers? No, they are farmers like ourselves. They export hundreds of million dollars worth of the very same kinds of produce that we grow.

The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) told us of the great quantities of hams that England bought from the United States. Then, of course, it is going to be a great benefit for us to get our hams into the United States. Logical, isn't it? In the year 1909, the United States exported immense quantities of the very sort of material of which we have a surplus—animals to the value of $22,645,000; breadstuffs $159,929,000; eggs, butter cheese, pork, &c., $166,000,000. Of what benefit is it to us to get into a country like that, where they produce more than they require, and are sending their surplus to the same market to which we are sending ours? The Finance Minister, the other day, said that our farmers would have three markets instead of two—not only the home market, and the British market which they now have, but the United States market as well. It does not necessarily follow that the opening of an additional market is a benefit to the farmers. Take the adjoining counties of Elgin and Middlesex—Elgin with about 40,000 and Middlesex with about 80,000; in Elgin we have a city of 15,000, while they have the city of London with 40,000;—would it be of any advantage to the farmers of Elgin to go into the chief market of the county of Middlesex? Why, they get as good prices in St. Thomas as they can get in London. The Elgin farmers come to their county town and the Middlesex farmers go to their county town. It would be no advantage to either of us to have two markets instead of one. The question of whether it is better to have two markets than to have one depends altogether upon circumstances. So, it is a mere theory that this market will be of great advantage to us. It never has been so far, and there is no evidence that it will be now. Of course, we have the opinion of the two very able gentlemen who went down to Washington. Well, an observant person learns something with the passing years; and one of the things he learns is that you never find the aggregate wisdom of humanity under one hat however enlarged by flattery or success. Another thing you learn is that a very intelligent and sincere opponent may differ from you in opinion, and still be right. Of course, we have the benefit of the judgment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson); but I am not prepared to submit my individual judgment to that of these gentlemen. I have watched the record of the Minister of Finance very closely for thirtv years, and more especially for the last three years; I have watched it very especially for the last three or four months; and I have never found anything in it to warrant the people of Canada in falling down before him and worshipping him. A few years ago, it was his best judgment—and I am speaking now only of his judgment—that it was in the interest of this country to tear up the British North America Act, and for the province of Nova Scotia to secede from the Dominion. Was his judgment good? Twenty years ago both he and the Minister of Customs were just as enthusiastically zealous for the unrestricted reciprocity doctrine preached by the present leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as they are to-day for this agreement. Well, I think the consensus of opinion in Canada to-day is that it is a good thing that we did not adopt unrestricted reciprocity twenty years ago. I believe the consensus of opinion among the people is that if we had adopted unrestricted reciprocity twenty years ago, we should be to-day—as the Hon. Edward Blake then said he expected we would be if this doctrine were adopted — both commercially and politically a part of the United States. Was the judgment of the Finance Minister good on that question? The Minister of Finance made a speech in this House a few years ago in favour of the construction of the National Transcontinental railway, and figured out that that road could be constructed from Winnipeg to Moncton for $51,300,000. This was his estimate for a road equal to the Intercolonial, but he told us—and I want to be perfectly fair with him—that to make a first-class road in every respect would cost about $3,000,000 more. I think it will be admitted by every one to-day that that road will never be completed for $200,000,000. Then we had him dealing, in 1906, with the manager of the Farmers' Bank. Were his dealings with the manager of the Farmers' Bank such as to cause any hon. gentleman in this House to have confidence in his judgment? So, I say, we cannot safely rely upon the judgment of the hon. Minister of Finance with reference to this compact. Of course, the Minister of Finance did not go down to Washington alone; he took with him the Minister of Customs. Well, poor Uncle Billy! No one ever supposed for a moment that he would ever lose sight of the biscuit box. We can imagine what occurred when these gentlemen were figuring this out. What do you think, Mr. Paterson, about putting fruit on the free list? Yes, put fruit on the free list; if the fruit growers can't make money growing fruit let them destroy their apple-trees and raise mangolwurtzels. And fruit was put on the free list.

What about biscuits, Mr. Paterson? Oh biscuits, it was necessary in the interests of the plain people that they should bear 32½% and so they remain at that rate. So I say it is a mere matter of theoretical speculation, as to whether this agreement would prove beneficial to the people of this country or not. As I said a few minutes ago, the United States have a great surplus of the very same kind of goods that we desire to export, and under the agreement we admit the produce of the Argentine republic as well as that of eleven other countries. I was surprised at the magnitude of that country when I came to look into it. It has 14 provinces, and 10 territories, and is making even more rapid progress than Canada. I do not know whether or not they have a Sir Wilfrid Laurier there, but they are getting on faster than the Canadian people. Their population has doubled in the last fifteen years. Their trade in 1909 was larger than ours. Their imports amounted to $302,756,000 and their exports to $397,000,000, a total trade, import and export of $700,106,623. They exported of live stock and products of live stock in 1909, $153.548,356. They exported of agricultural products, $230,503,996. They exported of chilled and frozen beef and mutton and sundry meats frozen, 296,376 tons of a value of $29,000,000. Their exports per head are nearly twice as large as those of the Canadians. The Argentine republic exported per head of population during 1909, $61.10, while Canada exported per head in that year $39. In that year the countries of South America that are admitted to the Canadian market under this agreement, The Argentine, Venezuela and Colombia exported to the United States and paid a high duty on goods to the value of $37,554,095. If this agreement goes into force and the Argentine republic have the right, as they admittedly would have, to send their produce into Canada free, these large quantities that they are now sending into the United States under a very high duty would likely be diverted to Canada where they would have no duty to pay, and would compete with similar Canadian products. This produce of the Argentine republic that is now shipped to foreign countries could easily be sent to Canada, as the freight rate by water is very low. They could put frozen meat into the market at Halifax and Montreal at a lower rate than our farmers are getting for that sort of produce now. So far as figures can prove anything I think we may reasonably suppose that the competition of The Argentine would injure rather than benefit the farmers, would reduce the price rather than enhance it.

On March 29, of this year, my hon. friend from Leeds asked a question about the quantities of meats that were imported into Canada during the months of October, November, December, January and February. The Minister of Customs in reply gave the imports of bacon and ham, shoulders and sides, for the five months. Assuming that the same rate of imports would keep up for the whole year as for the five months, there would be imported from the United States 4,238,022 lbs., and of beef, salted in barrels, for a year, 2,266,296 lbs., at an average of 6-7/10 cents a lb. Of fresh mutton and lamb from the United States we got at the rate of 805,274 lbs., at an average of 9 cents a lb., and from Australia 2,067,175 lbs. at an average of 6 9/10 cents. Of pork barrelled in brine, from the United States, 9,133,545 lbs. at an average cost of 9 cents. Of other meats 469,060 lbs. at an average of 13 cents. Of cheese large quantities came from the United States, although the imports are mostly from Switzerland and Italy. Fresh meat from the United States amounted to 360,271 lbs. at 14 cents. The total meats from the United States coming into Canada for one year at the rate given here for the five months would be 17,272,468 lbs. In one month (February, 1911) we imported into this country from the United States 719,-315 dozen eggs. For the year that would amount to 8,631,780 dozen of eggs, over 8,-000,000 dozen in one year. These figures give us some idea of the conditions that we would be up against. These meats are now paying 3 or 4 cents a pound, but under the proposed arrangement the duty is reduced from 3 or 4 cents to 1¼ cents. If these large quantities come in at the comparatively very high rate of duty now imposed, how much more will come in when the duty is reduced to 1¼ cents a pound. It is reasonable to suppose that the quantity will be largely increased, and of course the same thing applies to eggs.

I remember the Minister of Customs going up and down western Ontario years ago and seting forth one of the theories of free trade, that is that the consumer always pays any duty that is placed upon an article. He used to say that if a duty was placed on any implement required by the farmer it would enhance the price of the implement by that amount. With an article of clothing it would be the same, the consumer simply had to pay that much more, as he always paid the duty. The free traders in England even go so far as to say that when a man owned two farms, bofh growing hay, one on either side of the river, on one side of which was a city, on the hay from the far side of the river the people of the city would have to pay the 50 cents toll charged the farmer for hauling that hay over the bridge. They argue that even in a case of that kind the consumer pays the duty.

The theory of these free traders has been that the consumers always pay the duty. But, our opponents have all at once discovered that it is not the consumer at all that pays the duty, but that it is the producer in Canada that pays the duty on stuff going into the United States. That is what they are telling us now. They are telling us that the fisherman gets less for his fish by reason of the duty on it when he sends it into the United States. They are telling the farmer that the farmer gets less for his products that he sends into the United States because he has to pay the duty. They have discovered all at once that it is the producer that pays and not the consumer, although they have been telling us for forty years that the consumer always pays the duty. What are those on the other side of the line who are in favour of this agreement telling the people there? They are telling the people: You are paying the duty on the stuff coming into this country from Canada; if the duty is taken off you will get it so much cheaper. The supporters of this agreement in the United States are telling the people that the consumers are paying the duty, and the supporters of this agreement in Canada are telling the people that it is the producer that pays the duty. Who is right? We do not pretend to be free traders on this side of the House. We say that sometimes it is the consumer who pays the duty. If you put a duty of fiftv cents a pound on tea coming into this country the producers will pay every cent of it, but if a man were foolish enough to send a thousand pounds of tea to Japan, and Japan had a duty on tea the consumers would have to pav the whole of it to get it into the markets of Japan. Sometimes the producer pays, sometimes the consumer pays, and sometimes it is divided between them. That is our doctrine, but the doctrine of the free traders, I repeat, is that the consumer always pays the duty. Now, all at once, they discover that it is the producer who has to pay it, and pays the whole of it. The Toronto ' Globe ' of the 16th March, in a short paragraph, proves to its own satisfaction that under this agreement the producer would get more for his stuff, and the consumer would pay less for it. It is going to benefit both producer and consumer. The farmer will get more for his butter, and the mechanic will get it cheaper. That is a nice doctrine. Can you ride two horses at the same time going in opposite directions? That is the impression that hon. gentlemen opposite are striving to produce in this regard.

But, in addition, over and above this question of price, and this is the unimportant part of it, it would seem to me to be perfectly clear that if we enter into this agreement we will therebv sacrifice our fiscal independence. I understand very well that it is said in the agreement that either party can at any time abrogate it. That is all right in theory, but in practice it would not work. It would be regarded by our great neighbours as an act of unfriendliness to abrogate it, just as they regarded, while the Elgin treaty was in force, our action in increasing our tariff for the purpose of enhancing our revenue, as an unfriendly act to them. The gave that as the reason why they abrogated the treaty.

Now, what about our fiscal independence? We had an example of it a few weeks ago when 1,000 fruit-growers came to this building to lay their grievances before the ministers, and every one who heard them must admit they made out a strong case. Under ordinary circumstances the Prime Minister would have said to these gentlemen: We are very much interested in your remarks; there seems to be something in what you have said, and we will consider it, and if we can grant you relief without prejudicing the great masses of the people of this country we will do so. But, Sir, Canada no longer has her fiscal independence, and the Prime Minister was obliged to say to them: You have come too late, we have entered into an agreement with the people at Washington, and we cannot do anything for you however desirous we may be to help you. Is not that true? And suppose 12 months from now, 1,000 farmers, not fruit-growers, should come from Ontario and say to this government: Under the old duty of 3 cents a pound on pork we made the hog industry a paying one, but you have reduced it from 3 cents to 1¼ cents, and owing to the cheap production of hogs in the western states, and owing to the reduction of duty on beef coming from the Argentine and Australia and New Zealand, we are unable to compete in our home market, and we desire you to restore the old duty of 3 cents per pound. What position would the government be in, tied as they are by this treaty? Would not the Prime Minister have to say to the farmers as he said to the fruit-growers the other day: You have made out a good case but we are tied up by this agreement with the government of Washington. I am sorry, but we can do nothing for you. Is not that the truth? So, in theory, while we may retain our fiscal independence, in practice we would lose it if we entered into this agreement, and this government would have to consult Washington from day to day if it proposed to revise our own tariff. Is that a position that a self-respecting people should place themselves in? It seems to me not. Now, Sir, we have been endeavouring to cultivate, and we have succeeded in cultivating a national sentiment in this country. We remember that there was no such thing as a national sentiment prior to confederation, and there was very little national sentiment for some years after confederation. But for years every good citizen of Canada has been striving to cultivate a national sentiment from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and we have been told that one of the ways to cultivate a national sentiment is to cultivate trade between the different provinces of the confederation. Is there anything that contributes more directly to the spread of national sentiment than trade between the provinces. Surely, if this agreement goes into effect we will be trading north and south instead of east and west, and if you divert the trade from east and west to north and south the tendency would be to separate these provinces rather than to weave them together. A few years ago the Prime Minister gave as a reason for the construction of the National Transcontinental railway, that it was essential to the existence of this country, that we should have a railway to carry the products of the western provinces through Canadian territory to the sea-board, and we have been spending hundreds of millions of dollars to construct these east and west lines of traffic. I do not say that the rails would rust on these lines if this agreement be put into force, but I do say the tendency would be to diminish national sentiment, to cultivate trade from north to south instead of from east to west, and eventually to cultivate sentiment in that direction also.

Sir, it was unwise for the government to enter into this agreement, and it would be unwise for parliament to ratify it for the following among other reasons:

1. All men agree that we are enjoying unprecedented prosperity as we are, with almost absolute certainty of a continuance thereof—

(a) Abundant harvests and high prices amply reward the tiller of the soil, whose income increases much more rapidly than his outgo.

(b) The manufacturer thrives with large orders and satisfactory profits.

(c) Artisans and labourers are fully employed at good wages.

(d) Commerce is rapidly expanding and accounts are promptly paid.

(e) Transportation facilities are increasing to meet the growing demand therefor.

(f) Interprovincial trade is active and strengthening the bonds of commercial friendship and national unity.

(g) Trade with the mother land is growing and adding to the vitality of the empire.

(h) We govern ourselves and enjoy all the rights and privileges incident to British institutions without the cost of monarchy.

(i) That, for the upbuilding of its various parts, it is desirable to establish a system of preferential trade within the empire which this agreement would retard or prevent.

2. All moderate men, I think, agree that the effect of the adoption of this agreement upon these various conditions is, to say the least, absolutely uncertain—that it might be adverse to many if not to all of them.

3. That probably one-half at least of our most capable, experienced and patriotic citizens, of all classes, regardless of race, creed or political affiliations, sincerely believe that many, if not all, of these laudable aspirations and happy conditions would be thwarted and injuriously affected, respectively, were the agreement enforced. They have a conscientious conviction that its adoption would tend to the separation of our provinces rather than to their unity, would work a practical surrender of our fiscal independence, would be followed by an irresistible demand for the free admission of all manufactured goods with its inevitable accompaniments, political as well as commercial union.

In these circumstances, admitted by all, where is the man bold and reckless enough to assume the responsibility for the adoption of this agreement. Nothing short of omniscience can foresee the consequences, near or remote, of a change so radical. Who possesses it? Surely not my right hon. friend, whose sins of omission and commission are already too grievous to be borne, surely not the hon. Minister of Finance, whose errors of judgment have often led him into paths bestrewn with the wrecks of political fads; surely none of the rest of my hon. friends opposite, whose potency on this question counts only on a division.

I do not mean to say dogmatically that these disastrous consequences would necessarily follow the adoption of the agreement, although with many, perhaps with a majority, I verily believe they would. Would prices to the producer be higher while to the consumer they would be lower? Impossible! Would a large diversion of trade to north and south channels lessen that in east and west courses? Surely! Would the national sentiment which we have been anxiously and successfully cultivating for forty years, largely through interprovincial trade, be strengthened? Most assuredly not! With 92,000,000 on one side and 8,000,000 on the other which would be the dominant partner and dictate terms? Undoubtedly the former! Would misunderstandings arise which could be settled only by our yielding or by a rupture of the pact with all the unfriendliness incident thereto? In all probability! Was Sir Wilfrid Laurier right when he said: 'The best and most effective way to maintain friendship with our American neighbours is to be absolutely independent of them? Certainly he was! Would our fiscal independence be sacrificed? Probably, but we do not know. Would unrestricted reciprocity and commercial union follow? Probably, although we do not know! If so, would that lead to political union? Probably, but we do not know. These are unsolved problems. Would it be wise to risk our present prosperous condition for the mere chance of bettering it, while disasters most momentous might follow? Surely that would not be the part of wisdom. Shall we swap certainty for uncertainty? Common sense answers 'No.'

The government proposes to stake the country and take the gambler's chance. And that, too, when every passing breeze is laden with gifts for Canada.

The people should have an opportunity to speak. Let the whole people speak. They have not spoken. They have not had an opportunity to speak. If the majority be favourable the minority will yield as gracefully as possible and hope for the best. It is idle; it is unfair to the people; it is the trick of a crafty politician to urge the enforcement of the pact for a year or two and then go to the people. During that time injuries might accrue which would be irreparable. Let us have the voice of the people—of the whole people—at the proper time which is before the adoption of the arrangement. I appeal to my fellow members to stop, to, think, to refuse to take the risk of sacrificing our all for the mere uncertainty of mercenary gain. I appeal to my fellow members not to throw upon the table of chance all we hold most dear—not to entrust our all to this get-rich-quick device which cannot guarantee even a mercenary return. I appeal to my fellow members either to take the responsibility of rejecting this measure entirely as involving the sacrifice of certain prosperity for unknown consequences which may prove tremendously disastrous, or at least to insist upon the people's having an opportunity of expressing their judgment before it be enacted.

Mr. Chairman, on the 30th of November last, before we had any report from the two gentlemen who went to Washington, when the right hon. leader of the government said that we desired that they should eschew the commissioners from Washington as we would a pestilence, I suggested, in the course of some remarks that I made, not that we should eschew them as we would a pestilence, but that we should first ascertain from the government at Washington what we could get and what it would cost us to get it, and then we should submit the proposition to the people of Canada and get their opinion upon it before making it law. Of course, it is said that it is perfectly constitutional to submit the question to the people's representatives in this House; but if the government were to take that position at all, they should have submitted it as a non-party question. What did the president of the United States do in this agreement? He did not undertake to secure the necessary legislation. He undertook simply 'to recommend to Congress the adoption of such legislation as may be necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to the proposed arrangement.' Our representatives did not undertake to recommend to the parliament of Canada. They undertook to see to it that that legislation should be passed, in these words:

> The Canadian government will communicate to the parliament of Canada the conclusions now reached, and will thereupon take the necessary steps to procure such legislation as is required to give effect to the proposed arrangement.

And they come into this House and submit the arrangement as a party question. They do not say to their followers: Gentlemen, the people of this country have never expressed their judgment on this question; you have never expressed your judgment on it; we want your judgment on it; it is not a party question; we do not propose to make it a party question; we ask you to get all the information you can on the question, to exercise your best judgment on it, and then vote as you think the interest of the country demands, without regard to party. That would have given us an opportunity to get the best opinion of the members of this House on this question, unbiased by partisanship. I have no doubt that if the two gentlemen who went to Washington had made an agreement to exchange Ontario for the Hawaiian islands, a majority of the gentlemen on the other side of the House would have backed them up. This question ought to be considered without any regard to the ties of party. Each man in this House ought to give to the people of this country the benefit of his unprejudiced and unbiassed judgment in regard to this great question. My own idea, as I said last November, is that we ought to go to the people, that the people ought to have an opportunity of discussing this question. It is too important a matter to be decided by the representatives of the people in this House. There are thousands of men in the country who know just as much about this question, and perhaps more than the majority of the members of this House. I know that there are business men in my constituency whose judgment on this question is just as good as mine, perhaps better. How are these people to get an opportunity to express their judgment on this question? I cannot express it. I have no means of ascertaining how the majority of my constituents think on this question. The only way we can ascertain that is by means of the ballot box. If we desire to get the judgment of the people on this question, let us hang it up for six months or twelve months; there is no hurry about it; let us have the census taken and a redistribution afterwards; and then let us have an election, and let the people say what they think about this great question; and to whatever they decide the minority will submit as gracefully as possible. To put the arrangement in force for six months or twelve months, and then to go and ask the people how they like it is not fair to the people of this country. I submit once more that the fair and proper thing in these circumstances is to give to the people of Canada, the whole people of Canada—the farmer, the artisan, the manufacturer, the labouring man and the merchant—an opportunity to express their opinion on this great question, and in that general consensus of opinion we are more likely to reach what is right and in the best interests of this country than we are by adopting the ipse dixit of the two men who went to Washington, or the opinion, biased as it is by partisanship, of the hon. members of this House.

On motion of Mr. M. Y. McLean (South Huron) committee rose and reported progress.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 10.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 11, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUEBEC BRIDGE CONTRACT.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if the contract for the Quebec bridge has been awarded and do the plans provide for a driveway and foot bridge? If not, why?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, the contract has been awarded for the construction of the superstructure of the bridge at Cap Rouge, west of Quebec. It does not provide for roadways. The decision to construct only a railway bridge was not arrived at without very serious consideration. In a way it would have been more satisfactory to the government and those connected with the work, as well as the residents of Quebec and vicinity, had the original idea been carried out. The engineers, while expressing the view that a bridge on the design including roadways, tramways, as well as railways, could have been successfully constructed and erected, were still of the opinion that serious difficulties could be obviated in the carrying out of this gigantic enterprise if the design on which the contract has been let were adopted. Add to this the great difference in cost, and it will appear evident, I hope to every thoughtful man, that the wiser course was pursued. The Board of Engineers brought to the attention of the government the fact that over several large bridges electric lines use the same tracks as the steam railways, and they expressed the belief that this could be done on the Quebec bridge. Here are the figures:

With roadways, &c.—
Weight of metal..	132,200,000 lbs.
(This does not include weight of material used in making of roadways.)
For railway bridge only.	95,900,000 lbs.
Difference in weight.. ..	36,300,000 lbs.
Cost as per estimated quantities—
With roadways, &c..	$11,171,100 00
With road material..	75,000 00
Rails for tramways..	5,000 00
Approaches for roadway..	200,000 00
Total..	$11,451,100 00
Cost of design adopted for railway only, on estimated weight..	8,650,000 00
Difference in cost..	2,801,100 00
The government has suggested that the sum of $550,000 contributed by the province of Quebec and the city of Quebec for roadway purposes on this bridge, can be handed back to them and still there will be a saving of	$2,251,100 00

WRECK OF STEAMER IROQUOIS.

Mr. SMITH (Nanaimo). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), if he has received any official report of the foundering of the steamship 'Iroquois' in the Gulf of Georgia?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, late last night I got a report from our agent that such a wreck had occurred. We immediately gave instructions to give all aid possible and at the same time to make a preliminary investigation.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that a government steamer?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

CUSTOMS DUTIES 1906-1910.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to mention a circumstance which was brought to the attention of the House yesterday by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who called attention to an unfortunate change in two columns of figures. In some way or other, incomprehensible to me, the children got badly mixed up and the resultant harmony is not exactly what I had expected. However, I was able to catch the revised edition before it left port and——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The result will appear.

Mr. FOSTER—it will be arranged.

COAL STRIKES IN THE WEST.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to inquire of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. King), if there is any change in the situation regarding the strike in the Crowsnest Pass, in British Columbia?

Mr. KING. I may say in reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Herron), that I received this morning, from the Western Coal Operator's Association, a wire which concludes by saying that:

Should the miners make application for a board, we would welcome the same. Failing their doing so, we court the fullest investigation in any board you may appoint.

I received from the secretary of District Union No. 18 of the miners the following wire:

Will you withhold appointing Royal Commission for a few days, have been endeavouring to arrange board meeting, but owing to the members being scattered in district it has been impossible.

Expect to be in session on or before Thursday morning, will then be able to give a decided answer to your communication handed to me on Saturday by Mr. McNiven. Kindly wire reply.

(Sgd.) A. J. CARTER.

It seems to me, in view of the wire which Mr. Carter sent that he was endeavouring to get the miners together to consider the whole matter, that the industrial peace would be promoted by the delay which had been requested, and therefore I answered as follows:

Ottawa, April 11, 1911.

A. J. Carter,
Secretary District Union No. 18,
U. M. W. of A.,
Fernie, B.C.

Your wire April 10th received. At your request and in view of circumstances mentioned, government will withhold further action pending meeting of miner's board on or before Thursday.

(Sgd.) W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Minister of Labour.

In view of the statement of the operators that they will be willing to have a board, I hope that the miners will also see their way clear to request a board on Thursday.

CORONATION CONTINGENT.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Militia (Sir Frederick Borden), when it is probable the names of the officers and men, as far as possible, who are to constitute the coronation contingent may be available. Are there any cadets to go? By cadets I mean cadets of the ordinary civil squads. Will any cadets of the Royal Military College be selected to go?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the list of officers will be ready to-morrow. and it will be published immediately, cadets are not invited. We were invited to send a contingent of about 700 of the active militia which, of course, would not include the cadets. I think twelve cadets, however, are going over to take part in rifle shooting. That is an entirely different thing. As to the men who have been selected, I think the names have been already published but if not I will see that they are.

Mr. HUGHES. Any of the Royal Military College?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur), not to forget the request that I made to him the other day about the quantities of fish that were transhipped from the maritime provinces under the arrangement he has for paying part of the freight.

Mr. BRODEUR. I called the attention of my officers to it, and they are preparing the figures. It will be ready very soon.

WAYS AND MEANS—NEW POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Mr. Speaker, befor you leave the chair, I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), to a question I placed on the order paper on the 16th March regarding a design for new postage stamps. On that date I asked the following question:

1. Is the government aware that the governments of Australia and South Africa have offered substantial prizes for the best designs for new postage stamps, emblematic of the present reign, for those portions of the empire?

2. What steps is this government taking to secure a set of postage stamps for Canada which will be characteristic of the country and of artistic merit?

3. Is it the intention of the government to offer prizes for the best designs in order to encourage Canadian artists? If not, who will prepare the designs?

4. Will an opportuuity be afforded to the members of the House to inspect whatever designs may be submitted to the Post Office Department, before the selection is finally made?

To which the hon. Postmaster General made the following reply:

We are not aware in the Post Office Department of what is being done in this matter by the governments of Australia and South Africa. What we have done is this: We have written to our High Commissioner in London, Lord Strathcona, and he is in communication with the home government in order to arrange for a postage stamp in Canada similar to the one which will be issued at the time of the coronation for the United Kingdom. We have not yet received the design, but as soon as received, I shall have no objection to laying it on the table.

Last Friday the Postmaster General stated that he had already received a design from the Imperial authorities, but it has not yet been laid upon the table of the House. It would appear to me that the government of Canada should encourage home talent and give Canadian artists a chance to compete. I quote the following from the London 'Times' of February

AUSTRALIA'S NEW STAMPS. DESIGNS INVITED FROM ARTISTS.

It was stated in the 'Times' of February 10, in an article on 'The Empire's new stamps,' that the federal government of Australia would probably offer a handsome prize for competitive designs of a series of Commonwealth stamps. The Australian High Commissioner in London has now received the terms of this offer, and is taking steps to bring it to the notice of the public, in the hope that it will be well responded to by artists. The conditions of the competition are set forth as follows by the Hon. Josiah Thomas, Postmaster General of the Commonwealth:

Skilled artists are invited to submit competitive designs for a uniform postage stamp for the Commonwealth.

The size of the stamp for which designs are invited will be one and one-eighth inch by seven-eighths inch oblong.

Designs must not exceed four times the measurement specified for the stamps and should be accompanied by photographic reductions to the sizes required for the stamps.

Two premiums, one of £100 and one of £50, will be paid for the designs which are adjudged by a board to be appointed for the purpose of adjudication on the designs submitted by competitors, to be first and second, respectively, in order of merit, provided such designs are deemed worthy of being awarded a premium.

In selecting the designs preference will be given to those which best lend themselves to engraving on the reduced scale.

The designs must contain features characteristic of Australia, and also the words 'Australia' and 'postage,' as well as the stamp value in Arabic figures or in both figures and letters.

The treatment of the designs should not be made too photographic or realistic, and it must be in accordance with the more formal designs to be found in the best postage stamps.

The premium designs will become the sole property of the Postmaster General.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

Designs will be received up to noon on May 31, 1911, and must be addressed to the Secretary, Postmaster General's Department, 51 Spring street, Melbourne. They must be endorsed, 'Designs for Commonwealth postage stamp,' and if sent by post must be registered and the postage thereon prepaid.

The designs should not be signed with the name of the designer, but should bear only a nom de plume or private mark for purposes of identity, and the accompanying letter containing the designer's name and address, as well as a copy of the nom de plume or private mark on the designs, should be inclosed in a separate sealed envelope, which will be opened after the designs have been adjudicated upon.

The Postmaster General does not bind himself to select any design and designs not selected will be returned.

Until the new Commonwealth stamps are issued, the stamps of the various states have been made interchangeable, as in South Africa, Messrs. Whitfield, King & Co., the stamp dealers at Ipswich, calling attention to this fact, write to the 'Times,' saying: By every mail we receive letters from one state prepaid with the stamps of another state. For example, the last mail brought us letters from Sydney, New South Wales, bearing stamps of Queensland, South Australia, West Australia, Tasmania and Victoria.

I believe that South Africa, as well as Australia, has offered to artists living in that colony prizes for designs. I think that Canada, as the first dominion of the empire should encourage home talent, and that our Postmaster General should see that his department will offer prizes, as the other colonies have done. There is an interesting article in the London 'Times,' of February 10, 1911, on 'the empire's new stamps,' which, however, is quite long, and I shall not detain the House by reading it. I am sure the House will be glad to have the assurance of the Postmaster General that he will offer prizes to Canadian competitors.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have practically nothing to add to my answer to this question put by my hon. friend (Mr. White) on the Order Paper on the 16th of March last. On my way home from England last winter, I was made aware that Canada should accept, so far as possible, the design prepared by the home authorities for the coronation stamp. We do not intend to issue a series of stamps, as was done on the occasion of the Quebec tercentenary. The postal union is opposed to frequent changes in the designs of stamps in the different countries, and the special stamp for the coronation will represent as faithfully as possible features of our new king. The Post Office Department has agreed, if it meets with approval, to accept the design prepared by the home authorities. A few days ago I received that design, but the department has not yet passed judgment on it. Even if we did not accept the design I do not think we should have to offer prizes to secure one, because we may rest assured that the American Bank Note Company at Ottawa, with which the government has a contract, is quite able to cope with the situation. We have the testimony of the highest authorities in the world to the efficiency and the ability of the designers of the American Bank Note Company. When the Quebec tercentenary stamps were issued a few years ago, I had the great honour of presenting a complete collection of those stamps to one who is known as one of the highest authorities in the world, no less a person than His Majesty the King. His Majesty is known as a great philatelist, and he declared that the collection was one of the most beautiful he had ever seen. If it happened that we could not accept the design sent to us by the home authorities, and had to provide one for ourselves, I think we can give the contract to the American Bank Note Company feeling confident that they will be able to cope with it successfully.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The stamp I refer to is not the coronation stamp, but a stamp emblematic of the reign of our present King.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is mistaken there. The stamp to be issued by Great Britain and by Canada is a stamp which will represent the head and the features of His Majesty, and we must of course produce a representation which will give as much satisfaction as possible, first to the King, and then to his subjects.

Mr. SPROULE. While on this subject of stamps, might I ask the Postmaster General whether the Quebec Tercentenary stamps can be used on mailable matter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they purchasable in lesser quantities than a full set?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. They have been purchased in large quantities by collectors, but I think there are some still on sale in the various post offices.

Mr. SPROULE. I made inquiries at the Ottawa post office, and they refused to sell less than a full set.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know that there are half sets, but if my hon. friend wishes to get a stamp of any denomination detached from the set, he is entitled under the rules of the department to get it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. M. Y. McLEAN (South Huron). Mr. Chairman, important and interesting as this question which is now before the committeee is, I think I would not have ventured to intrude any remarks on the House at this advanced stage of the discussion were it not for the fact that the constituency which I have the honour to represent is almost exclusively an agricultural constituency. Indeed, my good friend from North Bruce (Mr. Tolmie), who is quite conversant with my constituency, who has travelled over pretty nearly the whole of Canada, and who always speaks the truth, has frequently said to me: 'South Huron is the best agricultural constituency in Canada.' Perhaps my native modesty would not permit me to go quite that far; but I will say this, that for fertility of soil, for careful, intelligent and scientific cultivation, for neat, comfortable and commodious homesteads, it would not easily be surpassed, Under these circumstances, Sir, I feel that I would not be doing my duty did I not voice what I believe to be the opinions and views of a very large majority of my constituents by placing myself on record as being in favour of a proposition which will so immensely advance the agricultural interest of this country; and, Sir, we know that, the agricultural interest, being the basic interest, we cannot benefit that interest without also benefiting all other interests which are more or less dependent upon it.

Now, I listened very attentively last night to the address delivered by my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers), and it may be due perhaps to my obtuseness, but I failed to recognize one single new argument or one single new sentiment in that address. In fact, he spoke all around the subject, and on all manner of subjects except the one which was before the committee; and the thought passed through my mind, surely he must have a weak case when so able a man and so practised a speaker could make so little of it. But, Sir, there was one matter which my hon. friend alluded to, and to which I think I shall have to refer also He spoke of the preferential tariff towards Great Britain; and. lest I should not correctly interpret the hon. gentleman, I will read his remarks on that subject. This is what he said:

So that these hon. gentlemen did not intend to give Great Britain any preference whatever when they passed the Act in 1897. They opened out the offer to the whole world, but a year afterwards, when they discovered that they had blundered, they were obliged to repeal that Act of 1897 and confine it to British possessions. So I hope our hon. friends will never again refer to the British preference as a manifestation of their loyalty. They are not entitled to any credit whatever for it, because they did not intend to confer any favour on Great Britain.

Now, I will read to the House an extract from the speech of the hon. the Finance Minister, delivered when he was introducing the resolutions on that subject, and leave the House to judge of the accuracy of my hon. friend's statement. On April 22, 1897, in the Budget speech, the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), when introducing these resolutions, concluded with these words:

'But why should we wait for England to take action? England has dealt generously with us in the past. England has given us a larger degree of liberty perhaps than is possessed by any other country on the face of the earth. She has given us liberty to tax her wares even when she admits our goods free, and we have taxed them to an enormous degree. Why should we wait for England to do more Somebody must make a move in this matter, and we propose that Canada shall lead the way. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that our project of freer trade with England is a delusive one.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER. Hear hear.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.—Is it delusive. When I place these resolutions on the table of this House tonight, they go into effect, and I speak with pride, in the name of the liberal party, and the hon. gentlemen around me will share that pride, when I say that to-morrow morning, at every custom house in Canada from ocean to ocean, the doors will open on terms of freer trade with the mother country. I cannot doubt that this tariff will commend itself to this house and country, and when this policy shall have passed its various stages, when it shall have passed into law, then the members of the parliament of Canada may feel that, in this glorious year of Jubilee, they have made a noble contribution to that splendid parliamentary record which Tennyson had in his mind when he pictured the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria:

And statesmen at her council met,
Who knew the seasons when to take Occasion by the hand; and make
The bounds of freedom wider yet.

These words of the Finance Minister demonstrate clearly and conclusively the idea which was in the mind of the government and the Liberal party in granting this preference to Great Britain; and in my opinion the statement I have just read fully justifies every pretension made by the Liberal party regarding the advantages which we have given to Great Britain, and the reasons which induced us to give them.

I do not intend to go at any length into figures of statistics, nor do I propose to quote many extracts. I purpose rather simply laying down certain principles and from these endeavour to prove to this House and country the benefit which this proposed agreement will be to Canada. But before doing so, I desire to congratulate the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) and the hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) on the great and grand work they did for Canada while in Washington. When these negotiations were first spoken of, the doubt was very generally expressed throughout the Conservative press and also, I think, by opposition members in this House that our Canadian commissioners would not be able to cope with the keen, shrewd, sharpwitted, farseeing, experienced American politicians, that our commissioners would be sure to get the worst of the deal, and that our better plan would be to leave the matter in abeyance, turn our backs on any proposition from the United States, and not deal with them at all. Well, I think we can say that the results have shown that our Canadian commissioners have not only been able to hold their own with the American negotiators but have got the best of the bargain all along the line. Certainly it is a fact which cannot be gainsaid that the Americans have made the larger and by far the greater number of concessions. But it is not a matter of very great importance whether the United States or Canada has got the best of the bargain. The important question for us to consider is whether this proposition will be beneficial to Canada. If we can convince ourselves that it will, we should be only too glad if it will also benefit our neighbours. I remember also that when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) spoke on this subject, he thought it worth his while to go a good piece out of his way and embellish his speech by very derogatory remarks concerning our commissioners. Now, this was not the first commission that went to Washington for the purpose of endeavouring to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States. Preceding Conservative governments sent a good many such delegations to Washington for a similar purpose. Some of the ablest men in the Conservative party went to Washington on a similar errand. At one time even Sir John Macdonald, himself, went there to endeavour to obtain a treaty of reciprocity with the United States. Sir Leonard Tilley also went to Washington for that purpose, and Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John Rose, and if I remember right so also did the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). All the delegations, composed of these able men, possibly some of the ablest men we ever had on the Conservative side, went to Washington and returned empty-handed as they went. But the commissioners appointed by this government returned with an agreement, signed and sealed, which, if ratified by the parliaments interested, will confer inestimable benefits on this country for a great many generations to come. But here is another striking contrast between the two parties. On past occasions when Conservative governments sent their emissaries to Washington, their emissaries went with their hats in their hands to beg of the United States to give them a reciprocity treaty. Since then, however, circumstances have changed. The United States, in the present instance, took the initiative, and sent their emissaries to Ottawa to ask this government to negotiate a treaty. You will see, therefore, that there is a vast difference between the two positions, and I want to ask the attention of my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) to that fact. I would ask him where is the club which he last night told us was held by President Taft over our commissioners? It seems to me that all the circumstances indicate that the club was on the other side.

My hon. friend (Mr. Crothers), in his peroration, shed a great profusion of crocodile tears because this question has been brought into the realm of politics. But who brought it into the political arena? Why the very first speech delivered in this House on this subject by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) made of it a political issue. It was the ablest deliverance I have ever listened to in this House from that hon. gentleman. But I also venture to say that my hon. friend has regretted many times since bringing this matter into the realm of politics, because I believe that, had he left it an open question, that course would have saved him many uneasy moments, and would have prevented many of the dissensions that have occurred in his own party within the past few weeks.

Notwithstanding that we believe that this proposition will be inestimably beneficial to this country, none of us are foolish enough to claim that it is absolutely perfect. So far as I am personally concerned, I would have been better pleased had the arrangement gone a good deal further. There are many, I dare say, who would wish that certain articles which are not on the free list had been added to the free list under this arrangement. As an example, it would have been very pleasing to the people of this province if coal had been made free; and I think possibly this may be due to this province, in consideration of the large amount that its people contribute to the revenue, that that article should have been placed on the free list. I am sure the people of Ontario would have been glad if our American friends had seen their way to grant us that, and some other concessions. But it is an old saying that it takes two to make a bargain, and, on that principle, any bargain that is made must of necessity be, to a certain extent, a compromise. We must give and take, even when we seek to get as much as we possibly can, and under this proposition we get a very considerable deal. We must remember also that it is very difficult to arrange a fiscal policy for a country like this which will be satisfactory to all sections. Canada is a large country, and of widely diversified interests, and a policy that may be quite satisfactory to one section would not suit so well another section. In a case of this kind the best we can possibly expect is a policy that will be moderately satisfactory to all parties. And I think I am justified in saying that the proposition now before the committee is moderately satisfactory to all parties. It is especially difficult to build up a protective tariff—and in saying that I do not forget that all tariffs are more or less protective—the great reason for this difficulty being that in building up a protective tariff we are endeavouring to dam the natural channels of trade, and divert trade into channels artificially which it would not otherwise seek. And the individual or party who will enter into a conflict with nature will find a mighty hard wall to butt against. That is one of the great reasons why the old National Policy failed so lamentably to accomplish the object of its promoters. And it is because the proposition now before the House, and the country conforms more closely to natural conditions than any other policy we have had in this country for a great many years that leads me to believe that it will be so immensely beneficial to the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a little departure, and in doing so, I speak entirely on my own responsibility. To use a sporting phrase, I wish to cast a ball off my own bat. I know from expressions used by my hon. friend the Finance Minister that he and the members of the cabinet are not prepared to follow as far as I would like to lead, and also that many of my hon. friends on this side would not agree with the sentiments and ideas I am about to express. However, I believe those ideas to be in the best interests of the country, and therefore that it is my duty to give them utterance. I believe that the best fiscal policy for this country is absolute free trade, the public revenue to be collected by the simplest, and most inexpensive method of direct taxation that can possibly be devised. Under such a policy many leaks which now exist, and which will always exist under the present policy, no matter what government, or party may be in power, would be stopped. But I am also free to say that I do not think, at the present time, such a policy is practicable. There is a peculiar feature in human nature, which induces most people to prefer to pay a dollar and a half through the circuitous methods of the custom house to paying a dollar directly into the public treasury, or to the tax collector. So, even were the Finance Minister willing to make so revolutionary a change as I have suggested, I do not think that the people would support him in it. So that the policy, however correct it may be, is not practicable at the present time, and it is not necessary for me to discuss it further. But what I believe is practicable, and what I believe the country would approve of is this: That Canada should make as free, open and full fiscal arrangements with every other country as that country will make with her. If, for example, the United States would agree to reduce their tariff to a ten or twenty per cent basis, then, I say, Canada should reduce her tariff to the same basis. If the United States would even go further and agree to lay down their tariff wall entirely against Canada, then, I say, Canada should lay down her tariff wall against the United States. And I am going to go a step further than that. And the proposition I am about to make, I think, should receive the endorsation of some of our friends opposite, for these gentlemen are never weary of talking about their loyalty to the mother land, and to the old flag, in fact, they claim a monopoly of loyalty in this country. A few weeks ago we had a beautiful exhibition in this House of flag-waving.

If I remember rightly, my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie) and my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. White) were leaders in this very pretty by-play, and I am sure that they, at any rate, if they are sincere, will endorse the proposition I am about to make. It has been stated by several members on this side of the House that they would feel better pleased if the government would increase the British preference to 40 or 50 per cent. Now, Sir, I am prepared to go a long step further than that. I say that Great Britain admits our products into her market free, and that we should admit her products into our market free. I am afraid that my hon. friends opposite do not approve of that, showing that their loyalty does not extend very much beyond their pockets. Now it may be said, and it no doubt will be said, that a policy of this kind would injure or ruin our manufacturing industries. Sir, I would be sorry indeed to do anything, or to say anything, or to advocate anything that would injure our manufacturing interests, because I believe that they are of paramount importance to this country. But I do not believe that any such policy as I have indicated would injure our manufacturing interests. I believe that our manufacturing interests require a fair field but no favours. Give them this fair field, and I believe that they have the experience, they have the ability, they have the ingenuity, and they have the capital to compete with the manufacturers of any other country in the world, and they are now on the eve of getting the cheapest power of any country in the world. It is not wet nursing and spoon feeding, by protection, that our manufacturers require. What our manufacturers require is an enlarged market, and that market as near to the base of operations as possible. Such a policy as I have indicated would give them this enlarged market, it would give them that market at their very doors, right at the base of production, and would save to the producer and to the consumer hundreds of thousands of dollars annually that now go into the coffers of the railways and other transportation companies. It would do more than that, it would give to the people of this country a cheap market, it would make this country a cheap country to live in, it would give us cheap raw material, and it would benefit every interest in the country except perhaps the plutocratic interest. It goes without saying that it would immensely benefit the farmers.

Now I remember that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), in his somewhat memorable speech in this House a few days ago, stated that the farmers of this country were enjoying more than their proper share of prosperity, and he gave a considerable array of statistics to buttress his argument. Well, that shows how statistics can be used for almost any purpose, if you only use them in the right way. I think that in this, as in many other instances, observation and knowledge are much more reliable than any statistics that can be given. Now I am a considerably older Canadian than the hon. member for Brandon, and I have never known, nor have I ever heard of, a farmer who became a millionaire from the proceeds of his farm; but I have known a good many manufacturers, a few merchants, and perhaps one or two politicians who commenced life in a very humble way thirty years ago—and I am not saying this to their discredit—who are now ranked as millionaires. This shows that the good things of this life are not evenly distributed under existing conditions. I can tell my hon. friend from Brandon, and all who think as he does, that the farmers of this country are waking up to their condition, they are becoming alive to their importance, they are becoming alive to the powers they possess, and they have decided that they will no longer be hewers of wood and drawers of water to the monopolistic and capitalistic interests of this country. I can tell my hon. friend, moreover, that when they put their hand to the plough they will not look back, until they have finished their work, and when they have finished their work, there may be fewer millionaires, but the wealth of this countrty will be more equally and equitably distributed among the people.

Now let me go back to the main question which is before the House, and let us inquire what this proposed arrangement will do for the benefit of this country. In the first place, it will give us a free and open market to ninety millions of people, a people who are the largest users and the most liberal spenders per head of any people on the face of the earth. At the present time, and under existing tariff laws, the tariff of the United States is on an average about fifty per cent higher than the Canadian tariff. You will readily recognize that this is a tremendous handicap, a tremendous bar to business between the two countries; and yet notwithstanding this handicap and notwithstanding this bar, Canada does more business with the United States than with any other single country in the world. Now why does Canada do business with the United States? Surely not out of love of the people, or out of respect for their institutions; but because, by doing business with the United States, they can make more money than by doing business with other people. At the same time, while such an arrangement would place us in this enviable position, it would not shut us off from any of the markets which we already possess. We would still be at liberty to deal in our own local markets, we would still be at liberty to deal in the markets of Great Britain, if we found it to be our advantage to do so. If at any time our farmers or our shippers found that it would be more advantageous to sell an animal or an article in the United States, if they could get a better price for it, and they would be under no disadvantage in availing themselves of that market if they found it more profitable to trade there. If they found that they could get a better price for a horse, or a lamb, or any other article they might have to sell, at home or in Great Britain, these markets would still be open to them as they are at the present time.

I remember that Sir John Macdonald, when he was advocating reciprocity, and when he was pleading with our neighbours in the United States to grant reciprocity to Canada, used to say that it would give us two strings to our bow instead of one. At that time, under the Conservative regime, our local home market did not amount to very much. Of late years, under the present government, under the benign influence of the Liberal party, the home market has become of enormous importance to us, consuming the larger proportion of our product, and consequently we have now two markets that are open to us, but by this arrangement we would have three, giving us three strings to our bow, following up Sir John Macdonald's analogy, instead of two as we now have. I ask any sensible, reasonable, rational man if an arrangement of this kind would not be eminently beneficial to every interest in this country and more particularly to the farming interest?

On the products which will be made free under this agreement there is paid in duties annually, in round figures, $2,000,000. Every cent of that large amount of money goes into the American treasury. If we remove those duties the greater portion of that money will remain in the pockets of the Canadian producers. We have thus had an additional inducement and an additional advantage under this agreement. Hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted voluminous statistics to prove that the American markets are very much lower than the Canadian markets, and that under this arrangement American products would come into this country and swamp the products of Canada. As I said before statistics are not always reliable. They can be made to prove almost anything that the person using them desires to prove. I am not prepared to say that the prices of these products in the United States are always and at all times higher than they are in Canada. Sometimes they are higher, sometimes they are lower, but the only way in which our friends opposite can maintain their contention of the danger which threatens our own products by reason of competition from American products is to pick out certain dates when certain products are lower in the United States than they are in our own markets. That is not a fair way of making a comparison. The only fair comparison that possibly can be made is to take the market quotations on both sides of the line for each day for a given period, add all up and strike an average of the whole. I know that if our friends opposite will adopt that method, they will find that there is a considerable percentage in favour of the prices in the United States as compared with the prices in Canada. But, we do not need to go into the statistics. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance the other day said that we did not need to quote statistics to prove anything which we know, of which we are cognizant which our everyday experience teaches us. We know that the prices of lambs, for instance, are invariably higher in Buffalo than in Toronto, and we do not need to hunt up statistics for the purpose of proving that fact. We also know that the markets of New York and Boston are the best that we have for the best class of heavy draught horses that we produce in Canada. We know that, our farmers know that, our dealers know that; it is not necessary to resort to statistics in order to prove a proposition of that kind. In years gone by the markets of Great Britain—London, Liverpool, and Glasgow—were the principal markets for our horses. Of late years, however, the local demand has been very heavy, and very few horses have been shipped to Liverpool or the old country. Our own Northwest has consumed a number of them but not so many of the most valuable and best class of heavy horses, because these are used most largely in large centres of population. They are used in Winnipeg, Brandon, Calgary and other places like that, but not so much in country districts. This arrangement would give us an open market in the large cities of the United States for the very best quality of horses we have. We must remember that the western provinces, which have for several years furnished us a market for a large number of horses, are very rapidly supplying their own demand. Large breeding farms are being established throughout many sections of the west, in which they raise the very class of horses that they need in that country, and in a short time that market, like the British market, will perhaps not be available to us. It therefore behooves us to look ahead and search for markets which will be beneficial to us. This arrangement would provide for us, I believe, a splendid and an almost inexhaustible market for the very best class of heavy draught horses as well as the very best class of gentlemen's driving and saddle horses that we can produce.

I notice that of the articles which would be made free by this arrangement we export to the United States annually, in round numbers, nearly $6,000,000 worth. We import from that country of these articles very little over $1,000,000 worth. So, you will see that the competition of American products with Canadian products amounts to very little or nothing at all worthy of consideration. But beyond and above all that, we know that by reason of the superior quality of the products of Canada, at the great shows and fairs in the United States where Canadian bred animals and Canadian products have come into competition with those of the United States, Canada has beaten all along the line the best the United States can produce. In horses, in cattle, in sheep, in swine, in butter, in cheese, and in other products of the farm Canada has beaten the choicest products of the United States at show after show held on the American side. Even so late as the great Chicago show held in January last the Canadian horses, the Canadian sheep, the Canadian cattle, the Canadian swine, there exhibited beat all hollow the best the United States could produce. And, if we can do that on their own soil why in the name of all that is sacred need we fear competition from them right here at home. Sir, that cry is simply a bugaboo raised by the opposition, and it has no foundation in fact or reason. Another fear expressed by our opposition friends is that the products of certain favoured nations will successfully compete with the products of Canada and will swamp the Canadian farmers right in their own home market. Well, I have no fear. In the first place I think considerable doubt exists as to whether these favoured nations will be allowed to participate in these benefits.

Mr. BLAIN. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). Be that as it may——

Mr. HENDERSON. Don't spoil your speech by putting that in.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). I think that is perhaps the best part of it. Be that as it may, we find that the products made free by this treaty, from the British colonies and from the favoured nations, not including Great Britain and the United States, amount to a little over half a million dollars worth out of a total importation from these countries of nearly $14,000,000 worth. Where does the competition come in respect to a comparison of that kind, and more particularly when we consider that our total imports amount to over $475,000,000. But, Sir, we have competed for years with the products of these countries, and we have more than held our own with them in the British market. And, if we could compete with them in the British market why should we not be able to comepte with them in our home market to which they have to send their perishable products a much further distance and under unfavourable transportation conditions. Why should we be afraid of their competition in our own home markets where we can place our products in the best and freshest and most saleable condition. Why, Sir, to my mind one of the great advantages of this proposal is that it will give us a market right at our doors to which we can send our perishable products in a fresh and sweet and wholesome condition. and receive for them the very highest prices. So far as competition from these favoured nations is concerned, it cannot amount to anything. It is also objected, by the opposition, that this arrangement will ruin the fruit industry in Ontario and in British Columbia, and of course we all admit that the fruit industry in Canada is a growing and important one. I do not know anything about the fruit conditions in British Columbia, but I do know that the Conservative government and the Conservative legislature of that province not very long ago passed a resolution condemning this agreement on the ground that it would be injurious to the province, and I have also noticed that this same British Columbia government passed an order in council only a few days ago doubling the price of their Crown lands, thus showing that the fears of that government as to the injury which this agreement would inflict on the province are not so very sincere after all. I think I do know something about the fruit conditions in Ontario. It is universally admitted that this agreement will be advantageous to the apple growing industry, and the apple product of this country represents a value of 70 per cent of our entire fruit crop. It is, therefore, self evident that the agreement must be exceedingly advantageous to the Canadian fruit industry as a whole. But, let us consider the industry in small fruits which we are told by some will be ruined by this agreement, on the ground that the Canadian growers of these fruits cannot compete with the Americans. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, did you ever know of an instance where the Canadian people came into competition with people of any other country in the world in any pursuit of life whatsoever, that the Canadians did not at least hold their own. That is one statement which I know will not be contradicted, and it is a statement which I make with the greatest pride being myself a native-born Canadian. Not only that, but we all know that owing to climatic differences the American fruit is ripe for the market before our fruit is in season, and when the Canadian fruit is fit for the table the American fruit has practically disappeared from the market. Even if this were not so, the fruits grown in Canada are of such a superior quality that no sensible man, or woman either, would ever think of purchasing American fruits in preference to Canadian fruits. My point is, that because of the reason which I have indicated American fruits will not come into competition with Canadian fruits at the same time on the market, and that Canadian fruit will not only have the benefit of the home market but also of the immense markets provided by the populous centres of the United States. Therefore, instead of this trade arrangement injuring the fruit industry of Canada it must of necessity be of inestimable benefit to it. I noticed that the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), and I think also the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Harris), accused the Liberal government and the Liberal party of departing from their policy and their party position. They said that the Liberal party had years ago abandoned reciprocity and had adopted protection. Now, Sir, as a Liberal I deny most emphatically that statement, and I say with all due reverence, God forbid that the great Liberal party of Canada should ever adopt such a fallacy as protection. These hon. gentlemen must have forgotten that at the last Liberal convention held in Canada a resolution was unanimously adopted making reciprocity with the United States a leading plank in the Liberal platform. Up to this minute that resolution still stands as a plank in the platform of the Liberal party, and if my hon. friends from Brandon and Brant were not content to remain under that policy, they should have moved for the removal of that plank from the Liberal platform.

It is also said, in opposition to this proposed agreement, that the government, before adopting it, should consult the people either by a plebiscite or by a general election. I entirely disagree with that proposition. Any such proposition is antagonistic to the genius of our representative institutions. Last session, it will be remembered, we had a very important question before this House, and hon. gentlemen opposite then took up weeks of the time of the House in arguing that we should not adopt the proposal then before us until we appealed to the people. This session they put forward the same argument. Next session in all probability there will be another important question before this parliament for consideration, perhaps equal in importance to either of these questions, and what would the natural result be? The natural result would be that there would be an appeal to the people, a general election, in every year or perhaps twice a year, disorganizing trade, creating dissension, discontent and excitement in the country, and doing a great deal more injury to the country possibly than would be compensated for by any of the benefits we might receive.

I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite, what are we sent here for by the people? Are we not sent here to transact the business of the people? Are we not sent here to find out what the views of our people are on these important subjects and to crystallize those views into legislation? If we do not do that, we fail in our duty. I have no hesitation in saying that if a vote were taken in my constituency next week on this reciprocity agreement, dissociated entirely from political considerations, 80 per cent of the people would vote for it. I believe that if a vote were taken throughout Canada on this question dissociated from political consideration, a very large majority of the people would vote yea. But, Sir, it has been stated, and I have no doubt it is the case, that we shall have in the natural course of events to appeal to the people possibly within the next eighteen months, and then, if we have not correctly interpreted the wishes and views of our people on this question, they will have an opportunity of turning this government out of power and bringing into power the hon. leader of the opposition and his friends; and two days after they have been installed in power they can repeal this agreement or any part of it they choose. There is the test, so far as it is necessary to exemplify it, in respect of the fallacy of the doctrine that on all these questions we should appeal to the people before parliament takes action.

It is said again that we have no mandate from the people to make any such arrangement. Why, Mr. Chairman, this subject, to my certain knowledge, has been before the people of Canada for thirty-five years. To my certain knowledge, it has been discussed in the country, and more or less at every session of this parliament during that time; it has been discussed more or less at every general election during that time. Even at the last election my honoured leader discussed this question from almost every platform from which he spoke. In his own province——

Mr. LANCASTER. What do you mean by his own province?

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). The province of Quebec.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought he represented the Dominion.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). He does, but he belongs to the province of Quebec. He represents a constituency in that province. Speaking in the province of Quebec on the 18th of October, 1908, the right hon. gentleman is thus reported:

> Sir Wilfrid pointed out that the people of the constituency in which he spoke were close to the border, and pamphlets had been circulated amongst them blaming the Liberals for not enforcing the reciprocity plank of the 1893 platform. Sir Wilfrid proceeded: 'We had great prosperity under the old reciprocity treaty. We would like to renew it. We have not done so because our American friends were too hard to bargain with; they asked too hard terms, and we said: Good-bye, we shall make no more pilgrimages to Washington, and we have no reason to regret that.'

Now, mark these words:

> 'I would be ready at any time to make an arrangement with them on a reciprocal basis, but as leader of the government, I have made my course, and if we are to have any more treaties of reciprocity with our friends across the line the overtures must come from them and not from us.

I do not know where you could get a stronger statement in favour of reciprocity than that. The overtures have come from the other side. The country took my hon. friend at his word. The country returned him to power and gave him his mandate, and now, in this agreement, he is carying out that mandate. Yet forsooth hon. gentlemen opposite will say that we have no mandate from the people to enact this legislation.

Mr. LANCASTER. In what paper was that?

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). I do not recollect the name of the paper.

Mr. LANCASTER. Nor does any one else. No one ever heard of it. It was some hole and corner meeting which was never published.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). My hon. friend does not read all the papers, and it is just possible that I read as many as he does. It is just possible that I have heard my hon. leader as often on the platform, and I can say that I never heard him on any platform where he did not give expression to similar sentiments. And I venture to say that if my hon. friend's prejudices would permit him to admit as much, he would admit it because he knows it to be true.

I have spoken at greater length than I intended, but there is one other matter to which I wish to refer and that is the loyalty cry. Surely that is the silliest, the most childish cry ever raised in this House or elsewhere. Our hon. friends opposite say that if we should be permitted to trade more freely with our neighbours to the south, that will endanger our national and imperial sentiment. One scarcely knows how to characterize a charge of that kind made against the people of this country; but if the United States desired to annex Canada by increasing the trade between the two countries, all they need do is lower or remove their tariff. But we must not forget that we cannot have annexation with the United States without the consent of our own people. Give us free access to the American market, give us the benefit of the United States market, and what earthly incentive would the people of Canada have to become annexed to that country. Surely no one will pretend that the institutions of the United States are perferable to ours? Surely no one will say that their laws are better administered. Why, we have in this country the best and the freest institutions of any country in the world. We have all the liberty under the British Crown that any country could desire. Then why in the name of all that is sacred should we desire to annex ourselves to this great republic? The idea is simply preposterous. It is an insult to the Canadian people to say that because we sell a horse or a cow or a pig across the border free of any incumbrance, therefore our loyalty is bound to be tarnished. So great and important a man as Sir Wm. Van Horne has said that he was sick and ashamed of this proposition. Sir Wm.

Van Horne is no doubt a very able man, but there are many men in Canada just as capable of coming to a correct decision on this question as he is. He, I believe, is a native American; he came to this country a poor man and is now very rich; he got his money in Canada; some of it he got from the Dominion Treasury, quite legitimately I have no doubt, but the whole of his money he made in Canada.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the hon. gentleman name one dollar that Sir Wm. Van Horne ever got from the Dominion treasury?

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). Does my hon. friend forget the enormous sum taken from the Dominion treasury to construct the Canadian Pacific railway? Is not Sir Wm. Van Horne, a leading shareholder in that railway? Does he not profit by those millions which disturb the waking dreams of my hon. friend's colleague from York (Mr. W. F. Maclean)? And is it not due to the money taken from this Dominion treasury to a very large extent that the stock of the Canadian Pacific railway is now worth two and a half times its face value? But to revert to Sir Wm. Van Horne, what is he doing with the money he made in Canada? Is he endeavouring to develop the resources and interests of Canada? No, verily, he is constructing an immense railway on the Island of Cuba. That island is now under the tutelage and protection of the United States.

We have another patriot, Sir Edmund Walker. He is also sick and ashamed of this proposition. He headed a manifesto signed by a few disgruntled Liberals in Toronto protesting against this agreement. Sir Edmund Walker is at the head of one of the most powerful financial institutions in this country and he did not think it disloyal to assist Sir Wm. Van Horne with the resources of this financial institution in order to construct this railway system in Cuba. Not only that, but the institution over which Sir Edmund Walker presides has hundreds of agencies throughout the United States. He takes moneys from our farmers and artisans and distributes them throughout these agencies to the people of the United States to assist them in developing and marketing American products, and yet forsooth these are the gentlemen who have the audacity, I might say the indecency, to insinuate that the loyalty of the farmers of Canada will be tarnished if they are allowed to sell a horse or a pig or a lamb to the United States. Why I have no hesitation in saying that such cant and hypocrisy is well calculated to make any one sick and ashamed. It is calculated to make even a horse sick, if he could comprehend the situation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLEAN (Huron). We all remember that in years gone by a great many of our young men went from Canada to the United States. They went there in the formative period of their lives. They became associated with the people of the United States and accepted the institutions of that country, and many of them achieved positions of honour and trust and affluence in their new home. We also remember that when the South African war broke out, who were the first to offer their assistance to Canada to fight for the mother country? Was it not those Canadians who had gone from Canada and were located in New York, in Buffalo, in Detroit, in Chicago, and in other places? Notwithstanding their associations, and notwithstanding that they had all their interests in the American republic, notwithstanding that they had associated and traded and worked with the people of the United States, yet these noble men, Canadians, were willing to sacrifice all and to come to the assistance of their native country and the mother land. And, when such is the case, is it not absurd, is it not ridiculous, to say that the loyalty of the Canadian people will be endangered if they are allowed to trade liberally with our American friends? There never was a time in the history of our country when we did more business with the United States than we are doing to-day; and I venture to say that there never was a time in our history when national and imperial sentiments were more firmly imbedded in the hearts of the people of Canada. Never before were the people of Canada so strongly determined to build up on this American continent a great, powerful, populous and wealthy nation under British auspices than at the present time; and, Sir, my firm belief is that this proposition which is now before parliament will greatly, amazingly, help to achieve this great result.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). Mr. Chairman, I rise to address the committee labouring under a very serious disability. For an hour and a half I have faced the most lugubrious-looking set of gentlemen it has ever been my lot to face, and have listened to one of the most lugubrious, anarchic, socialistic speeches it has ever been my misfortune to hear. The peroration of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean, Huron) comes with bad grace from the man who uttered these words only a year ago. At page 4419 of last year's 'Hansard' will be found credited to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean, Huron) who has just taken his seat, these words:

> But, Sir, the most silly contention I think I have ever heard made in this House is that she has protected our shores from invasion by foreign foes. Now, I ask when, in the memory of living man, have our shores been even threatened by a foreign foe? The only occasion I remember is what was known as the Fenian raid, and that was not inspired by any dislike for Canada but by a dislike for Great Britain, because she denied to a certain portion of her subjects the rights and privileges which they thought, and which I think, they were justly entitled to.

I have no hesitation in saying that these words, to use a mild term, and one which, I think, is allowable, border very close on treason. The hon. gentleman spoke of Canadians in the United States coming to Canada to volunteer for service in South Africa. There were a lot of noble men, not only Canadians—very few Canadians living in the United States came to South Africa—but Americans who volunteered to go and fight for the British Crown. And they did so because they knew they were fighting in a just cause. But the only time when gentlemen in any numbers came back from the cities of the United States to Canada to do duty for Queen and country was on an occasion, the occasion of the Fenian raid. To their credit be it said, many Canadians in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit and other cities of the United States paid their own expenses and came back to Canada to fight against the gang of men who, this gentleman (Mr. McLean, Huron) said, were justified in invading Canada. It came with very bad grace also from the hon. member to refer to the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) in the way he did. At page 1132 of 'Hansard' of 1897, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), speaking in answer to Sir Charles Tupper, who had pointed out that this preferential trade applied to all the nations, said:

Meantime, Sir, recognizing the difficulties, recognizing the possibilty that our judgment may be mistaken, and recognizing the obligations we may owe as part of the empire, we intend for the present to take the view that inasmuch as we offer these conditions to other nations, if they do not see fit to accept them, the responsibility rests upon them and not upon Canada.

Therefore, the hon. member for West Elgin was absolutely speaking by the book when he stated that these favoured nation clauses were not offered to Great Britain alone, but were offered to other nations as well. But, Sir, the question we are supposed to deal with on the present occasion is the discussion of reciprocity. A good deal has been said about reciprocity. But it is a misnomer, to my mind, in this case; the term to be used here is 'free trade in natural products,' and not 'reciprocity.' It is also my intention to point out and to endeavour to prove that the manner in which this Bill was brought down is objectionable in many ways. In the first place, it is not in accordance with the principle of responsible government, for responsible government is supposed to mean that when any great new measure is to be presented in the country, the people shall have an opportunity to decide upon that measure by their voice and vote at the polls before it becomes law. This is not reciprocity, for reciprocity in political science is the principle of securing under commercial treaties between nations mutual advantages to the same extent, that is, the admission mutually of certain goods—not the same goods—supposed to be practically equivalent to each other, duty free or at equal duties of importation. The man who is practically the Prime Minister of the United States to-day, occupying the honourable position of Speaker of the House of Representatives, Hon. Champ Clarke, said, (as will be seen at page 2624 of the Congressional Record) in answer to a question whether he would be willing to give reciprocal terms similar to these to other nations:

'Why, of course, wherever we can get the better of the bargain.'

Again, at page 2625, the same hon. gentleman says:

It is my judgment that we are getting the better of the proceeding in this treaty.

It is my judgment that we get the better of the proceedings in this treaty.

Further on he says:

The intelligent farmers of America know that the agricultural products of Canada are inconsiderable when compared with the agricultural products of the United States; to use a common phrase they do not constitute a drop in the bucket. They also know that wages are as high in Canada in many lines as in America and higher in labour pertaining to the production of lumber; so they know too much to be scared by the overworked cry of 'pauper labour.'

In a recent address at Holyoke, Mass., Governor Foss, of that state, said:

The United States have much to gain and nothing to lose by this reciprocity movement.

Therefore I take the position that this is not reciprocity, but is merely free trade in agricultural products. I desire to point out that it is not in the interest of Canada, it is not conducive to the best interests of the nation, to the upbuilding of manhood in Canada; and I desire also to point out that it is inimical to the best interests of Canada from a national point of view, as a part of the great British Empire. This government has treated the nation to a number of novelties in statesmanship. In 1903 those of us who had the honour of sitting in this House, will remember the day when the First Minister stood up and enunciated his proposal concerning a national transcontinental railway, and sitting only three seats away was his Minister of Railways, who then for the first time heard those proposals enunciated; he was never consulted. In 1905—I regret the Minister of Finance is not present—we had another instance where the leader of the government stood up and proposed his autonomy Bills shackling the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta, without having consulted his Minister of Finance or his Minister of the Interior, and the Minister of the Interior was supposed to represent important interests in that country. And now, in the year 1910-11, we again find the government enunciating a revolutionary trade policy on the strength of the trip of two gentlemen to Washington, two very decent members of the Cabinet, but whom no one would charge with being experts in matters of this kind. And on an agreement that these two gentlemen made in Washington a Bill is brought down with the instruction that no one word is to be changed, not so much as the dot of an 'i' or the cross of a 't' is to be altered, but parliament is invited to swallow this document holus bolus. If this is responsible government, then I fail to understand the basis of responsible government. In 1903 the cry was: Cox can't wait; in 1905 the cry was Sbaretti can't wait; and in 1910-11 the cry is: Taft can't wait. It is noteworthy that both in 1903 and 1910-11 the storm centre of the two great movements, the National Transcontinental railway and this free trade in natural products, was at the same spot, the great city of Minneapolis, and the genius behind the whole matter was our good friend J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern Pacific railway. Our two ambassadors who went to Washington to negotiate should have had dinned into their ears before they went, that old proverb concerning the Dutch: 'In the making of treaties the fault of the Dutch is in giving too little and asking too much.' Some one should have notified these gentlemen that in the making of treaties the fault of the Yankees is in giving too little and in asking too much. If they had had this lesson before them, and they had chosen to avail themselves of it, the chances are that they would not have made this treaty. It is not many years since the people of this country, at the behest of this government, were given free trade in binder twine. I had the honour of predicting, in a campaign before that unfortunate legislation was enacted, that in case free trade in binder twine was enacted, the farmers of Canada would pay largely through their nostrils to the combines and trusts of that community in the United States, and from that hour to this, binder twine has never been so low as it was in the old days before it was made free. The Canadian farmer has been paying thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the American trusts on binder twine, on fence wire, and on agricultural implements. The same thing with petroleum, for every petroleum industry in Canada is controlled by a gigantic trust in the United States, and the people of Canada never paid so high prices as they are paying to-day for petroleum, owing to these American trusts.

Now one of the greatest geniuses that ever graced a nation was George Washington. I propose to quote a few sentences from George Washington to show that this proposition is not in the best interests of Canada or of the United States. On page 3281 of the 'American Congressional Record' of this year is the farewell address of George Washington to the people of the United States of America, and I take the liberty of reading a few extracts to this House, because it is a document that will stand reading many times:

> The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave.
> It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest.

Proceeding, he says:

> Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur . . . .So, likewise a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favourite nation, facilitating the allusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favourite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favourite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearance of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference of public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption or infatuation.

I hope these words will sink deep into the mind of the Minister of Customs.

> As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practise the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils. Such an attachment of a small or weak towards a great or powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

In other words, this arrangement condemns Canada to be the satellite of the United States of America. I have changed 'Republican' government to 'free' government. These words apply specifically to the present situation. Canada, under this arrangement, as George Washington, with prophetic vision, pointed out, will be the slave of the United States the moment this law is enacted.

And it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens—who devote themselves to the favoured nation—facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearance of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference to public opoinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base of foolish compliances of ambition, corruption or infatuation.

I would not like to charge that this had anything to do with inspiring this action, but the position is there, and this statement can readily be applied to it. The Hon. Mr. Borland, at page 2857 of 'Congressional Record,' speaking upon this matter, says:

It is apparent that the principle of reciprocity and the principle of the maximum and minimum tariff are totally irreconcilable. Under the maximum and minimum tariff plan we must demand of a foreign nation the most favourable terms that it gives to any commercial nation or we must enforce the penalty of the maximum tariff so high as to cause a total cessation of all trade intercourse.

I would refer briefly to the spirit that has been shown by the United States throughout her entire history in dealing with the Dominion of Canada. In 1864-5 they abrogated the treaty which had been enacted in 1854. They knew that during the period of treaty, especially during the later years of it, when the American civil war was on, and times were good in Canada, we were selling everything that we had to sell to the United States, and getting for it two or three prices. The Americans were angry because Great Britain, in order to get cotton to keep the mills in Lancashire going, had encouraged the blockade runners to carry arms and ammunition into the southern states, and supply themselves with cotton to put bread and butter in the mouths of the workingmen at home. There was also a little friction over the Trent affair. The Americans saw that Canada for six months in the year had to ship her goods through United States ports because we had no Intercolonial railway built, and our own waterways were not available except in the summer season. They saw that the provinces were scattered, and not combined into one harmonious whole as they now are. They saw that the great plains of the northwest were then barren prairies. British Columbia was practically unknown and traded only around by Panama or Cape Horn with the east. They saw all this, and they decided that this was their time to force Canada into annexation with the United States. But, Sir, they forgot the kindnesses of Canada to them. They forgot that 100,000 Canadians, 58,000 from Ontario alone, had fought in the war, and had helped to preserve the old Stars and Stripes floating over that nation. They forgot the services that Canada rendered to them at that time when men went across the border to fight in order to liberate the slaves. That was the cry throughout the country. I well remember as a little boy, men leaving Ontario to cross the border to fight to liberate the down-trodden slaves. Then, the United States displayed the spirit of coercion. The poet, Kernahan—the Khan—very aptly describes Uncle Sam's wooing of Miss Canada at that time in this way:

Supposin' I undertook to make you?
I'm kinder 'customed to makin' free;
Supposin' I undertook to take you?
'I'd scratch your eyes out, sir,' said she.

On that occasion the answer of Canada to the United States was the confederation of 1867. Following the exclusion policy pursued by the United States from 1867 onward, when we allowed their goods to come into this country at nominal rates, and they refused to allow ours into their country except at exorbitant rates, came the great National Policy of Sir John Macdonald in 1878 and 1879. The country was carried in 1878, and Sir John Macdonald carried out every plank in his platform to the letter and enacted the National Policy in 1879. Then, Sir, industries were planted—so to speak, orchard trees were planted all over the Dominion of Canada. Most of these trees were planted in good soil, they were trees bearing the right kind of fruit, and they took root and thrived despite the attempts of hon. gentlemen opposite to pour the bitter waters of non-confidence on their roots. These hon. gentlemen attacked them with the weapons of non-confidence and hypocricy, they barked the roots, they broke off the branches, they nipped off the buds of the splendid trees that were planted, and which were rapidly growing up in the form of flourishing industries. They did their best to destroy these industries, but they failed. Never in the history of any land have industries prospered as have those in the Dominion of Canada. These gentleman knew right well that the keynote of human life, business life, political life, national life, is confidence. They knew that, and from the right hon. the First Minister down through every man of them to the last backbencher they passed up and down through the country, and endeavoured to create in the minds, not only of their own friends, but in the minds of the business men of Canada, the idea that the moment they got into power they would attack these industries, they would root them up, lop them off, stem and branches, and expose our people again to the tender mercies of the United States. But, in spite of that these industries prospered. Then they played the game that they are trying to play to-day. Point in the entire history of the Liberal party to one instance where they have ever appealed to the higher or nobler instincts of manhood. Can the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) point to one plank in the platform of the Liberal party, that they ever proposed in opposition, or carried out in practice with regard to which they have risen to an appeal to the higher instincts of manhood? It has all been the almighty dollar; they cannot rise above the basswood ham, and the wooden nutmeg. In 1887 we find this gentleman coming to us with these basswood hams, and wooden nutmegs, we find Uncle Sam coming to court Miss Canada, and we can hear him saying:

'Twas me invented the basswood ham,
With wooden nutmegs I made my pile;
You can't do better than Uncle Sam
In this here world—well I should smile!
In course, I've got considerable gall,
She drew herself up with dignity,
'Dare to come over the garden wall
And I'll loosen the bull dog, sir,' said she.

After a bitter fight these hon. gentlemen dropped their commercial union, they dropped their unrestricted reciprocity, they dropped their continental free trade, they dropped their free trade as they have it in England, they got into power, and they dare not touch protection.

In other words, the mandate of the people of Canada given to them both publicly and behind the scenes in that campaign of 1896—when they obtained power not through their own virtues or the strength of their policy, but through the dissensions and the fool policy of the Liberal-Conservative party—was in respect to protection:

Woodman (Liberal party) spare the tree,
Touch not a single bough,
In youth it sheltered me
And I'll protect it now.

And up to the present hour they have not dared to lay a finger on it and this reciprocity agreement is the first material threat they have made against it. I happen to have amongst my archives a lot of very interesting relics, one of which I dug out the other day. It is a copy of the Detroit 'Evening News' of Thursday, August 11, 1887.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is old.

Mr. HUGHES. It is old, but it is new. It contains about the same old stuff the Liberals are preaching and tooting to-day. This item in it is dated from Lindsay. The Detroit 'Evening News' at that date sent a reporter up and down the towns of Canada, and being more interested at that time in the town of Lindsay than anywhere else, my attention centered on this piece of news. It is a statement from the Hon. J. A. Barron, now county judge for Perth—I may say that I have had the distinguished honour of making a couple of judges for the Liberal party—and it says:

From Hon. John A. Barron, member of the Dominion parliament for North Victoria Riding, I have secured a most interesting and important sequel to the recent public declaration of Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, the Liberal leader, on commercial union. It seems, after all, that Mr. Laurier's straddle of the question was merely a clever coup d'état. He is, in fact, at heart for commercial union, and when the proper time comes, will wheel his ranks into line for the movement. He believes it unwise, however, to take this pronounced stand at present, for fear of arraying the Conservative ranks, farmers and all, against him. This is no mere speculation, for I get it from the Hon. Mr. Barron in person. He is one of the vigorous young colleagues of Laurier in the Commons, and has been in correspondence with the leader. The latter's letter deals with the union question.

'Oh, Laurier is not against commercial union,' said Mr. Barron. 'You may be sure of that. I know it from a letter I have received from him, but he does not think it expedient to take up the matter too quickly. That would have a tendency to concentrate the opposition to it. At heart I believe Mr. Laurier is for commercial union, and at the proper time he will come out strongly for it.'

Then it goes on to say that Mr. Barron tells of how enthused the farmers are. Why, Sir, you would actually think it was this gang of leaders; this grain growers association from the northwest that came down here, the same sort of fellow we find popping up in blacksmith-shop statesmanship.

Mr. LANCASTER. Grit organizers.

Mr. HUGHES. Every one of them a Grit organizer and heeler; not the rank and file of the farmers of Canada, but the men who try to push themselves to the front and whose wives are at home wearing long boots and cleaning out the cow stables and the horse stables, while these fellows are hanging around the blacksmith shops spouting statesmanship for the world over. It is the same type of chap we find then as we find to-day. I may say that then as now I have always had the warmest sympathy and affection and admiration for the better instincts and elements that we find in the constitution and the people of the United States. This newspaper says:

But the local Conservative paper here, the Victoria 'Warder,' makes a proposition which knocks the spots off annexation——

I want you to note that the Detroit reporter interprets 'commercial union' to mean annexation just the same as this thing means to-day:

But the local Conservative paper here, the Victoria 'Warder,' makes a proposition which knocks the spots off annexation. It would have to annex between Great Britain, United States, Canada and Australia, the whole to be called the British Empire with Queen Victoria ruling over all. The 'Warder' even prints the details of what it calls 'Imperial Federation' as follows, etc.

It is a little astray about that; my position then was and it is to-day: a full partnership union of Great Britain and all her colonies first, and then an alliance offensive and defensive with the United States for the advancement of humanity and peace the wide world over. Well, the Liberals failed in their commercial union cry of 1887-1891, and they got into power in 1896 only by the folly of the Liberal-Conservative party in bringing on that remedial legislation in reference to Manitoba. Then, in recent years, when they see a spirit abroad for closer union between Great Britain's colonies and the mother land we find these gentlemen in the United States, and unfortunately there are some of them in Canada, who do not like to see any closer union between Canada and the mother land. I refer among others to my friend Dr. Macdonald of the 'Globe,' this gentleman who has openly over his own signature pronounced the mandate that he is opposed to any closer union between Canada and the mother land, although he does not deny that he would not object to closer union between Canada and the United States. We find this gentleman crossing over and coquetting with Uncle Sam until at last he comes back to Canada with a proposition, which is described by the poet thus:

UNCLE SAM TO MISS CANADA.

'Gee Whittaker, Christmas, ain't you sassy
To turn up your nose at a duck like me?
Get onto my shape, why, lor a massy,
A foolisher girl I never did see.
Supposin' I undertook to make you?
I'm kinder 'customed to makin' free,
Supposin' I undertook to take you'
'I'd scratch your eyes out, sir' says she.

'"Twas me invented the basswood ham;
With wooden nutmegs I made my pile;
You can't do better than Uncle Sam,
In this here world, wa'll I should smile.
In course, I've got consid'able gall.'
She drew herself up with dignity,
'Dare to come over the garden wall,
And I'll loosen the bull dog, sir,' says she.

I'll dress you up like a daughter of Zion;
Your choice, my beauty, you'll never bewail;
You'll help pelt mud at the British lion,
An' assist the gang at twisting his tail.'
Miss Canada grabbed at a kettle of water,
Fresh from the stove, and as hot as—well,
He was warm before, but he was hotter
When the seance closed and the curtain fell.

That is the best way I can illustrate the ending that is going to come to these approaches by our good friends? in this matter. These gentlemen tell us that the United States came knocking at the doors of Canada to offer reciprocity. I deny it. I maintain from my place in this House as I have maintained from my place on the platforms of this country, that Dr. Macdonald of the 'Globe'—the man I again repeat who is in receipt or has been in receipt of emolument from the peace society of the United States and the rest of his pay he gets as editor of the Toronto 'Globe'—either as personal agent representing himself or as secret agent representing this government went to Washington a year ago and began negotiations which resulted in this abominable thing that is now before the country. Dr. Macdonald I am told—I had not the privilege of reading or seeing the letter—takes one of my alternatives where I said that he either went as his own personal representative or as the secret agent of the government, and he says that the statement about his going as a secret agent of the government is a falsehood. Well, the meanest kind of a liar is the equivocator. The most contemptible class of creature is the man who dodges the truth, and I put Dr. Macdonald in that category here, and I will tell him it to his teeth any time I shall meet him in public. Dr. Macdonald went to Washington a year ago. He says he started for Atlantic City. How did he shift off to Washington; they are not on the same line at all. He shifted off to Washington, and I find it stated in the 'Woodstock Express' that he found himself at once the centre of attraction. The newspaper men gathered around him, Mr. Bryce the British Ambassador got wind of him, and they all threw their arms around him, and before he knew what happened him he was ushered into the presence of Mr. President Taft. I am not going to say anything concerning President Taft. I have every reason to believe that that gentleman is sincere in his desire to upbuild the best interests of the United States, the best interests of the Dominion of Canada, of the British Empire, and of humanity the wide world over. But, Sir, unfortunately President Taft is not all the people of the United States. He is one, and only one of the people of that great nation. And the point I want to ask the government here is: By what authority did Mr. Bryce, representative of Great Britain at Washington, introduce to the President of the United States this man Macdonald who began, admittedly, the negotiations which resulted in this reciprocity arrangement, and which were brought about one year ago, regarding the maximum and minimum tariff. Is the ambassador of a great nation at Washington at liberty to introduce to the President of the United States every Tom, Dick, and Harry that struts along with a bee in his bonnet. What mandate had Macdonald to give? Was he commissioned by this government to go to the United States, and had Mr. Bryce the authority to introduce this man to President Taft and talk this mission over with him. I ask that question en passant, and I trust we will get an answer in due course.

Following up the reciprocity of a year ago regarding a maximum and a minimum tariff, we find this agreement for free trade in natural products brought in to-day. I want to read to the Minister of Customs a statement made by Mr. Gardener, of Massachusetts, in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, to be found at page 3414 of the Congressional Record of this year. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I am going to make a statement to which I challenge contradiction. I assert it to be the fact that the negotiations for this agreement which were inaugurated last summer were not based on any expectation that the price of food production would be reduced to the consumer in this country. I assert that the motive for their inception was the desire of the President to be relieved of the necessity of imposing the maximum duties against the Dominion of Canada. Under the law of 1909, he was compelled to impose additional duties on the products of the Dominion unless Canada yielded to us as low rates as she yielded to any other nation. But Canada refused to grant us her low rates unless we entered into a reciprocity agreement. This, then, was the situation last summer: Either a reciprocity agreement must be made or we must impose additional duties on Canadian products.

Is that true? That is the statement made by Mr. Gardener. He challenges contradiction, and he is not contradicted, that this government is responsible for pushing this movement for free trade in natural products on the people of the United States. Some time ago the Minister of Finance said that Canada was in the position of a young maiden being wooed. I pointed out that it was not a case of Canada being wooed, but being tied up, and I said that Canada did not want to be tied up to one fellow. I understand human nature somewhat, and I never saw any girl yet who wanted to have two old gentlemen do the courting for her. I never saw any girl yet who did not want to have a say in the disposal of her hand, and that is just what Canada wants to-day. Canada wants the opportunity of being proposed to. Miss Canada objects to having two old gentlemen, even such amiable persons as the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, doing her courting. Miss Canada wants her hand sought in the open market, and that is why we ask the opportunity of testing this question at the polls. Miss Canada had before her the record of this subtle old wooer. Uncle Sam might be capable of winning these two old gentlemen down at Washington, where everything is lovely; but Miss Canada had seen where this same old fellow had wooed and won Cuba, had wooed and won Alaska with his golden dollars, had wooed and won the Hawaiian islands by a reciprocal arrangement for sugar, identical with this one with Canada for natural products. She had before her the object lesson of Porto Rico being wooed and won by Uncle Sam. And to-day the Yankee flag flies over all these countries. Canada had the object lesson of the Philippines being wooed and won by Uncle Sam. She had the object lesson of Louisiana and Texas being bagged in the early days, and a large slice of Mexico being added to California and brought under the Stars and Stripes. Miss Canada had all these object lessons of the wooing of Uncle Sam; and yet these two old gentlemen threw themselves into his arms. Miss Canada is a little more coy than they were, and will not so easily be tied up to Uncle Sam. I have always been friendly to the United States of America, recognizing them as of the same race and lineage as we are. As dear old Whittier says:

Thicker than water in one rill
Through centuries of story
Our kindred blood has flowed, and still
We share with you its good and ill,
The shadow and the glory.

I agree fully with that sentiment. I recognize the great good the United States has done in extending liberty and civilization; but all this was accomplished in the early period of her history, before she fell under the power of the trusts and other evil influences that prevail to-day. So far as I personally am concerned, my life-long ambition has been for a full partnership union of Great Britain and Ireland and the various colonies of the empire, with every part in full and absolute control of its own local affairs, and a central government dealing with imperial affairs, the British flag floating over all, and each of the parts having a voice and a vote in everything that concerns the union as a whole. That has been my policy, and I am glad to find that policy extending to such an extent that even the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McLean), had not the hardihood to-day to contradict that spirit as he did a year ago when he made a speech justifying the Fenian invasion of Canada, but is now compelled to declare himself in favour of drawing closer together Great Britain and her colonies. My aspiration is to see Great Britain and her colonies, including Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and India, federated; but in the meantime I desire that we should live in the closest friendship with the United States of America, and let each of the great nations on this continent go on in the work of up-building humanity. But we want no free alliances. Free-love societies have never yet prospered. It is always found that the big chap captures the whole bunch, and the little fellows become the slaves of the bigger one. So in this free-love, free-trade arrangement between Canada and the United States that hon. gentlemen opposite are bragging about, Canada would get the little end of the business. But, Sir, once Canada and the other colonies are federated with the empire, we shall realize our true aspirations—

> When closer strand shall lean to strand
> Till meet beneath saluting flags,
> The eagle of your mountain crags,
> The lion of our mother land.

But I want to see the two flags—the Union Jack over Britain and her colonies and the Stars and Stripes over the United States of America. I want to see the two emblems—the lion for the British Empire, and the eagle for the United States; but I do not want under any consideration to see the eagle's nest softened or lined with the beaver's hide.

We hear these gentlemen talk of the mandates they have received. One of them, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McLean) said something about their having had a mandate from the people away back when the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) were children. That is the latest he can find in the way of a mandate from the people. There was a platform promulgated by the Liberal party in 1893, not one plank of which was ever carried out or pretended to be carried out; and when my hon. friend from Huron spoke of a mandate which the government had received from the people, he reminded me of a story my hon. friend from East Grey told me, as the hon. gentleman from Huron was discussing this matter. He reminded me of a mill which used to be in operation in the early days of East Grey. It was situated just at the cross roads, and at the intersection of these roads there was a big board on which was printed this legend: 'Cash paid for wheat here.' The years rolled on, and in time the mill was destroyed by fire and never replaced; but for 20 years afterwards that sign board stood unharmed near the ruins and still bore the legend: 'Cash paid for wheat here.' That sign board reminds me exactly of the reciprocity plank in the Liberal platform. Neither in 1896, when these gentlemen ran an election, nor in any election since have they made reciprocity a plank in their platform. Never since 1896 have they spoken of free trade in natural products with the United States as being their policy. And let me here point out that reciprocity is not at all the same thing as free trade in natural products. Reciprocity is the securing in commercial treaties between nations of mutual advantages. It is not a lobsided arrangement such as the one now proposed. It is the admission mutually into each country of certain goods which are supposed to be practically the equivalent of one another, whether duty free or at equal duty. In Sir John Macdonald's time I remember distinctly his explaining to us what he meant by reciprocity. By reciprocity he said he meant not free trade in natural products, but that if the United States would admit our barley free, which they wanted, we would let in something from them in return free which we required. They would let in free of duty what they wanted, and we would allow in free of customs what we required. There was no intention in the slightest degree—and I knew Sir John intimately from 1885 onwards—on his part to have free trade in natural products, but what he wanted was reciprocity in natural products and not free trade. There was no such question before the country in the elections of 1900 or 1904, as the right hon. the Prime Minister knows right well, nor was there any question of reciprocity in the election of 1908. This reciprocity deal was consummated last session and sprung on the country a year ago.

But why should we adopt this legislation now proposed to us? Is it according to the principles of responsible government? The basic principle of responsible government is the development of the individual. It means that the day of the divine right of rulers has gone by; it means that the free men of the country, the men who labour, the hewers of wood and drawers of water, must be consulted. It was amusing to hear my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McLean) talk about their being oppressed; but where are the toilers, where are the men who pay the taxes, where are the hewers of wood and drawers of water to-day? Why, the right hon. the Prime Minister will not trust them; he does not think that they are fit to be consulted at all. Even the members of the party opposite were not considered worthy of being consulted. There is not an hon. gentleman on the Liberal side who can say that he was consulted with reference to this proposed agreement before it was negotiated. They are treated by the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister as so many pawns on the chess board to be moved hither and thither as these gentlemen dictate. Is that responsible government? No, responsible government means that the divine right of rulers in church and state no longer exists. It means instead the development of the individual. It means the privilege which the tax payer has of going to the polls and registering his assent or dissent with regard to any of the great questions of policy which must be submitted to the country, and let the result of the voting decide who shall rule. But the course taken by this government is not in accord with that principle. It is not government by the people, through the people, for the people, but government by the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs, through Ambassador Bryce and President Taft at Washington, and for the trusts of the United States. That is the kind of government which we are now asked to support. It simply reduces parliamentary control to a farce. Every member of parliament on the Liberal side has the right to stand by the principles of his party and not merely by the label; and I admire heartily my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) and my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Harris) and my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Germain) and a number of others who, I am sure, will be found when the time comes stepping out and declaring boldly: You are not acting along the lines of responsible government in forcing this thing through without first submitting it to the people. Even though it should have merits—which I deny—the government has no right to force it on the people in this way.

There is another matter which calls for some comment. Why this indecent haste in forcing this thing through? This House has been in session five months and this matter has taken up a great portion of that time. An attempt was made to rush it through the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, but that attempt was balked. Why then this mad rush to put it through here? What is the motive? Are the government afraid that at the coming imperial conference, arrangements may be made for a still closer drawing together of Britain's oversea colonies in one harmonious whole? What can be the object of President Taft and Mr. J. J. Hill, because they are the prime movers in this scheme? The others do not count for anything. Mr. Taft and Mr. Hill simply play with them as a cat plays with a spool of thread. What is the motive of bringing this thing on with such a rush now? Forty-five years have passed since the old reciprocity treaty was abrogated and nothing has been done. For thirty years we have held out an offer of reciprocity. Why this rush to get it now? Let us pause a little. Let us see how we came to be dragged into this thing last year; and now that the Finance Minister is back in his place I wish to read for his benefit a statement made by Mr. Gardener, of Massachusetts. Mr. Gardener said:

I am going to make a statement to which I challenge contradiction. I assert it to be the fact that the negotiations for this agreement which were inaugurated last summer were not based on any expectation that the price of food products would be reduced to the consumer in this country. I assert that the motive for their inception was the desire of the President to be relieved of the necessity of imposing the maximum duties against the Dominion of Canada. Under the law of 1909, he was compelled to impose additional duties on the products of the Dominion unless Canada yielded to us as low rates as she yielded to any other nation. But Canada refused to grant us her lowest rates unless we entered into a reciprocity agreement. This, then, was the situation last summer. Either a reciprocity agreement must be made or we must impose additional duties on Canadian products.

I would ask the hon. the Finance Minister if that is true?

Mr. FIELDING. A number of reasons are given there, and I am sure my hon. friend cannot expect me to answer them all at once.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the hon. minister say if this statement is true:

Canada refused to grant us her lowest rates unless we entered into a reciprocity agreement.

Mr. FIELDING. It is true that Canada refused to grant the lowest rates.

Mr. HUGHES. Unless we entered into reciprocity?

Mr. FIELDING. That is not so.

Mr. HUGHES. I shall have the pleasure of communicating the hon. minister's reply to Mr. Gardener.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not know the gentleman, but have no doubt he will be delighted to hear from my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES. But what are we to think of the excuse put forward: Oh, well, we cannot expect to be very particular, they are too slick over there, and we must gradually build ourselves up, and look after our own interests; little by little severing the tie that binds us to the mother land ; little by little drawing closer to the other nation; so that, for a short time we may be able to hoist our own flag—they have never yet told us what the designation of that flag is to be—making Canada an independent nation, but ultimately to form part of the United States of America. Some hint of a return on the part of the Minister of Finance to his first love. Though he is too shrewd to go openly in favour of annexation to the United States—he has not advocated that directly or indirectly—but the record shows that he has come out in favour of secession. He has claimed the privilege of Nova Scotia to secede from the Dominion of Canada at its own sweet will. Whether that be the cause or not, I do not know. Some hint at a policy to put a quietus on the national and the naval movement in the province of Quebec. That this is a movement in the direction of annexation is Mr. J. J. Hill's view. A week or two after this arrangement was announced, Mr. Hill, unable to contain himself—like Mr. Champ Clarke; and yet they are two gentlemen who, one would think, were old enough, and experienced enough to know better than to go duck-hunting with a brass band—proclaimed the one that this meant annexation, and the other that it meant annexation through the severing of the ties that now bind Great Britain and her colonies together. And this is what the strongest men of the United States generally are saying. I have read their arguments; I have discussed the matter with many of them, and I have read their newspapers. And, Sir, from the northern boundary of Mexico, to the 49th parallel, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the leading newspapers, the leading men, the ordinary business men of the United States, view this in one aspect, and one aspect only. and that is as a question of annexation. The annexation question, therefore, is not raised by the Conservative party in this House, it is not raised by those opposing this pact, but by those who are favouring it in the United States of America; and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to find more than two speakers in the whole Congress of the United States, taking the Senate and House of Representatives together, who stated that they did not mean, or did not want annexation. Nearly every other man has come out openly in favour, declaring what they honestly believe, and what any man with an ounce of sense will see this means—the annexation of Canada to the United States of America. The motives which impel these gentlemen are many. The old, historical Republican party has gradually fallen into the power of the trusts, and has been breaking up. Various reasons are assigned for that. One prominent man, quoting from Milton, thus describes the condition of the Republican party:

> Which way I fly is hell; myself am hell;
> And in the lowest deep a lower deep still > threatening to devour me.

That represents the position, not only of the Republican party and of President Taft. but, judging by the lugubrious expression on the countenance of hon. gentlemen opposite, they are satisfied that it represents, and fully represents, the position of the First Minister and his colleagues on this question. There are several causes alleged for this position of the Republican party, Duplicity of Roosevelt is charged. Taft's action in relation to the control of Philippine lands is charged. Then there is the fear of many about hard times, and the desire to get as cheap products as they can. It is found that the poor are growing poorer and the rich are growing richer. It may startle our friends on the other side to find that the United States is not the great country they think it is. When you consider that, in the city of New York, one out of every nine of the people, on the average, of that monstrous city is in receipt of public charity, besides the tens of thousands who are in receipt of private charity, you get a different light on the position. I have here an extract from the Toronto 'Star' of 28th January, 1911. Speaking of the proportion of poverty in New York, it says:

> Toronto 'Star,' January 28, 1911.
> High rents caused by congestion of population and the high cost of living are the chief causes of extensive poverty in New York city, according to a report prepared by Alderman Callaghan, chairman of the committee on charities of the city congestion commission. The report deals at length with the charity work now being carried on and endeavours to point out wherein funds are not being used to the best advantage. The document has been submitted to Mayor Gaynor.
> One person in every nine of the total population is receiving public charity in some form, either from the city or a semi-public institution. The committee has examined nearly all the important public and private charity institutions, and places the number of persons receiving aid at 500,000. The daily assistance ranges from twenty-five cents a family to $2 a person. Seven of the large relief societies in Manhattan and Brooklyn are giving assistance to 50,431 families, numbering 325,995 persons. The committee does not consider medical care as charity.

There is the condition of that great city, and, while it may be more severe than that of some of the other cities, yet I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, and this House and the country, that poverty is rampant throughout the United States of America in all its great centres. The recent elections were fought on the basis of cheaper food for the people, and that position as much as anything else had to do with the defeat of the Republican party in the recent election.

Mr. CARVELL. Due to protection?

Mr. HUGHES. We will reach that later on. That is the country, that is the system and these are the conditions; and my hon. friend and his friends are seeking to bring us under the same conditions as exist yonder. Then, the newspapers of the United States, especially the Democratic newspapers, openly charge that the trusts are responsible for the break-up of the Republican party. Mr. Davis, of Wisconsin, at page 3434 of the 'Congressional Record,' says, with regard to this reciprocity Bill:

In all my legislative experience I have never known a proposition which conferred greater benefit upon special interests, the meat trust, the milling trust, the lumber trust and the newspaper trust than the one upon which we are about to vote.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the First Minister wish the farmers of Canada to be brought under the meat trust, the milling trust, and the paper trust of the United States? I shall convince him before I am through that that is what he is bringing us to—no, I need not convince him, he knows it already. On this question of the trusts leading Americans are on record. Mr. Graham, one of the members of the House of Representatives, says at page 3438 of the 'Congressional Record'—he is speaking of the American farmer:

He pays about double prices for all the woollen goods he buys. He pays a price and a half for all the cotton goods he buys. He pays a bonus of about 35 per cent to the Rubber Trust. He pays exorbitant profits to the Harvester trust. He pays exorbitant profits to the Steel trust and the other trusts which are based on protective tariffs. He pays freight on his products hauled over steel rails which cost the railroad $28 per ton, whereas the president of the Steel Trust testified the trust could make them at less than $12 per ton.

These are the conditions to which these hon. gentlemen opposite are going to subject the people of Canada if they have their way. And, as in the case of the binder twine trust and others to which I referred, so the Canadian industries will fall under these trusts, and Canadians will be controlled as Americans are controlled to-day. Mr. Steenerson, of Minnesota, said:

In the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means that have recently been held it is shown that even on the matter of milk there is a difference often of 200 per cent between what the farmer gets and what the consumer pays, so that the conclusion is inevitable that the combinations of middle men that the gentlemen from Pennsylvania referred to do exist and do influence the prices of commodities in this country.

And, on the same Bill, the Carthage Board of Trade of New York, said:

The Beef Trust to a small extent, local conditions to a greater extent, have been responsible for the high prices of meat to the consumer rather than the price that the farmer is paid.

The same thing is true in reference to the Milk Trust and milk distribution. The farmer on the average obtains less than 3 cents a quart for his milk. . . .

Our farmers in Ontario get higher prices than do these farmers who are near the great cities of the United States. Farmers in remote parts of our country send to Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal and receive higher prices for their milk than do farmers within ten miles of the capital of the United States.

Insufficiency in distribution, combinations in restraint of free distribution, exorbitant express charges and freight rates have more to do with the high price of living than do the original prices paid to the farmer.

Then Mr. McCumber, of North Dakota, explains how the trust controls the prices of beef:

According to this table an 800 pound carcase will retail at $120.90. Add to this about $12.00 for hide and by-products, and the retail price would be about $133. The farmer probably received from $50 to $60 for this beef. The retailers gross profit would be about 125 per cent.

If you would then follow the same beef, as I have on another occasion stated, into what would be called a first class restaurant in this city, the percentage of increases would be enormous.

I gave you a table, I think, about a year ago in which I showed that the steer that the farmer sold for about $80 would realize about $2,500 at your best restaurants.

Mr. Jones, producer and consumer, page 2518 of the Congressional Record, says:

As the result of a careful investigation of the increase of prices of farm products in their transfer to the consumer, Secretary Wilson shows that the difference between the price paid the farmer and the cost to the consumer is in many cases from 40 to 50 per cent.

For instance, it was found that the poultry grower received only 55·1 per cent of the price paid by the consumer; that the dairyman receives a scant 50 per cent of the price paid for milk; the apple-grower 55·6 per cent; that beef cost the consumer 38 per cent more than the price paid the great slaughtering houses; and other farm produce from 41 to 50 per cent over the original cost. The conclusion of this section of Secretary Wilson's report is:

'From the details that have been presented in regard to the increase in prices of farm products between farmer and consumer, the conclusion is inevitable that the consumer has no well-grounded complaint against the farmer for the prices that he pays.'

The point I want to make is this, that the farmer in the United States does not benefit, the prices paid by the consumer are higher, but the prices the farmer receives are lower, as I will prove before I am through. Mr. Boutell gives figures of the price of milk.

Right on that matter of the cost of distribution, we had a witness here yesterday, representing the farmers of northern New York, and he gave these figures:—Price of milk to the farmer, 3 cents in his county.

Price paid by the consumer in New York, 9 cents, or an advance of 200 per cent; a much greater advance than any of those figures pointed out by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Jones, president of the United States Association of Dairymen, says:

It is not the tariff on farm products that is responsible for the high cost of food, but the excessive freight charges of the railways, and the exorbitant profits of the commission houses, wholesale dealers and retailers, through whose hands farm products must pass to reach the consumer.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

REVILLON FRERES TRADING COMPANY, LIMITED.

On the motion for the second reading of Bill (No. 158) to incorporate Revillon Frères Trading Company, Limited.—Mr. Devlin.

Mr. GERVAIS. I think this Bill should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. The difficulty is to know just to what committee the Bill shall be referred. It refers to the Railway Act and the Telegraph Act. I see that it has some clauses out of our Standard Telegraph Act and Railway Act. If it were a railway Bill the Railway Committee would not allow these other clauses in.

Mr. FIELDING. It seems to have three purposes. It is a general trading company, the Bill gives the company power to engage more or less in financial operations and it also gives it power to construct telegraphs and telephones. It is that latter part that seems to bring it rather under the purview of the Railway Committee.

Mr. GERVAIS. I think that the main features of the Bill refer to the incorporation of a banking and trust company, and that is why I think the Bill should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Finance is the main object of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In some cases the course has been pursued of referring a Bill to one committee with respect to one part of the Bill and afterwards referring it to another committee with reference to another part. I think the committee to which it is referred recommends that it shall be transferred.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec county). This Bill came before the Standing Orders Committee, and they thought it ought to be referred to the Private Bills Committee.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. FIELDING. Was that the judgment of the Standing Orders Committee?

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec county). Yes.

Mr. GERVAIS. The most important feature of the Bill relates to finance, a banking, security and guarantee company. The promoters would like also to be incorporated as a mortgage bank as well as a bank of issue. This parliament does not wish to incorporate another Hudson Bay Company.

Mr. FIELDING. There is no reference to a bank at all.

Mr. GERVAIS. I know, but in several paragraphs of section 7 they want to be authorized to issue notes. That is what is actually said.

Mr. FIELDING. Any corporation can issue a note.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). In view of the number of subjects in the Bill I think it ought to go to the miscellaneous Private Bills Committee.

Mr. FIELDING. Perhaps, as the hon. member (Mr. Devlin) in charge of the Bill is not here, it might be courteous to him to let it stand.

Bill allowed to stand for second reading.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 164) for the relief of Walter Kirkland.—Mr. Martin (Regina).

Bill (No. 168) to incorporate the Ontario and Michigan Railway Company.—Mr. Pardee.

Bill (No. 170) to incorporate the New Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Gordon (Nipissing).

Bill (No. 175) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Harbour of Toronto. —Mr. Macdonell.

Bill (No. 176) to incorporate the Restigouche Riparian Association.—Mr. Geoffrion.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED. STATES.

(House in Committee of Ways and Means).

Mr. HUHGES. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was endeavouring to give some of the reasons why the people of the United States are anxious for this reciprocity agreement. I had explained that the recent United States elections were run on the price of bread and on the plea of lowering the cost of the necessaries of life, it was proposed among other things that they should have free trade with Canada in natural products. It, however, has been exposed again and again by speakers in the United States that the prices in Canada for these products are considerably higher than those which prevail in the United States, and that reciprocity will consequently not cheapen the price of food for them. Another interest in favour of reciprocity is the trusts in the United States; and if the trusts cannot be controlled in that country where the laws are stringent against them, how can they be controlled when they are operating in both countries. The outcome would seem to be that the trusts in food products will operate successfully in both countries, just as the binder twine trust and the gigantic petroleum trust are operating now. Another strong element in favour of reciprocity is the advocacy that comes from the city of Boston and from the New England states. For a number of years Boston has been practically cut off by the New York interests which control the railways. The railway systems of the United States which formerly centred in Boston are now directed from New York, and for years past the city of Boston has been unable to increase its export trade. The people of that magnificent city see in this reciprocity movement an opportunity to revive their former trade, and hence they are in favour of it. The present governor of Massachusetts, Mr. Foss, a very capable man, speaking recently at Holyoke, Mass., on reciprocity, is reported by the Boston 'Herald' to have said:

> What reciprocity with Canada means to us here in New England, in fact to the whole country, is, I think, plainly apparent to a body of progressive business men like the Holyoke Board of Trade, located as you are at the very gateway of the trade that would flow in a mighty torrent from Canada to New England's greatest seaport, Boston.
> The United States has much to gain and nothing to lose.

Again, speaking in Boston, Mr. Foss said:

> There are two essentials to successful industry. First, that you must have your raw materials on as favourable basis as possible. This includes not only what goes into the industry, but also includes the food and necessities of life to the workingmen.
> Second, you must have the broadest possible markets.
>
> These are the two requisites and these are what reciprocity will give to Boston.
> Reciprocity will command a greater Boston, for our increased industrial and commercial interests will compel it. Real estate values will increase materially owing to this increased business development, and the increased population which will follow.

Now, here is the essential point of the whole business, and here is where Canada is going to be struck most materially by this reciprocity arrangement. Mr. Foss continued to say:

> New factories in all lines will be established here, for with these conditions our capital will no longer seek Canada for the purpose of building up those factories which it is now forced to build in Canada by unnatural tariff conditions.

Let me point out that millions upon millions of dollars of American capital have been expended on industries established in Canada, and if this reciprocity goes through, Mr. Foss is the authority for saying that no more American capital will come to Canada. A friend of mine in Colorado Springs, Colorado, writes to me under date of February 19, last. He refers to a meeting addressed by Henry George, jr., who is following in his father's footsteps, and has inherited his father's economic fads. Mr. George was giving reasons why the people of the United States should support reciprocity, and my friend writes to me:

> Last night I listened to an address given by Henry George, jr., before 'The Winter Night Club,' of this city, of which I am a member, and while not holding his extreme views as to single tax, I realize that he is a sincere student of the science of political economy, having recently been elected as a 'Free Trader' to Congress, from the State of New York. He is, of course, opposed to all tariffs, but in the course of his remarks, he expressed the hope that the pending reciprocity arrangement would be carried out, saying: 'Then we can get Canada's supply of pulpwood, make it into paper and place it on the English market at a lower price than the English manufacturer can produce it, and the London papers will have to use our product, even those dailies that are opposing the reciprocity movement strongly at this time.' He struck right at the centre of Uncle Sam's desire for better trade relations with Canada, but I notice the newspaper report of his address this morning omits this portion of his speech entirely, as you will see by looking it over.

These extracts show the tenor of the line of action that these gentlemen are pursuing. The Americans want our pulp wood and they want our raw materials to develop their industries and, so far as possible, to prevent these industries being developed in Canada. Why should Mr. Foss, and why should Henry George, jr., want the pulpwood of Canada to be manufactured into paper in the United States? Why should not the provinces of Quebec, of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick, of Ontario, which have vast areas of this pulp wood, manufacture it within their own borders instead of having it milled in Massachusetts. A cord of pulp wood will cost to produce all the way from 40 cents to $4, and what these gentlemen want is that Canada shall only have the chips; their desire is that the 40 cents or the $4 (as the case may be) worth of labour shall be expended upon the pulp wood in Canada and that the thirty odd dollars required to turn that into paper, shall be expended in the United States. Sir, the policy of the Conservative party is exactly the reverse of that. Our desire is that Canada shall develop her own natural products, and that these natural products instead of being shipped out as raw material, shall leave the country in the shape of the manufactured finished article. An additional reason in the United States why this reciprocity deal is to be engineered through is to be found in the cupidity of the United States capitalists. We are told by these gentlemen who are now hawking around Canada, that this is a great struggle between the horny handed sons of toil on the one hand, as against the capitalist on the other. Well, when I hear these gentlemen talking of advocating the interests of the farmer in this matter I wonder how it comes to be that they are in alliance with the greatest trusts that ever ground down a nation. The trusts of that nation have brought the United States almost to the verge of civil war, and their tendency is to disintegrate that great republic. I shall not charge them with being in the employ of these organizations, but whether they are or not, these men who parade up and down the country talking of the struggle of the farmers against the capitalists are in fact the agents of the trusts of the United States, and are working for them. They see in the great forests of Canada, in the mines and minerals of Canada, in the fisheries of Canada, aye, in the manufacturing industries of Canada, as well as in our broad and fertile plains in the Northwest, avenues for the investment of their capital. As Mr. Beveridge, formerly senator, but no longer so, his state having gone Democrat in the recent election—as Mr. Beveridge, who was here a few days ago, said in a recent speech, which will be found at page 2340 of the 'Congressional Record':

> We have used up our natural resources so rapidly that the belated policy of conserving them has become one of our greatest national anxieties.

He goes on to point out the great advantage that it would be to the capitalists of the United States to have free access to our great industrial centres. This is the keynote of their great interest in the Dominion of Canada in recent years. It is also pointed out by Senator Beveridge that in France there are 200 people to every square mile, in Germany 300, in England 400, in Canada 2, and in the United States 35. He also points out, as do many other statesmen of the United States, that the United States can, for the next hundred years, aye, for all time, by successful farming, produce more than they can possibly consume, no matter what the population may grow to. A few days after this compact became public, Mr. J. J. Hill said that with this tariff measure enacted, Britain would not be in a position to carry out her policy of preferential tariff within the empire, as the United States had handicapped her; in other words, they had prevented imperial federation and the giving of preferential trade by Britain to her colonies. Then, Sir, we have speaker after speaker, not in Canada, but in the United States House of Representatives and in the United States Senate, standing up and boldly proclaiming their intention to see the annexation of this country to the United States of America. These gentlemen must be seriously lacking in courtesy or in that dignity which should pertain to a man occupying the high position of a representative of the people. The idea, for instance, of a member of this House standing up and talking of annexing the New England States to Canada or that part of the United States which lies north of the 40th parallel, or of disrupting the United States through our action. I would regard it as the height of impertinence on the part of any member of this House, and yet we find in the United States—not backbench members, but gentlemen occupying the highest positions—President Taft, J. J. Hill Champ Clark, &c., doing this very thing. Every one of these gentlemen has openly pointed out that this measure means the annexation of this country to the United States.

Mr. FIELDING. Will the hon. gentleman quote President Taft's words?

Mr. HUGHES. I will quote them all before I am through. The policy, Sir, of the Liberal-Conservative party is to leave the United States to control their own tariff in their own interest, and have the Dominion of Canada control its tariff in its interest. We have had some talk about free trade as they have it in Britain. There are peculiarly-minded people in the world. It is said that three-fourths of the people of the world are crazy on one point or another. We have gentlemen who happen to get in their bonnet the bee of free trade as they have it in England. Let me point out to any free trader—I care not whence he comes, whether he has been shipped out from England and by a freak happens to enter the halls of parliament at Ottawa or not—that free trade has been the bane of England. England's greatness is neither directly nor indirectly due to free trade. On the contrary, England's greatness began with the very antithesis of free trade; it began with her declaring many years ago that the wool and the hides of Great Britain should not be sent to the continent to be manufactured, but should be manufactured in England. It began with Cromwell's navigation laws, when he said that the trade with England should come in British hulls to British ports; that was the beginning of Britain's naval greatness. It began when steam became a commercial commodity. It began with Britain's control of the engine and boiler building of the world. These were the things that lay at the foundation of Britain's greatness, and not the curse of Cobdenism or free trade. Britain's greatness is due to the fact that in the old days she had an export duty on wool and hides, and brought in exiles from France and other lands, skilled artisans, who laid the foundation of her industrial development. These are the reasons for Great Britain's greatness, and the gentlemen who talk about the benefits that free trade confer on England remind me of the fable of the bluebottle fly that lighted on a team which was climbing up a hill. When the team reached the top, the fly which rested on one of the horses said: 'Didn't we pull the load up the hill? That is the way with these free trade faddists in England. It is a plausible cry—reciprocity. Suggestion is a very plausible means of approaching a man. There comes along a chap with a stand-up collar, representing Mr. J. J. Hill or some other magnate, and he tells the horny-handed sons of toil how he sympathizes with them, and prates about the greatness of the farmers, and labels them grain growers' association or something of that kind, and in that way gets the farmers under the control of the Yankee trust. The farmers of my part of the country are used to the Sheldons, the Bill Miners and the other hold-up men of the United States. Let us not be taken in by any free-trade Sheldons or Bill Miners, no matter in what shape they may come to us.

These grain growers are right in the business. We have been accustomed to lightning rod agents and hay fork pedlars and goldbrick men trying to gull the farmers along that line and failing in their efforts. But, Sir, hope springs eternal in the human breast, and we have these gentlemen going to the farmers and telling them that they are going to improve their condition. Well, although far away hills always look green, yet our farmers are not going to be taken in by any such sophistry. They have had the experience of the days of 1887 when this commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity and patron business swept the country for a time, but our farmers were not to be taken in then, and they will be just as staunch and firm to-day as they were in those days.

Last December this parliament hill was graced by the presence of as fine a class of men as you could gather in any part of the world. I allude to the farmers of the west. I shall not speak of them as the Grain Growers' Association, because I wish to draw a distinction between the leaders of that association and the splendid men who constitute its rank and file. Last winter I paid a visit to the west and gave an interview to the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg. In describing what splendid looking lot of men were the rank and file of this association who visited Ottawa, I was asked what sort of impression they had made. I said the rank and file made a splendid impression. But what of the leaders, I was asked. As far as the leaders were concerned, I replied, that impression vanished as soon as they spoke. They treated us to the same old hurdy gurdy grind that we were accustomed to hear in days gone by from Joe Haycock and his associates. But these men we had fought and downed, we know them well and no doubt will down them again. The farmers of these days were not to be caught with chaff, and the farmers of to-day are neither to be caught with a second dose of chaff of the same description. All the platform oratory which we used to have from Joe Haycock and his gang in those days was reproduced here by the leaders of this Grain Growers Association; and I could easily imagine the right hon. the Prime Minister exclaiming: Why, that is the stuff that I used to prepare long ago and I must hear it all over again. And that old warrior, Sir Richard Cartwright, as he sat listening to all that frothy declamation, must have smiled sardonically and have thought: What a lot of donkeys these must be, these are the songs we used to sing when in opposition and which we never wanted to hear since. And, Mr. Chairman, should there be another appeal to the people, these songs will never be heard again.

Speaking of the Association of Grain Growers, I wish to say a word about the leaders of that association. I may be possibly a little too ardent, but I know the gang and they are the same as those we fought long years ago. I do not believe that one of them is honest at heart. They are to-day, as they were formerly, in the pay of the Liberal party. It will require more than the declarations of that gang to convince me that they are not either in the pay of Jim Hill and the Yankees or of the great Liberal party of this Dominion. At all events their actions are along those lines.

Let me now give the history of this Grain Growers' Association in the west and show where those so called leaders stand. I have here an instructive article from the Winnipeg 'Saturday Post' of April 8, 1911, which, although it is very long, I propose to read as it throws some light on the characters of these men:

Some months ago I had occasion to refer to certain rumours then current in Winnipeg to the effect that the Grain Growers' Grain Company, which is the grain handling end of the Grain Growers' Association in Manitoba—though, of course, technically a separate body—was speculating in the grain market, instead of confining itself to the legitimate purposes for which it was organized. During the past few weeks I have secured evidence that this practice has not been abandoned, but, on the contrary, that these rumours were well justified. By way of introduction to what I shall have to say a little later, however, permit me to quote the following article which appeared in the 'Free Press' on Saturday last:

'Regular meeting of the directors and officers of the Grain Growers' Grain Company was held yesterday morning. There was a large attendance of out-of-town directors and much special as well as general business was transacted. It is felt by the directorate that these gatherings from time to time serve the useful purpose of keeping the men actively engaged in the transaction of the business of the company more in touch and in sympathy with the members and shareholders in the country and that the business of the company is less likely in this way to drop into the rut of the ordinary speculative trade in grain.'

That delightful little gem, I am informed, was handed in to the 'Free Press' for publication by the Grain Growers' Grain Company. Please carefully note that charming touch in the last two or three lines—'and that the business of the company is less likely in this way to drop into the rut of the ordinary speculative trade in grain.' The irony of this little masterpiece will best be revealed by the following statements of facts:

For some time past the Grain Growers' Grain Company has been the only heavy buyer of oats on the trading floor of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. It is freely reported, not only in Winnipeg but in Montreal and New York, that this company has set out to attempt to corner the market in oats. It has been buying this grain in huge quantities on a falling market—and individuals connected with the management of the company have stated that the company has bought in the neighbourhood of five million bushels all the way down. If this is not speculating or gambling, what is it? Is this the purpose for which the Grain Growers' Grain Company was organized? Is this the purpose for which the government granted it a charter? Did the government intend that this company should attempt to do that for which Mr. Patton has been so roundly denounced and for which he was hooted off the floor of an exchange in England? Is it by speculating in grain that the interests of the farmers—more especially of those who are stockholders in the company—are likely to be protected and advanced? Is it by resorting to the methods of a Patton 'that the business of the company is less likely to drop into the rut of the ordinary speculative trade in grain'? Or was the company organized for the purpose of discouraging such things as are mentioned above? Was the company not organized for the purpose of giving the farmers of Canada protection against gambling methods and devices, and to establish the grain business upon a fair, honourable, safe and sane basis, that would protect the purchaser from the wildcat schemes of manipulators and tricksters? Can it be that the Grain Growers' Grain Company has been seduced by the seductive wiles of a speculative institution into a bold attempt to excel the old hands at the gambling game in their own line of business, in which they have become expert by years of exciting experiences? Let us see.

Here is what a New York grain broker has to say under date of March 17th:

'We were figuring up this morning what the Grain Growers are doing. They are certainly selling oats delivered in London at one and three-quarter cents under cost. They are offering oats to Montreal on exactly the same terms. They chartered quite a chunk of freight and paid about half a cent a bushel over what it can be obtained for now, which would show a loss to them of over two cents a bushel. But these people are not hurt any by the trades. The farmer pays the bills. You know the old story about the negro and the cord of wood, where he gave fifty cents over his contract price so as to be able to boss the job. Pretty much the same thing with the Grain Growers.'

Now, there seems to be just one reason why a firm speculating in grain and desiring to corner the market would sell oats for export at prices below what the goods would cost. That reason would be to get the oats out of the country, so that there might be a scarcity here, which would assist in the making of the corner. But if a firm is selling oats below cost, it is naturally and inevitably losing money. In this case whose money is it that is being lost, if these detailed reports that I give are correct? It must be either the company or the farmers who ship their grain to that company on consignment. If grain is shipped to be sold at the market price, certainly the best market price should be obtained for the producer, instead of one and three-quarter cents a bushel less, which it is charged that the Grain Growers' Grain Company is selling for in Montreal, seemingly for the purpose of getting oats out of the country as rapidly as possible.

If the farmers are losing the money by getting a less price for their oats than they could obtain by selling for Fort William delivery, those farmers are entitled to know it. If the Grain Growers' Grain Company is losing this money, every stockholder in that company is entitled to the facts, that it may be seen whether or not they approve of this form of speculation, which, like all other forms of speculation, may end either favourably or disastrously.

I should like to ask the Grain Growers' Grain Company executive if at this 'regular meeting of the directors and officers,' held last Friday, this alleged attempt to corner the market in oats was discussed in detail, and if the secretary was instructed to inform the shareholders—who are farmers scattered over the country—of the methods said to be employed in working this alleged corner. Seeing 'that the business of the company is less likely in this way to drop into the rut of the ordinary speculative trade in grain,' I venture to suggest that it would be an excellent idea for the officers and directors to see that their stockholders receive the fullest information on this point at the earliest possible date—of course, merely for the purpose of ascertaining their views concerning the legitimacy of such methods as are suggested above.

Now comes a matter that may interest the Minister of Finance—another Farmers' Bank case possibly:

In connection with the foregoing, it is interesting to note that of six chartered banks that make more or less a speciality of handling the grain trade, the Home Bank—a very large percentage of the stock of which is held by the same people who own the Grain Growers' Grain Company—was one of two banks that showed on February 28th an increase in current loans, as compared with the crop handling season, September 30th, 1910. The six banks referred to with their loans on the two dates mentioned, with the increases and decreases indicated by plus and minus signs, respectively, are as follows:

	Sept. 1910.	Feb. 1911.
Union..	30,299,724	30,717,151	– 1·3
Commerce..	83,271,151	89,045,613	+6·9
Dominion..	38,898,024	37,390,711	– 4·0
Hamilton	26,605,143	25,353,810	– 4·9
Home..	5,473,524	6,474,712	+18·2
Northern	11,978,442	11,316,079	– 5·8

Commenting on this showing, the 'Free Press' very pertinently says:

'It would appear that the Home Bank, judging by the above figures, and the fact of its being so closely associated with the interests represented by the Grain Growers' Grain Company, may be carrying heavy loans on the securing of grain. In respect of its total current loans, it occupies a striking position in comparison with other banks, which show but little variation.'

It will be observed that the only bank in the list quoted above, besides the Home Bank, the loans of which showed an increase on February 28th as compared with the grain season of September 30 last, is the Bank of Commerce—but as the Bank of Commerce is one of the strongest financial institutions in the world, it might well do that which a lesser institution could not properly do.

In the circumstances, it would seem to be desirable in their own interests that those farmers—more particularly the stockholders in the Grain Growers' Grain Company—whose grain is disposed of through that company, should ascertain at once the foundation for these very clearly defined reports that are in free circulation all over the city, that the Grain Growers' Grain Company is engaged in attempting to corner the market in oats, and that there in no other firm doing business in the grain exchange that is speculating more daringly than this company, which professes to fear and to shun 'the rut of the ordinary speculative trade in grain.'

Now, Sir, I believe that the importance of that article justifies its reading. We had before the House recently the question of the Farmers' Bank of Canada—a case in which a lot of financial buccaneers, playing on the name 'Farmers'" bamboozled the farmers up and down this country to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars, the money being put into an institution for speculative purposes where it was lost. Here we have, evidently, another instance of buccaneers trading on the name of the grain growers, endeavouring to get the farmers of the northwest engaged in this speculative work. As a matter of experience, even the best and shrewdest speculators on the Chicago board almost invariably tumble, and the day is not far distant when this Grain Growers' Grain Association of the Northwest, which is evidently seeking to corner the market and play the game of the shrewdest dealers, will come a cropper; and then good-bye to the association, and the people will see these gentlemen in their true light.

These gentlemen on the other side are great at crying: 'Reduce the duties!' I do not believe in reducing the duties. I stand here a supporter of the National Policy according to the principles laid down by Sir John Macdonald. Sir John Macdonald wanted reciprocity. He did not want free trade in natural products, but reciprocity—quite a different thing from the dose that we are getting now. He believed in protection for Canadian industries as against American industries. But the development of trusts in the United States, in Great Britain, in every civilized land, in recent years, owing to the great growth of trade, has shown that something further is necessary. If these men have complaints in regard to the prices of agricultural implements, or any other commodity, there is a solution for the difficulty without wrecking the homes of the working men of the Dominion. We have an agricultural implement industry, say, in Toronto. I well remember the time, not many years ago, when the Massey-Harris agents themselves came through the riding I have the honour to represent and told the people: Elect the Liberal candidate; return the Liberal government to power, and the price of your binders will go down to $80. They said they could compete with their rivals, and that prices would go down. I asked farmers recently what they paid for a binder, and the price is $130 or $140. That is under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite who have consistently permitted these trusts to get control of the people of the country. Now, we have established a Railway Commission which takes hold of any complaint against the railways or any demand of the railways, and the matter is adjudicated and settled nine times out of ten, to the satisfaction of both parties. There should be a trade commission in this country—not a tariff commission only, but a trade commission. We should protect our industries fairly; but if we find an industry trying to take undue advantage of the duties, let complaint be made before the trade commission, and inquiry made, and, after allowing for a fair profit, and allowing for the extra cost due to our northern climate, and our conditions, and if it then be shown that the manufacturer is charging too high prices, let him pay the public treasury a sum that will recompense the people for what he has taken from them in exorbitant prices. In other words, let the trade commission manage these affairs, and you will find our country will prosper better than if you endanger our industries by lowering the duties.

There are many objections to reciprocity. The government has been asked: Why not let well enough alone? The country has grown, railways are extending, manufactures are getting firmly established, our farmers are receiving good prices, and becoming wealthy, our mines are in course of rapid development, and trade routes are constantly improving. I have here a letter from Mr. Flavelle, one of the largest produce dealers in the world. He points out, as he has pointed out to me before, that he imports eggs from the United States in great quantities, pays the freight into Canada, pays the duty, and then sells them at one cent a dozen less than he pays to the Canadian farmer. He brings eggs from Russia, and pays freight and duty, and then sells them at lower prices than he pays for Canadian eggs.

In other words, he shows that in case we have free trade the egg industry would be wiped out of existence in the Dominion of Canada, and to-day it stands second to any industry. So with all the other lines of agriculture. From 1879 to 1896, Canada prospered, although the Liberal party did their level best to destroy the protective policy introduced by the Conservative party. Since 1896 the country has undoubtedly progressed, and why? Prior to 1896 every move made by a man to establish an industry in Canada was met by the threats of the Liberal party that when they came into power they would wipe protection out of existence. But once the Liberal party got into power they dared not touch the principle of protection, and the man who invested his money in business had behind him, not only a Liberal party afraid to act, but the solid rank and file of the Conservative party telling him, 'Your capital is absolutely safe in this country, not one smokestack will be touched, not one dollar of your capital will be impaired. That inspired confidence in the hearts of Canada's business men, and that shows why Canada has prospered since 1896. The people have confidence. They knew the Tory party would not interfere, and they knew the Liberal party dared not interfere. Therefore, it is that the workingmen are receiving good wages, their homes are well built up.

Mr. MARTIN (St. Mary's, Montreal). Before 1896 the workingmen only got a dollar a day, now they are getting two dollars.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows what he is talking about. But suppose they were, I want to ask where he was prior to 1896? He was walking about the streets of Montreal, shouting that these industries, which were affording employment to his fellow countrymen, would be destroyed as soon as the Liberal party got into power. Up and down the streets of Montreal the hon. gentleman and his friends paraded, threatening that when they got into power they would not leave one stone standing upon another of the great factories. That is where the hon. gentleman was to be found. The Conservatives were to be found building up these industrial institutions, they are to be found to-day supporting them, and that is the secret of the confidence which exists in the country. Canada has prospered because the conditions are stable, the Northwest has grown and developed rapidly, and the men in this northern clime have no reason to complain. We do object, and I say it advisedly, the labouring men of this country do object to their sons and daughters coming into competition with the cheap negro labour of the southern states. Any one who has been in the southern states during the winter months has seen cattle roving in the fields. The people there have no need of expensive buildings to protect their cattle, no need of building warm houses, and buying ton after ton of coal to keep their families from freezing, no need to be at the expense of purchasing warm clothing such as we have to purchase in our colder climates. Down yonder 25 cents will clothe almost any labourer. Yesterday we saw in the newspapers that more than a hundred men were blown to pieces in a mine, and these men were criminals brought from the penitentiary whose labour is sold in competition with free labour. That is something that we do not want to compete with in this Canada of ours. We do not want our children to be brought into competition with that sort of thing, we could not compete with them if we tried. We must have protection. According to American authorities, this reciprocity agreement will divert the trade of this country to the United States. I cannot do better than to quote from the report of Mr. McCall when he introduced this reciprocity resolution before Congress:

It will divert the trade of Canada to the United States.

As I pointed out a little while ago we will get the chips and the brush of the pulpwood, and they will get the solid wood. It will destroy our home market, and bring our labouring men into competition with the negro and pauper labour of the United States. On page 5 of the report on Reciprocity with Canada, No. 418, you will find the following words of Mr. McCall in introducing the resolution:

It may be said that the prosperity of Canadian railways would correspondingly decline. They would undoubtedly lose in the transportation of wheat, but they would gain in other directions. The effect of the proposed arrangement upon the growth of Canada would be magical, new interests would spring up, and her railroads would be called upon to serve a much larger population.

Might I ask, where new industries would spring up? Mr. Foss has told us that no more Yankee capital will come to Canada under reciprocity. Mr. J. J. Hill has told us that no more Yankee capital will come to Canada. The trade will be sent to Minneapolis under reciprocity. How will new industries spring up in Canada? Are we not doing pretty well as it is? As I have already pointed out, this agreement will bring us into competition, and establish free trade in all these commodities not only with the United States, but with all the British colonies and thirteen or fourteen other countries. It has been pointed out by the hon. member for Grey and others that the Argentine Republic could control the market for beef even in western Ontario, and our farmers would materially suffer by being brought into competition with the Argentine Republic. Water transport is cheaper than rail transport, and in a dozen ways we would be materially injured. Our wheat, as has been pointed out, would be seriously injured. I have all the figures here, but I will not go into the question of prices, as there are other members of the House who will take up that question, and they will show that the prices of wheat in Canada from year to year are ahead of the prices in any part of the United States, even in Minneapolis, except at odd periods of the year when the Minneapolis millers must have No. 1 wheat in order to mix with their cheaper grades. Figures will be quoted showing that prices in Canada are higher than the prices are in the United States, taking a number of years in succession. Even in the prices of grain, the farmer of the Canadian west has nothing to fear from competition with the American farmer under present conditions. But as soon as the grain trust of the United States gets control of Canadian mills, or rather as soon as Canadian mills join the grain trust—because you cannot blame the Canadian if he finds himself being crushed, and if, in order to save his capital and the capital of the shareholders, the earnings of a lifetime, he should join hands with this trust—and when that takes place the Canadian farmer will find his prices materially reduced. The wholesaler who makes a profit, and the Englishman who is talking free trade from one year's end to the other, will find themselves paying through the nostrils a great deal more than a shilling a quarter higher for the grain that they purchase in the form of Yankee flour.

Now, we are told that we will be able to make a greater profit out of the sale of our barley. I will give you a word or two on barley. I have here the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States. At page 139 of this report I find the evidence of Mr. Mauff, of Chicago, who says:

If the brewers would stop using substitutes for barley they would find they could use Pacific coast barley very nicely. That is the explanation of that. I have the technical authorities, if I had the opportunity to present them.

At page 140, Mr. Mauff says:

The gentleman asked why is Canadian barley raised in western Canada not as suitable for malt purposes as is Dakota barley? The most of the Canadian barley is fed. I will read a letter from a malster in Winnipeg, who left Chicago to go to Winnipeg:

'It will be years before they get alkali out of the soil in this country. Then we may expect better barley. I have started a campaign already to educate the farmer to allow his barley to get thoroughly ripe before cutting it; also to stack it and change the seed.'

And he asked me to engage them 20,000 bushels of barley similar to what is raised in the Mississippi valley to be taken to Canada.

Then at page 141:

They use about two bushels of barley, for which our brewers are substituting things like glucose and starch.

In the city of Washington there is a brewer who uses fifty per cent of substitutes for barley malt. Not only have they increased acreage and trebled the crop, but they are using as little of that crop as possible in the brewing of beer, substituting corn products and coarse ryes, which are cheaper. In Canada that is not allowed under the law. Any beer manufactured that way must be labelled 'imitation beer.'

So we find that the barley of the United States is not all used for malting purposes and we have a very good explanation as to the prices of it. On page 152 we find the following:

In 1890, the barley crop of the United States aggregated 59,000,000 bushels, with the average farmer price of 40 cents per bushel, and of this total crop about 66 per cent was used for malting purposes. The crop of 1910 aggregated 162,000,000 bushels of barley, with an average farmer price of about 48 cents per bushel, and of the total crop only 39 per cent was used for malting purposes.

Where does the rest go? The American farmer does as the Canadian farmer wisely does; he feeds it and gets nearly a dollar a bushel for it in the form of pork or beef. At page 4563 of the 'Congressional Record,' speaking of Canadian barley, Mr. E. J. Hill, of Connecticut, one of the representatives, says:

The hearing before the Ways and Means Committee developed the fact that because of its superior quality the barley of our own northwest had captured the markets of the Pacific coast and actually driven out the domestic product there to compete on equal terms with Canadian barley abroad, and in addition to that the northwest had last year shipped barley malt into Canada in excess of the entire amount of Canadian exports of barley.

So that they can invade our country with barley from the western States and pay the duty. Further, on the same page:

The malsters also admitted that the barley of the Canadian Northwest was not now a competitor with our own because of the alkali in their soil, and that it could not for this reason compete for many years to come.

These statements illustrate that the cry that our farmers are going to make tremendously out of barley is not borne out by the facts of the case.

The production of hay is another important industry and I notice that our good friend the Prime Minister has been appealing to his beloved province of Quebec with reference to that article. I do not want to go into the question of prices, although I have them all here, because others will do that, but I wish to point out that the prices of hay in the United States vary with localities tremendously and that the prices in Canada, all in all, are higher than in the United States. At page 509 of the report on Agricultural Statistics of the United States of America for 1909, I find the following average prices:

	Average price per ton.
North Atlantic states..	$15 12
South Atlantic states..	13 87
North central states east of the Mississippi..	10 47
North central states west of the Mississippi..	6 81
South central states..	10 92
Western states..	10 51

Showing that the price varies in the different parts of the country where the hay is produced. On pages 2642-3 of the 'Congressional Record' I find the following which will show at a glance that we have not much to gain from free trade with the United States in hay. Before a House committee of investigation these gentlemen were giving evidence:

Mr. PUJO.—I am not exactly familiar with the extent of our lumber trade in the western markets, but I do say this, that we buy your Nebraskan hay, upon which you have a duty of $4 a ton. You are in favour of free lumber, are you?

Mr. HINSHAW.—Yes. We sell our hay at $4 a ton, nothwithstanding the duty.

Mr. PUJO.—I understand; but if we had no duty on hay, we might be able to get it at $2 a ton for the mules and horses that we have to use in logging operations in our state.

I wonder where the right hon. Prime Minister will find auditors in the province of Quebec to listen to him when he tells them that they are going to benefit by free trade in hay?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What State is that?

Mr. HUGHES. That is the State of Nebraska.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that we send any hay to Nebraska.

Mr. HUGHES. If the minister is not satisfied with Nebraska I will give him some other State. In the report of the Ways and Means Committee, page 223, the First Minister will find this. Mr. Grant, of Clinton, N.Y., was down in Washington showing how this arrangement was going to injure them in the States and Mr. Hill is getting these prices. He says:

The average price of all hay in Canada, according to the Canadian government reports, in 1909, was $11.14 on the farm, and in 1910 it was $9.66. So that it is higher in Canada than it is in Watertown, on your own statement.

There is the evidence that was offered before the Ways and Means Committee. It was proved by statistics there on the evidence of these gentlemen that the price of hay was higher in Canada than in the United States. I am giving the farmer's prices, not the price quoted in New York.

Now, let us come to the question of horses. We heard an hon. gentleman talking about horses in this House this afternoon. I come from a county that produces horses. There is one dealer who has a home both in the northwest and in the county that I have the honour to represent, and he has shipped nearly $300,000 worth of horses from Ontario into the northwest already this year. I saw a team sold in the street in Lindsay on Saturday morning for $600, one four year old and the other five year old. A gentleman by the name of Leddy sold a team for a Winnipeg dealer. Three hundred and twenty-five dollars for a single horse is not an extraordinary price to pay in our country. Mr. Silverwood and Mr. Weese, two of the most prominent dealers in our locality, tell me that in so far as the horse dealer is concerned he would profit by reciprocity because he could buy cheap Yankee horses, bring them into Canada and make more commission than he does by dealing in horses produced in our part of the country. That would be the result of free trade in horses with the United States. Mr. Silverwood came home from Chicago the other day and he told me that he saw hundreds of magnificent Clydesdales and heavy draught horses sold at anywhere from $75 to $125 lower than that which we would pay for them in the town of Lindsay, Ontario.

It may be necessary to tell it to some of the tenderfoot members of the House of Commons who have the bee of free trade with the United States in their bonnets, but it is not necessary to tell the farmers of Canada that they would lose by having reciprocity in horses. It takes $20 in the United States to raise a horse to maturity and it takes $100 to bring the same horse to maturity in the Dominion of Canada, taking locality with locality. If we have reciprocity with the United States, Canada will become the back field on the farm; our industries will be moved down to the New England states and we will have the privilege of reaping the raw material and shipping it there. In the United States towns the advocates of reciprocity argue that it will give people cheap food, but if it does how can it enhance the price to the Canadian farmer. On the other hand, in the farming districts of the United States they tell the farmers: Why the Canadians' prices are higher than ours and you will be able to ship your surplus products to their market. The advocates of reciprocity can take which horn of the dilemma they choose. Champ Clarke says:

The chief thing that this country needs in its business is a wider market, and I am in favour of this reciprocity Bill because it gives wider markets to American products.

This means of course on the authority of Champ Clarke that the wider market for the farmers of the United States will be found by sending their products to Canada to compete with the products of our farms. We were told to-day that some people in the United States are opposed to annexation, and I believe that statement to be true. The Minister of Finance made the statement, and he started to give the reason for it, but he did not give it all. There are hundreds of the best men in the United States who do not wish annexation because they prefer the two nations to be separate, and their line of reasoning is as follows: For instance during the Japanese war scare—and let me tell the members of this House that war between the United States and Japan was nearer than some people think—it was found that at strategic points on all the transcontinental railways in the United States Japanese were stationed as laundrymen, or railway men, or in some such capacity, and the moment war was declared the tunnels, bridges and passes would be rendered impassable so that the United States with her 90,000,000 people and enormous capital could not to save her soul put troops across the continent short of a year's time. Meanwhile Japan would move her army from the Hawaiian Islands and from Japan, occupy the western coast of America, and in spite of the two-penny half-penny 25,000 men the Americans could throw into the field, Japan could land 200,000 men, and the tablelands of the Rocky Mountains and not the Pacific ocean would henceforth mark the western boundary of the United States. This is no idle dream and the Americans know it. You cannot convince me that President Taft and the military authorities had not in view this very idea when they sent their army to the Mexican border in case Japan should interfere in Mexico, so that the American troops might move up the western slope and not have to cross the Rockies. Now, suppose Canada had been part of the United States, would England have been so interested in preventing a conflict? Not at all. If Canada and the United States were united England would practically have no interest in the Pacific ocean, and, therefore, with the desire to keep the Pacific not as a yellow sea but as a free ocean, Japan would have to face the hostility of Britain, of Canada, of Australia, and of New Zealand, in addition to that of the United States. Therefore, the United States is infinitely stronger separated from Canada than united to Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the reasoning of some of the best men in the United States who oppose this reciprocity deal—now let the First Minister say hear, hear—and they oppose it because they know that reciprocity means annexation, and they do not want it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. The First Minister says hear, hear. Let him stand up now and withdraw this Bill.

Mr. NESBITT. Oh, no.

Mr. HUGHES. I give the hon. member for North Oxford warning that in six weeks from to-night he will not be half as chirpy as he is at present, because the Bill is going to be withdrawn and I will tell him why. I can read the First Minister, and I know the First Minister is at heart sick of it. I know that the Minister of Finance sees that he has been buncoed, and from the dear old Minister of Customs down through the whole outfit of them there is not a man who is not disgusted with the whole thing. We are not blind. We see the First Minister and the Minister of Finance and the other ministers wear their funeral smiles.

Mr. FIELDING. Would my hon. friend turn around and see the enthusiasm on his own side of the House?

Mr. HUGHES. Where could you see anything more cheery than the face of my hon. friend from Halton?

Mr. LANCASTER. No blue ruin over here.

Mr. HUGHES. In addition to the Americans who do not want annexation there are Americans who are opposed to reciprocity and their fear is that if you remove protection from the farmer you must remove it from the manufacturer, and that is logical. Will the First Minister and the Minister of Finance deny that if by this reciprocity deal the farmers of Canada are deprived of protection they would not in turn demand that the manufacturer should be deprived of protection, and then will come that commercial union for which the Liberal party in this country have so long been hoping. There are Americans who are opposed to reciprocity because it unsettles trade conditions all along the border just as Mr. Flavelle in his letter, pointed out that after many years he has been able to build up a great trade which necessitated his bringing commodities into Lindsay last year on which $65,000 in freight rates alone were paid, and that this arrangement will perhaps cause the break-up of that trade and its disappearance for all time.

Do you blame these men in the United States, then, for opposing it? It is opposed by them because it leads to free trade, and the American people are not in favour of free trade yet. The Minister of Finance spoke of these gentlemen of the west demanding that it be not passed because it is going to introduce a new element, and interfere with the prices of land. Of course it will. He knows that the opening up of the Northwest affected the price of lands in Ontario, but it did not affect the price of wheat; and the farmers of the western states, whose lands are valued at from $80 to $100 an acre, very justly oppose this reciprocity deal, because they feel that if the great plains of the Northwest are opened up to free trade in wheat, the rush of immigrants there will naturally reduce the price of their lands just as the prices of lands in the eastern states and in Ontario was reduced by the opening up of the west. These are the reasons advanced for the opposition to this agreement in the United States. There are many in the United States who support it, and who are they? Those who favour annexation; those who want Canada's markets to sell in; those who are after Canada's resources. Mr. Beveridge, who was cheek by jowl with the First Minister and the Minister of Finance the other day, comes out frankly and says: We have squandered our United States resources, and now we want to get hold of those of Canada. Other reasons are that they want to divert attention from their own troubles, such as questions of capital and labour, the negro and other race questions, and the rivalries which are breaking up that country. Then, we find some people in Canada shouting, our farmers will get higher prices. That is what Mr. J. J. Hill tells the grain-growers of the Northwest, whereas he is telling the farmers of the United States: Don't be frightened, gentlemen; Canada gets as good or a better price for her wheat than Chicago does; Minneapolis has millions of bushels of low-grade wheat, and it wants to have one bushel of Canadian No. 1 hard to mix with every four or five bushels of United States cheap wheat to make good flour. Their aim is to control trade in Canadian wheat in Minneapolis, to destroy Canadian standards, and close Canadian mills, to control prices and markets, to close British mills and raise prices in Great Britain itself, and develop United States centres. Then Canada's wheat will lose its identity, the milling trust will control, and the mills of the United States, which now run half time, will then run full time. They will bring the prices down for the farmer and bring them up for the trust.

I am opposed to this agreement also for the following reasons: Instead of Canadian pulpwood being shipped to New England and manufactured into paper there, I want to see it manufactured into paper in Canada so that our fellow-countrymen in New Brunswick and our fellow-countrymen in Ontario and Quebec and Nova Scotia will be benefited instead of the people in the valleys of New England. We want our wheat to go out as flour, we want our cattle to be shipped in the form of beef to the markets of the world, our hogs as pork, our hay as horses and beef. At present we actually import Yankee beef into our lumber camps. Mr. Smyth, the member for East Algoma, told me that he imports large quantities of American beef, which undersells the Canadian beef. We want to protect our beef. We want to sell our cattle to England in the form of beef as much as possible rather than on the hoof. We want to sell our milk and cream in the form of butter and cheese. We want to sell our sheep as mutton, our wool as cloth, and our barley as beef and pork, and not as beer. We want to give the men and women of Canada a chance rather than the men and women of the United States. We have no fault to find with the United States for giving their people a chance; but we want to give the boys and girls of Canada an opportunity in their own country. We want our people to sell, not pulpwood at $3 or $4 a cord, but paper at $30 a ton. If the Americans want paper, let them make it free and buy it from us. This is the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party, and also the policy of thousands of men in the Liberal party. This is no party question. We have the best minds of the Liberal party in favour of this policy—the hon. member for Brandon, the hon. member for Brantford, the hon. member for Welland, who have already spoken, and scores of others who in their hearts know that this is the best policy for Canada. Up and down the country there are thousands of Liberals who feel the same—like Sir Edmund Walker, Mr. Lash, Mr. George and many others. These men have the manhood to stand out and say: We are going to stand by Canada rather than by party, we refuse to wear the label when the bottle does not contain the essence, but we stand by the essence. I say all honour to the men who take that stand, and I am surprised that the right hon. the First Minister does not see his way clear to withdraw this resolution.

Now, Sir, I am coming to a rather important part of this matter. I am going to take up the question of wheat, and I am going to read a few extracts in relation to wheat that I think have not been presented to the public before. Mr. Steenerson, a member of the House of Representatives, at page 2517 of the 'Congressional Record,' speaking of wheat, says:

It is explained that wheat in Winnipeg carries with it the milling in transit privilege as far as Fort William, so that to compare Minneapolis prices with Winnipeg you need not add any freight to the Minneapolis price, which puts the wheat relatively in the same position as though it were in Duluth or Minneapolis. This would be for export purposes.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, at page 2533 of the 'Congressional Record,' says:

Distance from markets has much to do with the prices of grain. So this proposition is modified by proximity to markets and cost of transportation. While Canada is exporting wheat or other grains and the United States is also exporting wheat, there is no particular reason why Canadian wheat should come here, unless it be that a mixture of Canadian and American wheats may be desirable on the part of our milling exporters, and our millers may find it profitable to handle the Canadian surplus. But the price to the Canadian for this surplus wheat will be substantially the same whether sold in Europe or the United States.

Here is the kernel of the whole thing:

However, if the handling of Canadian wheat by United States railroads, merchants, and mills has a tendency to reduce the price, it will be reduced to Canadians; and if it should reduce the price of bread to the American consumer, wise statemanship may find it necessary to do that to avoid greater evils.

Mr. McCall, at page 2931, says:

The mills of Minneapolis will have their business greatly increased. The clearings of the financial transactions will take place here. Much of the purchase price will go into the ordinary channels of our trade, and the quickening influence will be felt throughout our entire country.

At page 2930, Mr. McCall further says:

When I scan the commerce of Canada and the United States; when I see, for instance, that of butter the United States sends to Canada more than twice as much, notwithstanding the existing tariffs, as Canada sends to the United States; when I see that we send over fifteen times as many eggs to Canada as Canada sends to the United States; that we send nearly as much wheat to Canada, notwithstanding our great mills, as Canada sends to the United States, I can see no threat to the agricultural interests of this country. . . . For a third of the year the price of wheat at Winnipeg is higher than the price of wheat on this side of the line.

Then further on he said:

Mr. Chairman, my statement about the price in Canada and this country is based upon the average for three years in Winnipeg and Minneapolis.

On page 3795 Mr. J. J. Hill speaks as follows:

Senator McCumber, of North Dakota, is also said to have stated that American wheat prices have been for many years from 13 to 17 cents higher on the American than on the Canadian side of the line. Both Senators are fighting reciprocity on the ground that it will injure the American farmer. They both show a fine disregard of facts, which the country is coming to expect from opponents of the treaty. Since their attack is inspired by public statements made by me, the facts should be stated.

I have taken the closing prices of May wheat as officially reported for each days of the months of November, 1910, January, 1911, and the first 16 days of February on which the exchanges were open in February of both 1910 and 1911. This covers the period to February 21st, 1911. I have averaged these figures to obtain the monthly averages for each of the three great markets—Chicago, Minneapolis, and Winnipeg. The results are not opinions, but facts. The following are the figures:

	Chicago.	Minneapolis.	Winnipeg.
Nov., 1910	96	105·4	95
Jan., 1911	99·6	106·5	98:6
Feb., 1910, 16 days ..	111·5	111·7	106·1
Feb., 1911, 16 days ..	93·7	100	95·6

It will thus be seen that Winnipeg prices are as high as, if not higher, than Chicago prices, taking them all in all. On some occasions the Minneapolis prices are high because the Minneapolis mills must have our better grades to mix with their cheaper grades. Speaking on this matter, Mr. Hill says:

All the opponents of annexation in Canada are shouting that it will reduce the price of Canadian wheat, while on our side they are shouting that it will depress the American price.

There is a plain admission of Mr. Hill that what is really meant by this proposed agreement is annexation. It is not the Canadians who are shouting annexation, but Mr. Hill and President Taft and one after another all these gentlemen in the United States who are supporting it:

Their claims destroy each other, therefore, according to the line of argument used by the gentleman cited, the proposal of reciprocity has caused wheat to fall 50 per cent more in Chicago than in Minneapolis. There is no end to the absurdities and contradictions that may be created by this method as long as this country is a large exporter of wheat.

Prices, as I have shown, vary just as much and more between local markets in this country where there is no tariff. For ten years the average price in California has been 12 cents a bushel higher than in Oregon, and in South California, 13 cents higher than in North Carolina.

The highest price for wheat for May delivery in Chicago varied last year from $1.11\frac{3}{4}$ in August to 98 cents in November; from $1.05\frac{1}{4}$ in October to 98 cents in November. The table given above exhibits far more singular fluctuations in respect to where the tariff cannot apply than in those where it does.

The basic price of wheat is fixed in Liverpool and varies with the world's supply and demand. It has been affected by a visible supply ranging from 20,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels and upward larger than a year ago, and by a world's yield which some estimate as high as 25,000,000 bushels larger. The local markets have additional variations from purely local causes. Minneapolis is reported as having nearly three times as much wheat in store as she had a year ago. Therefore, the Minneapolis price has declined. To ascribe such changes, whose causes are perfectly visible, to tariff or reciprocity is like charging the comet with an epidemic of infantile paralysis.

Mr. Hill says further:

That the tariff will not prevent the price of wheat from going down so long as we are exporting a surplus is evidenced by past experience. Under the Dingley law, for instance, we had the same duty on wheat that we have now, yet every one knows that prices ranged all the way from 60 cents to $1.25 per bushel during the 13 years that law was in force. Also, under the Wilson Bill the much-heralded free trade measure, there was a duty of 25 cents per bushel on wheat, yet the price went down to the rate of 40 and 50 cents per bushel.

Then follows a statement showing the amount of exports from and imports into the United States of these commodities, but I shall not take up the time of the House by reading it. Mr. Hill goes on to say:

A comparison of these figures will give some idea of the difference in the amounts of our exports and imports. The amount of wheat we import, for instance, is insignificant as compared with what we export. And that little amount comes from Canada, and after being made into flour becomes a part of our exports.

Mr. Hill goes on to say at page 3797:

Notwithstanding the fact that farm labour in the United States is the highest in the world, yet, because of the great fertility from soil, the energy and enterprise of our people, and the use of modern labour-saving machines, the American farmer can produce more cheaply and undersell the farmers of every nation on the globe.

And this is the country these gentlemen want our farmers to compete with. At page 4411 of the 'Congressional Record' I come to the experts, Messrs. Pepper and Davis, appointed by the United States government to inquire into this question. Their report is very interesting reading, and I shall take the liberty of placing a portion of it before the House. I might point out that I shall only give a very small portion of it, because it is most extensive, but no man can read it without being convinced that not only will the Canadian farmer be practically ruined by reciprocity, but there is a great deal more behind this deal than appears on the face of it.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the date of it?

Mr. HUGHES. It is a Senate document prepared upon the subject of Canadian reciprocity, No. 862 of the 61st Congress, Third Session:

The American farmer receives the benefit of this competition, and yet he fails to supply the full requirements of the mills for full-time operation. American mills have capacity and could convert into flour not only the entire annual wheat product of the United States, but in addition the entire wheat product of Canada. Make it possible for the surplus wheat of Canada to seek the exporting mills of the United States and they will convert it all into flour and sell it abroad, thus taking from the foreign miller the best part of his supply, and that which he now obtains at a relatively low price. The world's demand for wheat or flour will be none the less because of Canada's surplus finding disposition in the United States. The demand will still exist, but American mills will be enabled to meet the demand with the finished product——

Listen to this:

—transported by American railways, and marketed by American agencies.

Again, at page 4411, it says:

The price of wheat in the United States generally averages as to the northwestern crops, fully 10 cents per bushel, and sometimes so much as 15 cents per bushel higher than in the corresponding sections of Canada.

And here is the reason why our wheat is lower:

The bulk of the Canadian crop at present is marketed soon after harvest, and this will probably be the case for many years to come.

This will apply to fruit. The Yankee crop hits the market early and gets the high price; the Yankee wheat hits the market early, and the Canadian wheat tails in after the Yankee mills have begun work on the season's crop, and so it gets a low price.

It is marketed much later in the season than the crop in the United States. It goes directly to the market centres of Europe in large quantities at a time when it least is needed to meet the world's demand.

This is another reason why the price is low:

Thus ensues an enforced period of depression occasioned by the over-abundance. Lower prices thus brought about are reflected into every market throughout our own country, and this comes just at the time that our farmers are selling most freely of their products.

And now comes the most important admission I have seen yet in connection with this business:

The facilities offered by the American grain exchanges, our enormous elevator capacity, our abundance of capital, and——

That means the trust.

—if you will, our speculative sentiment,——

That is also included in the trust.

—will all become factors in controlling the flow of Canadian grain toward point of consumption.

Where is the Canadian farmer going to benefit? This document further says, at page 4412:

It may be remarked that Minneapolis wheat is now and often is at a premium over the current price in Chicago. That is true at times, for the reason that generally the demand for high-grade milling wheat at Minneapolis is much greater than at Chicago. Minneapolis is the greatest milling centre in the world. Minneapolis mills have a greater reputation throughout the world than mills of other sections. Their capacity being great, their cost of production is relatively low. With such facilities and reputation and low cost, they can afford to pay premiums for the better grades of wheat. There has recently been excessive competition among the mills of Minneapolis to attract wheat and hold it there. . . It requires 6 bushels of wheat to produce one barrel of high-grade patent floor. Even one bushel of high class wheat combined with 5 busheds of average wheat will materially improve the one barrel of high-grade flour when produced by such a combination. . . The farmer may not realize what must be apparent to the thoughtful student, that the ability of the American mills to absorb practically all the wheat that is grown in the United States and so combine it into a finished product that every kernel of it has immediate value, is the most important influence in existence for maintaining the high level upon which American wheat is sold.

Not how is it bought, but how is it sold.

Such an influence does not exist in the same degree in Canada as it does in the United States, and this is one of the reasons why the Canadian farmer has had to take less for his wheat than has the farmer of the United States. . . The admission of Canada's high-grade wheat without payment of duty will at once stimulate to greater activity every exporting mill in the United States to which the rates of freight will permit the delivery of Canadian wheat. . .

Every bushel of Canadian wheat thus used in the development of increased trade abroad will require its complement of 4 or 5 bushels of home-grown wheat that would not be required by the American mill if it were unable, as at present, to increase its foreign outlet for flour. . . . . The question presented is whether the Canadian surplus of grain will reach the ultimate markets where the world's price is fixed, on the low basis at which it is at present being marketed, or whether this surplus will be handled by American methods, through American elevators, over American railways and by American flour mills, all of which, with abundance of capital, established connections, and unparalleled facilities, provide channels and methods by which distribution may be made more in accordance with the world's needs, thus subjecting the Canadian surplus to influences that will add to its ultimate value when it finally goes into consumption.

In other words, the milling trust will pay the Canadian farmer what it chooses. Now, the Canadian farmer is independent, and he can raise the prices when he has the wheat to sell.

It is the part of wisdom that such a union of commercial forces may be provided by which the competition between the grain producers of Canada and the grain producers of the United States for the sale of their surplus products in the markets of the world may be minimized or entirely eliminated.

In other words, they want to remove the rivalry. They will have the market at their mercy, and you can see where prices will be.

Such union of commercial forces is made possible by the reciprocity agreements. The north American grain crop, once this agreement is approved, will move forward to the points of final distribution, not as now, a weight to bear down the market, but dealt out to meet the market's demands.

That is, just as the trust wants it to go.

It will no longer be 'dumped' in the season succeeding harvest, when the American home price is most seriously affected, but its distribution will be more and more in the shape of finished products.

That is, the American trust will hold it, and they will control the markets of the world and will make John Bull pay what price they please. Then, at page 4413, this document says:

In other words, the advantage we give the Canadian farmer will not hurt our farmer, for the price will remain the same, but by patronizing our elevators, our flour mills, our railroads, he will secure admission to the world's market at a less cost to himself, while we will secure the advantage of increased trade for our elevators, our mills, our railways and our commission men.

In this connection, the Minneapolis 'Tribune' says:

Though Minneapolis already has a large selling force in western Canada, and, though many firms will increase their forces only slightly, the smaller firms plan to branch out and go after the trade that would result in Minneapolis becoming a still greater wholesale market. To this end, the clerks, bookkeepers, office hands and even office boys today are in a better position to realize on day dreams than ever before, according to those in touch with the heads of Minneapolis business houses. No time is to be lost in having the reserve force all ready 'to shoot' into the new trade territory to win laurels for themselves and dollars for Minneapolis and her enterprises.

I want to see where Canada is coming in in all this business. Let me quote briefly the statement of Mr. Mauff, of Chicago, at page 147, of the Ways and Means Committee—a brief extract, but very interesting:

I would like to answer that question, and explain one of the features of that desire of the Minneapolis and Duluth millers to get that wheat from northwestern Canada. It is because of its very superior quality. It allows the use of inferior grades to make the blend that will come up to standard. With a little of that very superior wheat it is possible to use inferior wheat. That is the real reason.

—the reason why they want Canadian wheat.

Now, I have explained the effect of the beef trust; I have dealt with the milk question and I have spoken of eggs. In this same report of Pepper-Davis these matters are taken up in detail. As to agricultural implements, the Americans admit that agricultural implements can be made in the United States and sold in Canada cheaper than Canadians can manufacture them.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Can but they don't.

Mr. HUGHES. All stand at the same prices. Now, let me give the House a few words from the farewell address of Washington, which are well worthy of consideration. This has reference to the unity of the British Empire, on page 3279:

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the evidence of your real independence, the support of your tranquility of home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken——

In view of this let me point out that for many long years the nations of Europe, and some people in the United States, have been building on this very line, the disintegration of the British Emipre. I now quote from the 'Congressional Record' page 3279:

Much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively, though often covertly and insidiously, directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

Let me point out that to these gentlemen, and ask them how they have observed the mandate in relation to the Dominion of Canada. Also on page 3280:

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced.

I take the liberty of pointing this out to strengthen my argument that we must take no steps that will weaken the ties that bind the colonies to the mother land, but that, on the contrary, we should stand firmly for strengthening them. Now I come to the question of annexation. The question of annexation has not been raised by the people of Canada. I have seen speeches reported by some of those gentlemen who are elected to the House as independents, but who, like the turkey that dropped to the side where the most corn was to be found, complain that we are going about impugning somebody's loyalty. Well, I am not impugning any man's loyalty, I am merely pointing out the facts that exist. This question was not brought up by the Conservative party, but it was brought up by this government, by the agreement they made with the representatives of the United States. We find gentlemen occupying the highest position politically in the United States coming out flatfooted in favour of this agreement because it means the annexation of Canada. You cannot find half a dozen leading politicians in the United States who do not admit that it means annexation. What are we to do? Are we to sit here and say nothing? In the first place, it is an insult to the intelligence of a free people to find gentlemen standing in the legislature of another country talking of the annexation of Canada. We have had experience of these people before. Only recently they sent a lot of buccaneers into Mexico to produce a rebellion, and President Taft sent 25,000 Yankee soldiers down to the border of that country, not for the purpose of restoring order in Mexico, but for the purpose of protecting disorder. There have been two or three rebellions in Central America created by Yankee filibusters. It would be easy to show that there has been much less disorder in Mexico than there has been in the United States. Now, taking up the question of annexation, we find this Mr. McCall, one of the ablest men in Congress, speaking thus in favour of reciprocity:

Add to the tremendous influences that are pulling the two countries together the entangling web that is woven by reciprocal trade, and the inevitable day will be more quickly reached when the two countries shall be politically one.

Mr. Good, of Iowa, on page 2731 of the 'Congressional Record,' says:

It is unquestionably true that the first step in the direction of a closer bond between this country and Canada must come through trade and commercial concessions.

Mr. Martin, of South Dakota, on page 2570 says:

I am not unfriendly to genuine reciprocity with Canada. I have often said I would like to see Canada annexed to the United States . . . . I am willing to take up our tariff wall altogether and place it down on the northern boundary of Canada.

In the report of tariff hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, December 4, 1908, when the Payne-Aldrich Bill was pending in Congress, we find this conversation taking place:

Mr. Champ Clarke—Nearly all those who are raising wheat in the Northwestern British possessions are Americans who have gone over there, are they not?

Mr. Henry—A great many of them are; yes, sir.

Mr. Clarke—Nearly the whole outfit?

Mr. Henry—Yes, sir.

Mr. Clark—Fixing to bring that country into the United States, are they not?

Mr. Henry—I cannot speak for them.

Mr. Chairman—I do not think you ought to give it away, if they are.

Mr. Clarke—That is exactly what they will do; exactly what they did with Texas.

Now on page 2518 Mr. Jones is speaking:

That is what they ought to do; the same as any foreigner; If he wants to come in, let him throw out the Stars and Stripes and let them float over that country, and then he can come in, and we are perfectly willing to let him.

Then on page 2519, the Carthage Board of Trade says:

If Canada were proposing to unite with and become a part of the United States, sharing in the expenses of our government and taking on our standards of life, then questions of patriotism might arise and an appeal to patriotism might have some force.

Then on page 2930 Mr. McCall, speaking of the Louisiana purchase says:

Why, if it were proposed to add to this country to-day another Louisiana purchase, if it were proposed to add two or three agricultural States, who would there be to deny that such a circumstance would augment materially the prosperity and wealth of the two countries? And yet, to the extent to which this Bill goes that is just what we are doing. One has but to look at the map to have the case conclusively shown. The common frontier between the two countries is 3,700 miles long.

On page 3275 Mr. Sherwood says:

I was elevated and highly entertained by the closing remarks of the able and experienced gentleman from Missouri, (Champ Clark) in predicting that this proposed compact, if enacted, will not only promote our trade with our near-by Canadian neighbours, but tend to unite the people of the States and the people of the provinces into a union, so that at no far-away day the Flag of many Stars may supplant the Union Jack from the Gulf of Mexico to the North Pole.

He should have said from the sandy plains of Popocatepetyl to the north pole.

This was said amid great applause. This prescient spirit of an all-pervading patriotism arouses serious thoughts, and touching the absorption or annexation of Canada.

Mr. Swasey, of Maine, page 3445, said:

I live under the American flag and am more interested in the welfare and prosperity of the American people than the people of any other nation. I am in favour of annexation, but I am not in favour of giving to Canada the full benefits of the American markets for her farm products and her paper manufactures free of any duty, in competition with the products of American farmers and American paper manufacturers. I said I am in favour of annexation, sharing with the Canadians all the rights of American citizens, provided they shall share with us some of the burdens and responsibilities that attach to American citizenship.

Mr. McCall, page 2484, says:

The Bill takes a long step toward establishing for the continent of North America a policy of unrestricted trade and commerce, recognizing natural conditions that have been too long ignored.

The attempt to set aside the plain decrees of nature by artificial tariff barriers has injured both countries, but on account of her configuration Canada has suffered far more than this country.

And the benefit to us would be enormous. If we could sweep away all tariffs between the two countries, it would have the effect upon our trade of another Louisiana purchase.

Mr. Champ Clark says:

Peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliances with none.

Speaking of the Panama canal, he proceeds:

We are not spending that vast sum because we are altruists, but as a business matter. I am for it, because I hope to see the day when the American flag will float over every square foot of the British North American possessions clear to the north pole. They are people of our blood. They speak our language. Their institutions are much like ours. They are trained in the difficult art of self-government. My judgment is that if the treaty of 1854 had never been abrogated the chances of a consolidation of these two countries would have been much greater than they are now.

Mr. MARTIN.—Will the gentleman favour the abrogation of our tariff law entirely so far as Canada is concerned, and making free trade with Canada on all products?

Mr. CLARK.—By taking Canada in to become part of the United States; Yes.

Mr. Eb. J. Hill, at page 4562, says:

Under reciprocity trade between Hawaii and this country flourished to the great advantage of both until by the logic of events the islands became a part of this nation.

Under reciprocity our trade with Cuba has more than doubled. Under free trade with Porto Rico, which met with a storm of denunciation when first proposed, but which Wm. McKinley declared to be 'our plain mines, and copper industry, the woollen increased nearly fifteenfold.

Under reciprocal relations with the Philippine islands, a territory containing a larger population than the Dominion of Canada, our mutual trade has grown in less than a single year 70 per cent.

So that, from whatever aspect yau take it, it all comes down to the same result in the end. Mr. J. J. Hill is in favour of what he calls heading off the British preference, Mr. McGuire comes out flat-footed in favour of reciprocity, Mr. Gains, of West Virginia, introduced a Bill for commercial union, and Mr. Bennett, a representative from New York, brings in a resolution to annex Canada. Mr. Bachelder, the governor of New Hampshire, in giving evidence and speaking of farm machinery and the price of farm products, said:

It probably would to some extent; but if you remove the tariff on farm products, remove it on everything, and let the Stars and Stripes float over Canada, the same as over the United States.

From whatever source you take it, boards of trade, state legislatures, town councils all over the United States, have been passing resolutions in favour of the annexation of Canada to the United States.

Let us see to what we would be annexing ourselves. Mr. Sherwood, at page 3275 of the 'Congressional Record,' speaking of the condition of the United States, says:

Why have we been losing the most thrifty and most valuable citizens of the western states, who, from choice, have left the protection of our flag and renounced citizenship in a republic to become citizens in the Canadian provinces under the protection of a British flag? Why have these valuable citizens left their homes and firesides in a mild climate to settle in the frozen north? Here comes the startling thought: Why should any United States farmer care to repudiate the flag of his country for the flag of Great Britain? or why are the Canadians opposed to annexation to the United States? Is it because we have parted with the simple republic of the fathers and are now tending rapidly to a military oligarchy, with the military spirit dominant and a present military establishment more costly than the empire of Great Britain? Is it because of the corruption of American politics? Is it because of the present unrest of our industrial classes? Is it because there is an economic and financial system in the United States controlled by not more than 5 per cent of our people, who either own or control all the railroads, steamship lines, iron mines, steel mills, oil refineries, tank lines, copper mines, and copper industry, the woollen industry, and the cotton industry? Is it because the average Canadian, looking across the border line, sees in this country no fair opportunity or a poor man's chance, outside the controlling influence of monopoly?

That is the condition of affairs to which these hon. gentlemen would annex us. These are the conditions to which they want to make us subject by this free trade compact. At page 3755 Senator McCumber, also speaking of the condition of the United States, says:

Here is a table, Mr. President, I will ask to insert which will explain this proposition:

AMOUNTS PAID DURING THE YEAR 1909 FOR:

Wines, liquors, &c.	$1,750,000,000
Meats	1,500,000,000
Tobacco	800,000,000
Lumber	685,000,000
Cotton goods	650,000,000
Woollens and worsted goods	460,000,000
Boots and shoes	435,000,000
Flour	435,000,000
Potatoes	205,000,000

They spend practically ten times as much for liquors as they do for bread. That is the country to which they want to annex us. He continues:

Let me analyse it. I want the senators who claim that these labourers benefit and that the farmer is getting too much, to listen to this. In the year 1909 the American people paid for wines and liquors and beers $1,750,000,000, and they paid for flour $435,000,000, or more than four times as much for liquors as for their bread; and yet some of the consumers complain of us. The brewer wants cheaper barley and wants the farmer to produce it for him for less compensation. I find also that the labourers and the rest of the American people spent $205,000,000 for potatoes in 1909 and they spent $800,000,000 for tobacco, or nearly $4 for tobacco to $1 for potatoes.

This is the class of people to which these hon. gentlemen want to annex us. Mr. McCumber further on says:

Mr. President, the dome of this Capitol looks benignly down upon the great Centre Market of the city. The same rising sun that gilds its towers finds the wives and daughters of farmers who have driven miles through the darkness with their vegetables, their eggs, or butter, that they may be ready with their wares to greet the early shoppers; and there they stand in their frayed and faded ginghams, in sun or in shower, disposing of the fruits of their labours. Here is a little girl 14 or 15 years of age, wearing away her young life, while your daughters are embellishing theirs with the priceless gift of education. Here is a little boy remaining home during the hot sultry days, knowing no recreation, producing the vegetables, and fruits for mother and sister to sell, while yours are running their autos, their sail-boats, or their yachts.

Here are the farmers in the near vicinity of the city of Washington, knowing no vacation, summer or winter, while half the population of this city is off touring Europe or fishing in the summer and growing fat on lean congressmen during the winter, and begrudging this farmer's wife the little sum of 5 cents for three bunches of celery.

Mr. President, I am awakened every morning at half past 4, winter and summer, by the clatter of the slow and tired horse of the farmer that has travelled 6 miles to bring in the milk and have it ready to deliver for breakfast. And when I think of the work—the good wife getting up at 2 or 4 o'clock in the morning, the son going out to milk the cows to have the fresh milk ready for such early delivery—and when I think of the hardships of that life the greatest regret that is in my heart is that I do not have to pay three times as much for milk as I do. I could stand it and so could the rest of the world stand it if they would cut off a few of the luxuries of life in which they are indulging, because the price paid the farmer is only a very small measure of the cost of living.

A short time ago I visited Washington, and I took pains to inspect the condition of the farmers in the vicinity of that city, supposed to be the richest in the world, and within sight of the dome of the capitol there were American farmers occupying a most degrading position. I protest in the name of the respectability of the farmers of the Dominion that they should be dragged down as the American farmers are under the grinding heels of the monopolies and trusts in the United States. Champ Clarke is a remarkable man; he is one of the three possible presidential candidates of the Democrats, Wilson of New Jersey, and Harmoan, of Ohio, being the other two. Champ Clarke, as a possible presidential candidate has taken to advertising himself in the newspapers of the country, and while most people have read the 13th chapter of Corinthians in days gone by, Champ Clarke has discovered it lately, and he impresses a newspaper reporter very materially with it. Champ Clarke says:

All the evidences seem to me to lead to the conclusion that the world in general and especially our part of it is getting better. People have quit fighting prize fights to a great extent.

Why, you can hardly take up a newspaper but you find a long report of a prize fight in the United States.

Duelling has been practically abolished; homicides have grown fewer.

The returns show that in the United States there are 111 homicides to each 1,000,000 population, whereas there are only four to 1,000,000 of the population in Great Britain.

Lotteries are largely a thing of the past.

You can hardly go into a church organization, much less a saloon in the United States that you won't find lotteries.

There are fewer wars than there used to be.

There are 25,000 Yankee soldiers on the borders of Mexico, a lot of Yankee free booters down there murdering their neighbours; in the Central American states there are wars going on; altogether there are five or six different wars on the American continent at the present time.

The doctrine of peace and goodwill seems to be gaining converts everywhere.

Among the professionals.

In proportion to the wealth of the American people ten times as much is given in charity as was given 100 years ago.

Then Champ Clarke comes to the most interesting of his statements which I want to place on 'Hansard.' He says:

Our urban population is growing out of all proportion to our rural population. Nobody ever heard of an agricultural community being crowded. It is an impossibility in nature.

Some two or three years ago Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson stated that if the Mississippi valley were cultivated for all it were worth, one acre, on the average, would support one human being. Missouri is richer than the average of the Mississippi valley, but let us take Wilson's estimate and figure on it.

The county of Pike, Missouri, in which I live, is situated on the Mississippi river and is one of the largest and most beautiful counties in the United states. It comprises 700 square miles of land, or 448,000 acres, and, according to Secretary Wilson's report, ought to support 488,000 people, but, being richer than the average county of Missouri, and Missouri being richer than the average of the Mississippi valley, this country ought really to support some 700,000 people. As a matter of fact, it has a population of about 25,000, and it is among the most densely populated rural sections of Missouri.

This simple statement as to one county shows the vast possibilities of the growth of the Mississippi valley states in days to come, yet newcomers stop in the cities. This vast horde of immigration which is coming here ought to be distributed, not only for their own good, but for the good of the country.

I can show by other authority also that the United States have ample ground for maintaining many times their present population. Now, Mr. Speaker, to what land are we going to be annexed. We are going to be annexed to about the only country in the world, where during the present age we find them resorting to savagery and burning people at the stake. We are going to be annexed to a country of filibusterers—there was the Texan filibustering raid which brought about the annexation of Texas, there was the Fenian filibustering into Canada from the United States; there was the Mexican filibustering war; the Cuban filibustering expedition, the Porto Rican filibustering expedition, and the Panama canal affair where Roosevelt boasted: I annexed the canal zone, and let Congress debate it. Here was a President of the United States boasting that he used his autocratic power to annex another country's territory, and he left it to his Congress to debate it afterwards. That is not the kind of country to which we wish to be annexed. Then another aspect of the arrangement is to inquire if the United States have been friendly to Canada. When they found Britain at war with the world in 1812 they declared war on Canada, and the state of Massachusetts felt impelled to declare: We will not send a single man, because the war is unjust and unholy. In that war the Americans placed 43 soldiers in the field to one British and Canadian, and yet on almost every occasion in 25 set battles the British and Canadian troops were the victors. Then, the cause of the war was not the tyranny of Britain, for Britain was fighting for liberty throughout Europe against the tryanny of the oppressor, and the United States did not hesitate to join against Britain's struggle for liberty. In 1837-38 they encouraged the unjust rebellion in Upper and Lower Canada; in 1841-42 they massed troops on the New Brunswick border, and threatened trouble; then, as in the Trent affair, they backed down, but in 1866, and 1870, we had the Fenian raid in which many Canadians were shot down. When Cleveland became President a Yankee fish poacher was caught in the maritime provinces and captured, and without inquiring into the merits of the case Cleveland called on the governors of the different states to know how many troops they could mass on the Canadian border to take Canada by force, and set this ship free. Then we had the Venezuelan affair, and we have every evidence that the people of the United States have not been grateful for the kindnesses that Britain and Canada have extended to them. 100,000 Canadians fought in the civil war to free the slaves, and during the Cuban war even the plans of the Cuban harbours were furnished them by Great Britain. In the Philippine war had it not been for Sir Edwin Chichester, the Yankee fleet would have been sunk by the Germans and Spaniards in Manilla bay. And, though on every occasion Canada and Britain have been friendly to the United States, on only one occasion, and then for their own benefit, have they been friendly to us. I want no annexation to the land in which there has been forgotten the ancient watchword: Love of right, and disdain of wrong. Washington gave out the order to his officers on duty that none but true men should be put on guard, but the Yankees of to-day have forgotten that. In olden times another watchword of the United States was for fair play for all, but to-day they are openly practising savagery, and this freebooting work that I have spoken of. There are many rich people in the United States, but there are many poor people also; in no country are the extremes of wealth and poverty so marked, and the rich people have not at all times done credit to the reputation of the nation. As was pointed out by a speaker in the House of Representatives the other day, they need more of the spirit of the fathers of the nation. Manhood seems to be on the wane in that country at the present time, and it is not a country to which we should feel inclined to be annexed. Speaking of bribery in the United States elections, the American papers have shown recently that in one election every solitary man in the district was bribed, except one who landed on the morning of the election, otherwise it was possible he would have been bribed too. Preachers and others sold themselves. Senator Lorimer has recently been tried for bribery in the Senate of the United States. His case was discussed widely during the past year, and finally he was whitewashed. The Chicago 'Tribune,' speaking of this case on March 12, 1911, said:

> The purchase of representation has but one alternative, and that is revolution.

The same paper on the same day, quoting an able speaker on this subject, said:

> We have another example of that quasi-legal lawlessness which is one of the many present day symptoms of anarchy throughout the land. Nothing that a half crazy anarchist could say in revolt against law, on a city street corner, could do one tithe the mischief which the Senate has done in the acquittal of Lorimer.

The United States, like other lands, must learn the foundation for peace and good government is not wealth or trusts, but manhood, womanhood, the masses educated, individuality, honour and self-control on the part of the masses of the people. In the United States there are many millions of good and true men, of splendid manly mould, such as laid the foundations of that grand nation in 1776; such as brought it through the stormy periods of its history, and led it out of the civil war. But these men are not all in politics. Before we can say that any movement is going to be lasting, the rank and file of the nation, as well as a few of its leaders, must be imbued with the same spirit.

Now, I have spoken at greater length than I intended. I suggested to the First Minister the desirability of withdrawing these resolutions. He must realize, as his followers behind him realize, that the heart of the nation and the best interests of the nation, are not in this movement to which he has committed himself. There is to-day too much sordid grasping for the almighty dollar. Magna Charta, a simple treaty wrenched from the King of England, has done more for the upbuilding of humanity the world over than all the trade treaties that were ever negotiated. The Bill of Rights of William and Mary has done more for the upbuilding of humanity than all the trade treaties. The old song, Annie Laurie, and the poetry of England have done more for the nation than all the trade treaties. Washington warned the United States against them and experience has shown that they do not serve the best interests of the people. The best interests of a nation consist first in looking after the home interests, and then in looking after the interests of all the nations of the earth. I regard this present measure as one of those influences which tend to disintegrate the empire, to wean one part or another from the homeland. This movement has, to my mind, that end in view, and I would most respectfully urge, as far as my voice can influence him, that the right hon. the First Minister will withdraw this resolution from the records of the House. He has a splendid opportunity to do so. The American Congress has failed to pass the measure in the session just closed. Thus far in the present session it has shown no disposition to ratify it, why should we, a self-governing country, pass this measure until they enact it? We have responsible government here. If this measure passes this parliament, it becomes part of the law of the nation. Although the Democrats control the House of Representatives, they do not control the Senate, and there is no guarantee that the measure will pass either House. Here the government must pass it or go down. There no government goes in or out if it fails to pass. Therefore I maintain that it is the duty of this government to withdraw this measure until the American Congress, at all events, passes it. Then, if the government does not get its eyes open in the meantime, it can reintroduce it and fight it to a finish.

Mr. T. A. LOW (South Renfrew). Mr. Chairman, as a manufacturer, and one who believes in the principle of protection, I desire to make a few remarks on the question now before the House and the people. If I were under the impression that the agreement which has been entered into was in the slightest degree going to affect the manufacturers of this country or impede its industrial progress, I would be one of the first to oppose it most strenuously. But when I look at the tariff arrangement as we have it, I find that the manufacturers are protected simply because they desire to be protected. If to-morrow a deputation of manufacturers came to the government and asked that manufactured articles be placed on the free list, I venture to say that the government would accede to their request. Is there any good reason why the farmers of this country, representing 60 per cent of our population, are not entitled to the same consideration as the manufacturers? They have asked to have their natural products placed on the free list, and as that does not interfere with the manufacturing interests, why should their request not be considered? If by means of this arrangement they succeed in getting a few cents more for their products, so much the better for me as a manufacturer. I and all the other manufacturers of this country will be able to sell to the farmers more manufactured articles. The hon. member for North Toronto has time and again said in his place in this House that the government have no mandate from the people—that the issue in 1891 ended reciprocity with the United States, so far as the Liberal-Conservative party was concerned and so far as the people of this country were concerned. But I find that in the year 1892 the hon. gentleman and some other members of the Liberal-Conservative government, made a bee-line for the city of Washington; and perhaps never in the history of this country was there a more humiliating spectacle than that which occurred on that occasion, when the hon. member for North Toronto and his friends were prepared, not only to enter into an arrangement similar to what this government has entered into, but to sacrifice the National Policy on the Washington altar—to make a much more extensive arrangement. These hon. gentlemen opposite, who shout of their loyalty from the housetops. The hon. member from North Toronto, speaking in this House in the session following his return from Washington, and reporting what had passed between Mr. Blaine and the delegates from Canada, stating that Mr. Blaine had said that a reciprocity treaty would have no compensating advantages to the United States of America unless they were given preferential treatment in our markets, especially against Great Britain. Was my hon. friend as loyal then as he is to-day? Did he then rise in his seat and say: No, we shall not descriminate against Britain. No, he remained to see if it could not be worked out and here is what he reported:

Well, when that point was reached, we discussed the difficulties to be met by Canada in subscribing to a treaty of that kind, and they were fully and frankly laid before Mr. Blain. They were in brief these: First the $8,000,000 or so which we collected upon the products of the United States which came into Canada.

That was one of the greatest considerations—the loss of revenue. There was no objection on the ground that we were going to discriminate against Great Britain:

And secondly, the decrease, whatever it might be, which would result in the imports from the outside world owing to the competition and entrance of United States goods free of duty into our market.

Contrast that with the arrangement entered into by our ministers who were at Washington a few months ago—no treaty, no sacrifice of Canadian industries, no interference with the preferential tariff, no breaking of the tie that binds us to the mother country; and best of all, we are free to amend our tariff whenever we see fit.

If the hon. members in the year 1892 had come back to this country with an arrangement of this kind every Conservative would have exclaimed: What a magnificent agreement! But that has always been the policy of this country, and I am not aware than any hon. gentleman in this House has yet repudiated it. In the National Policy was inserted a clause providing that as soon as the United States were prepared to enter into an arrangement of this kind, the Canadian government were willing to do so. I find that the hon. member again in his speech in 1891 said:

Time and again Canada has made advances in a fair and honourable spirit for the resumption of the old or the negotiation of new relations upon some fair and equitable basis.

What more fair and equitable basis could one desire than the arrangement which has just been negotiated by the ministers of this government. If such an arrangement were a good thing in 1891, is there any reason why it should not be a good thing to-day?

The hon. gentleman who just preceded me (Mr. Hughes) talked a good deal about annexation, and no doubt there has been an annexation sentiment among some people in the United States for many years.

The leader of the opposition, a few weeks ago, referring to the United States, said:

They were a great and powerful and a rapidly growing nation, and it was said in 1854, and repeated in 1866 and afterwards, that the manifest destiny of this country was not only commercial but political union with the United States, and there were undoubtedly those in the United States who thought that.

That was the feeling of some people in the United States in 1854, that feeling also existed in 1866, and I suppose that as long as time lasts some people there will continue to entertain it. But I would ask my hon. friend if the sentiment in Canada to-day is any more in favour of annexation or if any one thinks that Canada is more likely to be annexed to the United States to-day than in 1854 and 1866?

Much has been said upon the loyalty question. In fact the greater portion of the speech of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Hughes) was on that line. But one has only to look back over the past 12 or 15 years to see what a hollow pretense that loyalty cry is. Look at the stand of the different parties in the different matters that have come before this House, and no unprejudiced observer will be long in coming to the conclusion that while the Conservative party shouts louder than the Liberal party, yet the Liberal party is always more ready to do something substantial. For instance, when the British preference was before this House, Sir Charles Tupper, then leader of the opposition said:

We should not give England any preference without receiving something in return.

Yet to-day these men shout loyalty just as they did in 1897. Let me read a few utterances made in the days when the British preference was under discussion in this House. Sir Charles Tupper was of the opinion that we should give nothing to Britain without receiving something in return. The Liberal party, however, believed that we should do something for Britain as she had been our good friend and had looked after our interests, and should not ask for anything in return. Sir Charles Tupper, speaking of the British preference, said:

We will now give you a substantial advantage of 25 per cent reduction on the general tariff of our country and give that if you will give us a small preference.

The Liberal party to-day, therefore, are more loyal than the party who are waving the flag, and in this connection I would again refer to the remarks of my hon. friend from E. Grey (Mr. Sproule). Speaking in 1897, he said:

We are charged here with a certain duty. That duty is to look after the interest of the people of Canada. We are told that Britain is pleased with this concession. Why should she not? She gets from us a concession she never got before. She is reaching after the ideal of the Cobden club. Few governments have done for her what we have done. I do not wonder she is pleased, but we have no right to give away the rights of Canada without getting something in return. We as Canadians are willing to do our duty, but should not be called on to do more than our duty.

This is the loyal gentleman who will speak no doubt on this question if he has not already spoken on it. Again he said during that same session:

It will mean the throwing out of employment of hundreds of Canadian labourers and sending our money to feed labourers in England.

This is what this loyal gentleman had to say about the British preference. What a loyal gentleman is my hon. friend from East Grey when it cost him nothing. But should it affect his pocket, then his loyalty vanishes, like that of many hon. gentlemen opposite. If our loyalty is dependent on the amount of goods we sell to or buy from the mother country, where would we be to-day? One need only compare the figures of trade in the two countries in the past few years. Here are our sales to Great Britain and the United States respectively:

Canada sold to—

	U.S.	Britain,
1891—	$ 40,194,000	$ 49,280,000
1901—	59,962,000	105,328,000
1910—	110,614,000	149,630,000

Canada bought from—

	U.S.	Britain,
1891—	$ 57,994,000	$ 42,048,000
1901—	109,208,000	42,996,000
1910—	233,071,000	95,660,000

Total trade (including bullion)—

	U.S.	Britain,
1891—	$100,784,000	$ 91,357,000
1901—	185,591,000	148,493,000
1911—	352,221,000	245,313,000

That is, about fifty per cent more with the United States than with Great Britain. Will anybody argue that, because we have purchased more from the United States we are less loyal than in former years? If a free interchange of natural products means annexation in 1911, what did it mean in 1879, and for nearly twenty years thereafter when the Conservative party were willing to accept it? In the National Policy tariff Act of 1879, there was a clause dealing with all natural products, offering the United States reciprocity in natural products, including a great many more articles than are included in the list to-day. For instance flour, and all manufactures of wheat were included in the list. If it was loyal for that great statesman, Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1879, to insert that clause in his tariff Act, will somebody tell me why it is disloyal for the Liberal party to do the same thing to-day, or why they should be charged with being annexationists and traitors?

In the city of Montreal there has been quite an agitation worked up against the agreement. One of the newspapers taking the greatest part in this campaign is the Montreal 'Star.' In its issue of February 4, last, was a full page advertisement, which, among other things, said:

We will utterly shatter the costly steel framework of this nation and debase the Dominion to a string of subject provinces serving the convenience of the nearest American centres.

Now, if the capitalists of the old world thought that the business of the transcontinental railways were likely to be affected, we should immediately feel the effects upon the stock in the open market. But I find, on turning over the pages of this same issue of the Montreal 'Star,' that Canadian Pacific railway stock is going up by leaps and bounds, and that all other industrials are strong. Further, Sir Donald Mann, vice-president of the great system of the Canadian Northern, in an interview states that he does not think the trade east and west will be seriously affected. Again, I find by current reports that the Canadian Pacific railway are contemplating the spending of many millions of dollars this year. If the proposal now before this committee involved serious injury to the Canadian Pacific railway, is it likely that they would go on with this great expenditure? It does not seem to impede their development. I personally think that it will not injure the business of the Canadian Pacific railway, or any other transcontinental railway. I believe that the great increase in the farm products of the Northwest will be sufficient to keep them all going, notwithstanding that there may be a few million bushels shipped southward across the line.

The Montreal 'Star' further says:

Financiers of every European capital are watching our behaviour in the face of this sudden crisis. Are we going to keep faith with the men who invested their money in Canadian enterprises on the understanding that the development of Canada along national lines was a permanent feature of our policy; or, are we about to destroy the value of millions of these investments by a wanton act of betrayal, and close every market in the world against us for years to come? We have been borrowing money for decades on the pledge that we would keep Canada commercially and politically independent; and to repudiate that pledge is equivalent to repudiating our debts.

Opinion in Great Britain, which was nervous to begin with, has fallen into dismay.

I see nothing to indicate that the investors in Europe are likely to withdraw their capital; I see nothing to indicate that the great industrial development which has been going on is likely to be stopped. On the contrary, larger and larger sums of European capital are being invested in Canada. The 'Star' goes on:

Thus every British subject looks to Sir Wilfrid to save the empire. Every money-market in Europe, every Canadian enterprise that needs capital, every public body which must borrow, all look to Sir Wilfrid to save the credit of Canada. Every railway man looks to him to save the souls of our railways.

There is an old saying that railways have no souls. I do not think their souls, if they have them, would be injured by this arrangement, nor will their business be injured by it. I think that when the 'Star' awakens from its trance, it will find that things are going on just the same as before. It says:

Down come our tall chimneys! Useless are our railways for the east and west haul! Abandoned are our ports! Empty are our canals!

Mr. Chairman, we have heard all this before. We heard it in 1896, before the election; we heard it in 1897, when the British preference was introduced; and from the same sources. But the tall chimneys are still standing, and the business of the transcontinental railways is greater than ever before, and likely to increase. The 'Star' also says:

Next, it implies the opening of our natural resources to the American exploiter. Our forests will soon fall before the American lumberman and paper-maker, as have their own. Our mines will be bled into the pockets of New York stock gamblers. We will be stripped as bare as their own forest lands.

If the removal of $1.25 a thousand of the American duty on lumber is going to destroy our forests and give our natural resources into the hands of Americans, I would like to understand how this result is to come about. The only result that I can see of the removal of this duty is that it will enhance the value of properties held by the Canadian people. Canadian forests, Canadian mines, and other properties will be enhanced in value.

To-day Sir Wilfrid has the ball at his feet. He is the one man to save the situation. The Canadian people never watched him so eagerly, so anxiously, as they are doing at this moment. Thousands of his best friends hope that he will see the true bearing of the tremendous issue which lies in his hands.

Thank goodness, Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been able to look a little further ahead than the editorial writer of the Montreal 'Star.' Thanks to the people of Canada, he still has their confidence, and I believe that when the ballots are counted after the next election some of the hon. gentlemen who are opposing this agreement most strenuously will no longer be found in their seats. Then it goes on:

He has lost powerful minister after powerful minister, and yet his prestige has remained unshaken. 'Masters of the Administration' have come and gone; and yet the real master is more powerful to-day than he has ever been in the past. The meaning of this is that he can at this moment take his own course on this reciprocity agreement without reference to what any colleague may say or any 'cave' of private members threaten.

If Sir Wilfrid Laurier is to-day strong in the affections of the people of Canada, it is because he has always had the courage of his convictions. I believe that in dealing with this matter he has endeavoured to do as he has always done in dealing with great issues. A great agitation has been worked up in the city of Montreal, and there is no question that there is something at the back of that agitation, something that requires money. An evidence of that is the fact that the Conservative organ in the city of Montreal refers to certain advertising matter as being paid for. The Ottawa 'Citizen,' in referring to that, says:

The Montreal 'Star,' in an appeal that cannot be construed as anything but hysterical, is calling upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier to 'save Canada.'

Now, those are significant remarks, coming from a paper friendly to the opposition, and I think they must make some hon. gentlemen opposite sit up and think when they contemplate the probable results of the next campaign. Much has been said about a resolution signed a few weeks ago by a number of Liberals in the city of Toronto. I think, perhaps, those gentlemen are sincere, but unfortunately for themselves they have been to a certain extent hoodwinked. I read over the reasons they assigned for asking that this agreement should be rejected, and in not one of those reasons do I find any statement that any manufacturing industry in this country is likely to be affected. The British flag is waved, the loyalty cry seems to be uppermost in their thoughts. Now, I would like to be able to ask these gentlemen three questions. First, how many of those men trade largely with the United States? Second, if the United States offered a favourable market for the products of the various firms they represent, would they sell to that market? Third, in buying and selling to the United States do they feel that there is any danger in their affection for the mother country being alienated? To the first I venture to say that every man would answer: We buy from and sell to our American neighbours as much as possible.

To the second they would answer: If the United States offered us a favourable market we would certainly trade with them. To the third, they would reply: Do you mean to insult us by insinuating that our affection for the mother country is measured by dollars and cents? Yet they seem to think that the farmers might be injured if they were permitted to sell their products more freely across the border. A number of resolutions have been adopted by boards of trade. Now, if we are afraid of the Americans swallowing us up, why do we welcome American capital and American ownership of everything that they choose to buy? Why do we have American directors in our banks, on our railway boards, and on many of our large corporations? Why do we employ American managers, clerks and operators? If there is danger to our Canadian nationalism is it not to be found in the entrance into Canada of men, money and enterprise, more than in our farmers selling them a few dollars worth more of their products. Mr. Flavelle, speaking on the resolutions adopted by the Toronto Board of Trade a few weeks ago, said:

> We wanted, Mr. Flavelle said, the opportunity to trade where we might; we must have friendly relations with our neighbours to the south, because we have so many things in common.

Well, if that is the case, if it is the wish of Mr. Flavelle, who is opposing this arrangement, to have the privilege of selling on the other side of the line, why does he raise any objection to this arrangement? And Mr. F. W. Hay, of Listowel, puts his case very clearly:

> If these gentlemen will tell you that we are still trading with the United States to a greater extent than with the mother country, they would be telling you the fact: for the $300,000,000 worth of business, transacted between this country and the United States, is much larger than the trade with Great Britain. It would be poor argument to say that getting more would endanger the nationhood of Canada.

Mr. Hay very properly sizes up the situation. Then we have another class of people in this country who say: Let well enough alone. There are some shrewd business men on the other side of the House, and I would like to ask them: If they adopted that policy in their business of letting well enough alone, how long would they remain in the race? How long would they be able to continue their business? I believe every man in this country who has any ambition, endeavours to expand his business, and do as much trading as possible, and why should different methods be adopted by this government? We are a rapidly-growing country, our output will be much larger in a few years; is it not wise, is it not prudent for the government to look forward to markets that will be of some use to the people of this country with its ever-increasing output?

We have heard about the industries of this country being ruined. It is the same old story, it has the same old ring as it had in 1897. I have noted the singular absence from the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite of the actual name of any industry that will be ruined by this arrangement. The only members who have made any attempt in this direction are the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). The hon. member for Brandon, speaking in the House a few days ago, said that the flour milling business of this country would be ruined, that the agreement would have a most disastrous effect upon that industry. The only thing I can say to my hon. friend is that I am slightly interested in a flour mill and from my knowledge of the flour milling business, if there is one industry in this country that should be able to compete with the world it is in that very industry. We have the best wheat, we have cheap railway facilities and we have cheap power. These things go to make it possible for us to compete with the world. Notwithstanding the disastrous effect which my hon. friend from Brandon says it is going to have upon the flour milling trade of this country, in the early part of the year we contemplate increasing our flour milling business. We have a mill with a capacity of 250 barrels a day and we propose this summer, notwithstanding the effect that this tariff will have upon it, increasing the capacity to 500 barrels. This is the best answer I can give to my hon. friend from Brandon.

We have only to go back to the remarks of some hon. gentlemen opposite in recent years to find that the cry to-day is just the same as it was when the British preference was introduced and when they prophesied that the great industries of this country would be stopped and that many things would happen. I would like to read to the House a few paragraphs from the speeches of some hon. gentlemen on that occasion. During the thirteen years of prosperity with which we have been blessed the country may perhaps have forgotten what these hon. gentlemen did say, but I want to recall these utterances so that the people will be able to compare them with the remarks that are being made by hon. gentlemen to-day. Sir Charles Tupper, speaking in this House in 1897 said:

> The result is that this tariff goes into operation, and the hon. gentleman knows that the industries of this country are already paralysed in consequence. While hon. members gloat, vindictively gloat, over the destruction of Canadian industries, I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail, of those industries in the Montreal 'Gazette' where one manufacturer after another declared that their industries were ruined, that their mills must close, and that they saw staring them in the face a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House was in charge of the fiscal policy of this country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted upon Canada.

These were the remarks of that hon. gentleman in 1897 and hon. gentlemen opposite are saying the same thing to-day. Again, Sir Charles Tupper said:

I feel that far from rejoicing at it from a party standpoint, I deplore from the bottom of my heart the ruin that is going to be inflicted upon the best interests of Canada upon its great industries. Still, I unhesitatingly say that from a party point of view the hon. gentlemen are doing our work.

They did not do it very satisfactorily for the then leader of the opposition:

They are showing the people of this country that no reliance can be placed upon the most solemn declarations that they make, either in the House or out of it; they are showing the people of this country that, having obtained power, which was all they wished for, they are now prepared to abuse that power at the cost of the sacrifice of the industries of Canada.

Notwithstanding the fact that the then leader of the opposition prophesied in that way, the government is still in power, things are still going on, business is increasing rapidly and the trade of this country has doubled and trebled. Now, I shall quote the remarks of some other hon. gentlemen. Mr. Bell, then member for Pictou, in speaking upon this question, said:

With the preferential clause in full operation, I think it is not open to doubt nearly all the industries built up in Canada by the National Policy will be destroyed. And if this be the result, a state of affairs will arise in this country that will not be one of progress. . . If the government, by such a tariff, destroy the industries built up under the old tariff, what are they going to give us in exchange for them? Nothing. There can be no question that this country will go backward. . . . Such a state of affairs is not pleasant to contemplate, and I would hope that the sober second thought of the government, by the time we meet again, will have induced them to reverse their policy and to go back to the main schedule and drop out of use this preferential clause.

These were the prophesies of another hon. member. I am sorry that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is not in his seat because I would like to read to him a few of his remarks upon that occasion. He said:

The government go so far as it is possible for them to go and grant this 25 per cent reduction, the industries of this country cannot be maintained in the face of that competition. Is it a light thing to disturb all the growing industries of the country, is it a light thing to disturb the young life and energy and capital and enterprise which have been at work for the last fifteen or twenty years building up these Canadian interests? . . . Is it right, is it fair, is it statesmanlike, to allow this young and growing industrial life and development to be hampered and shackled, if not totally destroyed, by the invoking of competition on the basis of a reduction of duties to the extent of 25 per cent? To diminish these revenues, so far as the imports go, by 25 per cent of the whole, which totally disarranges the financial basis, turns a surplus into a deficit or adds to a possible deficit many thousands of dollars, may be many millions of dollars.

Have we had many millions of deficits during the last fourteen years? We certainly have not. Again he says:

I say that once this is passed you will import a contingency, a doubt, and an uncertainty into the business which will make it impossible for prudent men to invest large capital in staple businesses, and will consequently derange for the worse the business and trade of this country.

I do not think that any gentleman opposite will venture to say that the business of Canada has been in the slightest degree deranged by that arrangement. After fourteen years experience hon. gentlemen opposite are willing to accept it and endorse it, and I believe when the present arrangement has been in effect for less than fourteen years hon. gentlemen opposite will be ready to laud it just as they are to-day lauding the fiscal arrangement which this government inaugurated in 1897 and which they then condemned. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) speaking on the same occasion, said:

I candidly believe that in time, and as the operation of that tariff becomes better known you will hear a very wide spread complaint against it.

Up to the present moment there has not been any very widespread complaint. Speaking during the same session, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) said:

I dont believe the government expect the tariff to go into force and I hope it will not by reason of the disadvantages that will accrue to Canada for they will be great indeed.

Notwithstanding all these prophecies of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Liberal tariff has not had the bad effect on business they expected it would, and I suppose to some extent they are disappointed in that. The Manufacturers' Association of Toronto should be able to voice the feeling of the manufacturers of this country, and they have put themselves on record thus:

As manufacturers we have hesitated to express opinions on an agreement which in its present scope does not directly affect very many manufacturing industries.

If it does not affect many manufacturing industries, why is objection raised to it by hon. gentlemen opposite who claim to represent the manufacturers? The Kingston 'Standard,' a Conservative organ, speaking of the arrangement, says:

However the new tariff arrangements between Canada and the United States may be regarded by the special interests whose tariffs have been readjusted, whether the view be a friendly or unfriendly one, it seems to the 'Standard' that the opinion of the average layman will be that the readjustment will prove of decided benefit and advantage to Canada, and must work this country infinite good. One thing is certain, and that is that there has been no general sacrifice of Canadian interests, such as in some quarters had apparently been decided. Canada appears to have gotten a little the best of the deal, as a comparison of the reduction in the two tariffs will bear out—the greater reduction being made by the United States—and, indeed, as President Taft in his special message to Congress practically admits when he explains that 'if the Americans are to have friendly commercial relations with Canadians, an active aggressive and intelligent people, it will be necessary to meet Canada in a spirit of real concession.' Upon the whole, the new arrangement seems to be one that should prove beneficial and satisfactory to both sides—one that will help to perpetuate friendly relations between the two countries to the sacrifice of the real interests of neither.

That is quite an admission from a Conservative organ like the Kingston 'Standard.' Again it says:

As for annexation, we must not be deluded by that bugaboo.

I commend this to hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly to the hon. gentleman for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes):

As for annexation, we must not be deluded by that bugaboo. Let us face the facts clearly. Supposing this agreement (which the alarmists say will bring about annexation because it will assure closer relations) should never go through. And let us suppose then—which is not improbable—that the States should decide that in any event it wants our wheat, our barley, our oats, our butter, &c., &c., and accordingly proceeds to take off the duties from these things while we stand pat. What follows, then, unless the very thing that now the 'Star' waxes hysterical about—a movement of our natural products to the south? There would be no stopping them—neither sentiment nor loyalty nor fear; for trade is trade and follows natural channels. Which is to say, in short, that if annexation is inevitable if we trade freely with the States, then the States holds us even now in the hollow of its hands, because there is nothing in the world to prevent the Americans taking off their duties on our raw products and foodstuffs at any time and enlarging our trade with them immeasurably.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs, believing the time was opportune and realizing that the Americans might take down their tariff wall against us, endeavoured to get and succeeded in getting some advantage without practically giving anything in return, and so if anything has been gained by this agreement it is undoubtedly for the benefit of Canada. The hon. gentleman from North Toronto told us that this trade arrangement would injuriously affect the labouring classes in this country, but I take it that the trades and labour union of the city of Toronto is a better judge of this than is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and this is how that body views it:

That such a reciprocal arrangement, sanctioned by the governments of both countries, and yet not cast-iron in its effects upon Canada's policy, should meet with general approval, inasmuch as it is calculated to improve conditions of trade in Canada without offering any risk whatsoever of loss to our country.

Wherefore, it is resolved by this organization that its approval of the proposed reciprocity arrangement be placed on record and that the same be made known to the government and to the public of Canada.

The labour organizations in Montreal, in Toronto, and all over the country are approving of this arrangement and their approval is the best answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), in that respect. A few weeks ago in the city of Toronto very much was made of a public interview with that great captain of finance, Sir Edmund Walker. It seems to me, however, that his remarks were greatly minimized when he was compelled to state publicly that he spoke for himself personally, and not for the large financial institution of which he is the president. I am told, that it is not an uncommon thing for the bank which Sir Edmund Walker represents, in doing business in the United States, to loan large sums of money in the city of New York; but I suppose that it is all right, that there is no danger of his loyalty so long as he is permitted to do the trading and negotiating with the people across the border. I suppose it is all right for him to invest in the United States the savings of the farmers of this country, and I suppose it would be all right for him to sell their products if they would place them in his hands; but for them to sell their own products would, Sir Edmund thinks, endanger their loyalty. Mr. Larkin, of Toronto, puts the matter very clearly when he says:

Sir Edmund Walker has had a large experience in business in the republic to the south of us. Has he found that in his case it has created an annexationistic sentiment? Possibly it has, but his well-known imperialistic views enable him to overcome the feeling and thus he has been able to continue trading in the market which he finds most profitable.

Sir Edmund feels, however, that it would not be right to expose the farmer to temptation.

That is, he feels that while it is wise and profitable for him with his millions to trade in the United States, it would have a bad effect on the loyalty of the farmer if he were enabled to get five dollars more for a horse or five cents a bushel more for wheat a little south of where he now sells it.

Again, one of the Toronto papers, in referring to Sir Edmund's remarks, said:

Sir Edmund Walker is a firm believer in free trade in money. He is president of a bank that has important branches in the United States and that uses Canadian money to operate United States industries and carry on commercial transactions of great magnitude. Is he not afraid that free access to the American money market and the diversion there of some of Canada's surplus funds will hamper the developments of Canada's resources in her own way and by her own people? Or is it only surplus farm products the export of which will weaken the ties that bind Canada to the empire.

These are some of the comments on Sir Edmund Walker's remarks, and I think they size them up very correctly.

An attempt has been made to make political capital out of the remarks of the ex-president of the Canadian Pacific railway, Sir Wm. Van Horne. It is some satisfaction to know that those remarks have been to a certain extent repudiated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as the vice-president of that company says that no person has a right to speak for the company except the president, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy. Sir William Van Horne is another gentleman who thinks that it is all right for him to invest his money wherever he desires; but, like Sir Edmund Walker, he thinks that the farmer would be in danger if he were permitted to sell a few more dollars' worth of his products to the people across the border. A few weeks ago I listened to my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Harris), who, I believe honestly, opposed this arrangement. But I noticed that he spent the greater part of his speech in trying to show that the farmers were injured by this arrangement. He did not make any serious attempt to show that the manufacturers were affected by it. He gave four reasons for opposing it. The first was that the government had no mandate. I am sure that the Prime Minister has very clearly comfuted that argument. As has often been said, it was the policy of the Conservative party during their term in office, and I am sure that it has been the feeling of the people of this country, that whenever it would be possible for the government of Canada to enter into an arrangement of this kind with the United States, they were quite ready to endorse it, and they will, I believe, endorse this arrangement at the first opportunity. The hon. member for Brantford gave as his second reason, that parliament should have been consulted. Well, Sir, if he were in his seat to-night, I would be tempted to ask him, as a business man and a director of many companies, if the government did not negotiate this arrangement in exactly the same way that any business corporation would carry out any large transaction? First, the directors would meet and discuss the question, just as the cabinet met and discussed this question. The directors would delegate two or three directors to negotiate with the concern they were dealing with. If it was possible to make some progress, these delegates would come back and report to their directors. The arrangement would be ratified by the directors, just as this arrangement was ratified by the cabinet. It would then be placed before the shareholders and be ratified by them, just as parliament is asked to ratify this arrangement to-day. There has been no departure from good business principles in the carrying out of this agreement. The third reason given by the hon. member for Brantford was that there should be no alteration in the tariff without a thorough investigation. For 40 years an arrangement such as this has been the wish of our people, so that it is nothing new and, therefore, I do not see how it can be described as a radical change in our policy It is a consummation such as has been looked forward to for many years. We are now told, however, that it hurts the pride of Canadians. Could anything be more childish? Will you tell me that because the government are extending every possible avenue of business, that is going to injure our pride? No business man would look upon it in that light but would regard such a suggestion as eminently absurd.

The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) said he could not see that any good was going to come to our farmers by this arrangement, but even if it did it would be carried out at too great a cost. I would ask at too high a cost to what interests in this country? Not to the manufacturer, because the Montreal 'Star,' which is the mouthpiece of the Manufacturers' Association, admits that they are not injured in the slightest degree. What people are there to whom this arrangement will cost too much? The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) also said that he would be in favour of free trade within the British Empire. Well, I have heard hon. gentlemen on this side declare their faith in free trade, but I must say that I do not believe free trade at all advisable in this country. It is utterly impossible for our Canadian manufacturers to compete in the open markets of the world so long as conditions remain as they are in the United States. In England the wages paid are only about 50 or 60 per cent of what we pay in Canada. At present we are bringing out some men from England to work in our industry. These men in England are receiving from $8 to $10 per week, but out here they will be paid $18 per week. If, however, we had to compete in the markets of the world, the first thing we would do would be to lower our schedule of wages. What would that mean? It would mean that these men who are now getting $18 a week out here would have to take $8 a week as they do in England. That, however, is not practicable in this country and will not be so long as we have 4,000 miles of line stretching along the United States, and so long as the Americans are paying the wages they do to-day. The only way in which we can keep our men is by paying them an equal wage to what they would get across the line. Just as soon as we would suggest the reducing of their wages, they would put on their hats and walk across the border where they could earn more money. I do not believe, however, that the government has any intention of establishing free trade. At least I hope not.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), in debating this question, said:

> This agreement presented to us in this unexpected manner, which has not been discussed by us, and our electors, comes to us with startling suddenness after 40 years of complete isolation from our great neighbours.

I cannot quite understand how my hon. friend arrives at the conclusion that we are completely isolated. We buy to-day almost from the United States as much as from all the other countries put together. Surely that is not isolation. But like many others, my hon. friend believes that to increase our trade is likely to interfere with our Canadian nationalism. Again he said:

> We have created considerable industries, and upon the principles which lie at the basis of that fiscal policy those industries have grown until large and practically vested interests have been created.

But there is nothing in this agreement which is going, in the slightest way, to interfere with the continued growth of those industries. A few years ago, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), made a tour through the Northwest, and I am told that at some of the meetings he attended there were large banners drawn across the platform bearing the words 'reciprocity with the United States.' I would like to ask my hon. friend if in speaking from those platforms, he repudiated or denounced those banners. To-day he is denouncing this reciprocal arrangement. In like manner he formerly denounced the British preference which now he pronounces quite satisfactory. And no doubt in a few years he will be ready to laud the arrangement we are now entering into. It is beyond question that protection has for years been the watch word of the Conservative party, but that party never shut out reciprocity in natural products until to-day, and reciprocity would be quite acceptable to them if it could be secured without bringing fresh prestige to the Liberal party. Any benefit to Canada they could approve except benefit which implies advantages to the Liberal party. That benefit they view in another light. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition said:

> One would have thought that the present was an especially inopportune time to take up tariff negotiations with the United States.

In that I differ with the hon. gentleman. The most opportune time to do business with a foreign country is when that country is most anxious to do business with us, and for that reason the time chosen was most opportune. He further states, in referring to the growth and development of large interests:

> Will you tell me we have not a right to be absolutely satisfied with the material progress, splendid, world wide in its reputation which has come to the people of Canada.

We are perfectly satisfied with the great development brought about during the last fifteen years; but is there anybody in this country who will say that because there has been a development we are now to sit still. Development has taken place, but only because the government has always been ready, and anxious to do something which would help the prosperity of this country. And for that reason, I say, we should not be satisfied with conditions as they are to-day. He further said:

> If, in the future, the trade of this country is to flow north and south, instead of east and west, what is the meaning of all these sacrifices that have been made, of all this treasure that we have poured out? What is the meaning of the Transcontinental railway, as it is being built to-day? What is the meaning of the Georgian Bay canal, as we propose it to-day? What is the meaning of the proposed enlargement of the Welland canal? Have these any real national meaning to the people of Canada if the lines of our trade and commerce are to be diverted, so that in the future they will run north and south, instead of east and west as they have been doing?

I do not believe there will be the slightest loss of business. I believe that the transcontinental roads will have as much to carry in the future as they have had in the past. I believe that in place of 100,000,000 bushels, we shall have, in a few years, 200,000,000 or 300,000,000 bushels, and that the railways will be taxed to their utmost capacity by the trade. The Georgian Bay canal, I hope, will be built by that time, but besides all, we may have a few bushels of wheat to sell to our American neighbours. He says also:

In 1910 Great Britain took, of our animals and their products, $42,000,000 out of $54,000,000 which we exported, equal to 77 per cent. Of our agricultural products, she took $71,000,000 out of $91,000,000, equal to nearly 80 per cent.

And I believe that England will still continue to take a large portion of our output. And as long as England is able to pay the same price as the United States, I believe England will get what we have to sell. If a business man has had a customer for years, and that customer is able to pay the same prices as a new customer who offers, is that business man likely to turn aside from the old customer? As long as England can pay as high a price as the United States can pay, it will get the goods of this country. And I do not think that hon. gentlemen opposite expect to have things on any other basis. Again he says:

Well, we did ask for reciprocity, and we asked for it on many an occasion. It is perfectly true that Sir John Macdonald, in making his argument for the National Policy in 1878, before conditions had changed as they have in the past 30 years.

Well, Sir, the whole thing seems to be that it was quite acceptable, it was quite all right for the Conservative party to negotiate an arrangement of this kind, but it is a great risk for the government of this day to do it. I cannot, for the life of me, see why that distinction should be made. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, speaking of our trade and commerce, said: 'What we have we'll hold.' That is a very good motto. But the Minister Finance (Mr. Fielding) believes in going a little further, for he said: 'The trade we have we will hold, and we will look for more.' And that, I believe, is a good policy for this country. The leader of the opposition quoted the remarks of Mr. Beveridge, of the United States—and I must say these remarks do not in any degree discredit the arrangement entered into by the Minister of Finance:

We should admit Canadian wood pulp and Canadian paper free in return for Canada's admitting our agricultural implements, our engines, pumps and other machinery free. We should freely admit Canadian lumber to American planing mills in return for Canada freely admitting other American manufacturing products to Canadian markets.

I am sure that Mr. Beveridge would like to have seen that kind of an arrangement entered into with Canada, but, thank goodness, we had two gentlemen looking after our interests at Washington who were quite capable of doing it. And, as a result of that, few manufactured articles will be permitted to enter this country on a free basis. The leader of the opposition said:

We should have a fiscal policy that aims at the development of our own country, at the employment of our own labour, at the increase of our own population, at the utilization of our resources.

That has been the aim of this government since they came into power, and no better evidence of that could be given than the rapid development of our country industrially, and the great increase of our trade. The hon. gentleman further states:

My idea of a tariff is one which would give the industries of this country a fair chance.

I believe the tariff of the day gives the industries of this country a fair chance to operate. Perhaps a few slight changes might be beneficial, but it is impossible to have a perfect tariff. The hon. gentleman says further:

We have begun a great work in this country. Two great races whose mother tongues are spoken in this parliament came into the inheritance of this great country under the providence of God.

No person who has ever lived in Canada has done more to unite the two races into one happy people than the present leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). His ambition has been to unite all diverse elements, and in many ways he has shown his master hand in this work of bringing harmony between the east and the west. There is no person but will admit that in the provinces in the west there is a strong feeling for free trade, while the people of the east are for protection. To bring together these two elements, to come to some arrangement satisfactory to both east and west, is something, I believe, which is accomplished by the Prime Minister in this case. He is giving something to the people of the west without injuring the producers of the east. It is a great accomplishment, and I am sure it will stand as a masterwork of the Prime Minister long after he has passed from the scene.

My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has gone out of his way to refer to the gentlemen who negotiated the agreement and some of the other members of the cabinet as being not very extraordinary and not very well informed men. It is true perhaps that the hon. gentlemen he has referred to have not had the same experience in financial matters as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), but we on this side of the House thank God for that. During this debate the hon. gentleman stated:

In 1891 the Liberal-Conservative party made its last endeavour for reciprocity with the United States of America, and after the negotiations were ended and we returned home to Canada, the Liberal-Conservative party declared itself as done with reciprocity from the United States of America.

It has been shown on many occasions during this debate that these gentlemen made several trips after that. Again, speaking during this debate, he said:

There was quick sale, easy sale, no glut in the markets, no lying in our bins and cellars, no rotting in our fields.

If I am any judge of what is likely to follow it is there will be quicker sale and more markets.

Further on he said:

Death is repulsive in every form, none the less so in its political forms.

I am sure the hon. member for North Toronto realizes that perhaps more than any one else, and when the people of this country have an opportunity to pronounce on this issue, my hon. friend will fall into a political trance from which he will not awaken until some years after this agreement has been in successful operation. Further on he says:

It is that the United States of America covets the rich natural resources of the Dominion of Canada.

I fail to see how the people of the United States, if this agreement comes into force, will have any more claims upon our natural products, upon our forests and our mineral wealth, than they have to-day. I believe it will increase their wealth, but they will have no more claim upon our resources than they had in former years. In drawing a comparison, the hon. member for North Toronto said:

Let a man with $8,000 go into business with a man with $100,000, and who manages that business?

Well, I do not believe that is the case here, there has been no partnership entered into. I think the hon. member for North Toronto would have made a more accurate comparison if he had said that two men were entering into business, one with a capital of $8,000, and the other with a capital of $100,000, one on Bank street and the other on Sparks street, but each man would have full control of his own business. So in this arrangement, the people of Canada have still control of their tariff and the Americans have control of theirs, and they do not control our tariff any more than they did in former years. The hon. gentleman went on to say:

But it does not follow that, because you are friendly with your neighbour and are doing each other good turns, you should give him half or three quarters of your house and install him in it. Neither does it follow that because we want to be on good terms with the United States we are to hand them over our rich possessions.

Well, I fail to see where the Canadian people have given the United States three-quarters of their house, or any of their possessions. They are still in exactly the same position as they were before this arrangement was made, except that they are in a better position to do business with the people to the south of us. He placed before the House a long list of articles on which he claimed the British preference had been reduced. But I noticed that nearly all the articles in that list which have been affected by this arrangement, have been only slightly affected, and that Great Britain has still a decided advantage. On all the larger imports there is still a substantial preference. We have heard some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who, in discussing the reference in the speech from the Throne to this matter, placed themselves on record rather prematurely. The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) referred to it, and was quite satisfied. He said:

Why, of course, we would hold up both hands for that. But does anybody suppose for a moment that our American friends, the shrewdest, keenest business men in the world, came to Canada merely to discuss measurements by which the products of Canada would be admitted into the United States on satisfactory terms to Canada? . . . . Everybody will hold up both hands for any arrangement to enable us to send our goods on satisfactory terms to the United States, but whether or not we shall agree to let their goods in here is another story.

The manufactured articles the hon. member referred to have not been admitted free into this country. It will be interesting to note, when the time comes to vote, if that hon. gentleman will still stand by the remarks he made so early in the session. The hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Chisholm) also had this to say:

Personally, I would favour reciprocity if I thought we could get a fair deal.

Those are strong words. If he thinks the deal has been fair, and I am sure that any honest thinking man will admit that it is a good arrangement, I wonder how the member for East Huron will vote when the time comes. I cannot understand how he can go back on those words. Let me say in conclusion, that I hope the day is not far distant when men in this country will cease to drag the good old British flag in the political gutter. I hope that some of the hon. members on the other side of the House will have the courage of their convictions, and if they vote as they believe, the majority in favour of this resolution will be a large one.

On motion of Mr. Sexsmith the committee rose, and reported progress.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 12.07 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 12, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

VERDICT OF A MONTREAL JURY.

*Mr. HUGHES :

1. Has the attention of the government been drawn to, or has any member thereof observed, the report of the action of the jury in the case recently tried in Montreal, where a man charged with assaulting another and stealing from him certain Masonic property, was by the jury declared not guilty, in response to an alleged fanatical appeal to creed passions on the part of the prisoner's solicitor, although the prisoner admitted his guilt and the judge strongly charged against him?

2. Has the Minister of Justice or his department received any report on the case from the presiding judge?

3. Does the government purpose taking steps in this case to have justice vindicated and to have the jurymen prosecuted for violation of their oath of office?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH:

1. Not otherwise than by the question and by references in the newspapers.

2. No.

3. The matter is not within the authority of the Dominion government, as by the British North America Act everything relating to the administration of justice in the provinces is assigned to the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures and authorities.

MARRIAGE LAWS.

*Mr. HUGHES :

1. Is the government or any member thereof aware that the Hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church and the courts of Quebec province are said to decline to recognize as valid a marriage between a Roman Catholic man and a Roman Catholic woman if solemnized by other than an ecclesiastic of the Roman Catholic Church?

2. Is the government or any member thereof aware that as alleged, ecclesiastics of the Roman Catholic Church declare invalid marriages solemnized between a Roman Catholic and one of another faith throughout the Dominion of Canada, unless the ceremony be performed by an ecclesiastic of the Roman Catholic Church?

3. Under the British North America Act, section , does not marriage come under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada?

4. Is it the intention of the government to enact legislation which throughout Canada will make a marriage legal in any and every province if performed between persons of the same creed or faith, or of different creeds or faith, in any province by any official or officials recognized for such purpose in any other province; in short, to enact a Dominion of Canada marriage law which will accept for every part of Canada, and make lawful in every province a marriage consummated under the law or form of any province?

5. Is it the intention of the government to make it a criminal offence, and to prescribe punishment, for any person, ecclesiastic or other, who intrudes or promulgates or publishes, or declares any rule or dogma of any ecclesiastical organization casting doubt upon or declaring invalid or in any sense reflecting on the legality of a marriage performed by any official recognized as entitled to perform a marriage ceremony, or setting up any such ecclesiastical dogma or rule as overriding the law of Canada?

6. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to declare valid a marriage solemnized in Quebec or in any province of Canada between two persons of the Roman Catholic faith, providing the officiating clergyman be a Protestant, and for the removal of doubt to make the law retroactive?

7. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to permit any ecclesiastical dogma or rule to override the laws of the people of Canada?

8. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to restore to legitimacy every woman who supposed her marriage legally consummated and also the children born of such marriage?

9. Will the government enact legislation compelling alimony to the woman where the man has left her under the ecclesiastical dogma of any church?

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH:

1 and 2. Neither the government nor any department of the government has any knowledge in relation to the matters referred to in these questions other than such as may be gathered from newspaper articles or references to the subject.

3. Under the British North America Act the subject of marriage and divorce is one in regard to which parliament may legislate, but everything relating to the solemnization of marriage in the provinces is within the exclusive powers of the provincial legislatures.

As to the remaining questions, other than question No. 7. Legislation of the character indicated in the questions would appear to refer wholly to the persons by whom, or the form of the ceremony by which, marriages in any province could be validly solemnized, and in that view such legislation would seem not competent for the parliament of Canada to enact.

Legislation such as is indicated in questions 8 and 9 would seem also to relate to property and civil rights in the province, and on that ground as well to be matter for the exclusive consideration of the provincial authorities.

7. The government is not acquainted with any law of the people of Canada which has been overriden by any ecclesiastical dogma.

2. Is it in accordance with the rules of the department that a postmaster should draw a salary and a pension at the same time?

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Yes; he is in receipt of a superannuation allowance of $528 per annum.
2. The Superannuation Act does not prohibit persons who have from any reason been superannuated from undertaking the duties of a rural postmaster.

WADDINGTON POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. BRODER (Dundas). Has the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) yet received a report from his officials as to the effect of the proposed power development at Waddington, New York, on the navigation of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some weeks ago when the Long Sault Power Development was under discussion I asked my chief engineer to get me some information with respect to that, and also with respect to the development at Waddington, on the point as to whether it would effect our canals on either side. I will have the report made ready and bring it down as soon as possible.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCITY AND THE TARIFF.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question in regard to any further fiscal changes during the present session.

More or less has been said about the British preference since the day on which the Minister of Finance introduced the reciprocity proposals. The effect of these proposals so far as the British preference is concerned has been summed up by a non-official British authority in the following terms:

1. The entire removal of the preference on British goods of which Canada imported nearly $3,500,000 worth in 1909-10.

2. Reduction of the margin of British preference on other British goods, of which Canada imported more than $2,000,000 worth in 1909-10.

3. The extension to favoured nation countries of the reduced Canadian rates on United States products.

4. The preference which Canadian products will enjoy over those of the United Kingdom in the United States market. Imports of this class from the United Kingdom amounted in 1908-9 to nearly $15,000,000.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, foreshadowed some impending tariff changes when he spoke in this House on the 26th of January last. He said this:

I think that if this arrangement be confirmed, it would probably lead to some readjustment of our tariff here and there, in order that we may maintain, as we fully intend to do, the principle of the British preference and that the concessions under the tariff now existing may be maintained under the condition of affairs when this arrangement is made.

After some questions from my hon. friend from North Toronto and myself, the Minister of Finance said further on:

If this arrangement be confirmed, it would probably necessitate some readjustment of the rates in our tariff laws generally with a view to the maintenance of the preference at whatever rate we may see fit to make.

I intend to place these statements before the House without any comment, and I am doing so purely for the purpose of inviting the attention of the government thereto, in order that they may give an answer to the question which I propose to put to them at the conclusion of my observations. On the 8th day of February last, the Minister of Finance sent to the High Commissioner for Canada, Lord Strathcona, a telegram, the concluding paragraph of which was as follows:

It appears to be assumed in some quarters that the tariff rates agreed upon discriminate in favour of the United States against Great Britain. There is no foundation for this. In every case, Great Britain will still have the same rate or a lower one. Canada's right to deal with the British preference as she pleases remains untouched by the agreement. The adoption of the agreement will probably lead to some further revision of the Canadian tariff, in which the Canadian parliament will be entirely free to fix the British preference tariff at any rates that may be deemed proper. You are free to use this any way you think best.

On the second day of March the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick, (Mr. Carvell), spoke in this House upon the reciprocity proposals. He is a gentleman who occupies a very prominent position among the supporters of the government, and hon. gentlemen will attach some importance to his observations, and his declaration of policy, when they recall the fact that for some time it was an entirely open question as to whether he should fill the position of Minister of Public Works in place of the hon. gentleman who now occupies that position. This is what he said:

I can assure the government that there is no way in which they can more ingratiate themselves with the people of Canada or do more good to the people of Canada than to bring down before this parliament adjourns a measure increasing the British preference to at least 40 per cent.

I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was inspired when he made that observation, or whether he made it purely of his own motion; but inasmuch as it was followed up by a resolution in the legislature of New Brunswick, I think the coincidence merits some attention and makes it desirable that we should have a clear statement of the intention of the government in that regard. In the legislature of New Brunswick the leader of the opposition, the Hon. Mr. Robinson, who occupied the position of Prime Minister of New Brunswick before the defeat of his government about three years ago, moved an amendment on going into Committee of Supply on the 4th of April instant, in these terms:

Resolved that this House desires to take early opportunity of expressing its opinion that the ratification of reciprocity agreement now before parliament would greatly promote the prosperity of the people of this province, and,

Further resolved that it is desirable that there should be an increase in British preference to fifty per cent of the general tariff.

There has always been a close working agreement between the Liberal party of the province of New Brunswick in provincial affairs and this government, and it can hardly be believed that that resolution was moved in the legislature of New Brunswick for any other purpose than to test public opinion and as foreshadowing some further fiscal changes during the present session. On the other hand, there are some observations pointing to a contrary conclusion. I think it is only fair and just to our hon. friends on the other side of the House that I should bring these matters to the attention of the House at the same time, in order that we may endeavour to get some idea of what the intention of the government may be. My hon. friend from North Oxford, on the 3rd day of March last, as reported in the Toronto 'Globe' of March 4, said this:

He could not see that manufacturers would be touched very much, as few articles manufactured in Canada were affected. He was sure the Bain and Woodstock Wagon Companies would compete in the world's markets even with 2½ per cent reduction in the tariff. He thought the manufacturers opposed reciprocity because of what might follow, the 'thin end of the wedge,' but he had been assured by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding that nothing of the sort would follow. They had gone as far in the farmers' interests as they would.

It would be foolish for us to think of tinkering with the tariff or putting it on an unstable basis. Therefore, the present government, in his view, would not tinker any more with it unless to make some minor adjustments.

The Prime Minister, when that utterance was called to his attention, in this House on the 17th day of March, said this with regard thereto:

The statement made by the honourable member for North Oxford was quite consistent with our policy, it was nothing new, and he had perfect authority, not only he but every member of the Liberal side, to make that statement.

Then, our attention has been called to a telegram from the Prime Minister under date of about the 20th of March, addressed to Mr. T. C. Robinette, of Toronto. It was published in the 'Globe' under date of the 21st of March, and reads as follows:

We have not hurt the manufacturers, and we will not do so. We have benefited the farmer and the consumer. When the time comes we will sweep the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Then in conclusion I desire to recall certain resolutions which have been alluded to more than once in this House—resolutions that have been passed by various branches of the Grain Growers' Association in the prairie provinces. These resolutions are all very much in the same form. A typical one is in the following words:

1. That the reciprocity agreement before the House of Commons be ratified during the present session.
2. That agricultural implements be placed on the free list during the present session.
3. That the British preference be increased to fifty per cent of the general tariff at the present session.

It is to the last clause, clause No. 3, that I would more particularly direct attention. In view of all these utterances, which more or less directly touch the question of increasing the British preference, it was with some surprise that a great many members of this House noticed the entire absence of any reference to the British preference in the Budget speech of my hon. friend the Finance Minister. There was absolutely not a single word on that subject in that speech, and no indication as to what the policy of the government is likely to be. On the 26th of January, and in the subsequent telegram addressed to Lord Strathcona by the Finance Minister, there was a distinct intimation that tariff changes would be necessary, and that those changes would be made in order to maintain and preserve the British preference. Therefore, I think that I am not asking any more than is reasonable, or any more than the House is entitled to know when I venture to ask whether it is the intention of the government to increase the British preference during this present session, and if so to what extent; and also whether or not it is the intention of the government, in view of the reciprocity proposals now pending before parliament, to introduce any further tariff changes of any character whatever during this session, and more particularly with respect to the British preference.

Mr. NESBITT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put him a question?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly, two if you like.

Mr. NESBITT. Are you in favour of increasing the British preference?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I shall tell my hon. friend this, that when we come to occupy the treasury benches we shall give a very much clearer statement on that point than we are likely to have this afternoon from his friends who are sitting there now.

Mr. FIELDING. The intimation from my hon. friend that he is not obliged to make any statement of his policy on the class of questions to which he refers until he reaches the seat of government will be a very interesting one for the people of this country, who have sometimes had it in their minds that gentlemen who discuss these public matters should not be content simply to criticise but should have a policy of their own, and not hesitate to state it. If they criticise the policy of the government while carefully avoiding having any of their own, if an hon. gentleman occupying one seat on that side says I am in favour of such a policy, and another occupying the neighbouring seat says I am opposed to that, and in favour of one exactly the reverse, the general public will probably come to the conclusion that hon. gentlemen oppposite are not very united in these matters.

However, I have no objection to answer the question put by my hon. friend. In the course of the discussion on the reciprocity agreement now submitted to this House, it was indicated by various speakers and writers that the government had taken a step which would prevent them ever dealing with the question of British preference in any way they might desire. It was in particular indicated, perhaps more in England than in Canada that the tariff reform movement in England—as to the merits of which I desire to offer no opinion—was likely at no distant date to lead the British government and people to offer a preference to Canada, but that this arrangement would prevent the Canadian government and people from accepting such an offer. In consequence of such comments I have on several occasions emphasized the fact that there is nothing in this agreement which will prevent the people of Canada at any time making any changes whatever that they may desire in their tariff policy, and that if at any time they desire to give the British people a larger preference than now, there is absolutely nothing in this reciprocity agreement to prevent the Canadian government and parliament from doing so. That touches one point of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not ask any question about that.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, my hon. friend quoted from the telegram I sent to Lord Strathcona in which I emphasized that particular thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I dare say, but I did not ask any question about that at the conclusion of my remarks. I simply asked whether or not it is the intention of the government to introduce the tariff changes foreshadowed by my friend in his speech, and in that telegram.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not agree that tariff changes were foreshadowed in my speech. What I said in my telegram was that Canada had maintained her absolute freedom and right to make changes in her tariff at any time she desired. But I want to answer my hon. friend's question clearly and distinctly. My telegram to Lord Strathcona said that upon the adoption of the reciprocity proposal it might be necessary to make some further changes. I can repeat these words to-day. It may be necessary, on the completion of the reciprocity agreement, to make some changes in order to be in harmony with the British preference; but let me say at once that if such changes be made, they will be on small matters, they will not be important, and they will not include an increase in the British preference to 50 per cent.

We are well aware that the farmers of the west, in their resolutions, have not only asked for a reciprocity agreement, but have also asked for other things. They have asked for free agricultural implements, but we have told them frankly that we cannot comply with their request. They have asked us to increase the British preference to 50 per cent. We tell them that at the present we do not think that should be done. I may say frankly that we do not think that should be done. I may say frankly that we do not think the manufacturing industries of Canada could be successfully carried on if that reduction in their protection were made. We say to the people all over Canada who would like a larger measure of tariff reduction on agricultural implements and other things, that we are not able to meet that wish, that by this reciprocity agreement we are meeting to a large extent their demands, and we are going to ask that we be not pressed to grant free agricultural implements, and an increase in the British preference to 50 per cent, because to grant these would have a disturbing influence on the trade of Canada, whereas the reciprocity agreement will not create any disturbing influence, but on the contrary will have a good effect, and be accepted by the country generally as something which will work for the general advantage of Canada.

GOVERNMENT BUOYS.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if there is any truth in this statement published in the Montreal 'Star':

Why Government Buoys?

One of the government channel buoys is not, one would suppose, a thing which would commend itself to the people who 'covet' commodities in the government stores or on the government wharfs. A buoy is too large to be of value as a drawing-room ornament and too clumsy to be of use as a hitching post. To break it up and sell it for scrap requires more effort than those who help themselves from the official supplies are usually willing to make, and there is no money in anchoring it in the river and using it for target practice.

Nevertheless government buoys have been disappearing from the wharf at Sorel, where the Department of Marine and Fisheries was supposed to have them stored safely for use in the St. Lawrence when navigation opens, where they discharge an important function. As is the invariable and commendable custom of this department, there have been secret inquires and investigations into the occurrence. This tends to allay public excitement, it affords subordinate officials a chance to show their zeal, and it rarely incommodes any one seriously; the Marine and Fisheries staff is becoming quite expert in them. On the present occasion, we are tempted to urge the department to let the public have a share in the fun. A man who would steal a government buoy must have either his acquisitiveness or his humor developed to an extraordinary extent, even the officials who did not discover him doing it ought to be worth attention in a department noted for strange occurrences.

I desire to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if some buoys have disappeared from the wharf at Sorel, and if so, how many? If this property has disappeared, has an investigation been made into the matter, or, if not, is it the intention to have an investigation to ascertain who the guilty parties are?

Mr. BRODEUR. During an investigation that is now being carried on in Sorel, it was reported to the officers who are conducting the investigation that some buoys had been removed from the wharf—old buoys which were not to be used, because a wood buoy, after a couple of years, is absolutely of no use. We ordered the officers immediately to investigate the situation. I have not received any further report on the subject.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS.

Mr. OWEN. I see it stated in the daily newspapers that census commissioners have been appointed to the number of 220, and that it is going to cost this country $1,000,000 to take the census this year. That is a vast amount of money, and I trust the census will be taken as accurately as possible. I have noticed the statement in the daily press, and credited to a very prominent gentleman now residing in the western part of Ontario, who, ten years ago when the last census was taken, was a resident of Ottawa and in very close touch with the province of Quebec, that the census returns of the province of Quebec in the last census were stuffed. And I have never seen that statement contradicted. I do not say that the statement is true. If it is not true, it is a slur on the good name of the province of Quebec, and if it is true, it is very unfair to the other provinces whose representation is fixed according to the population of the province of Quebec. Therefore, I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) What are the qualifications necessary for a census commissioner? Or, are any qualifications considered at all? What qualifications are considered necessary for a census enumerator and a census sub-enumerator? I would like to know whether these officers are appointed on account of their past services to the party or whether their ability to fulfil the duties of enumerators and sub-enumerators is taken into consideration?

Mr. FISHER. In answering, let me begin with the last question and then deal with the point which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Owen) first brought up. The census commissioners are chosen from among men who are well informed in regard to the electoral district for which they are severally appointed and which form the census divisions.

Mr. OWEN. On whose recommendation, may I ask?

Mr. FISHER. On recommendations that I discover as best I can, either personal knowledge or the recommendation of people in whose judgement I have confidence. The census commissioner must be a man of education and of standing in the community and familiar with the locality for which he is commissioned. The duties of the census commissioner are to supervise the taking of the census in the division. He has to receive the instructions from the department and to give those instructions to the enumerators; to see that the enumerators do their duty, to revise the schedules of the enumerators, and to make the returns to the department. These gentlemen are now all appointed. Their appointment is by order in council. The enumerators are appointed by ministerial order and are chosen, as much as possible, from the localities in which they are to make their enumeration.

Mr. OWEN. How are they chosen?

Mr. FISHER. They are chosen by the minister and appointed by the minister. They must be men of sufficient education to understand the instructions and to carry them out, to fill up the schedules correctly and promptly. Their duty is to go from house to house and to make an enumeration, that is to give the names, ages, occupations, &c., of the individuals in the districts for which they are appointed enumerators. Roughly speaking one enumerator is appointed for an area about the size of a polling division—sometimes a little more, sometimes a little less; but, in a general way, there will be an enumerator for each polling subdivision. Now, a word in regard to—

Mr. FOSTER. Just before the minister leaves that point,—in what month will the enumeration of population take place?

Mr. FISHER. On the 1st of June.

Mr. FOSTER. That takes how long?

Mr. FISHER. The instructions are that it must be done within three weeks, and we hope it will be practically done in that time.

Mr. FOSTER. And the tabulations will be——?

Mr. FISHER——will be commenced as soon as the schedules come in.

Mr. FOSTER. And finished, when?

Mr. FISHER. We hope to have them finished before the end of October. The enumerators, I hope, will get through their work in less than three weeks. Their schedules will have to be revised by the commissioners of the census districts, when they will be forwarded to Ottawa. As soon as they arrive, they will be taken in hand by the compilation clerks in the office, and the compilation will commence,—we do not wait for all the schedules to come in before the compilation begins. The work of compilation will proceed as rapidly as possible, the first being simply that of numbers,—everything else will be left in abeyance until that has been accomplished.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that, years ago, that used to be accomplished by the 1st of September.

Mr. FISHER. But the census was taken on the 1st of April. Unfortunately April is a very bad month, the roads are bad, and it is difficult to get about. Therefore we have decided to change the date to the month of June, when the days are longer, and the roads are better. It is a time coming between the farmers' spring work and the haying and harvesting.

Mr. OWEN. Are any Conservatives appointed enumerators?

Mr. FISHER. I think, probably, if competent ones are to be found there might be some appointed. The hon. gentleman made a reference to the alleged stuffing of the lists in the province of Quebec in 1901. That was most effectually disposed of eight or nine years ago. I do not think the hon. gentleman was in the House then, and probably never studied the question. The statement was then made that the lists of the province of Quebec had been stuffed. A careful investigation was made at the time, and there was found to be no foundation at all for the statement. It was based on the fact of some comparisons made between the census of 1891 and the census of 1901, but the whole matter was gone over at the time. I do not care now to revive the controversy, but I have under my hand documents with reference to that controversy which I could quote if necessary. The statement has now disappeared from the arena of political warfare, and its revival now has no more justification than it had at the time.

Mr. OWEN. I will merely say to the minister that the statement I referred to was made by a very prominent man now in the western part of the Dominion, and I have not seen it contradicted. The same statement appeared six weeks ago in the Montreal 'Star.'

Mr. FISHER. I have not seen it, and I would not consider it worth while contradicting it; particularly if I had seen it in the Montreal 'Star,' I would not take the trouble to contradict it.

Mr. LAKE. Did I understand the minister to say that the census was to be taken and completed in three weeks from the 1st to the 21st of June, or is it to be taken at a certain fixed date?

Mr. FISHER. On the 1st of June.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How can that be done if it extends over three weeks?

Mr. FISHER. Because the question will be asked each householder who were in the House on the 1st of June.

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking from memory, I think at the time of the former census questions were put to heads of families with regard to their children who were absent. The question is put: Do you expect them to return? Fathers and mothers of a family always expect their children to return, and consequently the answer invariably is, Yes. It may be that some of the children are married and settled down, and in those cases will never return, but they still reside in Canada, and are still counted as members of the household. I think that was one of the causes of the incorrect census in some parts of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. The instructions to enumerators are very particular indeed, only to put down children, for instance, who are away on temporary absence. Married children who are away are not counted, and will not be counted. The instructions to enumerators are clear in that respect, and I have reason to believe that they will be able to carry them out as well now as they did in 1901.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that was one of the questions, and that was the answer expected to the question, which was put directly: Do you expect him to return?

Mr. FISHER. The question is not put so bald as that. The reasons of the absence, the conditions and circumstances of the absence, are inquired into.

Mr. ARTHURS. Does the pay of the enumerator depend upon the number of names added by him to the list?

Mr. FISHER. The enumerators are paid by the name, that has always been the case. But at the same time they are sworn to do their duty, and to see that the people are properly enumerated.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister put a copy of the questions that are to be asked on the table?

Mr. FISHER. They are published in the 'Canada Gazette,' but I will see that copies are laid on the table.

NORTH YORK AND RECIPROCITY.

Mr. MACDONELL. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he has observed a statement in the Toronto

'News,' of the 8th of April, and if so, I wish to ask him a question with regard to it. It is headed 'Mr. Armstrong's challenge.' Mr. Armstrong is a citizen of North York, and he has issued this challenge to the Minister of Finance through the public press.

Mr. Fielding, at Montreal, said that the Liberal party always trusted the people. I want to tell him he has never had a better chance in his life to display his sincerity and 'trust the people.' The estimable gentleman who represents this riding has signified his intention of retiring at the close of the present term. Here is an excellent chance to test the feeling of the farmers of North York on the question of reciprocity. I dare Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding to open the riding of North York at once. Let them put their strongest man in the field, be it Mr. Robinette or a cabinet minister. I, as the candidate of the Liberal-Conservatives, am willing to trust the farmers and the general electors of North York and have no fear of what the result will be.

That is the declaration made by Mr. Armstrong, a young farmer of King township, and former reeve, at Sutton and Aurora, on the 8th of April. Possibly the minister has not seen the item.

Mr. CLARKE (Essex). Is that the same Mr. Armstrong who was defeated at the last general election?

Mr. MACDONELL. It is the same gentleman; but conditions have changed. I would like to point out to the Minister of Finance that an election in this constituency would afford an excellent opportunity of testing public feeling upon the question of reciprocity. The hon. the Minister of Justice sits for that riding; it is an historical Liberal riding in political affairs. His predecessor is the present Sir William Mulock, formerly Postmaster General of Canada. Now, inasmuch as the Minister of Justice has declared his public intention, according to the press, of retiring from public life, and inasmuch as Mr. Robinette has been nominated by the Liberal party of North York to contest the riding at the next election, and is now in the field as a candidate, and inasmuch as Mr. Armstrong, the Conservative standard bearer, has also been nominated, I would commend the conditions to the Minister of Finance, with a view of having a test made in the farming community of North York on this particular question.

North York is ideally a rural riding; there are one or two villages in it, but I should say that 95 per cent of the electorate of that riding are yeomen. The hon. gentleman has not taken an opportunity of testing public opinion in a general way. No doubt he will say that it is the intention of the government to make a public test throughout the whole of Canada. A resolution to that effect was moved in this House by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden) was voted down by hon. gentlemen opposite, so it would appear that there is no immediate possibility of the people of the country having an opportunity of going on record on this question. North York stands practically vacant today; all conditions favour the government in that riding and it ought to be a reasonable opportunity and one that would be taken advantage of by the government. Hon. gentlemen opposite are now saying that this arrangement will also benefit the cities. It might be said that an opportunity should be afforded to test a city riding. I have no doubt that if the government desire to open any city riding they will be accommodated by hon. gentlemen on this side who represent most of the cities in this country. If the hon. gentleman is looking for a test and wants an opportunity the riding of South Toronto will be open as soon as the government state their intention of appealing to the people in South Toronto. Then they would have a variety, a city riding and a rural riding. Be that as it may I commend at least the present condition in North York to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) as an opportunity which he should not let go to make a public test on this question.

Mr. FIELDING. In regard to South Toronto if my hon. friend desires a vacancy there that is a matter entirely within his own control, we need not offer him any opinion on that.

Mr. MACDONELL (South Toronto). If I should take the opportunity will the government undertake to issue a writ and test it immediately?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not mind saying that it might be a case of the Dutch capturing Holland; we have heard of such things before. With regard to North York, I am bound to say if my hon. friend is anxious that we should get rid of the esteemed gentleman who represents that constituency we do not share that desire; we view with the utmost regret his decision not to be a candidate for the House of Commons again, and we value his services so highly that we want to keep him as long as we can.

As to the item in the Toronto 'News' to which the hon. gentleman called my attention I had not read it before, but I was interested in hearing it read. The most interesting article that I have read in a Toronto Conservative paper lately was an article which appeared within the last week in the 'Mail.' Considering that we have been told again and again that our Conservative friends wanted a dissolution and to go into the fight at once, I noted with some interest that the 'Mail' warns its people to be very careful, because this man Laurier is likely to spring an election on them very quickly.

Sir ALLEN ALYESWORTH. I am sorry that I have a very inadequate idea of what my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Macdonell) has been saying, but I understand that he has been discussing to some extent the condition of public feeling in the constituency of North York, and I think, without any undue self-sufficiency, I am entitled to say that there is no man in this House, not even my hon. friend himself, who has a better idea of the state of public feeling upon this question of reciprocity, or upon any other question, in the constituency of North York than I have myself. It is quite true that during the elections in 1908 in that constituency I stated not only at the nomination meeting and upon the hustings, but upon other public platforms in the constituency that unless my hearing improved I should not again ask them for their votes. I thought that to say that was no more than just to the people who had honoured me by sending me as their representative to this parliament, and I made no secret of the intention which I then entertained and which I cannot say I have as yet altogether departed from. But while that is so, if there were any circumstances that would lead me to change my mind it is the fact that this arrangement now before the House has been arrived at and is now before the country for consideration. I approve that arrangement with both hands. It suits me, at any rate, in every respect, as to some extent identified with the farming interests of this country and as representing a constituency mainly of farmers. It suits the people of North York without reference to politics. I may tell my hon. friend that I have in my possession letters that I am glad to have. letters which tell me of more than one case of not merely individual voters, but of families containing dozens of voters who have never given a Grit vote in their lives but who are going to break their record on the first opportunity.

With reference to the challenge, as I understand it is termed, which the gentleman who was my opponent at the elections three years ago has thought it well to make public, there is just one consideration that I cannot help having occur to my mind. It falls to my lot, in the ordinary course of daily work, to see something of the sentiments which animate convicts in our penitentiaries, and nothing is more universal than the expression by the convict of a desire for a new trial; only a new trial! A new trial possesses many advantages from the point of view of the convict. It gets rid at a stroke of the last verdict; it puts him right back into the position he was in before there had been any hearing at all, and he cannot be any worse off than he is. Accordingly the convict all but universally pleads for just one more trial, and I cannot help applying that to the situation of hon. gentlemen opposite, if I may be allowed to do so. I will do it simply in the view that the party which is represented by hon. gentlemen opposite stands convict before the people of this country as not entitled to their confidence.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would not have risen except for the last argument, if you can grace it as such, that the Minister of Justice used. The convict in that case is the Minister of Justice himself who contested the constituency of Durham, but was overwhelmingly defeated; they wanted none of him. His government got into power again, and they granted him the grace of a new trial in North York, but if the hon. gentleman had not had a new trial he would not have been here at all.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. J. A. SEXSMITH (East Peterborough). Mr. Chairman, ever since the question of reciprocity has come before this House I have been deeply interested in it, because we have been told by the government and their supporters that it is going to increase the prosperity of the farmer. As a farmer myself and as the representative of a riding composed largely of farmers, it would of course be a great pleasure to me to support any measure really calculated to advance the cause of agriculture, because when the farmer is prosperous the nation is prosperous, and when the farmer is unsuccessful the whole nation suffers. Reciprocity is a question that requires deep consideration, and it is a question as to which the government should be armed with facts and figures in respect thereto, so that there may be no guesswork about it at all. I have listened to hon. gentlemen on the other side telling us that the condition of the Canadian farmer is going to be improved by this arrangement, but not one of them has produced a scintilla of evidence to prove these vague assertions. It is really after all a question of the market conditions in Canada as compared with those in the United States. If the United States markets are better for farm products than they are in Canada then the Canadian farmer would be benefited, as he would be raised to that higher plane which would be occupied by the farmers of the United States under a prevailing condition of higher prices. But, if the farmers of Canada are enjoying equally as good markets as those enjoyed by the United States farmers, then the the farmers of Canada have nothing to gain, and, if the Canadian farmers are enjoying better markets than are enjoyed by the farmers of the United States then we are sure to lose and must be dragged down to their level. I listened to the speech of the Minister of Agriculture with a good deal of attention and have read it carefully, but I have failed to find one particle of proof from that man in that speech to show that the condition of the Canadian farmer is going to be improved. I am confident that if the Canadian farmers read the speeches of the Minister of Agriculture and his supporters, and if they take that reciprocity agreement and study it they will come to the conclusion that it is a delusion, and when the time comes for them to pronounce upon it by their votes, they will declare that they will have none of it. I say without fear of contradiction that the government went blindfolded into this arrangement. They had it in their power to get all the necessary evidence; they could have made thorough inquiry into the conditions of the markets of the United States and the markets of Canada, and they could have compared the two and told the members of this House and the farmers of Canada just what they were going to get by this arrangement. But apparently the government neglected to secure any information and rushed blindfolded into this thing without knowing where it would lead to. The government, not having the information at their command, or having refused to give it if they have it, I have been compelled to go to considerable trouble to hunt up statistics which would enable me to arrive at a reasonable conclusion as to how we stand in trade relations with the United States. Time and again have these gentlemen opposite told us of the benefits the farmers will derive by getting our dairy products into the United States markets, and the Minister of Agriculture told us the other night that we would sell the United States people what they wanted and send the rest to Great Britain. Well, I have gone into the figures of the exchange of these dairy products between the United States and Canand and vice versa for the last five years; I have taken the imports and exports of butter, cheese, eggs, &c., and if the House will bear with me I shall place them on record. This is the result:

I do not anticipate any great advantage from getting our dairy products into the United States market, but I do think that on the contrary the United States farmers will reap considerable benefit from being able to compete with us in our home market. The market which the Minister of Agriculture speaks so highly of and as to which he said, speaking on the 13th December last year:

To-day in Canada the production of dairy products, that is milk and its products, is at the least $100,000,000 a year and that is at least $20,000,000 greater than was the product of the cows in 1903. The dairy commissioner goes on to say:—

'Our home market is growing at the rate of $2,000,000 a year, and it is already by far the most important one that we have, in point of volume, as it takes fully four times as much as there is surplus for export.'

You will see, therefore, how very important it is in these calculations and discussions not to discard the home market and not for a moment to base our estimates or our contentions upon the export trade.

We have a home market that consumes $4 worth of our dairy products to every dollar's worth that we export. That is the market which the hon. minister on December 13, 1910, spoke so favourably of, the market we should guard so religiously, and that is the market that the government now proposes to throw open to the competition of the whole world. I contend that there is no market for Canadian cheese in the United States to-day, and the conditions are such that we were practically unable last year to supply the market of Canada for butter. Of eggs we bought from the United States in five years nearly $1,000,000 worth more than we sold to them. Yet we are told that there is a great market for our farmers in the United States, and that if they get in to that market they are going to reap a wonderful reward. On December 13, the Minister of Agriculture, in his speech on cold storage, referred to our poultry product in these words:

There is no question whatever that to-day there is a far greater production of eggs and poultry meat than there was ten years ago, and yet the prices of those things are much higher. Why? Because home consumption has increased more rapidly than home production, and the result is, that the home market for eggs and poultry meat is better than the export market; consequently, we have practically no export of eggs or poultry to Great Britain, and very little to the United States.

At that time the hon. minister was very proud of the home market. He said we should guard it because it is the best market for our farmers, and in that I agree with him. But, Sir, when this reciprocity arrangement was brought down, he immediately turned his face away from the farmer to the interests of his party, and tried to deceive our farmers into thinking that they will be benefited by this arrangement, which the government, with the assistance of the servile following behind them, are trying to put through. Now, it is one of the most serious things that could happen to the farmers of Canada to have their home market invaded by all the cheap producing countries in the world. Even if the favoured nation clause did not affect us, I contend that our farmers are in a better position to-day than the farmers of the United States, and we have no reason to open up our market and allow them to come in and compete with us. In answer to a question of Mr. Taylor, of Leeds, on March 9, the following statement was made:

Statement showing the quantity and value of butter and eggs imported for consumption into Canada, by countries, during the month of February, 1911:

	Lbs.	Value.
Butter—
Great Britain	2,800	$ 689
Australia	15,008	3,000
New Zealand	181,826	41,813
United States	6,838	1,707
Total	206,472	$ 47,209
Eggs—
Hong Kong	4,250	$ 193
Chinese Empire	11,138	1,673
United States	719,315	131,341
Total	734,703	$133,207

New Zealand is one of the countries that will come in under the favoured nation clause. It is a cheap producing country, and its summer season occurs at the time of our winter season, when the farmers of this country are producing at the highest cost and expect to have a little higher price for their products. If our market is thrown open and New Zealand and all the other cheap producing countries of the world are allowed to pour their products into it, and if New Zealand should send the same average for the 12 months of the year, she would invade the market of Canada in butter alone to the extent of over half a million dollars. I just want to say that if this agreement goes into force the farmers of Canada will get a blow such as they have never received before. Our home market for dairy products consumes over 80 per cent of our total dairy products, but if it is thrown open, the whole world will have the privilege of competing with our farmers on even ground. When all these goods come in under duty, what may we expect when we have free trade? The United States are not by any means an importing country. They are producing all they want and to spare. Last year they exported a great amount of dairy products to the various markets of the world. Now,

I wish to deal for a little while with our imports and exports of meats. The government has refused to supply us the market prices as it should have done, so that I have taken our own trade and commerce reports and our own official records in order to make comparisons. Here is a list of the exports of Canada to the United States from 1906 to 1910:

Bacon and hams—

1906	$59,551
1907	19,190
1908	5,211
1909	208,945
1910	8,569
Total	$3,864,298

We imported from the United States bacon and hams as follows:

1906	$ 782,330
1907	656,225
1908	851,807
1909	744,694
1910	829,242
Total	$3,864,298

Yet this is the market in which our farmers are told they will be able to sell to better advantage than in the home market. The price of hogs, hon. gentlemen opposite tell us, is greater in the United States than in Canada; but if that be the case how is it we have been buying such a very large amount from them in excess of what we sell to them.

Then, take our exports of beef to the United States. We exported as follows:

1906	$ 6,141
1907	11,484
1908	12,708
1909	14,227
1910	12,635
Total	$57,195

Of all other meats we exported to the United States as follows:

1906	$ 67,974
1907	53,613
1908	48,871
1909	60,164
1910	61,508
Total	$292,130

And the total of all our exports amounted to $650,791.

Compare that with our imports. We imported from the United States beef salted in barrels as follows:

1906	$159,848
1907	131,718
1908	137,525
1909	122,668
1910	122,444
Total	$674,203

Of canned meats, poultry and game we imported from the United States as follows:

1906	$ 82,805
1907	28,062
1908	27,596
1909	30,412
1910	45,460
Total	$214,335

Let me now give the figures of the other meat products imported from the United States. I have already given the imports of bacon and hams:

——	1906.	1907.	1908.	1909.	1910.	Total.
Extracts of meats and fluid beef, not meats and soups	64,081	33,297	45,503	40,699	52,436	236,016
Meats dried or smoked, etc	155,288	136,574	144,674	69,328	87,302	593,166
Pork, barrelled in brine	816,416	634,752	713,726	889,892	924,547	3,979,333
Poultry and game	38,481	40,363	52,175	45,525	57,390	233,934
All other meats	82,037	76,784	100,588	117,572	161,274	538,255
Lard	652,526	584,275	1,073,440	1,228,293	1,358,513	4,897,047
Lard compound	18,818	17,427	54,167	52,538	53,867	196,817

The total value of meats and meat products, including bacon and hams, imported from the United States during these years amounted to $15,427,404, whereas our exports of these goods to that country only amoutned to $650,791. There is no use comparing our imports with our exports for one year; there is no use comparing the market of one little village on this side with that of one little village on the other side. We have to make a comparison during a number of years, and deal with it from a national standpoint. There is no doubt that in some places it might work to the advantage of the individual farmers, but, on the whole, it will be a detriment to the farming community of Canada. The total value of meat and meat products imported from the United States during these five years was $15,427,404. In the same period we succeeded in selling them meat and meat products to the amount of $650,791. Is there any hon. member of this House who, in the face of these figures, would say that the market for hogs and meat products is better in the United States than in Canada? Is it reasonable to think that they would leave higher prices and a better market and sell their product here at lower prices?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). And pay a duty?

Mr. SEXSMITH. And pay a duty. The figures show that the farmers of the United States sold us in five years $14,776,613 more than we sold them. In the face of this fact, it is absurd to tell the farmers of Canada that we are going to get a better market for hogs and hog products, beef cattle and beef, than we have in Canada. This proposed change would simply mean that we should be subject to the beef trust of Chicago. Our local packing establishments, instead of being able to control the market of Canada and to ship to Great Britain, where we have had the best market in the world—a market that sets the price for the bacon of the United States as well as that of Canada, and where we have been able to compete and have established a standard for our bacon that far surpasses that of the bacon of the United States—will come under the domination of the American trust. Let me read a few words from the speech of the Minister of Agriculture of February 28 last on this subject of reciprocity. And, if there is any member of this House who, more than another should lay the plain facts before the people, it is the Minister of Agriculture, for the farmers look to him and expect him to give them guidance and not to deceive them. Speaking of the beef trust of Chicago, the Minister of Agriculture on that occasion said:

I said a moment ago that the packing houses would not disappear. I think my hon. friend had in mind particularly the packing houses in Winnipeg. I have heard it said that the packing houses in Winnipeg would disappear, because Chicago would swamp them when the whole west is thrown open and made subservient to the Chicago market. What is the condition of affairs to-day in the United States? Does the Chicago packing business swamp the packing houses in Kansas City, in Omaha or in South St. Paul? We know, if the hon. gentleman does not know, that these cities are doing a large packing-house business. I have here some figures to show what that business is in comparison with the packing-houses of Winnipeg.

The minister goes on to show the difference between the packing houses of Kansas City and Omaha, and the packing house of Winnipeg:

In Kansas City last year the local killings of cattle were 1,284,000; of sheep, 1,186,000; of hogs, 1,900,000. The local packing and abattoir establishments of Kansas City showed, of cattle 773,000; of sheep, 1,256,000; of hogs, 1,656,000. In South St. Paul, the local killings were 169,000 cattle, 207,000 sheep, and 823,000 hogs.

Compare Winnipeg:

Cattle—80,000; half of those in St. Paul; one-tenth about of those in Omaha; one-fifteenth of those in Kansas City.

Sheep—30,000; one-seventh of those in St. Paul; one-fortieth of those in Omaha; one-thirty-fifth of those in Kansas City.

Hogs—91,000; one-ninth of those in St. Paul; one-twentieth of those in Omaha; one-twentieth of those in Kansas City.

That is, the minister, in discussing the question of the great Chicago beef trust, tried to make this House and the people believe that there was no danger of that trust coming into Canada or injuring the packing industry in Winnipeg. The reason he gives is that the packing houses in the western cities flourished in spite of the beef trust. But see what he was compelled to admit, a moment or two afterwards, when he was questioned by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong):

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I merely want to ask the minister if it is not a fact that these large meat packing firms in Kansas City, Omaha and St. Paul are a part of the meat trust. I have visited these cities frequently and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend says that he knows they are I will not dispute it. I do not know that they are, and I, therefore, will not say whether they are or not. But that does not make any difference.

I would ask the Minister of Agriculture: Is that a fair speech to send out to the farmers of this country? Does that give our farmers an intelligent view of things as they really are?—to make it appear that there was no danger to our bacon and our beef industry from the beef trust of Chicago? I have no hesitation in saying that, if this arrangement goes into effect, the whole meat business of Canada, inside of two years, will be under the great combine, the meat trust of Chicago, and that trust will pay the farmers of Canada just what it pleases. I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture a year ago, and, I think, in the year previous to that, that the farmers seemed to think they were labouring under certain grievances by reason of the packing industry in this country, that these people had pressed the market down in certain seasons of the year. The minister said that he would have the matter investigated. And this is the result of his investigation—he finds difficulties that might be overcome by proper legislation, but, in order to avoid this, he says: Take down the bars, and we will have free trade.

Now, a word or two on the question of the throwing open of our markets to the foreign countries that are allowed to enter under this arrangement. The Minister of Agriculture, on the 13th of December last, told the House that the Canadian farmer was not in a position to compete with the Australian farmer in raising sheep and cattle. He told us that the conditions in Australia were entirely different. This is what the minister said:

As I am not acquainted with the details of the business, I would not undertake to say whether my hon. friend is right or wrong. My hon. friend is quite right in saying that the number of sheep has decreased in Canada, but when he compares that with the increase in Australia, Argentine, South Africa and other countries, he is drawing a comparison with countries in which the climate and other conditions are entirely different.

These are the words of the minister himself:

Australia, both as regards sheep and cattle, is a ranching country. The cattle there run wild over enormous areas and are not taken care of at all. Sheep are in the same position. They have illimitable expanses for pasturing, which we have not, and they have a climate more suitable for that kind of wild life than ours. Therefore, a comparison between Canada and Australia in this regard is not a fair one.

Now the Minister of Agriculture admitted on December 13, 1910, that the conditions in Australia were so different from those in Canada that the Canadian farmer could not compete with the Australian farmer in raising beef or sheep. But to oblige our American cousin he now says we will allow the farmers of Canada to come into competition with Australia; we will allow Australian beef to come into this country; there is no longer any danger in allowing Australian beef and mutton to come into Canada. Now I say he is entirely wrong. I wish to quote an article that appeared in one of the Toronto daily papers on April 11, 1911: It is headed 'Will ship meat from Australia.'

Mr. Arthur Kidmar, chairman of the Perishable Foods Committee of the Chamber of Commerce at Sydney, New South Wales, is at the King Edward. He is breaking his return journey for a day in Toronto, and leaves for home via Chicago this afternoon. Mr. Kidmar is largely interested in the meat, butter and egg packing industry in Sydney, and has been spending the past year in a tour of inspection through Great Britain, France, Germany and other parts of Europe, studying particularly the abattoir systems and methods of exportation in the continental centres of the packing industry. He has also been arranging, in behalf of the Sydney chamber, for the exportation of food products from Australia to Great Britain and America. Shipments will be made immediately to Toronto and Montreal, and shortly also to New York.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). And they pay a duty of three cents a pound.

Mr. SEXSMITH. This man says that shipments will be made immediately under present conditions, paying a duty, either to Toronto or to Montreal. Now we propose by this arrangement to take off the duty, and let them send into Canada as much meat as they like, and that from a country that the Minister of Agriculture said a few weeks ago, was one that we could not compete with on even terms. Now, speaking of the United States market, and what we are to gain, I want to quote some figures of their exports in the articles I have been mentioning:

Eggs, United States exported in 1909, 5,207,151 dozen, valued at..	$ 1,199,522
Butter, United States exported in 1909, 5,981,265 pounds, valued at..	1,268,210
Cheese, United States exported in 1909, 6,822,842 pounds valued at..	857,091
Condensed milk, United States exported in 1909..	1,375,104
Lard, United States exported in 1909..	52,712,569
Pork, pickled, United States exported in 1909..	4,599,431
Ham and shoulders, cured, United States exported in 1909..	23,525,307
Bacon, United States exported in 1909..	25,920,490
Beef, fresh, United States exported in 1909..	12,698,594
Beef, salted and pickled, United States exported in 1909..	3,438,048
Total meat and dairy products in 1909..	$166,521,949

And we are to come into competition with a country with a home market ten times greater than that of the Canadian people, a home market that exports ten times more than Canada does. I want to say a word to show what conditions really are in our home market. In the province of Ontario I find that the total number of swine slaughtered during the year 1909 was 1,986,432, valued at $21,407,549. Our total exports of hogs and hog products for the same year, for all Canada, amounted to only $6,915,577. Thus we see that Ontario alone has produced three times more hogs and hog products than the total exports of all Canada in the year 1909. Is it therefore reasonable to say that the home market is not the best market the Canadian farmer has? In 1909 the province of Ontario produced $184,747,900 worth of live stock, and there were sold or slaughtered in that province alone in the same year $64,464,923 worth. So in the province of Ontario alone as a home market we have disposed of over $64,000,000 worth of beef and other cattle, whereas, our total exports of cattle from all Canada, during the same year, only amounted to $12,254,287. And yet we are told by the Minister of Agriculture that our home market is not as valuable as it was a few months ago, and we must discard it, and allow all the countries of the world to come in and enjoy it. I do not see the Minister of Customs in his seat, but I wish to refer to what he said a few evenings ago, in discussing dairy products. He did not care to discuss them in bulk, but for some reason or other, I suppose for political reasons, he reduced pounds of butter to ounces, and reduced dozens of eggs to units, and then told us that we only import two or three eggs and two or three ounces of butter per capita into the Dominion. Let me give you a few figures prepared in the same way. Take the meat products. We bought from the United States annually the last few years $2.10 worth for every man, woman and child in Canada, while we only sold to them seven-tenths of one per cent per capita. Now, I will speak about potatoes, and let me first read from 'Hansard' what the Minister of Agriculture says about potatoes on the 28th March, 1911:

In twelve years of high duties, the United States accepted from Canada $11,000,000 worth of potatoes more than they sent into Canada, Surely if we can get those potatoes into the states without duty, it will be to the advantage of our potato raisers.

I put a question on the Order Paper and received the following answer from the Minister of Customs:

1. The quantity and value of potatoes (Canadian produce) exported from Canada to the United States during the fiscal years from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, was as follows:

	Bushels.	Value.
1901	231,101	$ 68,151
1902	808,041	327,046
1903	138,855	56,969
1904	1,451,070	742,537
1905	34,870	18,301
1906	473,239	128,363
1907 (9 months)	8,941	4,250
1908	34,392	15,459
1909	574,454	251,907
1910	678,632	345,903

2. The quantity and value of potatoes imported into Canada from the United States during the fiscal years from 1901 to 1910, inclusive, was as follows:

	Bushels.	Value.
1901	136,666	$ 88,649
1902	81,771	87,970
1903	407,425	228,609
1904	77,028	78,025
1905	518,875	232,044
1906	227,155	126,163
1907 (9 months)	94,521	71,065
1908	249,907	195,650
1909	127,110	129,725
1910	217,170	181,751

I notice the total exports of potatoes during ten years from Canada to the United States were $1,958,886 while our imports from the United States were $1,419,651, a difference of $539,235 in favour of the United States. This is the great market of which we hear so much. Potatoes and hay are the only farm products that we have been able to export to the United States in greater quantity than we have received from them, but this is the market they are going to give us. It is on statements of that kind that we are asked to settle this great question. I have not gone into the figures since confederation, but I think I am safe in saying that the United States have not admitted a million dollars' worth of our potatoes more than sent to United States since confederation, let alone the $11,000,000 worth in 12 years of which the minister spoke.

I shall quote our exports and imports of vegetables. During five years we imported from the United States $3,368,083 worth of vegetables. We sold to them $2,021,054, a difference in favour of the United States of $1,347,029. And yet our market gardeners are told: 'Oh, you are all right, you are perfectly safe, you get the United States market, you can ship your potatoes and vegetables there. But they have been invading our markets and are selling millions and millions of dollars more to us than we have been able to sell to them.

I have laboured hard in the effort to come to some reasonable conclusion in connection with our wheat trade. I have consulted the statistics of the United States, and their market prices and compared them with Canadian statistics for the last fifteen or twenty years. I do not know that it would be wise to take up time by reading prices for twenty years, so I shall read them for the last ten or fifteen years, and give the averages.

I notice according to these statistics, and they are the only reliable statistics we can get, that the price of wheat to the farmers of the United States for the last ten years has been lower than the price to the farmers of Canada even in Winnipeg. We have been told that the wheat production of the United States is falling off, and that in a short time they will require some millions of bushels from the Canadian farmer to supply their own market. The Minister of Agriculture speaking on the reciprocity question said:

> This makes a total acreage in our Northwest of 213,000,000 acres within the wheat producing area. I do not mean to say that all this land will produce wheat, or will ever be under wheat, but I do not think it would be out of the way for me to say that, in the course of 15 or 20 years, one-quarter of that land, say 50,000,000 acres, will be producing wheat. When that time comes, the Canadian Northwest will produce 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. I venture to say that the farmers will need not only the home country and the American market, but also the European market in which to sell that wheat. When that time comes, there is no doubt, there will be in the United States from 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 people, and they will need at least 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Nothing could be further from the mark than the conjecture of the minister in this respect. I have gone over and taken the production of the United States wheat crop for several years, and the figures taken from the statistical abstract show the following results:

United States production of wheat in each year, from 1891 to 1901.

They have increased their production during the last ten years over the previous ten years on an average by 161,000,000 bushels of wheat per year. That is to say that in the last period of ten years they produced each year 161,000,000 bushels more than they did during the ten years previously. The Minister of Agriculture told us that in a few years the people of the United States would be consuming all the wheat they could produce, and would require from 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 bushels of wheat per year from us for home consumption. Nothing could be further from the mark. Their increase in the production of wheat in the last ten years over the previous ten years is annually greater than the total production of all Canada. Figuring that on the average per capita consumption of the United States for the last 20 years, or for the last 30 years if you like at 5.38 bushels per capita we find that their increased production in the last ten years was capable of feeding 30,000,000 people, while their increased population was only 16,000,000 people. Instead of the population gaining on the production the production has actually increased twice as rapidly as the population. The United States is now producing enough wheat for 140,000,000 population, and it is safe to say that in the next 20 years they will be producing for a population of 200,000,000. Where then is the market for our Canadian wheat. Why do the Americans want our wheat. Last year they had 48,000,000 acres under wheat, and the American farmer is an aggressive farmer, and under a proper system of farming if they bring up their production per acre to the standard of Canada they will be producing in the next few years nearly one billion bushels of wheat annually. Why then do they want our wheat?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). They want it to mix with their wheat for export flour.

Mr. SEXSMITH. That is it. I do not think I can explain that better than by reading this from an American publication, the 'Northern Miller,' published on February 8, 1911:

> WHEAT AND FLOUR.
> When it is considered that owing to the high quality and superior strength of the wheat grown in the newly opened Canadian Northwest, one bushel mixed with three bushels of the less virile wheat grown in the United States, and ground into flour, is sufficient to raise the whole to high value, it is apparent that the free importation of this wheat would not only fail to depress the price of American wheat, but would actually give it added value, because it would enable the American miller to use the Canadian product as a leaven to raise the value of his mixture; thus every bushel of Canadian wheat exported as flour by the American miller would carry with it a much greater amount of wheat grown in the United States.

The miller who is able to grind this enormous crop will be the miller of the future, and where he is, there will be the great mills of the world.

With free Canadian wheat secured, the prospect is a grand one, with this enormous and steadily increasing crop free to pursue its natural geographical and commercial channel flowing into the mills and elevators of the States, a splendid tide of activity and prosperity would follow in its wake. Assured of their future supply of raw material, the mills of America would go forward on their developing course continuing the march of progress which has brought them to the front. New mills would be built, and capacities enlarged. New markets abroad would be sought and conquered.

The returns from this renewed and extended activity would be felt in increased commercial prosperity. New railways would be extended into the wheat-growing territory; American railroads carrying the flour from the mills would secure additional freights; American banks would obtain increased deposits, and greatly enlarged exchange accounts; American mill operators would be in demand, and pay-rolls would be increased; mill machinery, bags, barrels, and other mill supplies would be required in large quantities; more money would be in circulation and the benefit would be felt in every artery of industrial life touched by the milling.

There would be an increase in grain firms, in elevators, and in every branch of the grain handling and flour making interests.

This would be felt in the added value of real estate, and in the solid and substantial development of every undertaking and enterprise that makes a community prosperous. Farmers would find a market for their products, and in the end, should this crop be assimilated here rather than abroad, they will secure an average higher price for their wheat, because of the ability of the progressive and successful miller to pay more for his raw material.

Canada will lose in—Transportation,
Manufacturing,
In wages paid expert labour,
In wages paid all workmen,
In goods supplied,
In machinery, bags and barrels.

But the greatest loss would be in the by-products which Canadian farmers so much need.

Now, I wish to read from President Taft's speech before the Corn Exchange in Columbus, Ohio, on February 10. He was speaking from the farmer's standpoint, and he went on to show that they had nothing to fear from reciprocity with Canada, but that they had considerable to gain from getting into the Canadian market, because of the majority of commodities raised on the farm. The Canadian people had been buying more from the United States than the United States had been buying from Canada. The president then goes on to say:

Canada is our neighbour on the north for three thousand miles. Her population is English, Scotch and French. Her soil is like ours. Her traditions are the same as ours. Her language is ours. Her climate is temperate like ours, except that her growing seasons are shorter and she cannot raise corn in any great quantity. She has a free popular government with a wage-earning class as intelligent and as well paid as ours. It is difficult to see in what respect her farmers have any advantage over our own except a virgin soil in the far northwest.

'How is the farming to be hurt?' he asked. He then took up the effect it would have on corn and wheat prices, on the value of farm lands in the United States and on the milling industry in the United States. He declared that 'in respect to corn the American farmer is king and will remain so, reciprocity or no reciprocity.' As to wheat, he said the domestic price is governed by the world price and that 'the sending of any part of Canada's surplus through our country instead of through Canada to be milled or to be exported without milling will not perceptibly or materially affect the price of wheat for our farmers.'

The value of farm lands, he said, is affected by the proximity to market more than by any other element and he maintained that the American farmer would still have the advantage in this respect. He also predicted a great increase in American milling as a result of the agreement.

'It is a mere truism,' said the president, 'to say that the farmers of a country constitute the greatest wealth producing class of the country and that it is of the greatest importance to conserve their welfare. When we have had good crops, the wheels of all industries have moved and wealth has been stored. Any one, therefore, who would initiate a policy to injure the farmer has much to answer for at the bar of public opinion.

'The greatest reason for adopting this agreement is the fact that it is going to unite two countries with kindred people and lying together across a wide continent, in a commercial and social union to the great advantage of both. Such a result does not need to be justified by a nice balancing of pecuniary profit to each. Its undoubted general benefit will vindicate those who are responsible for it. I say this in order that by answering the arguments directed to the detailed effect of the agreement upon different classes of persons, I may not be thought to abandon the broad ground upon which the opportunity to confirm this agreement ought to be seized.'

Taking up first the effect of the agreement on corn, he said: 'The total production of corn in the United States in 1910 was 3,125,713,000 bushels, of which we exported 33,072,209, and used the rest in domestic consumption, chiefly in raising cattle and hogs, of which in live cattle and packing-house products we exported in value $135,985,212.

Now, I would like to know how the farmers of Canada are going to gain by getting into the markets of the United States for their beef and pork products, a country that is competing with Canada in the markets of Liverpool, that sets the price for the farmers of the United States as well as for the farmers of Canada, and a country which, according to the president himself, exported last year $135,985,212 worth of beef and pork. The president went on to say:

The Canadian product of corn was 18,726,000 bushels, or six-tenths of one per cent of the total production of the United States. We exported 6,000,000 bushels to Canada. Certainly in respect of corn the American farmer is king and will remain so, reciprocity or no reciprocity. Indeed, the change will greatly help him by increasing his supply of young and thin cattle, now very scarce, for feeding with his corn and making good beef.

They propose to go to our Northwest and buy up our thin cattle and take them over to fatten on their own farms, and, as the hon. member for Brandon said, that country will become the backdoor of Chicago. But the president went on:

But it is said that the farm land of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and other states, is much more valuable than the land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Assiniboia and Alberta, the four great northwestern provinces of Canada, and that to give Canadian farmers free entry of products raised on cheaper lands will be certain to lower farm lands in value in this country. Nothing could be further from the fact. Canadian lands are farther removed from the Minneapolis and Chicago markets than the lands of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa or Illinois, and proximity to market is a most important element in the value of farm land. Then the natural change in farming in this country is from the raising of grain for export to the raising of grain for farm consumption and development of the secondary products in the forms of cattle and hogs. The live cattle are bought and fattened. The hogs are raised and fed. It is farming of this kind that explains the high value of farm lands in Illinois and Iowa.

The president goes on to argue that where the finished article is produced the high priced land is, and we propose by this arrangement practically to compel the farmers of Ontario and of the western provinces to sell their thin cattle to the United States to be fattened on their farms. The president continued:

The difference in the value of the acre between Manitoba and Minnesota is but little more than eight dollars, while the difference between Minnesota and Wisconsin is $60, between Wisconsin and Illinois is $52, between Wisconsin and Iowa is $40, between Michigan and Indiana is $31. These figures show incontestably that the fear of a reduction in farm land values of this country by letting in Canada's products is wholly unfounded.

The price of wheat less transportation and other charges for warehouse and delivery is fixed by what all the wheat exporting countries including the United States and Canada, can get for their surplus in Liverpool.

Hence, the sending of any part of Canada's surplus through our country instead of through Canada to be milled or to be exported without milling, will not perceptibly or materially affect the price of wheat for our farmers.

Open up the market of Minneapolis and Chicago, give the transportation and warehousing facilities of our northwest and the Canadian farmer will get for his wheat practically what the American farmer gets, less the higher freight charges due to greater distance from market. In other words, the advantage we give the Canadian farmer will not hurt our farmer, for the price will remain the same.

Where do you find that the Canadian would get a higher price for his wheat under this agreement? President Taft says it will make no difference; or in other words that the agreement will not hurt the American farmer. He goes on to say:

But by patronizing our elevators, our flour mills, our railroads, he will secure admission to the world's market at a less cost to himself, while we will secure the advantage of increased trade for our elevators, our mills, our railroads, and our commission men.

The United States secured for the farmers the free listing of such important agricultural products as cotton seed oil, all kinds of fruits and vegetables, timothy and clover seed, eggs, and numerous other products in which the movement to Canada from the United States is much greater than from Canada to the United States. The remission of $1,300,000 in duties on rough lumber imported into the United States by free listing it, along with pickets and palings, and the heavy reductions on dressed lumber, laths and shingles, are all in the interest of the farmer.

Let the agreement be adopted and go into operation and in six months the farmers on the border who now have fears will rejoice in this great step towards closer business and social relations with our neighbours. The whole country—farmer, manufacturer, railroad company, middlemen, warehouseman—all will be the gainer.

That is the argument of President Taft, and I submit that what he predicts is exactly what will take place if we allow this treaty to go through.

Just a word in conclusion about our horse market. We are told that the Canadian horse market will not be injured, but so good an authority as my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) pointed out to the satisfaction of every hon. member of this House, that the market for horses in the United States is not as good as that in Canada. He showed that the average price received by the farmers in the United States for horses last year was $118, while the Canadian farmers received $133. I have here a table showing the quotations in Toronto and Chicago on March 24, 1911:

With the exception of drivers and saddle horses, the prices at Chicago are lower than those in Toronto. The heavy horses which our farmers have been producing are lower in Chicago than in Toronto, and the market for Canadian horses to-day is our great Northwest. That will be our market for years to come. But by this arrangement we are allowing the American farmers, who are closer to our western country than are the farmers of Ontario and Quebec, to sell their horses there on equal terms with our own. Even the province of Manitoba, which has horses to sell, will have to meet that American competition.

I have here a letter written by one of the greatest horse men in the western states regarding the effect which this reciprocity pact is likely to have. This letter is written by Mr. R. F. Williams, of St. Paul, representing one of the largest horse dealing firms in the United States, Barrett and Zimmerman. He writes as follows:

To the farmers: In compliance with your request, we are glad to state our view of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada, from the standpoint of horse raisers, breeders and dealers.

Minnesota and adjoining states are rapidly forging to the front as horse raising states. The high price horses during recent years has caused every farmer in our northwest to buy brood mares and plan to raise a few market horses, thinking the great demand, caused by the settling up of new lands in the west would continue. The lands available to homestead entry are about settled up.

He is speaking of the United States, of the western states where some years ago homesteads were being opened up and there was a demand for horses. Now, however, he says, all that country is practically taken up, and there are no new settlers coming in as in the Canadian Northwest, and consequently the market for horses has decreased:

Again the lands available to homestead entry are about settled up, and the demand for horses with which to open up new lands is on the decrease. Moreover, the automobile is taking the place of horses in our large cities. With a rapidly decreasing horse demand at home——

I would like some hon. gentlemen opposite to listen to this, who tell us that reciprocity will not affect our horse market:

With a rapidly decreasing horse demand at home and a great increase in the number of colts foaled annually, the American horse raiser will soon have a large surplus of horses; and if we do not have a market for them, horses will take a decided drop in value in the very near future. It is evident that the only logical market the American horse raiser can hope for is western Canada.

Now, I would like the farmers of Ontario who are engaged in the breeding of heavy horses to notice this:

No country in the world needs so many horses as western Canada. With the duty off, thousands of carloads of American horses will be shipped across the line in the next few years, and practically double our local markets and give an outlet for all the surplus horses our farmers raise, at stable and profitable values.

I would like to know how the horse-raisers of the Dominion of Canada are going to come out on this phase of the reciprocity pact. We have a great market in Canada for horses. The Americans engaged in the horse trade admit this themselves—that it is the only growing market on the continent of America. We have hundreds of thousands of immigrants pouring into the west, and they cannot bring their horses with them. The farmers of Ontario and Quebec can raise these horses and supply them just as well as the farmers of Minnesota and adjoining states. And I believe that the farmers of this country are entitled to their home market without being intruded on by the Americans. Just to show what our interprovincial trade has been in horses, I looked up the Ontario statistics, and I find that in 1909 Ontario sold horses to the value of $9,825,476, while we only exported $783,194 worth. Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture where these horses were sold? These horses were sold in the Dominion of Canada. That is, the farmers of Ontario disposed of them to the people of our own country, and a majority of these horses, I am convinced, went into the western market which we have now lost, or in danger of losing.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If this Bill goes through.

Mr. SEXSMITH. If this Bill goes through, but I have great hopes that it will never go through.

In conclusion, I would say I am opposed to this pact as a Canadian farmer. After going into the facts, and studying the markets from an unbiassed standpoint, I feel it my duty to oppose it and to oppose it to the utmost of my ability. I oppose it also because I am a Canadian citizen, and because I can see nothing else in it but the breaking up of our federation. I oppose it as a British subject, because, to my mind, it will lead to separation from the British Empire. We are told: You preach loyalty. Well, I have heard a great deal of loyalty preached on the other side of the House. They say that there is no danger—as they put it, if I trade with a Jew that does not make me a Jew. Perhaps that is logical, but it reminds me of the old Biblical story of Abraham and Lot. These hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that we can run our trade channels north and south instead of east and west, that we can deal with these Americans, but we will not become annexed. I remember how we are told that Abraham said to Lot, let there be no strife between me and thee or between thy herdmen and my herdmen. He said: You go east and I will go to the west. Abraham knew well what kind of a man Lot was—anxious to grab all the dollars he could. Lot, with covetous eye, looked toward Sodom. The low lying well watered land, and he pitched his tent toward Sodom. He had heard of the people of Sodom of course. He said: I will go down and deal with these people; there is no danger that because I deal with them I shall ever become their fellow-citizen. And he went down and they began to deal with him. After a while he said: Why, these are very fine people and directly they were wining and dining together. And a short time afterwards what took place? Why, Lot's family was intermarried with these people of Sodom and they became one people, and Lot lived in Sodom. But Abraham remained out in the high altitude and in the open and became the head of a great nation.

Mr. THOMAS MACNUTT (Saltcoats). Mr. Chairman, I understand that it is the wish of the House to adjourn for the Easter holidays at six o'clock, and at this hour it is hardly worth while for me to begin any statement. I do not intend to take up a great deal of the time of the committee, but I do not wish to give a silent vote. I think it would be better that I should move that the committee, rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SONGHEES INDIAN RESERVE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for Mr. Oliver) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for the carrying out of a certain agreement of sale made on the 31st day of March, one thousand nine hundred and eleven, between the government of the Dominion of Canada and the government of the province of British Columbia, whereby the Songhees Indian reserve in the city of Victoria, in the province of British Columbia, shall be conveyed or transferred to the government of British Columbia for certain considerations set forth in the said agreement.

He said: The band of Indians known as the Songhees have their reserve within the limits of the city of Victoria, bordering on the harbour. The question of this reserve is one of long standing in the city of Victoria, and I will not surprise the House when I say that the Indians have not improved the land, and the condition in which they have kept it has become a very serious matter to the city. Efforts have been made from time to time during many years to induce the Indians to release their hold on the land, and take land elsewhere, but these efforts did not materialize. The provincial government and the Dominion government then came into conference, and the provincial government have been able to effect with the Indians a settlement whereby, in return for the payment of a large sum of money, the Indians have been induced to release their hold on that reserve and accept a reserve elsewhere, in the vicinity of Esquimalt. An agreement to that effect has been reached between the Dominion government and the provincial government, and the object of this Bill is simply to give effect to that agreement.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I may say, for the information of the committee, that the Bill consists of one clause, which is as follows:

The agreement for the sale of the Songhees Indian reserve contained in the schedule to this Act is hereby confirmed and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Act, the whole of the amount payable to each head of an Indian family under the terms of the said agreement may be paid in the manner therein provided.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the amount of money to be paid, and by whom is it to be paid?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The money is to be paid by the provincial government.

The agreement provided that that government shall deposit in the Canadian Bank of Commerce, in the city of Victoria, the sum of $10,000 to the credit and in the name of each head of a family of the Songhees band of Indians. There are some 43 or 44 of these heads of families. These Indians, I may say, are somewhat advanced, though not so keen for business as the white people, and I understand that they are quite able to look after their own interests. But this settlement is in excess of the powers vested in the government by the Indian Act, and that is the reason why we have to obtain this authority from parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. As a matter of fact, is the amount paid over to each family, or is it put in the form of a trust fund?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. It is paid to each family.

Mr. FOSTER. So that it becomes their very own?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it paid by the provincial government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes. The provincial government becomes the owner of the reserve, therefore pays the money for it.

Mr. HUGHES. This has nothing to do with the Act passed the other day?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all.

Mr. HUGHES. In case of Indian land in Ontario being expropriated under that Act, it would, I presume, go to the provincial government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. While we have introduced that legislation, it did not cover this case, so we had to introduce a special Act covering the agreement with the Songhees. Not only in the province of British Columbia, but in the other provinces, where a reserve is in the vicinity of a growing town, as is the case in several places, it becomes a source of nuisance and an impediment to progress. But of course we must keep faith with the Indians; that is the first requisite. By this law we are giving power to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to submit to the decision of the court whether or not the Department of Indian Affairs might be authorized to take possession of such a reserve, dispose of it to white people and settle the Indians elsewhere and determine what should be a fair compensation and what should be done for the preservation of the rights of the Indians and keeping faith with them.

Mr. HUGHES. Take Fort William and Sarnia, where there are Indian Reserves adjoining these towns, in case these reserves were taken, under this proposed law, the proceeds of the Indian Lands would revert to the Dominion government for the Indians.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. For the Dominion government to handle on behalf of the Indians?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the new reserve provided from provincial or Dominion lands?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Provincial lands.

Mr. FOSTER. The question is not at all a new one but an old and very vexed question, and I shall be very glad indeed if a solution can be arrived at equitable and agreeable at all.

Mr. SPROULE. There is this feature. If the Indians are the wards of the government and the government must take care of their money, why should not the government take care of the proceeds of this transaction which revert to the Indians so as to prevent their squandering it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The answer is this. At present the Indians have a reserve and nothing else. That reserve is not a subject of commerce. They can not sell it. All they can do is have the enjoyment of it. At present, under the agreement we have made, they receive a price for their present reserve, and they are given another to replace it. They will have the same rights in the new reserve which they have to-day in the reserve they are selling, so that they will be in exactly the same position. To-day they have a reserve at Victoria, but when they part with that, they will be given one at Esquimalt, so that they would be in the same position as they are in to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. If the reserve they are leaving be worth ten times as much as the reserve on which they are to be located, the nine-tenths will be for the benefit of the Indians. It would be doubtful wisdom to give that money to the Indians and allow them to squander it while they are still the wards of the government. Why should not the government handle that money the same as they do the Indian fund?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The reasoning of my hon. friend would be right if the reserve were in commerce, but they cannot sell their land in the vicinity of Victoria.

They can only have the enjoyment of it. Whether it be worth $1,000,000 or $10,000,000, it is all the same. They have nothing but the possession and the enjoyment, and they are to be given another reserve so that they will have just as much as they have to-day. It does not matter whether the reserve they have now can sell for a larger or smaller amount, the only thing we can do is to see that they have the same thing as they now enjoy. It will simply be in Esquimalt and not in Victoria.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the Indian family consists of 10 or 15 people and they get $10,000 a family, and that is paid over by the provincial government. What will become of the minors, who are entitled to a share of this money, if the parents are allowed to squander it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Suppose the reserve were not sold at all, and the Indians kept it, the family would be just in the same position.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is all right to sell, but it seems to me that the proceeds of the sale ought to be held in trust by the government, and paid out by way of annuity or in some other way so as to prevent the Indians from squandering it foolishly as they may do if it be all paid to them, in which case the children would get no benefit.

Mr. BARNARD. For the information of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), I may say that under the Indian Act the general policy of the department is to allow one-half of the amount paid in cash on the sale of a reserve to be paid directly to the Indians. In this case, as I understand the situation, the Dominion government has agreed that the new Indian reserve should be accepted as practically one-half the value of the purchase price. For that reason, the deal is an equitable one. This is a matter of vital importance to the city of Victoria, and I would be very sorry, indeed, to see any obstacle put in the way of this settlement. The people out there have been trying for the past 30 years to get rid of this reserve and have the Indians transferred elsewhere. With regard to the administration of the fund, that is one of the grievances of the Indians. There is a small fund of some $10,000 or $15,000 which is being administered by the Dominioin government for the benefit of the Indians, and it has always been a source of irritation to the Indians that they could not lay their hands on that money. There has been considerable difficulty in getting a settlement of this matter at all, as it required very delicate negotiation, and the Indians have been dealt with very generously, as the value of the new reserve is very great, indeed. My own opinion was that this government was, if anything, a little too careful in looking after the interests of the Indians.

Mr. HUGHES. How far removed from Victoria is the new reserve?

Mr. BARNARD. About four miles.

Mr. HUGHES. They might sell that again.

Mr. BARNARD. Possibly.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 179) respecting the Songhees Indian Reserve.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SMALL-POX EPIDEMIC.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the orders of the day are called, might I be permitted to draw the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister to a very dangerous condition of affairs existing with regard to the parliament buildings here, and also in the city of Ottawa. It is generally known that one of the members of the Press Gallery was taken down with small-pox some three days ago. Is it true that the room which he occupied in this building remained unfumigated until to-day? And when was this reporter taken away? I would also like to ask whether the government has any information to the effect that the family in the house in which this young man boarded has been stricken with small-pox, two or more members of the family as well as the reporter having taken the disease? And is it the intention of the government to take charge of the sanitary condition of the parliament buildings, and even of the city itself, if necessary, on account of the city officials being totally inefficient in the management of epidemics of typhoid, small-pox and other diseases that have arisen?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A memorandum has been placed in my hands by the Clerk of the House which will answer the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes):

It appears that Mr. Blue, one of the official stenographers of the House, was sent to Porter's island, on Sunday last, 16th instant, he having a mild attack of small-pox. The last time that Mr. Blue was present in the precincts of the House of Commons, was on the previous Monday, the 10th inst., when he left, not feeling well. The stenographic office occupied by Mr. Blue with others, and the sessional clerks' office adjoining, have been fumigated under orders of the Health Department. The other two stenographers, Messrs. Dickson and Matthews have been vaccinated. These are in excellent health. The lady typewriters of the stenographers' office left Ottawa on Wednesday last for the Easter vacation, and have not yet returned.

As to the question of the government looking after the sanitary conditions of the House, I suppose that is a question for my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley).

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). If one member of parliament should be taken to the pesthouse, what would you do with the remaining members?

Mr. PUGSLEY. So far as I am aware, everything is being done which could reasonably be done to guard the health of the members. One very important matter was the water supply. We have had that sterilized, and I am happy to inform the House that I have a report from the analyst, in which he states that there is no trace of injurious bacteria in the water.

Mr. HUGHES. Wellington street is not cleaned.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it looks pretty well. If my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) will take a walk along it, he will be delighted at the wonderful effect the sun has had upon it within the last day or two.

Mr. HUGHES. The sun—not the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am willing to give the credit to the sun. With regard to the fumigation of the official stenographer's room, the Sergeant at Arms informs me that it has been attended to, even though only attended to to-day. My attention had not been called to the fact of an official having been affected with the small-pox.

Mr. HUGHES. Pretty quick work for the government—only nine days' delay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied with what has been done.

UNITED STATES WAR VESSELS ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to ask the Prime Minister if it is true, as stated in the newspapers, that another American gunboat or armed vessel has been given permission to traverse the canals and make entrance into the Great Lakes? If this has been done on condition of the withdrawal of any other vessel at present on the lakes, has that withdrawal actually taken place? Also, I would inquire what is the relative warlike power of each of these vessels?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is true that the 'Dubuque' has been allowed to go through the canals into the lakes, but the 'Nashville' is to be removed from the lakes. I understand that the 'Dubuque' is not such a large vessel as the 'Nashville,' but has a more powerful armament. Neither vessel has yet gone through the canals.

NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE—LOSS OF MACPHERSON-YUKON PATROL.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the Prime Minister with regard to a very regrettable occurrence which took place and which has come to our knowledge, I think, only since the House adjourned. I refer to the fatality which overtook the Mounted Police squad which left Macpherson in December last for Dawson City, and all of whom perished on the trail. I may be behind the times, but, speaking for myself alone, I do not know why that expedition was ordered out of Fort Macpherson at that time. If it were for some purpose of necessity, then brave men have lost their lives in a good cause. I think it would be for the benefit of the House and the country if a brief statement of the reasons why that expedition was sent out should be made. Perhaps the Prime Minister might not be able to make that explanation on the spur of the moment, but I suggest that he should make it at as early a time as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am prepared to give my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) now the information he asks for. I am sorry to say that we have received information, that four mounted police, headed by Inspector Fitzgerald met death on the trail between Fort Macpherson and the Yukon river. I have this statement to-day from the Comptroller of the Mounted Police:

I am grieved in having to report the death on the winter trail between Fort Macpherson —the head waters of the Mackenzie river— and Dawson, Yukon territory of inspector Fitzgerald and three other members of the R.N.W.M. Police.

They were all men of experience in winter travelling. They were detailed for the annual winter patrol from Macpherson to Dawson.

On account of their non-arrival at Dawson within reasonable time, a search party was sent out and their bodies were found—two, about 35 miles, and two about 25 miles from Macpherson.

Until particulars are received by mail I am unable to offer explanation beyond the probability that their dogs gave out and they decided to return to Macpherson.

In addition to this calamity the brief telegram I have received states that Sergeant Selig, who has done splendid work in the far north, died at Herschell Island in January.

With regard to the latter, we have no information. As to the calamity on the trail between the Yukon river and Fort Macpherson my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asks on what errand these men are sent on this long winter journey. It has been the policy of the police for ten years to have these northern parts of the country constantly patrolled, summer and winter. Every winter for ten years, a patrol has been sent regularly from the Yukon to Macpherson and from Macpherson to the Yukon again. The same thing is true on the east —patrols going from Hudson bay to Norway House, and Norway House to Winnipeg. These patrols are constantly in motion, and I am glad to say that this is the only casualty we have experienced during the time that these patrols have been on the trail. My hon. friend will see that this was not an occasional trip, but it is part of the policy of the force to have these northern parts of the country under constant surveillance and control. There has been a calamity in this case, but I think it will be explained when we have further news. I think the policy is a sound one of keeping all parts of the country, as far as we can, under constant surveillance of the police.

Mr. FOSTER. The Prime Minister might supplement the information he has given, if possible. What actuated the police in adopting this policy, and what has been effected as a result of previous patrols? Is it with a view to saving life, or what is the purpose?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. As my hon. friend is aware, at Fort Macpherson, and the same is true of Hudson bay, American whalers hibernate. There are three or four American whalers at the mouth of the Mackenzie river every winter, and it has been our policy to keep surveillance and control over the country. Though we apprehend no trouble from these American whalers as they hibernated in Canadian territory, we thought it preferable to keep our authority constantly in force and our flag all the time waving, asserting our authority and our jurisdiction. I think that policy has been a good one. We had no trouble with American whalers at all, and we have at all times asserted the authority of Canadian law.

THE BRITISH-JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. BURRELL. Before the orders of the day are called. I wish to ask if the government has yet received a copy of the commercial treaty between Great Britain and Japan, and if so, when the government proposes to take action with regard to it.

Mr. FIELDING. Before recess we received a copy of the treaty, and I will be glad to bring it down and lay it on the table of the House. I am not aware as to what action the government may take on behalf of Canada; that is under consideration at the present time, and I would not be able to make any definite statement just now concerning it.

UNITED STATES-JAPANESE TREATY.

Mr. FOSTER. By the way, has the Finance Minister any means of getting a copy of the treaty which the United States has lately negotiated with Japan, and which, so far as I know, has not been yet promulgated; I suppose it will soon be promulgated; and the Finance Minister would make this House his debtor if he would obtain two or three copies of it for our use.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend will see that since it has not been officially promulgated, even if I were able to obtain a copy, I would not be in a position to present it to the House. But we are not overlooking the fact, I can assure my hon. friend.

Mr. BURRELL. I think my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) will have no trouble in getting a copy of it, for I have a copy in my possession.

Mr. FIELDING. A newspaper report is not an official copy. The newspapers contained a general statement of the effect of the treaty. But whether I have a copy of it or not, I will only say at the present moment that I have no copy that I would be free to communicate to the House. But in view of what my hon. friend has said, if he has already obtained a copy, I will make inquiry as to whether it is accessible to the public.

Mr. BURRELL. I think the injunction of secrecy must have been lifted, so far as the United States Senate is concerned, because I have an official copy.

Mr. FOSTER. The Finance Minister says he is not aware that it has been officially promulgated; are we to infer from that remark that he has a copy in his pocket?

Mr. FIELDING. Suppose I had a confidential copy, would I be free to make it public?

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the government to certain returns that have been ordered, and have not yet been brought down On the 5th of December, 1910, there was an order for a return showing what public buildings were occupied as post offices. I persume that information would be in the Department of Public Works. That cannot be a very difficult return to make, I have spoken of it before, and in the most emphatic way I wish to impress upon the proper department that the return has been too long delayed. I want to make use of it. It is now a matter of nearly four months, and cannot be very difficult to obtain. On the 18th of January, another order was made as to aliens in the service of the government who are living outside of Canada. There is no reason I think why that return should not have been made long ago. These are only two of a pretty long list of orders that have not been complied wih. I want also to make use of this return for a specific purpose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have taken note of my hon. friend's request, and will make inquiry. There is only one remark I would like to make, and that is that while it might not take long to get this return ready, its preparation might be blocked by some other lengthy returns which are in course of preparation. These returns are placed in the hands of certain clerks to attend to. I will make inquiry at once, and let my hon. friend know to-morrow.

SHIPWRECKS ON THE BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST.

Mr. BARNARD. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to two very serious shipwrecks which have taken place on the coast of Vancouver Island within the last three weeks. The first was that of the steamer 'Sechelt,' and the second occurred a week ago last Monday, that of the steamer 'Iroquois.' In both cases there was loss of life, aggregating something like 50. Both these vessels were apparently of pretty much the same type, and the question arises whether they were seaworthy, or whether they had been properly inspected. I may say in case of the 'Sechelt,' which went down with all on board, it is difficult to get at the facts; but in the case of the 'Iroquois' there are some survivors. The chief engineer states that the weather was not extraordinarily severe—I think that was also true at the time of the wreck of the 'Sechelt.' The engineer of the 'Iroquois' says it was only a stiff breeze; another bystander who was there says he has often seen this vessel go out in worse weather without any untoward results. Another witness, when asked if she was top heavy—and I may say that the vessel capsized—said that she was not more top heavy than many other vessels which are plying out of those ports. That would point possibly to some carelessness in the inspection. That is a matter that I would like to see inquired into. The wreck apparently was caused by the improper stowage of the cargo; and the captain, when questioned at the coroner's inquest, stated that so far as he knew he could load his vessel in any way he liked. I think he said to any extent he liked. Of course he is wrong in the latter contention. But if he is right in the former, there is apparently no system of inspection of the loading of these vessels. The minister is now amending the Merchant Shipping Act, and I would ask him to take into consideration whether it is not advisable to have some such inspection as that. There is still another matter I wish to call to his attention. He is directing an investigation into the causes of this wreck, it is the preliminary investigation provided for by the Shipping Act. I would like to point out to him that that is hardly sufficient. Captain Eddy, who has been appointed to make the investigation, is a master mariner, I think the examiner of the pilots, or of the captains and engineers of the city of Vancouver. He is no doubt a very estimable man, but at the same time he has not the training which would enable him to get at the facts as a judge of the Admiralty Court would be able to do. I would ask the minister to pay close attention to this matter. I can assure him that the people of the coast cities expect that the local judge in Admiralty would be asked to make a formal investigation into this wreck.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say to my hon. friend that immediately after the government received news of this accident, we ordered a preliminary investigation to be held. That is the general course followed in all such cases. We begin with a preliminary investigation, and then, if it is found necessary, the minister orders a formal investigation. In the two cases my hon. friend has mentioned, we received a report by telegraph from the examiner of masters and mates, Mr. Eddy, reporting that a formal investigation would be required. Yesterday I appointed Mr. Justice Martin, judge of Admiralty, to hold that investigation. We have followed the same procedure in the other case.

TRANSPORTATION OF FISH FROM MARITIME PROVINCES.

Mr. BRODEUR. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), asked me to give him a statement of the quantity of fresh fish which had been transported from the maritime provinces to Ontario during the course of last year. I have a statement here with reference to the transportation of fresh fish and it is as follows.

The statement for 1910-11 is not complete as further returns for that year may yet be received.

Mr. FOSTER. These are fiscal years?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. MACDONELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) a question regarding the International Fisheries Commission. The minister will recollect that a treaty was signed in April, 1908, between ourselves and the United States. I understand the government of Canada has already promulgated regulations regarding fishing under the treaty, but that up to the present time the United States have made no regulations, and that although the treaty is three years old the statement is made in the press that there are no regulations at the present time binding on the fishermen of the United States with regard to fishing in inland waters. I think, as I have said, that the Canadian government promulgated their regulations some two years ago. I would like to know from the minister if it is so that the regulations, under the treaty, have not as yet been issued by the American government, and if the condition of affairs now is that there are no regulations regarding these matters binding upon the United States?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may inform my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) that in 1908, a treaty was made with the United States in regard to the boundary waters. Before that there were regulations passed by different states of the union, and there were also some regulations, as far as the Canadian side was concerned, passed by this government or by parliament. The treaty provided for the appointment of a commission composed of two men, one to be appointed by the United States government and one to be appointed by the British government. Prof. Prince has been named as the Canadian representative on that commission. The two commissioners set to work and framed a set of regulations which were accepted by this government and also by the government of the United States. The regulations, in order to have the force of law, required legislation on both sides, especially on the American side, because no appropriation at the disposal of the federal authorities in the United States existed to protect the fisheries or for the purpose of putting the regulations into force. On the Canadian side we had also to pass legislation and a Bill was introduced last year providing for the necessary legislation in order to put these regulations into force. The regulations, however, contrary to my hon. friend's information, have not been promulgated. The legislation simply has been passed empowering the government to put these regulations into force when the time should come for such action to be taken. They will be promulgated at a date to be agreed upon by the two governments. I may say to my hon. friend that when, in the month of January, I was in Washington, I took the matter up with the authorities of the State Department there, and they promised that steps would be taken in order to put these regulations into force or to have the necessary legislation passed. Some time afterwards the president sent a message to the United States Senate advising the adoption of the regulations and the passing of the necessary legislation and the matter now stands in that position.

Mr. MACDONELL. In neither country have they adopted these regulations?

Mr. BRODEUR. In the meantime the regulations we had before are still in force.

Mr. MACDONELL. The old regulations?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes; and the same on the United States side.

Mr. MACDONELL. Can the minister give the House any idea as to when these new regulations will be concurred in by both countries?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is very hard to say until the United States Congress has passed the necessary legislation.

Mr. MACDONELL. I understand the old regulations are very unsatisfactory and that they do not protect the fish?

Mr. BRODEUR. Well, those regulations have been in force for a great number of years, and I think they have generally given satisfaction on our side. But, on the American side, the legislation was quite different, and the regulations did not give, in some states at least, the same protection that we are giving on our side.

CANADIAN LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the government if the Canadian Light and Power Company, the lessee of the Beauharnois canal, has submitted to the government plans for the improvement and enlargement of its works upon that canal, and what action the government has taken in respect to the submission of these plans and the approval of the same?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. An application has been received. No action has been taken.

CONTROL OF WATER-POWERS.

Mr. MONK. While on that subject, there is another question that I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister. At the beginning of this session I introduced a Bill respecting water-powers, touching a subject upon which we have no legislation. That Bill was examined by the Conservation Commission at Quebec and its principle was recommended to the government. I would like to ask the government if they intend to take up that legislation this session or to provide any legislation, so as to safeguard our water-powers at this session?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would not like to make a promise to my hon. friend that the matter will be taken up this session.

NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur). Is it the case that the government has offered some inducement to the postmasters or other officials for the purpose of recruiting for the new navy or for providing cadets for the naval school? If so, when was that action determined upon by the government, and what is the commission or inducement offered?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say in answer to my hon. friend that the postmasters in the most important places have been selected for the purpose of acting as recruiting officers, and it is agreed that they will be paid $2 for each man who enters the navy.

Mr. MONK. Is there any order in council?

Mr. BRODEUR. I am not sure, but I think so.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

House again in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. T. MacNUTT (Saltcoats). Mr. Chairman, before dealing directly with the reciprocal agreement, I wish to draw attention to some remarks that were made by hon. members opposite when speaking on this question having reference to the Grain Growers' Association of the west? I will quote some of these remarks and they will speak for themselves, but they evidently intend to give the impression —in fact, they make the assertion—that the Grain Growers' Association is a Grit machine. I find on page 7057 of 'Hansard' the following:

> Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been brought to the front perhaps since then by a certain element who pose as representing the farmers.
> I refer to these men, Roderick MacKenzie and Henders, who stand high in the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba. They say that reciprocity is what the farmers want. Well, they are farmers of a kind I admit, but if any man in this House who knows anything about agriculture should happen to go down to their farms, he would not think they were farmers at all. These men pose as the representatives of the farmers, but in my opinion they are the agents, paid or otherwise, of the Grit party.

Another hon. member occupying a very important position on the opposition side has several times criticised the Grain Growers' Association. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) said of this association:

> Why, Sir, you would actually think it was this gang of leaders; this Grain Growers' Association from the northwest that come down here, the same sort of fellow we find popping up in blacksmith-shop statesmanship.
> Mr. LANCASTER. Grit organizers.
> Mr. HUGHES. Every one of them a Grit organizer or heeler; not the rank and file of the farmers of Canada, but the men who try to push themselves to the front and whose wives are at home wearing long boots and cleaning out cow stables and the horse stables, while these fellows are hanging around the blacksmith shops spouting statesmanship for the world over.

Further on the same hon. gentleman said:

It is a plausible cry—reciprocity. Suggestion is a very plausible means of approaching a man. There comes along a chap with a stand-up collar, representing Mr. J. J. Hill, or some other magnate, and he tells the horny-handed sons of toil how he sympathizes with them, and prates about the greatness of the farmers, and labels them grain growers' association or something of that kind, and in that way gets the farmers under the control of the Yankee trust. The farmers of my part of the country are used to the Sheldons, the Bill Miners and the other hold-up men of the United States. Let us not be taken in by any free-trade Sheldons or Bill Miners, no matter in what shape they may come to us.

These grain growers are right in the business. We have been accustomed to lightning rod agents and hay fork peddlars and gold-brick men trying to gull the farmers along that line and failing in their efforts. But, Sir, hope springs eternal in the human breast, and we have these gentlemen going to the farmers and telling them that they are going to improve their condition. Well, although far away hills always look green, yet our farmers are not going to be taken in by any such sophistry. They have had the experience of the days of 1887 when this commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity and patron business swept the country for a time, but our farmers were not to be taken in then, and they will be just as staunch and firm to-day as they were in those days.

Then further on:

Speaking of the Association of Grain Growers, I wish to say a word about the leaders of that association. I may be possibly a little too ardent, but I know the gang and they are the same as those we fought long years ago. I do not believe that one of them is honest at heart. They are to-day, as they were formerly, in the pay of the Liberal party. It will require more than the declarations of that gang to convince me that they are not either in the pay of Jim Hill and the Yankees or of the great Liberal party of this Dominion. At all events their actions are along those lines.

And still further on:

We had before the House recently the question of the Farmers' Bank of Canada—a case in which a lot of financial buccaneers, playing on the name 'Farmers' bamboozled the farmers up and down this country to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars, the money being put into an institution for speculative purposes where it was lost. Here we have, evidently, another instance of buccaneers trading on the name of the grain growers, endeavouring to get the farmers of the northwest engaged in this speculative work.

Mr. MacNUTT.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Campbell) should know who compose the Grain Growers' Association; possibly the hon. member from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) has not had the same opportunity. They are an organization of both Grits and Tories. Some years ago the movement was instituted, it has spread, and has now become a very strong force. There is hardly a place in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta that has not a Grain Growers' Association or, as they call it in Alberta, United Farmers' Association. The members found that it was necessary for their own protection to do their own business to a certain extent, and so formed the Grain Growers' Grain Company. Not all the members of the Grain Growers' Association have shares in the Grain Growers' Grain Company, but only farmers are eligible to hold shares in that Company, and their holdings are limited to four shares each of $25. The members of that company appoint these leaders themselves. They also publish a periodical which, judging from its tone last summer, was not particularly friendly to this government. This association is not in any way a Grit organization, although I believe that these two gentlemen who have been referred to by the hon. member for Dauphin, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Henders, are or have been Liberals. The honorary president of the movement in Manitoba is Mr. J. W. Scallion, who has been a life-long Conservative, who was one of the delegates at the Farmers' deputation, who read a paper here on December 16. The vice-president is Mr. J. S. Wood, of Macdonald constituency, also a Conservative. I have received numbers of resolutions favouring the reciprocal agreement from the associations, some of them from the very hot-beds of opposition at the last election, and I recognize the names of the movers and seconders in many cases as being opponents of my own and Conservatives. I have here a letter from a gentleman who took a very decided stand at the late elections against myself, although personally he is very friendly to me. He says:

You may take it as absolutely certain that reciprocity will carry in Saltcoats riding and generally in the west. I suppose you do not want telling this, but—as an independent—it comes my way differently to the way you get your information. Old-fashioned Conservatives hate like the devil to vote for anything introduced by Laurier, but they are going to gulp Laurier and vote for reciprocity.

Most of these men are members of the Grain Growers' Association.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the name of the writer of that letter?

Mr. MacNUTT. It is a private letter.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member has quoted it.

Mr. FIELDING. It is not a public document.

Mr. MacNUTT. I am using it as evidence that there are others than Conservatives in these associations.

Mr. SPROULE. As the hon. member has quoted that letter he must lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is thinking of the rule regarding state documents.

Mr. SPROULE. No, of the rule regarding papers or letters read in this House. I claim that the rule provides that the name of the writer must be given.

Mr. MacNUTT. I will give the name privately, as perhaps my friend would not care to have his name used in the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the hon. gentleman should not have read the letter.

Mr. MacNUTT. I can vouch for the fact that this was written by a gentleman whom I know very well, who took a strong attitude against the present government at the late election, and that he is a member of the Grain Growers' Association.

Mr. SPROULE. I rise to a point of order and would ask the ruling of the Chair whether since the hon. member has quoted from that letter, he is not at least entitled to give the name of the writer to the House?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not know of any rule that makes it necessary for a member quoting from a letter of a private individual to give the name of the writer. It is true that when a minister of the Crown quotes from an official document he may be required to lay it on the table of the House. I know of no such rule applying to private members. If the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) knows of such a rule I would be willing to give it consideration.

Mr. SPROULE. I can only say I have seen the rule insisted on several times in this House, and if the party quoting from a letter was not prepared to give the name he was not allowed to give the quotation. I remember that very distinctly.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule, I think, applies only to ministers of the Crown.

Mr. MacNUTT. I have some other letters that I might quote from, but I do not think I shall risk it. The point I wanted to make is that the Grain Growers' Associations are not composed entirely of Liberals, that there are a great many influential Conservatives amongst them, including some of the leaders who have been referred to as 'the gang,' who are not honest at heart. Here is something else, taken from a Winnipeg newspaper:

GRAIN GROWERS WORTH.

Allegations Against Organization Cause Indignation at Neepawa.

Neepawa, Man, April 9.—A meeting was held here Saturday afternoon to organize a county association of grain growers. Thomas Drayson and Wm. E. Smith were elected president and secretary respectively. They are both Conservatives. The former criticised Hon. Robert Rogers and others for stating that the organization had fallen into the hand of the Liberal machine.

Mr. Drayson stated that A. Meighen, M.P., was in a position to refute the allegation of Rogers, for, of the dozen delegates to Ottawa from this federal constituency who were entertained by Mr. Meighen at luncheon in the commons restaurant, eight of them were Conservatives.

The meeting appointed a committee to interview Mr. Meighen when he came here this week, and ask him what he did with the petitions in favour of reciprocity sent to him. They also have a number of other questions to ask him. One prominent Conservative grain grower who favours reciprocity wants to know by what authority the present leaders of that party have abandoned the principle and policy advocated by Sir John A. Macdonald.

I could give a great deal more evidence to show that many of the leaders of the Grain Growers' Association are anything but Grits. Which party they will support in the future I do not know; but I expect many of them will support the Liberal party, because they are satisfied that it is giving them what they have wanted for a long time, and that is, the opportunity to sell their goods in a better market, or in a third market, at all events.

Mr. HENDERSON. You had better put it that way—a third market, not a better market.

Mr. MacNUTT. We want to have a dozen markets if we can get them, so as to pick out the best of them. With regard to the reciprocal agreement, speaking as a western man, I cannot see how there can be any objection to the opening up of the third market. At one time we had only one market, that was the home market, and at that time it was hardly worth while going on the land. The country was not being settled, as settlers could not sell what they grew. Later on the old country market was opened up, and settlement went on much better than before. I am not going to say that any one is to blame for the slow progress of the country in its early days. It was in its initiatory stage, and we could not expect a rapid growth. But I cannot see what objection there can be to obtaining access to another market for our products. If that market is not satisfactory, it need not be taken advantage of. As a farmer, I think this arrangement will encourage greater production of certain products which are not now produced to a great extent, but which could be very advantageously produced in the west; I refer particularly to barley and potatoes. Very few farmers in the west raise more of these products than they require for their own use. The farmer is generally careless about barley-growing. He puts barley in late, and does not always take care that the seed is particularly clean. There may be oats or wheat mixed with it; but he does not care very much, because he is going to crush it for feed. But there is no country that can grow barley better that the west if it is properly treated. Many parts of our country, when first opened up, will not grow wheat satisfactorily, because it may not mature. The reason given for this is that the sun does not penetrate the thick sod as it does broken up ground, so that a fall of a few degrees in the temperature in August is enough to affect the wheat; but as the land gets broken up and cultivated, the heat of the sun will be absorbed by the ground during the day and given off at night, and the temperature will be much higher than it otherwise would be. I have been three times at the front taking up new land, and I have always found that in a new part of the country it was very uncertain whether a wheat crop would fully ripen, but later on, when the ground became fully broken up, it was almost certain to ripen. In many localities, barley could be grown at first instead of wheat, if there was a good market for it. Barley would mature early in August, so that there would be very little danger of its being affected by frost. Barley-growing would also be of great benefit to the older sections of the country, where the land is liable to get dirty from weed seeds or from grain seeds being allowed to remain in the ground, where they will not rot and will not germinate. The seeds which are not near the surface will not germinate. Those that do germinate will probably produce more seed to fall on the ground again, and in the course of time the old land will get full of seed. On such land you can grow a lot of barley, and at the same time get rid of these noxious seeds through germination. In the fall you can harrow the ground and bring the seeds near enough to the surface to germinate, and the plants will be destroyed by the winter frost. You can do the same thing in the spring, and more will germinate. In the course of time you can destroy most of the seeds this way, because the crop of barley can be grown and harvested before the weeds will have time to mature seed. If this is repeated a couple of times it will free the ground from noxious weed seeds; and then in the third year there can be a summer-fallow. Very few farmers care to summer-fallow for more than one year at a time, but if a farmer can go on growing crops which will pay him, and at the same time get his ground into better condition, it will be a great advantage to him; and this he can do by growing barley. The same is true of growing potatoes. If he can get a market for them, I would say that the farmer in the west would be wise to grow quite a lot of potatoes on his summer fallow; and in the end he would have his land in better shape than he would if he merely summer-fallowed it. These are some of the practical reasons why I consider that this proposed agreement would be of considerable benefit to the Canadian west.

I want now to give some figures showing the prices of wheat and barley, in Minneapolis and Winnipeg and the difference between the two. Some of these have already been submitted by my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Cash), who obtained his figures from the speech of a Congressman opposed to the reciprocity deal. That Congressman was arguing against reciprocity from the American standpoint, which is a very good reason I think why we should support it. I shall select only some of these figures taken from the daily market reports in Winnipeg giving the comparative prices of number one Northern wheat and number three barley in Winnipeg and Minneapolis. These figures cover 52 weeks one day in each week, and they show that in every case the Minneapolis prices were ahead of the Winnipeg prices. The smallest difference between the two in favour of Minneapolis was 5¼ cents and it runs up as high as 19 cents.

Average for Wheat No. 1 Northern, 11¾c. Average for Barley No. 3 for 31 weeks, 23c.

The average difference in favour of Minneapolis was 11¾ cents per bushel for the whole year. But this is not all. There is a difference in the system of inspection between the Winnipeg and the American system. Let me just read what constitutes Number one wheat at Winnipeg and also at Minneapolis:

Winnipeg—

No. 1 wheat, Manitoba hard wheat, shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel and shall be composed of at least 75 per cent hard Red Fife wheat.

Minnesota hard—

No. 1 spring wheat, hard, shall be sound, bright, sweet, clean and consist of over 50 per cent of the hard varieties, and weigh not less than 58 pounds to the measured bushel.

Then again the Americans use the Winchester bushel whereas we use the Imperial which shows that the Americans are willing to pay considerable more for a smaller quantity.

Winnipeg—

No. 1 northern wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and be composed of at least 60 per cent of hard Red Fife wheat.

The No. 1 Northern spring wheat Minnesota shall be sound, sweet and clean, and may consist of the hard and soft varieties of spring wheat and weigh not less than 57 pounds to the measured bushel.

In the case of similar grades, the Canadian system requires that it shall be a better wheat than the American system. It is generally conceded that there is a difference of about one grade in favour of Canadian wheat.

There is something more than this. The Americans are not so particular with regard to damaged wheat. Wheat a little tagged or bleached will not be 'rejected' as it is in Canada. If it should happen to be out in a rainstorm, after stooking it would probably lose a grade in Canada, whereas that wheat would pass in the States as if it were not so affected.

I have here some figures obtained from the 'Pioneer Express' of Pembina, North Dakota:

Any stranger going to Portal would think that it and North Portal were the one town, Portal being on the south side of 49th parallel and North Portal on the other side. There is only a street between the two, and the Canadian and American farmers can eat their dinners at the same hotel.

It will be seen that the quotations for barley cover, so far as Winnipeg is concerned, only thirty-one weeks. The reason is that, in the other twenty-one weeks, no quotations are available—evidently, there was no market at all. The figures show the prices in Minneapolis to be much higher than in Winnipeg. The greatest difference is 33½ cents on December 14, and the average for the thirty-one weeks is 23 cents a bushel in favour of Minneapolis. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) found fault with quotations of figures by a previous speaker on this side, showing the prices of barley, on the ground that malting barley in Minneapolis was quoted against feed barley in Winnipeg. But I have taken the same grade of barley—called on both sides No. 3. The Manitoba grade is given in the Bill as follows:

No. 3 Manitoba barley should include shrunken or otherwise slightly damaged barley, weighing not less than 45 pounds to the bushel.

And this is the Minnesota grade as taken from the pamphlet to which I have referred:

No. 3 barley should include all slightly shrunken and otherwise slightly damaged barley, not good enough for No. 2, and should weigh not less than 44 pounds to the measured bushel.

Thus it will be seen that the grades are practically the same. At the same time, if you give our farmers in the west liberty to grow barley and sell it in the American market, they will grow very little No. 3, but what they grow will be nearly all No. 1.

Another point I wish to dwell upon for a short time is the question of horses. Some hon. members have been claiming that the farmers of Canada would not get as much for their horses under reciprocity as at present. I am a horse raiser in a small way myself, and, as I am in favour of the protection of agricultural implements, and other things being taken away it would be very inconsistent of me to ask for protection on horses. I would be quite willing to accept the market. I do not think that the change will make much difference in prices, except for inferior horses. The western American horses are fairly cheap, but we in the western provinces can raise the same stamp of horses just as cheaply. One point we have to consider is the interest of the consumer. Most of the farmers coming into the country will require horses. A man can get along sometimes with an inferior team. But the money to be made in horse raising is to be made on the better class of horses. In any case, I do not think the farmers in the west are going to object to reciprocity in horses, because very few of them go into the business. Most farmers raise enough for themselves, though some do not. Some raise a small surplus and some make a business of horse raising. Of course, it is an important industry, but I do not think any farmer who is raising horses should complain, even if he has to raise his horses against competition from the United States, because he is asking the government to take away protection from the manufacturer, and as I said before, it would be inconsistent for him to ask protection for what he raises and deny protection to others. There is no doubt that there will be some importation of horses from the United States, and, that being the case, I desire to draw the attention of the government—it may be unnecessary, but it will do no harm at all events—to one very important point. Glanders seems to prevail among western American horses to a very large extent. We have had a number of outbreaks of glanders in the west, and in every case the infection could be traced to American importations. No doubt, more horses will be coming in, and it may be more difficult to have them all tested with the mallein test. But that should be looked to carefully, for it is one of the most important things in connection with horse raising in the west. I have suffered twice from outbreaks of glanders among my horses, and in each case the disease was traced to American importations, though the importations did not directly affect mine. Glanders is a disease which will simply put the farmer out of business if it gets a foothold. The Department of Agriculture should be very careful in the inspection of all horses coming across the line, particularly horses from the western states.

I am very much in favour of this reciprocal agreement. In fact, when I first heard of it, I thought it was too good to be true. But there is one part which is not quite so satisfactory, and that is in connection with agricultural implements. We in the west claim that the manufacturer of implements has done very well; he has had protection for a long time and has got established, and there is no necessity for protecting him any longer. Of course, this agreement reduces very materially the duties on many agricultural implements, but I do not think it goes quite far enough; it is not uniform. I have some figures taken from the catalogue of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, showing the prices of Canadian and American implements in that country, and the figures show that the Canadian manufacturer in some cases undersells the American manufacturer in that competitive market.

Deering Ideal, 5 ft. cut with sheaf carrier	31	10	0
Massey Harris, 5 ft. cut with sheaf carrier	31	0	0
Walter A. Woods, 6 ft. cut with sheaf carrier	32	10	0
Massey Harris, 6 ft. cut with sheaf carrier	32	0	0

In both cases, the Canadian is underselling the American manufacturer in this market to which they are admitted freely, and which is about equally accessible to both. The Canadian manufacturer gets a drawback on his raw material. No doubt, when he sells in England he makes a profit—I think the manufacturers generally do. But compare this with the condition of affairs in the west. I have here also some figures from the price list of a dealer in my own town, a man who has been dealing in implements for many years. He selects two binders of the same character—six-foot binders. He said he could get an American machine duty free in Winnipeg for $122.50, and he could get a similar machine of Canadian manufacture for $122. The freight rates, he claimed, were about the same, $10.50 I think on the American machine and $10.60 on the Canadian. Now, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) figured out that something over $20 was collected in duty on every binder, and some $2.50 were paid in duty on the raw material.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the retail price or the wholesale price?

Mr. MacNUTT. I am not speaking now of the price to the farmer, but of the price to the dealer, who sold these two implements for exactly the same price. It cost him about $4 to get them up from Winnipeg, and he sold them both at the same price, $150 cash for each.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to know if the price quoted by the hon. gentleman is the wholesale price at which he could purchase them from the manufacturer to resell again?

Mr. MacNUTT. He was buying outright for himself. If he was working on commission, that would be a different thing. But he was buying outright, and he was getting the American machine laid down at Winnipeg, duty paid, for $122.50, and the Canadian machine cost him I think $122, only 50 cents difference, and he sold them both at the same price. These are the figures he gave to me. Now it does seem strange that the manufacturers of implements can send their stuff to the old country, on the same conditions and sell at the same price as their American competitors, and when they send them west, into our own country, they have to get some $17 or $18 extra profit, and they claim that unless they get this profit they will have to go out of business. That is a problem for us in the west that has never been satisfactorily solved. Now with regard to raising a revenue. As farmers we have got to pay our share in taxes towards raising the revenue, the same as anybody else. But it is a question whether the government has recognized the right principle in developing the west. They offer lands free, or very cheap, to people who will come in and settle them, and the lands are no use unless they are worked. I think the government should supplement their free or cheap lands by providing the farmers cheap tools with which to work their lands, as far as a government can do this in the matter of duty, and thereby encourage production from the land. I do not advocate that the duty should be entirely knocked off at the present time, but I think at all events it should be brought down to a revenue basis, but I admit it is sometimes difficult to find out what is a revenue basis. I think, however, the duty might be further lowered, and there would be more revenue raised under a lower duty. We find that the Post Office Department, for instance, by reducing the rate of postage, increased the business so much that a large deficit was turned into a surplus. I think that a similar policy with regard to agricultural implements would produce a greater revenue from that source, and would at the same time furnish cheaper implements to the farmers. Now I wish to make another quotation from the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), on page 7274 of the 'Hansard':

> It is not many years since the people of this country, at the behest of this government, were given free trade in binder twine. I had the honour of predicting, in a campaign before that unfortunate legislation was enacted, that in case free trade in binder twine was enacted, the farmers of Canada would pay largely through their nostrils to the combines and trusts of that commodity in the United States, and from that hour to this, binder twine has never been so low as it was in the old days before the National Policy. The Canadian farmer has been paying thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the American trusts on binder twine, on fence wire, and on agricultural implements.

Now it is a puzzle to know whether they are paying these thousands and tens of thousands of dollars on account of free binder twine and fence wire, or protected agricultural implements. I think the point the hon. gentleman wants to make is that lower duties or free trade would not reduce the price. He quotes binder twine in that connection. Now under the old National Policy I paid 16 or 17 cents a pound for an inferior binder twine, and a much superior twine is now being sold for 9 or 10 cents a pound.

Mr. HUGHES. It is not the same twine. Is not sisal to-day dearer than it was then and is not manila twine dearer than it was years ago?

Mr. MacNUTT. I know that what I bought for 16 cents a pound——

Mr. HUGHES. What was it made of?

Mr. MacNUTT. I could not tell you, I am not a manufacturer of twine. I know it cost 16 cents a pound, and it was a very thick heavy twine, and a pound would bind but a small number of sheaves, and broke easily. Now we have twine at 9 or 10 cents a pound, sometimes 650 feet to the pound, which will tie up a large number of sheaves and break with difficulty. In 1897 there was very little difference, but the reason given at that time was that an export duty was put upon American twine by the United States government, and they got control of the Philippine Islands and of the raw material of which twine was made, so they controlled the raw material and made the price a little higher. But if there had been an import duty upon it there is no doubt it would have been still higher.

Mr. HUGHES. Had the United States conquered the Philippine Islands in 1897?

Mr. MacNUTT. I say about that time, it may have been later on. But I know that immediately after it was lowered the price went down, because later on, I cannot tell exactly when—I am not as well posted in military matters as the hon. gentleman is, and consequently I cannot give the exact date when the Philippines were conquered—but I remember the circumstance, that immediately after 1897 the price was lowered. Later on an export duty was put on and the price increased a little. But it came down after that, and it is down now 9 or 10 cents a pound or thereabounts.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the hon. member know the difference? I know the hon. gentleman cannot listen to two or three at the same time. His prompters behind him are getting him all mixed up.

Mr. MacNUTT. I am not at all mixed up and am not aware of any prompters.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the hon. member know the difference between sisal and manila, or the other qualities of binder twine?

Mr. MacNUTT. I know the difference between good twine and bad twine, twine that is capable of tying up a sheaf, and a twine that breaks. I have been there frequently, and know what it means. I do not care what it is made of, provided it is good twine.

Mr. HUGHES. It would be just as fair to compare the price of silk with the price of factory cotton. Factory cotton is much stronger than silk and yet it is not as expensive.

Mr. MacNUTT. No doubt silk would be better as a matter of looks, but we do not care as to the looks when it comes to binder twine.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the hon. member mean to say that he is comparing the price of binder twine made of the same material with the price in 1897? It was lower then than it is to-day.

Mr. MacNUTT. I do not pretend to say that I am an expert with regard to binder twine, but as a farmer I know what is good twine and what is cheap twine and that is all I care about.

Mr. LALOR. Is it not a fact that binder twine is dearer to-day than it was before it was put on the free list?

Mr. MacNUTT. No.

Mr. LALOR. Quality for quality, is it not a fact that it is dearer to-day than it was then?

Mr. MacNUTT. I am not aware of it.

Mr. LALOR. You are trying to make out that it is not.

Mr. MacNUTT. I cannot tell you what it was just before 1897, but I have paid 15 and 16 cents a pound for binder twine myself for years, and after this government came into power it was cheaper.

Mr. HUGHES. What was it made of?

Mr. MacNUTT. I would not say what it was made of. Later on it may have been a little dearer. However, I do not think it matters very much. Now, I can tell you something with regard to the price of cream separators. I know that in 1897 a cream separator cost $110, whereas, a year or so later, the price was reduced to $85 and the price continued to go down until every farmer could afford to buy a cream separator. This has had a very great effect upon the prosperity of the west. This demonstrates that a reduction of duty sometimes, at all events, has the effect of producing a reduction in price.

Canadians need not be ashamed of the quality of their implements. I do not think that the Americans can make anything better than the Canadian manufacturers can. Take them all round, I think the Canadian implements are preferable in many ways, and, while the Canadian manufacturers might not get quite so much profit perhaps, they still would get the business if the duty were reduced. There is another point that I desire to mention in connection with agricultural implements. I believe it is a fact that a certain plough company in Canada has been shipping gang ploughs to the United States for the last two or three years, paying a duty of 15 per cent and selling them against their competitors in the United States who have no duty to pay. If that is so how is it possible that they cannot sell to the people in their own country without protection?

Mr. HUGHES. Can the hon. member give us the number and value of those ploughs he could get it from the American returns—shipped from Canada to the United States in the last year or two that he speaks of?

Mr. MacNUTT. I do not say I can, but I can tell you that the manager of this particular company informed me some time ago, and he was proud of the fact, that they had shipped a large number of ploughs.

Mr. LALOR. Of a certain pattern?

Mr. MacNUTT. Of a certain pattern. I just give that for what it is worth. Then, there has been some discussion as to the effect that this reciprocal agreement will have upon transportation. I find that Sir Donald Mann, and, I think, Sir Wm. Mackenzie, are in favour of this agreement, that they are going on with their work and that they are not at all afraid of it. Here is a clipping that I find in connection with their work this year, and this statement was published since the agreement was brought down:

C.N.R.'S BILL FOR RAILS WILL EXCEED $3,000,000.

Ninety Thousand Tons to be Delivered this Year—Heavy Sales of Land

The Canadian Northern has made a fair start toward making this a record year in its growth and business development. Up to the present date, the company has placed orders for rails to be delivered in 1911, to the amount of 90,000 tons, at a cost of over three million dollars. These rails will be laid in Ontario and Western Canada. There are at present 520 miles graded and ready for the steel in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Last year 528 miles of rails were laid, but the rails laid this year will greatly exceed that quantity.

I also find that Canadian Pacific Railway stock has been going up continually, and that evidently investors are not at all afraid.

Mr. HUGHES. Is the bounty going to be paid on steel rails for the coming year?

Mr. MacNUTT. I could not tell the hon. member that. It would certainly not be if I had my way. I overlooked one thing that I want to go back to for a moment, and it has reference to the ever present matter of agricultural implements. I find that the duty on a great many agricultural implements has been reduced from 20 to 15 per cent, which represents about a 25 per cent reduction. But, the reduction does not apply uniformly. Take farm wagons, for instance, which not only the farmer, but everybody who has a team of horses uses; they were 25 per cent and they have only been reduced to 22½ per cent. I cannot understand why they were not reduced further. I find that ploughs, tooth and disc harrows, horse-rakes, cultivators, threshing machines, including wind stackers, baggers, weighers, and self-feeders therefor, and finished parts thereof imported for repairs of the foregoing are reduced from 20 to 15 per cent. That is a good cut; there is no doubt about that. It is a good instalment, at all events. Reapers, mowers, and binders were, two or three years ago, reduced from 20 to 17½ per cent. That has been supplemented by a further reduction of 2½ per cent, making a full reduction of 5 per cent from the duty as it existed three years ago. There are some other articles, however, that have not been reduced, such as manure spreaders, weeders, wind-mills, portable engines with boilers in combination, horse-powers and traction engines for farm purposes. They remain at the same rates of duty. There are some others which have been reduced from 25 to 20 per cent, which is a very good cut too. But it would have given much more satisfaction if the duty on all agricultural implements had been reduced to 15 per cent and the matter made uniform. However, we can look forward, I hope, to having further reductions later on. In the meantime if the farmers are given better markets they can make more money, and it will be a stimulus to them to go on and increase their production, and they can better stand paying for what they have to purchase than if their markets were restricted.

Now, there is just one more point that I shall refer to and that is the loyalty or annexation cry. I need not refer to it at any length because it has already been dealt with. I think it is a very stupid cry to raise. Surely the history of Canadians would not lead any one to imagine that because they are going to be able to sell their goods in a foreign country they must therefore desire to become annexed to that country? It would seem that if any did want that market very badly and could not get it otherwise, they might desire to become annexed. But that incentive is taken away by this agreement. They are going to get that market and they are still going to remain under their own flag. I do not understand the argument which opponents of this measure have advanced on that ground at all. I have here a little clipping with reference to a statement made by the Hon. Lloyd George. No matter what hon. gentlemen may think of his politics they must agree that he is a great statesman and a loyal British subject.

LLOYD-GEORGE PRAISES THE AGREEMENT.

London, Feb. 17.—Lloyd-George, in denying a statement published in a Paris paper that he was antagonistic to the Canadian agreement, says: 'I rejoice that it has been negotiated, and heartily trust it will be carried to a successful conclusion. I regard it as a great triumph of common sense, and an immense stride in the cause of free trade. It is an incalculable step toward the fraternity and co-operation of the English speaking family.'

The whole matter was well summed up by a cartoon published some weeks ago in a Montreal paper. This represented Johnny Canuck behind the counter and Uncle Sam as a customer Uncle Sam prices the goods and then prices the store. He is informed by the storekeeper, Johnny Canuck, that the goods are for sale but not the store. That is about the position we are in, we raise the goods to sell, we wish to get as much money for them as possible and the more American dollars the western man gets the better for all of Canada, the better for any one who has anything to sell to him, the better for manufacturers of all kinds. All they have to do is to give the western farmer value and they will get the money. The farmer is not going to keep his money in an old sock, he will put it into circulation and if the fact is established that under this arrangement he will make more money and have a better market no objection should be raised by any man who is making articles to sell.

In conclusion I would state that I am heartily in accord with the reciprocal agreement, that I hope it will be completed and am satisfied that it will mean much greater prosperity not only for western Canada but for the whole Dominion.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I have listened during the several weeks of this discussion with the most earnest attention to all that has been said in regard to these important reciprocity resolutions hoping and wishing that some reason might be given which would satisfy me, as an ordinary citizen of Canada, that this agreement made with our neighbours to the south might be of some benefit to the country, because it seems evident that the government are determined by the force of its power over its supporters in the House to force this matter through parliament against the will of what I believe to be the majority of the people of Canada. I have been disappointed in that hope; I have heard no argument advanced by any minister or any hon. member on the government side which would satisfy me that there was any reason for making this agreement, let alone any argument to show that it would result in any benefit to Canada.

One or two very grave objections may be made to the agreement irrespective of what may be called the merits or demerits of the proposals. The first objectionable feature is the manner in which this arrangement was made. How was it made? Why was it made? What actuated the two hon. members of the cabinet in going to Washington at the time they did and attempting to make some arrangement with the United States looking towards reciprocity between the two countries? We have to imagine that there was some ulterior reason. Suggestions are made which cannot of course be proved; nevertheless we must draw inferences as best we can as the actual object is not known to us. We do know, for instance, that having tried to ride two horses in regard to the naval policy the government was in trouble in the province of Quebec; it is suggested that they wanted to draw a herring across their trail to distract the attention particularly of the elementary farmers of the province of Quebec, those to whom they appealed to grow nothing but hay and potatoes and not to manufacture their hay into animals or to progress as all farmers in Canada ought to. They had no mandate from the people to introduce that naval policy. Fresh from the people without any mandate on the subject, they undertook to create a navy, not an imperial navy, because on the very threshold of its construction it is enacted in the most emphatic way that it is not to be under the control of the King of Great Britain as the British North America Act enacts Canadian forces should be, but is to be an independent navy for Canada, a navy that would be of very little use to us in any event. I shall not discuss the navy further than to point out that this government introduced that naval policy without any mandate from the country. They have taken the position that they have a general mandate because they are returned to power, that that mere fact warrants them in initiating any policy and carrying it to any length. Such a theory is absolutely unconstitutional absolutely against the principles of constitutional government and of representation of a people in a parliament. If ever there was an agreement between a people and a government there was an agreement and has been since 1897 between this government and the people of Canada that the policy of reasonable protection and of a stable tariff, would be carried out in this country by this government. That agreement was as binding as any agreement which was not absolutely reduced to writing and signed and sealed could be. If two individuals or two corporations had been in the same relation to one another as the government and the people of Canada have been in this matter, the implied agreement between them would be held by any court of justice to be binding. There has been since 1897 an agreement that the fiscal policy of this government would be a stable tariff affording reasonable protection to all classes in this country.

The country has prospered under that policy, and at every session of parliament and at every election since 1897 the government and the people have emphasized the prosperity of the country, but not the fact that the opposition were assisting in that prosperity; yet the fact remains that the question of protection and free trade has not been in politics since 1897, for the simple reason that the Conservative party, having taught hon. gentlemen opposite the benefits of protection and of a stable tariff have ever since, as consistent people, backed them up; and therein lies the main reason for the prosperity of this country since 1897, and the people of this country will realize that fact as soon as it is stated. No other part of the world that I know of has been in the same position since 1897. A slight majority of the people of this country, although in opposition, undertook in 1878 to create a protective policy to build up Canada. From 1878 till 1896 they were fought in every possible way on that question. The people were told that it was robbery, that it was improvident, that it was no good; but in spite of that opposition, the government maintaining that policy was returned to power every time it appealed to the country upon it, and when that government went down in 1896, it went down without that policy being in question at all, and without any one suggesting that the policy of protection or of a stable tariff should be changed. Then this government came into power, and what happened? It was lucky for them that they were opposed by an opposition who were consistent, and who, from that time on, instead of hampering and attacking them as they had hampered and attacked the Conservative government, loyally assisted them in that respect; and we have never had the question of protection raised since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. It is no wonder that the country has prospered since 1897 with the whole country united on this policy. That is the cause of the prosperity of the country. Now, does that teach us nothing? Does it teach us that we should lightly change or interfere with that policy? It has been shown overwhelmingly in this debate that this country has been more prosperous since 1897 than any other country of equal population in the civilized world. Are we not to draw inferences from this fact? Are we not to infer that the cause of that has been not only the reasonable protection and the stability of tariff that have existed for all classes, but the fact that all public men, Reform, Conservative, and Independent, have united in upholding that policy, and pointing to the benefits that could be obtained in Canada by investing capital therein. That seems to me to be an overwhelming obstacle in the way of the proposition that this government had any authorité for going to Washington to negotiate this reciprocity agreement. As showing that they did an imprudent and unwise thing in discussing the matter at all with the president of the United States, I ask, why could they not wait and see how far the Democratic Party, which has been crying out for free trade and for a revision of their own tariff, would go in revising their tariff without Canada being called upon to do anything in return? Nearly every hon. gentleman who has spoken on the other side of this question has sneered at any one who fears that this reciprocity arrangement might lead to annexation. Well, one might better fear that than not care a rap whether it did or not. I am not an alarmist in that regard more than anybody else; but I do not want my children and my grandchildren, if I have any, to have their pocket interest pointing in one direction and their loyalty in another. I do not want any policy in this country which is going to get a financial benefit for a man at the cost of his loyalty to Great Britain, I think the Finance Minister ought to have considered the rights of the people of Canada in that regard. He ought to have realized that it is a dangerous thing, when we are doing well, to make an arrangement with any other country for the sake of obtaining entrance to a third market, which would induce the trade of the Canadian people to go to that country, and create a pocket interest in that trade at the cost of their loyalty to the British Crown, and cause them to be commercially annexed and after that politically annexed. When hon. gentlemen opposite sneer at any one for being alarmed with regard to that prospect, they forget that leaders of their own party have been equally alarmed and that some of them still dread that result. They forget that the hon. Mr. Blake, one of their most eminent leaders, left their party on this account. They should remember that Mr. Blake refused to lead them any longer or take any part in this policy of commercial union because he was satisfied it would lead to political annexation. We can therefore point them to very eminent authorities in their own ranks for the alarm we feel on this point. But suppose this thing should not lead to annexation, why should it be done at all? Why should we take any chance? The boys at school to-day will be the public men of this country 25 years hence. The little girls now following their classes will be the mothers of families 25 years from now. They do not understand what we are doing to-day or why we are doing it, and consequently the next generation will be apt to think that their fathers did not see very much harm in this scheme. They possibly will know very little about the forces and the sentiments which brought about confederation and will be apt to judge, from the very fact that we entered so lightly into this pact, that a closer union with the United States would not be so objectionable or at any rate that their fathers did not view it in that light.

We are told by the advocates of this arrangement that British connection must be very weak indeed if it is going to suffer by anything of the kind. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McLean) sneered at any such notion. My hon. friend is of Scotch descent and it is not gratifying to those who have faith in the old Scottish rugged independence and loyalty to find a man of that descent under the power of the government to such an extent that he will sneer at people who wish to preserve at all costs the tie that now exists between Great Britain and Canada. The fear of annexation to the United States was so distant, he said, that people would stand pecuniary loss, if necessary, under this proposed agreement, and still remain loyal.

Mr. PORTER. He said that we owe Great Britain nothing.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, he said that on the naval question, and on that question he is in a minority just as the government is on this, as they would find out if they would give the people an opportunity of expressing their opinion at the polls.

The hon. the Finance Minister talked a good deal about loyalty, but the loyalty he talked about was loyalty to President Taft, to whom he said this country was bound to carry out the proposed agreement. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition on March 8, last, moved a resolution asking that the people should be consulted on this question before anything further was done with it. The motion of my hon. friend was:

That in the opinion of the House the said resolutions should not be proceeded with until the electors should have an opportunity of pronouncing upon their merits.

The Finance Minister undertook to give reasons why his political supporters should vote that motion down. For my part I am convinced that there was not really a baker's dozen of them who thought the motion was wrong, but they did not believe that if it should carry they would ever come back here. In their hearts they thought the motion was a proper one, but of course they had to follow the lead set them. What argument did the Finance Minister use? It will be found on page 4943 of unrevised 'Hansard.' He said:

The President of the United States has loyally lived up to that agreement. If the government of Canada, or the parliament of Canada which supports this government, should deviate one step from this arrangement it would be a breach of faith which would dishonour the government of Canada——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING. A breach of faith which would dishonour the government of Canada and through the government, the parliament and people of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Further on at page 4947 he said:

A duty we believe rests on the parliament of Canada, so far as it is willing to give us its support; whether the members agree with this agreement or arrangement or not——

What does he propose?

—whether the members agree with this agreement or not, there should be no division of opinion as to the obligations which we, as a young nation, have entered into with a great nation besides us. The President of the United States is loyally doing his part, it remains with us to loyally do ours.

Then at the bottom of the page he said:

We say, let us put this measure on our statute-book, and then, if within a reasonable time the United States Congress fail to do their part, we shall be free to consider what next. In the meantime, I say that the honour of the Dominion government, and through the Dominion government, the honour of the country is pledged to this arrangement with the United States. While I quarrel with no man for differing from us on the merits of the agreement, I say there is no room for difference as to our condemnation of the motion which the hon. leader of the opposition has placed in your hands.

Just think of the doctrine expounded by the Finance Minister. He and his colleague the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) negotiated this agreement without any mandate from the people. They entered into it in defiance of the understanding of the Canadian people since 1897 that nothing of the kind was to be done in the future. Without any caucus, without any consultation with the members of their own party—as has been said by prominent members of that party who left it on this question—they went to Washington and entered into this pact, and then come back and sneer at the loyalty of Canadians who are afraid of annexation. But has not such fear a good basis? Instead of talking about loyalty to the President of the United States the Finance Minister would do better to let the Canadian people have a chance to give their verdict on this agreement and turn it down, as no doubt they would. Does the hon. minister know the meaning of the word 'loyalty'? Loyalty implies duty to somebody. Now to whom does the Finance Minister owe his first duty? Is it to President Taft or to the Canadian people? Who is it put him in office? If he is Finance Minister to-day, he owes that position to the taxpayers of this Dominion who returned his leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to power. And if the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs went to Washington, they did so by virtue of the offices vested in them by our people.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs go to Washington, but they have no authority to undertake such a mission even from their own side in parliament, for hon. members opposite have stated that this reciprocity agreement was unexpected—that it was a bolt from the blue. Much less had they any authority from the people of Canada, for not only were the people not consulted, but there was the implied agreement since 1897 that nothing of the kind would be done. And yet we are told that the honour of the government, the honour of parliament, the honour of the people of Canada will be impugned if this pact is not rushed through. Why, if a man should go to Washington without any authority from me to give away half my property in St. Catharines, would he be listened to if he said that the honour of my family was injured because I turned him down and refused to carry out the bargain? His vanity might be injured; he might not be able to pose as a Solomon, but that would be all. For the Finance Minister to say that the honour of the people is involved because we suggest that the people should have the right to vote on this matter seems to me a most ridiculous argument—speaking as politely as I can. We are actually told that the loyalty to President Taft of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs requires that parliament should pass this measure and that the people should be bound by it. In my humble opinion, there was no excuse for the Minister of Finance asking the members on this side to support this measure on the ground that he did, and I think that the people, when they get a chance—let it be within a few months or within two or three years—will speak with no uncertain sound their condemnation of it. The ordinary citizen, farmer, workingman, professional man, or whatever he may be, knows better than to be affected by the argument of the Finance Minister that he is bound in honour to President Taft to accept a fiscal deal made contrary to the arrangement of fourteen years ago, and without consulting the taxpayers, who are most deeply concerned.

Why should anyone go to Washington, anyway, to fix our customs tariff? Why should they go to St. Petersburg, or Berlin, or Paris, to fix our tariff? I suppose the Minister of Finance would say that we could stand that much taxation without representation. I do not think that we can; and I object seriously to the constitution being invaded all the time to suit the political exigencies of this government. If you are going to consult other countries as to what our tariff is to be, you are, logically speaking, taking quite a step in the direction of taxation without representation. Carry it out to its logical conclusion, and you place the Canadian taxpayer in such a position that the only way he can avoid taxation without representation is by annexation to the United States, so that he may, by taking his part in the election of Senator or Congressman at Washington have something to say about the matter that is dealt with. Being committed to so much by this agreement, if another proposition is made, desiring not to lose what you have done, you will go a step further, and so on. And the boy at school who grows up under the sentiments and ideas growing out of these arrangements, will say, when he is twenty-five, that it is simply a question of his pocket as against his loyalty to the British Crown. And this is the course by which the evil to which I have referred to in my previous remarks will culminate.

We are able to make our own tariffs here; we are able to do here at Ottawa everything that need be done, and as it has always been done. But this measure that is before us involves about two hundred and fifty items, and not one of them is to be changed. So, this discussion, in one way of looking at it, is a farce. If the government has undertaken its best efforts to get parliament to pass it, parliament must pass it as it is or this government must go out of power. We cannot say, for instance, that the duty on peaches should be restored, although the abolition of that duty is an outrageous attack upon the industry of an intelligent and patriotic class of citizens. We cannot say, as my hon. friend from Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt) would like us to say, that the 15 per cent on agricultural implements should be reduced, any more than we can say that it should be increased; we must take the whole thing as it is or throw it out. Even where it is inconsistent, even where it is based on misconception, even where it involves injury to Canada, it cannot be changed. I say, and I say advisedly, that I do not believe there are three men on the government side of the House who believe in their heart of hearts that every item in this arrangement is good for Canada. And yet they must accept every one or oppose the whole measure.

Now in what way does Mr. Taft look at this matter? What reasons does he give in his message to Congress for wanting this agreement to go through? Let me quote a few words from his message to Congress in which he reported what he had been able to do with these two Canadian gentlemen who went down to Washington to negotiate this agreement. On page 5 he says:

We have reached a stage in our own development that calls for a statesmanlike and broad view of our future economic status and its requirements.

It is a pity that our government did not have that idea in their minds when they sent these two gentlemen from Canada.

We have drawn upon our natural resources in such a way as to invite attention to their necessary limit.

This is President Taft's language in his own country to his own people, urging them to make this pact:

This has properly aroused effort to conserve them, to avoid their waste, and to restrict their use to our necessities. We have so increased in population and in our consumption of food products and the other necessities of life, hitherto supplied largely from our own country, that unless we materially increase our production we can see before us a change in our economic position, from that of a country selling to the world food and natural products of the farm and forests, to one consuming and importing them. . . A far-sighted policy requires that if we can enlarge our supply of natural resources, and especially of food products and the necessities of life, without substantial injury to any of our producing and manufacturing classes, we should take steps to do so now.

He had in his mind what our representatives apparently forgot. Then on page 6:

The Dominion has greatly prospered. It has an active, aggressive, and intelligent people.

I am sure that all that is justified regarding Canadians as a whole, but I do not think that President Taft would apply that language to our ambassadors, in view of the easy way he was able to deal with them.

They are coming to the parting of the ways. They must soon decide whether they are to regard themselves as isolated permanently from our markets by a perpetual wall or whether we are to be commercial friends. If we give them reason to take the former view, can we complain if they adopt methods denying access to certain of their natural resources except upon conditions quite unfavourable to us. . . Should we not now, therefore, before their policy has become too crystallized and fixed for change, meet them in a spirit of real concession, facilitate commerce between the two countries, and thus greatly increase the natural resources available to our people.

President Taft means that we have been building up trade east and west, building up our trade with the mother country, and with the other colonies, that we have created a great home market, and unless something is done right away, unless some change is made, Canada will go on and become so great and so prosperous that it will be too late for the United States to get hold of our market at all, and, therefore, he urges Congress to hurry up and make this bargain with Canada, because if she does not make it very soon, it will be too late. He has got a letter signed by the two representatives of Canada, and he says: For Heaven's sake do this now before the people of Canada find out what a foolish bargain their representatives are making.' 'Canada has come to the parting of the ways,' you must hurry up and get this matter settled quickly, and if you do not, the time will have passed for ever, because Canada will become a great nation, and as part of the British Empire, there will no longer be any chance of our annexing her. That is evidently the idea that was running in President Taft's mind.

Free lumber we ought to have. By giving our people access to Canadian forests we shall reduce the consumption of our own, which, in the hands of a comparatively few owners, now have a value that requires the enlargement of our available timber resources.

On page 8:

The benefit to our widespread agricultural implement industry from the reduction of Canadian duties in the agreement is clear. Similarly the new, widely distributed and expanding motor vehicle industry of the United States is given access to the Dominion market on advantageous terms. . . That the broadening of the sources of food supplies, that the opening of the timber resources of the Dominion to our needs, that the addition to the supply of raw materials, will be limited to no particular section does not require demonstration. The same observation applies to the markets which the Dominion offers us in exchange. As an illustration, it has been found possible to obtain free entry into Canada for fresh fruits and vegetables—a matter of special value to the south and to the Pacific coast in disposing of their products in their season. . . The entire foreign trade of Canada in the last fiscal year, 1910, was $655,000,000. The imports were $376,000,000, and of this amount the United States contributed more than $223,000,000. The reduction in the duties imposed by Canada will largely increase this amount and give us even a larger share of her market than we now enjoy, great as that is.

The data accompanying the text of the trade agreement, exhibit in detail the facts which are here set forth briefly and in outline only. They furnish full information on which the legislation recommended may be based. Action on the agreement submitted will not interfere with such revision of our own tariff on imports from all countries as Congress may decide to adopt.

President Taft had not forgotten about these twelve favoured nations that Canada was tying herself up to. I cannot say that the hon. gentlemen who went to Washington forgot about them, but one would be justified in supposing so, from the hesitating way in which the Finance Minister spoke of them. Instead of his saying yes or no, the leader of the opposition was obliged to put him a distinct question in regard to each one of them, he had to cross-examine him about all of them, and one would suppose that the Finance Minister was not very sure whether they were affected or not. President Taft had no doubt about it, and took care to point out to Congress in his first message that while this agreement was binding as between the United States and Canada, it left the United States open to the whole world to make any arrangement they chose with any other country. There again was a most improvident step on the part of our representatives, in not only tying Canada up to the United States, but in tying her up to twelve other foreign countries, because of the favoured nation clause, and at the same time to Australia and New Zealand, who are our competitors. But the Finance Minister and the Minister of Customs, by tying Canada's hands, left us nothing with which we could barter with any one of these foreign countries. Now entanglements and misunderstandings of all sorts must arise, differences will occur, chaos to a certain extent must be created, people who are now carrying on one sort of business, after our trade relations are changed, must hesitate to carry it on in the same way, or to change their investments into other lines of commerce and industry. There was no reason that I can understand for making any deal with the United States. As I have said, if our tariff needed to be changed, it could be changed in Ottawa, as it has always been changed before. If this government thought that the duty on agricultural implements should be lowered from 17½ per cent to 15 per cent, there was nothing to prevent the Finance Minister from bringing in the Bill to amend the Customs Act in that regard, and there was no need of asking the leave of the President of the United States, or any other country, to do so.

The government claim—and here is, it seems to me, the only argument that one can dignify by the name that has been used in support of his agreement by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House—that there will be a third market created and that for the most elementary kind of farmers only, not for all the farmers, or for any one else in the country. They have been driven by the discussion at last to say: Well, the wheat growers and the potato growers are going to get more for their stuff than they now receive—the most elementary kind of farmers, not the factory farmers, not progressive farmers, not farmers who want to develop and to display enterprise, energy and intelligence in building up the country, but farmers who simply want to sell the most elementary kind of raw material, with a minimum of labour and a minimum of money circulated in Canada, at the biggest price that they can get no matter where it goes in order that it may be manufactured with a maximum of labour in another country and that the prosperity derived therefrom may inure to the benefit of the people in the country that it is manufactured in. From the third market then what will be obtained? Either they forget, or they do not mention, that the third market is not an additional market. It is not a total gain by any means because you are opening your own market to the people that you now say are giving you another market. If your own market being open to these people is going to take away from you what is all your market then you are gaining nothing and there is the great danger of this pact. Has it been demonstrated with regard to any one of the 250 articles dealt with in this agreement that the new market—not the Newmarket canal—but the new market in the United States is going to be of more use to us than our own market, or any more use than the Newmarket canal will be? It is about the same sort of thing. Think of the wanton expenditure to get the stuff there, just as wanton an expenditure as trying to make water run up hill where the Newmarket canal is to be constructed, the wanton expenditure represented by transportation charges and the middlemen's profits before you get into that market in a foreign country, a market that is now controlled by 80,000,000 of people to which you want to make 8,000,000 contribute and place them in a position of partnership.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to be pernickety, but I notice that when a Liberal is addressing the House the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and other hon. gentlemen on the other side are very patient listeners, but the condition is very different when an hon. gentleman on this side of the House is engaged in the discussion of any question. This is not the first time that this has occurred. I notice that it has occurred this afternoon. I do not object to the Minister of Finance talking but I take exception to the loud tone in which his conversation is carried on.

Mr. FIELDING. I must take exception to the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes). I have listened with close attention to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), but, ministers have their work to do and if members come down and ask questions they cannot be rudely refused an answer. Up to a moment ago I had listened with the closest attention to what the hon. member for Lincoln had to say.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister was talking to the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Low), in loud tones. I do not object to these hon. gentlemen talking, but it is the tone of voice in which they carry on their conversation that I do object to. I would ask the minister to lower his tone. He gets excited; I know this is a very hot subject, but if he would lower his tone so as not to interrupt hon. gentlemen who are addressing the House it would be very much better.

Mr. FIELDING. If there is any hon. member of the House who is noted for obstructing and interrupting the proceedings while other hon. gentlemen are speaking it is the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am afraid I cannot allow a discussion. The hon. member (Mr. Hughes), has raised a point of order. On that point of order I can only say that interruptions of any speaker who has the floor are not in order. Conversation is evidently considered by the House permissible if carried on in such a tone as not to interrupt the speaker, who has the floor or to prevent other members from hearing him. I cannot decide that the rule of the House is so explicit that one member cannot speak with another in his seat, but I do feel that I should take this opportunity to state that there is a growing habit throughout the House generally of members gathering in little groups and speaking in a tone of voice rather too loud while some other member has the floor. I do not localize it to any particular point, but I hope that members generally will refrain from conversation carried on in too loud a tone.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of privilege. With regard to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Finance, I shall not say that they are impertinent——

Mr. FIELDING. You only suggest it.

Mr. HUGHES—but I think that it is quite improper for the Minister of Finance to interrupt the proceedings of the House. The whole country knows that the hon. gentleman is in such a condition of mind —I do not know what the cause is—that he is not responsible half of the time for the words that he utters.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that is not a correct statement to make.

Mr. HUGHES. Then I will bow to your ruling.

Mr. FIELDING. I should think the hon. member should be allowed to stand by it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Now, I have had a little breathing spell I can get back to the question. I am much obliged to my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes), for giving me this chance to get a little breath. Before six o'clock I have just about time to put upon 'Hansard' the opinion of the Minneapolis 'Journal' and I do this for the consideration of those hon. gentlemen who have sneered at us with regard to being afraid that this was going to lead to commercial union. No sooner was this pact announced than, on January 30, the Minneapolis 'Journal.' a newspaper published in Minneapolis, said this in its editorial column:

Not since the Civil War has a question of more tremendous import presented itself to the American people for settlement than is now presented by the proposed reciprocity agreement with Canada.

I would interject there that just as they speak about the civil war we speak about confederation. Since confederation this is the most important matter that we have dealt with. They say that since the civil war it is the most important matter that they have dealt with.

In its largest and simplest aspect, the question simply is, shall we have free trade with Canada? The agreement negotiated by Secretary Knox and Minister Fielding.

It is too bad that they left out the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). He did not speak loudly enough for them and therefore they forgot that he was there.

Will, if ratified, be the first great step toward absolute freedom of trade between these two countries.

That is the way they look at it.

Whose borders march together for three thousand miles, whose two peoples are one in blood, in institutions, in aspirations, in everything but the accident of political boundaries.

I do not agree with that. I do not think that we are of the same blood or that we have the same aspirations and the same conditions as those people. They choose to say so and they would like to get into good company by saying so, but I do not agree with them.

Evidently, then, Canadian reciprocity is a large question, one requiring to be treated with a large view, with careful consideration and in the most statesmanlike manner. It is not a question to be decided by the petty interests of the individual, or even the considerable interests of a section. The prosperity of the Republic, its whole future for years to come, is bound up in the decision.

We stand at the parting of the ways.

That is what Mr. Taft says.

One path leads to practical if not political union with Canada, and the development of the entire North American continent as the heritage and the possession of a great and free people. The other path leads to the hardening into two distinct political entities, two hostile or at least unsympathetic peoples on this continent. It leads to a closer relation between Canada and Great Britain. It means the carrying out of Joseph Chamberlain's great dream of a British imperial federation, bound together no less by trade than by sentiment, with preferential tariffs on either side, with Canada taking the place of the United States as chief purveyor of food products and manufactures to Great Britain.

To-day England is our best customer, and Canada is our third best customer. But our foreign trade wanes, and that of Canada grows. If we push Canada into England's arms, the trade arrangements between the two will tend more and more to shut us out.

How long will our trade with these two customers last, if reciprocity fails? Our Canadian must drop off, as the east and west channels of her commerce are scoured by use. And Canada will more and more supply English needs in our stead.

The Journal is aware that objection is made to reciprocity by those who fear they will suffer—by the farmers of the northwest, and of New England. It does not believe that they will suffer, but rather that in the general prosperity which will ensue they will emerge the gainers. These are questions to be taken up in due course. Just now what impresses the Journal is that a broad view, a patriotic view, a statesmanlike view is necessary.

I wish the Minister of Finance would consider the sentiments here set forth from our standpoint. The sentiments there expressed are good from an American standpoint, and if I were an American citizen I would cheer when that editorial was read and say that it was the proper spirit in which to enter into negotiations with another country, protect your own country and do not enter into unfavourable agreements just for the sake of saying you are friendly with another nation.

At six o'clock committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Chairman, when the House rose at six o'clock I was illustrating, by some quotations from authorities in the republic of the United States, the way in which those people viewed this pact or agreement; and in that connection I desire to add an extract from a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States government, addressed to the legislative committee of the National Grange of that country, wherein that gentleman points out to the farmers of the United States the advantages which he thinks this agreement will be to them, and the corresponding disadvantage, one must say, from the reading of this letter, that it will be to Canada. The document I am reading from is the official document sent to the 61st Congress, marked Senate Document No. 829, and headed: 'Letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to the Legislative Committee, National Grange, Concord, N.H., in reference to the proposed Canadian Reciprocity Treaty.' On page 2 of that document is the following:

This treaty is not one-sided, giving our markets for meats and grains to the Canadians with nothing in return. We get into the Canadian woods, 90,000,000 or more of us, for timber products, things very much needed, as our home supplies are so much reduced that prices have gone up markedly in the last few years, and our development in the future will draw heavily on what remains. Much building has halted on this account. The Southern States have a new market for their cottonseed oils, which will be valuable to them. Canada opens her doors to our fruits, which will give to our orchardists a growing market for their products. Fish comes into the United States free, which will mean quite as much to our people as the opening of our markets to Canadian poultry products. We are to have free trade in seeds, which is well, because many seeds are more valuable coming from northern latitudes. We do not grow enough of flax to make our oils and will derive benefit from the free introduction of flax seed. Free barbed fencing wire will be a boon to our farmers.

At page 3 of the same document, referring to the position Canada was in at confederation, he continues:

Since that time the Canadians have been rapidly building up their country along all lines. There is just as much opposition in localities there now to letting in American manufactured goods at lower rates as there is in localities on the American side to letting in Canadian farm products at lower rates or without duty. If this reciprocity treaty becomes the law of both countries, our relations with Canada will become more intimate and our trade with her will extend and increase. The trains that bring farm products to the United States will take farm, orchard and manufactured products back; we will become more and more one people, developing along similar lines and supplementing each other in many respects. The raw material that comes from the Canadian farm will be manufactured in the United States and what is not needed will be sent to foreign countries. If this is desirable on the part of Canada, it certainly should be desirable on the part of the people of the United States.

Just reflect, Mr. Chairman; he can hardly imagine that this is desirable to Canada, but he says if it is desirable on the part of the people of Canada, it should certainly be desirable on the part of the people of the United States. He goes on:

Distance from markets has much to do with the prices of grain.

Some of our farmers seem to think that so much a bushel for their wheat in Minneapolis is just as much as it is in Winnipeg. When they send it there, they will find that a great deal of the price will have to be taken off to cover the cost of transportation. The Secretary of Agriculture goes on:

Distance from markets has much to do with the prices of grain. So this proposition is modified by proximity to markets and cost of transportation. While Canada is exporting wheat or other grains and the United States is also exporting wheat there is no particular reason why Canadian wheat should come here, unless it be that a mixture of Canadian and American wheats may be desirable on the part of our milling exporters and our millers may find it profitable to handle the Canadian surplus; but the price to the Canadian for this surplus wheat will be substantially the same whether sold in Europe or the United States. However, if the handling of Canadian wheat by United States railroads, merchants, and mills has a tendency to reduce the price it will be reduced to Canadians; and if it should reduce the price of bread to the American consumer, wise statesmanship may find it necessary to do that to avoid greater evils.

Then on page 5 he says:

We can handle the Canadian export grain crop with facility. If it is brought inside our borders and milled, as it would be, our dairymen could use with great profit the by-products of the mills. This is the feature—bran and shorts—that makes dairy products and robs the soil. If we cannot increase our yield to meet the demands of increasing population, free wheat from the nearest fields would be desirable. The influences at work are enabling the American acre to yield more, but it is a question whether this increase will meet the requirements of our rapidly growing population. Wheat growing for sale from the farm, as the pioneer practises it, can only be temporary. The land refuses to yield profitable crops after a few years, when recuperative farming must be resorted to to build up the soil where the soil robber has reduced it by grain growing. This is the reason the older prairie states turn to grass, corn and domestic animals as soon as they can bring about the change.

The United States could, with great profit and benefit to the land, take all the grains Canada has to sell and devote its lands to less exhausting crops, as is evidenced by the older prairie states farmers, who grow no grain to sell, buy their flour, and thereby keep up the fertility of the soil. In the Western States, where the farmer has turned from grain raising for sale to the production of crops to be fed to domestic animals on the farm, the new departure has been so profitable that lands in those states have risen in value to $100 and $200 per acre and rents from $4 to $6 per acre.

From this we derive one lesson which it seems to me ought to have been learned by our representatives at Washington before they made this pact, that is, that it is not fair to the farmer nor the kind of education which ought to come from prominent men to those less blessed with education, as from a government to the elementary farmer, to argue that if he can get a little more temporarily for the grain he grows, he is as well off, instead of being much worse off, besides impoverishing the soil, as he would be if he manufactured his products into more profitable things, such as cattle, sheep, hogs, and the like, as is done by the progressive farmers in both the United States and Canada. We find that not only did the United States take note of all this, but the Tariff Commission of Great Britain has also noted it. I hold in my hand the report of that commission, dated March 6, 1911. It is sent with the compliments of the secretary, and I presume has gone to every member of the House. This whole document of some 38 pages is devoted to the discussion of this proposed reciprocal trade arrangement between Canada and the United States, and is divided into various sections, as follows: (a) character and origin of the arrangement; (b) analysis of the schedules; (c) effect of the arrangement upon British food supplies and British industry; (d) bearing of the arrangement upon the trade and policy of the British Empire; (e) statements by British authorities. Upon page 27 of this document we find this:

The agreement between Canada and the United States institutes an entirely new departure in the policy of the British Empire, inasmuch as one state of the empire now becomes party to an agreement under which it receives preferential treatment in a foreign country which is not to be shared by the United Kingdom and other parts of the British Empire.

In 1892 the United States government offered Canada an exclusive arrangement of this character, and it was refused by Canadian ministers on the ground that they could not be a party to an arrangement which differentiated against the mother country. In the arrangement now proposed the United States will be levying higher duties upon a number of British products than upon any corresponding Canadian products entering the United States, as for instance—cutlery, clocks, motor cars, plate glass, leather purses, &c., asbestos manufactures, crude feathers, pickles and confectionery.

This differential treatment in the United States market arises because of the special interpretation given by the United States to most-favoured-nation treatment. (See Tariff Commission MM. 43 on 'Most-Favoured-Nation Arrangements and British Trade.') The United States regard the concessions given to Canada as payment for equivalent concessions received from Canada, and it is the practice of the United States not to extend concessions granted in this manner to any other country unless a corresponding concession is received from that country. The United States may for example, extend these concessions to Germany or France or any other tariff country in return for what they may regard as equivalent concessions; but inasmuch as it is impossible for the United Kingdom (having no negotiating tariff) to grant such tariff concessions, the United Kingdom is permanently excluded from these benefits unless she is prepared to give other equivalents of value.

The trade of other parts of the British Empire outside the United Kingdom is also affected by the proposed arrangement. Thus the Royal Commission on the trade relations between Canada and the West Indies (of which Lord Balfour of Burleigh was chairman, and the Hon. W. S. Fielding and the Hon. W. Paterson the two Canadian negotiators of the Canadian-United States arrangement, were also members) has recommended the establishment of inter-preferential trade between Canada and the several parts of the West Indies. All the legislatures of the West Indies (except that of Jamaica) have since passed resolutions accepting the principale of mutual preference. The main products upon which Canada desires preference in the West India market are flour and fish, and the question now arises whether the diversion of Canadian supplies of these products to the United States market under this reciprocal arrangement would not deprive any reciprocity arrangement with the West Indies of any practical value to Canada. The Canadian exports of wheat flour and fish to the West Indies in 1909-10 were of the value of £241,000 and £294,000 respectively.

I am reading from the report of the Tariff Commisison of Great Britain sent to the government of Great Britain on March 6, 1911.

Mr. FIELDING. When my hon. friend says that this was sent to the government of Great Britain he is mistaken. It is not an official publication. I am not expressing any opinion about it, but I am merely pointing out that it is not official.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understood it was.

Mr. FIELDING. It was issued by the Tariff Reform League of England in support of their movement. My hon. friend will not object to that correction.

Mr. LANCASTER. If it be a correction; but with all due respect to the Finance Minister, he has made a great many mistakes in this matter, and I am not sure that I am prepared to accept his statement on this point.

Mr. FIELDING. The Tariff Commission is not an official body, but a political organization hostile to the present government. Whether this publication be right or wrong is not the question, but it is not official.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. FIELDING. No, it is not.

Mr. LANCASTER. With all deference to the hon. minister, I say it is. I do not accept his statement that the Tariff Commission of Great Britain is only a political organization. It is not in the sense my hon. friend wants to imply, if he means that it is a political party organization.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is a commission established for the purpose of making reports to the British public in the interests of trade, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say here that this is a political organization in the sense he implies. It is political only in the sense that anything done in the interests of trade is political.

Mr. FIELDING. It is a political organization supporting the views of one political party. Of course I am offering no opinion as to the merits of the organization or its report.

Mr. LANCASTER. That would bring us into a long discussion of the views of one political party. What political party was the hon. gentleman supporting in 1898 when he abandoned the policy of reciprocity?

Mr. FIELDING. What has that to do with it?

Mr. LANCASTER. Only to show the folly of my hon. friend's interruption. In 1898 he abandoned the policy of reciprocity for a policy of reasonable protection and stability of tariff. The views stated by this Tariff Commission in Great Britain would be accepted by anybody in that country though possibly not by those hon. gentlemen who went to Washington and there went it blind. The statements in this report are facts of history in Canada, and this commission, no matter of whom it may be composed, is composed of very respectable people, and what these people have printed is correct. This report shows that the Tariff Commission of England were more alive to the effect and the results of this proposed agreement than these two hon. gentlemen who went to Washington and who made this deal for the purpose of binding Canada. If the hon. Minister of Finance thinks that this Tariff Commission were not justified in printing what are the facts and in emphasizing them and showing their importance with regard to trade within the empire, he can settle that point with gentlemen on his own side of the House who do not agree with him and there are several.

I wish to draw attention again to what has been mentioned by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), because I think to a certain extent the opinion of Mr. Beveridge, an authority in the United States, has been overlooked. How did Mr. Beveridge view the fact?

There must be reciprocity with Canada. Our tariff with the rest of the world does not apply to our northern neighbour. That policy already has driven American manufacturers across the Canadian borders, built vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workmen to supply trade.

That capital should be kept at home to employ American workingmen to supply Canadian demand. We should admit Canadian wood pulp and Canadian paper free in return for Canada's admitting our agricultural implements, our engines, pumps and other machinery free. We should freely admit Canadian lumber to American planing mills in return for Canada freely admitting other American manufacturing products to Canadian markets.

The argument of Mr. Beveridge there was that the minimum amount of benefit is to be gained by Canada and the maximum by the United States. Canada's raw material is to be sent to the United States, there to be developed and manufactured and the workingmen of the United States are to get all the profit. That is the way in which Mr. Beveridge views that pact.

Before six o'clock I said that the so-called additional market which this pact is to give us is not really an additional market, but a substituted market. It is giving us a foreign market as a substitute for our home market, so that it is not an additional market for our farmers at all. It will give the 80,000,000 people of the United States every opportunity to come into Canada and take from our farmers nine-tenths of the benefit of their home market, which they have spent money to establish, which belongs to them and which they are not prepared to lose. I propose now to give a few details which our ministers apparently did not have when they went to Washington and made this agreement. As my hon. friend the leader of the opposition pointed out in the earlier part of this debate, we have paid dearly to establish this home market. The Dominion government paid to our railways in cash subsidies $437,000,000; the provincial governments paid them $36,000,000; and the municipalities $18,000,000, or a total amount of cash subsidies of nearly $500,000,000.

In addition, bonds guaranteed by the Dominion and provincial governments for construction, $127,000,000; lands to aid construction, 55,000,000 acres. Besides, the government is now committed to a further expenditure of $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 to complete the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. Then they propose to spend $30,000,000 more on the Hudson Bay railway, and $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 upon the enlargement of the Welland canal—if Canada is going to trade within her own borders and with the British dominions beyond the seas. But all this expenditure is not required if our trade is to go north and south, as this government now contemplate. Now for what purpose has all that been done? Let me quote the language of the Finance Minister in 1903. The quotation is a little lengthy, but it is necessary to read it in view of the contention they now make that it is a matter of no consequence whether our trade goes north or south or not. Let me show what the Finance Minister said when he was advocating the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific, on pages 8561 and 8562, vol. 4, 'Hansard' of 1903:

Though we may be independent in a limited degree of our American friends, I think we ought to make it plain to them that we are determined to be even more independent than we are . . . The best possible way to live on friendly terms with our brothers to the south of us is to have them understand that we are determined to be absolutely independent of them. It is true that in some respects we have been more independent of them as regards the bonding privilege than perhaps they were aware of. But we have been told that, because it is of advantage to American railways as well as to the railways of Canada, we need not be alarmed that any change will take place. . . If it suited the policy of our American friends to carry out the threats they have repeatedly made of the abolition of the bonding privilege, the fact that such action would be injurious to one particular set of men or to certain railway companies would not prevent them from carrying out that policy.

This is the language used in 1903 by one of the hon. gentlemen who went to Washington in January last. He goes on:

Therefore in the interest of Canada to-day, as well as in the future, it is well that we should let our friends across the border understand, that whatever measure of independence of them we have now we shall maintain, and that we shall increase that measure of independence by the line that we are now proposing, and should the neccessity arise, we shall not shrink from providing another.

Then he proceeds to read section 42 of the contract made with the Grand Trunk Pacific railway:

Section 42. It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railway, or its franchises, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada, be carried entirely on Canadian territory, or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

Then the hon. gentleman proceeds to say:

Here is an absolute undertaking on the part of this company that they will do everything that any reasonable man would ask in this connection. Ah, but we are told, they may dodge and evade this, you will allow them to ship traffic through American ports which is specifically routed; you do not prevent that . . . The suggestion is thrown out that this company will humbug us and deceive us, and will take care that the freight is specifically routed so that it will not come to Canadian ports. That is the suggestion which has been made by some honorable gentleman, but, what does section 43 say?

'The company further agrees that it shall not, in any matter within its power, directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall, in all respects' in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely—the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.'

There was the policy of one of the hon. gentlemen who went to Washington in January, and made a contract with President Taft which undoes entirely the whole scheme he was then building up, and for which he argued so logically in 1903. The hon. gentleman possibly in forgetting other things, forgot that. He may have forgotten his intention in 1903, as he seemed to have forgotten his policy since he came into office, the policy of protection to home industries. Now the Finance Minister discussed this question entirely on the basis of conditions being the same now as they were in 1866. I think on one occasion he did become a little more modern, and said that in 1879 Sir John A. Macdonald did the same as this government was doing now. But he based his main argument on the contention that in 1866 this country had reciprocity, and that they were doing no worse now than the government were doing then. Well, this government generally claims that this country has prospered during the last fourteen years, and we do not dispute it. Before six o'clock I gave what I thought was the main reason for that prosperity, namely, that both sides in this House had endeavoured to maintain the country's prosperity by a stable tariff and a reasonable measure of protection. But the hon. gentleman has spoken as if this was the same policy that was inaugurated in 1866, notwithstanding the changed conditions in this country that I have already mentioned.

Now, this pact, by taking in twelve foreign countries, besides Australia and New Zealand, amounts to this, that we have tied ourselves up, with the United States, to twelve foreign countries, and to all the British possessions, with every one of whom we are now to be prevented from negotiating. They not only have free access to our markets, but every one of them, except the United States, gives us nothing in return. They get our markets because the United States gets us, these countries get us because we become tied up. In that sense they come to us, and the United States gets us. Now let us reason this out as it affects all our farm products except wheat, potatoes or hay. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) can have his hay if he likes; he can tell the farmers of Quebec that $2 extra a ton for hay is a great boon to them. Let me tell him that any intelligent man from Ontario or the west can go down to Quebec, and in a week can convince those farmers that it would be far better for them to feed their hay themselves, to raise horses and cattle on their own farms, and thereby make four or five times as much as the $2 extra a ton on hay, and he would create a better class of Nationalists than some of those that we have heard of.

If the Minister of Agriculture would tell the people of his province that instead of selling their hay for $2 extra a ton, it would be far better for them to use it in raising calves to cattle, in raising lambs to sheep, and colts to horses, and selling them for good prices in Canada, he would be doing a better service to the people of his province than he is doing now. They need to be told that it would be far more profitable for them to use up their raw material in their own country than to send it to the United States. But in regard to all farm products except wheat, hay and potatoes, everything comes into Canada free. They come into our home market which we have built up with so much toil and expense, and we get nothing in return. The Prime Minister, I do not think, is yet able to make two people stand on the same spot at the same time, and if these people come in here, they take what belongs to us and give us nothing for it. When we have let all these other fourteen countries, with the United States, come in here and share our home market with us, we will have no place to go to trade except the United States. Now, I want to read for the benefit of the Finance Minister what the 'Canadian Century' says. I do not know whether he will say that this is a political organization. The 'Canadian Century' of February 25, of this year, says, under the heading 'There is no winter there':

In the severe Canadian sense there is no winter in Australia, New Zealand and the Argentine Republic. Cattle can live outdoors throughout the year, so the farmers of those countries do not have the expense of winter shelter and winter feeding. They are consequently able to produce butter, cheese, eggs and meats much more cheaply than Canadian farmers can. No part of New Zealand is far from the ocean, and, while Australia has a vast interior, the farms of Australia are all near the sea coast, so that the railway haul to ocean ports is not great. In spite of the fact that they are very much farther from the British market than Canada is, immense quantities of food from those countries are sold in the United Kingdom. Now the Canadian market is to be freely opened to them as the result of the reciprocity compact, and we getting nothing in return.

That is a Canadian authority that perhaps will not appeal to the Finance Minister as much as many of the Yankee authorities that he and his friends have been quoting. I do not know what sort of authority will appeal to him to induce him to change his mind on this matter. I spoke before six o'clock of the opinions of the Hon. Edward Blake. Let me mention another strong political friend of the Finance Minister and of this government, now occupying a seat in the Senate, the late Premier of Ontario, Sir Geo. W. Ross. A short time ago he issued a pamphlet upon this question. I suppose the Finance Minister will say—though it would not be respectful to Sir Geo. Ross to say it—that he used this language before he knew what his political friends were going to do in Washington. That would be true, because this pamphlet was issued in November, 1910, when no one expected that these two gentlemen were going to make such a deal as they did make. Sir George Ross possibly issued this pamphlet in hopes that it would deter them from doing this very thing. However, this is an independent statement, because it was made before the question became a political issue. I commend it to the House as the statement of a gentleman who has some knowledge of the subject, and who is a friend of this government. I will read from page 8 of his address on reciprocity, delivered to members of the Toronto Board of Trade at luncheon, November 3, 1910. He heads this section 'Alluring but unreal.':

> Canada is undoubtedly prosperous, but suppose the markets of the United States were thrown open to us, would that not greatly enhance our prosperity. The United States lie along our border for 4,000 miles, with a population of 90,000,000. If we have anything to sell, there is an unlimited market for us—why not let us enjoy it? This is a fascinating picture, but there is another side to it. The boundary is just as long for the Americans as for Canadians, and a reciprocity treaty that opened one side of the line would also open the other side. While our 7,000,000 were getting into the American markets with their merchandise, the American 90,000,000 would be getting into Canada, and the home market, always the best where not glutted with goods, would be rendered practically valueless. The fruit grower would find American fruit in the market before him, and everywhere so abundant that this trade would be ruined. The flour merchant, the seed merchant, the dealer in provisions, such as bacon, butter and cheese, would be similarly situated, and an occasional sale that he could make in the United States would be poor compensation for the losses incurred on account of the surfeit of the home market by American goods.

If the government want an authority to afford them an excuse for withdrawing this pact, I do not know what better authority they could find than this. Let them tell the government of the United States that after due consideration, and after submitting this pact to the House of Commons, they have found that the country does not want it. Now the member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) gave this House some figures which are worthy of serious attention. He pointed out how this trade with Canada had gone on, he pointed out the rising prices in the Canadian home market during the last decade. He pointed out that during the last decade grain and fodder had risen in value in Canada 49·9 per cent; that cattle and cattle products, hogs and their products, and sheep, had risen in value during the same period 46·6 per cent. That is the home market which both parties in Canada have joined to build up during the last forty years. Then the member for Brandon pointed out that total crude or elementary—he used the word 'crude,' but I would say 'elementary'—farm products, that is unmanufactured products, had increased in value 37·3 per cent, and manufactured farm products 34·1 per cent. So we find that during the last decade, during which time there was no controversy in this country about our fiscal policy, no question about the stability of our tariff, these farm products increased in value to the astonishing extent I have mentioned. Yet we find this government taking no notice of that, deliberately ignoring our home market, and letting in the United States and fourteen other countries to share it.

The government, with regard to this question, however, strangely, it seems to me, the other day voted down a proposition that we should get more information before we undertook to pledge the people to it. The Minister of Finance and I had a little bit of fun for a minute or two while it was going on. We often have a little bit of fun across the floor of the House and I think we both enjoy it; I know I do. The Minister of Finance stated that at the time Sir Charles Tupper, or Sir John Thompson —I do not know which he meant—went to Washington to see what deal Canada could make with the United States they had no more information than the present government have. I do not believe that Sir Charles Tupper or Sir John Thompson, if they could have made a deal, would have signed these papers and come back and intimated to us that the whole of the rest of the cabinet, the whole of the rest of their own party following in the House of Commons and the whole of the rest of the country should agree to it simply because they had signed it out of loyalty to them. But, the Minister of Finance said that they had not more information, that they did not know all these things when they made that deal, and I was obliged to tell him that I did not understand why they had not when I had, because, when these hon. gentlemen were talking unrestricted reciprocity before they came into power in 1891 and when I was upon the hustings arguing the same as I am arguing now, not contradicting myself as they have been contradicting themselves during the last 25 years, I had that information with regard to the cost of production of these various commodities which the Minister of Finance said we did not have and which we now require for the purpose of understanding this pact that this government have entered into. We get these things, and I am ashamed to say we have to get them now from Washington. If we have not any witnesses on our own side we might as well call the witnesses the other side produce and take the evidence from them in regard to these matters. We want the facts as to the cost of production and other things and we get these from a White-book issued at Washington from documents sent by different authorities in the United States to Congress for the purpose of informing Congress before they vote upon this matter at the very outset, and it is the very kind of information that we are refused by the government before we are asked to vote upon this question. The members of Congress seemed to think that they were entitled to information upon this matter, they got it and we are obliged to get it from that source. I have here a copy of 'Senate Document No. 849, issued by the United States Senate, published at the Washington government printing office, March 1, ordered to lie on the table and be printed with accompanying illustrations.' On the front page appears the following:

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting in response to Senate resolution of February 23, 1911, a report from the Tariff Board relative to various commodities named in the proposed Canadian reciprocity measure.

This is a document of 132 pages, condensed, closely printed and full of information, and I propose to point out to the House some things that I have learned from it. It shows the production in various countries. It is intended for the information of Congress when dealing with this matter and there, I see, they are treated in a different way from the way in which the government treat this parliament. If we do not get any corresponding blue-book we have to accept this as correct, as I believe it is, but we have no corresponding blue-book to show whether it is or not. If it is not correct it is the government's fault, at all events, because parliament has to get along, as far as this government is concerned, without information.

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL.

Office of the Tariff Board,
Treasury Building,
Washington, Feb. 23, 1911.

I do not know whether the Minister of Finance would say that this is not an official document—I care not, I am going to read the document. I believe it is official. It is published at the government printing office, it is issued by the tariff board and it is accompanied by a message from the President. It says:

The President,—Complying with your instructions, pursuant to the resolution of the Senate, dated February 23, 1911, calling for information secured and tables and statistics prepared relating to various articles and commodities named in the Canadian reciprocity measure, we beg to submit certain statistical material with accompanying comment, regarding pulp wood, pulp, and newsprint paper, farm products, including live stock, together with relative farm values and farm wages in Canada and the United States, and current relative prices in Canada and the United States of wheat, barley and food products of the farm, including meats, poultry and eggs, dairy products and vegetables.

The first thing I want to point out to this government and which apparently will be news to many hon. gentlemen on the other side who think that the grain growers are going to get so much benefit out of this agreement, is that I find, as they will find if they look at page 107 of this document, that in Canada there were shown to have been produced 323,500,000 bushels of oats in 1910, and in the United States 1,127,000,000, Canada producing a little over one quarter as much as the United States and having a yield of 1¾ bushels more per acre than the United States; that is 32·79 as against 31·09 in favour of Canada, per acre, and an average price for the year of a cent and a half per bushel more than the average price in the United States. Where is the benefit of the agreement to the oat grower in Canada?

I can see none. He is getting a better price and raising more grain to the acre, but he is only growing about a third as much as they are in the United States. He is asked to trade away his good price and to pool it with the United States. Where is the practical benefit to the oat grower? Did hon. gentlemen opposite ever take the trouble to find that out? The information is there and I am satisfied it is correct. I do not think the tariff board would dare print it for Congress if it were not absolutely correct. In the absence of any information and with the government refusing to give the people of Canada the facts, we must assume that this statement is correct. If that be so we must conclude, in so far as oats are concerned, that this agreement is no good to Canada but that it is a loss to us. We now get the best price and under this arrangement we will be forced to compete with them.

Now, take wheat. We hear a great deal about wheat. I wonder if the hon. member for Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt), looked into that book. If he looks at page 123 of that same United States official record he will see that they have tabulated for their information the figures to show them if the farmer got a better or less price in Canada than the United States or vice versa. And would you believe it, in view of the arguments which have been made by those representing purely wheat growing parts of Canada, they give 27 comparisons and in 13 out of those 27 the price of wheat was higher in Canada than in the United States. That is stated for the benefit of Congress in dealing with this matter. So, you see there is no benefit to this country even if you do not consider the cost of transportation and the middleman's profit in sending the wheat over to Minneapolis to be ground into flour instead of grinding it in Canadian mills, affording employment to Canadian labour and giving young men in Canada that instruction in the milling industry which they will otherwise have to go to a foreign country to acquire. Agricultural products are also compared there. The prices of them are given in different places in the very same section of the document that I have just quoted from. Let me give some examples. The prices last year in Buffalo and Toronto of apples and potatoes were:

	Toronto price.	Buffalo price.
Apples	$5.30 per brl.	$4.30 per brl.
Potatoes	46 per bush.	47 per bush.

To hear hon. gentlemen talk of potatoes you would think they were worth two or three times as much in the United States as they are in Canada, when as a matter of fact the prices are practically the same, the difference of one cent being inconsiderable. They give another comparison of potatoes, as follows:

	Prescott.	Ogdensburg.
Potatoes.... ..	$1.20 per brl.	$1.10 per brl

Thus, the average price of potatoes for the year was 10 cents a barrel lower in Ogdensburg, on the American side of the St. Lawrence, than in Prescott, on the Canadian side, and in Buffalo they were only one cent a bushel more than in Toronto, yet they talk of this being a great boon to the potato-grower.

The comparison in regard to hothouse tomatoes is even more striking. Hothouse tomatoes are of course the product of the man who is energetic, who invests money in hothouses, giving employment to glaziers, plumbers, steamfitters, builders, and the men employed in managing the hothouses. The prices of hothouse tomatoes in Toronto and Buffalo were as follows:

	Toronto.	Buffalo.
Hothouse tomatoes.. ..	60c. a lb.	45c. a lb.

Why do we want to interfere with that? Why should not the rich man in Toronto who is able to pay this price, pay it to the Toronto grower? Do we want him to go to Buffalo for his hothouse tomatoes? He can get them from Buffalo by express in an hour and a half or two hours. Do we want him to do that or to have the energetic raiser of tomatoes at Toronto secure the advantage of this trade, with the indirect benefit to those employed in erecting and maintaining his hothouses?

In onions, eggs and milk the prices were as follows:

	Toronto.	Buffalo.
Onions..	67c. a bush.	55c. a bush.
	Prescott.	Ogdensburg.
Onions..	84c. a bush.	80c. a bush.
	Toronto.	Buffalo.
Eggs..	36 c. a doz.	33c. a doz.
Milk..	16½c. a gal.	15⅗oc. a gal.

Potatoes are compared in seven different ways, and in six of these comparisons the Canadian prices were equal to or higher than the United States prices, and yet we hear of this being such a great boon to the Canadian potato-grower.

Mr. TALBOT. Are these comparisons of prices at the same period of the year?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, the information is compiled in that way. These statistics are apparently prepared so as to be of the greatest possible benefit to the people to whom they are submitted.

At page 129, eight comparisons of the prices of eggs are given. In all the eight the Canadian price was equal to or higher than the United States. In milk, eight comparisons are given, and in seven of the eight the Canadian price was equal to or higher than the United States.

The same book gives information as to live stock. Of horses, it says there were in Canada last year 2,000,000 horses, and in the United States 21,000,000 horses; that is to say, the United States has ten times as many horses as Canada. Of dairy cows, Canada had 2 8-10 millions and the United States 21 8-10 millions, eight times as many as Canada. Of other cattle than dairy cows Canada had 4½ millions and the United States 47½ millions, eleven times as many as Canada. Of sheep, Canada had 2¾ millions, and the United States 57¼ millions, 21 times as many. Of swine, Canada had three millions and the United States 47¾ millions, 16 times as many.

What was the average price per head of Canadian horses? It was $133, and the United States price $108. The highest prices in Canada were in the province of Saskatchewan. Hon. gentlemen from the west have repeatedly murmured, I think not very patriotically, at the prices the people of the west pay for horses. If they are good farmers they can easily raise their own horses, they can put their farms in good shape, as the farmers in Ontario and other places do, and grow a series of crops instead of raising wheat all the time and so impoverishing the soil. But they have not the grievance they think they have, and they would not think they had it if we had the same information that the United States Congress have, without which, in fact, President Taft would not dare to ask them to pass this agreement. They will not go it blind there.

The average prices of horses in the different provinces of Canada were:

All Canada	$133
Prince Edward Island	107
Nova Scotia	113
Manitoba	107
Saskatchewan	156
Alberta	126
New Brunswick	131
Quebec	$139
Ontario	133

Thus the farmer in Alberta, for whom some gentlemen are so anxious to get cheaper horses, last year was paying less than his fellow-Canadian in Ontario, Quebec or New Brunswick. What right has he to object to the price of horses when he is making so much money out of his wheat fields, paid for by Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick without a murmur as Canadians, in order to build up the country as their sons and grandsons and greatgrandsons will strive to do? They have no grievance in Alberta in regard to horses. The Ontario farmer, if he was small enough to grumble, could say to the Alberta farmer: Do as I do, raise your own horses or pay some one else to raise them while I raise sheep or swine or something else that will pay me better, but let us both do what we can to benefit and build up Canada and do not let us build up the United States at the expense of any of the provinces of confederation.

Then, let us see what the average prices of cattle were:

	Canada.	United States.
Dairy cows	$43.00	$35.75
Other cattle	31.00	19.50
Sheep	6.00	4.00
Swine	11.00	9.00

And this is the system of farming that President Taft or the United States government want to break up in Canada for the benefit of the United States. They want us to stop raising the profitable things, such as horses, cattle, sheep and swine, and send the raw stuff to the United States; and the reason they want us to do that is the very reason why it is against the interests of our farmers to do it. I will give some further information taken from this same book, at page 130. It gives the comparative producers' prices of some of these manufactured products in January, 1911, at certain points in the two countries, as follows:

Now, the Chicago 'Tribune' had something to say about this, and here is a good place to quote it. This is from an editorial of April 9, 1911, which is pretty well up to date. It is headed 'A help to the farmer' and says:

Every American farmer will admit that there are provisions in the Canadian reciprocity agreement which are likely to benefit him. There is, for instance, the greatly reduced duty on lumber. But when it comes to the lowering or entire removal of the duties on numerous articles which are the product of the farmer many farmers imagine that they would be harmed thereby. The assurance of their old and tried friend, Secretary Wilson, to the contrary do not satisfy them. But he is right and they, are wrong. Reciprocity in farm products, far from injuring, will benefit them.

There are a few important facts which they fail to take into consideration. One is that of the foodstuffs which can be grown in both the United States and Canada. This country, thanks to its greater area of cultivable land and its much larger number of farmers—12 to 1—is much the larger producer. Owing to its more extensive range of climate it raises many things which cannot be grown in Canada. If it were a question of the farmers of one country capturing the markets and driving out of business the farmers of the other, those of Canada would be routed in the unequal contest.

And so say I, and the government ought to have seen it, and the gentlemen who went to Washington as our representatives ought to have seen it. The article goes on:

The Canadian farmers are not more industrious and intelligent than those of the United States; but they are quite as determined as their American brethren to get all they can for their products and will not cut prices. Ask the thousands of American farmers who have emigrated to Canada what is the difference in cost of production of farm products between the two countries and they will answer that it is nominal. Since it costs no more to grow a cabbage on the right than it does on the left bank of the St. Lawrence river, why should the farmer on the one dread the competition of the farmer on the other?

The American farmers who distrust reciprocity should bear in mind that protective duties are a game two can play at. They are protected against the Canadian farmer, but he is protected against them and the great surpluses with which they might in theory flood Canadian markets. The American farmer does not realize the extent to which those duties have closed the Canadian markets against him. As it is he sells some of his potatoes, onions, hay, &c., to the Canadians. They are, indeed, off and on more liberal purchasers of American farm products that we are of theirs. With the duties removed they would buy more.

That is, they would buy more from the American farmer and less from the Canadian farmer.

Consider the farmer as a fruit grower.

I wish the premier had considered the farmer as a fruit grower before that big delegation of people from the Niagara peninsula had to come down here to interview him.

The reciprocity agreement sweeps away the Canadian duties on the apples of New York, the peaches of Delaware, the apricots of California, and melons of Georgia, and the strawberries of Louisiana and Illinois. The market gardeners of this country from Florida to Vermont would be gainers by reciprocity.

Of course, the Canadian fruit grower and market gardener is the loser.

There are surplus products of the American farmer which he has to find a market for in Europe or South America. He could find one in Canada were it not for the Canadian duties.

That is, he could dump his stuff on the Canadian market if both parties in this country had not been united in upholding a stable tariff for the protection of the Canadian farmer.

The nearer home his market is the better it is for him as well as the consumer.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs did not seem to consider that from the Canadian standpoint when they went to Washington.

Thus it is better for all parties that Ontario barley should go to Buffalo, and Minnesota barley to Winnipeg, than that Buffalo should be supplied from Minnesota and Winnipeg from Ontario. Railroad freight rates should be eliminated wherever possible.

Now, I am going to refer to what has already been shown so ably and well by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury). He pointed out that the exports of butter last year from Australia, New Zealand, Argentina, Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and the United States amounted to 450,000,000 pounds. The exports from the United States were 6,000,000 pounds. There is at present a duty of 4 cents a pound on butter coming from all these countries to which Uncle Sam has induced us to open our doors, and what will be the result when butter is made free? Eggs were exported from the United States to the number of 6,000,000 dozen last year; from Denmark, 32,000,000 dozen; from Russia, 215,000,000 dozen; and from Sweden, 3,000,000 dozen; a total from these four countries alone of 256,000,000 dozen, with a duty now of three cents per dozen. What is the trade going to be as against our farmers when that duty is taken off? Of hams and bacon, last year the United States exported 472,000,000 pounds, Denmark 210,000,000 pounds, Sweden 6,000,000 pounds, or a total of 688,000,000 pounds from these three countries. With a duty of 2 cents a pound now proposed to be reduced to 1¼ cents, how much of these products are going to come to Canada from these countries at the cost of our Canadian farmers? Then, with regard to barley, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith) and others representing farming constituencies have shown that last year Russia, Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Australia, and the United States exported a total of 118,000,000 bushels. Hon. gentlemen claim that reciprocity is going to be a benefit to us in barley growing.

But the barley from these countries is going to come in here, and we are going to be cut out of our own market; and our barley growers will have to send their barley to the United States where they will be at the mercy of 80,000,000 people. They have also shown that we only exported $10,000,000 worth of cattle last year while the United States exported $18,000,000 worth, and that the United States exported also $16,000,000 worth of beef and $15,000,000 worth of canned beef. Australia exported 71,000,000 lbs. of frozen beef, and 23,000,000 lbs. canned beef. New Zealand exported 54,000,000 lbs. frozen beef. The Argentine exported 461,000,000 lbs. frozen beef, also 25,000,000 lbs. jerked beef, and 14,000,000 lbs. pressed beef—or over 625,000,000 lbs. from Australia, New Zealand and the Argentine alone.

What is going to become of the Canadian market if all these are to come in free? The same thing may be said with regard to mutton and lamb, 485,000,000 lbs. of these foodstuffs were exported by these same three countries last year, and we are to have no protection to our Canadian farmers on their wool.

Hon. gentlemen opposite talk a great deal about the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba, and my hon. friend who preceded me (Mr. MacNutt) apparently had a great grievance against the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) because the latter said that the leaders of those grain growers were political speculators, and not bona fide representatives of the grain growers. But the hon. gentleman's quotation from the speech of my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) was not quite correct. He gave that quotation as if my hon. friend had spoken of all grain growers as being agitators. In 'Hansard,' however, I find that he did not apply that term to grain growers in general but only to their leaders. I think I would be quite within my rights in saying that every member of the Liberal party is not in favour of this pact even though the right hon. the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McLean) are. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) for instance, rose in his seat and said he was not. So did the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Harris) and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). Because we accuse a man's leader of being something he ought not to be, it does not follow that we are making the same accusation against the man himself and every follower of that leader. But if I wished to make a charge against these leaders of the grain growers, I want no other evidence than the circular they sent out themselves. In that circular they evidently do not know what they are talking about, just as I believe our two ministers who went to Washington did not really realize what they were doing. The leaders of these grain growers issued a circular which the Finance Minister referred to the other day, and in that circular they ask two things absolutely contradictory. They say:

> Resolved that we, the executive officers of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association emphatically assert that the above mentioned gentlemen and public bodies,——

That includes the Manitoba government and the whole legislature—

> ——by their public utterances and resolutions upon the question of reciprocity have absolutely misrepresented popular opinion in Manitoba; and we further declare and reaffirm that the tariff resolution placed before the government by the Canadian Council of Agriculture on December 16, 1910, is a correct representation of the opinions of the people of Manitoba to-day; and we further declare——

This is something in the style of the manifesto of the three tailors of Tooley street speaking for the people of England. The president of this Grain Growers' Association, the secretary and somebody else sent out a circular signed by a man named Henders, and not one of them had any franchise to represent anybody but himself:

> ——that the people of Manitoba will not be satisfied with anything short of the following action by the Canadian parliament during the present session:—

What do they want us to do? They want:

> First the ratification of the reciprocity agreement now before parliament; and second a complete abolition of the duties on agricultural implements and machinery.

But this proposed pact provides that the duty must be 15 per cent. So that these people want both the ratification of a pact which says that the duties shall be 15 per cent, and they also want the duty taken off. Is it not evident that they do not know what they are asking for, but are simply trying to make some pretense of appearing to be earning whatever they get from the association in the way of emoluments.

Mr. WARBURTON. Might I ask my hon. friend a couple of questions? First, has he any objection to the enlarged market for our agricultural products which the reciprocity arrangement will give us and second, is he prepared to support the abolition of the duty on agricultural implements?

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought I made it quite clear that we are not getting any increased market, but are handing over our own market to some 80,000,000 of people and are getting practically nothing in its place. We are handing over our Canadian market, which our Canadian people have built up and paid for, and are getting in return nothing but a share of the market of 80,000,000 people where we will be swamped by those 80,000,000 who are competing against us. As to my hon. friend's second question, I have no right to speak for the Conservative party, and I am not going to undertake to declare a policy for it; but he knows that the Conservative party has always stood for reasonable and adequate protection for everybody from the manufacturer down to the labourer. He knows that the government which he supports adopted that policy in 1897 because they dared not do anything else, and he knows that they have had no mandate from the people to do anything else.

Mr. WARBURTON. Does that mean that my hon. friend is in favour of reducing the duty upon agricultural implements?

Mr. LANCASTER. If I were supporting a government which made a pact with another government, I would know what I was doing without asking a member of the opposition what he thought of it. I do not blame the hon. gentleman, because the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have told him that that is all they know about it. But these hon. gentlemen have no policy on tariff matters. They are only tyros and apprentices as yet on tariff matters. You cannot get any two or three of them to think alike. One is a free trader, the other is an extreme high tariff man, not necessarily a protectionist, and another is for free trade as they have it in England, another wants commercial union, and still another unrestricted reciprocity. Each one of them has some fad or new fangled notion of his own, and the Liberal party itself has never been a unit on any general policy. In one part of the country they will argue that they are not laying hands on the manufacturer. As the Minister of Finance has said to his friends: You must not set the manufacturers against us because we are afraid of them and we want them left alone; but we care nothing about the fruit growers, we forgot all about them, and it would not be loyal for you to say that we should favour them. But do not say a word against the manufacturers for we are not going to hurt them, and by the manufacturers they mean those who manufacture in stone buildings with tall chimneys.

They do not seem to know yet that the farmer is a manufacturer and a manufacturer just as intelligent and able to build up the country as any other manufacturer. I would say to the hon. member from Prince Edward Island that I am not here to educate him, that I could not undertake the task of teaching him how to make a tariff. If that gentleman joins this party and condemns the government because it is handing over the country bit by bit to the country to the south of us, if he joins the great national party that has built up this country under the National Policy to such an extent that when the other party got into power on a fluke and adopted that policy they were continued in power several times because of the same consistency of the Conservative party that has always existed, if my hon. friend will come in, unite loyally with us and get into the caucus of the Conservative party, he will find out what Conservative policy is upon these things and he has no right to vote for this pact if he does not know what the policy of his own party is with regard to it. He had better find out what the policy of his own party is before he bothers with what the policy of the Conservative party is on this and every other question and he will find that we do not say one thing in Prince Edward Island, another thing in Quebec, another thing in Ontario and another in British Columbia. He will find that we have the same policy all over the country, that we declare it in the same way, both in French and in English in every part of the country. I have no sympathy with him and I refuse absolutely to enlighten him.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. LANCASTER. If you ask sensible questions you may ask all you like.

Mr. WARBURTON. I only ask it with the hon. gentleman's permission. I do not propose to ask him anything about Prince Edward Island. I want to ask him if he and his friends have any policy under heaven on this matter.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Customs and the Minister of Finance went to Washington, apparently they went blindfolded, and if the bandages are still on the eyes of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island I am not surprised at it. He cannot see any policy anywhere in this thing. He wants to know if we have any policy, but has he not heard over and over again from every speaker on this side what our position is with regard to this matter? Does he know if any half dozen men on his own side agree as to what their policy is?

One of them is emphasizing free trade, another is trying to claim that it is protection, another says that produce will be cheaper to the consumer, that the labouring man will get his products cheaper, another represents to us that the farmer will get more for his products. The hon. gentleman had better get his leader to call another caucus for the purpose of finding out what the policy of his own party is and what he is voting for before he worries his head about what the leader of the opposition will do when he gets into power. He will find out very emphatically, very effectually when the ballots are counted at the next general election, not only what the policy of the Conservative party is, but how quickly they will carry it out, settle this question and put an end to it. I am going to speak, with the consent of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island, and all the other hon. members, for a few minutes upon a matter that I know more about perhaps than any hon. member in this House does.

Mr. TALBOT. What is that?

Mr. LANCASTER. And I will prove it before I get through.

Mr. TALBOT. It will be something new.

Mr. LANCASTER. It would be very new if the hon. member for Bellechasse knew anything about it. The fact that he had learned about it would be a most novel, a most extraordinary thing to be made public. If the hon. member for Bellechasse knew anything——

Mr. TALBOT. I have forgotten more than you know.

Mr. LANCASTER. And if he could prove the fact before the people, he might get a patent on it and sell it for a large price, because it would be an extraordinary thing, a curiosity that no museum had ever exhibited before. The hon. gentleman does not like me saying I am going to speak on an industry that I know more about perhaps than any other hon. gentleman does. It would not be hard to know more about it than the hon. member for Bellechasse. This is an industry that perhaps the hon. member for Bellechasse never heard of. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) heard of it, but forgot it and that industry is the industry of growing tender or semi-tropical fruits in this country. The Prime Minister, when this deputation of 800 or 1,000 people came down here to point out how their industry was being ruined by this pact, told them they had come too late. He ought not to have told them that. They could not have come too late if the Prime Minister had properly instructed his ministers or if they had not been asleep or forgetful. The Prime Minister had a farmers' deputation down here before this pact was made, before these hon. gentlemen went to Washington at all. He had a delegation of farmers down on December 16 and in the blue-book reporting the proceedings of that interview I find upon the eighth page of it the following telegram:

St. Catharines, Ont.,
December 15, 1910.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa.

A large meeting of the Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers' Association held in this city to-day, following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved that whereas the United States government have made overtures to this country for reciprocal trade relations, and whereas a large delegation of those interested in products of the soil is now in session at Ottawa with object of petitioning the government for the removal or the substantial lowering of the tariff against United States products, and whereas the tariff of the United States against Canada products is in the aggregate greatly in excess against them, resulting in some cases to the detriment of the Canadian grower, and whereas the present Canadian tariff has on the whole proved satisfactory to the upbuilding of our fruit industries and the same, if continued, will develop them to the advantage of the country as a whole, therefore, it is the opinion of this association that any reciprocal treaty with the United States be given the most serious consideration, and that only done after consultation with the official representative of our fruit industries, and that in regard to each and every other industry they should be consulted and their respective bearings upon each other be fully considered, and that in the final adjustment of any tariff with United States that all possible preference be given to the mother country.

C. E. FISHER,
Secy. Nia. Peninsula
Fruit Growers' Assn.

The signer of that is not a Tory, but he is one of the staunchest Reformers of the Niagara district, a man who was appointed registrar of the county by the late defunct government, and the right hon. gentleman knows that they never appointed any to public office but the most faithful henchmen. Mr. Fisher was appointed by his political party as the registrar of deeds of Lincoln county, but before he was made registrar of deeds he was a large fruit grower in Niagara township, as his sons now are large fruit growers there. The right hon. gentleman, before his emissaries went to Washington, knew that the fruit growers were objecting and pointing out the injury it would be to their industry if any interference took place with these duties. Mr. Taft, the president, knew very well the great advantage it would be to the United States and the corresponding disadvantage to Canada to allow their fruits to come into Canada. At the top of page 9 of his message to Congress, dealing with this agreement, he says:

As an illustration, it has been found possible to obtain free entry into Canada for fresh fruits and vegetables—a matter of special value to the south and to the Pacific coast in the disposing of their products in their season.

Now, the Prime Minister said, on more than one occasion—but I will quote it only once against him—that he would not interfere with established industries. Here are his words, taken from what, I suppose, may be called his main speech on the very measure that is now before us, and reported at page 4859 of 'Hansard' of this session—March 7:

There are men who believe that we are going to recklessly ruin industry and capital. Capital is timid under all circumstances, and the man who is at the head of affairs and the ministers who assist him, would not be worthy of the public confidence if they were not always careful to see that capital will be safe whenever it is invested in any industry in this country.

Now, I would like the Prime Minister, and I would like this House, to ponder these words, and apply them to the facts I shall give about the fruit-growing industry. The capital invested in the fruit-growing industry last year was $91,489,268, of which, $69,237,331 was in Ontario. That is the assessed valuationn of the propertiees used for fruit-growing. Some of that is devoted to apple-growing, and it is important to distinguish between apples which are semi-durable and the so-called tender fruits, which must be sold at once after being picked or be wholly lost. The value of the property devoted to apples is $28,000,000, and, in Ontario alone, $22,790,000. In the production of vegetables and garden truck, there is invested in Canada $39,346,000 and in Ontario $16,342,000. Thus, we find that in Ontario there is devoted to tender fruits and vegetables $39,138,000. In Ontario alone, land of a total area of about 200,000 acres is devoted to this industry, and its average value is $195.60 per acre. Of course, there are fruit lands in the Niagara district that you could not buy—that is, you could not buy before this pact was made; I do not pretend to say what it is worth now—for less than $500 or $600 an acre, or, if planted, $800 to $1,000 an acre. These are the lands between Hamilton and the Niagara river and below the escarpment. The land devoted to fruit would represent 10,000 plantations of twenty acres each. This industry employs from 15,000 to 20,000 men, besides many temporary employees during the season.

Now, the government knew about this before sending these gentlemen to Washington. This is proven, if by nothing else, by the fact that they issued a pamphlet for the purpose of making known the facts in England with a view to inducing people to come out here and invest money in fruit lands, and enter upon this industry. I have here a copy of the pamphlet, and the title page reads: 'Canada's Farthest South. A trip through the famous peach orchards and vineyards of South Western Ontario. By H. A. Kennedy (of the 'London Times' staff), London, England. Issued by direction of Hon. Frank Oliver, Minister of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada. There was a little of the irony of circumstance in the time when I received this pamphlet. It came to me through the post office on the very day when the Minister of Finance was declaring in this House that this industry was to be ruined—this very industry that the government was advertising in Great Britain and trying to commend as a field of investment to the people there. On page 14 of this pamphlet, is the following:

It is most exhilarating just to wander about in one of these orchards. You cannot exactly hear the trees growing and the fruit swelling; but hearing is the only one of the five senses that a peach does not appeal to. To the eye, it is a thing of perfect beauty; to the taste, an exquisite dainty; to the touch it is more caressing than velvet; and its scent rivals the most delicate of perfumes. As we walk together through one of these famous orchards between Hamilton and St. Catharines, the owner speaks of the trees as if they were his children; he seems to know every one of them, as he describes their varying characters.

Then, I turn to page 21 and read the following:

Canadians themselves have the good taste to eat so much fruit that—excepting apples—the export trade is not of first importance to the orchardman. Still, it is worth noticing that Niagara peaches have been landed in England in prime condition and sold at prices yielding a big profit to the grower.

Then at the foot of page 22:

I have explained what seems a more than sufficient reason why these orchardmen's energies should be devoted chiefly to peaches and grapes—simply because they can be grown there better than anywhere else in the country. But the same climatic reason gives the Niagara men an advantage also in growing other more or less tender fruit.

He goes on to speak of the market gardens:

If you climb the slope or 'mountain' leading to the higher level of Lake Erie, you find a certain area where peaches grow almost as well—wherever the soil is suitable—as on the lower level beside Lake Ontario; and one of the finest nursery gardens is to be found up there. Over a great part of the height of land between the lakes, however, the combination of climate and soil is not quite so favourable, and the cautious farmer, if he grows fruit at all, is more inclined to stick to the hardy apple.

This upper plateau, absurdly described as 'on the mountain,' has not had anything like justice done to it. It is devoted to mixed farming, which there means largely the raising of grain and hay. Even the dairying industry has not been developed as it might be, though a good deal of farm-house butter finds its way down into Hamilton. Presently people will discover that the 'mountain' farms, with their excellent soil and climate and nearness to big markets, are capable of a rich and varied productiveness now undreamt of.

The Canadians, even well-to-do folk in the great cities, used to be content with whatever vegetables were 'in season' when grown in the open air. When winter closed in they had to put up with potatoes and such other vegetables as would keep, or else canned goods. The Dominion has now reached that stage of development at which a large number of citizens can afford, and demand, vegetables raised under glass. Instead of accommodating themselves to the season, they insist on the season being artificially prolonged to accommodate itself to human requirements.

And on the next page:

It is the white men, our own kith and kin, who have covered the country with wide-stretching, leafy vineyards we are now passing. These vineyards, with newly planted peach orchards are interspersed with fields of modest potatoes and beets, and the graceful, towering maize, and tomatoes in all their scarlet glory. Comfortable little cottages with significant little baby carts waiting at their doors, and here and there a more pretentious house with its well-kept lawn and standing serenely among their maple trees or behind little fences of young pine hedges.

On page 34, he tells of the wages men get, and of the money that can be made by the careful attention to fruit-growing. He points out that it was not a lazy man's job, but that the man who was prepared to be energetic and to use his brains and education can make a living and do well on fifteen or twenty acres.

With this pamphlet circulating in Great Britain to induce people to come out and invest in fruit lands, we find these gentlemen going to Washington and making an agreement to put all these tender fruits on the free list, and the result is, what? Let me point out the change that has taken place within that section within a generation. When I went into that country, twenty-nine years ago, it was the ordinary thing for one man to make a living on a hundred acres. There was one small house and the farmer was engaged in ordinary mixed farming. To-day, five or six men are making each a better living off that hundred acres. There are five or six handsome houses, well kept, and the children whose homes these are attend the high school. There is prosperity there and employment for many men. The energy, industry, enterprise, philanthropy and patriotism of these men have, in effect, added land to the country. When men have created a condition of things under which five or six families can live on an area formerly occupied by one family and live better, it practically means increasing by five or six times the territory for farmers' occupation. Consider those facts, and apply to them the words of the Prime Minister: 'The man who is at the head of affairs and the ministers who assist him, would not be worthy of the public confidence if they were not always careful to see that capital will be safe, whenever it is invested in any industry in this country.' I say the Prime Minister must stand convicted of that very lack of duty to the people. According to his own words, he is no longer worthy of public confidence because he has not been careful to see that capital shall be safe and industry protected. The people in that country have discovered means by which in spite of some climatic difficulties they can grow these semi-tropical fruits. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McLean) said—and the Prime Minister was authority for the statement—that it would be a benefit to the fruit-growers of Canada to have reciprocity, because the Canadian fruit-grower would be able to sell in the American market after the American fruit is gone. Unfortunately for the argument of these gentlemen, the facts are not with them. The Prime Minister, with all his political ingenuity, with all his astuteness, and even with all his sunny ways, cannot make the climate of Canada different from what it is, he cannot give us the climate of California or the middle south. The fact is that there are three fruit seasons in the United States. The Californian and extreme southern fruit comes in from six weeks to two months ahead of our own. In three or four weeks—and still three or four weeks ahead of ours—comes the fruit from the middle states. Canadians have this fruit on their tables, and, by the time the Canadian peach is ripe, they are pretty well satiated. I agree with the Prime Minister in this, that there is no comparison in quality with the southern peach and that of the Niagara district. And if they could be brought into the market on the same day, there could be no question about which would control that market. But, unfortunately, they do not come in the same day—the Canadian peach does not come along for two months, six weeks, or at least a month after the other, and it comes after two fruit seasons in the United States have poured their products into the market. And when the Canadian peach is ripe, it must compete in the market with the crop of New York, Michigan and other states of the north. So it means that the Americans get our market to themselves for the products of two great areas, and, when our own crops are ready they must share our market with the fruits of the northern portion of United States territory. So, if it were possible to conceive a policy which would put our fruit growers out of business this is that policy. No wonder that President Taft, in his messages to Congress, and the newspapers of the United States, emphasized the statement that the southern fruit-growers are going to have their lands increased in value by reason of this pact. We cannot compete with them for the reason that our climate will not allow it. If there is any condition more than another which makes the protection of industry necessary, it is the condition of climate. The Minister of Finance has told us that Canadian manufactures should not be exposed to the competition of the stronger and longer-established industries of the United States. How much more, then, should he protect the people who have given of their substance, their energy and their brain to build up an industry such as I have shown this fruit industry to be..

If that kind of industry, if that kind of energy, if that kind of enterprise is to be knocked down for the sake of friendly relations with the United States, then I say we want no friendly relations. What kind of friendly relations are we going to have with anybody the price of whose friendship is that when he needs our products for his own benefit he will deal with us and when he thinks he can get along without us he will have none of us, and who will not deal with us unless he can show his family that he is going to make a profit at our expense? I say out on such friendly relations. We can be more friendly with him if we can run our own show and demonstrate that we are able and determined to protect our people.

I would like any hon. member to point out any industry with the number of millions of dollars that have been invested in the fruit industry that has not been better protected in the past than the fruit industry. The average protection on tender fruits has been about 18 per cent. With that small protection and with the amount of money invested in it, is there any industry in Canada more deserving of a continuance of that protection, than the one I have spoken of? Those engaged in that industry have made great sacrifices for the benefit of their fellow Canadians. Take, for instance, fruit baskets on which there is a duty of 20 per cent. These baskets last year could be bought in the United States for $22 a thousand and in Canada they cost $45. There are several fruit growers who ship 20,000 baskets of peaches and they paid the extra price on these in order to keep up the basket industry in this country so that the workingman making baskets should be Canadian. I know one man who is paying in baskets alone $450 more than he would have to pay with free trade in baskets, and in addition they who went to Washington never thought of seeing when they were striking off the duty on fruit that it would be only fair to let the fruit grower get his raw material cheaper. This government have caused to be circulated in England such pamphlets as I have produced, setting forth the advantages of the Niagara fruit district. They invite English capitalists to invest money in fruit farms because of the fertility of the district and the quality of the fruit. This has done more to advertise Canada than even the Prime Minister himself could do if he lived to be 500 years old. The fruit growers have paid almost twice as much for baskets as they would have to pay with free trade in baskets, and in addition they have had to pay from 15 per cent to 40 per cent on every article they use, and the fruit grower uses and wears out more machinery in one year upon 25 acres of fruit land than the farmer in the west uses in 10 years on 640 acres. He buys all sorts of implements which he has to use to fight the enemies of the trees, insects and other pests, to spray, to prune, to cultivate, to plant, to replant, to do everything that has to be done with all sorts of fruit. He has been willing to pay these duties in order that Canadians in other lines of industry may be profitably employed. The fruit growers have been National Policy men believing in the principle of give and take. Conservative, Liberal and Independent in the Niagara district ever since 1897 have been in favour of a stable tariff and reasonable protection not only for themselves but for every class of people. They are Canadians first, last and all the time. This may not please the Finance Minister but the originators of the fruit industry in the Niagara district were United Empire Loyalists, men whose ancestors gave up their farms and all they had in the United States for the sake of sticking to the British Crown. They hewed out their farms from the primeval forest; they did not go to the west where they could raise crops by simply ploughing the land. They hewed down the forest and took out the stumps and were glad if they could work out five acres a year. They cleared their farms by the greatest pioneering enterprise and hardship. If to-day they put forth their efforts to raise wheat they could raise larger crops than are raised even on the fertile lands of the northwest. The first settlers were energetic and branched into dairying and then into the fruit industry. At first they had great difficulties in carrying on this industry. Sometimes for two or three years there would be no peaches. The fruit growers by study, experiment and co-operation learned what conditions caused these failures and just in the last few years they have had a crop every year. Then just as they are able to get some profitable reward for what they have done, two gentlemen go down to Washington and hand over the whole thing to the southern fruit grower. Then when the fruit growers of the Niagara district spoke to the Prime Minister protesting against such treatment they were told baldly: We do not care anything about you, you have come too late. They should not have had to come at all. This pamphlet, which was circulated widely in Great Britain last year, to induce capitalists and those for whom I have even more sympathy, labourers, to come to the Niagara district on account of the chances of profit and the high wages, is to be branded in the future as unreliable, as a libel on Canada. To-day it is not a libel, it is truthful in its statements as to the prosperity and fertility of that district and the intelligence, energy, enterprise and history of Canada's furthest south. It was a strange coincidence that on the day on which the Minister of Finance announced in this House that this industry was to be knocked sky-high, I should take out of my post box this pamphlet, 'Canada's Furthest South.'

With the duty of 18 or 20 per cent against them, in the last fiscal year the fruit growers of Michigan and New York state were able to share the Canadian market in competition with the fruit growers of the Niagara district to the amount, in round figures, of $1,000,000. If they can do that with the duty against them, what is going to happen when the duty is taken off? The figures are taken from the blue-book, the only Canadian authority I have got any information from—the tariff regulations, correspondence and statistics issued by this government while this debate has been going on. On page 22, in statement No. 2, it is shown that the imports of peaches, grapes, blackberries, cherries cranberries and plums last year amounted to $945,000 against an average duty of 18 per cent in competition with our farmers. When the duty is removed, the whole American crop will come into the competition. The result will be that the products of the fruit farmers of the Niagara peninsula will go to the canning factories in competition with that much more than they do now. When our peaches are ripe theirs are ripe too, so that as they have already the early market from us, they will now have the later market also.

Now, I am not going to apologize for taking up a longer time than I have ever before taken up in the eleven years that I have had the honour and pleasure of occupying a seat in this House, because the subject upon which I have been speaking, it seems to me, is vital to Canada, and to Canada in the future. If we pass this compact, we shall, in my humble opinion, be sowing the seeds of disintegration of confederation and very likely the seeds of annexation to the United States. But if not, we shall certainly be doing no good by passing the arrangement, and we can do no harm by voting it down. I am going to oppose it tooth and nail as long as I can see any sense in doing so, no matter how many times or how late I may happen to speak. In that regard, I am in the hands of Providence. I broke my arm the other day, and I suppose that as long as I do not break my jaw I can say something more or less about it. I am opposed to these resolutions and to this agreement for four main reasons: First, because I believe the people of Canada want tariffs to be made by this parliament alone, so that every item can be amended after discussion and without interference by any foreign country to prevent such discussion or action; secondly, because I believe the large majority of the people of Canada want no playing with fire in regard to British connection and so placing it in jeopardy; thirdly, because I want to preserve Canada for the Canadians, both now and, so far as I have power, for ever more; and, fourthly, because the agreement taken altogether is not in the interests of Canada as a nation and will retard its full development by its own people.

Mr. JAMES A. ROBB (Huntingdon). Mr. Chairman, the proposed trade arrangement now before the House and the country has been so widely discussed and so favourably received that those of us who support the government have no reason for prolonging the debate. Before discussing the trade arrangement itself, may I make a short reference to the lengthy speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) who has just sat down. Until this afternoon I considered my hon. friend to be a well-read and observant man who went about with his eyes open; but his repeated references this afternoon to the elementary farmers of the province of Quebec lead me to believe that he is somewhat in ignorance of general conditions of agriculture even in his own province. Had my good friend been watching the course of agricultural matters, he would have known that no later than last fall, at the great national exhibition in the capital city of his own province, many of the best prizes for Ayrshire cattle went to the province of Quebec, and at the same time other farmers from the same province were in St. John, New Brunswick, where they also captured some of the best prizes for Ayrshire cattle. Had he looked a little further, he would have learned that at Seattle in 1909, the farmers of the province of Quebec captured some of the best prizes for Ayrshire cattle. My hon. friend, who has been a considerable time in public life and has noticed the progress and prosperity of this country, perhaps remembers that in 1893, at the world's fair in Chicago, the province of Quebec did honour to herself and to all Canada by sweeping the board and taking the best prizes, winning the gold medal for butter and cheese, and bringing it to Canada. In view of these facts and the fact that many of the best men throughout Canada, even among those in the hon. gentleman's own party, graduated from Quebec farms, it seems to me that his references to-day to the elementary farmer of the province of Quebec were not justified.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the 26th of January the Finance Minister submitted for the consideration of this parliament a proposed trade arrangement with 90,000,000 customers. They are thrifty, honourable, industrious, well to do people. Their credit is good, their rate of credit high. They are prepared to buy liberally of the surplus natural farm products of this country, and are prepared to pay the highest cash price for them on delivery, because they are wanted to help to feed a population of 90,000,000 people, more than half of whom are non-producers of farm products. It is no great stretch of imagination to believe that when our Finance Minister first entered upon this trade arrangement, the proposition submitted was not exactly that before us to-day. Our United States neighbours are good traders. They have developed and systematized a manufacturing industry that should be able to compete with the world, but for one obstacle, that is, the high cost of living, the result of the high tariff—the tariff that has called the New England boy from the farm to the factory, leaving the farm to grow up neglected in weeds, and leaving the New England boy short of the products that a man requires for his daily bread. So it is evident that for a long time our United States neighbours have been looking for wider markets for their manufactured products in return for a reduced tariff on farm products. It has been evident for a long time that they have been looking to Canada for increased and, shall I say better food supplies, and so when our ministers, who acted as our representatives, sat around the table to discuss the trade relations with the United States, they knew just what the southern men wanted to swap. David Harum, a prosperous banker and successful horse trader, had one rule which he called the golden rule in horse trading, and that was: Do to the other man what you know he would do to you and do it first. That is about the rule which our ministers followed; for after having listened during the past two months to the debate on this question, I am convinced that this proposed agreement is a good bargain for Canada. It is a better one than many of us hoped to obtain. There can be no dispute about the fact that it is along the line of policy of both parties since Sir John Macdonald proclaimed in 1878 his policy of reciprocity of trade or reciprocity of tariffs with our American neighbours.

I propose now to deal briefly with the conditions as they exist in my own province. Early in the debate my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) offered an amendment, and in presenting it he said that the feeling of the province of Quebec was that this reciprocity arrangement required to be looked into, and he asked that our government should give further opportunity for consideration of this question. I recognize that my hon. friend is the leader of a party in his province. Indeed, Sir, the result of the vote on his amendment would justify us in the belief that he is once more the first lieutenant, if not the actual leader, of the opposition, in this parliament; but, when he says that this is not a good bargain for the province of Quebec, does he truly and fairly represent public opinion in that province? Does he represent the opinion of the farmers there? Does the man behind the plough in that province believe that we are making undue haste in promoting better and more common sense trade relations with our great neighbours to the south? Representing an agricultural constituency in that province, I wish to raise my voice against the statements of those opposed to the government, those who say this measure is not in the interests of our people, and who further allege that we have no mandate to readjust our tariff. Surely they who say we have no mandate must have forgotten the issues in every school house and on every platform since 1896 when the Liberal party were accused of not having reformed the tariff. But I am willing to give the opposition credit for this, that they are opposed to anything and everything in the shape of tariff reform. They opposed the British preference and to-day would oppose an extension of that preference; but I submit that the people will not soon forget the party which granted the British preference and which, notwithstanding opposition from the Conservative party, is promoting better trade relations with our neighbours to the south.

In answer to the question who wants reciprocity, and to justify my own position, I wish to place on 'Hansard' a few resolutions which were adopted unanimously by the farmers in the county of Huntingdon. They were adopted at a public meeting held on the 10th December, 1910, for the purpose of naming delegates to the farmers' delegation which waited on the government on the 16th of December last. The resolutions are interesting to the people in my part of the country because the majority of those present and who unanimously supported the resolutions, were men who, in the elections of 1908 and 1904, opposed the government candidate. The gentleman who for four years from 1904 to 1908 had the honour of representing the county which I now represent, and who during those four years gave a loyal support to the Conservative party, voted with them on every occasion when there was a vote, was not only present at that gathering of farmers and supported these resolutions, but made a speech condemning this government for having failed to give tariff reform. The resolutions are as follow. In view of the attitude of his Majesty's loyal opposition, is it too much to hope that when the next election takes place, be it sooner or later, the men who voted the following resolutions in Huntingdon will support the government policy:

1st. Moved by John Crutchfield, seconded by Joseph Holmes:—That we are in favour of our government meeting the advances of the Washington authorities for a reciprocity treaty, and of its completing the same without delay, always provided that any concession granted the United States be also extended to Great Britain.

2nd. Moved by David Vass, seconded by James T. Elder, that while acknowledging our duty to contribute towards the proper expenditure of the Dominion, we protest against being any longer taxed for the benefit of manufacturers and ask that the tariff be for revenue only.

3rd. Moved by Jos. O. Kelly, seconded by James McCracken:—We declare in favour of maintaining the British preference and of increasing it to 50 per cent.

Here, Sir, at least is one important district in the province of Quebec which is in direct opposition to the views expressed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and those who voted with him for delay in tariff reform.

It will be asked what benefit will the proposed tariff reductions be to the province of Quebec. Well, take the dairy industry. Just about one year ago when the Finance Minister announced the favourable conclusion of the negotiations with President Taft, hon. gentlemen opposite were loud in their criticisms particularly of the Minister of Finance for having visited Washington and Albany, to discuss trade relations with the president. On May 3, 1910, page 8752 of 'Hansard', the hon. the leader of the opposition warned the government against any further negotiations which he feared might weaken the ties of the empire. Well, one indirect result of those negotiations of last year was the market for Canadian cream in the United States. Men qualified to know, men in the business, say that the farmer who sold his cream to the United States market netted 10 to 20 cents per 100 of milk more than in the Montreal market. And if we had free trade in dairy products, Canadian farmers would get 35 cents to 39 cents per 100 pounds more for their milk. The demand for cream from the United States market is closing up our butter and cheese factories, this proposed measure will enable us to ship butter and cheese.

I have here a few figures which, I am assured by reliable men in the business, are correct. They show the prices paid last year for milk to New York State farmers and to Quebec farmers.

The prices paid per 100 pounds for milk at New York State butter factories, skimmed milk returned, were as follows:

	Per 100 pounds.
At Fay, N.Y., for season..	$1 32
At Chateauguay, N.Y., for season	1 35
At Malone, N.Y., for season....	1 31
At Bombay, N.Y., for season.. ..	1 29

This makes an average of $1.31¾ per 100 pounds. The Canadian who was shipping cream to the United States received an average of $1.14, with the skimmed milk returned, that is 17¾ cents less than his United States neighbour. In the district I have the honour to represent, there are located twelve miles apart a condensed milk factory on the Canadian side and on the New York side shippers of milk and cream. The prices paid in Canada by the condensed milk factory for the month of October was $1.40 per 100 pounds of milk, while the price at Chateauguay, N.Y., was $1.75. A man living six miles south of Huntingdon would be as near to the Chateauguay market as he would to the Huntingdon market. These figures show the relative prices of these two places:

	Huntingdon. Que.	Chateauguay, N.Y.
October..	$1.40	$1.75
November..	1.40	1.90
December..	1.50	2.05
January..	1.70	2.05
February..	1.70	2.05
March..	1.40	1.70
April..	1.40	....
Balance season	1.00	....

The man who gave me these figures did not supply the price for the balance of the season at Chateauguay, N.Y. I understand that this year the Huntingdon factory has arranged to pay the farmers $1.10. Farmers are not all situated where they can take advantage of the high prices paid by condensed milk factories or shippers of milk and cream. A fair comparison would be the prices paid by butter and cheese factories. In New York state, the price was $1.31. The Montreal market gave back 92 cents per 100 pounds to the farmer producing butter and cheese for that market. Thus, the House will see that the United States farmer has an advantage over the Canadian farmer of 39 cents per 100 pounds. If you take 4,000 pounds as the average production per cow—and that should be a low estimate—this would mean that, with access to the American market, the return of the Quebec dairy farmer would be $15.60 more per cow. The farmer with twenty cows would thus receive $312 a year in excess of his present return. That means the hired man's wages; it means one-third the cost of feeding the cow, and feeding her well. And it means proportionately more to the farmer who has a good herd of well-fed cows, that possibly average 6,000 pounds of milk in the season, instead of 4,000 pounds. Instead of gaining $15.60, his gain would be $23.40 per cow, or $468 for the herd.

Mr. BLAIN. And what will happen to the condensed milk factories and the cheese factories on the Canadian side?

Mr. ROBB. Are the milking cows for the benefit of the factory owner or for the benefit of the farmer?

Mr. BLAIN. Both.

Mr. ROBB. But let us look at it a little further. Let us get away from the individual farmer, and see what this means for the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) seemed to be in doubt whether this was a good bargain for the province of Quebec. The Census and Statistics Monthly of July, 1910, gives the number of milk cows in the province of Quebec in 1908 as 884,896. I take that estimate because, while there was a shortage of cattle last year, there will be a considerable increase this year, when there is plenty of feed. If these cows earn $15.60 more apiece owing to better markets, it will be giving back to the farmers of Quebec the nice, tidy sum of $13,804,377.60 per annum. I do not claim that the new markets will give us these full prices. There will be a little lowering in the United States, and a considerable increase in Canada. But, if prices are adjusted to about the basis of our relative population, Quebec dairymen will still be over $11,000,000 to the good. Where will this increased revenue go? Is it going to hurt anybody for the farmers of the province of Quebec to have their cows earning $11,000,000 more than if they were milking them for the Canadian and British markets only? I claim that this money will go into more comforts for the home, better schools and better roads. Some of it will go to the manufacturers and to the wholesale houses in the cities.

Mr. RHODES. What about the workmen in Valleyfield?

Mr. ROBB. They will be taken care of, if the statement of the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is correct that this country will be flooded with goods from other countries.

Directly associated with dairy farming is stock-raising. The farmer who runs a good dairy farm, sending the milk to the butter factory, getting back any skimmed milk and buttermilk, has generally on the same farm a nice lot of young cattle, some pork and a few good horses. In my country, we call it bad farming if a man, in the course of the season, besides the revenue from his dairy products, does not take in some money by the sale of stock in the shape of hogs, sheep, young cattle and horses. For the year ending March 31st, 1910, the average duty collected on horses shipped into the United States from Canada was $35.09. This tariff measure proposes to do away with that duty. I would ask hon. members opposite if that is going to hurt anybody? The farmer of the province of Quebec knows the value of the American market for horses; he does not need statistics to prove it to him. He knows that every business day in the year there is an American trotting up and down the concessions looking for horses. He knows that the American will give him probably not all this $35, but a fair share of it if the duty is taken off.

Now, I want to say a few words about the hay crop of the province of Quebec. There seems to be an effort made to create the idea that we in Quebec are the only people who are interested in the sale of hay from this country. There seems to be an effort made to create the idea that we in the province of Quebec are the only people who are interested in the hay question. Now, if you start out from Ottawa and go to Montreal, or go from here west, at any time during the hay season, you will find cars loading with hay in the province of Ontario before you get into Quebec. In the province of Quebec, it is true, we do grow large quantities of hay, and what we have to sell we want to sell in the best market. I have been talking with a good many prominent farmers since this question came up, and I find that the farmer in the province of Quebec who has the most hay, or at least has the best hay, for sale, is the farmer who keeps the most cows and the most stock on his farm. In our province we have a system of farming whereby through ensilage and silos the farmer feeds his cattle largely during the winter season. He feeds them corn ensilage and grain, and he finds that in so doing he feeds them cheaper, and can keep and feed a better and a larger herd; and the fertilizer going back to the land, he produces more hay and grain. In the province of Quebec we have two good markets for hay; we have our northern lumber camps that take a considerable quantity of hay, and we have the large cities. Incidentally, I would like to say that some of the dairymen who live near the large cities are considerably interested in buying hay as cheaply as they can, because they have to go out into the country districts to buy hay for their stock. But the best market for hay on this continent is the American market, that is not disputed. Any gentleman who looks at the quotations will see that in New York and Boston the price for hay is generally $7 to $8 higher than it is in Canada, and the duty on hay going into the United States is $4 a ton, or almost just half the price of the hay.

Mr. EDWARDS. How does the price in New York and Boston compare with prices in England?

Mr. ROBB. I have not looked up English prices; but I may say this, that the English market is willing to pay almost as much for our clover hay as they do for our timothy hay; and they do not want our timothy hay, they want our clover hay. It is almost impossible to sell timothy hay on the English market.

Mr. EDWARDS. If hay is $7 or $8 higher in Boston and New York than it is in Canada, is it not a remarkable thing that Canada would export more hay to England than it does to the United States?

Mr. ROBB. Because, as I have said, the English market is looking for cheap clover hay, of which we have an abundance, they do not want our timothy hay at all. But the United States market puts up a high barrier against our timothy hay; when we get that barrier lowered our timothy hay will go in there. Now it has been stated here that if this proposed trade arrangement goes into effect the millers of this country will be wiped out of business. I do not believe that any intelligent man in this House is sincere in making that statement. I am prepared to admit that the millers in western Canada will have more competition in buying their wheat, but that is not going to put them out of business. The western miller will be able to buy his wheat just as cheap as any competitor that comes along. He is the first man on the ground, he knows the farmers, he is living alongside of them, and he can make his selection better than any miller who comes in from the outside to buy our wheat. The greatest competition the Canadian miller has to-day in the export business is the British miller, who buys his wheat in the markets of the world; he is the keenest competitor the Canadian miller has. It has been said that some of our large Canadian millers, recognizing this, have lately been considering the advisability of putting up mills in Liverpool where they can buy their wheat from the markets of the world. Now this proposed trade arrangement will give our large millers, not only, our own great Northwest where production is increasing every year, but it will let them into the large markets of the southwest, where they produce a considerable quantity of wheat; and with these large markets to go into, they will be able to export to advantage, if any one on this continent can do so.

Under the proposed tariff changes, the United States miller will have the advantage in that he can import a certain percentage of our number one and two hard wheat, blend it with the softer United States varieties, mill it in the United States and market a 30 per cent or 40 per cent best patent at home, export the bakers, on clears, and the price received for his best flour at home will enable the United States miller to sell the lower grades for export at reduced prices. The Canadian miller, having a smaller home market, will be that much handicapped on the export trade. On the other hand, the Canadian flour will be better, because the domestic market is limited, and cannot consume more than a small percentage of high grade patents, thus Canadian flour will be preferred by buyers of high grade flour, because it will rank with Hungarian and other high grade flour. For my part, I cannot see that the Canadian miller would have been hurt much if our ministers had gone a little further and put all the millers on this continent on the same basis. I think that the Canadian miller, with the large purchasing market he has for his wheat, and with his superior water-power and intelligent labour would have been able to compete with any miller, and it would be a great advantage to him to get into the large cities of the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says he doesn't think it will hurt the Canadian miller. There are two or three hundred mills in the province of Ontario and a few in Quebec which grind from one-third to one-half more western wheat than they use in the year. If that wheat commands, as is claimed, from ten to fifteen cents a bushel more in the United States, will not that wheat be most likely to go to the United States instead of coming this way? And if so, will the Canadian miller not be injured by making it impossible for him to get the supply of wheat which he requires to mix with the soft wheat of Ontario?

Mr. ROBB. The Canadian miller will buy all the wheat he wants and buy it at the market price. He has just as good a chance to buy it as the United States miller and he will have this advantage. My hon. friend comes from Ontario. He knows that the millers of Ontario have been at a considerable disadvantage in recent years because the farmers of Ontario refused to deliver their wheat at the market price; that is the market value of the world. The Ontario miller will be able to go into Michigan, Kansas, Missouri, Ohio, anywhere they grow wheat, and buy it at the market price.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the hon. member know that he is very much handicapped by the freight rates as between Winnipeg and Duluth and Winnipeg and Toronto? They are very much higher on grain to Toronto than to Duluth.

Mr. ROBB. Yes, but the flour has not got to Toronto yet. You are only talking about wheat there. When the wheat gets to Toronto the flour is there.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the Canadian miller would not be injured. I am free to say that he will be injured. I can give an example from personal knowledge because I happened to be in the business for a time. We were obliged to get half of the wheat that we required to keep our mills running from the west. If that wheat goes to the United States is the Ontario miller likely to get it?

Mr. ROBB. Why should it go to the United States if the Ontario miller has the money to pay for it? His money will be just as good as the American money.

Mr. SPROULE. But it is claimed that the wheat will be sold to the United States miller before the Ontario miller has a chance to get it.

Mr. ROBB. I was in the milling business for thirty-five years, and when I hear my good friends telling us about what this arrangement is going to do to the millers I am reminded of the conditions from which we suffered under the great National Policy of the Conservatives—the grinding and bond regulations of those days whereby favoured millers located in favoured positions were able to buy wheat in the United States and grind it in bond and there were no other millers in Canada who could compete with them, the corn regulation whereby the millers and farmers of this country were taxed 7½ cents a bushel on their corn while the brewer only paid ¾ of a cent a bushel and the fake kiln dried regulation that also enabled some favoured Canadian millers to obtain all the business, largely in Quebec, to the detriment of the other millers. This condition was only cured when there was a quarrel between two of the large millers who were both supporters of the government.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman does not know much about the milling business.

Mr. ROBB. Perhaps not.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be as he says in his part of the country but it is certainly not so in Ontario.

Mr. ROBB. One objection put up by those opposed to better trade relations, is 'the way it was done.' They tell us that Canada was not properly represented, that two very ordinary men, represented Canada. Why did we not consult some one competent and pick out two men qualified to look after Canada's interests, men heavy enough and big enough to hold up our end, and send them to Washington instead of the two very ordinary men who did go, and who brought back the biggest trade order ever offered to Canada.

Why did we send two ordinary men, when so many extraordinary men were available? Well, could we have sent two men better qualified to handle this trade, and look after Canada's interests? Had we available two men who were something more than very ordinary men, and who could be trusted to work together, 'play a team game' for the best interests of Canada? Could we have sent the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden), and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), or the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Forget)? Could we have sent the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), an ex-Finance Minister, who had been there before and who knew the way? Whom could we send with him? Could we send that genial old gentleman who was once his leader, or could we send with him the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule)?

We might have sent the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), and the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, (Mr. Ames); they two working together could have given our United States friends an illuminated lecture on the great resources of this country, and where to find them.

But, Sir, looking it all over, calmly and quietly with the treaty before us, are we not justified in believing that Canada was well and ably represented and that this trade bargain is one that will prove beneficial to our people?

For my part I am prepared to support it without any fear of annexation or weakening of the ties that bind us to the mother land. I come from a district where in 1866, and again in 1870, the farmers left the plough, and the seeder to take up arms in defence of their homes and country. It was just following ten years of reciprocity with the United States from whence the invaders came. Sir, some of the men of 1866 and 1870 have gone the way of all humanity, but those who remain are as loyal to-day as they were in 1870. I am not one of those who believe that the son is less loyal than his sire. Their patriotism is not measured by an extra thirty cents on milk or fifty cents on apples, and while they do not make much noise, they are just as willing and as ready to defend their homes and country to-day, as their fathers were forty years ago.

On motion of Mr. Henderson committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the debate go on to-morrow again?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, the motion for Ways and Means will be made again.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.57 p.m.

QUESTIONS.

PAPAL ZOUAVES.

*Mr. SPROULE:

1. Are the Papal Zouaves of Quebec authorized Civilian Rifle Associations under the Militia Act and King's Regulations? If not, under what authority are they organized?
2. Are they furnished with arms, clothing, and ammunition for practice? If so, to what branch of the militia force do they belong, for what purpose is the force intended, and are they under the King's regulations?
3. What is the number of those Rifle Associations, where are they located, and what is the strength of each?
4. When were they first organized, and for what purpose?
5. Have they ever been called out for service? If so, when, how many responded to the call and where were they engaged?
6. How much have they cost the country since first organized?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN:

1, 2 and 3. The 'Papal Zouaves of Quebec' are not organized as authorized Civilian Rifle Associations, under the Militia Act and King's Regulations, except in the case of Civilian Rifle Association No. 155, known as the 'Zouave Rifle Association of Quebec.' All other Zouaves are presumably organized as private associations. The Civilian Rifle Association, No. 155, has been furnished with obsolete M. H. Rifles. They have not been furnished with any clothing, or ammunition for practice. The association does not belong to the militia force, and is intended for the same purpose as other civilian rifle associations, and to the same extent as they are under the King's Regulations—see paragraph 62 (c), Militia Act, under which the Governor in Council may make regulations for furnishing rifles and ammunition for the training and practice of persons, whether they are or are not members of the militia. This association is located in the city of Quebec, and, according to latest returns, has a membership of 142.

4. Organized by general order 100, May, 1905, for the purpose of a civilian rifle association.

5. No.

6. Nothing, so far as this department is aware, except the obsolete arms which were supplied, as stated above.

1. When were the 23rd Alberta Rangers organized?
2. When was the Macleod Squadron organized?

3. Was an officer named Duncan J Campbell captain of the Macleod Squadron, authorized in 1909 to organize three more squadrons for that corps?

4. Did Captain Campbell so organize these squadrons?

5. Did Captain Campbell recommend officers for the new squadrons?

6. Were these approved by Colonel Steele, the then D.O.C.?

7. What are the names of the officers recommended by Captain Campbell for the other squadrons?

8. When was Captain Campbell placed in command of the corps?

9. Why was Captain Campbell passed over and another officer placed in acting command of the corps?

10. What officers were appointed to the three new squadrons?

11. Why were those recommended by Captain Campbell not confirmed in their appointments?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN :

BURLINGTON BAY DREDGING.

* Mr. SEALEY:

1. Is it the intention of the government to perform dredging work in Burlington bay in the vicinity of the works of the International Harvester Company of Canada and the Oliver Chilled Plough Company Works of Canada?

2. If so, will the proposed action of the government be based on expectation of the continuance and prospective enlargement of the output of these companies?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. Yes.

2. This question cannot be properly answered by a simple affirmative. I may inform my hon. friend that a few months ago, when the reciprocity agreement was first made public, it was announced in a portion of the press that the Oliver Plough Company had given orders to discontinue work upon their undertaking at Hamilton, and I felt it to be my duty to make careful inquiry as to the plans of the company, so far as their works at Hamilton are concerned. I learned that there was no truth whatever in the report referred to, but on the contrary, that the company intends to proceed vigorously with the completion of its works, which will have a capacity for turning out at least one thousand ploughs per day.

I am in receipt of the following letter from the company. which will best answer the second part of the question of my hon. friend:

To the Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to submit some further particulars regarding the channel leading to the proposed dock of the Oliver Chilled Plough Works of Canada, Ltd., and the uses to which the channel will be put.

Our product in Canada is marketed by the International Harvester Company of Canada, Ltd., and the arrangement is such that we deliver the product to them on our dock. Under this arrangement, they are jointly interested in the early completion of the facilities for water shipment from our plant.

The plans of the Harvester Company for shipping this product to the northwest involve the services of several lake carriers, who will also be benefited by the completion of the proposed channel. These lines are as follows:

Inland lines, owning approximately 20 vessels; Merchants' Mutual lines, owning approximately 20 vessels; Canadian Lakes lines, owning approximately 12 vessels; independent owners, owning approximately 5 vessels.

It is estimated that this season's business of the International Harvester Company will require the services of 50 boats—equivalent to 2,000 carloads—for their outbound traffic. Our northwest business during this shipping season will amount approximately to 900 cars, which, at the same ratio, will require 22 boats. Next season this amount will be increased to about 45 boats.

These figures are based upon the arrangement that boats will arrive at our docks with a partial load of other merchandise, and that they will each load the equivalent of 40 cars of our product. In addition to this outbound traffic, the Harvester Company will require about 10 boats of inbound merchandise, and out plant will require from 6 to 8 boats. Thus the total number of vessels between the two plants will be in the neighbourhood of 100 for the season.

This estimate of the size of our plant and the volume of shipment is based upon the assumption that the facilities for water shipment in accordance with the plans which have been submitted to you, can be obtained. It is our expectation and desire upon the completion of these plans to transfer a portion of our large export business from South Bend to the Canadian works, thus augmenting the volume of traffic already mentioned.

We have orders on hand at this time for some 30,000 ploughs to be shipped during the present navigation season, and these shipments will begin during the latter part of April. Until such time as proper arrangements can be made for water shipments, we will be obliged to make shipments by rail.

It may be of interest to you to know that there has thus far been spent upon the plant over $500,000, that a like investment will be added during the coming year, and that the value of the completed plant, according to plans already under way, will be in the neighbourhood of $1,500,000.

With assurance of our appreciation of the service already rendered our company, and the courtesies extended to the writer on the occasion of his recent visit to Ottawa, I am,

Yours very truly,

R. J. SMART,
Works Manager.

Mr. SEALEY. Has the answer any application to the canal entrance in the Hamilton harbour? The work under consideration is to facilitate the shipping from these new industries there, and in view of this enormous increase of traffic——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order. He will have to wait until the orders of the day are called.

ST. CHARLES RIFLE RANGE, WINNIPEG,

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds):

1. Has the old rifle range near St. Charles, Winnipeg, been sold or has any arrangement been made for the sale thereof? If so, to whom and at what price?
2. Was the property valued? If so, by whom, and what valuation or valuations were placed thereon?
3. Was the sale advertised? If so, in what manner and for what length of time?
4. Generally speaking, what were the conditions and circumstances under which the sale was conducted or arranged?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. The old rifle range near St. Charles, Winnipeg, comprising 221 acres, has been sold to Messrs. Pellatt & Pellatt of Toronto for the sum of $123,000.00.

2. The property was valued by Mr. George Pope, Right-of-Way and Claims Agent, Land Department, Grand Trunk Railway, who stated that he considered $600.00 an acre a good outside figure for the property on a cash basis. Lieut.-Col. J. Lyons Biggar, Director of Transport and Supplies, an officer of the Militia of wide experience in valuing lands, was sent to Winnipeg to specially inquire into the question of the value of the property. Lieut.-Col. Biggar concurred in Mr. Pope's valuation, and endeavoured to obtain tenders, whilst in Winnipeg, for the property, but without success.

3. The sale was advertised in the public press as follows:

Manitoba Free Press	6 insertions
Canadian Farmer, Winnipeg ..	2 "
Norwestern	2 "

4. The sale was authorized by parliament, the proceeds to be used for the purchase of a site for the new range. In due course, an order in council was passed, and the sale advertised as above. The highest tender obtained at that time, which complied with the conditions, was for the sum of $44,650.00. This tender was considered too low, and was not accepted. Later a tender was received from Messrs. Pellatt & Pellatt of Toronto of $123,000.00 for the property, and, subsequent to that tender being submitted, another was obtained from a firm in Winnipeg of $133,000.00. An order in council was then passed authorizing the sale of the property to the last referred to firm, and they were given a certain time to pay ten per cent of the purchase price—a usual condition of such a sale. That time was several times extended, and, the instalment not being paid, another order in council was passed authorizing the sale to the next highest tenderer, Messrs. Pellatt & Pellatt, for the sum of $123,000.00.

ST. PETER'S BREAKWATER.

Mr. FRASER:

1. Is it the intention of the government to repair or extend the breakwater at St. Peter's Bay, P.E.I., during this season?
2. If so, will tenders be called for same, and what amount of money will be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. Yes.
2. $2,500 for repairs which will be done by contract or by day's labour on the recommendation of the Chief Engineer.

CONDITION OF PARLIAMENT GROUNDS.

Mr. HUGHES. I have the honour again to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the condition of the grounds and parliamentary buildings and of the street in front of the parliament buildings. The minister assured me yesterday that the drinking water used in this building was sterilized. May I ask, has he had, and will he produce, an analysis of the water, the so-called sterilized water, being supplied to the members in this building, and will he furnish us also with information as to the system of sterilization used? He can bring that statement down at his convenience. I desire also to call attention to the clouds of dust that have been hovering round these buildings to-day and especially along Wellington street. I take the liberty of suggesting to the minister that the opinion is held by many that that street has not been even swept for a number of years. It has been suggested that the pavements around the buildings might be either oiled, or washed with water from the hydrants, every night, some time after midnight. The gentlemen conducting that operation might be allowed time to take it easy. Their work in the day is so arduous that it would not be well to hurry them. In the late hours of the night is the proper time to wash the streets, for then it can be done with a minimum of inconvenience to the public. I am satisfied that it is only necessary to draw the attention of the minister to this matter. I am sure he himself, when going to his office this morning, must have noticed the clouds of dust on Wellington street and around these buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As to the analysis of the water, I have in my possession the certificate of the gentleman who makes the analyses. I get these analyses week by week.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is the analyst?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Higgins. He is in the pathological department of the laboratory at the Experimental Farm. I shall be glad to submit that to-morrow, and, if possible, to give also the description of the process of sterilization. With regard to the other matter, I appreciate the valuable suggestions that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has made from time to time with the desire of improving conditions, and shall take care that his present suggestion is conveyed to the proper official of the department.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to request the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that yesterday he promised to give me information with respect to two returns. One return was ordered on December 5.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The return is not so easily made up as the hon. member (Mr. Lennox) seems to think. The motion was in this form:

> Return showing the number of public buildings occupied in whole or in part as post offices, giving in the case of partial occupation only, the other services to which the building is applied and the part and proportion of the building used by each service; the name of the place in which the building is situated and its population; the total amount of public money expended on each building; including site and equipment, down to the end of the financial year, the postal revenue in each case, and the revenue, if any, received by the government from the buildings as rentals, or otherwise, and the sources of such revenue.

The hon. gentleman will see that this means that every building that is rented for post office purposes throughout the Dominion must be inquired into, the rent paid for it, the space occupied, and its value. Also with regard to buildings erected by the government, not only since confederation, but before confederation. I would like it if the hon. gentleman would think it over and see if he really wants all this information. A return in the form in which it is called for would involve inquiry in all parts of the country and would take months to prepare.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister puts an unnecessarily broad construction upon it. I do not want as much information as he indicates. There is one part, however, in which he is quite right. The return calls for information as to how any building occupied by the Post Office Department is also occupied by other departments. I could dispense with that. I want particularly to know what public buildings—I do not say anything of others—and I do not think the return includes any others——

Mr. PUGSLEY. It does.

Mr. LENNOX. If it does then I am wrong. I want to ascertain what public buildings or portions of public buildings are occupied by the postal service, and where it is a portion of a building, what proportion, whether one-third, one-quarter, or whatever it may be, and the revenue received. I do not think the minister will find it difficult to furnish that information. And I may say that I think the time for the government to consider matters of this kind is before the order is made. It is unfortunate that this matter has been allowed to go on for nearly four months and nothing done. I hope the minister will facilitate the preparation of that information, confining it to public buildings that are used in whole or in part for post office purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. With the motion limited in that way, it will be infinitely easier to get the information.

Mr. LENNOX. It is a pity the minister has not done anything before. I understood he was to give me information as to the other return. Perhaps I was wrong; but I have not found out whose duty it is to furnish the return to which I refer—regarding aliens employed by the government and residing outside of Canada. I have asked several times for that information, and I think the Minister of Public Works intimated that he was going to deal with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. LENNOX. Then, will the minister who is charged with it please rise and tell us what he will do?

Mr. MURPHY. While I have no special charge of the matter, I would like to expedite the preparation of the return. Will the hon. gentleman please give me the date of the order?

Mr. LENNOX. It was the 18th of January. Will the minister (Mr. Murphy) please mention it to-morrow?

Mr. MURPHY. I will have attention drawn to it and will try to have some information for my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) to-morrow.

BURLINGTON BAY DREDGING.

Mr. SEALEY. Referring to the question which I asked as to dredging work in Burlington bay, I desire to ask if, in view of the enormous increase in vessel traffic in Hamilton harbour, coupled with the general increase in business there, it is the intention of the government to make a beginning at the widening and deepening of Burlington Beach canal which forms the entrance to Burlington bay and Hamilton harbour, in order to avoid the congestion of traffic and consequent danger. This danger is quite serious, for last year there were a couple of collisions and some groundings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The subject of widening and deepening the Burlington canal, which, as my hon. friend (Mr. Sealey) knows has been brought to my attention on several occasions, both by himself and by delegations from the city of Hamilton, is regarded by my department and myself as of very great importance, and the subject is now engaging the earnest consideration of the department.

NETHERLAND LOAN COMPANY.

Mr. MONK. On December 5 last I moved for correspondence between the government and Mr. Preston, Trade Commissioner to Holland, with relation to the Netherland Loan Company. That correspondence was brought down, but two letters are missing. Later, on the 6th of February, I moved for additional correspondence, which was brought down. I am informed there are two letters that have passed since that are important to complete the file. Will the right hon. gentleman see that the Department of Commerce furnishes that additional correspondence passed since the last order? It is somewhat late to make a motion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will do so.

WAYS AND MEANS—VICTORIA MUSEUM.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. OWEN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), if he is having an inspection made of the new museum, and if he is, what he thinks about the large cracks in the tile floors of the building, about an inch in width, and the cracks in the wall from the bottom to the top, running in all directions. Now I am not opposed to spending money in the erection of public buildings where they are really needed, but I want the people to get value for their money. I think that building is costing the country about a million and a half, and I claim that we are not getting value for our money. I would like to know if anybody was looking after that building, during its erection, in the interest of the people. The minister has several engineers in his department, and I think he might have spared two or three of them to go down there and look after the public interest while that building was in course of erection. I would like also to know if he is going to take the building off the hands of the contractor in the condition it is now in. It is in a shameful condition for a new building. I would like also to know if the contractor, in entering into the contract, put up a cash cheque as a guarantee that he would carry out the plans and specifications, and if he did not, whether the cheque would be turned over to the government. I would like to know what the minister thinks about the condition the building is in.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that some time ago I went through the building, I have not been there lately. My attention has been called to the fact that there is a crack in the building; I have not heard anything as to the floors which my hon. friend refers to. But with regard to the crack in the wall, I have given instructions to have it examined, not only by the chief architect, but by another competent man with him, from day to day, and to report to me whether there is any further settling, which would be evidenced of course by an enlargement of the crack. Yesterday I received a verbal report from the chief architect that there had not recently been any evidence of settling. With regard to the contract itself, it is in the ordinary form. The contractor was obliged to put up security for the satisfactory performance of his contract, and the building will not be taken off his hands until the chief architect certifies that it has been fully completed to his satisfaction, and in accordance with the contract. I shall make it my business to inquire with regard to the defects which my hon. friend says he has discovered in the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. Possibly it was before the time of the Minister of Public Works, but I would ask if he received any notification from the contractor stating that a clay foundation was not suitable for a building of that weight, and that the area of the foundation of the building should be much greater than was called for in the specifications. Does the minister know anything about that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As this is a matter of some importance, perhaps my hon. friend would allow his question to stand, and I will make the necessary inquiry.

Mr. SPROULE. This defect in the museum has been known to the public for some time, and only to-day the minister says he will make inquiry. Evidently he has made no inquiry up to the present time. It appears to me rather strange that we are spending so much money on a building like that, and yet there had been no attempt to examine the foundation to determine whether the nature of the soil was such that it would bear up the weight of the building that was to rest upon it. The building is cracking from top to bottom, I have been told, and is really dangerous to those who occupy that building, and no attention is paid to it. I think any architect of ability could have determined pretty accurately what the nature of the soil was, whether sand or clay, or part sand and part clay, and whether it would sustain the proposed column of brick, stone and mortar of the height of that building, containing the number of cubic feet that would be in it. You would naturally suppose that a competent architect would make the foundation wide enough for the purpose. I presume the building is erected according to plans and specifications. There seems to be some fatality attending all the buildings erected by this government, for instance, the Laurier Tower and the Quebec bridge.

Mr. LENNOX. It is the same contractor, I think.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether it is or not. The Quebec bridge and the Laurier Tower showed the same defects until the catastrophe happened. And so it will be with this building; it will probably stand until it finally tumbles down and many human lives will be sacrificed, and after that we will have to go to work and erect it again. Surely the Minister of Public Works, who is apparently a very intelligent man, and would allow no such bad work in a building of his own, should have given more attention to this building than he apparently has done. There must be something defective in the oversight or in the management.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend seems to forget that this work was designed and its construction undertaken and was well along towards completion, so far as the exterior walls were concerned, before I became Minister of Public Works.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). You assumed the responsibility of the other fellow.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), seems to aim at me personally, because he says I am apparently an intelligent man. I may not be wanting in intelligence, and my predecessor might have had a good deal of intelligence; therefore, I take it he was making his remarks with reference to myself personally. It seems to me that I have done all I could since I have been minister in connection with the matter. The chief architect has not only been giving the erection of the building his very close personal attention, but he has also had an assistant, a member of the architectural staff in the department, on the work from day to day, I think I am safe in saying upon every working day in the year, the assistant architect from the department has been engaged upon the work.

Mr. HUGHES. Are not those cracks all due to the foundation and not to the construction of the wall?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared at this moment to state what is the cause of the cracks. I take it that the cracks in the wall to which I have referred would be due to the settling of a portion of the building, the settling probably of that wall to a little further extent than the other portions of the building have settled. It is not at all an uncommon thing for a heavy building, built upon a clay foundation, to settle, and if it settles uniformly it would be because the consistency of the clay foundation is the same all over and there will be no harm done. It is not at all an uncommon thing for a heavy stone building to settle one or two inches, or perhaps a little more than that even during the course of construction, or after it is constructed. I would assume that where this wall has settled there must have been, down below the level to which it was excavated, some softer material so that there has been a little more settling just at that particular point than at other parts of the building. What I am doing is to have the wall watched with the utmost care. I am informed that there is no danger. The chief architect tells me that the moment he ascertains there is any additional settling he will let me know. I think that is all I can do. I do not see that I can do anything more in the public interest than I am doing. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) undoubtedly draws upon his imagination when he speaks of a fatality accompanying the erection of public buildings by this government.

Mr. SPROULE. It is a matter of history.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be ancient history. We have erected hundreds of buildings all over the country which are a credit to the people of the country, and a credit to those who have had charge of their construction.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, about a year and a little more ago I asked the attention of the House for a short time to the matter of the secretariat of the Imperial Conference, tracing up the history of the Imperial Conference from its commencement in 1887 until the year 1907, or a little later and showing, as I did in tracing up that history, the gradual widening and development of the old Intercolonial Conference in its progress, the larger importance which it gradually assumed, and the greater influence it exercised on the affairs of the empire. I do not make any apology to-day for asking the attention of the House to some matters in connection therewith with the view of bringing the history up to the present time. As I did on the former occasion I propose to do now—treat the matter in an altogether non-partisan spirit, at the same time, not thinking that because I am doing that, I should refrain from criticism of any point which seemed to me to be worthy of criticism, any more than I should abstain from giving praise where any praise is due.

In order to connect the story of to-day with that of a year and a half ago I shall remind the House that at that time the determination had been arrived at to constitute a body which was called for by the overseas dominions, and the necessity for which had been recognized for many years, and was acquiesced in by the British government itself. There was need of something to ensure continuity of work in the Intercolonial or Imperial Conference, to see that information, such as it needed for its work, was prepared, so that when the delegates of the empire, in the short time that was allowed them in London, met to confer together, they should have the very best information possible at their hands; in fact should have this information at their hands long before they met there so that it would be possible for them to digest it, to consult with their colleagues at home with reference to it, and be prepared with their views, and prepared as well with the policy which they would adopt with reference to each of these great questions. There were two views with reference to this secretariat. One was advanced by South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, which was in favour of an independent secretariat under the presidency of the Prime Minister of Great Britain with officials paid by itself, and all the expenses met by contributions from the different parts of the empire which were represented there. They believed that in that way the business of the secretariat, and the business of the Imperial Conference would be carried on under more independent auspices, and that the touch which would be kept between the outlying dominions and the central government would be closer and hedged around by less formality. The other view was taken by the Dominion of Canada, and acquiesced in by the British government, that while something was necessary and they were willing to have something done to meet the end in view, the responsibility of the secretariat to one of the departments of the British government should be kept, that is, that it might be formed in connection with, and under the responsibility of the Colonial Office. As is usual in all these cases where an agreement is not possible a compromise was made, and Lord Elgin at that time promised that he would take immediately in hand the work of providing, in so far as that could be done under these conditions, for that which was deemed necessary by all the dominions. As a consequence, and to make the matter short, the Colonial Office has been reformed. It has been divided into three parts, one called the Dominions Department, which has to do solely with the affairs of the self-governing dominions; the second, which has to do entirely with the Crown colonies, and protectorates, and the third, or general department which takes up the general routine business in connection with the office itself, and with both of these great divisions of the empire. The formation, in brief, is as follows: The senior Under Secretary of State has been made the controller of the Dominions Department. Under him the junior assistant of the Colonial Department, Mr. Just, has been made secretary of the secretariat, and also permanent secretary of the Imperial Conference. The Imperial Conference will not have from session to session a new man and a man unknown to its work as its secretary. This then is, in brief the formation which has been made, and it has been in operation now for about a year and a half. I think it is well at the first to read the resolution which sets out the will or the wish of this conference with reference to its general constitution. The first resolution that was passed at the Imperial Conference of 1907 was this:

CONSTITUTION OF THE IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

That it will be to the advantage of the empire if a conference, to be called the Imperial Conference, is held every four years, at which questions of common interest may be discussed and considered as between His Majesty's government and his governments of the self-governing Dominions beyond the seas. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom wil be ex-officio President, and the Prime Ministers of the self-governing Dominions ex-officio members of the conference, The Secretary of State for the Colonies will be an ex-officio member of the conference and will take the chair in the absence of the president. He will arrange for such Imperial Conferences after communication with the Prime Ministers of the respective Dominions.

Such other Ministers as the respective governments may appoint will also be members of the Conference—it being understood that, except by special permission of the conference, each discussion will be conducted by not more than two representatives from each government, and that each government will have only one vote.

That it is desirable to establish a system by which the several governments represented shall be kept informed during the periods between the Conferences in regard to matters which have been or may be subjects for discussion, by means of a permanent secretarial staff, charged, under the direction of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the duty of obtaining information for the use of the Conference of attending to its resolutions, and of conducting correspondence on matters relating to its affairs.

That upon matters of importance requiring consultation between two or more governments which cannot conveniently be postponed until the next Conference, or involving subjects of a minor character or such as call for detailed consideration, subsidiary Conferences should be held between representatives of the governments concerned specially chosen for the purpose.

The adoption of that resolution and the subsequent formation of the secretarial staff in connection with the Colonial Secretary's office marks a distinct advancement in the history of this, one of the great, and I believe destined to become one of the greatest institutions in connection with the empire. What then has been done since that formation based upon that resolution? I hold in my hand a report 'Dominions No. 2' of which I should like to see every member of this parliament and every public institution in this country have a copy. I repeat the suggestion I made a little while ago with reference to another document, that the Dominion government should order from the Home Office—if they do not see fit to undertake the publication here—at least 500 copies of that report, so that a copy of it may be in the hands of every member and Senator, and that a certain number of copies might be distributed to the universities and to our great public libraries. I do not think it would be wasting time to give a very slight digest of what is contained in 'Dominions No. 2.' In the first place it deals with the personnel of the governments of the different dominions, and gives short admirably done sketches containing a great deal of information as to the persons who constituted the governments of the dominions, during the period of history which the book records. After that come the conferences held during 1909 and 1910. The Imperial Conference about which discussion has already taken place in this House; the naval conference in reference to naval defence and a description of what was arrived at, at that conference, and acquiesced in by the dominions and the British government with regard to the defence of the empire by sea and by land. There is given a short sketch of the Imperial Press conference which, although not political, did during that year, and will for years to come as it meets from time to time, wield a very great influence in the empire looking towards the diffusion of information and of what we may call the spirit and essence of the empire—the better spirit and essence of the empire to which it will give interpretation. Then follows a report of the seventh session of the chambers of commerce of the empire held in far away Sydney, Australasia. After that come the reports of commissions and committees: The Shipping Rings commissions about which a great deal of interesting information is given; the copyright commission and what has eventuated from it; and the advisory committee of commercial intelligence which marks a step forward in the history of the trade and commerce of the empire. The British board of trade has appointed a commercial intelligence committee from amongst its members, together with a representative from each one of the outlying dominions in the person of the High Commissioner, and, the secretary of the Imperial Conference is a member of that committee. That intelligence committee has to do the work of scouting for the trade and commerce hosts of the empire; the gathering and collating of information, the making of suggestions which the board of trade may carry out or which may be carried out to a still larger extent by the members of the Imperial Conference in the various parts of the world. Then comes the history of the treaties of arbitration and the agreements with respect to the different parts of the empire. It is pleasing to note that as to arbitration treaties, in the year and a half which is treated of in this report, arbitration treaties have been arranged between Great Britain and Germany, and Norway, and Sweden, and Portugal, and Switzerland, by the extension for five years of previous arrangements It is instructive and a little flattering to see that in reference to commercial conventions and agreements the Dominion of Canada bulks up large in number. There are: the Franco-Canadian Commercial Convention, the agreement with reference to the abolishing of the surtax between Canada and Germany, the arrangement between Canada and the United States of 1910, the boundary waters treaty, the freshwaters fishery treaty, the delimitation of the frontier on Passamaquoddy Bay, the delimitation of the far western frontier between Canada and the United States, and the agreement for the Hague Tribunal arbitration. Outside of these there are but three conventions as between parts of the empire and foreign countries. The delimitation of the southern boundary of the British Empire in Walfisch bay; the delimitation in New Guinea between British and German territory, and the convention between Portugal as ruler in Mozambique and the Transvaal, in reference to certain difficulties which had arisen there.

Then comes a short history and a very valuable compendium of the principal legislation in all the outlaying parts of the empire, that were represented in the Imperial Conference. After that is given a very readable digest of the principal current progress for the year and a half in the British dominions, and what I think is particularly useful, (and I imagine this was placed in this report on the suggestion of the government of Newfoundland), the principal legislation of the different overseas dominions is set out in full. For instance in the case of Australia they give the Naval Bill and the Military Bill which provide for an absolute change in the basis, and methods of defence in Australia. Similar information is given with reference to Canada, industrial legislation, forestry legislation, all the principal items of legislation, all the principal items of legislation in all the dominions of the empire are collated and placed in this book. The whole report is of the utmost value in that it makes clear and patent and easily obtainable by every dominion the outstanding facts of the progress, development and legislation of every other member of the empire, so that we can turn from our own parish affairs, wide as our parish may be, into an atmosphere which broadens our view and enables us to see what the other members of the great British Empire are doing, the lines of their policy, and the methods by which they are working them out. This is all fruitful and suggestive information which may be availed of with mutual advantage. I, therefore, repeat my suggestion to the Prime Minister that a sufficient number of copies of that report, which will now be an annual report, should be obtained and distributed in the way I have suggested. It would be worth the expense, and I have no doubt the Prime Minister will take the matter into his favourable consideration.

I have brought this matter to the attention of the House to show that something has been done. The conference of 1907 met, conferred and parted; but matters did not stand still at the parting of that conference, something has been at work since along the lines which were laid down by that conference, steadily operating towards the embodiment and working out into the active policies of the different parts of the empire of the conclusions which were reached and embodied in the resolutions adopted. I wish to amplify that by a brief allusion to the different parts of the work which have been carried out by this secretariat since 1907. Twenty resolutions were passed by the conference of 1907. One resolution I have read to you. The second resolution had to do with the defence of the empire, and the third with the general staff service of the empire. These have been discussed in the House and I shall not allude to them further. Resolution No. 4 is an important resolution having to do with emigration. No hon. member in this House will object to the statement that the question of emigration or migration of populations within the empire itself is a most important one. Resolution No. 4 read:

> That it is desirable to encourage British emigrants to proceed to British colonies rather than foreign countries.
> That the Imperial government be requested to co-operate with any colonies desiring immigrants in assisting suitable persons to emigrate.

The Colonial Office note to that is as follows, and it is somewhat suggestive.

> The view taken respecting the subject matter of this resolution was that, in the absence of any request from one or other of the dominions for co-operation in a particular matter, the needs of the situation were, as stated by Colonel Seely in the House of Commons on 22nd June, sufficiently met by the Offices of the Self-Governing Dominions in the United Kingdom and by the Emigrants' Information Office, which affords full and trustworthy information to intending emigrants to the British Dominions.

No suggestion towards the embodiment of the principle of that resolution in a more active form was made by any of the overseas dominions, even by Canada where the subject is of the utmost importance, and, therefore, the British government rested upon the methods which were already at work, namely the immigration offices maintained by the different overseas dominions and the government emigrants' information office. The Colonial Office end their note with these words:

> The whole question is, however, again under consideration.

Evidently they were not satisfied with the view expressed in the first part of the note, and evidently greater interest has been taken as we quite know to be the case, therefore, the matter is now being again brought under full consideration, and I sincerely trust that the Imperial Conference which is shortly to assemble will not allow such an important question as that to any longer remain without further action and complete co-operation. Emigration or migration of population within the empire affords a wider and better opportunity for healthful and helpful co-operation between Great Britain and her colonies than any other matter of common policy between the different parts of the empire. Then resolution 5 had to do with judicial appeals. In regard to it draft rules for the colonial appeals were drawn by the British Office, and an Act merging these or empowering these was passed. So far as I can learn, while some of the outlying dominions have acquiesced in those rules, in the case of Australia, there was some difficulty in the way, and in the case of Canada I am quite unable to make out what action was taken, and possibly no final action has been yet taken.

The next resolution is one of preferential trade, and I shall ask the House permission to read that because it is apropos at present as affirming the position taken in 1902. In fact that resolution is simply an affirmation of the proposition passed at the conference of 1902, and is as follows:

1. That this conference recognizes that the principle of preferential trade between the United Kingdom and His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas would stimulate and facilitate mutual commercial intercourse, and would, by promoting the development of the resources and industies of the several ports, strengthen the empire.

2. That this conference recognizes that, in the present circumstances of the colonies, it is not practicable to adopt a general system of free trade as between the mother country and the British dominions beyond the seas.

3. That with a view, however, to promoting the increase of trade within the empire, it is desirable that those colonies which have not already adopted such a policy should, as far as their circumstances permit, give substantial preferential treatment to the products and manufactures of the United Kingdom.

4. That the prime ministers of the colonies respectfully urge on His Majesty's government the expediency of granting in the United Kingdom preferential treatment to the products and manufactures of the colonies, either by the exemption from or reduction of duties now or hereafter imposed.

5. That the prime ministers present at the conference undertake to submit to their respective governments, at the earliest opportunity, the principle of the resolution, and to request them to undertake such measures as may be necessary to give effect to it.

I call attention to the fact that this was a complete affirmation of the ground taken in 1902 and for five years after. After a certain amount of experimental knowledge had been obtained, after colonial sentiment had been canvassed, these Dominions, assembled together, deliberately put their seal to that statement of principle with reference to preferential trade; and I call attention here to the fact that that was not a statement which called for any one-sided preferential trade, but affirmed that the overseas dominions considered it would be advisable for Great Britain herself to give a preference to overseas dominions in return for the preference they were giving her.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the number of that resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. Number 6. It points out the way in which that might be done—either by the exemption from or reduction of duties now or hereafter to be imposed. I do not propose to discuss that, but simply wish to put it on record.

Then resolutions 7 and 8 deal with commercial relations. I shall not read those. They are generally in favour of everything possible being done in order to extend commercial facilities between the different parts of the empire and the empire itself.

In connection with this I think that a step forward of great importance has been made in connection with the Commercial Intelligence Department. I told a moment ago that the British Board of Trade had an intelligence committee, and how it was constituted. That committee reported and recommended a certain course of action, and that action met with the approval of the Board of Trade and has been put into operation. It is this, that commercial commissioners shall be appointed by Great Britain, one for each of the outlying British Dominions, and that in connection with those commercial commissioners there shall also be travelling agents and stationary commercial correspondents for the different dominions. These have already been appointed. Mr. Richard Grigg has been appointed as the commercial agent or commissioner for Great Britain in the Dominion of Canada, and he has a staff which is being constantly enlarged, of correspondents in different parts of the Dominion with whom he keeps in touch, while he himself visits different localities. There are similar appointments in Newfoundland, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. So that we have had for a period of two years this new force at work, and very able, experienced and competent officers they all are. They have been selected because of their ability and experience. One has only to think of the operations of men of that kind, with their staffs in every part of the Dominion, to form an idea of the stimulating and developing power which this method of operating cannot fail to have upon the development and increase of trade within the empire itself.

The next resolution has reference to the coasting trade and navigation laws. Not very much has been done in that connection. I notice that Canada passed an order in council by which coasting privileges were to be taken away. I think, however, that since then that order in council has been withheld from operation. Whether it has now taken effect or not I do not know. But so far as my information goes, it is not yet operative in the whole and it may not be operative at all. However, at that time the Canadian government came to the conclusion that these coasting trade privileges should be abolished in the cases of countries not reciprocating and passed an order in council to that effect. Along with that there is a piece of information, which is no doubt known to the commercial world, and that is that the restrictive laws regarding passenger and freight carriage between the United States and Hawaii and the United States and the Philippines —which really had the effect of making those far distant dominions of the United States a part of the territory of the United States as regards the prohibition of foreign carrying trade privileges—were, as regards the Philippines, abolished conditionally and with reference to Hawaii a Bill was introduced for their abolition, but whether that Bill was carried into law I do not know.

Resolution 11 is an important resolution. It has to do with treaty obligations. What has resulted from it? The secretary has carried out the resolution of the Conference, the information has been gathered and published, and will be found in Cols. 3395 and 3396 of the British Reports and in a special volume which contains all the existing commercial treaties. So that we have now in succinct form all that there is obtainable regarding these treaties and preferential arrangements.

Resolutioin 13 is an important one. It refers to uniformity in trade marks, and the object was to have, throughout the empire, as far as it possibly could be done, uniform trade marks. If this could be brought about, of course, it would prevent a great deal of confusion and a great deal of imposition, and would lead to a clearer and more straightforward method of conducting commercial operations, and would tend to prevent impositions from foreign countries upon customers within the empire by the simulation or evasion of trade marks as they exist in British countries. Not very much was brought about in the matter. On March 5, 1909, the whole matter was laid before the overseas dominions. South Africa was favourable, Newfoundland was favourable, New Zealand was favourable, Australia does not seem to have taken much interest in the matter; and Canada came to the conclusion late in 1910 that there would be no advantage in discussing the matter. However, what the secretariat did was to put all this correspondence and all these answers into form and distribute them to the chief governments concerned, which at present have them under advisement.

Resolution 14 is an important one. It has reference to uniformity of trade statistics. Any one sees that that would be of very great advantage for purposes of comparison and of actual knowledge, if it could be brought about. What the British Board of Trade suggested was that there should be a common year—they recommended the calendar year—and that there should be as complete a statement as possible of the countries of origin and the countries of destination, so that the trade reports would really tell how and with whom business was carried on. To a certain extent, that is given now, but not to an extent which makes it actually reliable as to the whole facts of the case. They ask that there should be an amplification of the schedules of the tariffs, so that more definite and detailed information could be given. That was not a count against Canada so much, because the details in Canada's schedules are pretty extensive. With reference to some of the overseas dominions, however, that does not hold good. Another request was that the items should be grouped in at least three great groups—foods, raw materials of commerce, and manufactured goods—if four or more could not be had. Any one can see that if that could be brought about, both for purposes of comparison and for actual information, a great point would be gained. There is difficulty in adopting the calendar year. Australia, South Africa and New Zealand—or Newfoundland, I have forgotten which—have adopted the calendar year, while others have adopted a different fiscal year, and it is difficult and almost impossible to change. But the making of an abstract for the calendar year would not be impossible, and in that way the difficulty to that extent could be overcome. With reference to the groupings, that has been agreed to, and, in fact, the minute of the board of trade has been agreed to with the exceptions I have spoken of, the matter of the fiscal year. This latter, however, is not by any means the great objection, and it will be possible, if that is all, to get not only the groups arranged into what you may call natural divisions, but to get also the groupings of commerce with the United Kingdom, British possessions and foreign countries, which would be a great gain, and also the countries of origin and the countries of destination. To-day, the value of the Canadian statistics are lessened and the facts of the trade are not brought out because of the difficulty of indicating the port of destination. For example, many goods enter the United States though they are destined for Canada, and, therefore, are not clearly shown in our returns as to country of origin. In the same way many of our exports do not go out through Canadian ports and the country of destination is not shown. Thus, some of our trade to the West Indies, for instance, goes to the credit of the United States, and vice versa, I suppose. The House will see that great progress has been made by the Dominion's department in bringing that matter to the position in which it is left at the present time. Without wearying the House, I will just mention the other chief resolutions: Uniformity of company law, which has still some stages to go before a satisfactory solution is reached; reciprocity in the domain of Dominion land surveyors, which, I believe is to be settled, if settled it can be, at a convention of land surveyors from all the different dominions, which is to meet in the autumn of this year in London; international penny postage, which is gradually moving on, and with reference to which the secretariat has brought out all details of the changes made since 1907, showing the gratifying progress that has been made in the direction of the final stage, which we hope will soon be reached, of complete international penny postage. Then, there is resolution No. 18, with reference to imperial cable communication, which is running along on the principle adopted before 1907, which principle the British government says has guided the policy since 1907. Resolution No. 19 deals with a very important question, that of naturalization. A committee of the imperial bodies, the Home Office, the Foreign Office, the India Office and the Colonial Office, with a secretary, was appointed, and has been at work upon this question of naturalization. A memorandum of the naturalization laws of all the dominions has been prepared and has been sent out to the different governments for their consideration, and a draft Bill has been prepared. This draft Bill and the information which has been collated will be the subject of discussion at the Imperial Conference, which is soon to meet. Then there is the development of communication within the empire, covered by resolution 20. That has been sent to a committee of His Majesty's ministers and is now under consideration. Nothing has been done which is recorded, at least.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you see that the conference, which met in 1907, left behind it the record of its work in the shape of twenty matured resolutions. The working body, so to speak, of that Imperial Conference immediately took up that work which was left, and I must say with commendable promptness and assiduity. Most of the communications began early in 1907, showing that no time was lost in the secretariat in getting hold of these resolutions and pushing them forward into embodiment, and getting information upon them, and in all points urging them forward with all possible speed. Of these twenty resolutions a large number have actually solidified into a permanent policy and operation. When the Imperial Conference meets again it may have something to do with amendments, with re-touching these great questions, in so far as improvements can be made, but with many of them they will have seen the results of their work being actually enjoyed by the empire and the dominions. Others are left over, but with a wealth of information accumulated, printed, all ready in the hands of the ministers from the different overseas dominions, ready for their discussion, and for their decision when they come to the next imperial conference. So much now with reference to the history. It is enough to make us feel grateful that a step was taken in 1907 for permanence and for this actual mechanism of operation and fulfilment. It goes to clinch the statement I made that we have here an institution which has not only come into existence, but which has more than justified its existence, and which justifies to-day our faith in its permanence and in its further evolution.

Now I must relieve the picture a little by some criticism of the Canadian government, given because I think it is proper, and because it may have the effect of preventing laxness in the future. Whilst it is noteworthy that the secretariat jumped at its work, and put its work through, and pressed it to a conclusion with commendable zeal and promptitude, it is quite the opposite with reference to the Dominion government in its dealings with the secretariat. I am sorry to say that the Diminion government has been the most lax of any, the most dilatory, going so far almost as to show an indifference to the work of the very secretariat to which it gave birth. Now I am sure that we must not attach the latter meaning; therefore, we must criticise the laxness and lack of promptness which has characterized the way in which the Dominion government has dealt with these matters. Let me give some particulars. The organization of the secretariat itself was a most important thing, as to the plans for organization, as for its consideration, and as to suggestions. I find Canada was asked on September 21, 1907. Time went on, until May 15, 1908, no reply having been given, a reply was asked. It went on till August 18, 1908, and no reply being forthcoming, again a reply was asked, and up to the present time no reply has been given. So that with reference to the secretariat itself, our government is in the position of having actually neglected to answer the representations of the secretariat with reference to its own organization. Whilst every other one of the dominions was prompt with its commendations and its suggestions, the Dominion government, for some reason or other, was dilatory, and actually did not reply to the communications. Then with regard to judicial appeals; the matter was placed before this government August 29, 1908; February 3, 1909, as no reply was given, a reply was asked; March 5, 1909, as no reply was given it was asked again, and up to this date no reply has been made with reference to that, so far as the books show. With regard to uniformity in trade marks, on March 5, 1909, the subject was brought to the attention of this government; March 1, 1910, nearly one year after, no reply having been given, they were asked again, and so far as we find in these reports, no reply has been given to this date. With reference to uniformity in trade statistics; on July 30, 1907, the matter was placed before the government; December 14, 1908, no reply; a summary was sent to it of the replies of the other governments, and the attention of Canada was asked to it. Time went on till January 19, 1909, and then the answer was in the negative. On March 3, 1909, they were asked to review their answer, and on April 19, 1909, they did review their answer, and they came to the requirements of the board of trade, giving their adhesion to the proposals of that board. With reference to the uniformity of company laws, on July 31, 1907, a memorandum from the imperial government was sent, with a desire for consideration and reply. February 26, 1908, no reply; a reply was asked; April 21, 1908, no reply still, a reply was asked, and it was given out then that the question had been sent to the provincial governments, which ought to have been done nearly a year before. There again was a delay. With regard to surveyors' reciprocity, the same remark may be made. The matter was brought to the attention of the government April 8, 1908; on October 20, 1908, they were asked for a reply, and it was not until March 4, 1909, that they sent a reply in answer to the first request. With reference to naturalization, on November 9, 1908, the matter was sent to them with a draft Bill, and they were asked for suggestions. On June 17, 1910, no reply, a reply was asked, and up to the present no answer has been given. With reference to marriage facilities, on June 20, 1907, the matter was sent to all the different governments, with a memorandum of the Registrar General and a draft Bill in order to obtain the views of the provincial governments. Well, that went on until September 29, 1908, but no answers were sent, several reminders having been given to the government.

Now that is the criticism I have to make, I think it is a fair criticism with reference to this matter. Considering its importance, and considering the importance of Canada in the conference, it would have been only courteous and right for the government to have been more prompt in its dealings with the correspondence. Now that we have a Minister of External Affairs, there ought to be the utmost promptitude in dealing with those matters. The very reason why the secretariat was demanded by all the dominions was because of the delays in the roundabout methods of communication, and the consequent disheartening that grew up as a result. It is quite too bad, then, that, under the new order of things which was to remedy that, we find one of the principal members lagging behind, dilatory, lax, almost indifferent in the matter of this correspondence. I hope my right hon. friend will not think that I have been too severe in that criticism. I quite know that, the matter having now been mentioned, more care will be taken in the future. That is business sense as well as a proper official treatment.

Now, for one moment, we come to the conference of 1911, and again my remarks will partake of the nature of criticism. Of course, one of the things which was urged with regard to the Imperial Conference was first, that it should be a stated convention every four years. If it was fixed the dominions would look forward to it, they would prepare for it, they would take measures to make it effective. Then, it having once been established, the next thing to do was to select the great questions which were to form the subjects of discussion and in order to get them the secretariat goes to work and corresponds with every one of the outlying dominions, asks each one to make its deliberations, to suggest its questions and therefore help in the formation of the agenda, which could then be sent to each of the dominions in good time before the next Imperial Conference was convened with the information gathered by the secretariat, which alone made it useful, in order that these proposed resolutions might be placed in the hands of the overseas dominions. What was necessary? Why, that these questions should be submitted as quickly as possible in order that the secretariat might gather as quickly as possible the information which was necessary, print that information and distribute it so that the different overseas dominions might have ample opportunity and time to discuss these things among themselves and to come to conclusions as to what would be their policy in reference to these matters. What happens in the case of Canada? On February 12, 1909, in good time, the British government asks for the suggestions that each of the dominions had to make, but no answer comes from Canada. Again, on February 12, 1910, Canada was asked, again on March 9, 1910, again on December 19, 1910. Not until January 30, 1911, was any notice taken of the request and on January 11, the answer came from this Dominion of Canada, the leader, the doyen of the states which make up the Imperial Conference outside of the mother country, that it had nothing to suggest. Well, cannot any one see what kind of a wet blanket that would be in any business, in any enterprise, and what kind of a wet blanket it must be in a matter of this kind? Is it possible, with the foremost overseas dominion, with the great, the mighty questions which are existent to-day within herself and between herself and outside countries, and countries within the empire, that there was no moving desire, no prompting of spirit, no impulse at all towards helping along the empire's council and conference by this its greatest representative and exponent and that there was nothing at all to propose from the Dominion of Canada? It would almost seem as though every other member would say: Why, the principal boy in the play has refused to play any longer and the game is not worth very much. In the national, in the imperial sense, it would be almost tantamount to saying that Canada has lost her interest. She is the leading one of the dominions; will it amount to much if there is no more interest than that in the leading overseas dominion? So, I think it was a great mistake in the line that I have just been tracing, that the Dominion of Canada made no suggestions, proposed no resolutions and at the last, just before the time of calling the conference, gave the curt reply that they had nothing to propose but would be ready to discuss anything which was brought before the conference. I am free to say that I think a different course might have been taken which would have been more conducive to the interest and success of the conference.

Well, if Canada took no part, the other overseas dominions, South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, were promptly to the front and well to the front. It almost astonishes one to note the vigour, the enthusiasm, the quick impulse with which these other overseas dominions leap into the arena. They are full of suggestions because they are full of the spirit of the Imperial Conference and they give their suggestions. They are not the suggestions of children. I have not time to read over everything which was proposed, but the secretariat in connection with the British government has sifted them out somewhat, and here are the principal ones, which, laying aside those for subsidiary conference and other methods of getting at conclusions, are set down as remaining for the full conference. Just listen to them, Mr. Speaker:

Merchant shipping and navigation laws.

An immense subject.

Cheaper cable rates.

Important to Canada and applying to cables connecting every part of the empire.

The All-Red route.

About which the right hon. Prime Minister was so full of enthusiasm three years ago, and is, I hope, to this day.

The Imperial Court of Appeal, State owned Atlantic cable and telegraph line across Canada; the reconstruction of the Colonial Office, Imperial representation and publicity of proceedings.

Those have reference to the Imperial Conference itself.

State-owned British wireless telegraph stations; double taxation, and stamp duties on colonial bonds; commercial co-operation for the encouragement of British manufacturers and shipping; the declaration of London.

Which vitally affects all food-producing countries in connection with the empire.

Emigration and the position of labour exchanges.

Than which, as I said before, there is no more practical question for the intensest and completest co-operation between the outside dominions and Great Britain itself.

Currency and coinage; co-operation between the naval and military forces of the empire, and the status of the Dominion navies; the position of British Indians in the Dominions.

Outside of those there are others which are mentioned to follow when these shall have been exhausted or taken up and dealt with in so far as the conference goes.

Now, we often hear it said that you must not have any sordid side to your union within the empire; you must not as it were villify it—using that term in its proper meaning—by having reference to matters of dollars and cents, of pounds and pence. And yet, every line of this agenda which is the product of the empire breathes the spirit of trade and commerce and material development. Sentiment or loyalty refined and sublimated and powerful as it may be, takes a place proper for itself but cannot crowd out and has not crowded out those daily business considerations which lie at the heart of the welfare of the humblest individual as at the heart of the highest interest of the nation and the empire. That agenda is a complete refutation of the apt and pat and oft-repeated saying that you cannot bind an empire or a people together by sordid considerations of dollars and cents, i.e. of business and trade. There is a nobility to business and trade as there is its own nobility to patriotism and loyalty; there is a nexus in trade and commerce as powerful and as well diffused as is the nexus supplied by sentiment of birth, of blood, and of nationality, and the nation which forgets either of them forgets one of the prime sources of its power. The nation which joins both is the nation which is the wiser in its plans and which will be the stronger in its ultimate development and progress. There is one sentiment in one of the reports from Australasia over the signature of Mr. Deakin—who I am sorry will not be a member of the coming conference, though in saying that I am not at all derogating from the excellence and worth of the Australian premier who will take his place—and that is that all these matters that he has been treating of in the despatch have in view the keeping of the parts of the empire 'within touch of each other.' That is a sentence I would like to keep in my own mind and leave in the mind of every citizen of the empire. That is a vital point; it is an affirmation of the centripetal principle; the power of attraction which is as wide as the universe and as strong and as enduring. That is the one aim, the one purpose. No method is good unless it has that idea as the objective point; the keeping in close touch the different parts of the empire. How is this to be brought about? Centrifugal forces there will be and disintegrating forces there will be. There are influences which tend to force us away from the proper unity of the nation and the proper unity of the empire; there are outside attractive forces which tend to draw us away from the national and the imperial ideal. We must fight against these by strengthening the cohesive powers of the nation and the empire, by feeding them with the vital essence from day to day and making them great and powerful to counteract the forces which are drawing us towards dispersion and disintegration. How are you to keep the empire within touch? By, in my opinion, three great instrumentalities will you keep them in touch: First by personality. In the individual life we know what personality means. Two people may correspond over leagues of sea and miles of territory and may be fairly well acquainted with each other but it is not until they touch hands and look into each other's faces and read each other's souls that the strong bonds of union and friendship are forged which become permanent and indissoluble. The very same principle holds with reference to nations and to empires; and, until these Imperial Conferences swept aside to a certain measure the methods of correspondence over thousands of miles of space, and brought the governing men of the empire where they touched hands and looked into each other's faces and read each other's thoughts and hearts; not until then were the strongest bonds of empire forged. Personality between two individuals is strong and powerful, but personality between two individuals who take upon them representative functions is as much greater as is the strength and power of the functions they have taken upon themselves to discharge. And so you put men in official capacities as leaders of the empire—with all the weight of empire and the responsibility of empire upon them—you put them in personal contact with each other and you have a personal bond infinitely stronger than the bonds between individuals. And, that personal contact brought about in the Imperial Conference has done more and is doing more to weld the empire together than probably any other force we know of. Besides the personal power there is conference. What is conference? It is the equalization of facts and information. You in Australasia know the facts of your portion of the empire; you are daily face to face with them, you understand them, you go to the imperial conference and you meet there representatives from every other part of the dominions who are faced by the same facts at their own national hearth fires. These different bases of information are made common, the information is equalized and it becomes the portion of the whole empire and is no longer peculiar to any one part of the empire. Equalization of facts, equalization of aims, equalization of methods; you have to join your facts together and adopt methods to bring out of the facts the achievement of the aims; and so by these facts, and methods, and aims joined in conference, and the conclusions you come to, there is the second great element of force and of power towards a united empire. You have all that and you have not gone far unless you take the final step. You have the personal contact and the fire and spirit that is born with it, the conference and its equalization of facts, of aims, and of methods, but you must also have the third element, and that is co-operation. That co-operation is the final step and the crowning glory of that piece of machinery, shall I call it, that admirable mechanism which we to-day call the Imperial Conference. And what are these lines of co-operation? In regard to communication you have postal, telegraph and steam communications. The greatest anti-imperialist that ever stood on shoeleather could find no fault if all parts of these dominions of the empire, should co-operate on the line of better postal facilities, better telegraph facilities and better steam communication. Then there is co-operation on lines of trade, inter-imperial trade and foreign trade, and the attitude that is to be assumed towards both. No one will deny that, other things being equal, it is to the advantage of the empire that the greatest amount of trade should be done within itself and that while that trade is being done the greatest amount of favour should be given to those within the empire as compared with those without the empire.

Then there is co-operation on lines of development and progress, the migration of capital, the migration of population and the exchange of social and moral uplift. Capital, deride it as we may, love it as we all do, make a political hobby horse of it as many of us are inclined to do, is essential to all development and all progress and between the old country and the new, all the advantage of the capital accumulated in the old goes to the new which has resources undeveloped, and capabilities rich in possibility and rich in final results. With migration of population there is a double advantage. We have the old country pent up with its teeming millions with scant means of obtaining a livelihood, little breadth of atmosphere and little prospect for the future. They can come from that country to our great manless regions with lands everywhere asking for labour and for population. Therefore the benefit is twofold, but the greatest benefit comes to the new and young country in man power sent to our manless regions develop the prairie, producing nothing, into the rich grain fields and the rich farm lands which are to become the sources of great wealth. Thus in the migration of capital and in the migration of population and in the more elusive but most beneficial migration of social and moral forces which comes from the old to the new and runs back again from the new to the old, uplifting and strengthening, yes and beautifying both countries—in these three lines co-operation will bring about wonders that disunited effort will never see accomplished.

Then there is defence. You may be a peace man or you may be a jingo, whichever you like, it does not alter the fact that in this world of ours at present, and for a great many years to come, so far as we can see, the country which omits to defend itself is a country which stakes its fortunes on chance and neglects to do its duty by its people and by its resources. What kind of defence shall we have? That which combines the greatest economy with the greatest security—and on the line of co-operation surely we find that. With Great Britain and her mightiest navy of the world and these outlying divisions of the empire, all to be defended and protected, where do we get the maximum of security with the minimum of expense, that is the maximum both of economy and security? Along co-operative lines, there is no other possible answer.

Then lastly there is co-operation along the line of organization. If to-day the British empire needs one thing more than another, it is organization, the co-ordinating of all its mightiest elements of power and progress in business-like common sense and effective organization. That is a problem now and maybe for years to come; that problem can never be solved unless it is solved by the concurrence of the overseas dominions and of the mother country itself. To that end these two must unite their councils and their efforts. Heretofore the mother country has been all predominant. Fifty years hence the outlying dominions will come to be equally dominant and one hundred years from now, with all circumstances favouring, the empire outside of the British islands will be the larger, the richer and the more important half. Here again, in the organization and co-operation of all our forces working together, we strike the line of ultimate success. To-day, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to point out to me one single institution in which this work can be carried out? In your British parliament? No, Sir, clogged, often submerged, with parish and petty business, rent and torn with party local factions as it is, the great matters of empire are shoved into the background and get but little of the calm and weighty consideration that should be given to them. In any one of the Dominion's parliaments? No, they lack the power and they lack the scope. There in your Imperial conference you have the representation and the only present representation of empire, you have an actual representation of empire, because it is constituted of the big governing forces of the empire by the will of the people in every part of the empire, and you have that collection of forces which, though it cannot pass an edict and cannot enact a law, can yet come to conclusions which the executive power of the empire, in each different part of it absolutely free in itself, can carry into actual embodiment and make strong and effective in the councils and in the work of empire. I make no apology for drawing the attention of the House to the Imperial Conference, to the work it has done, and work it is destined to do; but I would ask every man who follows these matters to remember that there does stand within the empire one organization as free and as untrammelled as it is possible to be, and yet with a power of executive action distributed throughout its different parts which is possessed by no other body within the empire or within the wide world.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) opened his remarks by telling the House that some 18 months ago he had, in a speech delivered in this Chamber, traced the history of what is now known as the Imperial Conference from its commencement to the stage it has now reached. The speech my hon. friend delivered on that occasion was very able, lucid and clear, and at the same time very impartial; and I can, with a very sound conscience, pay the same compliment to him for the speech he has just delivered.

With the criticisms on the government, in which my hon. friend indulged, I have no fault to find. They were temperate, and I hope I shall be able to answer them at the proper time. He called the attention of the House to the fact that after the conference had been organized in 1907, as it now exists, a line of cleavage arose in its ranks as to the manner in which the work to be performed by it should be carried out between each meeting. The conference is composed of the imperial government, and also of the overseas dominions governments. It is a conference in a sense between equal and equal. While the dominions governments are not equal to the British government in a certain sense, still, for the purposes of the conference, they were placed entirely on the same footing. A line of cleavage arose as to the manner in which the work prepared by the conference to be distributed among the different dominions should be carried out. Two propositions were submitted at the time. It was proposed that there should be an independent secretariat organized to deal permanently with the work of collating information, attending to the resolutions, engaging in correspondence, and acting generally as the secretary of the conference which was to meet four years hence.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the presidency of the British Prime Minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, and I may say that this idea was proposed, if I remember rightly, by Dr. Jameson, of the Cape. One of its chief advocates was a man of great ability, but who, I am afraid, will not be present at the next conference. I refer to Mr. Deakin, then Prime Minister of Australia. In the course of political events Mr. Deakin has lost power, and his party has been replaced by its opponents. His successor is a gentleman who has proved himself an able man also, and will no doubt be a worthy successor to Mr. Deakin in that respect, but personally I regret exceedingly that Mr. Deakin will not be present. I had hoped that he would come to the coronation as member of the contingent from Australia, but I find, from the list come to me, that he is not to be there. Not that I share his views in everything; on the contrary, in some things I differ with him widely, but I say without hesitation that although my views clash with his, he is a man of great ability, and his presence at the conference would certainly have been a great addition. He took the view that it would be advisable to have what is termed by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) an independent secretariat. Some other gentlemen, and myself did not share that view. We thought it would not be consistent with our system of responsible government to have at London an independent secretariat. Though nominally under the supervision of the Prime Minister of England, still in many ways it would be independent, and not in full accordance with our constitution. We were prepared, however, to have a secretariat which would be under the direct supervision of the governments responsible. That view was entertained, and a secretariat was appointed. It has been in operation some three years or more, and has done very effective work. I do not think, so far as I can learn from the events, that there is any reason to regret the step taken, or that any mistake has been made in that regard.

The chief criticism offered against the government by my hon. friend is that we have not been as prompt as we might have been. Possibly that may be the case, but we have not been at all idle, and we have had to deal with very important questions. But to come to the more important criticism made by my hon. friend, that in the preparation of the work which is to be dealt with by the conference which is to meet in May next, the government of Canada has offered no suggestion, and has appeared indifferent to the work itself, I may reply that if we have offered no new matter, it is simply because we are of the opinion that there is sufficient left of the work of the late conference to keep the new one busy for the time it must sit.

Mr. LENNOX. Is it correct that the business left over from the former conference will come up of necessity, without being the subject of any agenda being sent in by any of the dominions across the seas, or by the British government?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, the work which has not been disposed of must of necessity come up again for discussion. Take for instance the matter of defence. That was dealt with at the conference of 1907, and was discussed in the conference of 1909, and no doubt will be a subject for discussion at every conference. At the conference of 1909 the subject of defence was especially dealt with, but no one supposed that it was then exhausted, and that nothing more was to be said about it. On the contrary it is one which I am sure must come up again for discussion.

Then take the trade question. That is in the same position to-day as in 1902. In 1907 the conference discussed that question, but proposed no new resolution. It was content on that occasion to take up the resolution of 1902. It so happened that in 1902 the trade resolution which was adopted did not meet the views of the British government of that day. The conference of 1907 reaffirmed that resolution. But it does not follow that the trade question is exhausted, and that there is nothing more to be said about it. On the contrary it is a permanent question which must come up for discussion at every conference. I might call attention to this resolution which was passed in 1902, and which was readopted in 1907. It states, amongst other things, that it is not possible to have a universal system of free trade between the dominions overseas and the mother country. I suppose that everybody agrees that it is not possible to have such a system of free trade. But I have no hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, that would be the ideal condition for the British Empire. That is only my own opinion, which, however, I think is based on good reasons which must appeal to every man who gives attention to the matter. But we know that, under present conditions, it is not possible of immediate realization. Does it follow, then, that the discussion of it must be abandoned? Is it not a fact, on the contrary, that this question must come up again and again? It must come before the pending conference. I do not assume that it will be settled then, and I am sure it must come up for still further discussion later on. That is the reason we had no more subjects to suggest to the conference——

Mr. LENNOX. If the Prime Minister will allow me, perhaps I can make myself clear. I understood that the dominions beyond the seas were to send in suggestions of subjects for discussion, and that out of these the authorities in Great Britain would select and arrange such matters as were of immediate importance to form the primary basis of discussion, and that this again would be submitted to the dominions overseas. As I understood it, matters discussed at previous conferences would not come up unless they were submitted for the agenda by some of the dominions overseas.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) will look at the agenda of the last conference and at the work performed, he will find that the conference took up not only matters that were on the agenda, but other matters as well. I am prepared to believe, with him, that the first questions taken up will be those on the agenda, but it does not follow that the business of the conference will be confined to these matters. It goes without saying that many matters may be brought up which are not on the agenda, and that resolutions which engaged the attention of the last conference will come up for further discussion. Take, for instance, the question of migration. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) referred to that at some length and spoke of it as an important question. I agree with him in that. That must come up for discussion. A resolution was passed which, it was thought, would cover the whole ground. But, in practice, difficulties have arisen which were not anticipated, and which must be the subject of further discussion. I agree that there is no better immigration into Canada than that from the British islands, not only because the people are the kith and kin of the great majority of the people of the Dominion, but because they are a wealthy class, and are excellent citizens and good workers. But it happens that in the immigration we had three or four years ago there were elements which were not of this character, and as to which we have to take strong action. There is this line of cleavage which has come in the immigration from the British islands, some of which is eminently desirable, some not so desirable, and some distinctly undesirable. We have to discuss the matter in all its bearings, and, if possible, come to some conclusion on the subject. This will be one of the most important subjects of debate.

Another question brought up by the Canadian government and which was not on the agenda of the last conference, was that of the All-Red route. We had not put it on the programme, not because we have abandoned it, but because we have not been able to make the progress we had hoped to make on the question. So far as the Atlantic is concerned, the difficulties of carrying out the project are not very great, and it seems to me that I see daylight on that side, and that perhaps we may have a fast Atlantic service of a first-class character between Canada and the United Kingdom before many years are over. The great difficulty is the Pacific, the difficulty being to meet the views of both Australia and New Zealand. So far we have not been able to find a way.

Another subject as to which we have expressed our view is that of naturalization. We have stated that we have nothing to suggest, but we are prepared to discuss everything offered by the conference, drawing special attention to the subject of naturalization. I regard this subject as one of the greatest importance. A Bill has been prepared, as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). This Bill we do not either approve or disapprove—we leave it for discussion. But the state of things in relation to naturalization as the result of our laws on the subject and the laws of the United Kingdom on the subject cannot be allowed to continue, but must engage the attention of the imperial as well as the Canadian authorities. We intend to make it a strong point with the British authorities to have at once uniform laws. We are absorbing from the British islands and other countries from two hundred thousand to three hundred thousand new citizens every year. Those that come from the British islands, of course, remain British subjects. Those who come from other countries may become British subjects after a period of probation which is fixed by our laws at three years. But they become British subjects only so far as Canada is concerned. A man coming from Germany to Canada, and, after three years, naturalized under our laws, would be a British subject, but only while he was in Canada. The moment he went out of Canada, he would be no longer a British subject, but a German. That is a most undesirable condition of things. Our naturalization laws have been sufficient up to the present time, but they are not adequate for the new condition of things that has arisen. It is our purpose to call the attention of the British authorities and our fellow-citizens beyond the seas who are equally interested with ourselves to this question. It is a question full of difficulty as I know, for I have discussed it with many persons in different parts of the empire. But if there is a subject on which we ought to have uniform laws, it is this very subject of naturalization. Therefore, it is that we do not think it advisable to present more subjects for consideration than are already pending and will be suggested from other quarters. If we have refrained from offering subjects for discussion, it is not from indifference or want of appreciation of the value of the conference, but because we think quite enough work has been cut out to keep the conference busy for the month or five weeks which is the most that many of us can be expected to give.

I am glad, however, to agree with my hon friend as to the importance of the conference. It is not an elective body it is not a legislative body, it is simply an advisory body; but so far as it goes, it has done excellent work, and is destined I think to do better work in the future. It is certainly drawing together all the different parts of the empire, so far apart geographically, so far apart in interests, and so far apart in many other considerations, but which have been brought together every four years, realizing to a large extent the suggestions which have been made by my hon. friend as to the advantage of personal contact and personal confidence. As to the remarks of my hon. friend in reference to co-operation, I think we have gone perhaps as far as it is possible to go at this moment. My hon. friend indulges in a vision which certainly was very eloquently presented, which is very grand in itself, but as to which I am not prepared to offer an opinion. I think we all agree that British history shows that British communities are slow to move. It is characteristic of the British mind and institutions, that British communities never move fast, are never carried away by sentiment, but move step by step, only as the need of change becomes manifest and becomes imperative. Whatever may take place in the future, we may expect to go on step by step in the line of doing the best we can for the moment, for better trade relations, and for the upbuilding of the British Empire which, embracing all the British communities in the world, must tend to the realization of what my hon. friend has in his heart, as it is in mine, the universal peace of the world. If we had a consolidated British Empire, so far as the common interests of British communities will draw them together, certainly we should have a most powerful factor for the benefit not only of the people most nearly interested, but also for the human race.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). I am sorry that I cannot agree with the Prime Minister in the position which he takes to-day as to the justification of the government in the attitude they took with regard to the communication of their views for discussion at the approaching conference. As the Prime Minister puts it to-day, if it were in accordance with the actual conditions there would be no great ground for complaint. But I venture to say, with all deference to the Prime Minister, that the assumption he makes that these matters of vital importance that are to come up for discussion at the Imperial Conference would come up without any agenda being put in by any of the self-governing dominions, or by the home government, is not correct. On the 19th of December, 1910, after many previous communications, the Secretary of State communicated with Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Newfoundland—sent a telegram requesting them to send in a synopsis of the matters they proposed for discussion; pointing out that it was important to have the matter arranged as early as possible, so as to select the more important subjects for discussion. It is quite clear therefore that what will form the basis of discussion will not be what remained over from the previous conference, but a selection of the most important subjects presented in the various agenda sent in by these dominions. This was not complied with by some of the over-seas dominions. On November 16, Newfoundland had sent in a statement of subjects for discussion; on November 29 New Zealand sent in their agenda by telegram, deeming it to be a matter of considerable urgency. Then the next step in the transaction was on the 19th of December, when this dispatch I have referred to was sent out to Canada and some of the other dominions. On the 24th of December following, Australia, by telegram, sent in its agenda, and on the 9th of January following Australia supplemented that. On the 20th of January, the secretariat, I presume, communicated to Canada, Australia, South Africa, Newfoundland and New Zealand their suggestions of subjects which should be taken up, and the order in which they should be discussed. But not until the 30th of January, 1911, was there any communication from Canada. Now, coming back to what the Prime Minister says, because this is a matter of great importance, I would like to say a few words to establish clearly that the Prime Minister and the government of Canada have no right to understand that any important subject will be taken up unless it is contained in an agenda sent in by one of the over-seas dominions, or is contained in an agenda of the conference, formed from all these by the secretariat. On the 20th of January, Lord Harcourt communicated with the various dominions, including Canada, and says:

In my dispatches of the 1st, 15th and 29th of December, and 16th January, I submitted to Your Excellency for communication to your ministers, copies of the resolution to be submitted by the government of the Commonwealth of Australia, the dominion of New Zealand and the colony of Newfoundland at the forthcoming Imperial Conference of 1911. Prints of these resolutions are appended to this dispatch. I have received no information as to the proposals of the Dominion of Canada or the union of South Africa——

He then says:

2. As at present advised, His Majesty's government propose to suggest for discussion at the conference the following subjects:

His Majesty's government considered that, as regards the subjects which can be taken up at this conference, they would have to submit the subjects which would form the basis of discussion, and His Majesty's government proposed to have discussed:

The position of British Indians in the dominions; Labour exchanges in relation to the dominions; Uniform design for stamps; The arrangements for expulsion of undesirable aliens.

Then, after some further remarks which I need not read, this point is made:

5. The principle laid down by Lord Elgin in his dispatch of 4th of January, 1907, was to give preference to subjects proposed by the dominions and to rank such subjects according to the number of dominions proposing them, regard of course being had to the intrinsic importance of the subjects and to the possibility of arriving at a definite result by discussion. I apprehend that these principles may again be followed with advantage; and accordingly the subjects put forward by the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, and Newfoundland may be taken provisionally as the basis for the agenda.

In other words, if these dominions across the seas had not sent in any agenda there would be nothing for discussion. It might be then that, like the great quantity of fishes left over in the miracle of the loaves and fishes, the conference might take up what was left over from the previous conference. But there was no basis for discussion unless these subjects were sent in, and certainly those sent in would have precedence.

Proceeding the despatch reads:

6. Two dominions propose what are either the same subject or branches of the same subject, viz.: (a) merchant shipping and navigation laws.

That is New Zealand and Australia.

All-Red route.

Proposed by New Zealand and Newfoundland.

Uniformity of various laws New Zealand and Australia; State-owned Atlantic cable, New Zealand and Australia; reciprocal legislation as regards conspiracy, Australia, and as regards destitute persons, New Zealand.

After having pointed out that those subjects which are proposed by two or more dominions have precedence as subjects for discussion he continues, and gives the subjects that are proposed by New Zealand, and by Australia. Then, pointing out what shall have precedence, Lord Harcourt says:

There would remain for the consideration of the full conference the following matters:
Merchant shipping and navigation laws;
Cheaper cable rates;
All-Red route;
Imperial Court of Appeals, &c., &c.

And having pointed out that it is not necessary that certain subjects should be discussed by the conference, but may be relegated to certain sub-committees, he says:

The subjects above set forth as a basis for agenda of the conference are of varying importance, but it seems clear that there must come first the question of the publicity of the proceedings of the conference and the resolutions of New Zealand on the subject of Imperial representation, the reconstruction of the colonial office, and the interchange of civil servants, which have relation to the constitution of the conference itself. There must follow the subject proposed by two dominions, namely:

This is the order he says the discussion is to take, and if any subject has not been proposed it is not on the agenda at all, it is not a subject for discussion, and had it not been that some of the other overseas dominions have been more alert than the government of Canada we would not have had any of these important subjects coming before the Imperial Conference. The proposition made by Lord Harcourt is pretty narrow. He says:

There must follow the subjects proposed by two dominions namely:—merchant shipping and navigation laws; the All-Red route; the Imperial Court of Appeal; the State-owned Atlantic cable and line across Canada.

So that the order of precedence which shall be followed is laid down in this statement submitted on the 20th January to the overseas dominions as the agenda which will govern the various agenda sent in. Then the government are in this position. When they passed their order in council on the 16th January, 1911, and announced that they had nothing to propose, they left it absolutely to chance, or they left it absolutely to others, what should form the subjects of discussion at this most important conference of the British Empire. This is so abundantly clear from the wording of the order in council itself:

> The minister states that, in so far as Canada is concerned, Your Excellency's advisers do not consider that there are any questions of sufficient urgency to call for suggestions on their part as to what should form the subject of the deliberations of the approaching conference. They content themselves by saying that they will be prepared to take part in the discussion of whatever subjects may be proposed for consideration by His Majesty's government or by those of the other self-governing dominions.

Is that what the first minister understood at the time? Did he understand, as he says to-day, that he thought that all the important subjects that were left over at the last conference would of necessity, or as a matter of course, come up for discussion? I venture to say that when the order in council was passed no such understanding existed, and I venture to say also, as a matter of fact, and as a matter of common sense, that no such thing would happen, and that we would have no discussion of these important matters, such as imperial preferential trade or naturalization, which the Prime Minister thinks important now, but for the fact that some of the overseas dominions have been more alert, more alive to the importance of bringing these matters before the united wisdom of the whole empire at the Imperial Conference than were my hon. friends of the cabinet of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Naturalization was left out.

Mr. LENNOX. Naturalization was left out of the discussion and naturalization was one of the subjects suggested by Australia. But, as a matter of fact, if more dominions had united on any one subject, if the Dominion of Canada had added its request to have certain important subjects brought up for discussion, the fact that there were three dominions making the request instead of only two or one would probably have turned the scale and brought some of these important questions to the front which will not be to the front on this occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. Naturalization is not in Australia's list on page 11.

Mr. LENNOX. It is on page 9.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not included in the list on page 11.

Mr. LENNOX. No, it is not taken up by the home authorities. It is not made a subject of discussion, but Australia by its agenda asks that it shall be made a subject of discussion. If the Dominion of Canada had sent in an agenda asking that it should be made a subject of discussion it probably would have been, because, acting upon the principle set out in the despatch of the 20th, if it had the endorsation of two dominions, it would come to the front. But, it absolutely will not come to the front, I can tell the Prime Minister, it will not come up for discussion under the conditions which exist and for which I, with very great regret, must say that I have to hold the Prime Minister and the cabinet responsible.

I have not sufficient presumption to think I can add much after my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has spoken, but there are one or two points I would like to refer to, and one is in reference to a matter that assumes a new form since the last conference, and which was not the subject of any previous conference in so far as I know, and that is the Declaration of London. Throughout the whole British Empire the commercial world is on the alert on the question of the Declaration of London, and perhaps I am stating it too narrowly and should say that the whole industrial world within the British Empire is affected and intimately affected by the Declaration of London. The result is that in every city in Canada, boards of trade and those having regard for the conditions of commerce are on the alert in reference to this matter. The Prime Minister knew that this matter had assumed definite form since the last conference. He knew or should have known that it was of vast importance to the Dominion of Canada.

He knew, he must have known, that there was a good deal of agitation in reference to it and a pretty strong feeling that it was taking an unsatisfactory shape. I asked a few questions, and they were answered in the House on the 23rd of March last, by the Prime Minister and one reply of his was: The provisions of the declaration of London have been taken into consideration. That is an easy phrase but I pause now to ask the Prime Minister what has the government done; what commercial bodies have the government consulted to obtain their views; have the boards of trade of Canada been consulted? Have the great shipping interests of Canada been consulted? Have the great agricultural interests of Canada been consulted? Because under this, food products are made 'conditional contraband' of war. Let the Prime Minister tell us what the government did in taking the subject into consideration, a subject which he must recognize is a vital one, not only to Canada but to the British Empire.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We did not consult the shipping interests, nor the farming interests, nor the commercial interests of Canada. The declaration of London deals with international law in regard to contraband of war. Up to the present the rule of international law has been that contraband of war was confined to armament, weapons, explosives, and so on. The rules of international law are simply based on the opinion of eminent jurists and they are not binding. The declaration of Paris in 1856 was confined to a few nations, and it declares privateering illegal, and it declares also that food products should be covered by the flag and should not be liable to seizure. The declaration of London proposes a new condition and makes food in certain circumstance a contraband of war. I do not think any information could be obtained upon that point by consulting the shipping interests or any other of the interests mentioned by the hon. member. I think we have all the information at the present time on that point that it is possible to gather. We have the declaration of the Chamber of Commerce; we have the declaration of the shipping interests of the United Kingdom, and we have the declaration of boards of trade in this country also. I am not aware where we could derive any more information than we have at present.

Mr. LENNOX. As the Prime Minister says, the declaration of London enlarges the scope of what shall be contraband of war, and some of the big items in it are food stuffs, grain for feeding animals, fabrics for clothing, boots and shoes suitable in war, gold and silver coin, bullion and paper money. The first three of these very intimately affect Canada. Boards of trade and other bodies have expressed their opinion as to what the effect of it may be. Boards of trade are not infallable but some of the overseas dominions have also expressed their opinions upon it, and have condemned it. I apprehend that the best way for the government to get information would be to consult with those who are most closely connected with the matter, and I apprehend that it is the duty of the government to consult with those who have special knowledge upon the matter—not necessarily to follow their advice—but for the purpose of enabling the government to form an opinion as best they can.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). How many boards of trade in Canada would understand the principles of international law or the law in regard to contraband so as to be able to give any assistance on the question?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Would it be possible by any inquiry we could make at present to obtain any information which we have not. The only thing we could ascertain on any such question is an expression of opinion. As my hon. friend knows it is a very debatable question in the United Kingdom as well as in the overseas dominions, some of which are for and some against. We could not obtain by any possible inquiry more information than we have on the subject.

Mr. LENNOX. I have a higher opinion of the boards of trade of this Dominion than has my hon. friend from Pictou and I think they could give valuable advice on this question. Now, the Prime Minister has or has not an opinion on the subject and if he has any opinion in which he has confidence he should have expressed it in the agenda and forwarded it for discussion at the approaching conference. If the right hon. gentleman has not an opinion, which I think is most likely to be the case——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have my own opinion.

Mr. LENNOX. Then the Prime Minister has not given us the benefit of it. If the right hon. gentleman does not entertain an opinion on the question and has not full knowledge of it, he should endeavour to equip himself before the approaching conference so that he may be in a position to present his opinion in the form of an agenda and discuss it in the best interests of Canada and the empire. Then, on the 23rd of March last when I questioned the government, the right hon. gentleman replied: The government has made no representations in reference to this declaration to the Imperial government. The result is that although Australasia did include the declaration of London in their agenda, they are the only dominion to do so, and they condemn it, but they stand alone and hence according to the principles laid down in the despatch just read, it is not included in the final agenda and will not be the subject of discussion at the approaching conference. That is unfortunate. I want to call the attention of the Prime Minister to another answer he gave on the 23rd of March and see whether he holds the same opinion now as then. I asked:

Does the government propose to make any representations in reference to this matter to the imperial government?

The Prime Minister replied:

As the whole subject of the Declaration of London deals exclusively with questions of international law, the government of Canada not being a sovereign power does not think itself justified to make official representation on such matters, but the question may be discussed informally with the imperial government at the next Imperial Conference.

There was a time when the First Minister had a much loftier conception of the status of Canada than this answer would indicate. There was a time, I think coincident with the acquisition of the Cobden medal, when the right hon. gentleman realized that Canada was a nation, and had all the rights of a nation, sovereign and otherwise. But the Prime Minister is very modest at this time, and because Canada is not a sovereign nation he would not venture to suggest a subject for discussion at the Imperial Conference. Australia was not so modest.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). Does not a perusal of this correspondence show conclusively that there was before the government here in Canada at the date when the minute of council was passed in January 11, a despatch of the 19th of December in which the New Zealand proposals were discussed?

Mr. LENNOX. Quite true, but on the other hand this is not made a subject of discussion on the agenda of the Conference, and it would probably have been made the subject of discussion if this government had added its agenda to the others, and had therefore come within the rule I have already quoted. Thus by our government taking the position that they could not say one word upon this matter either by way of agenda, or by communication with the British government, they have let this matter go wholly by default. Although the government thought they had not the power or the right, not being a sovereign power, to say one word upon this question, boards of trade and others thought they had the right to make their representations, and those representations have been regarded and recognized and dealt with very carefully by Sir Edward Grey. For instance the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. The Leeds Ship Owners' Society——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LENNOX. The Navy League(Bristol branch), the Belfast Chamber of Commerce, all these thought they had a perfect right to send in representations, and those representations have been very courteously received and discussed. The Prime Minister, I think, is about to say let our boards of trade do the same, but although our boards of trade probably could do the same, it would have come with very much greater force, and have very much greater influence if the government had discharged their duty in this regard, and had themselves submitted something in reference to this matter. As it is, I may say the government have put themselves out of court, and will not be in a position to deal with it even informally when the conference assembles.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LENNOX. I referred, Mr. Speaker, to some statements which the right hon. the Prime Minister made regarding the position in which our representatives at the Imperial Conference would be placed. With the greatest deference to the right hon. gentlemen, I have to register my dissent from the proposition broadly advanced by the Minister, namely, that the work not disposed of at the late conference must of necessity come up again for discussion without being put upon the agenda. The resolution, for instance, adopted in 1902, in favour of preferential trade within the empire and reaffirmed in 1907, he said was a permanent question which must automatically come up at every conference. I entirely dissent from that proposition, and I think I made it clear before recess that such will not be the case. In justice to the right hon. gentleman, I must say that after I had for the second time called his attention to the position of that matter, he said that of course the questions which were on the agenda, as finally prepared by the imperial authorities or the secretariat, would necessarily come up first. On previous occasions, he added, other matters which were not on the agenda were discussed. I am not at all disposed to say that if there were ample time for discussion, any important subject might not, by common consent, be taken up, even if not on the list; but I say distinctly that there is no ground for the belief that these important questions will have any place in the discussion at the approaching conference.

My right hon. friend said that there would be four or five weeks for discussion, but in that he was wrong. True the period of duration is from the 22nd of May to the 22nd of June, but the correspondence distinctly calls the attention of the government to the fact that there are actually only fifteen days available for discussion; and after sifting the matter out, the British agenda, framed upon the basis of all the agendas put in, excludes the important matters to which my right hon. friend mainly gave his attention this afternoon.

For instance, if I understood him aright, he regards as of most vital importance the question, which was discussed in 1902 and 1907, of closer trade relations or imperial preferential trade among the different parts of the empire. But that subject does not form the baises of any discussion at the approaching conference, so that the very first and most important question to Canada at present will be omitted, and omitted I venture to say, because of the want of diligence and care on the part of the government.

Then my right hon. friend said that the question of immigration is important and ought to be discussed. In that connection, he said that he endorsed the opinion expressed by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). But here again we are cut out. This is not one of the questions which is to be the subject of discussion at the Imperial Conference. The government have been guilty of absolute neglect in this matter. That neglect becomes more apparent when we consider that when the report of the proceedings of 1907 was published, the secretariat in England pointed out that if the dominions beyond the seas want co-operation in any way in this matter, beyond what has been done before the conference, it was for them to ask for it. My right hon. friend is, therefore, in this position. He recognizes the supreme importance of this question of immigration and has before him the invitation of the home authorities to take action in the matter, and yet he has absolutely done nothing. It is not even to be the subject of discussion at the coming conference.

Again he said that naturalization is a very important matter, and that uniform laws of naturalization would be very beneficial indeed. Whoever, he said, represents Canada at the conference will point out to the representatives of New Zealand, Australia and South Africa the importance of uniform laws on naturalization. But naturalization will not be a subject of discussion at the conference because our government has not seen fit to ask that it be put on any agenda, but has practically thrown away the situation by its cold hearted treatment of that question. Allow me to read what has been said about that. It cannot be said that our government did not say anything, but it can be said that it did nothing. The order in council goes on in this way:

> Your Excellency's advisers would welcome a suggestion looking to uniformity, as far as practicable in the naturalization laws throughout His Majesty's dominions.

Well, those who have charge of this matter, have not decided that it be put upon the agenda. It is not too much to say that the Dominion government from November to the end of January, when this matter was taking definite form, evidently had their eyes elsewhere, and had their attention centred in another direction altogether away from Britain. They were looking to Washington more than to Britain, and the result is there is not on the agenda one important question in which Canada is interested at present.

I have shown that these matters which the premier acknowledges are all important—preferential trade, immigration and naturalization—are all excluded from the agenda, and excluded because of want of care and attention on the part of the Dominion government.

Referring to the Declaration of London, I want just to read what Australia has to say on that question. Australia says:

> That it is regretted that the dominions were not consulted prior to the acceptance by the British delegates of the terms of the Declaration of London; that it is not desirable that Great Britain should adopt the inclusion in article 24 of foodstuffs, in view of the fact that so large a part of the trade of the empire is in those articles; that it is not desirable that Great Britain should adopt the provisions of articles 48-54, permitting the destruction of neutral vessels.

I will not trouble the House, with a number of quotations from memorials to the government of Great Britain in reference to the Declaration of London which I have before me. The chambers of commerce, of Glasgow particularly, go into the matter very fully and point out the serious effect it may have on commerce in foodstuffs and other articles that were not included before. I might read a line or two of what is quoted here as the language of the Liverpool Steamship Owner's Association in discussing this point.

> Our safety depends upon our being able to keep at sea not only our fighting, but also our merchant-ships. If our trade routes cannot be adequately defended by our navy, then the nation must assume the financial risks to which our merchant-ships and their cargoes would be exposed, for we must keep these at sea. A war which would drive our mercantile flag from the sea and transfer our carrying trade to neutral ships would leave us in a state of hopeless bankruptcy.

I need hardly point to the fact that as Canada is dependent, up to the present time at all events, for her export trade, mainly upon the markets of Great Britain —whatever may be our fate in the future —it is all-important to us that we shall not be put in such a position that our commerce may be seized at any moment, and the onus placed on us of proving that it is not contraband of war.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in answer to me the other day, said that the government had considered this question. I am indebted to the right hon. gentleman for intervening this afternoon to tell me to what extent they have considered the matter. I asked him to do so, and he has disclosed, very effectively I think, that he considered it simply not at all. No interest has been consulted, no measures have been taken, practically no consideration has been given to the subject. And in this and the other important questions that should come up for discussion before this conference—a conference which, it is true, has no binding force as a constitutional tribunal, but yet which has great moulding force upon the destinies of the whole empire, I feel that I cannot too strongly impress upon the House the utter neglect of the government in being at the tail of the race in this important matter, when all the other self-governing portions of the empire have been on the alert. New Zealand sends in its agenda covering a wide range of subjects. The first is the reconstitution of the Colonial Office, a subject which, in every one of its subdivisions, is as important to Canada as to New Zealand. Another point is the interchange of civil servants—I have not formed an opinion upon that question. Another subject is universal penny postage, which is as important to Canada as to the rest of the empire. Then there is the question of state-owned Atlantic cable, and state-owned telegraph lines across Canada. Surely, Canada ought to have some idea about a proposition of that kind; Canada ought to be the first in the field in such a matter. Other subjects proposed by New Zealand are the cheapening of cable rates, development of telegraphic communication within the empire, the All-Red route—one would have thought that the government, if they are still desirous in maintaining close relations with Great Britain, would have been active in relation to the All-Red route; but, not a word—and an imperial court of appeal. And there are many other items, many of them with subheads, covering in all about two dozen different subjects in each of which Canada should have a word to say. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says Canada will be prepared to discuss these matters. That is hardly enough. We ought to have a policy upon these subjects, and that policy ought to be known to parliament, and parliament ought to have an opportunity of speaking in a friendly way with the government before sending our representatives, and advising with them as to how much of this programme they approve of, and how much they would urge the government not to advance. Then, when we come to Australia, we find that they have two resolutions on commercial relations, and they propose also the discussion of naturalization, the declaration of London, immigration, naturalization of the Atlantic cables, &c.,—all subjects in which Canada should not be the last, but the leader. I can come to no conclusion—I regret it very much—but that the government has had its attention so completely distracted in other directions, antagonistic in some respects to this principle of closer and more definite relations with Great Britain, that they have been prevented from paying the attention to this great and important subject that it deserves.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Any one who has read the correspondence on the Imperial Conference of 1911, and who has listened to the address of the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) must marvel at and admire the ingenuity which enabled the hon. gentlemen to spread over, in an hour's argument his views as to the suppression of subjects for consideration before the conference and to set forth so many grounds of complaint without any justification for any of them. He has taken the ground that the government should have gone into an elaborate agenda of matters to be submitted to the conference. But he has ignored entirely the fact that the government when, in January last, it sent to the right hon. Mr. Harcourt, through the Governor General, a statement of the matters on which they wished discussion, had before them, as indicated by the despatch from the Secretary of State to the Governor General on the 19th of December, 1909, the proposals that were made by the New Zealand government and the detailed statement with regard to the matters proposed by that government and by Newfoundland. Apparently my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) complains that this government did not repeat in detail each and every one of the subjects which he said were so important, and which were contained in the agenda from New Zealand. If he does not mean that, his argument has no meaning. He complained, for instance, that although New Zealand had distinctly and elaborately, in section 10 of their agenda, set forth the proposition for a mail route between England, Australia, and New Zealand via Canada, Canada had said nothing about it. It was not necessary for Canada to say anything about it. Canada had already before her the proposition made by New Zealand, and the answer of this government in fact expressed its willingness to discuss at the conference the proposition submitted by New Zealand. So with regard to the other subjects mentioned by my hon. friend. For instance, he says it is impossible to discuss at this conference the question of closer trade relations with the mother country. As indicated by the right hon. gentleman, that is a subject which had always been discussed at these conferences, and of course will be again. But that subject is referred to in the different agenda submitted by the other nations of this empire, and stands for full consideration again.

Mr. LENNOX. Although there are a great many subjects suggested by Australia and by New Zealand, we are confined to subjects that are included in the agenda prepared by Britain, and this subject is not included in that agenda.

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend will read the documents carefully, he will see that in this statement prepared by the Secretary of State to be found on page 10 of the report, the subjects referred to are set forth by him. For instance, my hon. friend indicated that the question of immigration could not be discussed because, he says, this government had not submitted certain statements in response to their request for information. My hon. friend ignores the fact that on page 9 of the statement made by Australia, there are set out in detail the various propositions in regard to the matters mentioned, and it is stated in the final statement of the Secretary of State on page 11 that immigration is one of the subjects that is to be discussed. So where my hon. friend gets a basis for his reasoning, I am at a loss to discover. Take again the question of the Declaration of London, my hon. friend seemed worried because this government had not deliberately undertaken to interfere in what is strictly an international matter, a matter of international law. It is something which this government should not ask the farming interests of this country and boards of trade to offer an opinion upon, because it is a very intricate question of international law. What would be thought of Canada if she should undertake to interfere in a matter which is distinctly a proposition for the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs? We were dealing with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, concerning the relations that exist between the colonies and the mother country, yet my hon. friend thinks this government is to be condemned because it did not unnecessarily rush in and express an opinion on a subject which would not naturally come before the conference at all.

One of my objects in rising was to discuss the question of naturalization, which is one in which I am much interested I believe with the government that the proposition is one of the very first importance, and should engage the close attention of this conference. My hon. friend undertakes to say that this conference cannot deal with it, notwithstanding the fact that Australia has mentioned that subject, and that Canada has mentioned it. Let me refer my hon. friend to what the Secretary of State for the Colonies says in his correspondence:

> The resolution of the Commonwealth of Australia as to naturalization leads me to observe that this question of uniformity of law is essentially a technical question, and as such may more properly be remitted to a committee of the full conference sitting as a subsubsidiary conference.

So the Secretary of State distinctly provides for a full and complete consideration of this important question of naturalization all over the empire. It seems to me that my hon. friend is going very far to find a ground of complaint against this government when he urges that they have failed in their duty because they did not sit down and write over again matters that had already been proposed by the sister states. On this question of naturalization, I would like to point out that it is the bounden duty of every man who loves this empire, and is interested in its preservation and extension, to look forward to some action being taken by the Imperial Conference to provide that a man in any portion of this empire, who has been naturalized according to the laws of the state where he is, shall become a citizen of the empire by virtue of that naturalization, and be deemed a British subject wherever the British flag flies. It is one of the greatest anomalies to talk about building up an empire on the basis of tariff reform, and all questions of that kind, when you leave the foundation stone absolutely unlaid, when you have no provision that a citizen of this empire, no matter in what colony he may live, shall have the full and complete rights of any other citizen, whether he be born here or in another country, or in the mother country. The very foundation of a national feeling which would permeate every part of the empire is lacking when a man in Canada, or Australia, or South Africa, is not recognized as a British citizen, once he has complied with the laws of the state in which he is living, and is there regarded as a citizen. It seems to me that is a question which urgently calls for consideration at this conference. We have other problems suggested here, in regard to amendments to the laws, in regard to provisions for closer communication by cable and by vessel on land and on sea; but if you are going to ignore altogether the essential basis of the empire, that a man who lives in any one of the states or colonies of the empire shall be a citizen of every other part of the empire, there is very little good in providing for fast steamships and state-owned cables. I hope that this question, which this government has brought forward and which has been suggested by some of the sister states, will be solved by this conference. There ought to be co-ordinate action by the mother country and each one of the over-sea states that will settle this question satisfactorily.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I have the honour to represent in this House probably one of the most strictly rural constituencies in the province of Ontario, if not in the Dominion of Canada; and as this matter is one which affects the agricultural interests of my constituency so deeply, I may be excused if I take up some time in placing my views before the committee. While I do not claim to be a farmer, I have lived all my life in the country and all my people are agriculturalists. I think I am in fairly close touch with the agriculturalists of my county and understand and appreciate their needs and wishes fairly well. Since this matter has been brought up frequent references have been made in the press to several constituencies, and among others to the county of Frontenac. The Toronto 'Globe,' for instance, stated that the member for Frontenac was having quite a hard time of it on account of Conservative pressure being brought to bear upon him to support this present agreement. I have received probably half a dozen letters from my constituents with reference to it. With the exception of four or five of the reeves in Frontenac, all of the reeves have expressed themselves as opposed to this agreement being ratified. There are sixteen municipalities in the county altogether. There has been in that county and in various rural constituencies throughout the province a very determined and persistent attempt to stampede the country people in favour of this compact. Only a week ago the hon. leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario addressed a meeting in the court house at Kingston and the same evening he addressed a meeting in my constituency in the village of Sunbury. At his afternoon meeting in the court house in Kingston, by actual count, there were 42 residents from the county of Frontenac present and 49 from the city of Kingston. At the meeting which was held in the village of Sunbury on the same evening, of course, the leaders of the Liberal party in the county did their best to do honour to their Ontario chief, which was quite proper, and a number of Liberals were in attendance. The vote was taken on that occasion to ascertain how many were in favour of reciprocity and less than half of those present rose to their feet in support of the proposition put to them, although the meeting was largely composed of Liberals.

I want at the outset to take exception to a statement made by the right hon Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and repeated by pretty nearly every speaker who has risen to his feet on that side of the House and by the Liberal press from one end of the country to the other, that this agreement is exactly the same as the proposal laid down in the National Policy with regard to reciprocal trade relations with the United States. There was contained in the National Policy brought down by Sir John A. Macdonald a clause with regard to reciprocal trade relations with the United States, but that clause contained some words which have not been dwelt upon by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who have made reference to it. That clause mentioned a number of articles which it was proposed that our government would make free or allow to enter Canada at a reduced rate of duty, when the United States permitted all those articles to enter that country free of duty. I claim that there is a very distinct and emphatic difference between the position taken then and this compact. The United States were to allow all these articles into their country free. When they did that our government would take into consideration whether they would allow these articles to enter free or at a reduced rate of duty. I repeat that the words 'or at a reduced rate of duty' have a very important bearing, are very significant and indicate a very strong difference between the position taken by Sir John Macdonald in 1879 and the position taken by this government.

I think I am right in saying that there is not a member of this House who believes that if Sir John Macdonald were at the head of the government to-day he would enter into any such pact as this government propose to enter into. Let us see for one moment the position of affairs. Last fall there was an election in the United States. That election was fought out on very distinct and emphatic lines. The Democrats pledged themselves that if they were returned to power they would reduce the duties very materially on food products coming into the United States. The new Congress did not take office until the 4th of March this year, and I cannot think for one moment that if Sir John Macdonald had been at the head of the government of this country he would have moved in the matter of reciprocal trade relations between Canada and the United States until he had given that party that had pledged themselves to a certain line of policy an opportunity of carrying out the pledges which they had made to the people. Therefore, I do not think that hon. members on the other side of the House are justified in asserting as they do that they are endeavouring to obtain just exactly what the Conservative party were trying to get all the time they were in power.

Why was this agreement entered into at the present time? The reason, in my estimation, why this agreement was entered into at the present time is this: I have already said that it would have been the part of wisdom, of common prudence on the part of the government of Canada, to have at least waited a few months longer and given the Democratic party an opportunity to carry out their pledges. About a year ago we had the naval policy introduced into this House and I am firmly of the opinion, and I believe it is the opinion of practically all the members of this House, that the naval policy of the present government is one to which nine-tenths of the people of the country object. It was necessary for the government to obtain some kind of a blanket to cover up their naval policy, their mismanagement of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Aylesworth ditch and things of that kind. Consequently, we find them entering into a pact with the government of the United States when common prudence would have suggested to them the advisability of waiting at least a few months to give the Democratic party an opportunity to redeem the pledges which they made to the people. This is not an agreement which affects our trade with the United States only.

But more than that, if this agreement is ratified, Russia, Denmark, Austro-Hungary, Spain, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Germany, Venezuela, Bolivia, Colombia, Argentina, and Japan in addition to the British possessions have the right to send their products into this country on the same terms as the United States. All that we in Canada get as a return is a freer admission for our products into the markets of the United States. The advocates of this compact have vaunted before the farmers of Canada the market of 90,000,000 people in the United States, and one would imagine to hear them that as soon as this agreement is ratified some 90,000,000 people south of the line are going to sit down and fold their arms and let the farmers of Canada feed them. Well, these 90,000,000 people in the United States are not by any means going out of the business of producing. There are ten farmers in the United States to every one farmer in Canada, and while this agreement will remove the tariff wall, and permit one Canadian farmer freer access to the markets of the United States it will at the same time permit ten American farmers free access into the markets of Canada. Then, our one farmer in Canada will have an opportunity to get his produce into the market of the United States where it will come into competition with the surplus products of the ten American farmers, but the ten American farmers will have an opportunity of sending their surplus products into Canada where it will compete with us in our home market, the best market we have. Let me refer to some statements made by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech of November, 1906, when he was bringing down his tariff. He said:

> Now that we are approaching the question of a general tariff revision we again wish to keep in mind this idea of tariff stability. We do not desire to make radical changes. We feel that the general condition of Canada to-day is such that no radical changes in the tariff are called for.

But, I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite if it is not a fact that to-day the prices of farm produce from one end of Canada to the other are higher than they were when the Minister of Finance uttered these words in 1906, and if there was no occasion for radical changes in the tariff then what excuse can there be for radical changes in the tariff now. In that same speech the Minister of Finance used this language:

> We desire to turn trade to Great Britain wherever we can properly do so, because Great Britain is our best customer, and if, by any arrangement that we can properly make we can turn trade from people who will not buy from us towards people who do buy from us, then we think we ought to do so. We are desirous of doing this in the way of turning trade to Great Britain.

What change has come over the spirit of his dreams since the Finance Minister thus spoke in November, 1906? To-day, instead of turning trade towards our best customer his policy is to turn trade away from our best customer and to direct it towards people who buy very little from us compared with what the people of the mother country do. I call attention to another statement of the Finance Minister made in that same speech, and it has a special bearing on the present situation because of the fact that the favoured nation countries which I have mentioned will also have the right to send their goods into our market. The Finance Minister, referring to the denunciation of the German and Belgian treaties, said:

But the favoured nation treaties remained. Now, if we should bring in one foreign country under the privileges of this new tariff, although that country should give us concessions which would repay us, the effect would be that we would be obliged to give the same advantages without any return from them to a number of countries which possess favoured nation treaties. You can see at once that this raises a very serious complication and warns us that we must not attempt to put this tariff into operation at once. We must conduct our negotiations and try if we can to get several countries to make an arrangement with us, and then if we should bring them in about the same time it would not do us any harm if we had to bring in some half dozen other countries the trade of which is not very important. I think it fair to point out this very important aspect of the matter and it is a very important reason why, while we put this tariff on our statute-books and hold it up as a basis for negotiations, we should not attempt to put it into operation at once, but should only make it the subject for negotiation.

Now, in view of that statement made in November, 1906, by the Minister of Finance it is indeed surprising that he should be one of the gentlemen to go to Washington to negotiate a compact which will result in producing the very effects which he at that time seemed to fear. There is one other utterance of the Minister of Finance in the same speech which is significant at the present time in view of the wonderful friendly feeling the government professes towards the farmers. The Finance Minister then said:

The farmer, as a rule, is a low tariff man; but if you ask him whether he wants the duties on agricultural products abolished, he is apt to be a little careful. Some will say yes and others no. Other will say: Take the duties off agricultural products if you take them off everything else. Well, whenever we have made changes in the schedule of agricultural duties, as a rule they are in the direction of a little increase. We do not want the farmer to say that the changes made are to the disadvantage of the things he himself produces. In fact some farmers are strong advocates of high duties although the general tendency is the other way. Therefore we have not made any changes, and any we have made are in the way of an increase to some extent.

There we have the very frank utterance from the Minister of Finance: That there were some farmers who were low tariff men, and in favour of a reduction of duties, and some who were in favour of higher duties, and that the farmer thought that if the duties were taken off agricultural products they should also be taken off things which the farmer has to buy. The further statement of the Finance Minister that he did not want the farmer to think that the changes in the tariff are to the disadvantage of the things the farmer must produce is very interesting at present, because if this agreement is ratified, with regard to everything which the farmer produces and has to sell, he has practically to compete with all the agricultural countries in the world, while with reference to all kinds of machinery and everything needed to assist him in producing his crop, he has to pay a higher price because of the protection afforded to the manufacturer. Well might the Finance Minister say in this speech that if you ask the farmer whether he wants the duties on agricultural products abolished he is apt to be a little careful.

In this case the government has gone ahead seemingly without consulting any person as to what they were going to do notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister himself had repeatedly said there would be no revision of the tariff until all the varied interests in this country had been given a fair and reasonable opportunity to state their side of the case. That to my mind is a matter which ought to receive the condemnation of every fair-minded man in Canada, and I believe will be condemned by the people generally. What state of affairs have we reached in Canada when the Prime Minister will deliberately go back on his pledged word to the people, and tell 1,200 or 1,500 farmers, the market gardeners and fruit raisers of the country, who come to the doors of this parliament and ask for an opportunity to state their case before the government, that they are too late, and that their case cannot be considered.

A great deal has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite of the British preference. What have they done in this direction? The Minister of Finance stated that we on this side instead of criticising their action might very well leave the British preference in their hands. That is a kind of flag waving which is peculiar to hon. gentlemen opposite. Let us see what they have done in regard to the British preference. In 1910 Canada imported from Great Britain $71,822,941 worth of dutiable goods on which a duty of $18,032,629 was collected. That is a rate of duty of 25·107 per cent.

In the same year we imported from Great Britain $23,513,486 worth of free goods, a total of $95,336,427 dutiable and free goods, the average rate of duty on which was 18·914 per cent.

In the same year, 1910, Canada imported from the United States $118,834,173 on which we collected duties amounting to $29,515,836, or an average rate of duty of 24·837 per cent. We also brought in from the United States $98,668,242 worth of free goods. Our total imports from the United States, dutiable and free, amounted to $217,502,415, or an average rate of duty on all our imports from the United States of 13·57 per cent. Thus on all the goods we imported from Great Britain, dutiable and free, the average rate was 18·914 per cent, and on the goods we imported from the United States, dutiable and free, the average duty was only 13·57 per cent. Twenty-six per cent of our imports from Great Britain are free, and 74 per cent pay duty; 45 per cent of our imports from the United States are free and 55 per cent dutiable.

In other words Canada admitted last year from the United States $75,154,756 more imports free than from Great Britain, or $3,331,815 more free imports from the United States than our total imports, dutiable and free, from Great Britain. Yet we find this government and their supporters repeatedly referring to the British preference. Why, there is no preference at all, the preference has been the other way as their own figures taken from their reports clearly indicate, and if this agreement is carried into effect the preference to the United States will be very much greater. I said in the beginning that this agreement affected not merely our trade with the United States, but that there were several other countries which would have the same right to bring goods into Canada as the United States. I know the Prime Minister has made very light of the importations or possible importations from these other countries, he has referred to that as of very little consequence, but the production of grain from just a few of these countries that I have on my list, is very great. Russia, the United States, India, Spain, the Argentine Republic, Hungary, Australia, Great Britain, and Austria, produced in 1909, according to a statement supplied to me by the Deputy Minister of the Interior 2,369,578,224 bushels of wheat. Our production in Canada that year was 166,752,000 bushels.

Of oats these countries produce 2,501,-120,000 bushels, while our production was 353,451,000 bushels.

Of barley these countries produced 978,-087,000 bushels; our production was 55,377,-000 bushels. Those figures will indicate to you that this country, in case of the ratification of this agreement, will be brought into competition with countries which are producing and producing enormously of these three cereals.

I wish to place on 'Hansard' some figures in regard to the surplus production of some of these countries for 1909, because after all it is what these countries export that will indicate the extent of competition this country will have to face.

Yet we actually find the advocates of this pact preaching up and down the country and on the floor of this House that Canada will have a market for these commodities in the United States. And they make such statements in the face of the fact that the United States has been shipping into Canada an average of about a million dozen eggs a year and 18 million pounds of meats, and that the surplus production of meat last year in the United States was 620,000,000 pounds. The United States are exporting, besides three and a half million pounds of cheese, nearly three million pounds of butter per year, and yet we have people claiming that a country, which has such a large surplus production to export, will be a first-class market for our Canadian farmer. That certainly does not seem reasonable to me.

I am taking up the articles which I know are of interest to the people of my county and to the agriculturalists throughout this country, and I wish now to place on 'Hansard' another table with regard to animals. The figures are as follows:

My object in reading those statements is simply this. The countries mentioned are those which will, if this agreement be ratified, have the right to send their surplus products into Canada. At present England is the only country in the world which permits foreign countries to send their surplus products into her markets free of duty. But if this agreement be ratified, there will be another country in the same position as England, so far as agricultural products are concerned, and that country is Canada. If the English market at any time becomes glutted, these various countries will naturally turn their attention to the only other country which will permit their products to come in free, namely, Canada. So, we put ourselves in the position of being a dumping ground for the surplus productions from these agricultural countries which the British market cannot make away with. I have another object in stating these figures. I have given the production of Canada in regard to these various things I have mentioned, and I maintain that the production of wheat, barley, oats, hay, potatoes, horses, cattle and various other things indicates very clearly that the agricultural population of the Dominion of Canada is an industrious and intelligent population, and that our farmers are not the slipshod, lazy, indifferent, careless people that the Minister of Agriculture said they were. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) I am glad to see, is in his place, and lest he may have forgotten the expression of opinion he made in regard to the agriculturalists of this country, I will quote from the speech of the hon. gentleman on the 3rd of March, 1909, as given at page 2029 of 'Hansard':

> It is the farmer's slipshod methods in this country which is the limit of our agricultural production . . . The only pity is that the farmers of Canada are not doubling and quadrupling their exports every year. If they do not, it is not for lack of teaching or for lack of knowledge; it is for their lack of interest in their work, their lack of industry, and largely, I believe, for the lack of that labour which is necessary in the carrying on of our farming operations.

The Minister of Agriculture says now that we should be perfectly willing to let the farmers say what they want. He is very willing to rely upon the judgment and intelligence of the farmers when their judgment and intelligence run in the same groove as his own. But I submit that, in view of the production of this country, and of the fact that the farmers of Canada, as shown by undeniable statistics, are producing more to the acre than the farmers on the other side of the line, the Minister of Agriculture was not justified in representing the agriculturists of this country as a slipshod, careless, indifferent and lazy class of people. The figures of the importation from the various countries I have named show that these countries, in the event of the ratification of this agreement, will be very serious competitors of the farmers of Canada. These are figures prepared by the Department of Customs showing the quantity and value of imports entered for consumption in Canada during the past six years in a few articles in which the farmers are directly interested.

These items do not include wheat flour, oat meal and corn meal nor do they include tropical fruits. The figures indicate very clearly to my mind that, in spite of the light manner in which the Prime Minister treated this matter, the competition of these several countries which will have the right to send their produce into Canada should give the farmers of this country serious concern. It has been stated by defenders of this agreement that the farmers of this country will be getting one more market, will be getting the right to sell their products in the markets of the United States. Let us see where our stuff goes to at the present time. Eighty per cent of what is produced on the farms of Canada is consumed by the people of Canada in Canada. The best market that the Canadian farmer has is his home market, and I believe he fully realizes that. Of the twenty per cent which we have to export, nearly all at present goes either to Great Britain or to the United States. Let us see which of these markets is the more valuable to us. The figures I will give now are for the year 1910, and are taken from the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

—	Canada sold to Great Britain.	Canada sold to United States.	United States sold to Canada.

There does not seem to be any lack of breadstuffs on the other side of the line. Their surplus of breadstuffs is much larger than our surplus, as indicated by what they export and what we export. At the present time they are sending us of breadstuffs about four times as much as we are sending them. These figures surely indicate that the United States is not and will not be a good market for our surplus breadstuffs. I may say that the figures I am quoting are taken from the report of the Department of Commerce and Labour of the United States government. Yet, Sir, notwithstanding these undeniable facts, there are actually men going through this country and telling the people that the prices of provisions are higher on the other side of the line than they are on this side, notwithstanding the fact that the enormous surplus they have on the other side indicates that such a contention is entirely unreasonable.

Exports of Domestic Merchandise from United States for 1910, as taken from Report of Department of Commerce and Labour at Washington:

Animals..	$ 15,292,411
Breadstuffs..	109,096,306
Hay..	1,092,328
Fruits..	22,460 210
Provisions..	130,851,077
Vegetables..	4,679,828
	$283,472,160

Now I have given you figures in regard to animals, breadstuffs, hay, fruits, provisions and vegetables, which I think will cover pretty thoroughly what the farmer produces and has to sell. The totals for the last year indicate that Canada sold $117,483,629 to Great Britain, and to the United States, $9,210,122. The United States sold to Canada, $32,415,382, and sold altogether of these articles $283,472,160. In view of these facts, which are taken from the reports in our own blue-books and from the authorized reports of the United States government, it does seem to me that in nearly everything which we have to sell the United States has a larger surplus than we have. Well, you may say that I have only made a statement covering one year. One hon. gentleman in this House said that in the United States they were rapidly reaching the time when they could not produce enough for their own home consumption. I wish to prove by figures that that statement is entirely incorrect. I am going to take the figures for the last six years. I will give the imports into Canada for home consumption from the United States for the years 1905 to 1910 inclusive, and I am going to divide those six years into three-year periods, in 1905-6-7 as one period, and 1908-09-10 as the second period, and we will compare what was imported into Canada during the last three years with what was imported for home consumption from the United States during the preceding three years. This will give us a reasonably correct indication of whether there is a falling off in surplus production on the other side of the line.

	Years 1905-6-7.	Years 1908-9-10.

Now, if you compare the totals for the last three years with the totals for the three years immediately preceding, you will notice that, with the exception of potatoes and oats, the United States sent far larger quantities into Canada during the last three-year period than during the preceding period. When you examine the imports in the different years you will observe a tendency on the part of the Americans to crowd more and more of their farm produce into Canada, and thereby lower the price of Canadian farm produce in our home market. I would like some hon. gentleman to give an answer to this question. The figures which I have taken from authorized reports indicate clearly that instead of any falling off of surplus production in the United States there is an increase in production, and that instead of the United States sending less to Canada they are sending more and more. I would like some hon. gentleman who is advocating the ratification of this agreement to tell me, if the prices are higher in the United States than they are in Canada—and that is the burden of their song—why it is that they are sending more and more of their stuff to Canada and accepting less money for it.

That is something which I submit for the consideration of these gentlemen, and I am sure that every person will agree with me that if the duties are removed and they have a surplus production there the amount which they will send into our market will be greater than it is at the present time, and they will displace the Canadian's home market, the best market that he has, the market in which he should sell for home consumption.

Let me refer in detail to one or two items in which the people of my county are especially interested. The township of Wolfe Island, in the county of Frontenac produces more hay than any other township in Ontario. It is but natural, therefore, that this agreement should appeal to them, and I may say frankly that it does appeal to them in the matter of giving them sale for their hay. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to that. I do not wish to be at all discourteous, but I was somewhat amused by the statement made by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Robb) with regard to hay. That hon. gentleman stated that hay uniformly brought $7 or $8 a ton more in Boston and New York than on this side of the line. I thought his statement was somewhat extravagant. The duty is $4 for the long ton, it is $3.57 for the ton as we have it in this country, and I cannot understand our selling any hay in this country at all. If it is worth $7 or $8 more in New York and Boston than it is here they could easily pay the full amount of duty and have a large margin after selling it in New York and Boston. I think that the hon. gentleman, when he comes to consider the matter, will agree with me that his argument would have been much stronger if he had not made the difference in price quite so large. As I have already said the ton of hay in the United States is always spoken of as the long ton. I have here the report of the United States Department of Agriculture which gives the prices of hay on the other side of the line for thirty or forty years back, and I propose to give the average price of hay for a few years in the United States. The figures are as follow:

Year.	Average price in United States
1904	$ 7.78
1905	7.60
1906	9.25
1907	10.42
1908	8.01
1910	10.93

That is for the short ton, and the figures I am giving are taken from a report of the Department of Agriculture for the United States, the book which I hold in my hand. The figures for New York state for these years are as follow:

Mr. EDWARDS.

Year.	Average price in New York State.
1904	$ 9.32
1905	9.26
1906	10.80
1907	13.82
1908	10.93
1910	12.23

There is a considerable difference between the prices of hay in various states on the other side of the line. I notice that in one year there was as much as $3.55 of a difference in the price between the states of Ohio and the state of New York.

An hon. MEMBER. Which was the higher?

Mr. EDWARDS. The price in New York state was $3.55 higher than in the state of Ohio in that year. With regard to prices, last year the American commissioners who were appointed by resolution of the United States Congress stated in their report that:

> It should be noted that owing to crop shortage the price of hay was unusually high in the United States in 1910.

I want to apply this more particularly to the township that I have called attention to. I have said that the township of Wolfe Island raises a large amount of hay. It is but a short distance from the south shore of Wolfe Island to the American side. It costs 18 cents a hundred to ship hay from Cape Vincent to New York city. That is $3.60 for a ton like ours. It costs $2.20 a ton, or 11 cents a hundred, to ship hay from Kingston, or from Wolfe Island, to Toronto or Montreal. There is a difference in railway rates as between Kingston and Montreal, and Kingston and Toronto, and Cape Vincent and New York of $1.40 a ton. That is by rail. Hay, however, can be shipped from Wolfe Island, or from northern New York by water to either Toronto or Montreal. It cannot be shipped by water to New York city. Of course, it could be shipped by going a roundabout way, but it would go by rail from Cape Vincent or northern New York to New York city. It can be shipped by water from northern New York, or from Wolfe Island to either Toronto or Montreal at about half the railway rate, or $1.25 a ton. Let us take into consideration things as they do sometimes occur. For instance, in 1910, we had in my particular part of Ontario a very good crop of hay, a better crop of hay than they had in New York state. Taking one year with another New York state produces about the same amount of hay as Ontario, namely, about 6,500,000 tons. We will suppose that there was a good crop of hay in New York state, and an indifferent or comparatively poor crop in Frontenac county. In such a year as that those people in Wolfe Island who produce large quantities of hay would be getting from the consumers in Canada a large price for their hay. But we will take an American buyer in northern New York state. He buys a quantity of hay in northern New York, and looks around to see where he can ship it to. There is a shortage in Ontario, and the price of hay has gone up in Toronto and Montreal. He considers the price in Toronto, he takes into consideration the price in Montreal, and he looks at the price in New York and Boston.

He says: Now if I ship hay to New York it will cost me $2.35 a ton more than it will to send it to Toronto or Montreal, and, in the case of an especially poor crop of hay on our side of the line and an especially good crop on the other side, a case where the people on that particular island would stand to gain, I think, when the duty is off, they will be up against serious competition from hay being brought into Canada from the American side. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the attention of the committee to the matter of horses. We have in Canada 2,213,199 horses and they have in the United States 21,040,000 horses in addition to over 4,000,000 mules. Of the horses in Canada 1,586,000 are in Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba. There are more horses in the state of Iowa alone than there are in these six provinces put together. There are 1,600,000 horses in the state of Iowa alone, or more than you will find in all Canada from the western boundary of Manitoba to the Atlantic ocean. Some people have said that in the event of ratification of this agreement we will get a better market for our horses than we have now, but I am convinced that if this agreement is ratified the horse breeders in Ontario and Quebec stand to lose from $25 to $50 on every horse, and later on I will give the reasons why. The official figures indicate a larger and larger importation of horses year after year into Canada from the United States. In the year 1908 the United States exported altogether 18,516 horses of which they sent 14,019 to Canada; in 1909 the United States exported 23,428 horses altogether, of which they sent 18,616 to Canada; in the year 1910 the United States exported 29,359 horses, of which they sent to Canada 25,604. In these three years the United States exported altogether 71,303 horses, of which they sent 58,239 to Canada. You will notice from these figures that last year the United States sent 7,000 more horses to Canada than they did in 1909, and in 1909 they sent about 4,000 horses more than in 1908, which does not indicate any falling off in the horse business on the other sde of the line.

The report of the Tariff Commissioners appointed by the United States Congress says that the average price of horses in the United States is $25 lower than in the Dominion of Canada, and if you apply that to the number of horses which were sold out of my own county of Frontenac last year, that difference in price would mean a loss to the farmers of my county of $32,750. Last year the province of Ontario sold to the Northwest 20,000 horses, and our Ontario farmers obtained good figures for these animals. The Ontario farmers have been encouraged of late years to go into the horse business, and they are giving it a great deal of attention, and are producing a class of horse which is very acceptable in the Northwest. If you take the average price obtained by the Ontario farmers for these 20,000 at $200 each, that would mean $4,000,000 that came into the pockets of the Ontario farmers last year from the horse trade with the west, or at an average price of $175 each it would mean $3,500,000 to the Ontario farmers. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion the ratification of this agreement means a loss of from $25 to $50 per horse to the farmers of Ontario and Quebec, and I will give you my reason for that statement. The farmers of Ontario and Quebec cannot raise horses as cheaply as they can in the United States, because in some of the states south of the line the horses can run out all the year round, and in these states they produce two or three crops of alfalfa in the year, and when they wish to put the horse in good condition they can feed a little corn of which the United States raises more than all the rest of the world put together. On the other hand, the Ontario and Quebec farmers have to stable their horses for four, five, or six months in the year, and in view of this conditon is any argument necessary to prove that they cannot compete, in the matter of raising horses, against the climatic and other conditions which prevail south of the line. Remove the duty on horses as this agreement proposes, and the horses which are now supplied by Ontario and Quebec to Saskatchewan and the west at good prices will be supplied from the western states where they can produce horses at a much lower figure than we can. The average price of horses in New York state, as given by the statistical year-book published by the Department of Agriculture of the United States is $114, the average price in Ohio $113, and the average price in Pennsylvania $116. Let me say that these three states, which lie just across the border from Ontario, have more horses than there are in all Canada. The state of Iowa has 1,600,000, and the average price as given by this book published by the United States government is $111; the state of Illinois has 1,623,000 and the average price of horses is $109; the state of Nebraska has 1,035,000 horses, and the average price is $91; the state of Kansas has 1,152,000, and the average price is $89. Here are four states which lie hundreds of miles nearer to the Northwest than do Ontario and Quebec. These four states have 5,410,000 horses, the average price of which is $100, and they have more than double the number of horses there are in all Canada. Let any person look at the map of North America and see the location of these four states; let him take into consideration the climatic conditions there and here, and I am sure that any man who gives the matter consideration will agree with me that the ratification of this agreement will mean the loss of the western Canadian horse market to Ontario and Quebec, which to our farmers in these two representative provinces is a serious loss indeed. I want now to refer to our cattle trade, which is a matter of very great interest to all our agriculturalists. There are in Canada 2,849,306 dairy cows, and in the United States 21,801,000 dairy cows. The average price for all Canada of dairy cows is $43 per head; the average price for the United States is $35.79. The average price of dairy cows in New Hampshire is $36.20; in Vermont, $34.20; in New York state, $39.50, and in Ontario, $48.

Canada has of other cattle 4,384,779 head. The United States has 47,279,000 head. The average price of these other cattle in the United States is $19.41 and in Canada $31. The average price in New Hampshire is $20.30 in Vermont $14.40, New York state $18.20, and in Ontario $34. I have already stated what Canada exported in cattle. Our exportation of cattle to the United States is decreasing year by year while the number they are sending here is on the increase.

What I have said in regard to horses applies also to cattle; any farmer knows that it costs more to feed cattle in cold weather than in warm weather. Where you have to keep your cattle in the stable the expense is greater than where the stock can run out doors. I have no doubt that in the event of the ratification of this agreement American buyers will come over here to buy our unfinished cattle, but it is unreasonable for us to suppose that the American buyer will give us what is now the average price here of these cattle; the price which he will give us will be rather the average price of such cattle in the United States. Will any man argue that as soon as the duty is removed the price of these cattle will be fixed by the smaller number in Canada as against the larger number in the United States? That seems to me to be absolutely unreasonable. They have about twelve cattle to our one. Will any man argue that the one cow in Canada will control and fix the price rather than the twelve on the other side of the line? I cannot see it in that way nor do I believe that any farmer will. If when they buy our cattle the Americans have not enough hay and coarse feed of their own they will come over here and take away our hay. Do we stand to gain by such an arrangement? If they take our unfinished cattle over there and feed their rough stuff to them they will have the benefit of these cattle in keeping up the fertility of their soil, and they will obtain for the finished cattle finished prices. In that way the American farmer will also obtain a better price for his rough grains.

The price of bran and shorts is an important element in considering this question of cattle raising. At present if you compare the price of bran and shorts in Buffalo and Toronto, Windsor and Detroit, Winnipeg and Minneapolis, it will be seen that the average price per ton in Canada is from 50 cents to $4.50 lower in Canada than in the United States. The American farmer lacks one thing to make him king in the production of cattle and hogs. That one thing is the by-products of wheat. If our wheat goes from here to the other side of the line to be ground, as it is only natural to suppose it will if this agreement is ratified, the by-products will go with it. With cheaper bran and shorts to supplement the immense quantities of corn which they produce and which we cannot, they will have the advantage over the Canadian at every stage of the game in feeding cattle or hogs.

I find that the average prices of live cattle for a number of years back in Toronto and Chicago have been per cwt.:

Year.	Price in Toronto.	Price in Chicago.
1901, May..	$4.25	$3.95
1902, May..	5.25	5.00
1903, May..	4.90	4.06
1904, May..	5.20	4.90
1905, May..	5.70	5.50
1906, May..	5.10	4.00
1907, May..	5.12½	4.00
1908, May..	5.50	5.00
1909, May..	5.75	5.10
1910, May..	7.00	6.25

Of sheep Canada has 2,705,390 and the United States has 57,216,000. The state of Ohio alone has half as many sheep as there are in all Canada. The average price of sheep as given in this report, which is neither a Grit nor a Tory document, but the report of the Tariff Commissioners appointed by the United States Congress, is in the United States $4.08 and in Canada $6. The price in New Hampshire is $3.70, in Vermont $4, in New York $5 and in Ontario $7. In connection with sheep raising we must consider the admission to our markets of New Zealand, Australia, and the Argentine mutton as a factor in regulating prices here. The imports of mutton from Australia alone to Canada since 1905 have been as follows:

Australia in 1905 sent us 60,136 pounds of mutton; 1906, 354,575 lbs.; 1907, 990,556 lbs.; 1908, 1,162,837 lbs.; 1909, 1,113,411 lbs.; 1910, 1,377,270 lbs.

I would ask you to note the gradual increase year by year in our imports of Australian mutton. They have grown from 60,000 pounds in 1905 to 1,377,000 in 1910.

I noticed the following item in the Toronto 'World' the other day, dated April 11:

One hundred and thirty-nine clipped lambs were brought from Buffalo yesterday, and sold on the Toronto market at $7 per cwt. This is only one incident, as similar sales have been made for several weeks past.

When the Americans can afford to bring their lambs from the other side of the line, pay the duty and sell on the Toronto market in competition with our own farmers to-day, what will happen when the duty is removed and these lambs and sheep can come in from the other side of the line without paying any duty whatever?

Another matter in which the farmers of this country are very keenly interested is hogs. We have in Canada 2,753,964 hogs and the United States has 54,147,000. The State of Iowa alone has 7,908,000, or nearly three times as many as we have in all Canada. The average price per head in the United States was, in 1909, $6.55, and in Canada $11.30. In 1910, the average price was $9.14 in the United States and $11.30 in Canada. Let me now give the average price for the last four years in the markets of Chicago, Montreal, Buffalo, Toronto, Peterborough and Hull. I select Chicago because it is the centre of the meat trade in the United States and Montreal, because it is the acknowledged centre of that trade in Canada. I select Buffalo and Toronto because they are lying comparatively near the one to the other; and I take Peterborough and Hull because both those places have packing establishments. The prices per cwt. for live hogs in these different places were as follow:

AVERAGE PRICES FOR LAST FOUR YEARS, PER CWT.

Year.	Chicago.	Montreal.	Buffalo.	Toronto.	Peterborough.	Hull.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1907	6 10	7 43	6 67	6 94	7 01	7 02
1908	5 70	7 10	6 22	6 57	6 71	6 79
1909	7 35	8 64	7 92	8 06	8 25	8 55
1910	8 90	9 60	9 58	9 13	9 26	9 30
Average ..	7 01	8 19	7 59	7 67	7 80	7 92

In October, 1907, the price of hogs dropped in Chicago to $3.80 per cwt. while at the same time the price in Montreal was $6.65 per cwt. Remove the duty and what will occur? If a large number is shipped to Chicago and the price falls there $2 or $3 per cwt. live weight less than in Montreal, a few carloads will be shipped from the west to Montreal and down will go the price in that city.

If you take the difference between the average prices in Chicago and Montreal during the last four years, that difference would represent to the farmers of the county of Frontenac a loss on the number and quantity killed in that county last year of $26,239, and a loss on the number sold or killed in Ontario of $2,176,397, and the loss to the farmers in the province of Quebec would be very little less. In view of these facts, it would be well for us to pause and consider what this proposed agreement will result in before ratifying it.

Probably there is no matter which appeals more keenly to the farmers of eastern Ontario and western Quebec than the production of cheese. I want to point out in this connection that should we ratify this agreement, our farmers in Ontario or Quebec would stand to make a slight gain, but that gain would not be anything like the difference which has existed between the prices of cheese on this and the other side of the line during the last two or three years. During those years, there has been a considerable difference in the prices on both sides of the line. But in my opinion the reason is this. The duty of 6 cents per pound imposed by the United States on cheese has absolutely excluded the imports of that article from all other countries and thereby enabled the American speculator to control prices in the American market. This he does by simply buying up a few thousand and placing them in a warehouse and only taking them out when the market suits. As a proof that this is done, I find in the report of the United States Department of Commerce and Labour that on the 1st of January, 1911, there were 375 tons of cheese still in warehouses in the United States and on the 1st of January, 1910, nearly 500 tons. What would happen if we had free trade in cheese? Canada exported last year more than three times as much cheese as the rest of the world put together. Our market for that is England. The price of cheese in Liverpool will regulate the price in Canada, whether we have free trade with the United States or not. At present the representatives of the various Montreal houses attend our cheese boards throughout Ontario and Quebec and bid against one another. Every day before the board opens, they are instructed by the firms they represent how high they can bid, and every day these firms receive their cable despatches from Liverpool giving the prices in that centre. What would occur if an American buyer attended the cheese board? It is absurd to contend that if a Montreal firm bids 10 cents for cheese, the American will jump in with a bid of 12 cents. Is that the way the Yankee is built? If it is, I must confess that I have misunderstood him all my life. One sixteenth of a cent advance bid will clear the board any day and give to the buyer his choice of as many cheese as he wants. It is therefore nonsense for any one to say that a buyer who can get what he wants by an advance of one sixteenth of a cent will bid an advance of two or three cents. In the event of free trade you will simply have a levelling of prices, and the prices in Liverpool will continue to rule.

There is another thing which our dairymen ought to consider. Some years ago they were much concerned over the fact that certain Canadian buyers were bringing American cheese to Canada and shipping it by way of Montreal to England as Canadian cheese. Our Canadian cheese, because of that, was suffering in reputation. It is well known that the American cheese is much softer than ours and is considered by the British palate as inferior to ours. But how are you going to prevent this mixing of Canadian and American cheese in the event of a free interchange of natural products between the two countries. You may say that if American cheese were being shipped through Canada by way of Montreal to the old country we could stop that. That is all very well, but how could you prevent an American buyer from taking a thousand boxes of Canadian cheese across to the other side of the line and mixing it with a thousand boxes of American cheese, and marking it all 'made in Canada.'

And your reputation in the English market will be thereby jeopardized. That is a very serious matter and one which should be given very careful attention. Now, it is true that we have been shipping to the other side of the line during the last year considerable quantities of cream, because of the reduction in the duty to five cents per gallon. I put a question on the Order Paper a little time ago asking for the quantity and value of milk and cream sent from Canada into the United States during the past year. There is one very notable feature about the return, and that is that during the last three months, January, February and March, there has been a decided falling off in the quantity of cream sent from Canada to the south side of the line. In this connection, allow me to place on 'Hansard' a letter received a few days ago by a gentleman living in the county of Leeds:

Montreal, April 12, 1911

W. R. Kaiser, Esq.,
Mitchelville, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Replying to yours of the 11th instant.

The Canadian cheese market is rather quiet, particularly for white, as there is no export yet; the few coloured that are coming in are being sold for home trade; besides, the price of fodder in the States is so cheap that it will affect our market. We bought both white and coloured there this week at 10 cents.

If you wish to ship yours in we will guarantee you 11 cents, and if they are worth more we will pay it. See that they are well cured. Or, if you are not satisfied with these prices, call Mr. McVeigh up at Brockville and he will do the best possible for you, should there be any change.

Yours truly,
JAS. ALEXANDER LIMITED
Per J. A.

This letter is from one of the best known cheese buying firms on the continent of America. It is dated only about a week ago and it clearly indicates that the price of cheese on this side of the line at present is better than on the other side. The reduction in the exportation of cream goes to show that the price of that commodity has fallen on the other side of the line. Let me give another instance, and this I quote from a well-known Liberal journal, the 'British Whig,' published in the city of Kingston. The item is headed 'Cheese will be made as the price of cream has taken a drop.' It is dated Newboro, April 15, and appears in the 'Whig' of April 17. The item is as follows:

J. H. Singleton, Smith's Falls, owner of the cheese factories in this locality, spent a few days last week in town. Both factories will make cheese this season, as the price of the cream in the American markets is very low.

Last year, Mr. Singleton put in the necessary machinery for the making of casein, and shipped both cream and casein from his factories to the United States. This year, the price has dropped, he leaves the machinery unused and is going back to the making of cheese. These things indicate the uncertainty of the American market for our Canadian farmers in the matter of cheese. There is another feature of this cheese business, which, I think, is worthy of serious attention, especially of the people of eastern Ontario and western Quebec. I find that in the State of Illinois, they have 1,229,000 milch cows in Wisconsin, 1,462,000 in Minnesota, 1,092,000 in Iowa, 1,586,000, a total of 5,369,000 cows in these four States, or twice as many dairy cattle in these four States as we have in all Canada. And a glance at the map of North America will show where these states are located. They are located hundreds of miles nearer our Northwest than are the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. One of the arguments being advanced by men from these states in favour of the ratification of this agreement is that, in the event of this agreement going into force, these states will supply Manitoba and Saskatchewan with cheese, butter and other dairy products which are now being supplied by Ontario and Quebec. I stated a little while ago that Canada exported last year 180,000,000 pounds of cheese. But four or five years ago, Canada exported something over 225,000,000 pounds of cheese. We are not producing, I take it, less cheese than we did four or five years ago. Where, then, does the cheese go to? The falling off in the export simply means that a larger quantity of cheese is being consumed at home. In Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which in my humble judgment will never be cheese producing provinces, we have an ever-growing market for our surplus production of cheese and butter from Ontario and Quebec. And I say that it is worthy of the attention of our farmers in Ontario and Quebec the possibility, indeed I may say the probability, that in the event of the ratification of this agreement, they will stand to lose that very important market.

Advocates of this agreement say that in the event of ratification our farmers in Canada will obtain entrance to the American market which will give them higher prices for everything they have to sell than they obtain at present in Canada. It is a very remarkable thing to me that, if that statement is correct, hundreds of farmers are leaving their farms in Vermont, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio—deliberately leaving their farms where, according to the advocates of this agreement, the prices of every thing are higher than in Canada—and coming to Canada where they will get less. Last year the United States took their decennial census. It is the custom there to hand out to the press statistics as fast as they get them—that is, before they have all their census statistics compiled and ready to put in book-form, they hand out the figures of the several states as they get them ready.

I have in my hand the advance press sheets of three states on the other side of the line. These advance press sheets give statistics for the states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, and were sent to me by Mr. Durand, the chief director of the Census Statistical Bureau at Washington. I notice that in the state of Vermont, in the last ten years, there is a decrease in the total number of farms of 506, and a decrease in the total acreage of farms of 71,000. In improved acreage, there is a decrease of 495,000, or 23 per cent of the total acreage. Of mortgaged farms, there are 13,117, 47 per cent of the whole. In the state of New Hampshire, in the ten years, there has been a decrease of 2,077, or 8 per cent in the total number of farms, and a decrease of 368,000 acres, or 10 per cent of the total acreage. In improved acreage, there was a decrease of 150,000 acres, or 14 per cent. Of mortgaged farms, there were 6,210, or 25 per cent. In the state of Massachusetts the number of farms decreased in the ten years, 1,203, the total acreage, 277,000, in improved acreage, the decrease was 130,000. The number of mortgaged farms was 11,941, or 38 per cent of the total in 1900; and 12,973, or 45 per cent of the total, in 1910. Yet the states of Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts are right at hand to this great Boston market which hon. gentlemen say will make Canadian farmers rich if they can get into it. In those three states there are nearly 4,000 abandoned farms in ten years. Now, if conditions are so much better on the other side of the line in those states which are convenient to the great markets of Boston, New York, Brooklyn and Pittsburg, and where they have free trade, why is it, if prices of everything the farmer produces there are so much higher than prices here, that the number of mortgaged farms has increased so rapidly? Why are the farmers leaving their farms and coming into Canada, where hon. gentlemen tell us that the price of everything is lower than it is on the other side of the line? I do not think their argument is reasonable. As a matter of fact, the prices of nearly every thing the farmer has to sell in Canada are higher than on the other side. Our market is better. Take the article of eggs: We exported altogether last year 160,000 dozen, while from the United States in the month of February alone, we imported 719,000 dozen, and paid the duty. Now as a matter of fact we are not producing enough eggs in Canada for our home consumption, and on the other hand, the United States are producing a surplus which they are selling to other countries. If there is anything at all in the old theory of supply and demand, it is unreasonable to say that the price of eggs will be higher in the United States where they have a surplus, more than they require for their own needs, than it is in Canada where we do not produce enough for our own needs. The same with regard to meat, the same with regard to butter, to horses, cattle, sheep and hogs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the First Minister in speaking on this subject stated as reported in 'Hansard' page 4859:

> The manufacturer is the best friend of the farmer.

That is hardly in accordance with the kind of talk that is dealt out in certain places in this country. There has been, in my estimation, a very determined effort to try and divide this country into two classes, to place the farmer in opposition to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer in opposition to the farmer. I agree with the Prime Minister when he says that the manufacturer is the best friend of the farmer, and the farmer is the best friend of the manufacturer. I do not think that the manufacturer should have it all his own way, and I do think that in many things the manufacturer has had too high a protection. But the manufacturer is a friend of the farmer, and I will tell you why. Suppose that A has a farm five miles from the city of Toronto, a farm of 100 acres, and C has a farm of 100 acres ten miles from the city of Toronto, both farms having the same kind of soil and the same value in buildings. Now which of those two farms will be worth the more money? Undoubtedly the farm which is nearer the city. Why? Because of its proximity to a good market. So by building up cities and towns we are providing for the farmer a market which, I believe, the farmer values above any other market. But I do think that we have not been following a proper policy, we have not been giving to the farmer his fair share of protection. It was stated years ago when the National Policy was introduced, that while the farmer, because of protection accorded to the manufacturers, had to pay a little more for his machinery, the policy of protection would build up in Canada towns and cities, and thereby provide the farmer with a home market which, to a certain extent, would reimburse him for the extra amount he was obliged to pay for his machinery. Now that is all right. The National Policy did work out in that way, and cities and towns have been built up, and the farmer has reaped certain advantages therefrom. But I submit that the farmer has not been used squarely, because, while he has been obliged to pay more for his machinery on account of protection accorded to the manufacturer, he has not had the protection which he should have been given to enable him to supply this home market which he helped to build up. I contend that instead of taking the duties off his articles and obliging the Canadian farmer to compete with practically the whole agricultural world, what we should do is to take into consideration the cost of production in those other countries, and give to the farmer a sufficient amount of protection to allow him to supply the home market which he has helped to build up. For instance, it strikes me as entirely unreasonable, and I made this statement before in the House, that we should permit the United States to send into Canada, as they did last year, over $3,500,000 worth of pork by paying a duty of two cents a pound when they exclude our pork from going into their country by a duty of five cents a pound. That is absolutely unjust and unreasonable. They have certain advantages over there in the production of pork which should be considered.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has outlined a proper policy for this country, and that is that we should have a permanent tariff commission appointed along the line of the railway commission to inquire into prices and the cost of production, not only of manufactured articles but of farm products as well, and not only in Canada but in the United States, Denmark, Argentina, and all those other countries that the Canadian farmers have to compete with, taking into consideration the cost of production in those countries and in Canada and giving the Canadian farmer just such an amount of protection as will enable him to compete on fair terms with the people of those countries. Is it reasonable or fair to expect the Canadian farmer to compete with the Argentine farmer in the production of wheat where they pay 64 cents a day for wages while we pay two or three times that amount in Canada? If we wish the farmers in Canada to maintain their standard of living, and their standard of living is certainly higher than the standard of living adopted by the people in Argentine, if we desire to see their children educated and their homes comfortable, and if the cost of producing their stuff is greater here than it is there, then I am a protectionist to this extent that I would place upon these products such an amount of duty as will enable our Canadian farmers to compete with the cheap labour of these other countries on fair terms, taking into consideration rates of wages, climatic conditions, the cost of transportation, &c.

Now, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have told us that when they were at Washington they positively refused to consider reciprocal trade in manufactures. It is true that this government, in 1907, reduced the duty on agricultural implements from 20 to 17½ per cent. That was a short time before the last general election, and I remember distinctly that throughout the country appeals were made to the farmers by Liberal orators that the Liberal party had started in to put the manufacturer in his proper place, that they were starting in to redeem the pledge which they had made in their convention of 1893, that they were going at last to cut off the head of protection and later to trample on its body. I think those were the words of the right hon. Prime Minister. Well, they started in by taking 2½ per cent off agricultural implements, and they went to the farmer and said: See what we have done for you; we have reduced the duty on agricultural implements. They turned around to the manufacturer in 1907 and told him just what they are telling him to-day on the floor of this House: Do not be one bit alarmed; we are not going to hurt you. They went to their customs officers and instructed them to raise the valuation for duty of binders from $80 to $100 so that, whereas, under the Conservative duty of 20 per cent, they collected on a binder but $16, with the rate of duty reduced to 17½ per cent, they collect $17.50. This is what was in the mind of the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder), who is a farmer himself, when the Minister of Finance presented this pact to the House and when he stated that it was proposed to reduce the duty on agricultural implements from 17½ per cent to 15 per cent. My hon. friend from Dundas asked this question of the Minister of Finance:

Mr. BRODER. Is there any change to be made in the valuation for duty?

Mr. FIELDING. Our negotiations have not touched the question of valuation; that must be left to the operation of the customs authorities of the two countries.

Well, that is what they did in 1907, and that is what they propose to do now, so that if this agreement goes into operation and the duty is reduced to 15 per cent, I presume they will instruct their customs officials to raise the valuation of a binder for duty purposes from $100 to probably $150 or $120, and thereby collect more duty than they would at the 17½ per cent rate.

But, Mr. Chairman, this same party had for 18 years stated that if they once got into power they would take the duties off, they would do away with these duties, with this protection that was accorded to the manufacturers. If they were sincere in that, if they really wish to grant relief to the farmers, the relief that the farmers have been asking for many years in the form of a reduction in the duties on agricultural implements, there is a standing offer by the United States to make agricultural implements free as soon as this government see fit to do this also. If this government wish to make agricultural implements free there is the opportunity. The fact that they have not availed themselves of the offer of the United States shows conclusively that they have no intention of making any considerable reduction in the duty on agricultural implements. For my part, I take this view in regard to agricultural implements; I want to see these implements manufactured in Canada, I prefer to see them made here than to see them made in an outside country, but I do think that when the Massey-Harris Company can go to France, Austria, New Zealand, Australia and other countries and successfully meet the competition of the McCormicks and the Deerings, the amount of protection that they have at the present time is more than is necessary to enable them to go on and do business. Last year we had pretty strong evidence in this country that there was a combine or merger with regard to cement; at all events the price of cement jumped about forty or fifty cents a barrel. There was an opportunity for these gentlemen who went to Washington to do something in the interest of the farmer, because cement is something that almost every farmer uses more or less of. But, as a matter of fact, the only reduction they made in the duty on cement was a reduction of 1½ cents per 100 lbs.

Mr. MILLER. Would the hon. gentleman advise a further reduction in the duty?

Mr. EDWARDS. Undoubtedly I would. That answer, I presume, is emphatic and to the point. I do not see any reason why the duty should not have been reduced as much by this government on cement coming into Canada as it was reduced by the American government on cement going into the United States. On other things they made the rates the same but there is a difference of three cents per hundred pounds on cement. The rate is 3 cents per hundred pounds higher on cement coming into Canada than the rate on cement going into the United States. One of the arguments advanced by advocates of this agreement is that it is not a treaty for a fixed term of years, and that if it does not work out satisfactorily it can be done away with. As to that, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Customs have declared that they would not have been justified in going to all this trouble if this agreement were not intended to remain in effect for a considerable period. But suppose we found this arrangement working unsatisfactorily and that we wished to repeal it in a year or two, the United States government would doubtless say that the agreement was intended to remain in force for a considerable period and that to repeal it would be a breach of faith, which of course would lead to international irritation. Then, suppose this agreement worked satisfactorily to one section of Canada and that another section of our people met with competition from outside countries that was ruinous to them, one section of the community would be anxious for its repeal, while another section would advocate its retention and this would lead to endless confusion and turmoil. If this agreement should have the effect which its advocates on both sides of the line, regardless of politics say it will have, of changing our trade from east to west to north and south, it seems to me that much of the effort the Canadian people have been making for years past will be lost. We Canadians for a great many years have been struggling to perfect our canal system and to build transcontinental lines of railway; we have been trying to bind the various provinces together into a united country and while we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars towards that end we have scarcely received even a pleasant look from the people of the United States. But now that we have passed through our period of struggle, now that we have demonstrated our ability to make of these scattered provinces a great united nation, the Americans come and say: Let us in on the ground floor to share in your prosperity. Well, Sir, I do not think we are under any obligation to the people of the United States to do that for them. There is one other point to which I wish to refer and that is the question of annexation. I may say that I have every faith in the people of Canada, I do not believe that they can be influenced by dollars to sever their connection with the British Empire, but while that is true of the people of the older provinces would it not be unreasonable to expect from the tens of thousands of Americans and foreigners in our northwest the same regard for British institutions that we have. I have every confidence in the people of the older provinces in that regard, but I do think it would be unreasonable to expect that these strangers to our country would have the same respect for British institutions that we have, and I feel that we are neglecting our duty if we fail to examine the question from that aspect as well as from its economic side. We must, therefore, consider this question in the light of its effect on our relations to the British Empire as well as on our relations with the United States. But, Mr. Chairman, whatever may be our opinions in regard to annexation in this country—and I agree with those on both sides of the House who have preceded me in the view that there is no annexation feeling in this country worth mentioning—yet, the same cannot be said of the feeling entertained by prominent men in the United States. Their expressions indicate at least that in their opinion there is more in this compact than a mere trade agreement. One of the Senators from Wisconsin, speaking in the United States Congress said:

> There is not a citizen of the United States who would raise his voice against the admission of Canada to the Union, thus bringing about almost the identical conditions to be achieved by this treaty.

Mr. Young, one of the Senators from New York, said:

> It seems as though in the course of time that the American continent will be one people living under one flag, and by her influence bringing about amity throughout the world, which is the desire of all thinking, God-fearing men.

Now, whatever may be said of Mr. Champ Clark, he certainly occupies a position in the United States which ranks him as a prominent citizen; he is a leader of the Democratic party and a possible presidential candidate, and this is what Mr. Clark says:

> I look forward to the time when the American flag will fly over every square foot of British North America up to the north pole. The people of Canada are of our blood and our language. If the treaty of 1854 never had been abrogated, our countries would be much further advanced than now towards this end.
>
> Mr. Martin of South Dakota interrupted and said:
>
> Will the gentleman favour the abrogation of our tariff law entirely so far as Canada is concerned, and make free trade on all products?
>
> Mr. Clark—By taking Canada in to become a part of the United States—Yes.
>
> Then Mr. Norris of Nebraska asked: As I understand it, the gentleman favours the Bill for at least one reason, that it will have a tendency in the end to bring Canada into the union?
> Mr. Clark replied—Yes, I have no doubt about that.

This is the same Mr. Clark who used the words which created a certain sensation in this country at the time: We are preparing to annex Canada. The expression of these prominent men in the United States and the articles published in the newspapers and magazines of that country indicate that there is a feeling there that if this agreement is ratified it will be the entering of the thin end of the wedge; that, to use the words of President Taft, 'we are at the parting of the ways,' and that the time has come when the United States should make a move which may lead to the political union of the two countries. While one takes into consideration these statements one cannot get away from the fact that prominent men in this country have given expression at different times to sentiments which would or should cause the people of Canada to pause before they ratify this agreement. I call to mind statements made use of by no less a person than the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who said:

> I am a subject of the British Crown, but whenever it comes to pass that as a Canadian I have to choose between the interests of England and the interests of Canada, my whole heart is with my native land. It is manifest to me that the interests of my country are identical with the interests of the United States, and it is upon the broad basis of continental freedom of trade that I place the question before the people of this nation.

We cannot exclude from our minds in considering this question the utterances of the right hon. the Prime Minister in times past; we cannot forget, in considering this, not from the economic standpoint, but from the national standpoint, the occasion when the Prime Minister said that the independence of Canada was the goal of his ambition. I cannot forget that, in speaking in Boston, and in other places on the other side of the line, he indicated rather a feeling of hostility towards the mother land and made use of expressions which I thought did not come with good grace from one occupying his prominent position.

It has been said by advocates of this agreement that it is in the interests of the farmer. It is said that the manufacturing centres are opposed to this agreement, and advocates of it attempt to make much of that. The reason why the cities, the manufacturing centres, have shown opposition to this pact is not very hard to get at. If this agreement is ratified the manufacturers see that it must and will logically be followed by a further demand for the removal of duties on manufactured articles as well, there is no getting around that. If this agreement is ratified it will place the farmer in this position that in every thing he produces and has to sell he has to compete without any protection against practically the whole agricultural world. The farmer of Canada is certainly going to follow this up by a demand that the manufacturer shall be treated as he is treated, and I would like to know what party or what government can resist such a reasonable demand. for I maintain that if this agreement is ratified, and the farmers appeal to parliament, or to any party in this country that inasmuch as they have no protection, therefore, no other class in the community should have protection, their demand would be absolutely reasonable and just so the manufacturer realizes that this is but the beginning, that it will be logically followed by a demand for the removal of all duties. That brings us back to the matter as it was fought out in 1891, when the policy of the Liberal party as laid down by the same right hon. gentleman was commercial union, a policy which meant, in the opinion of Hon. Edward Blake, the ultimate political union of the two countries, so that while in 1891 the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury Benches, were candid enough to come out and say that their object was to have freedom of trade throughout the whole of North America, it seems to me they are adopting a slightly different course now, but a course which ultimately leads to the same result. If you carry that to its logical conclusion it means not only a removal of all duties on manufactured articles as well as on farm products, but it means direct taxation, because if you remove your duties on everything you must collect your revenue by direct taxation, and when revenue is collected in that way there is one class of people in this community who will be taxed to the last cent, and that is the farmers. The farmer cannot hide his farm, or his horses, or his cattle; the man living in the city, the wealthy man, the merchant, or the manufacturer, may put some of his wealth in stocks and bonds, and so evade the assessor, but the farmer is the one man who in case of direct taxation will pay to the last copper on everything he has. That is one thing the farmers have to face if you carry this agreement to its logical conclusion. The farmers of Canada are considering this matter, and the farmers of the county of Frontenac are turning their backs on it every day, and every moment of the day. I beg to prophesy that inside of two months you will see the farmers of Canada from east to west almost solidly opposed to this agreement which carries with it absolutely nothing for them but the competition of the whole world in everything they have to produce, and obliges them to pay a higher price for everything they have to buy, and which is necessary for them in carrying on their farming operations.

On motion of Mr. Beauparlant, committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.08 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FRIDAY, April 21, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS—EXPORT OF CATTLE TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go again into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BLAIN. In the returns of the Department of Customs, under the general statement of exports, I notice these figures: Cattle, 1 year old or less, exported to the United States, $23,679; cattle over 1 year, $618,995. These are the total exports of cattle to the United States according to the last fiscal returns. I would like to know whether included in the cattle covered by these figures are those purchased by United States buyers and sent to the United States in bond, their destination being Great Britain.

Mr. FIELDING. I will call the attention of the Minister of Customs to the point, and see that an answer is given to my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) at an early day.

Mr. BLAIN. I thought that would be a simple question.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Customs is not here, and in his absence the information is not available.

DISEASED HORSES.

Mr. H. S. BELAND (Beauce). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the serious danger which is threatening the health of horses in the vicinity of the United States, particularly in the counties of Dorchester, Beauce and Compton.

I have it on the best authority that an outbreak of glanders has occurred among horses in the northern districts of Maine, and I wish to corroborate that statement by reading a letter I have just received from my colleague, Mr. Godbout, who represents the county of Beauce in the Quebec legislature. It reads as follows:

Dr. H. S. Béland, M.P.,
Ottawa.

My dear doctor,—I wish to inform you that within the last month a hundred horses affected with glanders have been slaughtered at Jackman, Maine. This is the season when our shantymen come back home from Maine where they have spent the winter season with their teams.

We are evidently threatened with an outbreak of glanders, and it would be necessary for an officer to be permanently stationed here.

As you are aware that disease is a menace to the public health and several people out here are rather afraid of the spread of the disease.

I wish to keep you informed about the state of affairs, but I do not want to insist, as I did formerly. I only wish to relieve myself of any responsibility.

Yours truly,
ARTHUR E. GODBOUT.

As a matter of fact, Dr. Godbout and I have urged the department to appoint a permanent veterinary inspector in the vicinity of the American boundary at that particular place.

Up to now I do not think the authorities have acceded to our request. The matter is one of some importance, as it appears that an epidemic of glanders and farcy among horses is liable to give rise to certain morbid manifestations among men. Therefore, I hope the hon. minister will give the matter his immediate attention.

Mr BLAIN.

Mr. FISHER. I shall be very happy to have an examination made into the facts concerning this epidemic in the state of Maine. We have an arrangement with the government of the United States by which their veterinary authorities notify us in case of any such epidemic. I do not think that any such notification has been received, but I will certainly have the veterinary department examine into the condition of affairs, and take the necessary precautions to prevent the spread of the disease into Canada.

JUDICIAL VACANCY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to ask the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether any appointment has been made to fill the vacancy on the judicial bench of Prince Edward Island, to which reference was made not long ago.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has not been made yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I would like again to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the very great importance of filling this vacancy. The circumstances are well known to the right hon. gentleman, (Sir Wilrfid Laurier) and they are also well known to the people of Prince Edward Island who have been suffering greatly from the neglect of the government in this regard. We have been informed in this House that there are cases on the docket of the Supreme Court of Prince Edward Island which have been waiting to be heard by the Court of Appeals since 1908. Now, for part of that delay, the government obviously are not responsible, for it was due in the first place to the illness of Mr. Justice Hodgson. But Mr. Justice Hodgson resigned in October last, as I am informed—indeed the hon. member for Kings, P.E.I., (Mr. Fraser) has stated the fact in this House. I believe that on this point there is absolutely no dispute. Six months have elapsed since that time, and the vacancy has not yet been filled. There is no reason, so far as we can judge, or so far as we have heard from the government, why that vacancy should not have been filled within three or four weeks at the outside. The matter was brought to the attention of the government by the hon. member for Kings, P. E.I., on the 20th January last. The answer of the Prime Minister at that time was that he had been very busy. In his subsequent reference to the same subject, he admitted that that was either a poor excuse, or no excuse at all. The Prime Minister, on the 20th of January, practically stated that the appointment would be made in a very short time. More than three months have elapsed since then, yet no appointment has been made. In speaking upon this question on the 7th of this month, I stated that 'this delay in filling judicial offices for reasons of political expediency amounted to no more nor less than a trafficking in the appointments to the judicial bench of this country; it is absolutely nothing short of that.' And I desire to repeat to-day what I then said. If the government have any just reason or excuse, or any shadow or reason or excuse for not making this appointment, it ought to be stated to the House and the country. Up to this time, it has not been stated. Matters have gone so far that the legislature of Prince Edward Island. in which the supporters of this government constitute a majority, have found it necessary to pass a resolution, and make an address to His Excellency the Governor General upon this subject. That address is in these words:

To His Excellency,
The Governor General of Canada in Council.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Prince Edward Island in session assembled, humbly represent:

That it is expedient that an appointment should be made with all convenient despatch to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Honourable Edward Jarvis Hodgson, master of the Rolls for the province, and assistant judge of the Supreme Court of Judicature of this province.

Wherefore the said Legislative Assembly humbly pray that a fit and proper person may be appointed to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court and Court of Chancery of this province accordingly.

And, as in duty bound, we will ever pray,

(Certified) JOHN AGNEW, Speaker.

Legislative Assembly, March 30, 1911.

That address passed to His Excellency the Governor General in pursuance of a resolution passed unanimously by the Legislative Assembly of the province of Prince Edward Island on the 22nd of March, 1911, nearly five weeks ago. The resolution is couched in exceedingly moderate terms, I think it might well have been couched in much stronger terms. The matter which ought to engage the attention of this parliament, which ought to be dealt with by this government without one hour's unnecessary delay, is the importance of filling that appointment which has been vacant for more than six months; and I repeat that for the delay in making that appointment there has been absolutely no reason given by this government when the subject has been repeatedly drawn to their attention. I think it deserves an immediate answer, and immediate attention ; and I want to tell my right hon. friend the Prime Minister and the members of this government, that if that appointment is not made without delay, I shall take the earliest opportunity of making a motion in this House condemning the government for their inaction in this matter, and condemning them for making this appointment to the judicial bench a party football. It is well known and recognized in the province of Prince Edward Island that the delay is not occasioned by any reason which can be advanced in the public interest, there are no such reasons. At all events, the belief prevails in the province of Prince Edward Island and I think it is well founded, that the appointment is being delayed because it is not convenient from a party standpoint to appoint the gentleman who is in the minds of the government at this moment. If that is not the reason, the Prime Minister is at perfect liberty to state the true reason. But as a matter of fact, with cases upon the docket of the Court of Appeal standing for years, in October last, the government have delayed up to the present time, for a peroid of six months in making that appointment, although there are many men at the bar of Prince Edward Island, in both parties, even within the ranks of the political party of which the hon. gentleman is the leader, who are well qualified to fill the vacancy. Under these conditions I submit that this is a matter of urgent public importance, and demands an immediate and unequivocal statement from the government as to why this appointment has been delayed, and a further statement as to the date when it will be made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is true that six months have elapsed since there has been a vacancy on the bench of Prince Edward Island. If I may judge by the records of the past, going back to the early days of confederation, I think this is not an unusual delay. I think I could verify my statement by copious examples, in which, however, I do not care to take refuge in order to shield ourselves in the present instance. The last time this matter came up for discussion I stated that the government would be prepared to make an appointment after the Easter recess. We have been very busy, and the recess gave us more leisure to think it over. I have only to say that I have not forgotten it, and I am prepared to make an announcement of this appointment at an early day. If the day on which we make the announcement is not sufficiently early in the judgment of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, he will be quite within his right in bringing before the House a motion, as he says, censuring the government. To this I have no objection to take, it is within his right to take any action in this respect his sense of public duty may point out to him. But in my view of our duty, this government has not up to the present time been liable to any censure. My hon.

friend has alluded to the fact that there has been a resolution passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island on this subject. He surprised me when he stated that this resolution had been passed on the 22nd of March. It has not come to my knowledge, except within a very few days. I do not know whether the transmission was delayed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The resolution was passed on the 22nd of March, but the address consequent on that resolution was not adopted until the 30th of March.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. At all events, it has only come to my knowledge within the last few days. I have only to say to my hon. friend, as I have already remarked, that the last time the matter was up we promised we would consider it during the recess, and would be prepared to make an announcement at an early day, sufficiently early to meet the criticisms of my hon. friend. If it is not, then he will be able to make his motion of censure with which he has threatened us. But I repeat that I do not think we have been unduly negligent. My hon. friend has just given a reason why we have had to take some time to make the appointment. He has told us that there are many men at the bar of Prince Edward Island, not only within the two parties, but even in the ranks of the Liberal party, to which he alluded especially, who are capable of filling this appointment. It was a case of an embarras de richesse, it was difficult to make a selection from among so many good men. If this had not been the case, perhaps it would have been more easy to reach a conclusion. But where there are so many men well qualified to choose from, my hon. friend must not be surprised if we have taken some time in making a selection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then if there was no good man at all the appointment could be made at once?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If there was no man we could not make the appointment at all.

Mr. LENNOX. I have paid some attention to cases of this kind, and I may be permitted to say a word in support of the leader of the opposition. The Prime Minister says that, judging by cases which have occurred in the past, the government has not been guilty of any undue delay. If in any case delay is necessary in order to serve the public, then the delay is justifiable, but in this case the administration has been unable to show any justification whatever for the delay. A delay of a year may be justifiable in the public interest, but a delay of a week or a day is not justifiable when it is sought to serve only party purposes, as we know it is in this case. This is not the first occasion of the kind. This government has been notorious for delaying appointments such as this, where nothing can be shown in justification except party interest. The abundance of material the right hon. gentleman refers to is the abundance of claimants upon the government, and he knows very well that the delay in this case is due entirely to a desire to reconcile party exigencies and personal ambitions. I hope the leader of the opposition will promptly condemn the administration for their delay in this matter, and I am quite prepared, from the utter want of reason given by the government, to condemn them now. I do not think there is any doubt about their having failed utterly to discharge their public duties. Nothing is more deserving of condemnation than the effort of a government to administer this branch of the public service for party purposes. I am glad to reflect that among the many proud boasts to the credit of the administration which preceded this one was the fact that in the administration of justice, in appointments to the bench, the first minister and the Minister of Justice were guided solely by the public interest and that appointments were made without any reference to party ends or party interests. I could forgive this government for very many things——

An hon. MEMBER. They need it.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. I am of a forgiving disposition in that respect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. I could forgive them for a great many of the sins they have committed, and there are mountains of them as the Prime Minister would say, if they would redeem themselves upon this one point, if, in future, appointments would be made with regard to the public interest and to the maintenance of the high traditions of the judiciary of this country which obtained before the right hon. Prime Minister and his friends achieved power. I do not think that any further delay is justifiable, and it will be a very great satisfaction to me indeed if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition very promptly brings this matter forward for an express and clear condemnation of the administration of the government in this regard.

TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (Leeds). Mr. Speaker, on the 14th December I moved a motion in this House asking for a return and the House granted an order which reads :

Return to an order of the House of Commons, dated the 14th December, 1910, showing what amount has been paid by the government during the last fiscal year for travelling expenses with the names and the expenditure in each case, under the following heads' viz.:

Railway steamship, and other lines of transportation; private cars; pullman cars; tips to waiters; meals and hotel expenses for the following persons: ministers of the Crown civil servants of all grades; immigration agents; and other persons employed by the government on any special or other work.

It is signed by Charles Murphy, Secretary of State, but he adds to the return this statement:

The within return contains answers from every department of the government with the exception of that of Public Works which will not be ready for some considerable time yet.

I am surprised at this statement. The government, a few years ago, paid Americans thousands of dollars at the rate of $75 a day to come over here to show them the proper system of book-keeping, to start their books right, and I am surprised under those circumstances that the Department of Public Works would come down with a statement of that kind. Would any business man in this House tolerate such a condition as this for one moment? The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Harty) is looking at me ; if he went into his office and said to his book-keeper : How much were the travelling expenses in connection with this firm during the last year?—and if the book-keeper could not turn up the account and tell him in ten minutes, he would tell him to go. If he asked him to give a detailed statement, and have it ready on the following morning, and he was unable to do so, he would tell him to walk. That is what any business government would do, and this government pretends that it is a business government. There is the order of the House, and if I had a clerk in my employ who would bring down a return similar to some portions of this return, I would ask him to hand in his resignation immediately. The order of the House asks for certain details, but if it were not for the fact that a minister's name appears opposite the expenditure of some of these amounts I would not know from which department some of these returns came. That is the style of book-keeping that is done. The first return is from the Department of Militia and Defence. It is headed right and made out in fairly good form. The first item charged in this return is:

Sir Frederick Borden, minister, including expenses of sub-conference on imperial defence.

No details?

. . . $3,300.

It is an even $3,300. Then it goes on to give the travelling expenses of other officers, and among the items is one for tips to waiters amounting to $225.28. The Prime Minister and his associates are the trustees of the people's money, and I would like to know what business they have to allow their officers to put their hands in the public chest and give away $200 or $300 in connection with this one department. I will show, before I get through, where $800 has been paid in tips by officers of other departments.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the names of the persons tipped given?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). No. The next is the Department of the Secretary of State. He was very modest; he only charged up expenses—no details given—to the amount of $554.75.

Mr. FOSTER. He is young yet.

Mr. EMMERSON. Nothing for tips?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes, there is something for tips. Then, there is the office of the Governor General; I shall say nothing about that further than that one of the officials—Mr. Sladen—paid $53.05 for tips. Next is the Civil Service Commission. This is a commission that has been organized lately, but they have been able to spend some money, and out of a total of $721 they gave away $35.50 in tips. Next is the Minister of Finance. He is not as expensive as the Minister of Militia although he is down for $2,722. I see there is one gentleman in his employ who spent $105 on transportation and railway fares, $25.90 for pullmans, $53 for tips, and $139.50 for hotel expenses. That is Mr. Viets. Then, there is another return—I presume it is from his department, because it is made out in the same form and in the same typewriting—of travelling expenses paid out of the management vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that is still the Minister of Finance.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I presume it is in the minister's department. There is $22 given by Mr. Hyndman for tips. Here is an amount which I presume comes from the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is headed 'travelling expenses,' and the first item is:

Sir R. J. Cartwright, $300.

That is all the detail that is given. The expenditure on account of travel for himself and officials amounts in all to $18,303.55, but the return does not state anything further than that this is merely for travelling expenses.

Mr. LALOR. What period does that expenditure cover?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). This is for one year—1910. Then we come to the Department of Labour. The return is made out in detail and it shows a total expenditure on account of travel of $3,029.58. The minister paid out $340 himself, for which no details are given; the balance is for travelling expenses of officials, and they gave away $35.20 of the people's money for tips. Next is the North West Mounted Police, the Privy Council and the Under Secretary of State. Then there is the Auditor General's office in connection with which the expenses for travel were not very much. But there is an expenditure of $53.55 in tips. The next return that we have is from the Department of Railways and Canals. I do not find any item of expenditure by the minister. It is not given in the account, but there are some amounts here that I want to refer to. There is the Railway Commission. This is a little institution composed of three or four gentlemen, but they have quite a staff of officials, and they spent last year altogether $16,389.31 in transportation. They had a private car of their own, and it cost to furnish that car with supplies $7,719.

Mr. FOSTER. How much?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The official car 'Acadia,' cost for running expenses and meals on board, $7,719. Besides that they spent $1,602 for pullman fares for themselves and their officials, mostly their officials. They gave away $606 of the people's money for tips.

Mr. FOSTER. No names given?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). No names. These gentlemen have their hands in the public chest and they pay out as they like and there appears to be no control over them. Then we come to the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway. These are pets of the Prime Minister. A year or two before he appointed the chairman of that body I told him he was going to appoint his pet, Mr. Parent, and he can find that prophecy of mine in 'Hansard.'

Mr. LENNOX. That is because he built the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. A strong evidence of his qualification.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). These gentlemen spent in travel, $7,760.

Mr. FOSTER. What?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). $7,760.

Mr. FOSTER. Where did they go to?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). They had a private car; they furnished that car and this is how they did it. When they wanted to go out on one trip, for example, they sent to Mr. Lapointe for supplies costing $24.54, from another man they bought $10.33 worth, from the fruit man they bought some fruit and then they sent to Bate & Co. to get their liquor supplies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not Mr. Parent.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The liquor was supplied to the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners and I challenge the Prime Minister to bring down the accounts and if he does I will vouch for the fact that nine-tenths of the expense is for champagnes and liquors for that car and to buy it from Bate & Company.

Mr. SPROULE. They are not much of a temperance crowd.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). No, on one of these trips they got $132 worth of lush to supply the car. The next trip they went on they bought from Mr. Reid, $19.05 worth, from Lapointe, $3.30 worth, and from Bate & Company, $84.85 worth for champagne and so forth. The next time they went for a short trip Bate & Company got $72.17. The next was a little trip and Mr. Moreland, the fruit man, got $5, and Lapointe got $6.60, and Bate & Company $64.41. On the next little trip Mr. Young got $14.94, Lapointe got $4.75, and Bate & Company $94.85. The next trip was a long one. It must have been down to Quebec, and they must have taken a good sized party because they purchased from Lapointe $46 worth of supplies, from George Matthews & Company, $11 worth, from Moreland, for fruit, $21 and they sent down to Bate & Company for liquor and bought $242.05 worth for that trip. For the next trip Bate & Company got $126, the next trip Bate & Company got $108, the next trip Bate & Company got $147, the next trip $99.12, the next trip $102, the next trip $120.16 and for the last trip Bate & Company got $124.45. Mr. Lapointe came in for his $18, and Moreland $18, making a total expense for supplying that private car for the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners, $2,082.80 and out of that there was $572 for provisions and $1,509.93 for Bate & Company for liquor supplies.

Mr. LANCASTER. They must have been going fishing.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I wonder how the Prime Minister will justify that before the farmers of the country and particularly the farmers of the northwest. He took $1,500 of their money and paid it out for champagne and other stuff to feed the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the account show it was for liquor?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The Prime Minister is the trustee of the money of the people of this country, and will he tell me that any trustee to an estate would handle the funds of that estate as he is handling the funds of the people of Canada? Is there an honest man in this House who would justify that condition of affairs. They did not comply with the order and bring down the total amount in this return so that I cannot give the total figures because it would take me a week to add them up. Here is another paper of this return and I do not know what department it is from except that I can distinguish some of the names.

Mr. FOSTER. What department?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I do not know what department it is, except that I find the Hon. L. P. Brodeur down here for travelling expenses, $4,828.28.

Mr. LANCASTER. For himself?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). He outshines and double discounts any other minister.

Mr. SPROULE. He always was an expensive luxury.

Mr. LALOR. He is going on the bench.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I do not know whether he is or not. I do not know whether he took this Mr. Demers with him or not, but Demers paid for transportation, $385, for cabs $218, for hotel $676, for pullmans $94, and tips to waiters $100—just an even $100. Now, I would ask the Prime Minister can he justify that charge of Mr. Demers in giving away $100 of the money of the people for tips? There is a Mr. Morrisette here who, I presume, travelled with the minister and I am told he is his private secretary. Mr. Morrisettes' travelling expenses amounted to $277, his cabs to $235, his hotel bill to $1,075, his pullman $32.60, and tips to waiters $131.90.

Mr. FOSTER. He beats Demers.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Yes, he beats Demers by $31.90. He did not make it even; he put in the odd cents. The total expenses for travel for the minister and his officials amounts to what do you think?

Mr. LENNOX. $5,000, I suppose.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). Why the minister, himself, drew $4,828. He paid for transportation, $7,710; he paid for cab hire, $1,402.82; he paid for his hotel bills, $7,240; he paid for pullmans, $1,372 and he paid for tips, $800.09, making a total of $23,354.92 for travelling expenses of the Department of Marine for the minister and a few officials. Here is $23,000 of the money of the people of this country practically thrown away. I am satisfied that the Prime Minister is ashamed of it, judging by the way he looks and the way he shakes his head.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What did you say the total was?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). $23,000. The Prime Minister says it is too much; will he have it returned to the treasury where it properly belongs?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Please show me that paper.

Mr. LALOR. It's an eye-opener.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). It's time he got his eyes opened. Then we have another little department here, the Department of Mines, and they gave away in tips $55.75. and the Geological Survey gave away in tips $37.90; I have not totalled up the travelling expenses; I have more important matters to deal with. The Minister of Justice was not nearly as expensive as the Minister of Marine. Although he did a big work, he charges only $2,245.63—no details—and the Solicitor General $150 for travelling expenses. For the Department of Justice I have not the total expenditure, but the tips to waiters amount to $296.80. The Department of Customs comes next. This is the most economical department of the lot. The minister is down for only $40 for travelling expenses, no cab hire, and very little for tips to waiters. The Department of Printing and Stationery is also very economical, although there is something paid for tips to waiters. The Department of Inland Revenue comes next. The minister just charges $500 even for his travelling expenses, and there is no change left to return to the treasury. But there are some charges here that require some explanation. There is a gentleman of the name of X. Saucier—he paid for transportation—by railway, $505.40; by other lines of transportation, $135.50; for meals and hotel expenses, $519.15; for Pullman cars, $107.75. He drew from this country $1,367.80 for travelling expenses, besides his salary.

Mr. LALOR. Does he give any tips?

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). There are no tips charged; they are put in as hotel expenses. Here is the Minister of Agriculture, who is the temperance man of the party——

Mr. CURRIE. There is no champagne there.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). There isn't, eh? I asked for a return showing the amounts paid to railways, steamships, other lines of transportation, for pullmans, tips to waiters and hotel expenses. These are all set out in detail, but there is a column added—incidentals. Now, anybody knows what incidentals mean. The Minister of Agriculture himself drew $587.70 for expenses—no details. But Mr. Goddard, who travels with him, got $41 for railway fares, $34.15 for other transportation, $37.50 for pullmans, $16.25 for tips to waiters, $205.10 for meals and hotel expenses, and $172.35 for incidentals. Everybody knows that that is the account at the bar.

Mr. EMMERSON. Are there any names given?

Mr TAYLOR (Leeds). No names are given.

Mr. FOSTER. We want the details of that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). There is a Mr. A. W. Tolmie who got $69.20 for railway transportation, $56.25 for other transportation, $39.50 for pullmans, $1,295 for meals and hotel expenses, and $207.73 for incidentals. Mr. Wm. Hutchison's name appears twice in this account. In one place he is down for $66.02 for railway fare, $130 for steamships, $213.80 for other transportation, $18.10 for pullmans, $3.50 for tips to waiters, $1,728 for meals and hotel expenses and $37.61 for incidentals. He is also down for $69.20 for railway fare, $42.25 for other transportation, $20 for pullmans, and $4,280 for meals and hotel expenses, and $2.50 for incidentals. There is altogether about $8,000 for travelling expenses and total expenses for Mr. Hutchison. Besides this, Mr. Hutchison is paid a large salary and $20 a day for expenses. The Minister of Agriculture must surely explain what these incidentals mean, and this large amount paid to Mr. Hutchison. The Postmaster General puts in a bill for $2,836.70—no details; but he has a lot of officials travelling with him, and they disbursed altogether $365.94 in tips. I have not made up the total expenditure for expenses, but a gentleman named George Ross figures for transportation, $56.20; for pullman cars, $209.45; for tips, $41.55, nearly as much as for railway fare; meals, &c., $607.55; for cabs, street cars and other items, $247.52; total, $1,162.27. The Postmaster General can, perhaps, explain who that gentleman is. I hope the Prime Minister will draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to this matter. I am surprised that this government, which pretends to be a business government transacting the business of the country fairly and honestly, will attempt to justify the charges that I have read here to-day. I want the Secretary of State to return these documents to the bookkeeper who made them out and say: If that is the best you can do, hand in your resignation. Take the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to him and say: There is the order of the House, there is what you have sent us, not in accordance with the order at all, and no style or form of bookkeeping about it. The Minister of Public Works was apparently ashamed to have his account discussed here and after four months it was not brought down

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a bit, my hon. friend will find it on three pages of the Auditor General's Report, V—16, 17 and 18.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). That does not give it all. Let the return be a true transcript from his book if he keeps a book. I think I have given the ministers enough to think over during the holidays, Saturday and Sunday, and perhaps the Minister of Public Works will have his report ready for me on Monday, and we will discuss it. These are the facts, and I would ask the Prime Minister to-morrow to call the Council together, to read 'Hansard' and ask these gentlemen to stand up one after the other and explain how they can account to the people for thus having squandered public money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was not aware that my colleague the Secretary of State was presenting this return without getting the particulars from the Department of Public Works. If my attention had been called to the matter I should have asked him to delay the return a short time until the officials of my department could make out their portion of it. I can assure my hon. friend there is no intention of withholding any information which may be required. My hon. friend will find the full amount of the travelling expenses of myself, of the deputy minister, and of other officials of the department upon pages V—16, 17 and 18 of the Auditor General's Report. If he requires anything further I shall be very glad at the earliest possible moment to produce it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The travelling expenses are not given in detail.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total amount is given, and the amounts paid by each official, 50 in all.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The House has ordered it made in this way.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister has simply to conform to the order of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. He cannot get out of it by throwing a portion of the Auditor General's Report on the table. He will save himself a great deal of trouble if he will do what the Minister of Agriculture does not appear to have done, give all the details of these expenditures.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no intention of disobeying the order of the House; the matter had not been brought to my attention. In the ordinary course the order goes to the proper official of the department, and I presume the Secretary of State thought there was some undue delay, and he has presented the return without waiting for the portion from my department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The long list of officials who have been travelling and charging their transportation, pullman cars, &c., to my department in 1910. is made up of inspectors, assistant inspectors, and clerks in the inspectors' office, who by the nature of their work are obliged to travel from one end of the country to the other to inspect post offices.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I admit that, but they have no right to put their hands in the public treasury and take out money and give it away in tips.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I do not know whether the hon. member was in earnest when he said that each member of the government should rise and give some information in regard to these figures. Personally I feel somewhat sensitive on this subject, and I have no backwardness about expressing my feelings. I had been for some 15 years or more before entering this House in the habit of travelling almost every week of the year at the expense of other people, and the only method of keeping track of the expenses incurred upon such journeys which I was ever able to adopt was to make a note when I was leaving my office of the amount of cash I had in my pocket, and similarly when I returned to take a note of how much remained, and in that way to know what I had expended on the journey. In any travelling I have done since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, and in the government, I have pursued no other method. I think that any other is unendurable. With reference to the amount of expenses which were incurred by me, as shown in the return referred to, I ask you to bear in mind that it is for the period of the summer before last. During that summer I was in London for some 150 or 160 days. I was living at a hotel. Upon my return I knew, in the way I have described, what exactly I had expended. The amount, after deducting the cost of the ocean passage, and of the railway fare to and from my destination, was a few cents over $10 per day. It has been, I think, a standing rule for a great many years in the practical administration of the departments of this government that when any official of the government, such as a deputy minister, is required to travel upon public business his expenditure is passed by the Auditor General at the uniform figure of $10 a day in addition to his disbursements for actual moving or transportation expenses. I thought that if I was within a few cents of that limit I was not at any rate expending an excessive figure while I was abroad.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). I did not say so, I said I thought you were liberal.

Sir ALLEN AYLESWORTH. I certainly lived no differently when I was abroad on government business than when I was abroad for my own pleasure.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I do not think any objection could be taken to legitimate expenses in connection with public business of the country; I do not think that any individual will take exception to liberal expenditure, but when we see items of hundreds of dollars paid out for liquor, the people of this country will seriously object to these expenses. The Auditor General's Report has been handed to me and under 'Transcontinental Railway, legal services other than for right of way', we have $45 for liquor cases. That seems to be an extraordinary amount. That is at page W—238, 1910. Such items are very suspicious. It seems to me that the Minister of Interior must have chartered a special train and steamboat service to take his whole staff around the globe. The total travelling expenses in connection with the department is two hundred and twelve thousand——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Does he not know that the payment for liquor cases is a payment to Messrs. Stevens & Lawson for legal services in connection with the prosecution of offenders against the liquor law?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I read the item as it appears. If the minister can explain it, he can do more than I can. Here it is: 'Dominion Express Company, $45, liquor cases.'

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The minister struck the wrong item.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). As I was saying the Minister of the Interior must have chartered special conveyances and taken his whole staff around the globe, because the travelling expenses for his department are two hundred and twelve thousand——

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon gentleman allow me——

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I am quoting the item, and the minister can explain it later.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct an error into which he has fallen?

Mr TAYLOR (Leeds). When he (Mr. Sharpe, Ontario) gets through.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I am willing that the minister should——

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman says he finds an item, 'Dominion Express Company, $45, liquor cases' If he will look at it again, he will see that the amount paid the Dominion Express Company is $45, and the next item is 'liquor cases, $14.95.'

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). Well, can the minister explain that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman probably knows that there is a zone along the Transcontinental railway in which the sale of liquor is prohibited, and prosecutions take place from time to time for the punishment of offenders against the Act.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). What has the Dominion Express Company to do with that?

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). I do not pretend to understand the details of these payments. The Auditor General's Report was handed to me a moment ago, and this item was pointed out to me. If the minister (Mr. Pugsley) is familiar with the details, he is that much better informed than I am, and it is for him to explain the matter to the House. But I was pointing out this item of travelling expenses of the Interior Department. In many cases the payment for pullman cars is greater than for railway transportation. There are several individuals who have very large travelling expenses. The Rev. J. Macdougall, who was special commissioner to investigate the St. Peter's reserve, charges for railway and steamship transportation $173.45; for pullman cars, $53.25; for meals and hotel expenses, $308.05; for cabs, $419.94; total, $954.69. The Minister of the Interior does not give the details of his expenditure, but he charges $2,986.67 for travelling expenses. Mr R. G. Evans also has a large bill: transportation, $790.30; pullmans, $223.50; meals and hotel expenses, $529.35; cabs, $217.20; total, $1,760.35. Mr. R. E. A. Leech, who is a very prominent civil servant of 'red-line' notoriety in Manitoba, had transportation expenses $1,350.70; pullman cars, $379; meals, $1,073.15; cabs and livery expenses, $1,300.98; total, $4,103.83. Mr. R H. Campbell, an official of the department, shows more for pullman car expenses than for travelling expenses. His travelling expenses were $38.55, and pullman cars $40.50; hotel expenses, $163.95, and cabs $51.53, a total of $294.53. Mr. Knechtel, another official, has an account in the same position—travelling expenses, $94 and pullman $119.45. Here also is Mr. P. H. Harvey with pullman expenses of $14, against travelling expenses of $3.10. I think it is up to the Minister of the Interior to have these officials explain the disproportionate payment for transportation and pullmans. Mr. Geo. Summer had travelling expenses of $2 and pullmans $13.50. I hear it whispered behind me that perhaps these gentleman engaged in a little friendly game of poker in the pullman, but I would not suggest that. Mr. F. X. Gosselin had travelling expenses $83.75, pullmans $183 His meals and hotel expenses were $203.75. Mr. J. Seale had travelling expenses of $12.80, and pullmans $18. Mr. W. D. Scott charged $33.50 for transportation, and $76.75 for pullmans, with $158.90 for hotel expenses, $48 for cabs and $14.50 for tips. Mr. Webster had $360.95 for travelling expenses, $93.89 for pullmans, $382 for meals and hotel expenses, and $38.64 for tips. Mr. W. J White had $985.41 for travelling expenses, $502.50 for pullmans, $1,171.30 for meals and hotel expenses, and $24 for tips. And so the list goes on indefinitely, amounting to the enormous total of $212,835. It seems to me that while the minister or the deputy minister may be given a liberal travelling allowance—I do not think $10 a day excessive—yet when it comes to the officials in receipt of smaller salaries, I think they should confine themselves to a reasonable limit and not disport themselves like young millionaires or government contractors. I think the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is to be commended for drawing the attention of the House to this matter. It seems to me that an investigation in the Public Accounts Committee would probably disclose some interesting facts for the electorate, and I trust that the matter will be prosecuted further in that committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I owe it to one of my colleagues who has not a seat in this House to give at once explanation of the false impression conveyed by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in dealing with the Department of Trade and Commerce. As that hon. gentleman dealt with the figures, he conveyed the impression to my mind, and, I think, to the minds of hon. members generally, that the $18,000 for travelling expenses for the Trade and Commerce Department last year had been spent as travelling expenses by the head office here in Ottawa.

Mr TAYLOR (Leeds). The office and its officials—I stated that plainly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The impression created in my mind was that all these expenses had been incurred by the officers connected with the head office. It is true that the Department of Trade and Commerce expended last year for travelling expenses under the authority of the minister $18,000. But the department has many large branches.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). If the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will refer to two accounts marked there, which I intended to give but forgot, he will find that Mr. Jackson figured for about $2,000, and Mr. Preston for about $4,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If my hon. friend had dealt with matters which are debatable he would have made a better impression. He says that the Department of Trade and Commerce have expended the sum of $18,303.55 for travelling, as I understood it, under the responsible minister, by officers connected with the head office. Nothing of the kind. All that has been expended by Sir Richard Cartwright and the officers of the staff immediately under him is—how much? $18,000? $323.45, that is all that is chargeable to Sir Richard Cartwright and his staff of officers here at Ottawa. Here is the detailed account:

Sir Richard Cartwright, $300; Mr. O'Hara Deputy Minister, $9.55; Mr. Wright, $13.15; H. Robertson, 75 cents; total, $323.45.

That is the total amount expended by the Department of Trade and Commerce here at the city of Ottawa for the management of the department. Now it must be remembered that Sir Richard Cartwright has to deal with the inspection of staples and that for that purpose he has over twenty officials at Kingston, Montreal, Peterborough, Quebec, Toronto, Winnipeg and so on. I think all these officers have to travel, and they have expended $4,222. Now the trade commissioner charges for his expenses $12,800. Mr. Jackson, who is at Shanghai, charges $1,411. But Mr. Jackson was stationed in England, and he charged his travelling expenses in going to China, $1,224. I do not know whether the charge is correct or not, but so far as I know it is not an overcharge. Then his travelling expenses in China are $187. Mr. Jackson, therefore, charges $1,411 travelling to China and travelling in China, and that does not seem to be an over-charge. Mr. Preston charges $2,104 for travelling expenses, this includes transportation from Japan to Holland. I do not know whether it is an over-charge or not, but it does not seem to me to be so. Then there are charges in connection with the bounties on iron and steel, $73.45; administration of annuities, for which Mr. S. T. Bastedo charges $129. That is not extravagant. I am afraid my hon. friend has found a mare's nest on this occasion.

Mr. TAYLOR (Leeds). The chief complaint I found against that account was that it is not made out in detail.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a very interesting question, and what I find hard to understand is how they managed to consume so much bread with so little liquid nourishment, $14 for bread and meat and $130 for liquid refreshment. The medical profession forbids giving to children solid food with a nursing bottle, and while they were well looked after with a nursing bottle, I cannot understand why they should require $14 worth of bread and meat. My surprise increases when I learn that this expenditure is made by men who have been so prominent as temperance reformers, and who wished to be considered all over the country as eminent examples of temperance. There was one thing that did not surprise me in hearing the details of this expenditure, and that was the expenditure of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He has a history in the past with regard to expenditures, which we know. I have one of his old accounts here, and it is somewhat amusing; therefore, I was not surprised in hearing his expenditure read to-day. It is quite in keeping with his record. Had he not made it as much as he did, I should say that he was failing in some way, or was wanting in moral courage. I take his record when he was Speaker. I have here the records of various Speakers. I do not know what will be the record of our hon. friend who is occupying that position to-day; we will know in the future. Now I would like to show the House some examples of the economy that was practised by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he was Speaker. Let me at the same time give the expenditures of some of the other Speakers in that high office so that we may compare them in furnishing the two or three rooms which they occupy, and which are pretty lavishly furnished from year to year. Whenever a new Speaker comes in there are some new repairs to be made, and that might be expected. I take the record of a few, by way of comparison to show how economical the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was when he was Speaker, and, therefore, we might expect that he would keep up his record in his present department. The Hon. Mr. Ouimet, in nine months, expended $1,175, a little over $1,000 a year. The Hon. Mr. White occupied the office five years, and he spent $5,000, that is $1,000 a year for furnishing those rooms. Sir James Edgar, in three years and eleven months, spent $4,000. That appeared to satisfy his ambition for economy. Mr. Bain, who was there one year six months and five days spent $229. But then, he was a close fisted Scotchman that kept his 'sawbaths,' and every thing else he could get his hands on. But he did not come up to the average, $229 for one year six months and five days, while the others spent usually about $1,000 a year. Then we come to the Hon. Mr. Brodeur. He was there three years, one month and five days, and he spent $9,899, nearly $3,000 a year to furnish the few rooms down here. Of course, that was the splendid economy this government was to exercise to carry out the demand of the patrons, they are carrying out the exact platform of the patrons in public affairs—$3,000 a year to furnish these two or three rooms. Then I take Mr. Belcourt. He was here nine months, and he spent $703. Had he been here the whole year, I suppose he would have spent $1,000. Then take Mr. Sutherland, he was there one year five months and twenty days, and he spent $383, as against the $3,000 a year for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Then when we come to look over the items, it is amusing and interesting to see how they expended that money. Of course his political friends would not get much of it, you would not expect that, because he was never distinguished for using his patronage except in the most exemplary way; he is expending the money where he can get the best returns for it.

I find another, John L. Cassidy & Co, $204; and I find here the C. Ross Co., $77. This during part of his term. Then I find James Wilson & Co., $210.50; J. L. Orme Co., $73; H. & H. E. Hamilton—I do not know the firm—$888; the C. Ross Co. again, $1,462; A. J. Lawrence, $270; A. Brillon, $321; the Hamilton firm again, $933; Joseph Archambault, $36; The C. Ross Co. again, one year, $2,395, to help furnish a couple or three rooms down here in the basement of this building. Then, in the next year, I see the C. Ross Co. again down for $2,395 to furnish rooms that year and the following year, almost at the beginning of the account, is $1,074 to furnish the same rooms again. This is a splendid example of the stringent economy carried out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He has a record, this is a notable example of it, and the country ought to know it, because in knowing it they will know the kind of men to whom they have entrusted the expenditure of the public money. I would like the farmers of this country to know it, and if you put that alongside of the record that he has made for himself of late, it will be seen that his right hand has not lost its cunning, neither is he wanting in moral courage. I would like to know how they made away with so much bread and meat and with so little liquid refreshment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss this question at present. I imagine that this is only the introduction to the discussion which must take place later after all the returns are down, and we have had time to thoroughly sift the different accounts. But I wish just at this time to enter my protest against the principle which appears to have been laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir Allen Aylesworth) as to the expenditures of public money by public officials. The principle that he laid down was that when he left on his journey he had a certain amount of money in his pocket, that when he came back he found a certain amount of change left, and he charged the rest up against the person who was paying these expenses. That is an intimation to every civil servant, every official and every minister, coming from the Minister of Justice of all members of the administration, that they need not ask for any vouchers, that they need not keep any accounts, that all each one has to do is to get a certain amount of money by requisition, put it in his pocket, note in his book when he goes out in the morning that he has so much, spend what he likes and then, when he comes back in the evening, count the change in his pocket, enter that in his note book and find when his trip is over that he has 55 cents left or whatever it may be. That is the kind of accounting that the Minister of Justice recommends to the public officers, and that is the way that he suggests they shall perform their duties to the country which pays these moneys, and whose moneys they are. I did not notice that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made an allusion at all to that doctrine. Does he believe in it? Is that the principle upon which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has gone? Does any man mean to tell me that the minister honestly spent that amount of money in the interests of the people of this country during his incumbency of that office? Does any man mean to tell me that he had any warrant for spending the people's money to that amount on the fripperies of the office which he held? What has become of the purchases? Where are they to-day? Will the Prime Minister pretend that within the last six years he has ever been open to the appointing of a commission to make an examination into that particular expenditure, a thing which he was invited to do? So it goes on. I notice that the Prime Minister was very quick to take advantage of Sir Richard Cartwright's bill of expenditures. I particularly listened to my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor), and what my hon. friend said was that these were the expenses incurred by Sir Richard Cartwright and his officers for travel. He did not criticise that department as I think he might well do. I would just ask the right hon. Prime Minister to let his memory travel over those seventeen years when he and his friends were on the opposition benches, and call to mind the closeness and, I may say, the smallness of the criticisms which were made by the then opposition upon such expenditures as these. They went even to the table of the Governor General and counted the spoons and knives and forks. They traversed the lowest basement and measured the carpets and the drugget. They went through every by-way, hall and corner, toted up what was bought, what was returned, what was spent again, and they rang the changes on this year in and year out.

Now, I call my right hon. friend's attention to the course which has been pursued by the opposition since he has been in power, and I challenge him to say if, in the matter of expenditure such as we are to-day discussing, the opposition has not been generous and free with the government? What close and keen analysis of proper expenditures has been made by the opposition? They have freely granted that the necessary services of the country must be carried on and should be carried on without meanness, but they have also tried to maintain that they should be carried on without waste and without criminal expenditure. Now, I challenge the contrast between the two parties in that respect. We do not say that when an officer of the government has duties to perform he shall be kept at home and not perform them because the country will not give him his expenses. Neither do we say that as an officer of the government he shall travel meanly. He shall be careful of his position as an officer of this Dominion government, and he shall travel as befits such an officer, but there is an awful wide chasm between that and this actual criminal throwing away of money which is being done by some officers of to-day; not by all the officers in every department, not by all ministers and not by every minister in all phases of his department, but there are some who are especial sinners. Will the Prime Minister, for a single moment, stand in his place here and defend that overplus of liquid refreshment which seems to have been poured down the gullets of certain favourites of the government and their favourites without any regard to the taxpayers of this country, without any regard to rhyme, reason or judgment? The Prime Minister will not defend it for a single moment. Go into the Department of Marine and Fisheries and analyse that account. Let him go into the department of his Minister of the Interior and analyse that account, and there will be others that we will bring up, and I pin my faith to it that when we come to the discussion and the examination of that he will not stand up for everything that is going on. But specially I warn him, and I think he cannot do any better than to get on his legs just now and tell us whether or not he stands by his Minister of Justice in this new code as to the expenditure of public moneys of this country by the officials when they are travelling what has just been announced by all the authority and all the dignity which ought to belong to the Minister of Justice of this country. If there is one man who ought to hold himself absolutely aloof from all things of that kind, it is the Minister of Justice, and I can conceive of no better warrant given for foolish and extravagant expenditure and waste by the officials of the government than the utterance which has been made to-day by that same minister.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee on Ways and Means.

WAYS AND MEANS—RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. A. M. BEAUPARLANT (St. Hyacinthe). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I crave on my behalf the attention of the House for a few moments while I submit a few remarks in connection with the reciprocity proposals.

I represent a constituency whose population ten years ago—it is larger to-day—aggregated 21,543, of which 10,381 was urban or industrial and 11,162 agricultural. These are the two great classes of people the country over, and I would be remiss to my duty were I to approve proposals which I did not deem acceptable to these two main groups which make up practically in equal proportions the whole population of the county of St. Hyacinthe. As I am satisfied that these proposals are not only acceptable to, but in the interest of, these two main groups of my fellow-citizens, it is natural that I should support them by my vote. Should the Dominion parliament, in order to secure to our farmers the benefit of the United States markets, have to sacrifice our manufacturers it would be, as all will readily perceive, in an embarrassing position. The farming industry of Canada was credited in the last census with $1,787,102,630 of invested capital, and is of direct interest to 66 per 100 of the population. On the other hand, $846,585,023 are invested in the Canadian manufacturing industries out of which the remainder of the people, directly or indirectly, get a living. These two main groups of our population are entitled to the protection of the government, each in accordance with its requirements.

Now, that is exactly what is implied—and until a quite recent date was not expected to be implied—in these reciprocity proposals which do away with the duties on our agricultural products entering the United Staets, while maintaining them on the manufactured articles entering Canada from the United States, which open up to our farmers the great markets of the United States, while maintaining them on competition in connection with Canadian manufactures. Nothing more satisfactory could be expected or asked for.

Take the case of the leather industry. At that time it represented $28,667,125, and since 1896, the protective duties on that article have been reduced from 20 to 17½ and ultimately to 15 per 100. The government would only be doing the right thing towards compensating these manufacturers for the loss inflicted through the cutting down of protection in their behalf, if they were to reduce at the same time the rates on the machinery required in connection with these manufactures and which has to be imported from abroad, and such a step is desirable the more so that such machinery is not manufactured in Canada and therefore the customs duties in reference to them can in no way be said to protect a national industry. Besides, these reductions on leather have been decided on previously to these proposals being made and are not in any way affected by the latter.

It will thus be seen that these proposals imply that freedom of trade in agricultural products which the farming community were so anxious to obtain, while on the other hand they do not interfere with protection to our manufacturers; in that way they combined advantages of benefit to the various classes of people, an ideal system in the minds of Canadian statesmen of all parties who have been competing for the confidence of the population. The Canadian manufacturer stills retains an advantage over his American competitor of 12½ to 32½ per cent, depending on the industry, and the Canadian farmer will be highly pleased with a treaty which puts him on the same footing as the Yankee farmer. Now, the great majority of Canadian manufacturers is too fair-minded to object to these proposals, and, besides, they have an actual interest in supporting them, were it only for the sake of ensuring the welfare of the farming class who make up the local market.

The interest which a town has in the well-being of the surrounding country will be readily understood. It is an easy matter to realize what would become of the trade and of the value of property in a town surrounded by a wide belt of thinly settled farming country, impoverished through the want of a local market for agricultural products. The Canadian farmer has an interest in, and, in principle, a right to, the American market as his natural market. There is ample proof of the truth of these contentions. We ship to the United States horses under a duty of 25 per cent; hay, under a duty of $4 a ton; barley, 30c. a bushel; butter and cheese, 6c. a pound; cream, 5c. a gallon; eggs, 5c. a dozen. Now, there is no amount of sophistry on the part of our opponents, no amount of gullibility on the part of people, no amount of partisanship which could make us believe that such shipments will not be increased, and the producer benefited accordingly, once these duties are done away in accordance with the offer made by our neighbours in these reciprocity proposals.

In spite of these unfavourable conditions and although just out of a period of depression, in 1909 we shipped to the United States horses to the value of $295,230; hay to the value of $32,000 only, the average of preceding years being $300,000; of barley, $144,660; of butter, $18,246; of cheese, $19,428; of cream and milk, $8,256; of eggs, $13,050. Figuring on these amounts and on the rates indicated above, it is an easy matter to find out how much duty we paid to the United States and what quantities of agricultural products we have thus been prevented from shipping over there. Referring to this matter, Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1883, expressed himself as follows in the House of Commons:

> Take the following case: In the eastern townships and along the imaginary line which divides our country from the United States, a man owns 100 acres of land on the Canadian side, and 100 acres on the American side. He grows 100 bushels of barley on each of these 100 acres. He takes to the American market the 100 bushels grown in the United States, and sells them there at the rate of one dollar a bushel. Then he takes to the American market the 100 bushels grown on Canadian soil and he realizes only 85 cts. a bushel, having had to pay 15 cts. per bushel for the privilege of crossing the boundary.

The same may be said of all kinds of crops. Sir John Macdonald could not have better expressed the interest which the Canadian farmer has in being let free to ship his products across the line. Hon. gentlemen opposite are welcome to repudiating their old-time leader for the sake of some tactical move which they deem fruitful, but in this they will not have the support of all their friends. That view of Sir John Macdonald, a theoretical view of the question, is corroborated by that of a business man, a practical man, whose ability is evidenced by a long and successful career. I mean Mr. Alphonse Poirier, a large dealer in hay and grain, of St. Madeline, in the county of St. Hyacinthe, and his good faith is shown by the offer contained in his letter, which reads as follows:

My dear Sir,—Allow me to draw your attention to certain facts in connection with the Bill which is just now being considered by the House and against the passing of which the Opposition are putting forth such strenous efforts. It is preposterous to contend that our farming class would not thereby be greatly benefited in the sale of their products, of hay, for instance, which under the present conditions is rated at $4 per ton. Should that article be put on the free list, the returns from sales of hay would increase to say the least $2 per ton, and, in years of shortage, even $4 per ton, and I shall explain the reason. The great eastern markets of the United States are regulated as to prices by quotations in the western states. We are bound to sell our hay for what the western dealers get, and nothing more. Thus, we pay the duty exacted on crossing the line, and farmers sell their hay from $2 to $4 below the price they would get were the reciprocity proposals to carry. The same rule applies to all other natural products.

Our government promised to protect the farming class, which constitutes the majority of our population, and to open up for them, as soon as possible the markets of the United States which all farmers who knows wherein their interest lies have been clamoring for so long. I trust that at last they have succeeded.

For over thirty years, I have been in continous intercourse with the farmers, and they are all anxious to see the day when our products will be admitted free across the line. However, you know that, as a rule, farmers are not troublesome people. Notwithstanding which, I am confident they will more than offset whatever protests are forthcoming against the reciprocity proposals. I am satisfied that 90 per cent of the farmers would sign in favour of reciprocity.

I may say further that, once the treaty is in force, I would be willing to contract with from fifty to one hundred reliable farmers on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, for No. 1 hay, at $11 a ton, and, for good No. 2, at $10 a ton, said contract to cover a period of ten years, and that is a price much in advance of those received heretofore.

Yours very truly,
ALP. POIRIER.

Mr. Poirier makes that offer on his own financial responsibility, and that is the best of security. We do not expect our opponents to go to that length. On their part it would be recklessness, and at any rate they would not like to run any chances. No one is expected to do so.

The Liberal to-day sends out a challenge to some classes of people who are inimical to farming interests, and in so doing it is in danger of developing enmity within its own rank and file. The liberal party is making a supreme effort in behalf of the farmers, without in any way interfering with the rights of manufacturers, for whose benefit, on the contrary, it is preparing a more satisfactory local market, through the increase of opportunities ensured to the farming community. In view of what it is doing to-day for the benefit of the farmers, the Liberal party is entitled to their support, and expects it will not be wanting. The spirit of partisanship is not strong enough to induce Tory farmers to continue following Tory leadership, for they realize what is the trend of events and what it means to them.

Considered in its true light, in its essence, the customs duty is a tax which politicians for election purposes, have dubbed with the better-sounding and more popular name of protection. As a matter of fact, from the viewpoint of the producer which this arrangement frees of his competitors, it means protection; however, from the standpoint of the consumer, who subsequently has to make good that amount of duty, or its equivalent, to secure the goods, it means taxation.

On the other hand, considering that the producer, who goes under the name of manufacturer, employs other people, gives work to a good many and in that way has a certain public usefulness, such protection is in a large measure deemed warranted. Protection may also be considered as a necessary means of collecting revenue, provided the duties are levied entirely on articles of luxury; it is obnoxious whenever it bears on the necessaries of life. Every man has a right to live and make live his family, and we know how numerous are the working men and labourers whose salary is barely sufficient, under ordinary circumstances to keep them and their families alive. Of course the cost of production and the cost of transportation of the goods must be paid for, but the government cannot in fairness exact, in addition, the payment of customs duties on goods coming from abroad, or allow that, on goods manufactured at home, the selling price of the goods to be enhanced in proportion.

I realize that these are questions which have been long controverted. If it were in the power of the administration to collect the necessary revenue for running the machinery of the government to gather the required statistical data, without having recourse to customs officials, part of the $2,268,233.86 which are expended yearly towards running the Customs Department might be saved, and people travelling from one side of the line to the other, that is to say practically all of us would be rid of a great deal of bother. In the meantime, we have in Canada 2,204 customs officers. People are under the impression that the political and legislative machinery is a costly affair to keep up, and they are right as to that. However, members of parliament, senators and ministers cost yearly to the country $775,564.55, while $1,921,306 is what we pay every year in the shape of salaries only to customs officers in Canada. In other words, it has cost the people more money to collect taxation of an indirect concealed character than it has cost them to carry on in the open light the business of law-making through their duly chosen representatives. Such a condition of things might be improved upon. For the time being we are indebted to the liberal party for a reduction of about 3 per cent, in the general rate of taxation.

As regards the benefits which may be expected from the reciprocity proposals, I may add that our experience under a similar treaty which has been in force from March 16, 1855, to March 17, 1866, suggests arguments which our opponents have not heretofore been able to controvert. Previous to the enactment of the treaty, in 1853, the united provinces of Upper and Lower Canada sold to the United States for $4,246,288 worth of animals and their products and of farm products. Under the treaty, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1866, these two same provinces sold to the Americans for $24,482,749 worth of these same products, which represents an increase of about 500 per cent. Some may contend that it was the result of the country's natural development; but the figures for 1867, the year following the termination of the treaty, point strongly in the opposite direction. These two same provinces, in 1867, sold for only $14,871,418 worth of these same products to the United States, a falling off of $9,611,331.

The member for East-Grey (Mr. Sproule) contended that the increase of our trade with the United States at that time was the result of the war which was being waged at the time between the North and South. Well, war was declared on December 20th, 1860, South Carolina and seven other states having then made known their intention to secede ; and two years previous, in 1858, Sir John A. Macdonald, of whom the member for East-Grey (Mr. Sproule) has been a constant admirer, expressed himself as follows : 'If there is one measure of which the country has benefited more than of any other, it is the reciprocity treaty negotiated by the Hincks government. If you recall that wheat was taxed 30 cents per bushel on entering the United States while now it is admitted free, you will realize that every Canadian farmer is 30c. a bushel wealthier on account of this measure. Instead of being shut out from the United States and obliged to go to Montreal to sell his products, he has now the alternative between two markets, he has two strings to his bow.

Last evening the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) stated within my hearing that if Sir John A. Macdonald were here leading the government, he would certainly be opposed to that reciprocity treaty. It is always an easy matter to put statements in the mouths of dead persons, or to attribute views to them. There is one sure advantage in so doing, contradiction is not to be feared. Whether the hon. member be right or wrong in assuming that Sir John Macdonald would be opposed to this treaty, I may say that, if he took such a stand, it would be in direct opposition to statements which he is known by the extracts of his speech given above. Now, the war practically ended on April 9, 1865, through the surrender of General Lee, of the Confederate forces, to General Grant, commander of the northern army, while the treaty was abrogated on March 17, 1866. And the figures quoted above show that our trade continued to be flourishing after the war, and that there was no falling off until after its termination. So that, contrary to the contention of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), the expansion and buoyancy of our trade with the United States were the result of the treaty of reciprocity and not of the civil war.

I shall briefly quote some views expressed by various leading statesmen in support of our views concerning this treaty. As early as 1874, Mr. Mackenzie sent Mr. George Brown to Washington to negotiate a treaty of reciprocity. In his budget speech for 1888 in this House, Sir Charles Tupper stated within the hearing of his colleagues, of Sir John, of Mr. Chapleau, of all the Conservative leaders, without being contradicted by any of them: 'Needless to recall to the House that both parties, whether in or out of power, had always been very anxious to obtain a renewal of the treaty of 1854, or the conclusion of reciprocity arrangements similar to those enjoyed by Canada and the United States under that treaty.' Now, it is known that this treaty of 1854 comprised the products of the fisheries, the farms, the forests and the mines; in a word, all natural products in the same way as the proposals we are now considering.

In his manifesto sent out to the Canadian electors on February 7, 1891, Sir John Macdonald said: 'We stated to the Americans, we are willing to carry on trade with you on an equal footing; we are anxious to secure a fair treaty of reciprocity.' In his campaign speech of February 10 of the same year, Mr. Chapleau expressed himself as follows: 'We have always shown a disposition to negotiate with them' (the Americans). Lastly, the member for North Toronto himself (Mr. Foster) submitted, on March 15, 1888, a resolution for the purpose of extending our trade intercourse with the United States.

As for the Liberal party and its leaders, they have made too openly a fight for reciprocity in 1891; they have too generously staked their political existence on that measure and make it necessary for me to state what was their position in the matter. During that famous election of 1891, both parties advocated restricted reciprocity on natural products with the United States. However, the Liberal party was more anxious for it than the Conservative. So desirous were the Liberals of obtaining it that the majority of them were ready to advocate unrestricted reciprocity, both in regard to agricultural products and in regard to manufactured products, considering that the United States government was not disposed to grant it under other conditions, in accordance with the despatch of Secretary Blaine to Congressman Baker, and with Carlisle motion and the Butterworth Bill. Even now, American statesmen, such as Senator Prouty, of Iowa, are anxious that reciprocity be granted to several manufactured articles. While in 1891 the Conservative party was anxious to secure reciprocity, its leaders refrained from requesting from their supporters who were manufacturers the smallest sacrifice towards obtaining it. However, I repeat it, in respect to restricted reciprocity in natural products, there was not a discordant note, all were unanimous. Possibly it is the only question of policy, financial or otherwise, which has rallied all sections of public opinion in Canada since confederation. If there is any weight to be attached to a general concourse of opinion within a nation, it must be admitted that reciprocity limited to natural products is a desirable thing for Canada. Well, that reciprocity restricted to natural products, without materially interfering with protection to manufactures, properly speaking, is exactly what the United States are offering to Canada to-day.

Now, for nearly three months past we have witnessed the hostility shown by members of this parliament to the acceptance of these proposals. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot but admire the pluck of members of this House, especially of those representing agricultural constituencies, who, in some shape or other, openly or under cover, by dilatory proposals, appeals to plebiscite or attempts at delaying the matter, have endeavoured, or are endeavouring, to stave off, on the eve of obtaining it, the conclusion looked to and wished for by both political parties in Canada for the last fifty years.

Particularly in the province of Quebec our opponents have freely and generously, in the course of last year, thrown on our shoulders a responsibility which was not ours in respect to the naval question. We have begun freeing ourselves of these responsibilities; we shall continue to do so, one by one from the first to the last, and when we have settled our bills with the public, when we have told them all we are bound to tell them, all we wish and are anxious to tell them, our opponents will deem it fair that we should invoke the law of compensation, and let us have our turn; our opponents will admit that in all fairness we should then be permitted to call on them to make good the statements they have been making in the course of last year on that naval question, and to adjust these if possible with actual enactments and facts.

It has been stated by friend and foe that the Laurier government, with their usual expertness, would manage to have the Naval Bill accepted by tacking it on to the reciprocity proposal, a rather striking admission that the reciprocity proposals are popular, in the same way that the naval Bill is said to be unpopular. It has been stated, moreover, that the naval question was a dead issue, and that no more was being said about it. We Liberals are anxious that more should be said about it. We are unwilling that it should be left in the light under which it has been represented in the course of last year, and should our opponents fail to bring it up, we shall see to it that it is not overlooked. We insist on dealing with both questions before the people, for in respect to both the government's policy is worthy of approval and will be approved. When the naval question will have been discussed and threshed out to a finish, we shall take up the question of reciprocity, and in this connection, as well, over the bargain, we shall load our opponents with the responsibilities actually coming to them on account of their interference and attempts at obstruction in regard to a treaty of commerce of which without exaggeration it may be said that its effect would likely be to increase in a large measure Canada's trade, Canada's business and Canada's revenue.

Even admitting that we should be held responsible for all that our opponents charge us with in connection with the navy, such responsibility would be very slight when compared with what they have actually assumed themselves in voting as they have done on the reciprocity issue. I am not a voter in the constituencies of those who proposed or seconded the dilatory motion of February 9, or the plebiscite of March 8. I am not, therefore, called upon to pass judgment in their case and shall abstain from guessing aloud at what their electors will think of their policy of interference and obstruction as regards this treaty. But in the course of last year they and their organs have shown themselves so lavish of their condemnations and electoral forebodings of a disquieting character for ourselves, that I should be allowed to offer on this same subject my clean-cut opinion, which is that the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr.

Monk), the actual Conservative leader as regards Dominion matters in the province of Quebec, has not shown towards his followers in that province the consideration which they had the right to expect when he induced them to vote as they have done on the reciprocity question.

The member for Jacques Cartier is not in the same position as the majority of other hon. member in this House. He represents a constituency situated on the outskirts of the great city of Montreal, where farmers have a highly paying specialty and exceptional opportunities for the sale of their products. Having at hand the markets of the metropolis as an outlet, they do not feel the necessity of catering to the United Staets market. Under these circumstances, the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) will possibly be in a position to square himself up with his constituents.

However, such is not the position of many other hon. gentlemen in this House who represent constituencies farther removed form Montreal or other cities where the production and sale of farm commodities is carried on under the ordinary conditions, and wherein farmers cannot do without the American market, a market which they are threatened to be deprived of on account of the stand taken by their representatives. I believe, therefore, that I am showing greater consideration for these hon. gentlemen than they have shown themselves for us last year if I stop at saying that the voters in some constituencies will show signs of uneasiness and bad temper when they come to pass judgment on the policy followed by their representatives in respect to this reciprocity issue which is of great interest to the farming community. Since our opponents have shown such anxiety in our behalf, in the course of last year, they will not object to our reciprocating their feelings in this connection, unless they are bound to keep aloof from all manner of reciprocity.

The stand taken on this question by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has been the occasion of applause and enthusiasm on the surface at any rate. There is reason to believe that when the vote is taken there will be occasion for hon. gentlemen on this side to show their appreciation of support coming to us from the other side of the House, but these latter changes will be inspired by motives of general interest of a higher order than those which apparently brought about the turn-over of the hon. member for Brandon. This gentlemen has always had a reputation for consistency, and he has just proved once more that he shines in this respect. As long as his financial condition was that of the great majority of his fellow citizens, he stood out against that form of taxation which bears more particularly on the great bulk of his fellow-citizens, but now that deals which have turned out successfully have made him one of the privileged few, whether in this country or elsewhere, he turns out in a mood more favourable to high duties, and advocates economic and fiscal theories in sympathy with the small group of capitalists to which he belongs. His situation is no longer the same and his views have changed accordingly; he remains consistent. He continues to show the same shrewdness, the same keenness in looking after his own interests, a shrewdness and a keenness which do not concern themselves with the general interests of his fellow-citizens, which have nothing of the lofty character apparent in the views of those who devote themselves to forward the public weal, the only goal worthy of men in whom the people are fond of putting and putting permanently their reliance.

Accordingly, his defection will soon be forgotten as others of greater import have been forgotten, with no other aftermath but the protests of his own constituents. And that policy in closer touch with Liberal traditions which heretofore had been his guiding star, that policy more conformable to the general interest, still advocated by his ex-colleague the Minister of Agriculture, by all his former colleagues and by the majority of the members of this parliament that policy more humane, more generous which maintains protection for the benefit of manufacturers, while at the same time mindful of the requirements of the farmer (the founder and foster father of Canada), that policy I say, will meet with the approval of the Canadian people, in the same way that, in spite of failings and defections, the Liberal teaching has prevailed for the last fifteen years throughout the Dominion.

Every policy is sure to have its opponents as well as its promoters. Interests as well as opinions, though not to any greater extent, have their strenuous, uncompromising, devoted advocates. It would be a matter for surprise were proposals of such moment as those relative to the navy and reciprocity issues not to meet with determined opposition in certain quarters. In countries covering a limited area and having a homogeneous population, public opinion is divided and passion runs high on almost all important issues. It stands to reason that in a country such as Canada, with a variegated population and covering nine extensive provinces, there should be a wide field for diversity.

Natural products may require legislation of a different character from that required for manufactured articles. Fisheries, coal mines, steel works, farming in the maritime provinces; dairying, butter or cheese making, grain-growing and mining in Quebec or in Ontario ; wheat-growing on a large scale in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta; forestry, fruit-growing, mining and the fisheries in British Columbia may each require a different treatment from that suitable for the manufacturing centres such as Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal or Quebec. The interest of the western man may be different from the interest of the eastern man; the heart swayed by French or Irish traditions may under certain circumstances be more resonant than the thoroughly British mind. But above the conflicting voices emanating from the throng of these various people, interests and feelings, the Canadian nation, made up of the best material on earth, should have enough humanitarian and public spirit to be able to perceive and give emphasis to the most desirable tones, those best in accord with the needs, the rights and the general interests of the people throughout the Dominion.

As for me, while refraining from overconfidence in the future, I hopefully look to these reciprocity proposals as to a further element of wealth and welfare for our country, at the same time accepting my reasonable share of responsibility and claiming my reasonable share of credit in connection with the settlement of the navy question. Owing to the settlement of that question, we have a fleet of our own, distinct, separate, independent, lending itself at the same time, in accordance with our collective or individual needs, subject to our requirements and our decisions, to concerted action with the most powerful fleet in the world. That should enable us to do away the bane of war for an indefinite length of time. In this connection, despite the taunts and obloquy of a hostile press, I believe I have done good work towards ensuring the security, peace and prosperity of a country in which all of us are interested, the manufacturer and the farmer, the man in the west and the man in the east, the citizen of the Dominion whatever his origin, the grown-ups and the children, It means the security, the peace and the prosperity of our common fatherland, Canada.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Mr. Chairman, the question before the Chair being in my judgment one of the most important questions if not the most important question that has been before this house during the six or seven years that I have been a member, I feel that I am justified in taking up the time of the House sufficiently to put myself on record with regard to it. Before proceeding to deal with the question itself, I wish to enter my protest against the action of the government in springing on the members of this House and the people of the country such a very important question—a question requiring a great deal of time and a great deal of serious consideration—and endeavouring to force the people's representatives here to come to a decision upon it without giving them sufficient opportunity to ascertain the views of the electors generally. Moreover, I think the electorate ought to have been given an opportunity of studying this question from every point of view, and of arriving at some conclusion as to what its probable effects would be, and where it is leading to. I also want to voice my objection to the failure of the government to lay before the members of this House the information that is absolutely indispensable if we are to come to a conclusion that will be really valuable. I want to make a comparison between the action of our negotiators and the action of the negotiators on the other side of the line. When they made up their minds to go into this question, they took a year to do it; they appointed a tariff board and went into the question thoroughly; they had statistics which were more valuable and were put into more concrete form than anything we had in the blue-books issued by the various departments of our governernment. But they did not consider that these were sufficient for their purpose, and through the Tariff Board they appointed agents who went direct to the farmers, and visited every state of the United States, and every province in Canada to ascertain at first-hand the actual conditions, the prices of various articles, and other information which they thought necessary in connection with the matter. It would not appear that any such action was thought advisable by our negotiators, as they took no such precautions. Now, in view of the fact that we in Canada are affected to a much greater extent than are the people of the United States, it would seem to me that our negotiators, and our government behind them, should have taken even greater precautions and have gone into this matter more thoroughly than the United States did, for this reason, that while the United States were interested only in the effect that this arrangement might have in the United States, and the effect it might have in Canada—because as far as they are concerned, the agreement goes no further than these two countries—yet as far as Canada is concerned, we are vitally interested, not only in conditions as they exist in all parts of the United States but in every part of the British Empire, and also in the whole of the thirteen other countries that are producing the commodities that we produce, and that will be the competitors of our farmers as soon as this agreement is completed, if it ever is completed. That being the case, I think we ought to have had some information with regard to all these countries—as to the cost of production, the means of production, the climatic conditions, wages, and various other matters that will bear upon the agreement, and upon the condition in which our farmers will find themselves if it should go through.

Dealing more particularly with the matter itself, I think that the time for going into the agreement was singularly inopportune. The United States had enacted a hostile tariff, in many respects directed at Canada; they had treated us very harshly in trade matters for 45 years; they had raised a tariff of 45 per cent against us; during those 45 years they have exercised every ingenuity to cripple our trade, and make us dependent upon them; and then, when they had reached a state of almost insurrection against their very high duties, not only the farming community, but the great consuming masses of the towns and cities protesting most vigorously, it seemed that the United States must in the very near future be forced by their own people to lower very considerably their tariff. That being the case, and realizing that the Republican party had been the high tariff party, mainly if not altogether responsible for the trade barrier that had been erected against Canada exporting anything to the United States, the President of the United States tried to find a way of escape from these conditions, and no doubt he was also looking for a second term. So he looked abroad to see where he could get some advantage that would satisfy his own people for the time being, and he said: I will try and make a little deal with Canada, and that will divert the attention of the great farming community, and the consuming masses of the United States; I will make the farmers believe that it is going to help them, and I will make the consumers believe that they will get cheaper products from Canada. He proceeded along these lines to work out his plan. He first got Congress to enact a law that would enable him to put a 25 per cent increase of duty against any country that gave better treatment to any other country than it did the United States. After securing the passage of this Act, which we some times term the club, he took advantage of a very foolish treaty that our government had made with France, and made it a pretext for swinging this club against Canada; and he sent word to our government that he wanted to talk over this matter, and they went down and had a conference. Our government, I suppose, maintained that they had a right to make any deal they liked with another country without it affecting the United States—in fact, the Minister of Finance boldly stated so on the floor of this House in dealing with the French Treaty; yet the President sent for our bold Finance Minister, and the result was that when the interview was over, he came back to this House and reported that we would have to do some little thing to help the President of the United States out of the awkward situation in which he found himself. Some have stated that he went a little further, and that there was a little private understanding not communicated to this House at the time, that they would proceed later on to do something in the nature of the arrangement now proposed But whether that is true or not, the minister came back and tried to do something in the way of lowering a lot of duties that prevailed against the importation of United States products into this country, in order to bring about peace. They reported that when they had visited President Taft he had been very pleasant to them, and had been very sorry, indeed, that the wicked Congress had passed that Act, and compelled him to take some action. They told us about how pleasant he was, and how he smiled when he swung the club. Well, considering the whole matter, and the condition of affairs prevailing in the United States, I do not wonder that he smiled. I only wonder that he did not laugh right out loud. The result was that the Act passed, and the United States was relieved of a considerable amount of duties on goods exported to this country. The result of the arrangements at that time, I suppose, brought about the condition of affairs that we find now.

The Prime Minister, in speaking of that, tried to lead the House and the country to believe that we had always been in favour of a treaty of reciprocity with the United States in agricultural products such as is proposed to-day. I purpose reading a few words spoken by the Prime Minister in 1899, in this regard. He said:

> If we know the hearts and minds of our people at present, I think I am not making too wide a statement when I say that the general feeling in Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with the honourable gentleman himself (referring to Sir Charles Tupper), would have given many things to obtain the American market; there was a time, not long ago, when the market of the great cities of the union was the only market we had for any of our products. But, thank Heaven, those days are past and over now. We are not dependent on the American market as we were at one time.

Again he said:

> Canada to-day is not in favour of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with myself, would have given may things to obtain the American market, but, thank Heaven, these days are past and over.

On another occasion he said:

There was a time when we were wanting reciprocity with the United States, but our efforts and our offers were put aside and negatived. We have said good-bye to that trade and we now put all our hopes upon the British trade.

It has also been represented to us that Sir John Macdonald had always been in favour of a reciprocity treaty. Let me say that I believe Sir John Macdonald was in favour of a reciprocity treaty if it met with the conditions he thought would be favourable to Canada, but when Sir John Macdonald introduced the National Policy in 1878, he distinctly laid down the principle that any bargain we made with the United States would have to be a fair bargain, a bargain that would give Canada an opportunity to sell as much to the United States as we buy from the United States. In the working out of that, he was able to approximate the business transactions between the two countries; but under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite they have allowed the balance to drift altogether in favour of the United States who are now sending us $107,000,000 per annum more goods than they are buying from us. That is a condition that would never have met with the consent of Sir John Macdonald and it would be idle for any member of this House to try to convince the House or country that Sir John Macdonald would ever have accepted any such proposal. The National Policy itself was entered into chiefly with the view, as I said before, of equalizing conditions between Canada and the United States. It has been claimed that under the reciprocity treaty of 50 years or more ago, Canada derived a great deal of advantage. I wish to show that conditions then were altogether different from the conditions that prevail to-day in the two countries. Prior to 1846, the Canada of to-day was a few scattered British possessions, without cohesion, each working independently of the other, with the exception of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, which had just joined forces. Prior to 1846 we enjoyed a measure of preference in the British market. The British people then had a protective tariff and gave an advantage to the colonies which they denied to foreign countries. When they adopted their present trade policy in 1846, and put it upon the statute-book the colonies lost the advantage they had enjoyed up to that time and this put them in a very awkward position. Except those portions of the country which were on the ocean where vessels could land, practically the whole country was shut out from the civilized world, with no opportunity of shipping its surplus unless it was sent through the United States. Under such conditions it was of the very greatest advantage to our people that we should, if possible, have a trade arrangement with the United States. In consequence of this an arrangement was entered into in 1854, covering certain commodities, not exactly on the lines now proposed but resembling this treaty a good deal, binding us for a certain length of time and our trade developed along those lines. Our people found it necessary, in order to keep up any balance of trade with the United States, to put on a tariff against American manufactured goods coming into this country. They needed the money very badly to open up the country, to build roads, railroads, canals, and means of transportation and to help out with all the various things that were necessary for the development of a new country. This treaty worked along all right for a while until the Americans found they were not getting altogether the best of the deal. As soon as they found themselves in that position, they commenced to make serious objections. The matter was discussed in Congress and I shall read from a record compiled by the United States government giving extracts from the Congressional debates on the reciprocity treaty of 1854. I do this to show the objections that arose in the minds of the people of the United States which I believe will apply with equal force to any bargain we may make with them under the present pact. I find the following statement at page 16:

The tariff of 1859 was avowedly based upon an isolating and exclusive policy. It was supported on this ground alike by ministerial organs of the press, by petitions in its favour, and by members of the colonial parliament. After securing our free market for all Canadian productions, its advocates argued that it was the interest of Canadians to become independent of all other countries and to employ their own ships and their own people; thus 'keeping in the country all that is now paid to the United States.'

They can find no justification for the annual increase in their rates of tariff in the assertion that the present rates do not exceed, or own when the treaty was ratified our tariff exceeded theirs and the consideration given to them was not an equality of tariffs, but an interchange of the produce of both countries and certain privileges in navigation, while a liberal policy toward our manufactures was promised and had been adopted; thus placing the commerce and navigation of the two countries upon 'terms reciprocally beneficial and satisfactory,' although we have made large reductions in our tariff since the treaty. Canada had determined to free herself from the difficulties of her geographical position, and the British government was compelled to secure our free markets to prevent rebellion. This was secured through menaces and promises of liberality to manufactured goods. Justice to our people for the privileges granted by the treaty demands that future Canadian legislation should conform to the letter and spirit of the treaty, and that Canadian enactments should be in the direction of a more free intercourse between the two countries.

If it be true that the Canadian government has a right to increase its taxes upon our industry, as it has done, almost to the exclusion of our manufactures, because no stipulation against this course was inserted in the treaty, then it has a right to put an embargo (for a prohibitory duty amounts to an embargo) upon all articles not enumerated in the treaty, and there could be no check to its aggressions.

They take there the ground that we must not do anything with regard to items not enumerated in the treaty—

Mr. LENNOX. They are going to make our tariff.

Mr. WRIGHT. —and, as intimated by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) our tariff would have to be made altogether in the United States before it would be satisfactory to the people there. Again, at page 17:

'The public debt of Canada has increased from year to year to about fifty millions of dollars, twenty-five millions of which have been created since 1853, principally in the construction of railways yielding no income.'

Countless trains of cars are now daily dashing along these railroads from the seaboard toward the Rocky Mountains, competing, without regard to remuneration, for the commerce of the great valleys of the Lakes and the Mississippi.

The railroads and canals of Canada were alike constructed for the express purpose of extending political and commercial power, by the diversion of the trade of the great interior of our country through the valley of the St. Lawrence and the Canadian routes of transportation, thereby advancing the prosperity of the colony and increasing British power. They were undertaken by the government and were mainly dependent upon subsidies and municipal bonds; and the object of their managers has hitherto been to secure the largest amount of traffic to the roads, instead of the largest dividends to the stockholders.

This extensive system of internal improvements was brought into active life by the ratification of the reciprocity treaty, through which Canada was enabled to open a grain trade between the great west and the Eastern States. To control it, she plunged into extraordinary expenses for an extended railroad and carrying system. Increased taxation was the consequence, and additional duties were imposed upon all manufactured articles, and upon many others not enumerated in the free list of the treaty.

You will observe that the gravamen of that allegation is that this would divert trade and would prevent it going out through American channels and would send it by Canadian channels, that is, down the St. Lawrence, to the ocean. And I hold that the present proposition is intended to change the condition that has been brought about in Canada and again to divert trade through American channels; and if it does not have that effect our American friends will soon bring pressure to bear upon our government for other greater concessions on our part, or they will do away with all the rights they have given us under the bargain. At page 18, we find the following:

To make up the deficiency caused by these speculative expenses, Canada now seeks to make our merchants and manufacturers, who have been most damaged by the diversion of western trade to Canadian cities and transportation routes, pay for her non-remunerative carrying system. This whole modern movement of Canadian or British policy in transportation is artificial, unnatural, and against the laws of trade, climate, and geography—in violation of the spirit of international intercourse as mutually recognized and sanctioned by the reciprocity treaty. It cannot last, even if Congress should refuse to protect our commerce on the inland seas. The transit lines of freight and passengers across this continent to the ocean may be deflected for a time by disturbing causes, but cannot be permanently changed. They are governed by laws as imperative as the natural laws which govern the flow of our rivers in their course to the ocean.

So, you will see, they still stick to the contention that Canada's business should go out through American channels. I quote again from page 19:

The retrograde policy developed by the Canadian tariffs since the ratification of the treaty is not confined in its action to American manufactures. With duties practically differential, through a change in the valuation, she has endeavoured to lessen the business of our shippers, forwarders, and merchants, by diverting trade in tea, coffee, sugar, wine, and all other articles of foreign production, but especially those of tropical origin, from New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other Atlantic cities of the north, to Montreal, choosing a long and circuitous route to the richest and most progressive portions of her territory, endeavouring thus to draw her commerce from all parts of the world along the vast line of her frontier, instead of taking the shortest course from the Atlantic across the United States.

And at page 20:

All the consequences of the high tariffs of Canada cannot yet be thoroughly shown by the governmental statistics of either country. The minute ebb and flow of commerce from one year to another year cannot show the full effect of these exclusive laws. Manufactures are chiefly represented as products of the United States, paying duty in Canada, in the table already given, and exhibiting in this class a decrease from nearly 8,000,000 in 1856 to 4,500,000 in 1858. Manufacturing establishments, however, cannot be brought into full operation in 6 or 12 months, although the progress made by Canadians, under the influence of these tariffs, toward supplying their own wants and excluding us for ever, has been so great that from a locomotive down to a shoe peg almost every branch of the manufactures of this country is already successfully commenced. Montreal, under the forcing process of protection and discriminating tariffs, is now rivalling Lowell and Lynn in almost every article of their manufacture and approaching our Atlantic cities in the magnitude of her commerce.

For similar reasons the effect of the tariff of 1859 on our exportations of foreign merchandise to Canada cannot be shown in the form of statistics. Less than a fiscal year, under the regulations of either country had elapsed since it received the requisite legal assent.

On page 22 we find the following:

The statesmanlike ideas prevalent at the time when the treaty became law, anticipating the removal of all unnecessary restrictions between two neighbouring states, are in strong contrast with the realities of today. The British provinces are admitted to a special participation in the benefits arising from the American system by an exemption in their favour, while we continue to levy duty on the articles named in the treaty when imported from other countries, but in Canada all these articles, with a few nominal exceptions, are admitted free of duty from every country in the world, and the products of the United States enjoy no more advantage in Canada than they would do if the treaty had never been made or were now abrogated. Thus also, for the articles enumerated in the treaty and produced in Canada, the market of the United States is thrown open to all the world via Canada and the provinces, for no system of inspection can be devised sufficiently exact to determine in what country these common products of temperate zone may have had their origin.

I read that to show that the same objection will immediately follow on this treaty going into effect. Our duty being lower than the duty of the United States, exactly the same condition will prevail again which prevailed in 1854-65, until the treaty was abrogated. If it had that effect then of creating dissatisfaction in the United States, will it not have the same effect if we bring this pact into force now? I want to point out that during the time this treaty was in force, during 1854-5-6-7-8, the imports into Canada and the exports to the United States were as follows:

In 1854 we bought from the United States $15,533,097, and we sold them, $8,649,002. In 1855, we bought from the United States, $20,828,676; and we sold them $16,737,277. In 1856 we bought $22,704,509, and we sold $17,979,753. In 1857, we bought $20,224,650, and we sold $13,206,436. In 1858, the last year for which I have figures, we bought from the United States $15,635,565, and we sold them $11,930,094.

You will perceive, Mr. Chairman, that in all these years we bought from them a great deal more than we sold them, and yet the treaty was so unsatisfactory to the United States that they abrogated it in 1865.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 152) respecting the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec. — Mr. Fowke.

CANADIAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION BOARD.

House in committee on Bill (No. 161) to incorporate the Canadian Baptist Foreign Mission Board.—Mr. Fowke.

On section 7: limit of time of holding property,

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the hon. member (Mr. Fowke), who is in charge of this Bill, should give us some explanation of that clause more especially as to the limit of the time during which property can be held by this association.

Mr. FOWKE. I think the limit is stated at ten years. There is no desire to carry property for speculative purposes, and they propose to divest themselves of all surplus proprietary rights within a period of years.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that that is a longer period than we usually grant for such a purpose. We had a rule years and years ago fixing the limit at seven years. We thought that was a sufficient length of time for property to be held under these conditions. I assume the private Bills committees have well considered this, although I do not see the chairman of that committee here to-night to say whether the matter was discussed or considered at all.

Mr. FOWKE. For the information of the hon. gentleman I may say that I was present at the meeting at which the Bill was considered, it was considered very carefully and passed the committee unanimously in its present form.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was the question of time raised in the committee?

Mr. FOWKE. Well, the clause was read.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was there any discussion as to the time?

Mr. FOWKE. I cannot say that there was.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think this is a very important question for the House to consider.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Apparently every member of the committee was in favour of it as it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was the Minister of Public Works present?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I say 'apparently.'

Mr. HENDERSON. But we cannot pass legislation on appearances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We do not usually have a discussion unless there is some difference of opinion.

Mr. BARKER. I have no objection to the thing itself, but we have every day in our committees the point raised that a certain thing has been done once before. It having been considered that seven years as a maximum was a good rule, I think the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill ought himself to consider whether it is right to extend that period. I have no objection, I have not thought of it, and did not hear of it until to-day, but every day in the committees the statement is made that this has been done before. Somebody gets in seven years, another person gets in ten, and the next one fifteen. We had to-day, in a very important committee, that argument used and unless there is some reason for increasing the time limit from seven to ten years, I think the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill owes it to the House to say why there should be nearly fifty per cent added to the time limit.

Mr. FOWKE. I had not known until now that the rule heretofore obtaining was that a limitation of seven years should be placed on the holding of property in cases of this kind. However, I do not suppose it would do any great harm if we should comply with the desires of those who are seeking this incorporation by extending the period to ten years. The hon. gentleman who has raised the objection, of course, is aware of the fact that the Bill would have to be returned to the Senate and go through the whole process again. If he has no serious objection to allowing it to pass as it is at present. I trust he will reconsider the point which he has raised.

Mr. HENDERSON. My recollection is that ten or fifteen years ago seven years in a case of this kind was considered ample. I remember that on one occasion the Crown actually took possession of property in which I was myself interested after a lapse of seven years because we had not disposed of it. That was a matter of property held under a charter granted by the Ontario government. I have always understood that seven years was a sort of recognized limit. Unless there are good and substantial reasons why we should go beyond that I do not think it is wise. I have not the Bill before me, but I understand that this board asks for the privilege of holding property for ten years for speculative purposes. If the property were for their own use as a board I would not care if they held it for fifty years, but to say that they may hold property for speculative purposes for this length of time is getting too far away from what I have been led to understand was a well established policy. Of course I do not at all wish to impede the progress of the Bill, but what I fear is that the next body of the kind applying for incorporation may ask for twelve or fifteen years or longer, and thus we will be getting further away from what in the past was considered sound policy I believe we should be conservative in these things, and that the well considered policy of former days should not be departed from without substantial reason. More particularly as the Bill relates to a religious organization I would be sorry to see its passage delayed in any way, but I think they should recognize the principles of legislation which have been in vogue in the country for many a long year and should not ask for such a radical departure from the rule.

Mr. PUGSLEY. After all, what is the objection to allowing a religious corporation such as this to hold real estate for ten years? Section 7 limits the value of the real estate held in any province of Canada except Ontario to $50,000 per year, and in Ontario to $150,000, and under section 3 the association is obliged within ten years to sell any property it may have acquired during that period and which is not required for actual use and occupation. Suppose some one should convey a piece of prairie property in the Northwest to this association for religious and charitable purposes, where would be the serious objection to the association holding that property for the comparatively short period of ten years so as to get the advantage of the increase in value for use in religious and charitable purposes? I know of no rule limiting this to ten years, and if there is any such I cannot understand why it has been established in Canada. We have nothing to fear from ordinary religious associations such as this holding property for the short period of ten years. The Senate having passed the Bill, and the committee of this House having passed it, it would in my opinion be relying too much upon a technicality to send it back to the Senate amended.

Mr. BARKER. The Minister of Public Works wants to know why there should be a limitation of ten years or why there should be any limitation at all. Well, it has been considered, having regard to the history of the past, that it is not desirable to put real estate in mortmain. The experience of ages teaches that it is unwise to place real estate in dead hands. If the members of the government present want to lay down the principle that there is nothing in the old objection to mortmain, well and good, but, it has been recognized wherever the English language is spoken, that the limitation to mortmain should be very strict. The argument of the Minister of Public Works is that church corporations and religious bodies of this kind should hold lands to eternity, but suppose a church should acquire land in this growing country of ours in the middle of what is now a village, but which may grow into a large city, would the minister think that they should reap all the advantage of increased value which the people owning the surrounding property had placed upon it? There is a principle in the thing. There is not a gentleman in this House who would object to the ten years in this particular case except on a matter of pure principle, but if you give ten years here why may not the next religious corporation that comes to us ask for fifteen or twenty years? Before we jump from one stage to another in such a matter we should know why. I take for granted that those who in the past, ruling this country and other countries, thought there was a reason for limiting the holding of such land in dead hands, had sound and good reasons. If so, we ought not to depart from that without some better argument than has been given to us by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the statute of mortmain has not been very effective in this country.

Mr. BARKER. It ought perhaps to be made more effective.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Churches do own a great deal of property, and I have never had very much faith in the statute. I would tax, in the way ordinary property is taxed, the property of religious corporations which is not actually used for church purposes. My hon. friend (Mr. Fowke), says that is the case in the province of Ontario. Any property of religious corporations that is used for business purposes might fairly pay a tax. Whether there should be any limit or not need not now be discussed. The question is between 7 years and 10 years, and I see no more objection to making the limit 10 years than 7 years. But there is another point which my hon. friend is not considering, that is, that this is not a church corporation in the ordinary sense of the word. It is simply a foreign mission board, formed for the purpose of establishing missions and teaching the doctrines of christianity in heathen countries. Can there be any reasonable objection to allowing a society of that kind to receive property, as it would naturally receive it, by way of gift, for the short period of 10 years, so that there might be a reasonable time for it to advance in value, and so that when it was sold the proceeds might be so much the greater to enable the corporation to advance the missionary work for which it has been formed? It does seem to me that in the case of a corporation like this, there is no reasonable objection to allowing a period of 10 years.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. minister has produced perhaps the best argument that has been offered in favour of limiting the period to the shorter term. I have not read the Bill, but I understand from the hon. member who is promoting it that this is a case in which the property is being held for speculative purposes.

Mr. FOWKE. I did not say that; I said the reverse of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. For what purpose is the land being held?

Mr. FOWKE. For the purposes of the association—for religious purposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister has told us that in all probability it is held for increase in value. I would like to know what that is if it is not for a speculative purpose. Suppose they acquire a section of land, 640 acres, in the northwest, and suppose this section is surrounded by men who have gone in to settle on the land and improve it. The section might be in the midst of a school section, and they would probably claim exemption from taxation—I do not know what the law in that respect is out there. At all events, it is not being improved, while the people living adjacent to it are improving their lands and building roads and bridges, and this property is getting all the benefit of their industry and is increasing in value, not by reason of any action on the part of its owners, but by reason of the activity of others. The fact that the land is held in this way is rather a hindrance than a help to the district, and I think that is one of the strongest reasons why they should not be allowed to hold it for any great length of time, but should be required to put it on the market and let it be sold to persons who would cultivate and improve it so that the neighbourhood would get some taxes out of it. It seems to me that the minister has solved the whole problem and has given a conclusive reason why we should adhere to the practice of by-gone years and limit the statute of mortmain to 7 years. If the government proposes to take a departure and adopt a new line of policy, and extend the term to 10 years, then the minister ought to bring in general legislation to give the same right to all other corporations or individuals. I enter my protest against this extension. I am not going to take the responsibility of saying to the hon.

gentleman that he must get the Senate to undo what they have done; but I do contend that we should carefully watch these matters and not make radical changes.

Mr. FIELDING. Is this a radical change? I confess that I am not as well informed as others seem to be with regard to the practice of other bodies. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), would lead us to believe that it is the custom not to allow other religious bodies to hold land more than 7 years. Is that the fact?

Mr. BARKER. I gather from the hon. member for Halton that that is the rule, and it is not denied by the Minister of Public Works. If it is, we ought to adhere to it until we enlarge it for everybody.

Mr. FIELDING. Great as is my respect for the Minister of Public Works, I am not prepared to admit that his failure to deny a thing proves the thing to be correct. Some of us who have had the opportunity of looking into the question—and I confess I am not one—ought to be able to speak more definitely. If this corporation is asking for some privilege which is at variance with what is granted to others of like character, I do not want them to have any exceptional privilege; but I have not seen any evidence yet that that is the rule or the practice.

Mr. BARKER. I understand the rule of parliament to be that the government is responsible for all legislation whether it is government legislation or any other. The Minister of Finance will not dispute that the government while controlling this House is responsible as a government for every Bill that passes here. If the hon. gentleman says he does not know whether it ought or ought not to be granted he should not allow the Bill to pass until he does know.

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that is quite the point. I did not waive any question as to the rights, powers, privileges and duties of the government, and the government does not pretend to control the House, it is the House that controls the government. I dissent entirely from the view of the hon. gentleman, but that is a detail. The hon. gentleman has said this is the rule. If he were able to give us evidence of that I would pay great respect to it, but if he makes that statement as his passing impression I do not think we should regard it as conclusive.

Mr. BARKER. I stated distinctly that I could not assert that a limit of seven years was the absolute rule. That has been stated by a member of this House. The minister, as leader of the House to-night, is responsible that no legislation is introduced contrary to the general principles of parliament in passing such legislation.

Mr. FIELDING. We need not quarrel over that; I prefer to keep our attention on the Bill. No evidence has been given on this matter. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has made a statement which I have no doubt he believes to be correct, but at the same time if I were to ask him to give authority for it, probably he would have as much difficulty as the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). If these two hon. gentlemen make the statement the obligation is on them to show that it is correct. I am not contradicting it nor have I had an opportunity to look into it. I know the rule is not general; banks in certain cases are allowed to hold real estate for 12 years.

Mr. BARKER. That is under peculiar circumstances.

Mr. FIELDING. Quite so. This Bill has been considered by a committee. If it can be shown that the privilege granted to this association is at variance with what we grant to others, I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite and do not want the Bill to pass in that form but I have not seen any evidence that it is.

Mr. BARKER. If the hon. gentleman is correct in his argument he would pass this Bill if there was no limitation whatever because we had no evidence before us. What is the duty of the government in regard to legislation? Has the government no obligation to the people of Canada with regard to all legislation proposed here, while they are in power? The hon. gentleman does not go so far as that. Are we as individual members under any personal obligation to look into the question as to what is the policy of this country as a whole on this subject? Surely the hon. gentleman to-night as leader of the government is in that position, not the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) or I.

Mr. FIELDING. I repeat that I do not think this has anything to do with the discussion. If my hon. friend insists on a statement of opinion on that, I would say that the hon. member and every other hon. member in this House is bound to look into every measure which comes before this House and if he takes the responsibility of making a statement about it he ought to have the responsibility of supporting and proving that statement. The hon. member for Halton rested his argument entirely on the assumption that this property would be exempt from taxation.

Mr. HENDERSON. I said it might be.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a question for the provincial authority and as respects this corporation or any other corporation or any private individual property that is held under conditions which do not make for the general advancement or improvement of the community, the provincial authorities must deal with that by the law of the province and we are not concerned to deal with it here. Whether this corporation would come within the class of corporations whose property is exempt I would not say but I think the hon. member for Halton will agree that this is a matter for the provincial legislature rather than for this parliament. As to the Bill generally there is a practice in this House which I frankly confess I am usually willing to follow. None of us have an opportunity to deal with all the details of Bills particularly of private Bills. For that reason committees have been appointed and if a committee representing the House generally has investigated a Bill and recommended it to this House my general feeling is to support it unless it is clear that the committee has made a mistake. Under that rule I am prepared to support this measure until I see it is a departure from other Bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will follow section 7 of the Bill while I read, he will see that this section is identical with section 7 of a statute passed in this House in 1909 to incorporate the Catholic Church Extension Society of Canada. That section reads:

> The society may receive, take and hold real estate by purchase, gift or devise, and determine by by-law the manner in which such property shall be held and conveyed, subject always to the laws of the province in which such real estate is situated; and in regard to any real property which, by reason of its situation or otherwise, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, a license in mortmain shall not be necessary for the exercise of the powers granted by this Act.
> 2. The annual value of the real estate held by, or in trust for, the society in any province of Canada, shall not exceed fifty thousand dollars, except in the province of Ontario where it shall not exceed one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.
> 3. The society shall, within ten years after its acquisition of any real estate, sell or otherwise dispose of and alienate so much of such real estate as is not required for the use and occupation of the board, but nothing herein contained shall be deemed in any wise to vary or otherwise affect any trust relating to such.

Mr. BARKER. The Minister of Public Works has been successful on two occasions in convincing me of the opposite of what he is contending for. I stated at first that I did not know and I do not know what the limitation has been with regard to the holding of property in mortmain for such purposes as this. The hon. gentleman said that his knowledge and recollection was that seven years was the maximum. Nobody has disputed that. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) contends that whether it was the maximum or not, there is no reason why we should not give in this particular Bill 10 years. My statement is that the holding of public lands by mortmain, by dead hand corporations, has been for centuries a serious question in legislation. It has been the subject of the most careful watchfulness. Whether it should be 7 years or 10 or 20 years is not the question to-night. The question is whether we should allow any private Bill to be brought in here and fix a number of years, according to the views of the particular corporation, that it may hold lands especially in such a country as this where properties may increase in 10 or 20 years tenfold or one hundredfold, whether they should be allowed to acquire property, hold it dead in the midst of a progressive people, representing the profit not of their own expenditure but of the work, the energy and the expenditure of the people about them.

And they, instead of assisting, are absolutely holding back the efforts of their neighbours, and yet they reap the full reward. I say, as the hon. member for Halton said, we have no objection to this particular corporation. But we hear every day—we heard it to-day in one of the committees of this House—that this must be all right because it was done before. Unfortunately, it is considered by many members as sufficient answer to any objection in a committee that another committee on another occasion had done the same thing. It is simply raised here as a question, assuming that the hon. member has said is correct, that seven years has been, as a rule, the period allowed to church corporations to hold land for speculative purposes—because that is the truth whether that should be increased to a longer term of years, whether ten or twenty, does not matter. Now, what I contend is that it is the duty of the ministers controling, as they are supposed to do, the legislation of parliament, not to allow any Bills to pass that contravene any general rule of that kind, unless they are prepared to take the responsibility of it. I do not admit for a moment that the government of the country is responsible only for government measures. As I understand the principle on which we work, the government is responsible, while it remains in power, for the legislation of the country generally. If the Minister of Finance, who, I understand, is leading the government here to-night, is prepared to say that ten years is a reasonable limit for these things, let him take the responsibility of it. Then every other person who wants to claim the same privilege will have the right, I presume, to do so. I presume also that the government will see the propriety, in that case, of passing a general Act with regard to other church corporations that have hitherto been limited to seven years, to provide that they may have ten years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I desire to take a minute to refer to the statutes. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) says there is a seven year rule——

Mr. BARKER. I have not said so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman says that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) says so——

Mr. HENDERSON. No, if the minister will excuse me, I will repeat what I said. I gave my authority for putting the period at seven years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What was it?

Mr. HENDERSON. A joint stock company, in which I was interested, was formed for the purpose of building houses in the village in which I live. It applied to the authorities of the province of Ontario for a charter of incorporation. The government was that of Oliver Mowat—he was not then Sir Oliver. I have not always adhered to the teaching of Oliver Mowat, but he was a great lawyer, and he understood business well enough. In granting us that charter, he limited us to seven years. That is the reason I gave why I thought a seven year period was the proper period. In the case I speak of the property was not held unused, for buildings were erected on it and the taxes paid on the property were probably ten times more than before these buildings were constructed. After seven years that property was escheated to the Crown. If that was the doctrine of Oliver Mowat, I think it must be sound doctrine, and I think I am treading on safe ground when I accept that, and give it as a reason for the course I have contended for. If I am wrong, Oliver Mowat was wrong. I may say that we acquired the property back from the Crown, but it cost us something. I have given my authority, and I hope the Minister of Finance will be satisfied with it. I do not think he will say that Oliver Mowat was not a good authority, or that he did not know anything of the statute of mortmain.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Except that the instance he quotes has nothing to do with the rule of this House in incorporating these bodies, or with the statute of mortmain, the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Henderson's) instance is very good. The statutes of mortmain are statutes which apply to religious bodies, and a religious body, as the hon. member for Halton says is one which does not do anything to utilize its real estate except as may be required for its religious houses or churches. I have shown that in 1909 a statute was passed incorporating a religious body, and fixing the period at ten years. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) were members of the House at that time. Then, at the last session of parliament, not only one but three different companies of this character were incorporated, the Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Temiskaming, the Congregational Union of Canada, and L'Institut de Notre Dame des Missions, two being Catholic institutions, and one Protestant, and in all three cases the time named was ten years. So, I have produced four cases, which certainly must be pretty good evidence, unless we have something to the contrary, of what the rule in this House actually is. And in dealing with the incorporation of a religious body, and determining what period it should be allowed to hold real estate, it would be better for us to follow what parliament has done rather than what Oliver Mowat may have done in Ontario in granting a charter to a commercial corporation which would enable it to hold property and carry on its corporate business.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister (Mr. Pugsley) has given what he imagines is the practice of this House. It may have been the practice in the last few years, but it has not always been the practice, for I know for a fact that corporations which received their corporate powers from this House have been allowed to hold property for seven years only. I have here one of these charters. It is regarding a fraternal society, and I remember distinctly the charters of three or four fraternal societies, all of which got their corporate powers from this House. My impression is that every one of them was allowed to hold property for seven years only.

But the association should sell such real estate property as it acquires by the foreclosure of any mortgage, hypotheque, or lien within seven years after it has been so acquired.

At that time a fight was made to have the period extended to ten years, and it was refused by this House. I think the same thing took place with regard to one of the Orders of Foresters, and one or two other fraternal societies this Act I refer to went through about 1890, and after then the time was seven years. I think I can turn up several of those Acts and verify the statements I have made if necessary, because these were all called in question at the time this charter was passed.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. It seems to me the onus is rather upon the government to show a reason for changing the rules from seven to ten years. As I have always understood, all the various statutes of mortmain limit the right of holding property of this kind to seven years. But it seems to me this parliament has no jurisdiction whatever to say what time a religious body or any other body should hold real estate, when the subject of mortmain is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the local provinces. Under the British North America Act any local province has power to deal with property and civil rights, and I have been unable to come to the conclusion that this parliament has any jurisdiction in that respect. I notice in the statute incorporating the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church, passed in 1872, the limitation there is in these words:

And such conveyance should be subject to the laws relating to the conveyance of real estate to religious corporations which are in force at the time of such conveyance in the Canada in which such real estate is situate.

I notice in the Act incorporating the Missionary Society of the Church of England, this provision:

And any device of real estate should be subject to the laws respecting the devisers of real estate to religious corporations in force at the time of such devise in that part of Canada in which such real estate is situate.

So I say we have no right to interfere to the extent of saying what length of time a religious corporation shall hold property, because we are thereby infringing upon the domain of the provinces. I think if this matter were referred to the Minister of Justice he would support my contention. If we can limit the time at all, we can say fifty years, and if we can say fifty years, we can absolutelv obliterate the provincial statutes in that regard.

WAYS AND MEANS — RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WRIGHT. When the House rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the causes that led to the abrogation of the treaty of 1854, and giving the reasons which induced the American people to cancel that agreement which had been in force for the previous ten years. I was attempting to show that their reason was that it was not sufficiently in favour of the United States, although they were profiting very largely, and their exports to Canada were much in excess of our exports to the United States. While they were sending the finished products of their factories into Canada, we were supplying them with raw material and agricultural products. I was attempting to show that if this proposed agreement went into effect, unless it proved to be very much to the advantage of our American neighbours, they would immediately proceed to cancel it, or would put such regulations in force by means of their custom houses as to hamper our trade very much. Now it is a question in my mind whether, if we pass this treaty, it will be observed by them as it ought to be observed. We have to go back in history to see how other treaties and bargains that we have made with the United States have been observed by them. Going back to the treaty of Washington, in 1782, we find that the United States agreed at that time to take whatever steps might be necessary in order that the United Empire Loyalists, those who had property in the United States when they left that country on account of the revolution, would be able to get back the possession of their estates; and the United States government agreed to recommend the state legislatures to pass the necessary legislation. This was considered by our people as an equivalent to an agreement that they would be enabled to recover possession of their property. But this agreement was never carried out, the American people sheltering themselves behind the excuse that the various states had to deal with this matter, and the various states never gave over to the people that were entitled to them the lands and estates that they had held. In the treaty of 1871, there was a provision for free fish. Our American friends soon discovered that while fish might come in free, the cans could not come in free, and they put a duty of 1½ cents on each can. In the same treaty the joint use of our canals was provided for. But the Americans, by some tricky customs regulation, compelled the boats going to American ports from Canadian ports to call at the first port of entry and report themselves; and then Congress suplemented that by an Act that these boats would have to unload at the very first place at which they called. If such a regulation were put in force again, the position would be that if a boat left Port Arthur it would have to register, we will say, at Sault Ste Marie, and there it would have to unload its cargo, supposing it were destined for Buffalo or some other port, and that would practically put our Canadian boats out of business. Now, in the carrying trade of the Great Lakes, we have 84 steel ships and 4 wooden ones, with 2,500 officers and men, and 5,000 freight handlers. If such a regulation were again put into force it would be a very serious matter indeed to our whole marine interests.

Now, let us consider for a little the reasons which may be actuating our American neighbours and impelling them to make this agreement with Canada. Mr. Taft is upon record to the following effect:

If we can enlarge our supply of natural resources and especially of food products and the necessities of life without substantial injury to any of our producing and manufacturing classes, we should take steps to do so now.

Also:

By giving our people access to Canadian forests we shall reduce the consumption of our own, which, in the hands of comparatively few owners, now have a value that requires the enlargement of our available timber resources.

Mr. Pinchot, in dealing with this question says:

The five indispensably essential materials in our civilization are wood, water, coal, iron and agricultural products.

We have timber for less than thirty years at the present rate of cutting. The figures indicate that our demands upon the forest have increased twice as fast as our population.

We have anthracite coal for but fifty years, and bituminous coal for less than two hundred.

Our supplies of iron ore, mineral oil, and natural gas are being rapidly depleted, and many of the great fields are already exhausted. Mineral resources such as these when once gone are gone for ever.

The diversion of great areas of our public land from the homemaker to the landlords and the speculator; the national neglect of great water-powers, which might well relieve, being perennially renewed, the drain upon our non-renewable coal; the fact that but half the coal has been taken from the mines which have already been abandoned as worked out and by caving-in have made the rest for ever inaccessible; the disuse of the cheaper transportation of our waterways, which involves comparatively slight demand upon our non-renewable supplies of iron ores, and the use of the rail instead—these are other items in the huge bill of particulars of national waste.

Mr. Beveridge says:

There must be reciprocity with Canada. Our tariff with the rest of the world does not apply to our northern neighbour. That policy already has driven American manufactures across the Canadian borders, built vast plants with American capital on Canadian soil, employing Canadian workmen to supply trade.

That capital should be kept at home employ American workmen to supply Canadian demand. We should admit Canadian wood pulp and Canadian paper free in return for Canada's admitting our agricultural implements, our engines, pumps and other machinery free. We should freely admit Canadian lumber to American planing mills in return for Canada freely admitting other American manufacturing products to Canadian markets.

We find this report from Washington on the 21st February:

Washington, Feb. 21.—Free trade with Canada, based upon identical tariffs of that country and the United States, as applied to all other countries of the world, was discussed by the Ways and Means Committee of the House under a resolution by representative Gaines, of West Virginia.

The resolution contemplates a commercial compact between the two countries, whereby they shall agree to establish identical tariffs against all other countries. All duties between Canada and the United States on the products of either are then to be abolished, and virtual free trade is to reign within the borders of the North American continent north of the Mexican line. The committee took no action, but it is understood will consider the measure further.

The resolution directs the President to undertake negotiations with Canada looking towards a compact to exist twenty years or longer between the two countries, each agreeing to adopt the same tariff wall against the world.

Mr. Hill, speaking at Chicago a short time ago on the subject of this measure, used the following language:

Reciprocity in raw materials, in natural products, and in some of the simpler and more generally used articles of manufacture, as provided for in the pending agreement, is the obvious road to a relation profitable to both countries.

The time, probably the last time, when this can be realized has arrived.

The future union of all parts of the British Empire in a commercial federation is almost certain.

When that shall have been concluded, under a system of preferential advantages securing the English market to the colonial producer of raw materials and food products, and the colonial market to the English manufacturer, it will strike the United States a double blow.

Our best customer, Great Britain, and our third best, Canada, will trade less and less with us and more and more with each other.

And it will then be permanently impossible to repair our error.

Political and economic weather signals indicate that should the present measure fall no other can succeed for many years, if ever.

Governor Foss gave expression to the following sentiments:

There are two essentials to successful industry. First, that you must have your raw materials on as favourable a basis as possible. This includes not only what goes into the industry, but also includes the food and necessities of life to the workingmen.

Second, you must have the broadest possible markets.

These are the two requisites and these are what reciprocity will give to Boston.

You will have better transportation facilities both on land and water, our coastwise shipping will double and every steamship company serving the district to the north and east of us will double its fleet.

Our great water terminal, Boston harbour, will be improved with new docks and piers adequate to this increased business.

Our present railroads will increase their facilities and extend their lines to handle the increased business and the great transcontinental lines of Canada will come to the port of Boston, which is the natural port for eastern Canada as well as New England.

Reciprocity will command a greater Boston, for our increased industrial and commercial interests will compel it. Real estate values will increase materially owing to this increased business development, and the increased population which will follow.

New factories in all lines will be established here, for with these conditions our capital will no longer seek Canada for the purpose of building up those factories which it is now forced to build in Canada by unnatural tariff conditions.

To every man, woman and child in Massachusetts reciprocity will mean a greater opportunity for a livelihood, and it will mean that our young men and young women will find better opportunities right here at home and will not be compelled to seek their fortunes in other sections of the country.

Reciprocity will give Massachusetts a more equal chance with other sections of the country, and this without doing any injustice to other sections. That is, we shall not enjoy these advantages at the expense of other sections.

Reciprocity will not only build up this section, but the whole country will receive a tremendous impetus for the next 100 years. It will enable the wealth of New England to safely invest its capital in the development of the natural resources of Canada, to the mutual advantage of both peoples.

This commercial union of these two English-speaking neighbours of the same family will make for the peace and good-will of the entire world.

When this question was being discussed in Congress Mr. Clark, the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, spoke as follows:

I look forward to the time when the American flag will fly over every square foot of British North America up to the north pole. The people of Canada are of our blood and our language. If the treaty of 1854 never had been abrogated, our countries would be much further advanced than now towards this end.

Mr. Martin of South Dakota—Will the gentleman favour the abrogation of our tariff law entirely so far as Canada is concerned, and make free trade on all products?

Mr. Clarke—By taking Canada in, to become a part of the United States—Yes.

Mr. Norris of Nebrasks—As I understand it, the gentleman favours the Bill for at least one reason, that it will have a tendency in the end to bring Canada into the union?

Mr. Clarke—Yes, I have no doubt about that.

Some years ago Senator Sherman discussed this question in the United States Senate using the following language:

The way to union with Canada is not by hostile legislation; not by acts of retaliation, but by friendly overtures. This union is one of the events that must inevitably come in the future; it will come by the logic of the situation, and no politician or combination of politicians can prevent it. The true policy of this government is to tender freedom in trade and intercourse, and to make this tender in such a fraternal way that it shall be an overture to the Canadian people to become a part of this republic . . . The settlement of the Northwest territory, the Louisiana and Florida purchases, the annexation of Texas, and the acquisition from Mexico are examples of the adaptation of our form of government for expansion, to absorb and unite, to enrich and build up, to ingraft in our body politic adjacent countries, and while strengthening the older states, confer prosperity and development on the new states admitted into this brotherhood of Republican States . . . With a firm conviction that this consummation most devoutly to be wished is within the womb of destiny, and believing that it is our duty to hasten its coming, I am not willing, for one, to vote for any measure not demanded by national honour that will tend to postpone the good time coming, when the American flag will be the signal and sign of the union of all the English-speaking peoples of the continent from the Rio Grande to the Arctic Ocean.

A United Stafes authority referring to the old reciprocity treaty says:

It is probable that Canada never was so near forcible annexation by the United States as when the earlier reciprocity treaty was denounced in 1865. The closer the two countries can now come to unrestricted trade the more certain and lasting will be their friendship and independence.

In 1888 the Chicago 'Tribune' dealing with this question wrote:

There are two ways in which Canada can protect herself from all possibility of a quarrel with this country about fish. One of these is by commercial union with the United States. The other is political union. If she is not ready for either, then her saftey lies in not provoking the United States by unfair or unfriendly dealing, for when the provocation comes, Uncle Sam will reach out and take her in, in order to ensure quiet, and neither she nor her venerable old mother can prevent it.

I read the following as indicating the trend of feeling in the United States on this question:

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 23.—Representative Fiske, of the second district of Jockson county, who is a farmer, introduced this annexation-of-Canada resolution yesterday:

Whereas, there has recently been introduced in the Congress of the United States by Representative Bennet, the following resolution:

That the President be requested to commence and continue negotiations with the British government to secure the annexation of the Dominion of Canada to the United States.

And whereas, there seems to be in this state at this time considerable sentiment in favour of a closer relationship with Canada, therefore be it

Resolved, by the House the Senate concurring, that it is the sense of this legislature that annexation is the true and only equitable solution of the problem and that we therefore favour the passage of the so-called Bennet resolution; and be it further

Resolved, that upon passage of this resolution copies be sent to Michigan senators and representatives in Congress.

The motion according to the rules, goes over for one day.

Dismarck, N.D., Feb. 21.—Annexation of Canada came before the legislature to-day, when Rep. Sorlie introduced a resolution declaring that the measure pending before Congress and the Canadian parliament, relating to the free exchange of farm products, shows that the two countries have interests in common.

It is also contended in the resolution that the people of the two nations can be best served under the same government.

Pointing to the fact that western Canada is largely populated by citizens of the United States, the resolution asks 'North Dakota members in Congress to use their influence in bringing about a peaceable annexation treaty.

Washington, Feb. 21.—Ex-Governor N. J. Bachelder, of New Hampshire, master of the National Grange, speaking to-day before the Senate Committee on Finance, suggested that the only fair way for free trade to be established would be to let the Stars and Stripes float over Canada.

The Los Angeles (California) 'Herald,' in an article reproduced in the following typographical form, says:

It was unfortunate just at this juncture, when every vote in the legislative councils at Washington and Ottawa is needed to ensure the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity treaty, that Champ Clark should have made his half jocular break about the annexation of the Dominion. The Canadian reactionaires will make the most of it, though it seems unlikely that they will be able to prevent approval on this side.

But, just the same, though this was the wrong time to say the right thing, many of us may live to see the very result that Champ Clark hopes for, brought about by this reciprocity agreement.

It may be predicted that the razing of the tariff bars will in time show both parties to the bargain that they have everything in common. Their social and trade relations are apt to become so intertwined that the most natural thing will be political union.

The late Goldwin Smith was the leader of a considerable party of annexationists in Canada. They have less strength, relatively, now than formerly, owing to the foolish tariff attitude of this country that has alienated many. But they are a good nucleus for the future annexation party.

These are a few opinions out of very many expressed in the United States. Showing very conclusively what is actuating our American friends in the move they are now making.

Now, Sir, with regard to the treaty itself I want to say that there was a feeling of intense anxiety all over the Dominion when it was learned that our government had sent men to Washington to negotiate an arrangement with the United States. The efforts of the government in the past had been so unfavourable to Canada that great anxiety indeed permeated the whole business portion of the country. We had had experience of different bargains that this government had made. After coming into power in 1896, they took up the tariff and introduced what has been termed the British preference, though it was not intended to be a British preference. In fact, Great Britain was not mentioned in the Act. It was simply an offer to all countries that would in tariff matters bring about a condition of affairs that would be favourable to Canada, to grant to them similar favours by lowering the tariff, I think 10 per cent.

I take exception to the principles on which this government seem to have managed all their affairs since they came into office. I had always understood that it was a good British principle that the people ruled, but ever since they came into power in 1896 they have utterly ignored that principle, which is supposed to permeate all our legislatures and councils all over this country. If any municipal council in the province of Ontario at any rate, were to attempt to mortgage the future beyond their term of office, they would be violating the law of the land. They are empowered to carry on the ordinary affairs of the constituency over which they preside for their term of office; but if they want to do anything beyond that, they have to go to the people to get permission to do so. If they want to build a courthouse or establish a sewerage system, or an electric light plant or waterworks, the consent of the people must always be obtained; and I had understood that even in the Dominion government the same principle was supposed to prevail. But when these hon. gentlemen came into office, they immediately started off by keeping the people in the dark, and they thought that was a great virtue. The Minister of Agriculture, in dealing with the move known as the British preference, in his speech on the 28th of February, used these words:

I fail to remember a single statement on the part of the present leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), or any member of the party placing before the people of Canada the principle and details of the British preference brought down to this House in 1897. Did anybody at that time say that we had no mandate for that policy? I can remember well that when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) announced his British preference in the House, it was like a thunderclap to the House and to the people; nobody expected it; nobody dreamed of it. The secret was well kept, so that, with the exception of the men who sat at the council board of that day there was not a single individual in Canada who knew that we were going to bring down a proposal for a British preference on the lines that were announced.

The same secrecy seems to prevail in the councils of the government with regard to all the great measures that have come to the surface during their term of office. On the Transcontinental railway they kept the people absolutely in the dark. With regard to the Autonomy Bills for the Northwest, the same secrecy prevailed. The same with regard to the French treaty, and the same with regard to the bargain that is now proposed. In my opinionfi this is entirely opposed to the underlying principle of all British government.

It is well known, I think, to the members of this House that when the British preference was enacted, our government got into trouble with Germany. They found that they would have to give the same advantages to Germany and I think to Belgium that they were expected to give to Great Britain. Consequently they had a lot of trouble with Germany for several years; but finally a few years ago came to some kind of settlement with Germany which was supposed to be very favourable to Canada. The net results of our trade with Germany for the last year reported are as follows. We bought from Germany $7,958,264, and we exported to Germany $2,065,768, showing that we got practically no advantages worth speaking of from our friends in Germany. I think the bargain was an exceptionally bad one for Canada. I will quote the bulk of the exports of farm products that we sent to Germany:

Grain and flour	$1,134,418
Fruits	102,728
Beef, &c	11,652
Clover, flax, &c	123,384
Tobacco	1,201
Total	$1,373,383

In addition, we exported to Germany, agricultural implements to the value of $461,921.

Our government also made a bargain with France, known as the French treaty, which was supposed to be of great value to our people. The net results of that bargain were as follows. In the last financial year we bought from France $10,170,903 worth of goods and sold to them $2,640,648 worth. We exported to France the following farm products:

Grain	$337,629
Fruits	34,902
Hay	5,580
Hides	1
Seeds and grasses	8,904
Vegetables	3
Total	$387,019

We did sell them pretty largely of agricultural implements and lobsters: implements, $787,524; lobsters, 949,793; other fish, $48,960. In regard to opening a market for our farmers, the French treaty was one of the greatest possible failures. In adition to the great disadvantage it has been to Canada, our government has voted and paid $200,000 every year to a steamship line to ply between Canada and France and bring French goods to Canada, for practically that is about all it has to do, and the farmers of Canada have to help to pay that $200,000, for which they get practically little or no advantage. Then the government made a bargain with Italy, to which our total exports of farm products seem to be a small quantity of wheat, $430,919 worth. Our total imports from Italy last year were $945,243, and our exports to Italy $829,508, a balance against us of $115,735.

Under the British preference they allowed quite an amount of agricultural products to come into this country at the preferential rate, so that instead of being an advantage on the whole to the farmers of Canada, all four bargains made by this government have proved of very decided disadvantage. We have sent to England under the head of agricultural products the following:

Animals	$ 10,080,352
Animal products	69,117
Grain	60,498,857
Grain products	10,097,943
Breadstuffs	1,246,258
Fruits	4,508,532
Hay	922,718
Hides and skins	32,138
Hops	25,765
Oil cake	393,523
Provisions and meats	30,071,269
Seeds	3,042,817
Total	$120,989,289

That is the best market that Canada has for these products. I do not think our government can claim credit for opening the British market to the Canadian farmer, as it has been entirely free, with the exception of the embargo on live cattle, during all these years.

It may be interesting to learn that largely as the result of this lowering of duties on goods from Great Britain, Great Britain was able to send to Canada, in competition with our farmers, the following:

Living animals	$ 625,995
Breadstuffs	681,524
Dried fruits	97,894
Green fruits	272,732
Preserved fruits	262,648
Hides and skins	1,848,242
Hops	50,736
Provisions	144,200
Seeds	62,212
Vegetables	113,536
Total	$3,959,719

We imported from Great Britain almost twice the amount of agricultural products that we exported to France, Germany and Italy during the fiscal year.

We hear so much about the advantage to Canada of the 90,000,000 market, that it will be perhaps advisable to quote a few figures dealing with the trade between Canada and the United States in an effort to ascertain whether the arrangement as a whole will be of any advantage to the people of this country. In volume 2 of the Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the last fiscal year, I find the following statistics of our trade with the United States for 1910:

Before proceeding to quote some further figures, I would say that if the present pact should go into effect it may become a very vital factor in our commercial life and interfere with a very large portion of our total trade, while our exports of agricultural products to the United States amounted to only one-forty-fourth of the total of their agricultural Exports. We only buy one dollar's worth out of every $30 worth they sell of that class of goods; so that if at any time they see fit to abrogate the arrangement it will cut a very small hole in their total trade, while it may be a very serious matter for us. The United States have a very large export of farm products, and I want to quote a few figures to show that there is very little foundation for the statements that are being sent broadcast over this country that they will likely soon be importers of natural products to feed their teeming millions. They sell of agricultural products as follows:

Great Britain	$375,674,868
Germany	171,592,232
France	64,489,091
The Netherlands	44,603,736
Italy	43,603,700
Belgium	30,461,220
Canada	30,375,721

And to all other countries a sufficient amount to make up a total for last year of $903,238,122. It would not look, Mr. Chairman, as if there was a very promising prospect for the Canadian farmer in his attempt to find a market in the United States. I want to deal for a few minutes with some of the commodities which it is stated we will be able to sell very largely to the United States. Let me deal first with the question of apples. We are told that there will be a great market for our apples. I will not go into the figures for each year but I will give the total of five years' export and import of apples. During the last five years for which we have figures, we sold to the United States 229,210 barrels of apples and we got for them $626,129, or we got on an average $2.73 per barrel. During the same five years we bought from the United States 216,203 barrels and paid for them $900,662, or $4.16 per barrel. The reason, of course, is very easy to understand. The Americans, being further south, and their apples coming in earlier, they are able to put them on the market a week and sometimes two weeks before the Canadian apple producer, and in consequence they get the cream of the apple trade. They will get that to a much greater extent if apples can come in here free. It must not be forgotten that if we carry this agreement into effect it will cut a very considerable hole in our customs receipts, and whatever is lacking there will have to be made up by the imposition of further duties upon other goods of which the farmer will have to contribute his share either in increased purchases or increased duty upon the purchases that he is already making.

I will enumerate just a few of the things that we have sold a little of to the United States and will not wait to quote the figures the other way as it would be shown on the whole that they are selling more to Canada of most of these things that we are selling to them while the trade advantage would be the other way with regard to a few of them. In ten years we have sold of butter to the United States, 2,253,795 pounds. We received for that $428,793, or we got for the butter that we sold to the United States on the whole 19 cents a pound. In ten years we sold 867,342 tons of hay, for which we received $6,404,178, or $7.38 per ton. Yet we hear that there is going to be a great advantage to the producers and sellers of hay in this country. It would not look as if it were to be a wonderful advantage when we are selling hay on the average at $7.38 a ton. In ten years we sold 4,057,491 bushels of oats for which we got $1,692,049, or an average of 41 cents per bushel, which was not so bad. Of wheat we sold them in ten years 11,249,205 bushels.

We got for it $9,367,709, or an average of 83 cents a bushel. We are told that, in this article of wheat at least, the consumption in the United States is fast overtaking production, and that in a very few years they will find it necessary to buy wheat. I have gone over the figures for the forty-five years for which figures are available, and I find that they have had for export, on the average 25 per cent of their total crop of wheat. I have taken the figures for the last ten years—owing to differences in the crop yield in different seasons, it is necessary to take a period of years long enough to give a fair average—and I find that during that period they have had for export, and have exported, 24 per cent of their wheat production. So, it would not look as though they were going to reach a point in the very near future at which they will find it necessary to buy wheat. I have here a table of the wheat production of the United States for some years past which shows that their production is practically keeping pace with their population and consumption:

United States wheat production:

Year	Bushels.
1901	522,229,505
1902	749,460,218
1903	670,063,008
1904	637,821,835
1905	552,399,517
1906	692,979,489
1907	735,260,970
1908	634,087,000
1909	664,602,000
1910	737,199,000

I have other figures showing the average price of wheat for the farmers over the whole of the United States for nine years—the tenth year was not available. The figures are as follows:

Average price of wheat to the farmers in the United States for 9 years:

Year.	Average price.
1900	61.09
1901	62.04
1902	63.00
1903	69.05
1904	92.04
1905	74.08
1906	66.07
1907	87.04
1908	92.08

Average price for nine years.. 74½

Now, leaving wheat for the present, I wish to deal with the question of potatoes, another item on which great expectations have been based. In discussing this question, the Minister of Agriculture stated, as reported at page 4525 of unrevised 'Hansard':

> Now I want to say a word about potatoes and fruit. In twelve years of high duties, the United States accepted from Canada $11,000,000 worth of potatoes more than they sent to Canada.

In my opinion, the minister is entirely astray, and I do not believe he can substantiate his statement by any accurate figures. According to the return brought down to this House lately, our sales of potatoes to the United States from 1901 to 1910 inclusive were as follows:

Quantity and value of potatoes (Canadian produce) exported from Canada to United States.

Years	Bushels.	Value.
1901	231,101	$ 68,151
1902	808,041	327,046
1903	138,855	56,969
1904	1,451,070	742,537
1905	34,870	18,301
1906	473,239	128,363
1907 (9 months)	8,941	4,250
1908	34,392	15,459
1909	574,454	251,907
1910	678,632	345,903
Totals	4,433,495	$1,988,886

Average 64 cents per bushel.

And in the same period, we bought from the United States as follows:

Quantity and value of potatoes imported into Canada from the United States:

Years.	Bushels.	Value.
1901	136,666	$ 88,649
1902	81,771	87,970
1903	407,425	228,609
1901	77,028	78,025
1905	518,875	232,044
1906	227,155	126,163
1907 (9 months)	94,521	71,065
1908	249,907	195,650
1909	127,110	129,725
1910	217,170	181,751
Totals	2,139,968	$1,419,651

Average 66 cents per bushel.

So when we deduct from the money that we received for all our potato sales to the United States for ten years, the amount of money we paid them for potatoes, the credit balance to the people of Canada was actually $539,235. So when the Minister of Agriculture tells us that he can show a balance of $11,000,000, he will have to cut that down by about ten millions and a half. I will now quote from the 'Weekly Sun,' one of the strongest advocates of this reciprocity pact, on the 1st of March, 1911:

At local points potatoes are selling as follows: St. Thomas, 90c. per bag; Peterborough, 80c. per bag; Chatham, $1; Owen Sound, 70c., and Bellevlle, 75c to 80c.

The trade bulletin says:

An easier feeling is apparent in the Montreal market. A number of carloads of American potatoes arrived during the week, and these, with the liberal supplies of Green Mountains from the lower provinces, caused a break in the prices. Sales are being made at 90 cents to 92½ on track.

In New York, says the 'Weekly Sun,' of the above date, potatoes are $1.37 to $1.62 in bulk for 180 lbs.; Jersey, $1.25 to $1.65 per bag or barrel; State, $1,25 to $1.50 in bulk per 100 lbs., with inferior $1 to $1.10 per bag. Showing that in the city of New York potatoes were much cheaper than they were in Montreal. The Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day speaking of potatoes, says:

In potatoes the feeling is firm under a good demand and small offerings. For car lots sellers are now asking $1.10 to $1.15 per bag, and in a jobbing way sales were made at $1.25.

I quote these figures because I propose later to refer to prices of several commodities in certain portions of the United States. I may say that we sold them of barley, 1,123,225 bushels in ten years, for which we received $578,579, or 51 cents a bushel. Now with regard to the prices of animals in the United States, I will make one or two quotations. From the publications of the International Agricultural Institute, from which the Department of Agriculture obtain their statistics, I find on page 16, on the date February 20, 1911, prices of various farm products. I will give two months in each year. In 1909, on the 1st July, the following prices prevailed over the whole of the United States: Corn, 77 cents; wheat, $120·8; oats, barley, 67; rye, 81·7; buckwheat, 86·9; flaxseed, $1.53·1; potatoes, 91; hay, $10.56; cotton, 10·3; butter, 21·9; eggs, 18·5; chickens, 11·1.

On the 1st December, 1909, the prices were: Corn, 59·6; wheat, 99·8; oats, 40·5; barley, 52·2; rye, 73·9; buckwheat, 69·9; flaxseed, $1.52; potatoes, 54·9; hay, $10·62; cotton, 13·9; butter, 27·4; eggs, 28·4; chickens, 10·8.

In 1910 on the 1st of April the prices were: Corn, 65·5; wheat, $1.04; oats, 45·6; barley, 59·7; rye, 76·6; buckwheat, 73·4; flaxseed. $1.93; potatoes, 47·4; hay, $12.73; cotton, 14·1; butter, 25·8; eggs, 18·6; chickens, 11·9.

On the 1st of October, 1910, the prices were: Corn, 61·1; wheat, 93·7; oats, 36·3; barley, 56·1; rye, 72·8; buckwheat, 71·3; flaxseed, $2.34; potatoes, 67·8; hay, $11.82, cotton, 13·3; butter, 26·2; eggs, 22·4; chickens, 11·6.

I find in this same publication figures regarding live animals. For the ten years from 1900 to 1909 inclusive, the average value of horses in the United States was $71.99; milch cows, $30.12; other cattle, $18.09; sheep, $3.13; swine, $6.46.

I may remark that when I went west some weeks ago, I happened to meet a gentleman who lived within 22 miles of St. Paul, and who formerly lived in Windsor, Ontario, where I met him. His name is William Steacy, and he gave me some of the prevailing prices in his neighbourhood. He reported that good average farm horses could be bought for $125; steers, 3 and 4 years old, from $30 to $35; milk cows in the spring, $40; hogs, 7 and 8 cents per lb., dressed; winter butter 18 to 20 cents; grass butter, 16 cents; wheat, 98 cents; oats, 38 cents. These were the actual farm prices there on the first of March as I received them from the farmer himself. I have occupied so much of the time of the House that I will have to leave out a good deal of what I intended to say, but I want to recount a little trip that the member for East Peterborough (Mr. Sexsmith) and I made during the Easter recess to the State of New York with a view of ascertaining the actual conditions there at first hand. I will give an account of the conditions just as we found them in one or two places in Canada, and also in several places in the State of New York which we visited.

We went to Brockville the twelfth of April, the day the House adjourned, and went to the market there the next morning. We got farm prices from a number of farmers as follows: Potatoes per bag, $1.10; butter per pound, 25 cents; eggs, per dozen, 20 cents; veal, per pound, 5 to 6 cents; beef by the carcase, per cwt., $10.35; horses, from $150 to $250; beans per bushel, $1.85 to $2; milch cows, $50 upwards; oats, 40 cents; pease, 90 cents; barley, 62 cents; buckwheat, 60 cents; cheese, new, 11¾ cents; chickens, 18 cents per lb.; lamb, live weight, 10 cents per lb. Machinery quoted as follows: Cream separators, 300-lb., $60 ; malotte, 500-lb., $80 ; McCormick binder, without transport or carrier, $115; tongue truck extra, $15; walking plough, $11; wheelbarrow, $3; top buggy, $75 to $80; farm wagons, complete, 2½-in. tire, $78; gear only 2½ tire, $59; double harness, complete, $36. We went to Prescott from there and found on inquiry there was no truth in the report that cream and milk were being exported to the United States from this point; the same being true with regard to Brockville. Cream is sold at higher prices at Brockville and Prescott than in the United States towns of Ogdensburg and Morristown across the river. While it is true that there was considerable export across to the American centres last fall, it has entirely ceased at the present. Mr. Small, who runs a creamery in Prescott, is buying all the milk or butter fat offering at a price considerably higher than that offered by Mr. Jones of Ogdensburg, in New York state. Mr. Small is paying the farmers twenty-seven cents per pound for butter fat at Prescott, and at Cardinal, a point some eight miles out, twenty-six cents, from which place it is brought in by stage at one cent a pound. In Prescott prices for farm implements as far as we could gather were about the same as in Brockville, with the exception of walking ploughs, which were quoted one dollar higher. We found farm lands very difficult to price as they vary very much in this locality, in quality, but for fair to first-class farms the prices seem to run from $4,500 to $10,000 per hundred acres; a good deal depending on improvements and buildings and conveniences to town and distance back from the St. Lawrence, &c. We went over to Ogdensburg in the evening, and the next morning visited the store of Mr. H. G. Chandler, provision dealer, and were given the following prices by his obliging office man. He is selling from his establishment for the following prices: No. 1 creamery butter, 22 cents per lb.; old cheese, 13 to 14 cents; eggs, farmers' price, 15 cents; salt per bbl. 280 lb., $1.30; potatoes per bag, 68 cents; farmer's butter is selling in Ogdensburg at 18 cents. We visited the International Harvester's large distributing warehouse, where there is stored for distribution their goods for the large tract of country in this part of the United States. They also retail their goods from this establishment. We were given the following prices as sold to the farmers: Binders, 5 or 6 foot, with transport and sheaf carrier, $120; tongue truck extra, $20; 5-foot mower, $45; disc harrow, 12 discs, 16 inches diameter, $25; 12 discs, 18 inches diameter, $28; 8-foot rake, 26 teeth, $22; farm wagon, complete three-inch tire, $75. The above prices were for cash payment October 1st. If the time is extended five dollars per year is added for binders and other goods in proportion, as well as six per cent interest on all notes. The above are the prices at which the agents are also to sell to the farmers. Mr. J. F. Devine, merchant, Ogdensburg, had a card in the window offering maple syrup at $1 per gallon, and eggs at 18 cents per dozen. The usual difficulty was encountered in getting actual value of farms. Mr. Thomas Sinnett was reported to have a first-class farm for sale with good houses and barn and stabling for forty head, farm first-class in every respect and within five miles of the city of Ogdensburg. This farm is composed of one hundred acres for which he is asking $6,000. Ogdensburg has a population of considerably over 20,000 people, and is the largest and most important shipping point on the United States side of the St. Lawrence, and Ontario farms situated about the same distance from an important city and with the same improvements and like quality would be worth at least $1,000 more. Mr. Sinnett has not been able as yet to sell his farm. Out from Ogdensburg on the railway running to Decalb Junction is a small village called Heuvelton, and a farm of one hundred and three acres belonging to the Smither's estate has been sold just lately by public auction. It is only about seven miles from Ogdensburg. The farm is reported without stone or rock, the buildings being nothing extra. This farm was sold for $3,385. Farms generally are quoted from $3,500 to $6,000. A few were quoted at higher prices, where the farmers are not anxious to sell At Rensellar Falls we visited the creamery there, and interviewed farmers who were delivering their milk. Mr. Powell, a farmer, stated that he got from 80 to 90 cents per hundred for his milk for the month of March. Mr. Madill, another farmer, stated that he received for his milk for March 86 cents. Still another farmer, quoted milk for March at 86 cents, but did not think April milk would bring over 60 cents per hundred on account of the low price of butter sold by the creamery. Mr. Todd, another farmer figured out that with butter selling at 21 cents the farmer could not possibly get more than 60 cents per hundred weight for his milk. The milk being sold on the percentage of butter fat, one farmer might get a little more than the other, according to the quality of his milk. With regard to horses the prices seemed to vary very much, and between the average horse and the really fine animal, the discrepancy was greater than in Canada. Mr. Madill, a farmer of Rensellar Falls, stated he had paid for the farm team he was driving $62 each, they were a light team for farming. Speaking generally horses ran from $75 to $175, and some large and fine animals higher. Cows ran from $45 to $50 and some higher There seemed to be no beef or hogs or mutton for sale by the farmers here. The following cash prices were quoted for machinery, &c.: Binders, $110; mowers, $45 to $50; walking plough, $13; tongue truck for binders, extra $15 to $20. Mr. Orr, harness dealer at Rensellar Falls, quoted farmers' double harness, complete (cash), $49. At Decalb Junction Mr. George Taylor expected to net 65 cents per hundred for his April milk. Mr. Brille says the factory he sells to will net for the farmers for April about 60 cents for their milk. Mr. McGruar merchant at Decalb Junction says the farmers are getting about 18c. for butter. He states that milk was worth $1 per hundred to ship to New York but would not bring more at the creamery than about 60c. He pays five cents per quart for milk for his family. Mr. Thayer a butcher at Decalb Junction is offering for good beef dressed 7½ cents per pound, and for pork dressed 8 to 9 cents. From here we went on to Oswego and drove out from there to a creamery managed by Mr. L. Isbell a very clever and able young man. His creamery was up to date in every respect, making not only first-class butter but also casein, and has nearly all the machinery installed to turn out granulated sugar from whey. Casein is supposed to be worth from 3 to 3½ cents per pound. He expects to extract about 3½ pound of refined sugar from one hundred pounds of whey. The sugar will be in crystals and sent to a refinery to be finished. This factory is supplying the finest trade in New York and getting 22 cents per pound at present for butter. They charge at this factory 4½ cents per pound for manufacturing butter. Mr. Sexsmith states that he does not know of any place in Ontario where more than 3½ cents a pound is charged. We found the prices of horses here about the same as those of other points visited. Cows quoted from $45 upward. Mr. Charles Stoddard, farmer from Oswego, quoted beef on foot at 4c. per pound. Mr. Sylvester Dyke, another farmer of Mexico, New York, reported having sold milk some years as low as 45c. per hundred, on the average for the season. Last year at the bottling plant it got as high as $1.30 per hundred weight to send to New York city. The farmers are buying their machinery a little less here than in Canada except walking ploughs which were about the same. Horses here were bringing on the average from $125 to $175 and extra animals higher. There does not seem to be any meat offered by the farmers. The whole business is transferred to the packing houses which were supplying the trade everywhere we went. Binders retail here at $125; mowers $45; walking plough $13. Cows worth from $50 to $60 at present. An extra nice farm team would be worth $400. Hay per ton $10. Barley 60c. to 65c. per bushel. Mr. Dyke ' quoted above ' also quoted evaporated apples per bushel 20c. and winter apples on the tree at $1.25 per barrel.

From Oswego we went to Watertown and there met Mr. Farmer, a merchant, who came to this place from Havelock, Ontario, eight years ago and has built up a successful business. Mr. Farmer's place of business is at 700 Mill street. He very kindly drove us all over the city. Watertown is a thriving place of over 20,000 population having large paper mills and other large industries. Mr. Farmer states there are a large number of Canadians in Watertown and they are arriving all the time. The present mayor and also an ex-mayor being Canadians. Mr. Sexsmith met several cousins there who gave us a lot of information about the place, also stating that there were a very large number of other Canadians located there. We were very much interested in seeing the place at 126 Court Street where the bogus ballot boxes were manufactured. Mr. Farmer quoted us the following prices: Eggs, 18c. out of the store, buying them at 15c.;farmer's butter, 18c. to 20c; compound lard, 9c; pure lard, 10c; potatoes, per bag 45c.; Quaker oats, 1 pound package, 10c.; good flour, per barrel, $4.70; oleomargarine, retailed at 18c. Mr. Farmer states he is selling 18 pounds of oleomargarine to one pound of butter and has a large sale for oleomargarine. He states it is driving butter out of the market fast. Mr. C. H. Capworth of Syracuse, a produce dealer, handling a number of retail stores in the northern part of New York state, is selling one hundred tubs of oleomargarine per week. This time last year he was selling fifty tubs of butter per week, and is now only selling twelve tubs of butter over the same territory. He finds the people fast transferring their allegiance from butter to oleomargarine, and also finds that a number prefer it, now they are used to it, to ordinary butter at the same prices. Prices in the stores in Watertown for general merchandise seem to be about the same as in any town of a similar size in Ontario. For such articles as boots and shoes, clothing, general merchandise, &c. Morristown, a small town on the south side of the St. Lawrence river, opposite the city of Brockville, Ontario, we found conditions about the same as in other places visited. We went over the new creamery which is not yet running, but will soon be completed. When in working order this will be one of the very finest. Mr. Bett, the manager, is buying milk at 90c. per hundred. There is no milk or cream taken from Canada as the price is too high in Canada. They will make casein here as well as other products. Mr. Delong, farmer, here sold his milk for March at 89c.

I wish to quote here from a special correspondent to the ' Post-Standard ' newspaper, of Syracuse:

Gouverneur, N.Y., April 16.—The Gouverneur Dairy Board met at the St. Lawrence Inn last night for the first time this season. There were seventeen members and sixteen factories represented. Thirteen of them with cheese and two with butter. Only 638 boxes of cheese and 100 tubs of butter were offered. Both butter and cheese have taken a big tumble in prices since last year. Butter has declined 11 cents, and cheese two cents per pound. It was decided not to elect officers for the year until the first Saturday in May. The meeting developed several exciting features which proved that the salesmen of the board would be able to maintain their old stand of naming prices. The buyers evidently decided to curtail this advantage and stood firmly for a price of ten cents for cheese but the salesmen refused the offer. The price committee is composed of W. A. Freeman, John H. Barry, Wm. P. Clark, secretary of the Dairy Board, H. G. Chandler of Ogdensburg, and A. B. Vercler of Carthage. After the meeting of the price committee a wire was received from a firm in Montreal offering ten and one quarter cents for chesee. All the factories with the possible exception of two or three which had disposed of cheese earlier in the evening accepted this offer. Usually the first offerings are the lowest of the year and as the season advances and the cows are turned out to grass higher prices are expected. Last year at the first meeting 756 boxes of cheese were offered at the ruling price of 12½ cents, and butter sold at 31c. Last night's prices were: butter, 20c.; cheese, 10¼c.

After coming back to Canada we learned that in a sale of coloured cheese at Lansdowne, in Leeds county, Ontario, on April 14, the prices realized were 11½ cents against 10¼ cents at Gouverneur, New York. At the Mitchellville factory in the same county, on April 13, white cheese sold at eleven and one-sixteenth cents, nearly a full cent higher than it was worth in the United States.

I want to give one other little quotation with regard to hogs. These figures are a comparison made by the Ingersoll Packing Company between the average price of hogs at Ingersoll, Ontario, and the average price on the Chicago market for the years stated:

Year.	Price at Chicago.	Price at Ingersoll.
1901	$5 71	$6 70
1902	6 76½	6 68
1903	5 88	6 07
1904	5 04	5 32
1905	5 18	6 41
1906	6 23	7 17
1067	6 09½	6 85
1908	5 36⅓	6 87
1909	7 53½	8 04
1910	8 59¾	9 11

The Ingersoll prices averaged 58 cents per hundred weight higher than the Chicago market prices.

Under this agreement the favoured nations will come into competition with the Canadian farmers in the Canadian market. These nations are Argentine, Austria-Hungary, Colombia, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Venezuela, and Bolivia. I wish to repeat to the House some figures given by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), with regard to our importations from these countries for six years, and it must be remembered that they came in under a pretty stiff duty. You can easily imagine what these imports will be when the door is opened and the goods can enter Canada free of duty. There are about 307,000,000 people residing in these favoured countries, and in some of them the population is largely agricultural, producing vast quantities more agricultural products than they need. Let me refer for a moment to one of them, Argentine. This is a comparatively new country in South America, situated about the same distance south of the equator that California is north with climatic conditions just about the same as California. They have vast pampas or plains about the same as our prairie lands of the west, they have no clearing of land to encounter. Argentine is one of the greatest stock producing countries on the face of the globe and a very great grain producing country. The climatic conditions are such that cattle can run for the whole year; people can live in houses of comparatively cheap construction and they do not have to encounter the problem of clothing which the people of this country must face. A gentleman now residing in my riding who lived for five years in Argentine has given me much valuable information in regard to that country. When he first went there he says there was no such thing as shipping meat out of Argentine, and he has seen hundreds of thousands of carcases of the finest beef thrown into the ocean, yet the cattle raisers were making a good profit out of the hides and tallow. But they have developed that country wonderfully and now have the finest cold storage, and being able to produce cattle and grain under such favourable conditions, I think it is not too much to say that they will be the very keenest competitors for the Canadian market. They are able to produce these cattle and ship them at one-half the cost the Canadian farmer can. The same thing is largely true with regard to grain. I ask in all seriousness whether this government consider it a fair deal which permits a country like that to pour their produce into Canada while they bar the door against the Canadian producer.

What is true with regard to the Argentine is also true with regard to all the other countries I have named as well as to all parts of the British Empire, outside of the British Isles themselves. What strikes me as peculiar is that this gives us no additional advantage within the British Empire, the only thing we get is a temporary advantage in the United States and I think we have shown fairly effectually that that advantage will be very meagre indeed, that the supposed advantage will prove a very great disadvantage, and instead of helping out our agriculturists will help to swamp the markets of Canada with the cheaper productions of the United States. For it must be admitted that over a large part of the United States their climatic conditions are similar to those of the country I have referred to; their stock can run at large the year round and they can raise large crops of corn and can feed under conditions more favourable than Canada enjoys. Is it too much to expect, then, that they will be able to produce more cheaply than the farmers of Canada can possibly produce? Is it fair to open the door and allow them to flood this country with their cheaper products? It must be remembered that, taking these countries as a whole, it is summer the year round, for it is always summer in one or other of them. The result will be that just at the time when the farmer of Canada might reasonably expect to get good returns for his labour, say after he has fed his stock all winter, the country in which it is summer and in which for that reason production is cheap, will be able to send its products into our market, and so our farmer will be up against it. If we protect the farmers reasonably, as we do other classes of the community, then, a short crop usually has its compensations. If the weather is bad or the conditions unfavourable and the crop therefore short, the prices usually go up. But that will be impossible if world prices are to prevail in Canada, and they will prevail if this arrangement goes into effect, there is not a shadow of doubt about that. Some of the ministers seem inclined to treat this matter lightly, to treat it as if it were a matter of absolutely no importance. We find that even the Prime Minister pooh-poohs the idea of goods coming into this country and attempts to justify this proposed arrangement. To my mind, there is no justification for it from the farmers' standpoint. If the intention is deliberately to force down the market to the agricultural producer, that is another matter, and perhaps the step taken is a wise one from that standpoint; but to pretend that this is going to be of some advantage to the farmer is really, I think, practising deception upon our great agricultural classes, and, such being the case, I cannot give my support to the proposition. If I felt there was any advantage in this arrangement to the farmers of Canada, I would support it, for I have had dealings with the farmers all my life, I was raised on a farm, grew to manhood on a farm and am perfectly familiar with all farming conditions. I know the hardship the farmer has to endure, and I have the keenest sympathy with the great agricultural classes of this country more than I have with any other class of the community. If I were considering some other class perhaps I might say that it would be an advantage to them. But not to any class will it be the great advantage that some claim, for the conditions as to prices and markets that prevail in the United States generally will certainly, under this arrangement, prevail in Canada. And I think we have pretty effectually shown that, at present, and on the average the farmer of the United States is not getting as good a price as is the farmer of Canada. There is a greater discrepancy there between what the producer receives and what the ultimate consumer pays than there is in this country. This is accounted for by the great amount of speculation in the wheat pit and by the great meat trust and other great interests and combinations that are able to control the situation. The meat trust of the United States has driven the ordinary butcher out of the market and is carrying on that whole business and extracting larger sums from the pockets of the producers or of the consumers, or of both, than is the case in this country. And I cannot but express my conviction that there is too great a discrepancy even in Canada between the price paid to the original producer and the price paid by the ultimate consumer. The prices paid to the farmers in this country to-day are not commensurate with the prices that the average consumer has to pay. If the government desires to benefit the farmers, then, instead of making this arrangement, they ought to direct their efforts to the great problems of transportation and exchange with a view to lessening the expense of transferring the goods from the producer to the consumer. They are certainly not going to do it by putting the people of Canada under the great combines of our neighbours to the south. To my mind it is almost a suicidal proposition, even if we leave out of consideration altogether the ultimate effect of placing ourselves at the mercy of these ninety millions of people. I have read statements, and so have other hon. members, proving what, I think, is common knowledge, the aims and objects of our neighbours to the south in this matter. I think it cannot be gainsaid that they intend that this should be a step towards the ultimate absorption of this Dominion.

Hon. members opposite have taken the ground that if we do not like this arrangement, if in a year or two years, if we find it working to our disadvantage, we can revoke and annul it. But this may not be so easy a matter. What would be the position of the government of this Dominion if the Americans were to say, in the event of such a step being proposed: This agreement was entered into in good faith and was accepted after clear-cut statements made in the Congress of the United States that it was the intention of the promoters from the American standpoint that it should lead toward annexation? When Champ Clark made his famous statement in the House, two of the representatives there were heard to say one to another: If the Canadian parliament endorses this agreement after the words of Champ Clark, the prospective speaker, they endorse it with all that it entails as he has put it from the United States standpoint. I think if we do endorse it, we will be endorsing the whole thing—there is no doubt in my mind about that. And the United States might turn round and say: You should not annul this agreement; it was entered into in good faith and is going to be carried out; and you knew it all the time; and, in contravention of the Rush-Bagot treaty, we have ten vessels on the Great Lakes that can destroy your shipping in a few days. We can easily put enough men on your border to compel you to carry out the promise that you entered into. I do not say that such a course will be followed, but I do say that we are putting ourselves into a position to invite such a course if we endorse this pact. It is at least an unsafe step to take, and I think I have shown conclusively that it will be to our great disadvantage commercially. Why, therefore, should we enter into this arrangement? Why should we endanger the autonomy of this great country? Why should we jeopardize our dearest national interests simply because certain demands are made upon us to take this step by radicals and people of that class, who are enamoured of free trade as they have it in England? I think they will find, if we are led to take this step, that we have made a grievous mistake, and a mistake that we might not be able to remedy. We must not listen to propositions that would drive us to national suicide. I do not believe, as is advocated by some people, that Canada should become a purely agricultural country, raising food for the millions of Europe. I believe that when we have been so well endowed by a wise Providence with the finest minerals, gold, silver, iron, lead, nickel, copper, coal, oil, and a hundred others, with splendid water-powers—surely Providence, in bestowing upon us all these natural riches, intended that we should develop them ourselves. Are we going to put ourselves into the position of being hewers of wood and drawers of water to the commercial Egyptians to the south of us? Are we going to convert ourselves into Israelites to please them? I think not. I think that the good sense of the people of Canada will revolt at this proposition, and on the first opportunity they get to pronounce themselves, they will reject the proposition of the government and stamp it with their strong disapproval.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE (Quebec county). (Translation). Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright) who has just taken his seat on account of his good intentions. He has endeavoured for several hours to show that the Canadian farmer was in a bad plight, and the Canadian fatherland as well. He is intent on saving from utter destruction the Canadian farmer and the country he lives in. Those are excellent intentions, and surely the pains to which the hon. member has gone to bring about such a result is worthy of our encomiums, and the House, as well as the country, should show their appreciation of what he has done. However, I am not satisfied that the farming community or the country are actually in danger. A group of population so important, so industrious, so energetic cannot be done away with in so short fashion, in a country of such development, of such fertility, of such natural wealth as Canada. A modicum of common sense will enable us to understand that the dangers with which the farmer is threatened under the circumstances is rather of an imaginary type and concocted for political purposes. Hon. gentlemen, on the other side believe that the farmer is in a bad plight, and they say so, but it is with an eye to political exigencies.

As for the country, it has been in existence for a few centuries back, and threatened with evils of a much more serious character than this supposed danger. It has gone through crises of a most trying nature, and instead of being by these cramped in its growth, it has come out of them stronger than ever, with an expanded territory and an increase of industrial and commercial enterprise. Even in the field of politics it has made great strides, since to-day we are a nation, on account of these very dangers which have put the people under the necessity of trying their strength, of developing an aggressive spirit, and enabled them to secure victories both on the fields of battle and against competitors in business warfare. So that in that respect I believe the country has nothing to fear.

Mr. Chairman, I represent here an agricultural constituency, and in advocating to-day this truly national policy which the government have submitted for the approval of the House, I am only fulfilling my bounden duty. In the first days of January last, there was held at Quebec a great seed exhibition under the patronage of the hon. ministers of Agriculture for the Dominion and provincial governments. It was a fine display of the wealth of our country's possibilities; it was the occasion of an impressive concourse of farmers and others from every part of the province, mostly laymen, with a strong admixture of clergymen and monks addicted to agriculture, all congregated to discuss and find out the most effective means towards ensuring increased returns from the tillage of the soil.

I remember that at one of the last meetings which I had the honour to preside over, there was a resolution voted requesting the government to obtain, if possible, the free entry of our Canadian farm products on the United States markets. As negotiations were in course at the time between the representatives of the United States and the Canadian governments, I, of course, expressed the hope that such a result would be obtained, adding, however, that in the past we had not always been very fortunate in our dealing with the neighbouring country. Luckily, a few days afterwards the representatives of both governments came to terms in regard to reciprocity proposals. That was on January 21, and on the 26th of that same month the scope of the arrangement was made known to us by the hon. Minister of Finance, who informed the House and the country of the government's stand on the question of reciprocity and the interchange of natural products between Canada and the United States, while at the same moment the president of the United States was announcing the conclusion of that trade arrangement by means of a message to Congress.

There is one very striking feature of these proposals to which I shall draw the attention of my hon. colleagues. Both governments in acting as they have done were moved by their anxiety to help the farmers in both countries. Such is the motive which induced both governments to make arrangements and adopt a common policy towards promoting the common interests of the farming community on either side of the line. That is a striking fact which goes to show how anxious our government are to help the farming class of Canada. We are now called upon to confirm that customs arrangement. Following on international negotiations and the action of diplomacy, it is up to us to put through the parliamentary enactment which will give effect to this agreement.

When the result of these negotiations was announced, constituents of mine asked me: Will we soon have the benefit of that trade arrangement in the sale of our products? To this query I had only one answer to make: Members of parliament have now your case in hand, it is up to them to decide whether or not you will enjoy the benefits promised. I could not but add that in the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite all possible means were being resorted to in the hope of delaying the ratification of this trade arrangement, that even representatives of border counties went to the length of voting in favour of motions destined to interfere with the successful termination of the negotiations which people hoped for so earnestly; that these hon. gentlemen opposite had no end of questions to ask, as if a representative of the people were not supposed to be posted on public questions concerning his country; that, in a word, our friends on the other side were endeavouring by every means in their power to delay the work of parliament so as to postpone indefinitely the ratification of the reciprocity convention. Things have even gone so far that a proposal has been made to us which might be termed shameful, since it amounted for us in stopping short before reaching a vote and marking time until the Congress or Senate of the United States had made known their decision. I say that was a proposal of an obnoxious character. Representatives worthy of the name and of the position they hold should be enlightened enough, energetic enough, and sufficiently well posted as to the merits of the question to be in a position to settle the question without waiting to learn what our neighbours are doing. I say, therefore, that the government have acted wisely in pushing the matter to a conclusion and calling on the House to express at once its opinion in the matter.

To my mind, there is good reason for us to press the matter through. I am aware that the United States government, after the House of Representatives carried the Bill through, did not succeed in getting it through the Senate, and that in the meantime Congress came to its natural ending under the constitution. But the President of the United States at once summoned another Congress in order to resume the consideration of the proposal.

There are in the United States, as in Canada, persons, representatives of the people, senators, who are not favourable to this reciprocity arrangement. Objections were made over there in the same way as in this country. Objections have cropped up in this Congress in the same way that objections had cropped up in the late Congress. Nevertheless, if I am well informed, the proposals were accepted by the House of Representatives of the United States this very day, the majority in favour of its ratification figuring 175.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the same thing would happen here and the proportion on either side would stand the same were the House called upon to vote right away. If we have to listen to such long speeches by hon. gentlemen opposite condemning this measure, it is not on account of any desire on the part of these gentlemen to convince the House, or any hope on their part to secure a majority, but rather because it enables them to work on the prejudices of the people and to turn public opinion against that policy. As to what is going on here, the sole object is to weary the House in view of certain events about to take place. Obstruction is resorted to for the purpose of having the settlement of this important question deferred until another session. It is child's play. On the other hand, that is a game at which more than one can play, and we may be sure that the opposition will waste at it whatever vigour may be left them, for the government have made up their minds to carry the day. In fact, there is no reason to believe that all these negotiations about a matter which may be termed novel are being carried on for the satisfaction of a mere whim of the government. There is no sense in assuming that the Canadian government would take their lives in their hands for the sake of legislation which would not be to the liking of the Canadian people. That would not be sound policy. The question is of vital interest to the nation; it is bound to have a far-reaching effect on the material progress of our country. Under such conditions, the government which puts its very existence at stake to carry the measure through, is worthy of consideration on the part of the public. It is apparent that, barring a few manufacturing and trade centres, the bulk of the population, the country people, are heart and soul with the government on this question. It is apparent throughout the country that the interests of the farming community are at stake. It is realized that there is a great deal implied in the final ratification of this arrangement. Should the government be defeated in this connection, it is a foregone conclusion that agriculture will be the worst for it. Should victory smile on the Conservative party, or on whatever is left of that party, that would mean a recurrence of the protective system of that famous so-called National Policy which makes for high protective duties. On the other hand, these reciprocity proposals if carried out would tend to promote and foster agriculture in Canada, through the greater facilities afforded to trade intercourse between the two countries.

What was Canada's economic condition when the Conservative party fell from power? What was its condition in the years preceding 1896? As a matter of fact, was out of business in a complete state of stagnation? Were not industry and agriculture at a standstill? Our farmers were looking around for a market in which to sell their products. An attempt had been made to instil life into trade and industries as well as in agriculture, which all were on the decline. A new state of things has arisen in the meantime and the agricultural, industrial and business conditions of the country have undergone deep changes.

And why, Mr. Chairman? Because the government have managed to find out for us new markets. They have put in practice the principles which should guide a liberal government. Shortly after coming into power they sent delegates to the United States government requesting that Canadian products be granted free entrance to the American markets. That proposal was not accepted, but our government was not discouraged on that account, and introduced a policy of preference in favour of Great Britain, with a view to developing our trade in that direction. That was an anti-protection policy. That preferential duty, which amounted at first to 15 per cent, and subsequently was raised to 25 per cent, and later still to 33⅓ per cent, resulted in opening a new market for us in Great Britain, but that was not without heavy sacrifices on our part. I may point out what occurred in this connection. The stand taken by the government of the United States, when we sent representatives to open negotiations towards the concluding of a treaty with them, was not without influence on the political and fiscal measures which followed. By perusing the reports of the two colonial conferences of 1902 and 1907, one may ascertain what efforts the Canadian government made towards obtaining wider and more profitable markets on the British market. These efforts have had a most important result. Thus, in 1902, it may be seen that resolutions were submitted tending to the development of reciprocal trade relations between the United Kingdom and the colonies. But that preference which we granted did not give the results which we expected from it. I may say that it caused serious disappointment in Canada. The principle embodied in those resolutions was asserted anew at the 1907 conference, and is summed up in the following paragraph:

'That the prime ministers of the colonies respectfully urge on His Majesty's government the expediency of granting in the United Kingdom preferential treatment to the products and manufactures of the colonies, either by exemption from or reduction of duties now or hereafter imposed.' In other words, Great Britain was requested, in exchange for the preference which we granted them, to grant us either a reduction of the duties in existence or a preference on their market.

Well, there was an interchange of views, and here are the very words which Sir Wilfrid Laurier used at the colonial conference of 1907, as recorded on page 410, volume 1 of the proceedings:

As to dutiable goods.. .. ..

We give you a preference of 33⅓ per cent, which is certainly a valuable contribution on our part to British trade. Not only have we done it by preference, by legislation, but we have forced our trade against the laws of nature and geography. If we were to follow the laws of nature and geography between Canada and the United States, the whole trade would flow from north to south. We have done everything possible by building canals and subsidizing railways to bring the trade from west to east into British channels. All this we have done, recognizing the principle of the great advantage of forcing trade within the British Empire.

We admit that principle. We are bound to say that if this preference which we have given has not brought perhaps to the English trade as much as the English merchant and manufacturer would have desire, we have told at the same time to the English people that it was possible to have more; that is, the mutual preference which we had in view when we adopted the resolution of 1902.

As it can be seen, the policy of the Canadian government towards the English government was very simple, very comprehensible. We were forcing nature and geography for the purpose of getting a market in England and in all English colonies. But on what condition? On the condition that this preference that we are giving to England would be recognized and accepted, and at the same time followed with a preference from England towards Canada.

This is the basis of our policy towards the English government. As the right hon. premier truly said, it was not a question of sentiment, it was a question of business.

But England, putting aside sentiment and considering the question only as a matter of business, refused to the colonies what they were asking in 1902 and 1907, and has still continue to ask.

Well, taking a business view of the matter, the Canadian government said: If we cannot, notwithstanding this violence we are making to geography and nature, change the natural course of the trade; if, notwithstanding this preference of 33⅓ per cent in favour of England, half of our natural products are going to the United States even while there is barrier almost unsuperable; we will not fight any longer nature and geography, and when the President of the United States made offers to Canada—for we must take notice that this time we did not go to them—our government was glad to respond to the appeal and to go on with the negotiations which are about to close between the two countries.

Statistics show that invincibly trade of the United States comes to Canada, just as the trade of Canada goes to the states, and no barrier can stop that exchange.

When we tried to compete on that market, we have to pay custom duties so high that this competition becomes impossible. Nevertheless exchanges between the two countries continue to be very considerable, so much that they reach hundreds of millions every year.

The gentleman believed—and in this he was right—that such a state of things should cease. Therefore he accepted the offers made by the government of Washington, and his acceptation brought to him the sympathies of the whole Canadian people, not only as a matter of politicians, but also from the businessmen. This arrangement is of such a nature that it will be equally advantageous to the population of the United States and of Canada. This is how the question stands before us and this is the way in which we should consider it.

The proposal which is before us appeals to the good sense of every impartial citizen. To be convinced of that we need only read the first paragraph of the resolution submitted to this House on the 26th January last by the hon. Minister of Finance. In the first resolution we see that the products cultivated or manufactured in the United States, specified in schedule 'A,' will be admitted in Canada free, when imported from the United States, and that the products cultivated or manufactured in the United States mentioned in schedule 'B' and 'D' will be admitted in Canada on payment of the duties specified in the said schedules, when imported from the United States; that the advantageous resulting from this modification to our custom laws will apply to every other foreign country which may be entitled to it through any treaty or convention with England. Upon this question, our friends opposite have spoken much about the meaning of this clause applying to the foreign countries called the most-favoured nations in the treaties entered into with England. Two very different opinions have been expressed upon that subject. There are those who believe that we are obliged to grant to all the favoured nations the same advantages which we give to the United States, but there is also some very intelligent people, in the United States and in Canada, and even in all civilized countries, who say that if we have made concessions in return of the favours that we have bought, as it is in this case to-day for the United States, we are not bound to grant this most favoured treatment.

Mr. PAQUET. Will the hon. member allow me to ask him if he could give us the opinion of the hon. premier and the hon. Minister of Finance on the meaning of this clause of the most favoured nation? He said that intelligent people were of opinion that such a clause was not binding us——

Mr. TURCOTTE. I will not give the opinion of the hon. Prime Minister or of the hon. Minister of Finance. These gentlemen have their opinions, which are very respectable, certainly, as are also the opinions of my hon. friends on the other side of the House. I say that the best diplomats and business men differ greatly on this question; that the two opinions of which I have spoken are worthy of the highest respect. We must remark that in this case the most favoured nations clause come only in treaties with England, passed after negotiations in which these countries had received compensation. But since that time Canada has conquered his commercial independence and is now negotiating herself her commercial treaties, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) said in his motion at the beginning of this session. Having obtained this independence we make ourselves our own commercial conventions in the way we think best. If, by making concessions we buy certain advantages in our commercial relations with a country, we should not be obliged to grant the same advantages to all nations coming under this most favoured nation clause, because we have not been party to the contract. It is not necessary to know if this question is governed by international law; I say it is only the common sense law. I may be mistaken, but I say it is the current opinion to-day, principally in the United States. Nevertheless, I sincerely believe that the opinion which I have stated will finally prevail. But, before continuing the quotation, I will say that what is called the most favoured nation clause in the treaties passed with England, could not benefit of the mutual advantages that we are now considering in the trade between Canada and the United States and it is added:

That the advantages granted therein to the United States will be extended to the United Kingdom and to the different colonies and British possessions in their trade with Canada.

That is reasonable. We give to the United Kingdom and to the British colonies the same advantages which we propose to grant to the United States. And the resolution continues:

Provided that nothing contained therein will have the effect of increasing any tariff duty now stipulated on the British preferential tariff.

This is a protection for the preferential tariff, and upon this question something very extraordinary happened. Our friends opposite have asked if the government intend to increase the British preference up to fifty per cent. The government answered no; but there is something underneath. Just as much as the Canadian government is anxious to protect the interest of the Canadian consumer and manufacturer, just as much the English manufacturer,—I will not say the English government, have interest, either directly, or through their agents in Canada, to secure a higher preference and would like to have it at fifty per cent, which would give to their product advantages detrimetnal to the Canadian manufacturers just as much as our agricultural classes, answered no; we are giving you to-day a preference of 33 1-3 per cent, we will not go further; you have given us nothing in return, we will leave things as they are. This is how the question stands. But all these things are bound together, and we are called to-day to support principals which are truly liberal, principals which will be of a very great benefit to the people of Canada. We are sent here to secure the triumph of the liberal ideas prevailing in this country, and in doing so, we are truthfully following the wish of the people. It is with the object of apply these liberal principles in the government of the country, that we have approved of this treaty, for it contains the principles which this government has always professed. When commercial treaties have been negotiated with other countries, these were the guiding principles. I hold in my hands some documents proving that it has been so in the commercial negotiations with other countries such as France, Germany, Italy and Holland. To all these nations the government has granted certain advantages in return for those granted to us by these countries. This is truly Liberal principles, 'Laissez farne, laissez passer,' that is to say, 'let go free.' This is the principle which we desire to govern our commercial intercourse with the United States.

Why, then some one may say, have you not included manufactured products in this agreement as you did for the natural products? The answer is very simple. It is because we need a revenue. It is not for protection purposes, but simply to have a revenue necessary for the administration of the country. Our traiff is a revenue tariff, nothing else. If this tariff has the effect of giving certain advantages to our manufacturers all the better. But the principal object of the government in maintaining these duties is to get revenue sufficient for the administration of public business. Besides customs duties we all have also excise duties; these are our two principal sources of revenue. These are only means we have to collect the money necessary for civil government. Our sole object is thus the revenue, and not protection.

As a conclusion of all what I have said I will add that by this tariff agreement we aim to come back to the state of things which was prevailing under the old reciprocity treaty from 1854 to 1866. We still need to-day a market for our products, and this is why we are supporting this treaty convention.

It has been said that the reason why we benefited so much of 1854, was that the U.S. were then engaged into a war, which was paralyzing their activities in a great very great measure. It has been contended that Canada was thus able to make profits much more greater than he would have made if it had not been of the war. But there is a fact which the people cannot forget, and that is that the twelve years of reciprocity have given a great abundance to the farmers and progress to the whole Canada. The result is evident for every one and this result has been brought not by the war, but by the natural free exchange between the two countries.

I hold in my hand a book written by Frederick A. Haynes, doctor in philosophy and a member of the American Economic Association. He is studying the whole treaty of 1854 and its consequences. His conclusions are remarkable. I draw specially the attention upon this point, because the state of things which existed at that time seem to come back to-day.

Speaking of the causes which brought the abrogation of the treaty he says that they were more political than economic and commercial : 'The cause was political rather than economical or commercial. There is very little doubt, as has been said already, that the attitude of the English towards the North during the civil war, was the direct cause of the abrogation of the treaty '.

As we can see, England having favoured one of the belligerent nations against the other, this had created a bad feeling in her relations with the United States and as, at the same time, England was sovereign in the making of her commercial treaties, we had not the liberty we enjoy to-day of negotiating our treaties ourselves and the treaty was abrogated. Further on he says:

The unfortunate fate of the reciprocity treaty has given it a false position in the economic history of the country.

And he ends in saying, that the liberal idea which brought the adoption of free trade in England, the abolution of the corn laws, and also the German zollverein had been accepted by all other nations in Europe, but was abruptly stopped in the United States by the civil war and a few years later, by the Franco-German war. The consequence was as he says, of these two last events was the downfall of the liberal movement in Europe and America.

With the downfall of the liberal movement disappeared the best hopes of better trade relations between the United States and the British provinces.

Mr. Chairman, I will end here. Liberal ideas diminish in that time, and that is the reason why the reciprocity treaty with the United States was abrogated. To-day there seems to be a reappearance of the liberal ideas in the United States and in Canada on account of the change of governments which has taken place. To-day the party in power is governed by the liberal traditions which are at the bottom of the democratic sentiment. This sentiment is not limited to one country only. But it is universal of this nature. It is the sentiment which has inspired the people before the elections and which is bringing the results that we see to-day. This sentiment is so much developed that it carries in this movement a great part of the republican forces of our neighbouring country. A considerable reaction has taken place in the United States. At the end, the abuse of a thing brings very bad results. Extreme protection brought the formation of gigantic trusts, which pressured the consumers, who are now in open revolt against that regime. Nothing extraordinary, then if the reaction is so terrible in the United States and if it is not so marked here in Canada, it is due to the English temperament which dominates in this country. The evolution here has not been so fast, but it tends almost as surely towards the liberal ideas, I say that it is a magnificent result that diplomacy gained. Canada has acted as an independent nation, as it is said in the correspondence of the 21st January last between the representatives of both countries, after the President of the United States had told the English ambassador at Washington that he desired to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with Canada, this ambassador immediately communicated the proposition to the Canadian government, sole arbiter of its commercial destinies and business relations between Canada and United States. This is the great progress that has been accomplished, and I have no doubt that this custom agreement will be ratified by an immense majority, composed not only of liberal members, but also of a good many Conservative members, because it is in the true interest of the Canadian people. This convention will be accepted by this House and sanctioned by the representative of His Majesty in Canada. Notwithstanding the veto which still exists in theory and which permits England to disallow colonial laws upon finances, not a government, not a sovereign, would undo what our government has done here. This convention which is all to the advantage of the great agricultural class and to the consumers of Canada will be acclaimed through all Canada.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM (East Huron). Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to make a speech until a short time ago on this matter, but I find that I must make a few remarks to put myself right with regard to certain things which have been said in the newspapers published in my neighbourhood. I find that they say that I have declared myself in favour of reciprocity because, when I spoke on the address here, I made certain statements with regard to the prospects that were in view at that time. Our representatives had not then gone to Washington at all. I had said that if they went there it was absolutely necessary that they insist as a preliminary to negotiations that we should have an equalization of rates between the two countries. I said that they should insist upon that as a preliminary to the negotiations. I said that if they would insist upon that I thought both political parties in Canada would agree to any fair and reasonable agreement that might be made between the two countries. They have gone so far in the local legislature as to declare that because I said that I was in favour of reciprocity. Under these circumstances I feel that I must say a few words. I would like to know if these gentlemen have secured equalized tariff rates between the two countries. If this compact is enforced the United States will be charging 42 per cent on dutiable goods going from Canada to the United States as an average duty, while on dutiable goods coming from the United States into Canada would only pay an average duty of 24 per cent. Is that an equalization of tariff rates? I think not.

But what can we expect from a newspaper that would say, when my building was burned in Wingham, that I was away in the west, and why did I not stay and attend to my business in parliament. One said: Why did I not resign and get out. That is the kind of Grit papers we have in my riding. I will buy that editor a new hat if he will find half a dozen men in this House who have lost fewer days during all the long years that I have been here than I have. I was here attending to my duties when they put that in the newspaper, and when they brought it up in the legislature in Toronto, and said that I had declared myself in favour of reciprocity because I said that if they would get this preliminary I would stand up to it. I am in favour of reciprocity now, but it is the kind of reciprocity that Sir John A. Macdonald was in favour of. I am opposed to the kind of reciprocity that Sir John A. Macdonald was opposed to. The last effort that Sir John Macdonald ever made in the political battle was to fight reciprocity as it was brought forward by the Liberal party, and he made such an effort in his later days that when he came back to parliament he came back exhausted, and shortly afterwards died. Yet, they will tell us that Sir John A. Macdonald was in favour of reciprocity. He was like me; he was in favour of a fair deal, but can we get a fair deal from the Americans? I fear not. This newspaper was kind enough to say that it wondered how I would square myself. I would like to know how the editor of that paper is going to square himself for saying that I was in the west when I was here attending to my duties. He is a kind of local preacher, and he goes around preaching on the Sabbath day, but he falls from grace during the week.

I would just say that the principal objection to this compact is that the United States are getting the privilege of interfering with our tariff. The United States went into rebellion against Great Britain, they actualy fought against Great Britain, and they gained their independence because Great Britain threatened to interfere with their tariff. Now they want to stick their noses into the Canadian tariff. Are we prepared to enter into such an agreement that we will have to go to the United States and ask whether we dare make any change in our tariff or not? It is the entanglement that we are getting into that I object to. If we had only waited the Democratic party would have given us everything we have got by this compact, they were pledged to give it, they would have given more too, and then we would not have had the entanglement that we have at the present time.

The last speaker (Mr. Turcotte, Quebec County) put a great deal of emphasis upon the favoured nation clause, and he explained to us, as nearly as I could understand him from certain things that he read, that the favoured nation clause meant nothing. He was explaining something that referred to the favoured nation clause of the United States, not to the favoured nation clause of Canada or Great Britain. I am in favour of a fair deal. That is what I said when I was speaking on the address. I am not in favour of a jug-handled policy, I am not in favour of a policy which gives us reciprocity only in one nation, and allows twelve or thirteen others to come in here free, although they give us no return whatever. I am not in favour of a jug-handle that is twelve times as big as the jug itself. I can think of nothing that is so unreasonable, so selfish, and so hoggish-like as this bargain, except a pig with one ear. The Liberal government have during the last fourteen years successfully played a double game with the tariff of this country. They have pleased the consumers and farmers by promising free trade while at the same time they were quietly promoting protection and secretly winning the support of the manufacturers, the mergers, and the middlemen in that way. But their ways were so devious, and they covered their tracks with so much skill that even a great many Conservatives were deceived. The deceptive manipulation of the tariff on agricultural implements may be taken as an example. The last speaker referred to our farmers. He said that the farmers would not be injured. The farmers have been suffering all the time. He spoke about the manufacturers, but the farmers have been deceived on every occasion. I have a couple of letters here, and I think I will just read them. I see that other people have been getting letters, and have been reading them to the House, and I think I have just as good a right to get letters as they have.

McCawl, April 18, 1911.

Dr. Chisholm, M.P.

Dear Sir,—I write to say I am inclined to favour reciproicity.

I am not going to do as some of the hon. members of the House have done. The Conservatives read letters that are opposed to this agreement, and the Liberals read letters that are in favour of it. I am going to read one that is in favour of it, and then I will read one that is opposed to it. That is fair.

I am sure the farmers will get a better price for their turnips and their calves. We raise a great many swede turnips in this country and the Yankees come over and buy them by the carload and sometimes by the train load. They take them over to the United States where they grind them up very fine and sweeten and colour them and then mix them with timothy seed that has been kept so long in some of their wholesale houses that it has lost its vitality and is no use for seed or any other purpose. This is then sent back to Canada as canned strawberries. Now it is plain that if we had reciprocity we would not only get a better price for our turnips but we would also get our canned strawberries at a greatly reduced price. Hurrah for reciprocity, bob veal, canned chicken and cheap strawberry preserves!

Yours truly,
J. D. COOPER.

That is a letter in favour of reciprocity, but now here is one opposed to it:

Wingham, March, 1911.

Dear Mr. Chisholm,—I thought I would drop you a few lines to warn you about reciprocity. Tell the government to be very careful when dealing with the Yankees. I got bitten with one of those gentlemen myself once. I had an old mare that had been a faithful servant to me for thirty years and I was at work ploughing near the highway one day with her when one of these chaps came along and asked me how I would trade that old mare for his brown colt. After driving a hard bargain for a while I gave him ten dollars and the old mare for his brown colt. He was scarcely out of sight when I discovered that the brown colt was two years older than my old mare, also that he was heavy and balky, and I only had him about three days when he kicked the brains out of my good collie dog, that was worth more than both the horses. Everybody was laughing at me, so I just knocked the brown colt on the head and drew the colt and dog out on the field so that I could bury them both in the one grave. The very next day the Yankee came along when I was in the field and sold my old woman three dollars worth of Bologna sausage, and he never told her they were made out of our old mare. When he was leaving his eyes fell on the brown colt and the dog lying out in the field, and he asked my old woman if he might take them home with him in his light wagon, and she said he could. I was told afterwards that he made a lot of sausage out of them, too, and sold their hides for three dollars and half. I got nothing except three dollars worth of sausage, and I buried that and erected a slab with an inscription on it to the memory of my old mare. Tell the government to be very careful how they deal with these people, for they always make sure to get the best of the bargain.

J. H. STEPHENSON,
Wingham, Ont.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know, in the face of that conflicting evidence, how, in the name of common sense, the government is going to go on with this compact. As the hour is pretty late, and hon. members wish to have some time to think over these letters, perhaps it would be just as well that I should draw my remarks to a close. I thought these letters ought to be laid before the public, and I do not see how the government, in face of them, can go on with the agreement. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Go on.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). All right.

Mr. STANFIELD. It is after twelve o'clock, and if the hon. gentleman wishes to adjourn the debate he should be allowed to do so.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). Oh, I don't care, I will continue. Now, when Sir John Macdonald introduced his National Policy many years ago, he stated distinctly that it was a temporary thing, and that it was only intended to protect infant and struggling industries, and that just so soon as these industries had secured sufficient strength and financial ability to enable them to compete with foreign industries of the same class in the markets of the world, these duties would be lowered or abolished. Under the National Policy the duty on farm implements was first placed at 35 per cent, but it was soon found that this was far too high even for protective purposes, and that such a high protective duty would have the effect of enabling strong and wealthy firms to crush the weak, and thus act in direct opposition to the protective principle. Consequently, after a few years, the Conservative government---and I wish to draw attention to the fact that it was a Conservative government, because there has been an effort repeatedly made during this discussion to show that this benefit to the farmers was effected through the Liberals---the Conservative government under Sir John Thompson reduced the duty from 35 per cent to 20 per cent, and in doing so they were acting strictly in accord with protection principles. Protection may be likened to a fence; a man may put up a fence around his field and he may make it eight rails high, and that will protect his field and keep the cattle out, but if he made it twenty rails high the wind would be sure to blow it down, and the cattle would get in. There is no greater mistake than to assume that protection has to be unnecessarily high ; protection must be regulated carefully, according to the requiremets of the industry it is intended to create, for if it is made too high it will defeat the very object it has in view, and that is the reason Sir John Thompson reduced the duty on agricultural implements. Shortly after that Hugh John Macdonald, the old chieftain's son, during his campaign, in Brandon advocated the entire removal of the duty and the free importation of agricultural implements into this country. That was the policy of the Conservative party in regard to the duty on agricultural implements 14 years ago. At that time, owing to misrepresentations and false promises made by the Liberals, the Conservatives were defeated and the so-called free trade party came into power. They at once introduced a two-faced system of tactics. Instead of giving free trade, as they promised, they actually increased, as I am prepared to show, the duty on agricultural implements, thus favouring the manufacturers and deceiving the farmers. That had vexed the farmers so much that after a while, as the House knows, they came down here 800 strong, saying that they could bear it no longer.

Previous to this in 1907 the government to deceive the farmers had proclaimed that they would reduce the duty from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent on mowers and binders. They did reduce the duty, but at the same time they increased the dutiable price of a six-foot binder from about $80 to $100, and afterwards, when the eight-foot binders came in, they increased the dutiable price still higher. Now, 20 per cent on $80 gave the old duty of $16, while 17½ per cent on $100 gave $17.50, so that a man importing a binder had to pay $1.50 more after the reduction than he did before. I am prepared to show that instead of increasing the dutiable price of the binder at that time, they should have reduced it. If a six-foot binder could have been manufactured 25 or 30 years ago for $80, surely, with the improved machinery they have in Toronto, and with the electric power which they get from Niagara Falls, instead of getting power from coal and steam—and I am told that a man with a machine can now do as much work in one day as twenty men could do formerly—surely, with the increased facilities for transportation, and with the enormously increased output, they should be able to manufacture one of these machines for one-half the money they did formerly, that is, $40. We have some proof of that. There was a strike in the Massey-Harris works a short time ago, and it went so far that the moulders on strike tried to get up a company in opposition, and they proved to the satisfaction of moneyed men who were talking of going into the company that the binders sold for $150 to farmers could be manufactured for $40, and I have no doubt that, with all the machinery and the advantages in manufacture at present, that is true. If one of these binders were sold at $50, this would give the manufacturer $10 for his legitimate profit; and the duty of 17½ per cent on $100 is exactly 35 per cent on $50. So that this free trade government is giving back to the manufacturers the old duty of 35 per cent, which was taken from them by Sir John Thompson. But that is not the worst. At the very time that they put in that clause making this reduction of 2½ per cent in the duty on binders, they put in a clause giving a rebate of 99 per cent on all the materials used in the manufacture of mowers and binders. Under that provision, during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1910, the Massey-Harris firm alone received in rebates the enormous sum of $155,149 63; and, as the farmers of this country form two-thirds of the population, we may assume that $100,000 of that money was taken out of the pockets of the farmers and handed over to one single firm of manufacturers simply as a bonus. We all know that the bonus system is the most extreme form of protection; and yet these gentlemen call themselves free-traders. But that is not all. They took Mr. Jones of the Massey-Harris firm and Mr. Frost of the Frost & Wood firm, and put them into the Senate, and gave between them $5,000 a year, As the farmers form two-thirds of the population of this country, $3,000 of that money also must have come out of the pockets of the farmers. You will think that a bad enough story, but that is not the worst. For many years the farmers of Canada were prosperous; their products were protected; they had a continually increasing home market, and prices were good; they also had the advantage of the British market. But all at once, suddenly and unexpectedly, this government announced that they had made a secret compact with the United States, and that the protection which the farmers had enjoyed up to this time, that had given them this market, was to be taken away from them. Under the compact made between the manufacturers and the farmers at the time the National Policy was first introduced, the products of the farm were to be protected and the products of the factory were to be protected. Now, they take away all the protection from the farmer, and leave him to compete, not only with the United States, but with Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Venezuela, Spain, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Turkey and Japan. These countries all come in under the favoured-nation clause. Then, we have coming under the British preference New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, India, and all the British Crown colonies, and competing with our farmers. Just think of what it means. At the time the National Policy was introduced there was an understanding that there was to be a duty on coal for the eastern provinces, and a duty on wheat for the western provinces, and this was supposed to compensate the west for the duty on coal in Nova Scotia. But now the duty on wheat is to be taken away, and the duty on coal is to be continued. Wheat can be moved by water much cheaper than by rail, and it can be brought from Argentina to Halifax at 6 cents a bushel, whereas it costs 16 cents a bushel to bring it from Regina. So our farmers will lose their market right here in their own country, because we have no reciprocal compensation with Argentina. The favoured-nation clause of the United States is very different from ours. It means that they get a grant in return that is not conferred on other countries, whereas we have to give to Venezuela, Argentina and all the other countries free acess to our country and we get no reciprocal return. If we wish to send wheat to Venezuela or Argentina or Spain or Russia, we have to pay the duty, but any of these countries can bring their wheat to Canada free of duty. I know that the price of wheat is higher in the western states than in our own Northwest; but there is a reason for that. In the United States there is only a small district that will raise No. 1 hard, and they have to have a certain amount of No. 1 hard to mix with their soft wheat.

The result was that in those parts of the United States where No. 1 hard could be raised they had a monopoly and consequently received a higher price ; but when 100,000,000 bushels of hard wheat goes from Canada into the United States, that condition will be changed and the price in both countries will be lowered. Another reason why wheat has been higher in the United States than in Canada is because of the robbery and mixing of grain practised in our terminal elevators. Eight hundred men came down here after this matter had been discussed by every Grain Grower's Association in the west ; they thought they understood their business and they asked that the government should own and operate the terminal elevators. But the government pretended that they understood the whole thing far better than the farmers, so they proposed to give them free entry for their wheat into the United States. The farmers wanted the establishment of a chilled meat industry and abattoirs but the government could do better than that, they would let them get into the Chicago market and be subject to the operations of Swift and Armour and the meat trusts of the United States. Then they asked that the Hudson Bay railway should be built right away, but the government pretended that they knew something far better than that, they would let Jim Hill get his railroads in and in that way of course they thought the traffic would all go south and thus an excuse would be given for delaying the building of the Hudson Bay railway. To show the hypocrisy of all this thing, just after the last election, I went out to Prince Albert where I have a son. I forgot entirely that there was a deferred election. On the night I reached there there was to be a meeting in the town hall. I had not been there 10 minutes when I was urged to go to the town hall to speak. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner were expected to be present but they had not come. One of the cleverest young members on that side of the House, the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) had been invited to oppose these gentlemen but there was no one to speak for our side. I refused at first but finally was induced to go to the meeting. My hon. friend concluded his speech by saying that if they would vote for the Liberal candidate they would get the Hudson Bay railway right away, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had said so and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had never made a promise that had not been fulfilled. I said: I do not know much about western politics, but I think I know that Sir Wilfrid came to Prince Albert in 1895 and told the residents that if the Liberal party came into power and they elected a Liberal they would get the Hudson Ray railway right away. They did not get it. Then, I said: In 1900 they came back with the same old story: If you will elect a Liberal you will get the Hudson Bay railway right away and they elected Mr. T. O. Davis, now a senator, and they did not get the Hudson Bay railway right away. I said that in 1904 they came to Prince Albert with the same old story and they elected Mr. Lamont, a Liberal. He came down here but they did not get the Hudson Bay railway right away. Mr. Lamont was made attorney general for Saskatchewan and afterwards a judge. There was a by-election and they elected Mr. McCraney by acclamation, and they were to get the Hudson Bay railway right away, and then I said: As I was coming down from the station to-night I saw a dray with a big placard on it, with letters two feet high: Vote for the Liberal candidate and get the Hudson Bay railway right away. I said: Take care of that board, put it behind the barn, do not change a single word and you can bring it out in 1912 and parade it up and down the street, and it will be the same old story, elect a Liberal and you will get the Hudson Bay railway right away. I hope the board is safe behind the barn because it is about time to take it out. This is the way the farmers of the west have been humbugged about the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. TOLMIE. What about the clock.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). Never mind about the clock. There is the man who promised me a clock but did not give it to me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have patience.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). The people in the west must have patience, they waited 14 years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Everything comes to the man who knows how to wait.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). But I know a man in North Bruce who is getting something nearly every day and I never raised my finger to protest against anything he got simply because he was a brother Scotchman, and when I asked for a clock for the Wingham post office I could not get it, he put in his nose. I have been in this House many years and I never got a thing for East Huron that I asked for. However, I never objected to his getting things and he has been getting, getting, getting. He has nearly as many harbours as there are in Nova Scotia, and he has Indians and two or three buildings. I asked about a clock and he came to me in the last parliament and told me if I would make a speech in favour of my good friend the Minister of Agriculture, of whom I have always thought so much, on the cold storage question, he would see that I got a clock. I made a good speech, as I think the minister will admit, but my friend did not keep his word. I am getting so that I will not believe one single word which comes from that side of the House. If there was a man on that side of the House whom I would have believed it would have been the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Tolmie) simply because he was a Scotchman, but I find that even a Scotchman, when he gets on that side of the House, cannot always be depended on.

It costs a cent to send a bushel of wheat 60 or 70 miles. Duluth is 70 miles nearer to Winnipeg than Fort William. When the duties are taken away and all trouble in regard to bond, &c., is done away with, it is quite evident that those who are handling wheat in Western Canada will send it to Duluth instead of Fort William because on 100,000,000 bushels of wheat, with a saving of one cent a bushel, they will make $1,000,000 and beyond doubt they would send it to the place where they would make the most money, they would send it to Duluth. When it gets to Duluth, what is the law? The American law provides that a foreign vessel cannot take a cargo from one United States port to another, and the 100,000,000 of Canadian grown wheat will go to Duluth so that our Canadian vessels will not get the carriage of a single bushel of it to Buffalo.

Mr. TOLMIE. We have the same law, have we not?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). I am not saying anything about the law. I defy any hon. member to show what will prevent the wheat going to Duluth.

Mr. TOLMIE. Answer my question.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). I have answered ited it; go and sit still. Mr. Chairman,

I do ont think this is fair; they insisted on my going on to-night——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Chisholm, Huron) objects to interruptions, I will see to it that there shall be none.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). I do not object to reasonable interruptions, but I thought I had settled my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie), and I do not want him interfering all the time. Now, take the question of barley—and there is great talk about that question. I remember when I myself got $1.40 a bushel for barley. And the old farmers have that in their minds to this day. But the whole barley situation has been changed in the meantime. In those days, the barley was sent to Buffalo, and the malting mills were there. It was made into a particular kind of ale, which, they tell me, has gone out of fashion. And the malting mills have been removed to Milwaukee, or away out to Minneapolis. A new country has been opened up there that was a waste at that time, and they can raise barley there of as good quality as we can raise in Ontario and raise a much larger crop of it. So, this barley question amounts to very little. Last year, we brought into this country $167,000 worth of barley, and paid $24,000 to get it in. How are our farmers going to make money raising barley in the face of that? If we spent so much to bring in barley from the United States, that must prove that barley is dearer in this country than it is in the United States.

Now as to cattle; the cattle business will be put into the hands of Swift and Armour and the meat trust. They will handle the meat situation here as they handle it in the United States, and my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Wright) explained how it would be done. The farmer will be compelled to sell his beef to the trust, and the consumer will have to pay whatever price is demanded for his meat.

Now, this compact is certainly going to injure British Columbia. We have heard speeches from the gentlemen representing that province, and it seems to me that the matter is a very serious one for the people of British Columbia. And Alberta and Saskatchewan will be greatly injured by anything that injures British Columbia. The natural market for the products of Alberta and Saskatchewan is British Columbia. As soon as the Panama canal is finished, the grain of those provinces will go by way of British Columbia. The people engaged in mining, lumbering and fishing in British Columbia will consume the farm products of these two provinces. And now they are asked to destroy British Columbia, to destroy the market for their own produce for the purpose of becoming part of the backyard of Chicago. I hope our farmers will consider that.

Now, take the question of lumber. Under this arrangement, $1.50 a thousand will be taken off lumber. That will raise the price of lumber to the farmers of this country. That means that our farmers will have to pay $1.50 more per thousand for their lumber. They have taken $2 a barrel off pork. And so our farmers will have to get less for their pork and will have to pay more for their lumber.

Then, take the question of apples; last year, we brought in $261,792 worth of apples into this country. What we should do is to have a proper system of cold storage; but if this compact goes into force it will prevent our getting this. The farmers of the west are asking for abattoirs. We should have a comprehensive system of cold storage, something I advocated in this House many years ago—a system owned and operated by the government and handled in such a way that it would just pay expenses. It would benefit both the producer and the consumer. If we had a proper system of cold storage properly carried on, it would pay the interest on the money, so that we could borrow the money and by having a small sinking fund the enterprise itself would pay off the debt. With such a system, a poor man could buy a quarter of beef and put it into cold storage, paying the commissioners who would run the thing for the country a small sum, and when he wanted a bit of that beef he could go and get it. Then the farmer who chose to put his beef into cold storage could put it there and wait for a better price. The poor man could buy eggs in the summer at ten cents or twelve cents a dozen, and for one cent a dozen they could be kept until he wanted them. When we send our perishable products down to the ocean—our fruit and things of that kind—on its way to Britain, we could bring back fish to be put into the space in cold storage from which our own goods had been taken. The owner could pay a small fee for keeping these fish, and when he wanted them he could get them. We could send our apples and perishable fruits to the west, as far as Edmonton or even to Lake Athabaska, and we could bring back in the same refrigerator cars whitefish to be put into cold storage for use whenever desired. If we had commissioners, such a system could be effectively run, and the producer and the consumer would both be benefited. But when a motion in favour of arbitrators was brought up in this House it had to be voted down by the government. In the same way, the motion for terminal elevators had to be voted down. Whenever there is anything to benefit the farmers it has to be voted down. The manufacturers are the pets of the government. If the farmers were put on an equality with the manufacturers, if they were given a rebate of 99 cents on every dollar of duty they paid on a binder, they would get all their money back on that binder except eighteen or twenty cents. But favours like that are not intended for the poor farmer; these things are for the manufacturers. The manufacturers are supported, but the farmers are deceived and misled.

I know that hon. members opposite must feel very badly about this thing. Hon. Edward Blake, when an attempt like this was made years ago declared that it would lead to annexation. He was the leader of the Liberal party for many years, and a very talented man. Hon. members know what he said about an attempt similar to this. They know what Sir George W. Ross has said about it, and what Hon. Clifford Sifton has said about it. These are all Liberals, and they have all seen this danger.

Mr. TOLMIE. What were you once?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). It does not matter what I was once, I was brought up by a good Tory father, in the county of Halton.

Mr. TOLMIE. You told me differently.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). That does not make any difference. I would not believe you any way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Chisholm) has the floor, and he has the right to continue his address without interruption, and that right will be accorded to him if he desires it. Perhaps I should add that, in endeavouring to secure that right for the hon. member, he should not weaken my efforts by responding to interruptions.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). I admit that. Now, the hon. gentleman who spoke just before I began referred to the fact, if I understood him aright, that this compact had been carried in the House of Representatives at Washington to-day—it is now yesterday—by a majority of 175, in a House of 389 members. There are four delegates from the territories, I do not know whether they had votes or not. But if it has been carried by a majority of 175 in a House of that number, it shows that the United States people must think they are getting the best of the bargain.

Mr. BARKER. What was the whole number of members?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Huron). There were 42 absent, I am told. The vote stood 263 to 88, the majority being 175. I think the very fact that Uncle Sam grabs at this thing with such zeal is enough to show that he thinks he has got the best end of the bargain.

Mr. W. O. SEALEY (Wentworth). Mr. Chairman, it appears by agreement between both sides of the House, that this question of the proposed trade agreement between Canada and the United States, is being considered at the present time, as a whole. I am sorry for this, because it scarcely gives a fair opportunity for expressing and discussing the real differences of opinion on specific items.

To illustrate: the schedules are evidently intended, in the main, to embrace items under two headings only, viz., natural products and agricultural products. As to the natural product, our lumbermen and others expect to be immediately benefited by having that free access to the United States market, which the United States have had in the Canadian market for years past. The mineral people, who are interested in coal, nickel, iron, are also well pleased with the agreement, and the agriculturists, on the whole, seem to be more than satisfied with their expected vantage, except possibly as to hog products. We must give those who are engaged in these various pursuits credit for understanding their own business, and knowing something of their own needs and advantages. But the horticulturists of the country make a serious complaint, the seriousness of which was evidenced on February 11 last, by a deputation of 1,500 people coming here from Ontario and Quebec, at a personal expense averaging about $20 each, or a total of $30,000, which is abundant evidence of good faith, to place their views and objections from a practical and experienced standpoint before the government. This deputation, I may say, was among the most numerous and most representative that has ever heretofore waited on any Canadian government. They placed their cause clearly and convincingly before the government, and I believe made out an exceptionally strong case, which was also supplemented by petitions, resolutions, and other representations from British Columbia as well as many other parts of the Dominion, all of which must get careful consideration, I hope and trust that the outcome of their representations will be the granting of immediate relief. Without repeating the able arguments and reasonings advanced by the various speakers on that deputation, I shall take the liberty of occupying the time of the House for a few minutes, in supplementing them with a few additional reasons that have occurred to my own mind.

The latest Trade and Commerce report for the year ending March 31, 1910, shows that we imported during that year to Canada from the United States, fruit to the value in round figures of $6,500,000, while during the same period we only exported from Canada to the United States, fruit to the value of $500,000, or one-thirteenth of the imports. True, it may be said that $3,500,000 worth of our fruit imports were bananas, oranges, pine apples, and other varieties of fruit which we do not produce in Canada, and which therefore, come in duty free. But $3,000,000 of it, or six times more than we exported to the United States, was dutiable, and of exactly the same class of fruit as we produce in Canada.

Now, the Canadian tariff on peaches is one cent per pound, while the United States tariff on them is only one half cent per pound. The Canadian tariff on strawberries is two cents per quart, while the United States tariff on them is only one cent per quart. Our tariff on much of the fruit is twice as high as theirs; and if, under these conditions, they have been able to invade our markets to the extent of $3,000,000 a year and we have only been able to invade their market to the extent of half a million, or one sixth that amount, during the same time, with only half as much duty against us as we have against them, the result under free trade in these articles would seem to be apparent to every one they would swamp us in our own market, while we would be unable to meet them in their own market.

Climatic and labour conditions in the United States are so varied that they are enabled to begin the production of fruits and vegetables in Florida, California, &c., with coloured labour, in February, Georgia in March, Maryland in April, Delaware and New Jersey in May, &c., so when our fruit comes in during the summer, their Michigan, Wisconsin, New York, and Washington Territory fields afford as northerly a climate and production as ours, while the great Michigan and Wisconsin fields are 100 miles further north, so they can not only lead our season in the spring, equal it in the summer, but follow it in the fall, and in that way meet us on more favourable ground all the way through the year.

Then this United States 92,000,000 market is usually spoken of as though they were all consumers of Agricultural and Horticultural products while as a matter of fact 25,000,000 of them are producing the same kind of products as we are. The argument that the proposed agreement provides two markets, where we now only have one, must be supplemented by the explanation that it also provides two sources of supply, instead of one as now. Many of them are producing under more favourable conditions, especially in the south, as the coloured labour, Cooley labour, and eastern labour with which these things are produced is very cheap there, and properly positively prohibitive here by our immigration regulations and head tax, which again places the Canadian producer at a serious disadvantage as compared with the United States producer.

Our vegetable industry is also a large one, and concerning Reciprocal Trade considerations, I may say that last year's returns show that we have imported from the United States vegetables, not including potatoes, to the value of $822,675, $166,000 of which were tomatoes, while we have only been able to export during the same period $334,804 worth, or considerably less than one-half the amount. To save the time of the House by avoiding repetition, I may say that the same arguments as regards tariff, season, labour, &c., as I have applied to fruit, applies also to vegetables.

These arguments, coupled with those presented by the deputation, in addition to the petitions, &c., from the various parts of the Dominion, seem conclusive, and I believe warrant relief.

Now, as to the matter of fruit baskets, their cost in Canada is as follows: Strawberry baskets with crate, $18 per 100; 6 quart grape baskets, $32 per 1,000; and 11 quart peach and plum baskets, $37 per 1,000 when purchased in large quantities of ½ million lots or upwards, but higher in smaller quantities, while in the United States 6 quart grape baskets only cost the grower $18 per 1,000, and other sizes proportionately, which is on an average $14 per thousand cheaper than the cost to the Canadian grower, all of which come in free when filled with fruit, but are subject to 30 per cent duty when empty.

Some one may say, why not import baskets at $18, and pay 30 per cent duty which would make the cost only equal to $23.40 and freight per M, as against $32 here, but our Canadian Weights and Measures Standard prevents this, as the United States baskets are about 10 per cent smaller than ours and if we used them, they would all require to be stamped short, which reflects seriously against the sale, giving a bad impression against the goods, as well as the quantity, but the United States shipper would, under the newly proposed conditions, be enabled to place his 10 per cent short baskets without stamp alongside of ours, and sell 5 per cent cheaper, and in reality realize 5 per cent more, because to the casual purchaser the short size unstamped is not distinctly noticeable.

This is another strong reason why the fruit and vegetables should be removed from the schedule at the present time, especially until there has been a uniformity of standard sized baskets, packages, and measures adopted between the two countries, which is absolutely necessary before even a fair experiment could be made.

As the average small grower uses about 15,000 baskets during the season, the medium grower uses about 50,000, and the large grower about 100,000, so the Free Trade handicap against the Canadian producer in this respect alone is over $200 to the small producer, $700 to the medium grower, and $1,400 to the large grower annually, in addition to the duty on fertilizers, implements, machinery, &c. Now, I am not asking that these things be put on the free list, but rather that fruits and vegetables be retained on the Industrial schedule, because it is an industry in every sense of the word, converting the raw material of the soil, seed, trees, fertilizers, labour, &c., into finished products of fruit and vegetables, much of which requires from 5 to 10 and even 20 years to mature, whereas most other industries convert their raw material into finished products in a few weeks or months or once a year at most.

It may be said that I should stand up for Canadian industries generally, and so I do, for I feel that it is the duty of every hon. member of this House to do so, in as far as he is familiar with the circumstances and conditions, and able to make out a substantial case, and therefore if I lead in standing up for any and every Wentworth industry the conditions of which I am familiar with, that is adversely affected at any time, that is about as much responsibility as should be placed on me. For instance, shortly after the introduction of this proposition I feared our steel wire rod business was being badly hit, but on closer examination I find that steel rods were always free in Canada, and that their mention in the schedule is owing to the fact that the United States have now made them free without any quid pro quo from Canada, and the interests are seemingly trying to mistakenly impress the public with the idea that steel bounties should be continued because the reciprocity proposal has hit them so hard, whereas in reality it has opened the United States market to them in addition to the market they already had before without disadvantageously affecting them in the least. So, the more we study the proposal, the more we see the apparently unfair stand the Trusts are taking to further their selfish ends.

One important item of agricultural production, I have noticed is omitted from the schedule, i.e., wool, and I suggest that it be substituted for the horticultural schedule.

In discussing the matter, a gentleman from the prairie west said to me the other day: 'Sealey, cannot you give me any reason why we prairie people should not buy Canadian fruit?' After thinking the matter over, I said: 'No, I cannot, because so far as I could see, Canada produced most excellent apples, every one of which all doctors say are more wholesome and nourishing than two bananas; Canada produced the best of peaches, pears, plums, grapes, berries, &c., of all kinds, cheap enough for the everyday consumer, and delicious enough for the most luxurious taste, and therefore, there did not seem to be any good reason why the westerner should not buy his fruit from us. He then reversed the question, and asked for any good reason why they should buy it. I replied, that was easy, that Canada had given the people most of the western lands free, as well as transportation facilities, and other up to date comforts, under which they had prospered greatly, and, therefore, they should show their appreciation to Canada, by buying Canadian fruit, but if they could not show their gratitude voluntarily in this way, the only alternative seemed to be to prompt them to do so by a little tariff. Needless to say this did not harmonize with the westerner's views, and if under these new conditions, he is permitted to use his own free will and buy United States fruit, the recent reduction in freight rates and improvement in transportation facilities from the Niagara district to Winnipeg and the west, also the recent Railway Commissioners' order, reducing express rates, which we have struggled so hard for, and the result of which we looked forward to for greatly increased trade, will now all go for naught. This will be very disappointing and discouraging, because these advantages will more than be offset by the loss of the tariff.

I am glad that the government have seen their way clear to act on our urgent suggestions and have decided to have the representations of the fruit and vegetable growers deputation printed in Blue-book form, similar to the grain growers, so if for any reason we fail to get relief now, we will have it in presentable form to remind the commissioners immediately after, and, coupled with the arguments that are being made on the floor of the House, it will be easily available. If by any chance whatever, the pulp schedule is ruled out by the United States, then the horticultural schedule must be ruled out by Canada. I may further add that the census returns of 1901, show nearly 500,000 acres of land to have been devoted to the fruit and vegetable industry at that time, which, if valued at the most moderate price of $150 per acre, represents an investment of $75,000,000 in this industry at that time, engaging and supporting over 100,000 people. Assuming that the area has doubled since then and moderately increased in value, this, coupled with the statement of Mr. Delworth, of York, that the result of a recent local census calculation showed that between the vicinity of Toronto and Niagara Falls, there are over 200,000 acres in fruit and vegetables, which at the modest valuation of $200 per acre (much of which is worth $1,000 per acre), represents a value of $40,000,000 invested in the industry in that small area, employing 15,000 extra people, would lead to the conclusion that a very conservative estimate of the situation to-day would be an investment of $200,000,000 in this industry, which is supporting 200,000 people.

Now, Sir, I believe that an investment of a one-hundredth part of this amount in any other industry would get the greatest amount of consideration and care, and I therefore hope and trust that this industry will yet not be discriminated against.

As to hog products, last year's Trade and Commerce returns show us to have imported from the United States $3,112,302 worth, while we only exported to the United States $8,567 worth. I do not think I can do better than repeat my statements made before the Agricultural Committee on December 14, 1910, which is applicable to the conditions of to-day. I then said:

For instance a short time ago I saw an official report published in the papers stating that the visible supply of live hogs in Canada and in the world generally was very much less than it had been for years past. I also noticed by the market reports at Liverpool that the price of bacon there is rather higher at present than for some time past. From market reports and from actual experience, I have found that about three months ago live hogs were selling in our vicinity—Hamilton and Toronto—at ten cents a pound on foot, and at that same time bacon was being sold for twenty-two cents a pound. Since then the price of live hogs has fallen to 6½ cents, while the price of bacon to the consumer has remained about the same. In Hamilton, live hogs were bringing 10 cents a pound, and in Chicago 9 cents. The price of live hogs has gone down in Chicago, Buffalo and New York, but not nearly so much as in Canada.

The result of a tabulated statement of the market would show that at the present time live hogs are bringing a considerably better price in the United States than in Canada, and that the price of bacon to the consumer in the United States is much below what the consumer has to pay in this country. I believe the present depressed price of live hogs is not due to conditions connected with the law of supply and demand, or to prevailing circumstances in the Liverpool and other foreign markets. I think it amounts to a case of the Canadian packers understanding that at this particular season of the year there is an abundance of hogs matured to about the two hundred pound mark, or slightly over it; that these hogs have got to be sold, and that the packers are seemingly taking an unfair advantage of this situation and keeping down the price. If such is the case, and I believe it can be established, this committee could not do better than institute an inquiry, which will provide a remedy, or, at least, cause the existing situation to be fairly and definitely exposed to the public.

I also feel that some improvement is needed in the matter of market reports. Take any of the daily newspapers, and in order to get a comparison of the market reports you have to study a whole page and make a summary of it yourself. In that way it is hard to compare prices as satisfactorily, and I believe that there are thousands of people who do not take that trouble. Now, this committee, with good grace, might do something to persuade the daily press to publish a summary of reports whereby a comparison could be made similar to the following:—At the head of the newspaper columns might appear the names Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Liverpool. Immediately following might come Chicago, Buffalo and New York. This would permit the Chicago market to be compared with Winnipeg, Buffalo with Toronto, and New York with Montreal, as regards the interior and seaboard points. Had such a comparison been made for the past three or four months it would have shown the prices formerly paid for live hogs to be about as follows: In Chicago 9 cents, in Buffalo 9½ cents, in New York 10 cents, in Toronto 10 cents, in Montreal 10½ cents, and so on. As to bacon, the price in Chicago and Buffalo would be 18 cents and in Canada 22 cents. Since prices have fallen the rate per live hog in Chicago and Buffalo have been quoted at 7 cents or 7½ cents and in Canada 6½ cents. On the other hand, the price of bacon would be at about 16 cents there, whilst here it would be at 22 cents. I believe we would be doing a public service if we laid such a comparison of prices in such a convincing form before the public. Such a proceeding, in my opinion, would exercise a deterrent effect upon the Canadian factories and prevent them from taking the unfair advantage which they are taking at the present time. And I hope this committee will now decide to cause an immediate inquiry to be made.

Since then and shortly after the holidays the proposal of reciprocal trade between Canada and the United States has occupied the attention of parliament and the public as well, which, together with my personal illness, contributed to allow the matter before the Agricultural Committee to remain dormant. However, while present market quotations show live hogs to bring about 1 cent more in the United States than in Canada, and that for a much inferior quality, I fear it is more of a freak condition, rather than a stable one, and conditions may turn the other way before long, in which case our quarantine regulations will preserve us in the case of live hogs; but the hog products would be the same as now, and I therefore feel that in the matter of pork products, our safest position would be to place these on a schedule similar to that in force in Canada at the present time. For while they are an agricultural product, you will remember that the western grain growers and Ontario farmers' deputation, specially exempted hog products from the application of the general representations. And I may add right here, that it becomes Canada to give the greatest amount of consideration and care to this most important industry, for, with all due respect to the importance of other products, I believe the production of hogs in Canada has paid off more mortgages in Ontario, than any other product of any kind, and in Wentworth fruit and vegetables are the next.

Now, there is a very grave evil existing in the hog market to-day, and I am quite willing to join in any other plan to remedy it, that may seem likely to give better results.

I may say that my idea was to propose an amendment excluding the fruit and vegetables, and also hog products from the schedule and adopt the resolution as amended. However, if the exclusion of hog products is likely to prevent the exclusion of fruits and vegetables from getting as much support as it otherwise would, I am quite agreeable to leave that out, and take chances of getting the hog products cared for later. It may be said that an amendment would not be admissible, as the schedule has to be adopted as a whole, or rejected as a whole. I do not agree with this idea, for two reasons. One is that in my judgment a majority of this House rules, and can amend any resolution; second, because Secretary Knox's letter to the State Department implied that the schedule with regard to pulp and paper could be changed. Certainly if the pulp and paper schedule can be altered by the United States, the fruit and vegetable schedule can be altered by Canada. We are satisfied, from the representations that the United States are making with regard to pulp and paper, that their commissioners overlooked the real meaning of the clause, and I think that perhaps our commissioners may have omitted to distinguish the difference between agricultural products and horticultural products. They might say that it would be rather humiliating to admit to the United States that they had made an omission of this kind, but that little humiliation is insignificant compared with the risk of wreck and ruin to a $200,000,000 industry in Canada supporing 200,000 people. They may say they had to give and take, but I don't think there is any industry in Canada that would ask the government to give away the fruit and vegetable industry to take some advantage for themselves, but we find from newspaper reports that the fruit and vegetable industry is the only one quoted by the United States representatives as a gain for the United States for all the losses complained of as having been conceded to Canada. In fact, Canada's position in the matter of trade is so good to-day that no industry should be sacrificed to meet the wishes of any other country, and I feel sure it is not necessary. I am satisfied that the exclusion of horticultural products would not stop the agreement, because the expression of the United States people in all the bye-elections last year, as well as the general election in November last was for a revision of their tariff downward, and for free food-stuffs, and so forceful and general was that expression that the United States government will not feel safe in declining it, even with this amendment. But of course the only way to prove this is to get a majority of this House to adopt such an amendment; but if by any chance we fail in this, then I presume I will be obliged to rely on the Canadian commissioners' statement that the day after it is in operation 'it can be changed', and in view of all the representations made by the immense delegation the other day, as well as others who know by experience, I shall feel it my duty to continue to pursue it along these lines until we have relief for this largest industry in Canada, except general agriculture.

Another strong reason why the best interests of the horticultural industry should be preserved, is to assist in the solution of that most difficult problem, 'overcrowded cities and towns,' by the only known practical remedy, 'back to the land.' Now, in a recent Ontario report it is said that last year this remedy had begun to succeed to the extent of 5,000 people having gone from the cities and towns back to the land; and almost all that improvement is traceable to the attraction of the horticultural industry. In fact, in older Canada it seems to be the only attractive kind of land life yet developed; and so attractive has it become that recently many people of means from outside Canada have invested and settled in the midst of this delightful industry.

There is one most favourable feature about the whole thing and that is, that it is not a treaty for a term of years, but only a proposal which can only come into effect to whatever extent it is mutually agreed to by both countries, by concurrent legislation which is only binding on either country so long as they keep that legislation in force, but can be changed by either country in five minutes after it is passed, so if after a fair trial of a year or two it is found to work badly for any particular industry or line, then it can and will be changed, and we cannot surely be ruined in a season or two. This is the one favourable feature of the proposal, which is a guarantee that any industry that is seriously hurt can and will be relieved.

One feature of the situation, however, from which we are getting immediate beneficial results is the advertising side of the question, for nothing has happened in our whole previous history that has given us so much favourable newspaper publicity and advertising, as well as public discussion the world over, as has this proposed reciprocal trade agreement. Why every newspaper in the United States is talking about Canada and its advantages, so that to-day Canada is almost better known in the United States than the United States is itself. And in Britain and other parts of Europe we are much better known than ever before, on account of this reciprocal trade proposal.

A prominent Canadian who recently returned from a trip through Europe says, that in every hamlet in Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Russia, Norway and Sweden, as well as France and the British Isles, the newspapers are full of it, and the whole population are asking, what manner of place this Canada of 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 people is, that the President and Secretary of the great United States, of a hundred million population are running up and down the country, so earnestly urging their people to make a reciprocal trade agreement with this country called Canada. Surely they said, Canada must be the country we read about in the scriptures, that is flowing with milk and honey, and where the streets are paved with gold. That's the land we are going to, as soon as circumstances permit, to make our future happy home in.

Why on March 27, 1911, over 200 immigrants from Wales landed in Canada, with $400,000 to invest in Canadian lands. So you see whatever the eventual result of the trade proposals may be, we are getting much immediate benefit from the advertising, in vastly increased immigration, of a good character, without much additional effort on our part through the attention which the newspapers of the world are giving to our vast natural resources and advantages, in the ordinary course of discussing this trade proposition. Similar advertising if paid for in the usual way, would have cost Canada many millions of dollars, and then not be nearly so effective, as the editorial columns are seldom open to paid advertising, in fact it would be impossible even with millions of money to secure such advertising.

So the Paine-Aldrich tariff, with its countervailing conditions, that were to be used as a huge club against all other countries, to bring them to the commercial knees of the United States, and declare the United States to be dictator of the trade and commerce of the world, has really fulfilled the prediction of Representative Gardner, and been converted to the advantage of Canada, and has now declared Canada to be the commercial country that the remainder of the world are so anxiously seeking trade with. Because since the present proposal was made public, according to reports, other countries are almost tumbling over each other to make trade agreements with Canada.

As to the annexation sentiment and the insinuations of lack of loyalty displayed by the proposed reciprocal trade agreement, I have no fear, and I take no stock in the argument, for during the past year which is said to have been the ideal condition by many members of this House, we purchased from the United States, $239,000,000 worth of goods, and only sold them $113,000,000 worth, and if it has not made us disloyal to buy from them $125,000,000 more than we sold them, then I dont see how it will make us disloyal or annexationists if we now try to sell them that $125,000,000 worth of produce, rather than pay them that amount in gold; it would give us much additional business and profit, and retain that enormous sum of money in Canada with which to further develop this great country of ours.

The 'London Times,' Unionist tariff reform paper, seems to take about the same view of it, for on March 7, it says editorially:

TIMES SEES SOME GOOD

London, March 7.—The 'Times' says editorially: 'We cannot tell how far the sporadically raised cry of annexation is influencing Canadian opinion, but there is no reason to suppose that the reciprocity agreement would produce any tendency in that direction. On the contrary, bargaining on equal terms with the states might tend to foster rather than diminish the self reliance and independence of the Canadian people.'

Which further discourages fear in this direction.

Insinuations are being made against certain members of the government, implying that they are annexationists; well, Sir Allen Aylesworth might jocularly be classed a little that way, for it is said that at the Hague Tribunal recently he succeeded in annexing all the difference of opinion there had been about the Atlantic coast, and the Hudson bay, and he must have made a good job of it, for King George V. honoured him with Knighthood for the service.

Then the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been a little inclined that way, for through Capt Bernier he succeeded in annexing to Canada, all the Thousand Islands, between here and the north pole, many of which may yet prove more valuable than Cobalt, while the United States have been wasting their time with Cook and Peary, in trying to annex the north pole, which seems to be 45 feet below the surface of the ice, and still undiscovered.

Then the Hon. Mr. Oliver, minister of the Interior, has done something along that line as well, for it is he who has annexed about half a million of the best United States farmers to our Canadian west, and who is still working overtime at the job, in support of which I will quote from the 'Times,' dated Winnipeg, Man., March 10, 1911:

ANNEXING THEM.

Five train loads of United States farmers enter the Northwest.

Winnipeg, Man., March 10.—Daily hundreds of cars of American settlers with their families and effects are passing over the border into the prairie provinces. At Emmerson and North Portal yesterday five special trains of United States settlers came into Canada. On account of the early spring the rush has started much earlier than usual. A tremendous United States immigration is anticipated this spring. Many of the new arrivals are going through to British Columbia.

So he will likely annex another half million of them this year.

Then the right hon. the Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, hasn't a bad reputation along that line himself, for it is said that at the Diamond Jubilee, he mesmerically annexed the hearts of all the British empire, and later he is said to have annexed the following of the whole Colonial Conference. But in attempting to moderate the displeasure of the Fruit and Vegetable Growers, for his oversight in forgetting their best interests in the reciprocity proposal, he has set himself, perhaps, the largest task of his life; he must annex the whole United States to Canada and Britain.

This would be a huge task, but he has performed, heretofore, apparent impossibilities. While representatives Champ Clark and W. S. Bennett are shouting about annexing Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is always sawing wood, and it would perhaps surprise no one, if some morning we wakened up to find that he, like Sir Allen Aylesworth and Hon. Messrs. Brodeur and Oliver, had completed the job, for this is the only kind of annexation that is at all possible for the Canadian people to deal with or submit to, and you all know what stuff the men of the northern zone are made of.

Hon. members may smile at this, but I trust the smile is one of pleasure, rather than of sneer, for the movement has now actually begun, not by injudicious action on the part of the right hon. the Prime Minister, not by the terror of Sir Frederick Borden and his militia, not by fear and trembling at the thought of our new Canadian navy, but by the voluntary preference of many United States people, who believe in the honour and substantialness of Canadian institutions and government, which are based on British fair play and sense of justice which has stood the test of centuries. In support of this I will quote from the Daily 'Herald' of February 25, 1911, concerning Alaska:

Cordova, Alaska, Feb. 22.—A movement is on foot in Alaska looking to the annexation of that territory to Canada. The men behind the movement assert that the United States government does not seem disposed to relieve the territory of its present burdens, and that annexation to the Dominion seems to offer the only hope.

The movement is gaining the endorsement of a large number of business men throughout Alaska, and mass meetings will be held in Valdez, Seward, Fairbanks, Juneau and Cordova. It is planned to adopt resolutions asking the Congress of the United States to divorce Alaska from the American government, so she can become allied with Canada.

Why, at this very moment, the situation is being canvassed to a considerable extent in the New England states, and especially those industrial sections that rely largely on Canada for their raw material and foodstuffs. They are wondering whether Washington would grant the prayer of their petition for annexation to Canada willingly, or whether such action on their part would be obstructed by Washington, even to the extent of bloodshed. I have heard somewhat similar suggestions periodically during the past year, and a number of Canadians having business with the New England states have recenlty heard similar discussions. The history of Europe shows that the northern people have eventally dominated, and if there is ever any change on the North American continent, European history will be repeated and the northern people dominate.

Now, from a local standpoint, and as one of the reasons why I approve and support the agricultural schedule, I would quote, in addition to the general sentiment and expression of opinion by the farmers themselves that they believe it would be beneficial to them, a few produce prices for 1910.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Taking the Toronto prices, does the hon. gentleman mean that is the highest price?

Mr. SEALEY. It does not mean that it is lower or higher, but the low prices and higher prices have been taken and averaged, and that is the average taken from the quotations of a whole year. I think the figures can be relied upon as entirely accurate.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I recognize the hon gentleman's anxiety, but it does seem to me that he is evolving these figures out of his own internal economy.

Mr. SEALEY. I have taken these figures from the regular market reports.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). What is your authority?

Mr. SEALEY. My authority is the government market reports that were taken before the beginning of this year, and before any insinuations could be made that they were got up for effect, in view of this proposition. I have full confidence in them; I have referred to them many times in years past, and I will stake my reputation that they are accurate. I believe they are the most reliable figures that have been quoted in the House yet.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The figures the hon. gentleman is quoting are altogether different from the figures that are used in the white-book laid on the table of the United States Senate.

Mr. SEALEY I will quote United States figures also before I get through. However, I prefer my own. Now take eggs:

Eggs	Boston	23·50	26·92	25·21	Montreal	23·60	25·41	24·51
"	New York	23·03	27·71	25·37	Toronto	22·70	24·33	23·50

Oats	Y. State	Paid Farmers.	44.50	Ontario	Farmers.	36·	8·50	U.S.
Hay	N. Y. "	"	13.71	"	"	10·21	3·50	"
Barley	N. Y. "	"	70.	"	"	53·	·17	"

In regard to grain, perhaps I should have taken the figures from a Canadian source, but it was more convenient to take the United States reports. I have taken figures for oats from the state of New York, and the price paid to farmers there was 44·50 cents per bushel of 34 lbs., and it figures out about 42 cents for 32 lbs.

The Ontario farmers receive an average of 36 cents, or 8½ cents less.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the price of barley in Quebec?

Mr. SEALEY. I have not got the figures for Quebec.

Mr. LENNOX. 71 cents.

Mr. SEALEY. Malting barley might be 71 cents in Quebec, but I doubt whether that is the average. What I have worked out I will bank on and bet on. The same United States report gives the price of land. I have taken the border states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut and Delaware, where agricultural land is estimated at $41 per acre; whereas in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island their average farm land is estimated at $32 per acre, or $9 less on the Canadian side. Then in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan the average price of farm land is $71 per acre; whereas in Ontario it is $50 per acre, or $21 less.

Mr. BARKER. Does the Ontario average include the Niagara district along the border of Michigan?

Mr. SEALEY. It includes what is utilized for farming in the Niagara district, not what is used for horticulture.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman knows that in his own district land stands at $200 to $400 an acre.

Mr. SEALEY. Yes, but there is much in Muskoka that stands at $5 and $10; $50 is a fair average, and that is the average given by the United States reports.

Mr. BARKER. If the hon. gentleman had gone up to James bay he might have got it for ten cents an acre.

Mr. SEALEY. These are United States figures, and I expect hon. gentlemen to criticise them. I will not bet on them that they are accurate, I will only say that they are taken from the United States official report, they may not be accurate. In Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota the average value is $71 per acre for farm land; in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta it is $23, or a higher price on the United States side by $48 per acre. Their estimate of farm help is from 10 to 15 per cent higher than it is in Canada.

The hon. the Minister of Agriculture has gone into the agricultural schedule fully, and with much detail, and has made out a most thorough case, which I am sure must have convinced the great majority of this House, and the country generally. This, coupled with the fact that a great majority of the farmers in Canada want it, confirms me in supporting this schedule. The hon. minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Templeman) and other hon. members have made out a most complete case on behalf of the natural products schedule, and the people engaged in that line of business want it. Therefore, I propose to support it. I feel conscious at all events, and I trust a majority of this House will agree with me, that I have made out equally as conclusive a case on behalf of the horticultural schedule being excluded, and therefore I trust it will receive the same generous support for exemption, that the other schedules will for adoption.

Mr. BLAIN. How about horses?

Mr. SEALEY. I have not the statistics concerning horses, and knowing something of horses myself I know it is pretty hard to make a fair comparison. We have had that subject discussed on the floor of the House, and I know that bronchos have been included with other horses in the United States report, and they are a poor class of animals. I think that a far greater percentage of our horses in Canada are of a better class. It did not seem practicable to me to make a fair comparison and therefore I have not made any comparison with regard to horses. But other people may think that the comparison is satisfactory to them, and if they do they are quite welcome to give it.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman having spoken about one schedule, and about trying to get an amendment in there, does he recollect that the Minister of Finance has declared distinctly that we will have to support this measure as a whole or not at all, that it is not divisible in any way? Has the hon. gentleman noticed that?

Mr. SEALEY. I have noticed that, and I referred to it a short time ago. I said that that was contended, but that I did not agree with it, and that I think the majority of this House can differ from it if they choose.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman not realize that the majority of the House have either to adopt this as a whole or reject it as a whole?

Mr. SEALEY. Well, that may be the result; you may be a good prophet.

Mr. LENNOX. They must do that.

Mr. SEALEY. I do not agree that they must do that. If they adopt my view they will not do it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) is not entitled to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is usual that the gentleman who is allowing permission to interrupt to sit down while the questions are being asked so that two may not be standing at once.

Mr. LENNOX. Does not the hon. member realize that the proposition he makes is absolutely impracticable, and has no common sense in it?

Mr. SEALEY. I think it has good sound sense in it, or I would not propose it. It has to the best of my judgment, and if my judgment differs from that of my hon. friend who has just asked this question I cannot help it. There may be different opinions as to judgment and sense here, every person has a right to his own, and whatever construction may be put on my views, those holding a different opinion are welcome to it.

Before handing my amendment to this resolution to the Chair, I will take the opportunity of saying that the committee may regard it as out of order, on the ground that the resolution deals with tariffs that affect the revenues or expenditure of the country, by increasing or decreasing it, and that therefore, according to the constitution no one but a member of the cabinet can either propose such a resolution or move an amendment. This rule might apply in the ordinary course, but in this particular instance, you will note that my amendment does not come under the rule, because, it neither proposes to raise or lower the tariff, but just proposes to allow it to remain where it is, and therefore this rule of the House does not apply.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). The hon. gentleman can propose a decrease.

Mr. SEALEY. I do not propose any. I propose to leave it where it is.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). Take off five cents.

Mr. SEALEY. I do not want to take off any. I think I ought to be able and I think the rules of the House will allow me to present my views and an amendment in whatever form seems, in my judgment, to be best. I hope it will prove to be, at all events.

Objection may also be taken to it on the ground that the committee have no authority to deal with an amendment, or its lack of notice of motion, but as to this I would refer the House to Bourinot (Flint), page 539:

'Committees are regarded as portions of the House, limited in their inquiries by the extent of the authority given them; but governed for the most part in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the House.'

Mr. PUGSLEY.

In the House the following rules prevail —Bourinot (Flint), page 659:

'When a member intends to move an important amendment in Committee of the Whole to a Bill, he is not required, according to Canadian practice, to give notice of such amendment.'

Bourinot (Flint), page 463:

Every member has a right of moving an amendment without giving notice thereof. This amendment may propose:—
1. To leave out certain words.
2. To leave out certain words, in order to insert or add others.
3. To insert or add certain words.

See for the above also May, page 276, and Cushing, page 517, which are other recognized authorities. Bourinot (Flint), page 522:

'According to English practice no motion or amendment in committee need be seconded . . . Amendments are moved to the proposed resolution.'

Thus the rule in committee is the same as in the House; in the House no seconder is required and no notice is needed. Based upon the authorities the following amendment is moved:

Mr, Sealey, moves in amendment to the resolution 'that it is expedient to amend the Customs Tariff, 1907.' That schedule A. thereto be amended by striking out in lines seven and eight thereof the words 'onions, cabbage, and all other vegetables in their natural state,' and in lines nine and ten thereof the words 'pears, peaches, grapes, berries, and all other edible fruits in their natural state,' and in lines eleven and twelve thereof the words 'peaches, pears and apricots, dried, desiccated or evaporated,' and that the resolution as amended by adopted.

I had included in the resolution, or proposed in the first place, to put hog products back where they formerly were, but with the view of getting the best possible support for the fruit and vegetable industry, I propose to leave hog products to be taken care of a little later.

Mr. BLAIN. Does it require a seconder?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Not in committee. I am not sure I can receive it in the form in which it stands. There is a resolution before the committee which I presume may be amended, but this amendment commences with the words: that it is expedient to amend the customs tariff, 1907.

Mr. SEALEY. That simply follows the opening words of the resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I see that these words are the same as in the resolution, but I would prefer before accepting it to receive the views of some experienced members of the House on it, or to have an opportunity to consult authorities.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Agriculture will tell us all about it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) is at liberty to move an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. BARKER. Not an amendment to the law.

Mr. SEALEY. The resolution reads: 'Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Customs Act, 1907,' and my proposal is to amend that resolution.

Mr. BARKER. An amendment to the law might not be an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. LENNOX. It is a very good proposition, though.

Mr. BLAIN. It is perfectly in order.

Mr. LENNOX. Let us vote on it; it would be a pity to have it thrown out on a technicality.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If it is an amendment to the resolution I presume it might be accepted.

Mr. FISHER. Would it impose greater taxation than the original motion.

Mr. LENNOX. On the contrary it would increase the revenues of the country.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment does not apparently seem to add any burdens to those already existing on the people.

Mr. NESBITT. It certainly would as against the resolution because the resolution withdraws the tariff and the amendment is adding to it.

Mr. BLAIN. Not at all.

Mr. NESBITT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sealey) is seeking to amend the resolution, and he would by his amendment be adding to the tariff.

Mr. BARKER. It looks like a fake altogether.

Mr. LENNOX. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Nesbitt) is wrong in his view. The resolution proposes to do away with certain duties which contribute a revenue to the country, and the amendment proposes that there shall be a less sweeping change in the Customs Act, and therefore leaves a greater revenue to the country.

Mr. NESBITT. The resolution does away with the tariff, and in endeavouring to amend the resolution he is certainly adding to the charges and interfering with the revenue. It is out of order.

Mr. BLAIN. The explanation given by my hon. friend (Mr. Sealey) and the authorities he has quoted prove that the resolution is in order. I wish to say I am heartily in accord with the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Sealey), and I shall now or at any other opportunity give it my hearty support. It is along the line of justice and fair play to a very large proportion of the people of this country who will be injuriously affected if the motion of the Minister of Finance is carried in this House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The rule with regard to the rights of a private member in seeking to either lower or increase the duties is that he may not move to increase the existing duties or lay an additional burden upon the people. He may move to reduce, and in this case I do not see that the amendment proposes to add any burden to those already existing on the people. But, as I understand the rule, I think it is merely that a private member may not seek to increase burdens already existing on the countrv. In that sense I think the amendemnt would be in order.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 22.

Mr. SEALEY. I just wish to take the opportunity of saying that I am sorry that this minority-represented industry of such great importance has not received a larger measure of consideration from this House. However, the hon. Minister of Agriculture has given it some consideration, and his best counsel and advice seems to have been that the best articles of fruit and vegetables command the best prices in the market, irrespective of where they come from or what competition they may have. That being the case, he sets up a standard for the people engaged in this business to produce the best, and, in order that they may produce the best, they require to be assisted and encouraged a little.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. The remarks of the hon. gentleman so far have no relevancy to the question before the Chair. What the Minister of Agriculture thinks or might do to encourage a certain industry is not relevant.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The resolution as a whole is before the Chair, and the remarks of the hon. member must, of course, be relevant to it.

Mr. SEALEY. The resolution makes a proposition that it is hoped will be beneficial to Canada generally and to the agricultural interest in particular. I trust that it is intended for the horticultural interest as well. If I do not quite agree with the method proposed for benefiting that interest, I think it is fair to suggest that the minister might benefit it by assisting it to reach that standard of excellence which he sets up for it, by establishing an experimental fruit and vegetable farm.

Mr. LENNOX. I submit that this is not treating this committee fairly, and I rise again to the question of order. We are not discussing question of experimental farms, and I think the hon. gentleman is taking an advantage of this committee. I do not think it fair at this hour of the night.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. member were speaking of experimental farms alone, he would not be in order. If he applied the argument to this resolution without too much delay, it would be in order.

Mr. SEALEY. The resolution is designed to improve the industry to which I am referring. I do not see that such improvement as we had hoped for will be effected by the resolution. I am suggesting as an alternative the establishment of an experimental fruit and vegetable farm in our district.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to the point of order again. There is no proposal before the Chair to benefit any industry whatever. The resolution does not bear that construction or purport to have that effect. The hon. member is quite astute enough to realize that he is endeavouring to address himself to a subject that is not before the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have ruled on the point. The resolution itself is very broad, and the discussion has been equally so; but the hon. gentleman will realize that it is necessary to apply his argument. Arguments arising from the establishment of experimental farms may in some way apply to the question, but they should be applied promptly to be considered relevant, and I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he continues his remarks, to make them bear promptly on the resolution.

Mr. SEALEY. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the suggestion, and I will remould my remarks and submit them at a later time.

On motion of Mr. Roche, committee rose and reported progress.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 2.25 a.m. Saturday.

Mr. SEALEY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MONDAY, April 24, 1911.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

VERDICT OF A MONTREAL JURY.

Mr. HUGHES. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to make a statement in justice to the defending counsel in a case recently tried in Montreal. On the 12th instant I asked this question:

Has the attention of the government been drawn, or has any member thereof observed, the report of the action of the jury in the case recently tried in Montreal, where a man charged with assaulting another and stealing from him certain Masonic property, was by the jury declared not guilty, in response to an alleged fanatical appeal to creed passions on the part of the prisoner's solicitor. Although the prisoner admitted his guilt and the judge strongly charged against him.

I wish to state that the distinguished counsel defending the prisoner on that occasion has done me the honour to come and see me in that regard, and to say that he did not resort to fanatical appeals himself, but he merely illustrated the condition of of the prisoner's mind which was worked up into a fanatical state by fear that his church and his clergy were going to be injured. The distinguished counsel wished to show that the prisoner had no malicious intent towards the party that was robbed. I desire, in all fairness to the gentleman who defended the prisoner on that occasion, to say that he did not appeal to fanaticism.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden). I have a clipping taken from 'Arms and Explosives,' dated April, 1911. This is a magazine dealing with rifles and military information generally. The item is headed 'Obituary of Lee-Enfield,' and the statement is:

In introducing the army estimates, Mr. Haldane stated the question of a new rifle is under careful consideration, and that as soon as a pattern had been determined upon it would be subjected to test and experiment. Captain Courthope asked whether reference was made to a magazine or an automatic rifle, and Mr. Haldane replied: 'A magazine rifle, of course. The automatic rifle is years away yet, and if we waited for it, I fear we should have to wait a very long time.'

I desire to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence, in view of the great success which has attended the Long Ross rifle, whether it is his intention to draw the attention of the British government to the fact that the Canadian Ross rifle is now regarded as unequalled in any country in the world.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think I would scarcely venture to go so far as that. But if my opinion were asked by the Minister of War in England, I should be glad to express my entire satisfaction with the work done by the Ross rifle.

JUDICIAL VACANCY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. FRASER. I desire to ask the Prime Minister if he has made an appointment to the vacant judgeship in Prince Edward Island, and also to the vacant senatorship? I just returned from there last night, and I should be glad to report as soon as possible that these vacancies have been filled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The appointment has not yet been made. It is being considered, and my hon. friend will have the answer at a very early day.

FLYING THE FLAG ON NATIONAL HOLIDAYS.

Mr. HUGHES. Now that the Minister of Public Works is in his place, I desire to ask why the British flag, the old Union Jack, was not flying from the tower of the parliament buildings yesterday until twenty minutes past twelve o'clock, yesterday being the anniversary of St. George, the patron saint of England. The least the minister could have done was to have seen that the flag was flying earlier in the day. On St. David's day it was not raised until nearly noon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not able to inform my hon. friend at the moment the cause of the delay. I did not look after it myself yesterday, because I was out of town. I will make inquiry with reference to it.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to inquire the reason for the delay in bringing down a return which I moved for two or three months ago. The return asked for a statement of all employees of the government who are serving as members of municipal councils or city councils. I moved for the return in consequence of the Department of Customs requiring the resignation as municipal councillor of Halifax of an officer of the customs drawing a salary of $60 a year, and whose duties would take but a very small portion of his time. I would like to have that return brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State). The return is in course of preparation. I will have an inquiry made to see when it will be ready.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that on Thursday last he said he would inform me on Friday when the returns would be brought down in reference to aliens who are serving in the service of Canada and residing outside our jurisdiction. I think the minister forgot that on Friday.

Mr. MURPHY. In reply to my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox), I may say that the matter did not escape my attention. I made inquiry and ascertained that the order passed at the instance of the hon. gentleman called for a return showing, not only the aliens in the employ of this government, but aliens in the employ of the provincial governments. I may tell him that it is not an easy matter to obtain that information; however, the department has been working upon it. My information is that, with the exception of two provincial governments, returns have been received from the others, and it is expected that the return so far as this government is concerned, will be completed within two weeks.

Mr. LENNOX. It appears to me to be the proper procedure for the government, when motions are put upon the Order Paper, and at the latest when they are dealt with in the House, if any motion is too broad, that is the time for the government to object to it. I am not aware that the motion is as broad as my hon friend says. It could have been limited if he had called attention to it at the time.

Mr. MURPHY. If my hon. friend is prepared to accept the return without the information from the provincial governments, it can be brought down much earlier.

Mr. LENNOX. I am only prepared to abide at present by the order of the House. The proper time for taking objection to a motion is when it is proposed in the House.

Mr. FISHER. I wish to make a remark in reference to the question of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in reference to a return he asked for. He seemed to blame the government for delay in preparing a return which the House had ordered which would take a long time to prepare. The House orders a return in deference to the request of a member, whether it takes a long time or not.

The question as to how long it will take to lay the return on the table is then considered, and it deals with another matter altogether. Hon. members are quite within their rights in asking for any return they choose, but when a return takes a long time I do not think they have any right to grumble at the time it takes. It is a mere matter of courtesy to say that if an hon. gentleman will take less information than is asked for in the return he will get it earlier. But that does not necessarily imply that exception should be taken to the motion being passed by the House.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a question of privilege because my attitude is attacked and I wish to reply to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The hon. gentleman is not correct in his manner of dealing with this matter. When a motion is passed and made an order of the House, it is expected to be complied with.

Mr. FISHER. Certainly.

Mr. LENNOX. If it is too broad or embraces to much, the time for the government to point that out is when the motion is under discussion. It is not the time after three, four or five months have elapsed and nothing has been done in the meantime. Only when the matter begins to be agitated the government come down with a complaint that it is too broad. I have had that difficulty two or three times. The proper time is when the motion is made. It is on the Order Paper for several days, the government are in a position to ascertain whether it is too broad and whether it will involve a large amount of labour. Therefore, with regard to these two motions that I have been speaking of, there is no reasonable complaint because the government have done absolutely nothing for months. Then, after months have elapsed they come down and make the complaint that they are so broad that they involve an enormous amount of work. The truth is that there has been nothing done on either of these motions and no attempt made to get this information.

Mr. FISHER. I think that my hon. friend did not perhaps understand my meaning. If, in an order for a return, there is something included which the government cannot get then that ought to be explained to the House. But if it is simply a question of the time which may be taken in getting the information I do not think that the government ought to urge it, and I do not think the House ought to receive the statement that it would take too long a time. It is to be presumed that an hon. member who moves for a return knows what he wants and knows whether he wants the whole of it. If he does not want the whole of it he should not ask for the return. It is the duty of the government, if they accept a motion, to try and get the whole of the information asked for in the return. It may take a long time to get the whole of it while to get a portion of it may take a short time, and that is what I wished to point out. But, at the time a motion is made and an hon. gentleman asks for certain information I do not think it is the duty of the government to say that this will take a very long time or that it will take a long time. It is the duty of the government to carry out the order of the House.

Mr. LENNOX. It will take about four months to get this—that is all.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask when I may expect the return I asked for two months ago with regard to the change of route of the Newmarket canal?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) is absent to-day, but I shall call the matter to his attention.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to inquire of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he is facilitating the inquiry with the view of getting the reports of the curators of banks that were ordered by the House some time ago?

Mr. FIELDING. I was under the impression that I had brought down the return dealing with the matter, but if not I will look into it further.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) bring down the abbreviated return with regard to the census which was arranged between himself and myself?

Mr. FISHER. The clerk informs me that it has been brought down.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In connection with the matter I referred to a moment ago, I might tell the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy) that it is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings at page 274, and the order was passed on the 23rd January last. It asks for the names of persons in the various departments who had served upon municipal, city or town councils within a period of ten years. That may have occasioned delay. There has been a great deal of delay with regard to it, but if that is causing the delay I would like to have an immediate return of those employed in any departments of the government who are now serving on city or other municipal councils. It seems to me, that could be procured inside of forty-eight hours, and the other information could be brought down afterwards.

Mr. MURPHY. I will try to get the information for the hon. gentleman as speedily as possible.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LENNOX. I desire to ask again if the government propose to deal with the Bank Act this session. I referred to it some months ago, and at that time the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said it would be proceeded with. At a subsequent date the minister was somewhat afraid that it might not be proceeded with, but he would not say at the time whether it would be or not. I have not made any inquiry as to the matter since. I desire to ask the minister if he can inform the House now whether or not it will be proceeded with.

Mr. FIELDING. I am afraid I can hardly add anything more definite than my former statement. It will depend upon the progress which is made with the general business of the House. As we approach that period when the desire for prorogation may seem general the government will have to determine, as between the various matters on the Order Paper, what will be proceeded with, and what can conveniently stand over. When that moment arrives we will have to decide. At the present moment I could not give my hon. friend a more definite statement.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister inform the House when a decision is come to without it being necessary to refer to the matter again?

Mr. FIELDING. I shall not object to my hon. friend reminding me, but I shall try to keep it in mind.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LENNOX. I understand the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) proposes to introduce a Copyright Bill this session. I know something of the reason why the minister has been delaying the matter I think. There is a similar Bill before the British House of Commons, and I notice that it has just passed its second reading. I desire to ask the minister whether it is the purpose of the government to introduce a Copyright Act at an early day. I understand that the minister is anxious to have a Copyright Act passed this session if possible.

Mr. FISHER. The resolutions on which the Bill is to be founded are on the Order Paper. I have been waiting until the Bill was printed, because it is usual when the resolutions are passed to introduce the Bill at once. I had expected to have it printed for to-day. It may be ready to-night, and in that case I would like to introduce the Bill to-morrow if I may.

NEW BARRACKS AT TORONTO.

Mr. MACDONELL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) when the work of erecting the new barracks at Toronto is going to be proceeded with. Four or five years ago the Department of Militia purchased a new site for a barracks at Toronto on the banks of the Humber river. That land was carried for three or four years, and was sold by the government at a very large profit. Something like $100,000, I think, was made out of it. The government then purchased a new site further out from the town, and this has been held for three or four years without any appearance of the erection of the barracks. It is rumoured that the government, this land having largely appreciated in value, intends to make another real estate profit out of the property, and not proceed to erect the barracks on that site. Would the minister please inform the House whether or not it is the intention of the government to deal in real estate in this respect, and not erect a barracks on this property which has been purchased for the purpose, although there is every reason for expecting that work to be proceeded with, because as the minister knows the erection of a new barracks is urgently needed.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I am sorry my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonell) is so prone to listen to idle rumours. There is not one single word of truth in that rumour. I never heard of such a rumour and I do not think anybody else did except my hon. friend. The fact is that the land had not been purchased for three years. We have purchased land near the rifle range within a few months, and we are obliged to go to the Exchequer Court to purchase some more land which we need. It is the intention of the government to proceed at once with the erection of the building.

EXPORT OF CATTLE TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BLAIN. The last report of the Minister of Customs shows the export of cattle to the United States for the last fiscal year as follows: Cattle one year old or less (produce of Canada) value $23,679; cattle over one year, value $618,995. Can the Minister of Customs say what portion of this export of cattle reached the British market via the United States, and were not consumed in the United States? The return sent me by the Minister of Finance leads to the conclusion that the Department of Customs has no record as to the large number of cattle purchased by American dealers and sent via United States ports to Great Britain. Can the Minister of Customs shed any light on that?

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Customs was absent when my hon. friend put the question some days ago. I at once sent the question to the Customs Department and the officials furnished me with the memorandum I handed to my hon. friend. All that the return says is that these exports were shown, according to the invoices as exports from Canada to the United States. If the destination were expressed on the invoice as being other than the United States, such cattle would not be included in those figures. Where the invoice simply mentions the animals as being exported to the United States, and there is no other destination mentioned, the department could not have any knowledge as to what became of the animals after they got into the United States. It is quite possible that many of these animals have been exported to Great Britain, but the department would not have a record of that.

Mr. BLAIN. The return goes further than the statement of the Finance Minister, because it says that these cattle were marked as exported to the United States without any other destination being shown on the entry. This is a very important matter in the discussion of the trade relations between the United States and Canada, because to my own knowledge a considerable number of the very best cattle in my own county are purchased by United States dealers and sent to the United States in bond for British destination. In this departmental report these animals are credited as being exported to the United States, and at the very time I put the question to the House the Minister of Customs was out telling the farmers what a great advantage they would have in the United States market for Canadian cattle. The government should be in a position to tell what number of Canadian cattle which go to the United States are ultimately sent to the British market.

Mr. FIELDING. How could the Customs Department make any other return if the exporters simply set forth in the papers that the cattle are being exported from Canada to the United States?

Mr. BLAIN. That is very misleading.

Mr. FIELDING. It may be or it may not be. My hon. friend may have knowledge that many of these cattle were re-exported, but if the shipper simply declares he is exporting these animals to the United States the Customs Department must return them as exported to the United States.

Mr. BLAIN. This is all along the line of lack of information.

Mr. FIELDING. Not at all.
